SELECT WORKS

OF

WILLIAM PENN.

TO WHICH IS PREFIXED

A

JOURNAL OF HIS LIFE.

LONDON.

PRINTED IN THE YEAR

MDCCLXXI.

[illegible] of another [illegible].

Many excellent Treatises of general and lasting Use, many Essays of great Importance to the Cause of Piety and Virtue, as well as to Civil and Religious Liberty, Vindications of the Principles of the Christian Society, of which he was an honourable Member, against the Attacks of [illegible] and designing Men, together with an Account of his Life and [illegible] in the Cause of Religion, form the principal Part of [illegible] Works at large, first collected and published in Two Volumes [illegible]

That Edition being [illegible] expedient, previously to another [illegible] and to select for Publication [illegible] have an immediate Tendency [illegible] in general, explaining Doctrines [illegible] Ranks and Conditions are [illegible]

BRITISH MUSEUM

[illegible]

A few of his Controversial Pieces are retained; many are omitted, such, especially, the Subjects of which being temporary, are [illegible] The Date inserted in the Margin shews the Year when each Treatise was first published.

Much might be said of the Author, so extensive in the Life and Writings of our Author; but we refrain; lest in offering our own Sentiments concerning them, we might seem to be endeavouring to prepossess [illegible] these Papers. We therefore leave them to his own Recommendation, accompanied with a short [illegible], taken from the [illegible]

“ The Whole is submitted to the Consideration [illegible] Permit [illegible] “ judge impartially; [illegible] charity [illegible]
“ [illegible] evident [illegible]
“ wise minded, [illegible]”

ADVERTISEMENT.

THE Works of this eminent Perſon having long been out of Print, and much inquired after, it became neceſſary to conſider of another Impreſſion.

Many excellent Treatiſes of general and laſting Uſe; many Eſſays of great Importance to the Cauſe of Piety and Virtue, as well as to Civil and Religious Liberty; Vindications of the Principles of the Chriſtian Society of which he was an honourable Member, againſt the Attacks of ignorant and deſigning Men; together with an Account of his Life and Labours in the Service of Religion; form the principal Part of our Author's Works at large, firſt collected and publiſhed in Two Volumes Folio, anno 1726.

That Edition being now diſperſed, it was judged expedient, previouſly to another Impreſſion to review the Whole, and to ſelect for Publication all ſuch Parts of our Author's Writings, as have an immediate Tendency to promote the Cauſe of Religion in general, containing Doctrines in which People of all Nations, Ranks and Conditions are intereſted without diſpute; and ſuch likewiſe, as, at the ſame time that they contribute to the ſame great End, the Increaſe of primitive Chriſtianity in Life and Doctrines, include an Apology for the religious Principles and Practices of the People to whom he was united in Profeſſion.

A few of his Controverſial Pieces are retained; many are omitted; ſuch, eſpecially, the Cauſes of which being temporary, are thereby rendered leſs intereſting to the preſent Age. The Date inſerted on the Margin ſhews the Year when each Treatiſe was firſt publiſhed.

Much might here be ſaid on Subjects ſo extenſive as the Life and Writings of our Author; but we refrain; leſt in offering our own Sentiments concerning them, we might ſeem to be endeavouring to prepoſſeſs the Reader in their Favour. We therefore leave them to his own Reflections, and conclude with a ſhort Premonition, taken from the General Collection already mentioned:

" Reader,

" The Whole is ſubmitted to thy Conſideration: Peruſe patiently;
" judge impartially; cenſure charitably; embrace chearfully what thou
" findeſt to be evidently true; and if in any thing thou art yet other-
" wiſe minded, wait without Prejudice for farther Illumination."

7 AP 59

THE CONTENTS.

SOME Account of the Author's Life, containing Variety of Occurrences from his Birth, anno 1644, to the Time of his Death, anno 1718, among which are inſerted the following

LETTERS, &c.

To the Earl of Orrery, Page ii.
To an Acquaintance, diſſuading from a vain Converſation, p. iv.
To the Lord Arlington, p. v.
The Author's Examination before Sir J. Robinſon, Lieutenant of the Tower, p. ix.
To the High Court of Parliament, p. xii.
To the Sheriffs of London, p. xiii.
To Dr. Haſbert, Phyſician, at Embden, p. xiv.
To Juſtice Fleming, p. xv.
To all ſuffering Friends in Holland, Germany, Frederickſtadt, and Dantzick, p. xvi.
To the little Flock and Family of God in the United Provinces, p. xvii.
To Friends in Maryland, p. xviii.
To J. H. and his Companion, Juſtices in Middleſex, p. xix.
To a Roman Catholick, p. xxii.
To John Pennyman, p. xxiii.
Speeches before a Committee of Parliament, p. xxiv. xxv.
To the Friends of God in the City of Briſtol, p. xxvi.
To the Indians, p. xxviii.
To his Wife and Children, a ſhort time before his firſt Voyage to America, p. xxix.
To his Friends the Quakers, on occaſion of a Copy of Verſes publiſhed in his Name, p. xxxv.
To Dr. Tillotſon, ſeveral Letters, together with the Anſwers, p. xxxvi to xxxviii.
Speech to King James II. on preſenting the Addreſs of his Friends the Quakers, p. xxxix.
To William Popple, Secretary to the Plantation Office, in Anſwer to a Letter of his to the Author, p. xl.
To the Yearly Meeting in London, p. xlvii.
The Author's Account of the Death of his firſt Wife and eldeſt Son, p. xlviii. & li.
A Farewell Epiſtle to his Friends in Europe, p. lv.
His Preface to J. Banks's Journal, p. lx.

TRACTS, &c.

Anno.

1668. Truth Exalted: In a Teſtimony againſt all thoſe Religions, Faiths, and Worſhips, that have been followed in the Darkneſs of Apoſtacy, and for that Glorious Light now riſen and ſhining forth in the Life and Doctrine of the deſpiſed Quakers, Page 1
    The Sandy Foundation ſhaken: In which the popular Doctrines of One God ſubſiſting in Three diſtinct and ſeparate Perſons; the Impoſſibility of God's pardoning Sinners without a plenary Satisfaction; and the Juſtification of impure Perſons by an imputative Righteouſneſs, are refuted, p. 9.
    Innocency with her Open Face: Being an Apology for the preceding Piece, p. 24.
    No Croſs, No Crown: Shewing the Nature and Diſcipline of the Holy Croſs of Chriſt, p. 29.
1669. A Letter of Love to the Young-Convinced, p. 156.
1670. The Trial of W. Penn and W. Mead, at the Old Baily, p. 159.
    An Appendix to the ſame, by way of Defence for the Priſoners, p. 169.
1670. The Great Caſe of Liberty of Conſcience debated, p. 183.
    A ſeaſonable Caveat againſt Popery, p. 203.
1672. The Propoſed Comprehenſion, ſoberly, and not unſeaſonably, conſidered, p. 218.
1673. The Chriſtian Quaker, and his divine Teſtimony ſtated and vindicated from Scripture, Reaſon, and Authority, p. 221.
    A Diſcourſe of the General Rule of Faith and Practice, and Judge of Controverſy, p. 276.
    Wiſdom juſtified of her Children, p. 340.
1674. A Letter to the Council and Senate of Embden, p. 290.
1675. A Treatiſe on Oaths: Containing many weighty Reaſons why the People called Quakers refuſe to Swear, p. 293.
    England's Preſent Intereſt, conſidered with Honour to the Prince, and Safety to the People, p. 374.
    Saul ſmitten to the Ground: Or a brief Narrative of the dying Remorſe of a publick Oppoſer of the Faith and Worſhip of the People called Quakers, p. 400.

THE CONTENTS.

Anno.

1676. Letters, &c. on ſeveral Occaſions, viz.
To the Princeſs Elizabeth of the Rhine, and Anna Maria de Hornes, Counteſs of Hornes, p. 405.
A Call to Chriſtendom, p. 414.
An Epiſtle of Tender Counſel and Advice to all who are ſenſible of the Day of their Viſitation, p. 423.
To all thoſe Profeſſors of Chriſtianity that are externally ſeparated from the Viſible Sects and Fellowſhips in the Chriſtian World, p. 432.
To all People in the High and Low Dutch Nations, who hunger and thirſt after Righteouſneſs, p. 438.
1677. The Author's Travels in Holland and Germany, p. 445.
1678. An Epiſtle to the Children of Light, p. 497.
1679. An Addreſs to Proteſtants of all Perſuaſions, p. 501.
England's Great Intereſt in the Choice of a New Parliament, p. 583.
One Project for the Good of England, p. 587.
1681. A Brief Examination and State of Liberty Spiritual, p. 597
1683. A General Deſcription of Pennſilvania, p. 606.
1686. A Perſuaſive to Moderation, p. 613.
1687. Good Advice to the Church of England, Roman Catholick, and Proteſtant Diſſenter, p. 633.

Anno.

1692. Juſt Meaſures: In an Epiſtle of Peace and Love to ſuch Profeſſors of Truth as are under any Diſſatisfaction about the preſent Order practiſed in the Church of Chriſt, p. 656.
The New Athenians no Noble Bereans: Being Anſwers to ſeveral Athenian Mercuries, on behalf of the People called Quakers, p. 661.
A Key, opening the Way to every Capacity how to diſtinguiſh the Religion profeſſed by the People called Quakers, from the Perverſions and Miſrepreſentations of their Adverſaries, p. 677.
1693. Reflections and Maxims relating to the Conduct of Human Life, in Two Parts, p. 721.
1694. A brief Account of the Riſe and Progreſs of the People called Quakers, p. 757.
1695. A Reply to a Pretended Anſwer to the Key, p. 691.
1696. Primitive Chriſtianity Revived, in the Faith and Practice of the People called Quakers, p. 785.
1698. A Teſtimony to the Truth of God, as held by the People called Quakers, p. 807.
A Defence of a Paper, intituled, “Goſpel Truths,” againſt the Exceptions of the Biſhop of Cork's Teſtimony, p. 815.
1699. The Advice of W. Penn to his Children, relating to their Civil and Religious Conduct, p. 847.

THE

THE AUTHOR's LIFE.

The introduction.

WHEN the BLESSED MESSIAH firſt called forth the immediate Followers of his Perſon, he declared Self-denial eſſential to Diſcipleſhip, ſaying, "Whoſoever doth not bear his Croſs, and come after me, cannot be my diſciple," Luke xiv. 27. This path himſelf trod before them, ſetting all that ſhould come after, an Example of the moſt perfect patience and reſignation. The Faithful, in every age, have met with variety of Exerciſes; and many of them, by their more than Human Conſtancy, neither terrified by the rougheſt efforts of Cruelty and Malice on the one hand, nor enticed by the ſmootheſt Allurements of Pleaſure and Vanity on the other, have given convincing proofs to the world, that the GRACE which ſupported them, was DIVINE.

It was this which gave our Author, in his early years, a ſolid Senſe of Religion, and a Taſte of that Subſtantial Peace, which the world can neither give nor take away: This inſtructed him to ſee the emptineſs and vanity of earthly enjoyments, and to turn his back upon the honour, profits, and pleaſures of the world, at an age moſt inclinable to embrace them: This enabled him to ſurmount all oppoſition in the ſearch of TRUTH; which having found, he valued as a "Pearl of Price," and laboured in the propagation and defence of it, both by preaching and writing, almoſt inceſſantly for many years.

It being now thought meet to publiſh a Selection of his Works for a General Service, we judge it not improper to retain the following Journal of his Life, chiefly extracted out of his own Private Memoirs; in which, we doubt not, the judicious reader will find many paſſages both exemplary and inſtructive.

1644.
His birth, &c.

WILLIAM PENN was born in the pariſh called St. Katharine's, near the Tower of London, on the 14th day of October, 1644. His father, of the ſame name, was a man of good eſtate and reputation, and, in the time of the Commonwealth, ſerved in ſome of the higheſt maritime offices, as thoſe of Rear-admiral, Vice-admiral, Admiral of Ireland, Vice-admiral of England, &c. in all which he acquitted himſelf with honour and fidelity. After the Reſtoration, he was knighted by King Charles the Second, and became a peculiar favourite of the then Duke of York: His Father's care, and a promiſing proſpect of his ſon's advancement, induced him to give him a liberal education; and the youth, of an excellent genius, made ſuch early improvements in literature, that about the 15th year of his age, he was entered a Student at Chriſt's Church College in Oxford.

1659.
His early enquiry after religion.

Now began his ardent deſire after pure and ſpiritual religion to ſhew itſelf; of which he had before received ſome taſte or reliſh, through the miniſtry of Thomas Loe, one of the People called Quakers; for he, with certain other Students of that Univerſity, withdrawing from the National Way of Worſhip, held private meetings for the Exerciſe of Religion, where they both preached and prayed among themſelves: This gave great offence to the heads of the College, and he, being but ſixteen years of age, was fined for Nonconformity. Which ſmall ſtroke of perſecution not at all abating the fervour of his zeal, he was at length, for perſevering in the like religious practices, expelled the College.

1660.

1661.
Returns home from the Univerſity.

From thence he returned home, but ſtill took great delight in the company of ſober and religious people; which his father knowing to be a block in the way to preferment, endeavoured both by words and blows to deter him from; but finding thoſe methods ineffectual, he was at length ſo incenſed, that he turned him out of doors.

1662.
Goes to France.

Patience ſurmounted this difficulty, till his father's affection had ſubdued his anger, who then ſent him to France, in company with ſome perſons of quality, that were making a tour thither. He continued there a conſiderable time, till a quite different converſation had diverted his mind from the ſerious thoughts of religion: And upon 1662. his return, his father finding him not only a good proficient in the French tongue, but alſo perfectly accompliſhed with a polite and courtly behaviour, joyfully received him, hoping his point was gained; and indeed for ſome time after his return from France, his carriage was ſuch as juſtly intitled him to the character of a Complete Young Gentleman.

1664. His ſpiritual conflict and exerciſes.

Great, about this time, was his ſpiritual conflict: His natural inclination, his lively and active diſpoſition, his acquired accompliſhments, his father's favour, the reſpect of his friends and acquaintance, did ſtrongly preſs him to embrace the glory and pleaſures of this world, then, as it were, courting and careſſing him, in the bloom of youth, to accept them. Such a combined force might ſeem almoſt invincible; but the earneſt ſupplication of his ſoul being to the Lord for preſervation, he was pleaſed to grant him ſuch a portion of his holy Power and Spirit, as enabled him in due time to overcome all oppoſition, and with an holy reſolution to follow Chriſt, whatſoever reproaches or perſecutions might attend him.

1666. Goes to Ireland, and is convinced there.

About the year 1666, and the 22d of his age, his father committed to his care and management a conſiderable eſtate in Ireland, which occaſioned his reſidence in that country. Being at Cork, he was informed by one of the People called Quakers, that Thomas Loe, whom we mentioned before, was to be ſhortly at a Meeting in that city; he went to hear him, who began his declaration with theſe words, "There is a Faith "that overcomes the World, and there is a Faith that is overcome by the World;" upon which ſubject he enlarged with much clearneſs and energy. By the living and powerful teſtimony of this man, which had made ſome impreſſion upon his ſpirit ten years before, he was now thoroughly and effectually convinced, and afterward conſtantly attended the meetings of that people, even through the heat of perſecution.

1667. His firſt impriſonment at Cork.

On the third of the 9th month, 1667, being again at a meeting in Cork, he, with many others, were apprehended and carried before the mayor, who obſerving that his dreſs diſcovered not the Quaker, would have ſet him at liberty, upon bond for his good behaviour; which he refuſing, was, with about eighteen others, committed to priſon. He had, during his abode in Ireland, contracted an intimate acquaintance with many of the nobility and gentry, and, being now a priſoner, wrote the following letter

To the Earl of ORRERY, Lord Preſident of Munſter.

'THE Occaſion may ſeem as ſtrange, as my Cauſe is juſt; but your Lordſhip will no leſs expreſs your Charity in the one, than your Juſtice in the other.

'Religion, which is at once my Crime and mine Innocence, makes me a priſoner to a Mayor's Malice, but mine own Free-man; for being in the Aſſembly of the People called Quakers, there came ſeveral Conſtables, backed with Soldiers, rudely and arbitrarily requiring every man's appearance before the Mayor, and amongſt others, violently haled me with them: Upon my coming before him, he charged me for being preſent at a Tumultuous and Riotous Aſſembly; and unleſs I would give Bond for my good Behaviour, who challenge the world to accuſe me juſtly with the contrary, he would commit me: I aſked for his Authority; for I humbly conceive without an Act of Parliament, or an Act of State, it might be juſtly termed too much officiouſneſs: His anſwer was, "A Proclamation in the year 1660, and new Inſtructions to "revive that dead and antiquated Order." I leave your Lordſhip to be Judge, if that proclamation relates to this concernment; that only was deſigned to ſuppreſs Fifth-Monarchy Killing Spirits; and ſince the King's Lord-Lieutenant and yourſelf, being fully perſuaded the intention of theſe called Quakers, by their meetings, was really the Service of God, have therefore manifeſted a repeal, by a long continuance of freedom, I hope your Lordſhip will not now begin an unuſual Severity, by indulging ſo much malice in one, whoſe actions ſavour ill with his neareſt neighbours, but that there may be a ſpeedy releaſement to all, for attending their honeſt callings, with the enjoyment of their families, and not to be longer ſeparated from both.

'And though to diſſent from a national ſyſtem, impoſed by authority, renders men Hereticks, yet I dare believe your Lordſhip is better read in Reaſon and Theology, than to ſubſcribe a maxim ſo vulgar and untrue; for imagining moſt Viſible Conſtitutions of religious government ſuited to the nature and genius of a Civil Empire, it cannot be eſteemed Hereſy, but to ſcare a multitude from ſuch enquiries as may create Diviſions, fatal to a Civil Policy, and therefore at worſt deſerves only the name of Diſturbers.

'But I preſume, my Lord, the acquaintance you have had with other Countries, muſt needs have furniſhed you with this infallible obſervation, That Diverſities of Faith and Worſhip contribute not to the diſturbance of any place, where Moral Uniformity is barely requiſite to preſerve the Peace. It is not long ſince you were a good Sollicitor for the Liberty I now crave, and concluded no way ſo effectual to im‘ prove or advantage this Country, as to diſpenſe with Freedom in things relating to Conſcience; and, I ſuppoſe, were it riotous or tumultuary, as by ſome vainly imagined, your Lordſhip's Inclination, as well as Duty, would entertain a very remote opinion. My humble ſupplication therefore to you is, that ſo malicious and injurious a practice to innocent Engliſhmen, may not receive any countenance or encouragement from your Lordſhip; for as it is contrary to the practice elſewhere, and a bad argument to invite Engliſh hither, ſo, with ſubmiſſion, will it not reſemble that Clemency and Engliſh Spirit, that hath hitherto made you honourable.

1667.

‘ If in this caſe I may have uſed too great a Liberty, it is my Subject; nor ſhall I doubt your pardon, ſince by your authority I expect a favour, which never will be uſed unworthy an honeſt man, and ‘ Your Lordſhip's faithful, &c.

‘ W. P.’

Is diſcharged.

His requeſt in the letter, ſo far as related to himſelf, was quickly granted, for the Earl forthwith ordered his diſcharge.

His conſtancy renewed by ſuffering.

His late impriſonment was ſo far from terrifying, that it ſtrengthened him in his reſolution of a cloſer union with that People, whoſe religious innocence was the only crime they ſuffered for.

Publickly joins the Quakers.

And now his more open joining with the Quakers, brought himſelf under that reproachful name: His companions wonted compliments and careſſes, were changed into ſcoffs and deriſion: He was made a by-word, ſcorn and contempt, both to profeſſors and profane; to the latter, for being religious, and to the former, for having a better than theirs.

Returns to England.

His exerciſe with his father.

His father being informed by letter from a Nobleman of his acquaintance, what danger his ſon was in of being proſelyted to Quakeriſm, remanded him home, and he readily obeyed. Upon his return, although there was no great alteration in his Dreſs, yet his manner of Deportment, and the ſolid Concern of Mind he appeared to be under, were manifeſt indications of the truth of the information his father had received; who thereupon attacked him afreſh: And here my pen is diffident of her abilities to deſcribe that moſt pathetick and moving conteſt which was betwixt his father and him. His Father, actuated by Natural Love, principally aiming at his Son's Temporal Honour; He, guided by a Divine Impulſe, having chiefly in view his own Eternal Welfare: His Father, grieved to ſee the well-accompliſhed ſon of his hopes, now ripe for Worldly Promotion, voluntarily turn his back on it; He, no leſs afflicted, to think that a compliance with his Earthly Father's Pleaſure, was inconſiſtent with an Obedience to his Heavenly One: His Father, preſſing his Conformity to the Cuſtoms and Faſhions of the times; He, modeſtly craving leave to refrain from what would hurt his Conſcience: His Father earneſtly intreating him, and almoſt on his knees beſeeching him, to yield to his Deſire; He, of a loving and tender diſpoſition, in an extreme Agony of ſpirit, to behold his father's concern and trouble: His Father threatening to diſinherit him; He, humbly ſubmitting to his Father's Will therein: His Father turning his back on him in Anger; He, lifting up his Heart to God, for ſtrength to ſupport him in that time of trial.

A remarkable inſtance of his ſincerity.

And here we may not omit to give our reader a particular and obſervable inſtance of his Sincerity. His father finding him too fixt to be brought to a general compliance with the cuſtomary Compliments of the times, ſeemed inclinable to have borne with him in other reſpects, provided he would be uncovered in the preſence of the King, the Duke, and Himſelf: This being propoſed, he deſired time to conſider of, which his father ſuppoſing to be with an intention of conſulting his friends, the Quakers, about it; he aſſured him that he would ſee the face of none of them, but retire to his chamber till he ſhould return him an anſwer. Accordingly he withdrew, and having humbled himſelf before God, with faſting and ſupplication, to know his heavenly mind and will, he became ſo ſtrengthened in his reſolution, that returning to his father, he humbly ſignified, that he could not comply with his deſire therein.

Is turned out of his father's houſe.

When all endeavours proved ineffectual to ſhake his Conſtancy, and his father ſaw himſelf utterly diſappointed of his hopes, he could no longer endure him in his ſight, but turned him out of doors the ſecond time. Thus expoſed to the charity of his friends, having no other ſubſiſtence, (except what his mother privately ſent him) he endured the Croſs with a chriſtian Patience and Magnanimity, comforting himſelf with the promiſe of Chriſt, “ Verily, I ſay unto you, there is no man that hath left houſe, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the kingdom of God's ſake, who ſhall not receive manifold more in this preſent time, and in the world to come life everlaſting.” Luke xviii. 29, 30.

His father's anger mollified.

After a conſiderable time, his ſteady perſeverance evincing his integrity, his father's wrath became ſomewhat mollified, ſo that he winked at his return to, and continuance in, his family; and though he did not publickly ſeem to countenance him, yet when impriſoned for being at meetings, he would privately uſe his intereſt to get him releaſed.

1668. Comes forth in the Miniſtry.

About the year 1668, being the 24th of his age, he firſt came forth in the work of the miniſtry, rightly called to, and qualified for, that office; being ſent of God to teach others what himſelf had learned of him: Commiſſioned from on high, to preach to others that holy Self-denial himſelf had practiſed: To recommend to all that ſerenity and peace of conſcience himſelf had felt: Walking in the LIGHT, to call others out of Darkneſs: Having drank of the Water of Life, to direct others to the ſame Fountain: Having taſted of the Heavenly Bread, to invite all men to partake of the ſame Banquet: Being redeemed by the Power of CHRIST, he was ſent to call others from under the Dominion of Satan, into the glorious liberty of the ſons of God, that they might receive remiſſion of ſins, and an inheritance among them that are ſanctified, through faith in Jeſus Chriſt.

About this time he writ to a young perſon of his acquaintance, by way of caution, againſt the follies and vanities of the world, the following letter, viz.

'FRIEND, Navy-Office, 10th of the 5th Month, 1668.

'IT was a true word ſpoke by Jeſus Chriſt, to undeceive all thoſe careleſs wanton Jews, among whom he manifeſted his glorious Truth, through that Body prepared of God for that very end, That the Way which leads to everlaſting life and reſt, was very ſtrait and narrow. My friend, How much may it import the welfare of thy immortal ſoul, to reflect upon that courſe of life and way thou now art walking in, before an evident ſtroke from heaven call thee hence, and ſend thy ſo much indulged fleſh and blood into the grave; an entertainment for no better than noiſome worms! I beg thee, as ever thou wouldſt be ſaved from that unſpeakable anguiſh, which is reſerved for Worldlings, and from whence there is no redemption, to keep thyſelf from thoſe vanities, follies, and pollutions, which unavoidably bring that miſerable ſtate. Alas! How incongruous, or unſuitable, is thy life and practice, with thoſe holy women of old, whoſe time was moſtly ſpent in heavenly Retirements, out of that rattle, noiſe, and converſation thou art in! And canſt thou imagine that thoſe holy men, recorded in ſcripture, ſpent their days as do the gallants of theſe times? Where is the Self-denying Life of Jeſus, the Croſs, the Reproach, the Perſecution, and Loſs of All, which he and his ſuffered, and moſt willingly ſupported, having their eyes all fixed upon a more enduring Subſtance? Well, my friend, this know, and by theſe ſhalt thou be judged, and in it I am clear, That as without Holineſs none can ſee God, ſo without Subjection to that Spirit, Light, or Grace in the heart, which God in love hath made to appear to all, "That teacheth to deny all ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, and to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly in this preſent world;" I ſay, without ſubjection hereunto, there is no attaining to that holineſs which will give thee an entrance into his preſence, in which is joy and pleaſure for ever. And examine with thyſelf, how remote thou art from the guidings and inſtructions of this Spirit of Grace, who canſt countenance this age in frequenting their wicked and vain ſports, plays and entertainments, conforming thyſelf to ridiculous cuſtoms, and making one at idle talking and vain jeſting, whereſoever thou comeſt, not conſidering thou ſhalt account with the dreadful God for every idle word. And let all thy frolick aſſociates know, their day is haſtening, in which they ſhall not abide the preſence of him that ſits upon the throne. It ſhall be a time of horror, amazement and diſtreſs: Then ſhall they know there is a Righteous Holy Judge of All. As for thee, with pity is thy condition often in my thoughts; and often is it my deſire that thou mayſt do well: But whilſt I ſee thee in that ſpirit which ſavours of this world's delights, eaſe, plenty and eſteem, neglecting that One Thing neceſſary, I have but little hopes. However, I could not let this plain admonition paſs me; and what place ſoever it may have in thy thoughts, I am ſure it is in true love to that which ſhall be happy or miſerable to all eternity. I have not ſought fine words, or chiming expreſſions; the gravity, the concernment and nature of my ſubject, admits no ſuch butter-flies. In ſhort, be adviſed, my friend, to be ſerious, and to ponder that which belongs to thy eternal peace. Retire from the noiſe and clatter of tempting Viſibles, to the beholding HIM who is Inviſible, that he may reign in thy ſoul, GOD over All, exalted and bleſſed for ever: Farewel.

'I am thy well-wiſhing, real friend,

'W. P.'

His firſt appearing in print.

This year was publiſhed the firſt of his printed works, under the title of "Truth Exalted;" which is retained in this Collection.

1668.

The occaſion of publiſhing his "Sandy "Foundation "ſhaken."

Is impriſoned in the Tower.

His anſwer to the Biſhop of London's threats.

About this time, two of the hearers of one Thomas Vincent, a Preſbyter in the Spittle-Yard, came over to the Quakers: Their paſtor hereat tranſported with fiery zeal, (a thing fertile of ill language) railing to his auditory, accuſed the Quakers of holding moſt erroneous and damnable doctrines. This coming to our author's ears, he, together with George Whitehead, demanded of Vincent an opportunity to defend themſelves and Friends: A conference was agreed to be held at his own meeting-houſe, at which ſeveral points of doctrine were ſtarted and debated, but nothing fairly determined: From hence our author took occaſion to write a little book, intituled, "The Sandy Foundation ſhaken," which gave great offence to ſome then at the helm of the church, who preſently took the old method of reforming what they call Error, by advancing at once their ſtrongeſt argument, viz. 'An Order for impriſoning him in the Tower of London.' There was he under cloſe confinement, and even denied the viſits of his Friends: But yet his enemies attained not their purpoſe; for when, after ſome time, his ſervant brought him word, that the Biſhop of London was reſolved he ſhould either publickly recant, or die a priſoner, he made this reply: 'All is well: I wiſh they had told me ſo before, ſince the expecting of a Releaſe put a ſtop to ſome Buſineſs: Thou mayſt tell my father, who I know will aſk thee, theſe words: That my Priſon ſhall be my Grave, before I will budge a jot; for I owe my Conſcience to no mortal Man: I have no need to fear, God will make amends for all: They are miſtaken in me; I value not their threats and reſolutions; for they ſhall know I can weary out their malice and peeviſhneſs; and in me ſhall they all behold a Reſolution above Fear; Conſcience above Cruelty; and a Baffle put to all their Deſigns, by the Spirit of Patience, the Companion of all the tribulated Flock of the Bleſſed Jesus, who is the Author and Finiſher of the Faith that overcomes the World, yea, Death and Hell too: Neither great nor good things were ever attained without loſs and hardſhips. He that would reap and not labour, muſt faint with the Wind, and periſh in Diſappointments; but an hair of my head ſhall not fall, without the Providence of my Father that is over all.'

His works written in the Tower.

A ſpirit warmed with the love of God, and devoted to his ſervice, ever purſues its main purpoſe: Our author, reſtrained from Preaching, applied himſelf to Writing: Several treatiſes were the fruits of his ſolitude, particularly that excellent one, intituled, "No Croſs, No Crown:" A book which tending to promote the General Deſign of Religion, was well accepted, and hath paſſed ſundry impreſſions.

He alſo writ from the Tower the following Letter to Lord Arlington:

To the Lord Arlington.

'I Know none to whom this paper may ſo properly be directed as thyſelf: For as thou art principal Secretary of State, the perſon to whom I ſurrendered myſelf, by whoſe Warrant I was committed, and who was pleaſed to come to this place to take my examination about a note that was by ſome ſuſpected to have dropt from me the day of my ſurrender; ſo the great civility I found, and candid promiſes thou waſt pleaſed to give me of thy aſſiſtance, as well there as here, are great encouragements not only to preſent thee with this brief remonſtrance, which by the mouth of one of thy attendants may eaſily be run over, but to expect an anſwer altogether ſuitable.

'Truly were I as criminal as my adverſaries have been pleaſed to repreſent me, it might become me to bear my preſent ſufferings, without the leaſt reſentment of Injuſtice done; and to eſteem a Vindication of my Cauſe, an Aggravation of my Guilt: But ſince it is ſo notorious that common fame hath maliciouſly belied me, and that, from invincible teſtimonies, I ſtand not guilty of what my adverſaries would have ſo peremptorily faſtened on me; confeſſing that Eternal Deity of Christ; what better interpretation can be given of their Zeal, than meer Peeviſhneſs, and their great Learning, than foul Ignorance? Strange, that men eſteemed Chriſtians, ſhould ſeem ſo indefatigable in writing, preaching, and diſcourſing down the reputation of an innocent man, by the moſt foul aſperſions, black characters, and exaſperating imputations, that ſpirits moſt incendiary could invent or collect; in a word, to baniſh me the World, forbid me Heaven, and furiouſly denounce me ſequeſtred of All, with the reſerve of Hell only, and there itſelf have intitled me to the laſt and moſt diſmal ſtation! But what is more admirable, thoſe very perſons have all this while miſtaken the very queſtion, and in reality have been accuſing their own Shadows, making me ſuffer their puniſhment, who leaſt of all, ſincerely, am concerned in their heat. Others there be, I know, who can inſinuate their diſpleaſure under more plauſible expreſſions,

——————— Crimina Raſis
Librant in Antithetis ————

——— doctas poſuiſſe figuras
Laudantur ———————

1669. ‘and conſequently more ſecurely to themſelves, though leſs to me, may obtain their ends: But to indulge thoſe poor pretences, and give reception to thoſe threedbare and hackney phraſes of Seditious Fellow, Erroneous Perſon, Factious, and Troubleſome to the State, under the counterfeit of Illumination, &c. methinks needs not a Jury of Twelve to convict them of very great Indiſcretion; as well as I am perſuaded they have no room with thee. However, mine adverſaries ammunition hath been worſe beſtowed than upon wool-ſacks, who have, alas, got to their old whimſies of fanſying enemies in the air, wherein they have been ſo hotly ſkirmiſhing, that hard it is to perſuade them they only dream, and make reality of fictions: My common reſidence is on a more ſolid bottom: But, as I am willing to believe, had my innocency been well obſerved, my confinement ſhould not have given ſo great an approbation of their impoſtures; ſo, on the other hand, ſince they are unqueſtionably manifeſted to be ſuch, and that the more moderate of the authors have given their retractations in publick converſation, expreſſing their great trouble to have ſo readily entertained and promoted ſuch foul aſperſions, to the incenſing of the civil magiſtrate againſt me; the cauſe, I ſay, being thus removed, it is time the undeſerved effect ſhould ceaſe, otherwiſe my Liberty ſeems to be ſacrificed to the inordinate paſſions of the moſt inveterate part of a faction, or ſtrongly to confirm thoſe in their conjectures and reports, who confidently have told it up and down, that my reſtraint is not continued on any Religious Matter, but for ſome points deeply concerning the Safety of the King, both moſt unworthy the equity, greatneſs, and honour of authority: But, alas! ſhall theſe impudent forgeries, and malicious aggravations, longer prevail againſt a man that hath broke no Law, deſpiſed no Government, dethroned no Deity, ſubverted no Faith, Obedience, or good Life; but, in words and actions, hath inceſſantly endeavoured the effectual promotion of all.

‘What if I differ from ſome Religious Apprehenſions? Am I therefore incompatible with the being of Human Societies? Shall it not be remembered with what ſucceſs kingdoms and common-wealths have lived under the ballance of diverſe parties? And if the politicks of the moſt judicious and acute inquiſitors after theſe affairs are of any worth, they are not at a ſtand in delivering their ſenſe with great ſharpneſs, “That it is the ſecureſt prop of all Monarchical Governments.” Let it not be forgotten, that under the Jewiſh Conſtitution, the utmoſt they required from Strangers, to entitle them to Freedom, was an Acknowledgment to the Noachical Precepts, (never denied by me); nor was it better with them in latter days, than whilſt the Phariſees, Scribes, Eſſeans, Sadducees, &c. had the free exerciſe of their conſciences, all differing among themſelves. Neither was it otherwiſe amongſt the Infidels: Who knows not that almoſt every Family and Tribe in Rome had its particular Sacra? Nay, the Egyptian Iſis and Serapis obtained a place for publick Temples, and divine Honours, among thoſe wiſe people. Nor can I omit the great candor of (that otherwiſe moſt inhuman) Tiberius to the Chriſtians, who, if Euſebius Pamphilus be to be credited, not only made it Death for any to perſecute the Chriſtians, but had a rare good opinion of CHRIST, and the Chriſtian Faith, though both were ſo immediately deſtructive of his Religion and the whole World's. Nay, ſince the Chriſtian Times, who is not a ſtranger to Eccleſiaſtical Story, and doth not know the Great Variety of Opinions that reigned in Egypt, Conſtantinople, Antioch and Alexandria; indeed, where not? Nor do I read it ever entered into the hearts of any to moleſt them. And had not Secular Power been the Diana and Great Goddeſs courted by the Arrians and Anti-Arrians, they might have lived with great ſecurity in their ſentiments, and not have troubled the whole world, and perplexed themſelves for ſo many ages. And they who will reflect upon the carriage of both thoſe parties, may find reaſons enough to dread the apprehenſions of a faction, and palpably diſcover and read the natural, but fatal conſequences that unavoidably follow the exaltation of a ſingle Party, to the detriment of others, rather than to keep a moderate and well-adviſed Ballance upon all. This maxim Socrates Scholaſticus reports to have been not unſeen, nor wholly unpractiſed by the great wiſdom of the Emperor Jovianus, firſt ſuggeſted by his beloved friend and philoſopher Themiſtius, whoſe time, though ſhort, had a moſt differing ſucceſs from all that went before, or followed after him, and more than a little confirms my preſent conſideration. I ſhall omit the recital of later and preſent teſtimonies: In Europe they are freſh, and in our ſight: It is not the property of Religion to PERSECUTE Religion; that ſcorns to employ thoſe weapons to her defence, that others have uſed to her depreſſion. It is her privilege alone to conquer naked of force or artifice: And that perſon who hath not the Election of his Religion, hath none.

‘For my own part, I know not any unfit for Political Societies, but thoſe who maintain principles deſtructive of Induſtry, Fidelity, Juſtice and Obedience, in all matters relative of them, (wherefore the Romans exiled their Mathematicos) which neither myſelf, nor any Quaker living, can with any ſhew of reaſon be charged

1669.

‘ withal. But to conceit that men muſt form their Faith of things proper to ANOTHER World, by the Preſcriptions of mortal Men, or elſe they can have no right to eat, drink, ſleep, walk, trade, be at liberty, or live in THIS, to me ſeems both ridiculous and dangerous. Since it is moſt certain, the Underſtanding can never be convinced by other arguments than what are adequate to its own nature; which Force is ſo remote from, that as it abundantly expreſſeth paſſion or ignorance in thoſe who uſe it, ſo experimentally do we find, that it is not only unſucceſsful, by confirming perſons that really have reaſons on their ſide, but greatly obdurates alſo the unreaſonable, who forget their own weakneſs, by gazing on their Perſecutors, being well aſſured, that whoſoever is in the Right, HE always is in the wrong, that by Club-Law and Corporal Extremities thinks to illuminate and convince the Underſtanding: It may make Hypocrites, not Converts; and if I am at any time convinced, I will pay the honour of it to TRUTH, and not to baſe and timorous Hypocriſy. Nor, indeed, are ſuch inquiries material, as well as that it is unlawful to make ſo diligent ſearch for Conſcience, and that in caſe they find her without the mark of publick Allowance, and that ſhe pays no Cuſtom, ſhe muſt be there forfeited. For who loves to aſk at any Shop, of what Religion the Maſter is, and not rather what is his Price for this or that Commodity? It therefore greatly were the King's intereſt to clear the priſons of all conſcientious perſons, eſpecially ſince Uniformity of Mind is not leſs impoſſible in all punctilios, than is exact Reſemblance in Viſage, and men muſt be new-made in both reſpects, before they can be changed to gratify ſuch deſires.

‘ However my caſe is ſingular, ſince wholly guiltleſs of what was charged againſt me; and if the obſervation of Tacitus on Lingonius's various caſe be of any force, who, though he did deſerve puniſhment inflicted, yet becauſe it was done without examination, and due conviction, ſaith Tacitus, “ He ſuffered unlawfully.” Then for a greater reaſon muſt my confinement ſeem injurious, who have been ſhut up above theſe ſix months, under a ſtrict and cloſe impriſonment, from many common comforts, and neceſſary concerns of life, without the leaſt formal cauſe or reaſon why exhibited againſt me, contrary, I conceive, to the Natural Privilege of an Engliſhman.

‘ My hopes are, I ſhall not longer continue a priſoner, merely to aſſure the world I am not innocent of what in very truth I am not guilty, nor yet that matters of lighter moment be ſought to prolong my reſtraint, becauſe as yet there is no Law to deprive an inoffenſive Engliſhman of ſo great and eminent a right as Liberty: Since this were too nearly to reſemble the lamentable caſe of the Innocent Daughter of Guilty Sejanus, who, becauſe the Roman Laws allowed not Virgins to be ſtrangled, was firſt deflowered, that ſhe might be. My Life ſhall go before my Chaſtity, let men contrive what they will. But, above all, methinks the name Chriſtian imports ſo holy, ſo juſt, and ſo condeſcending a diſpoſition, that theſe ſeverities can have no plea from ſuch as have truly entitled themſelves unto it. For my own ſhare, as it is my principle (as I have declared) to live myſelf, and encourage others, in the purſuit of juſt, ſober, and induſtrious courſes (which are the true grounds of all civil ſocieties, and only ways to their proſperity) ſo in whatever I differ from the Publick Eſtabliſhment, it ſhall never find me remiſs therein.

‘ But I beſeech thee to intreat the King, on my account, not to believe every man to be his enemy, that cannot ſhape his conſcience by the narrow forms and preſcripts of mens inventions; and the perſonal obligations, beſides the publick reſpect that I owe him, but above all, the Holy Forgiving TRUTH I profeſs, will never admit of ſuch a thing; nor do we own one principle that will not, inſtead of acting us to his prejudice, at all times in our ſtations fit us to diſpute with any (in civil matters) the firſt place of Obedience to his Commands, our Conſciences being left unpreſcribed.

‘ To conclude: Since my adverſaries have overſhot the mark, that the accuſation is fictitious, and many of them have publickly retracted their firſt opinions of the matter, after ſo ſtrict an impriſonment, without any legal cauſe, or juſt procedure, contrary to the privileges of every Engliſhman, as well as the meekneſs, forbearance, and compaſſion inſeparable from true Chriſtianity; I think it is time, and I deſire I may be ordered a releaſe, to follow my ordinary employments: But if it ſhould yet be ſcrupled, or denied, upon the leaſt diſſatisfaction unremoved, I intreat the favour of acceſs to the King, where I ſhall freely and juſtly anſwer to all ſuch interrogatories as may concern my preſent caſe: Or if that will not be allowed, that it would pleaſe thee to give me a full hearing to all ſuch objections as may be thought to carry any weight; that ſo if I muſt remain a priſoner, it may be known for what; and in the mean time that ſuch liberty may be granted me, as is cuſtomary for other priſoners to enjoy, after the firſt or ſecond month of their impriſonment, the ſeaſon eſpecially conſidered.

1669.

‘ I make no apology for my letter as a trouble, the uſual ſtile of ſuppliants; becauſe I think the honour that will accrue to thee, by being juſt, and releaſing the oppreſſed, exceeds the advantage that can ſucceed to me: Worthy and generous minds gladly embrace occaſions to aſſiſt the Helpleſs, and then are moſt ready to afford them their aſſiſtance, when nothing is to be got beſides the hazard of expreſſing it. And I am well aſſured the kindneſs and juſtice I ſhall pleaſe thee to employ on that account, can never miſs of a plentiful reward from God, and praiſe of all virtuous men.

‘ Thy true friend, who ſuffers wrongfully, which the ‘ Lord God forgive, if he ſo pleaſe,

‘ W. P.’

‘ 1ſt of the 5th Month,
‘ 1669.

And in order to clear himſelf from the aſperſions caſt upon him, in relation to the “ Doctrines of the Trinity, the Incarnation and Satisfaction of CHRIST,” he publiſhed a little book called, “ Innocency with her Open Face,” by way of apology for the aforeſaid “ Sandy Foundation ſhaken.” In this apology he ſo ſucceſsfully vindicated himſelf, that ſoon after the publication of it, he was diſcharged from his impriſonment, which had been of about ſeven months continuance.

Goes a ſecond time to Ireland.

On the 15th of the 7th month this year, he ſet out again from London for Ireland, took ſhipping at Briſtol on the 24th of the 8th month, and on the 26th arrived at Cork. In his paſſage thither, we think the following occurrence worth relating:

A remarkable occurrence in his paſſage.

‘ At his former coming from Ireland, the converſation and ſociety of a perſon called a Quaker, who came over in the ſame veſſel, was a ſtrengthening and encouragement to him then newly convinced. This man now happened to return thither again in his company, and obſerving how effectually the Power of Truth had wrought upon our author, and the great progreſs he through a ſincere obedience had made in his journey heavenward, and ſeeing himſelf not only overtaken, but left far behind, by one that had ſet out after him, was led to a ſolid reflection upon his own Negligence and Unfaithfulneſs, and expreſſed, with many tears, a renewed viſitation and deep concern upon his ſpirit.’ So forcible is the example of the faithful, to the ſtirring up an holy zeal and emulation in others.

Being arrived at Cork, he immediately viſited his Friends impriſoned there, and the next day had a Meeting with them, in which they were ſpiritually refreſhed and comforted together: Having tarried there ſome days, he went from thence to Dublin, and on the 5th of the 9th month, was at the National Meeting of Friends there, which was held at his lodgings. At this meeting, an account of his friends ſufferings being drawn up, by way of addreſs, he preſented the ſame a few days after to the Lord-Lieutenant.

His ſervices in Ireland.

During his ſtay in Ireland, though his buſineſs in the care of his father's eſtate took up a conſiderable part of his time, yet was he frequently preſent at, and preached in friends meetings, eſpecially at Dublin and Cork, in one of which places he uſually reſided. He alſo wrote during his reſidence there, ſeveral treatiſes, particularly, “ A Letter to the Young Convinced.” He very frequently viſited his Friends in priſon, and had meetings with them; nor did he let ſlip any opportunity he had with thoſe in Authority, to ſollicit on their behalf: And in the beginning of the 4th Month, 1670.

1670, through his repeated applications to the Chancellor, the Lord Arran, and the Lord-Lieutenant, an Order of Council was obtained for their Releaſe. Having ſettled his father's concerns to ſatisfaction, and done his own friends many ſignal ſervices, he ſhortly after returned into England.

Returns to England.

In this year 1670, came forth the Conventicle-Act, prohibiting Diſſenters Meetings, under ſevere penalties: The edge of this new weapon was preſently turned upon the Quakers, who, not accuſtomed to flinch in the cauſe of Religion, ſtood moſt expoſed. Being forcibly kept out of their Meeting-Houſe in Grace-Church-Street, they met as near it in the Street as they could, and William Penn there preaching, was apprehended, and by warrant from Sir Samuel Starling, then Lord-Mayor of London, dated Auguſt 14th, 1670, committed to Newgate, and at the next ſeſſions at the Old-Baily, was, (together with William Mead) indicted for being preſent at, and preaching to, an unlawful, ſeditious, and riotous Aſſembly. At his trial he made a brave defence, diſcovering at once both the Free-Spirit of an Engliſhman, and the undaunted Magnanimity of a Chriſtian, inſomuch that notwithſtanding the moſt partial frowns and menaces of the Bench, the Jury acquitted him. The Trial itſelf, with a Preface and Appendix thereunto, as it was ſoon after publiſhed, are inſerted in this collection.

His Trial at the Old-Bailey.

His Father's death.

Not long after this trial, and his diſcharge from Newgate, his father died, perfectly reconciled to his ſon, and left him both his paternal bleſſing and a plentiful eſtate. His death-bed expreſſions, being very inſtructing and pathetic, deſerve a double reading.* He was buried in Redcliff ſteeple-houſe in the city of Briſtol; and over, over, or near, his ſepulchre, is erected a fair monument, with the following inſcription:

---

* See them in a Treatiſe intituled, “ No Croſs, No Crown,” inſerted in this Collection.

1670.

Inſcription on his Tomb.

"To the juſt memory of Sir William Penn, Knight, and ſometimes General; "born at Briſtol, anno 1621. ſon of Captain Giles Penn, ſeveral years Conſul "for the Engliſh in the Mediterranean, of the Penns of Penſlodge in the "county of Wilts, and thoſe Penns of Penn in the county of Bucks; and, "by his mother, from the Gilberts in the county of Somerſet, originally from "Yorkſhire; addicted from his youth to maritime affairs: He was made "Captain at the years of twenty-one, Rear-admiral of Ireland at twenty-three, "Vice-admiral of Ireland at twenty-five, Admiral to the Streights at twenty-"nine, Vice-admiral of England at thirty-one, and General in the firſt Dutch "war at thirty-two: Whence returning, anno 1655. he was Parliament-Man "for the town of Weymouth; 1660, made Commiſſioner of the Admiralty "and Navy, Governor of the town and fort of Kingſail, Vice-admiral of "Munſter, and a Member of that Provincial Council; and anno 1664, was "choſen Great Captain Commander under His Royal Highneſs, in that ſig-"nal and moſt evidently ſucceſsful fight againſt the Dutch fleet. Thus he "took leave of the Sea, his old element, but continued ſtill his other em-"ploys till 1669; at what time, through bodily infirmities, contracted by "the care and fatigue of publick affairs, he withdrew, prepared, and made "for his end; and, with a gentle and even gale, in much peace arrived and "anchored in his laſt and beſt port, at Wanſtead in the county of Eſſex, the "16th of September, 1670, being then but forty-nine and four months old.

"To his Name and Memory his ſurviving Lady
"hath erected this Remembrance."

Diſpute between W. P. and J. Ives.

About this time a publick diſpute was held at Weſt Wiccomb in Buckinghamſhire, between him and one Jeremy Ives, a celebrated Baptiſt. The ſubject was, "The "Univerſality of the Divine Light," which Ives had undertaken to diſprove, and came furniſhed with a ſtock of ſyllogiſms ready framed for his purpoſe. It was his place, as Opponent, to ſpeak firſt; which as ſoon as he had done (being ſenſible that his Arguments ſtood in their greateſt force while unanſwered) he ſtepped down from his ſeat, and, with an intention of breaking up the aſſembly, departed. Some of his own party followed him; but the generality of the people tarrying, W. Penn had an opportunity of anſwering, which he did to the great ſatisfaction of the auditory.

In the ninth month of this year being at Oxford, and obſerving the cruel uſage and perſecution his innocent Friends underwent there from the hands of the junior ſcholars, too much by the connivance of their ſuperiors, he wrote a letter to the Vice-chancellor on that ſubject.

This winter having his reſidence at Penn in Buckinghamſhire, he publiſhed a book intituled, "A ſeaſonable Caveat againſt Popery," wherein he both expoſes and confutes many erroneous doctrines of the Church of Rome, and eſtabliſhes the oppoſite truths by ſound arguments: A work alone ſufficient, on the one hand, to wipe off the calumny caſt upon him of being a Favourer of the Romiſh Religion; and, on the other, to ſhew, that his principle being for an Univerſal Liberty of Conſcience, he would have had it extended even to the Papiſts themſelves, under a Security of their not perſecuting others. The book itſelf being a better vindication of its author in theſe points than any thing we can here ſay, is recommended to our reader's ſerious peruſal.

Is apprehended at a meeting in Wheeler-ſtreet.

On the 5th of the 12th month this year, being at a meeting in Wheeler-ſtreet, a ſerjeant with ſoldiers came and planted themſelves at the door, where they waited till he ſtood up and preached, and then the ſerjeant pulled him down, and led him into the ſtreet, where a conſtable and his aſſiſtants ſtanding ready to join them, they carried him away to the Tower, by order from the lieutenant. A guard was there clapt upon him, and a meſſenger diſpatched to the lieutenant, then at White-Hall, to inform him of the ſucceſs. After about three hours time, it being evening, he came home, and W. Penn was ſent for from the guard, by an officer with a file of muſqueteers. There were ſeveral in company with Sir John Robinſon, the lieutenant of the Tower; namely, Sir Samuel Starling, Sir John Shelden, Lieutenant-colonel Rycraft, and others. Orders being given that no perſon ſhould be admitted up unconcerned in the buſineſs, they proceeded to his examination, of which we find the following account given by an eye and ear witneſs; viz.

His examination before the Lieutenant of the Tower.

Sir John Robinſon. What is this perſon's name?

[Note, The Mittimus was already made, and his name put in.]

Conſt. Mr. Penn, Sir.

J. R. Is your name Penn?

W. P. Doſt thou not know me? Haſt thou forgot me?

J. R. I do not know you: I do not deſire to know ſuch as you are.

1670. W. P. If not, why didſt thou ſend for me hither?

J. R. Is that your name, Sir?

W. P. Yes, yes, my name is Penn; thou knoweſt it is; I am not aſhamed of my name.

J. R. Conſtable, where did you find him?

Conſt. At Wheeler-ſtreet, at a meeting, ſpeaking to the people.

J. R. You mean he was ſpeaking to an Unlawful Aſſembly?

Conſt. I do not know indeed, Sir; he was there, and he was ſpeaking.

J. R. Give them their oaths.

W. P. Hold, do not ſwear the men; there is no need of it: I freely acknowledge I was at Wheeler-ſtreet, and that I ſpake to an aſſembly of people there.

J. R. and ſeveral others. He confeſſes it.

W. P. I do ſo; I am not aſhamed of my teſtimony.

J. R. No matter; give them their oaths.

[Note, They were ſworn to anſwer ſuch queſtions as ſhould be aſked, upon which they gave the evidence before given by the Conſtable.]

J. R. Mr. Penn, you know the law better than I can tell you; and you know theſe things are contrary to the law.

W. P. If thou believeſt me to be better known in the law than thyſelf, hear me; for I know no law I have tranſgreſſed. All laws are to be conſidered Strictly and Literally, or more Explanatorily and Lenitively. In the firſt ſenſe, the execution of many laws may be Extrema Injuria, the Greateſt Wrong: In the latter, Wiſdom and Moderation: I would have thee make that part thy choice.

Now whereas I am probably to be tried by the late Act againſt Conventicles, I conceive it doth not reach me.

J. R. No, Sir, I ſhall not proceed upon that law:

W. P. What law then? I am ſure that was intended for the ſtandard on theſe occaſions.

J. R. The Oxford-Act of Six Months.

W. P. That, of all laws, cannot concern me; for firſt I was never in Orders, neither Epiſcopally nor Claſſically, and one of them is intended by the Preamble of the Act.

J. R. No, No; any that ſpeak in Unlawful Aſſemblies, and you ſpoke in an Unlawful Aſſembly.

W. P. Two things are to be conſidered. Firſt, That the words, "Such as ſpeak "in any Unlawful Aſſemblies," alter the caſe much; for ſuch is relative of the Preamble, and cannot concern perſons in any other qualification, than under ſome Ordination or mark of Prieſthood. I am perſuaded thou knoweſt I am no ſuch perſon; I was never ordained, nor have I any particular Charge or Stipend, that may intitle me to ſuch a Function; and therefore I am wholly unconcerned in the word "ſuch".

Secondly, An Unlawful Aſſembly is too general a word; the Act doth not define to us what is meant by an Unlawful Aſſembly.

J. R. But other Acts do.

W. P. That is not to the purpoſe; for that may be an Unlawful Aſſembly in one Act, that may, by circumſtances, not be ſo adjudged in another; and it is hard that you will not ſtick to ſome One Act or Law, but, to accompliſh your ends, borrow a piece out of One Act, to ſupply the defects of another, and of a different nature from it.

J. R. Will you ſwear? Will you take the Oath that the Act requires of you?

W. P. This is not to the purpoſe.

J. R. Read him the Oath.

The OATH.

'I W. P. do ſwear that it is not lawful, upon any pretence whatſoever, to take 'Arms againſt the King, and that I do abhor that traiterous poſition of taking 'Arms, by his Authority, againſt his Perſon, or againſt thoſe that are commiſſionated 'by him, in purſuance of ſuch Commiſſions, and that I will not at any time endea'vour any Alteration of Government, either in Church or State.'

J. R. Will you take it, or no?

W. P. What need I take an oath not to do that, it is my faith not to do, ſo far as concerns the KING.

Lieut. Price. Then ſwear it.

W. P. The oath in that reſpect is already anſwered to all intents and purpoſes; for if I cannot fight againſt any man, (much leſs againſt the King) what need I take an oath not to do it? Should I ſwear not to do what is already againſt my conſcience to do?

J. R. You will not take the oath then.

1670.

W. P. What if I refuſe the oath, not becauſe of the matter contained in it (which only can criminate in the ſenſe of the Act) but of ſcrupling any oath? Shall I therefore be committed to priſon? This is moſt unequal. It was about FIGHTING the Oath and Act were deſigned, and not taking of Oaths: Therefore the denying to ſwear, when there is a denial to fight or plot, is no equitable ground for commitment.

J. R. Do you refuſe to ſwear?

W. P. Yes, and that upon better grounds than thoſe for which thou wouldſt have me ſwear, if thou wilt pleaſe to hear me.

J. R. I am ſorry you ſhould put me upon this ſeverity; it is no pleaſant work to me.

W. P. Theſe are but words; it is maniſeſt that this is a prepenſe malice: Thou haſt ſeveral times laid the meetings for me, and this day particularly.

J. R. No, I profeſs I could not tell you would be there.

W. P. Thine own Corporal told me, that you had intelligence at the Tower that I would be at Wheeler-Street to-day, almoſt as ſoon as I knew it myſelf: It is diſingenuous and partial; I never gave thee occaſion for ſuch unkindneſs.

J. R. I knew no ſuch thing; but if I had, I confeſs I ſhould have ſent for you.

W. P. That might have been ſpared, I do heartily believe it.

J. R. I vow, Mr. Penn, I am ſorry for you; you are an ingenious gentleman, all the world muſt allow you, and do allow you that; and you have a plentiful eſtate: Why ſhould you render yourſelf unhappy, by aſſociating with ſuch a ſimple people?

W. P. I confeſs I have made it my choice to relinquiſh the company of thoſe that are ingeniouſly wicked, to converſe with thoſe that are more honeſtly ſimple.

J. R. I wiſh you wiſer.

W. P. And I wiſh thee better.

J. R. You have been as bad as other folks.

W. P. When, and where? I charge thee to tell the company to my face.

J. R. Abroad, and at home too.

Sir John Shelden, [as is ſuppoſed]. No, no, Sir John, that is too much: [Or Words to that purpoſe.]

W. P. I make this bold challenge to all men, women, and children upon earth, juſtly to accuſe me with ever having ſeen me drunk, heard me ſwear, utter a curſe, or ſpeak one obſcene word, (much leſs that I ever made it my practice.) I ſpeak this to God's Glory, that has ever preſerved me from the power of thoſe pollutions, and that from a child begot an hatred in me towards them. But there is nothing more common, than when men are of a more ſevere life than ordinary, for looſe perſons to comfort themſelves with the conceit, 'That they were once as THEY are;' as if there were no collateral, or oblique line of the compaſs, or globe, men may be ſaid to come from to the ARCTICK Pole, but directly and immediately from the ANTARCTICK. Thy words ſhall be thy burden, and I trample thy ſlander as dirt under my feet.

J. R. Well, Mr. Penn, I have no ill will towards you; your father was my friend, and I have a great deal of kindneſs for you.

W. P. But thou haſt an ill way of expreſſing it. You are grown too high to conſider the plea of thoſe you call your Forefathers, for Liberty of Conſcience againſt the Papiſts, Cranmer, Latimer, Ridley, Bradford, &c. It was then plea good enough; "My Conſcience won't let me go to Maſs," and "My Conſcience wills that I ſhould "have an Engliſh Teſtament."

But that ſingle plea for Separation, then Reaſonable, is now by you, that pretend to ſucceed them, adjudged Unreaſonable and Factious.

I ſay, ſince the only juſt cauſe of the firſt revolt from Rome, was a Diſſatisfaction in point of Conſcience, you cannot reaſonably perſecute others who have right to the ſame Plea, and allow that to be warrantable.

J. R. But you do nothing but ſtir up the people to Sedition; and there was one of your friends that told me, you preached Sedition, and meddled with the Government.

W. P. We have the unhappineſs to be miſrepreſented, and I am not the leaſt concerned therein: Bring me the man that will dare to juſtify this accuſation to my face; and if I am not able to make it appear that it is both my practice, and all my Friends, to inſtill principles of Peace and Moderation, (and only to war againſt Spiritual Wickedneſs, that all men may be brought to fear God and work righteouſneſs) I ſhall contentedly undergo the ſevereſt puniſhment all your laws can expoſe me to.

And as for the King, I make this offer, That if any living can make appear, directly or indirectly, from the time I have been called a Quaker, (ſince from thence you date me ſeditious) I have contrived or acted any thing injurious to his Perſon, or the Engliſh Government, I ſhall ſubmit my perſon to your utmoſt cruelties, and eſteem them all but a due recompence. It is hard, that I being innocent, ſhould be reputed guilty! But the Will of God be done! I accept of Bad Report as well as Good.

J. R. Well, I muſt ſend you to Newgate for ſix months; and when they are expired, you will come out.

1670. W. P. Is that all? Thou well knoweſt a larger impriſonment has not daunted me: I accept it at the Hand of the Lord, and am contented to ſuffer His Will. Alas! you miſtake your intereſt; you will miſs your aim; this is not the way to compaſs your ends.

J. R. You bring yourſelf into trouble: You will be the heading of Parties, and drawing people after you.

W. P. Thou miſtakeſt, there is no ſuch way as this to render men remarkable: You are angry that I am Conſiderable, and yet you take the very way to make me ſo, by making this buſtle and ſtir about one peaceable perſon.

J. R. I wiſh your adhering to theſe things do not convert you to ſomething at laſt.

W. P. I would have thee and all men to know, that I ſcorn that Religion which is not worth ſuffering for, and able to ſuſtain thoſe that are afflicted for it: Mine is; and whatever may be my lot for my conſtant profeſſion of it, I am no-ways careful, but reſigned to anſwer the Will of God, by the Loſs of Goods, Liberty, and Life itſelf. When you have all, you can have no more, and then perhaps you will be contented, and by that you will be better informed of our Innocency. THY Religion PERSECUTES, and mine FORGIVES: And I deſire my GOD to forgive you all, that are concerned in my Commitment, and I leave you all in perfect Charity, wiſhing your everlaſting Salvation.

J. R. Send a Corporal, with a File of Muſqueteers along with him.

W. P. No, no, ſend thy Lacquey; I know the Way to Newgate.

Being committed to this priſon for ſix months, he filled up the time of his confinement by continual employ; and here he wrote "The Great Caſe of Liberty of Con-"ſcience, once more briefly debated and defended," together with ſeveral other pieces of occaſional controverſy.

In the time of his impriſonment, the Parliament being about to take meaſures for enforcing with greater ſeverity the aforeſaid Conventicle Act, he whoſe freedom of ſpirit a priſon could not confine from advocating the Cauſe of Liberty, wrote the following paper, directed 'To the High Court of Parliament.'

'FOraſmuch as it hath pleaſed you to make an Act, intituled, "An Act for "ſuppreſſing Seditious Conventicles, the Dangerous Practices of Seditious Secta-
"ries," &c. And that, under pretence of authority from it, many have taken the 'ungodly liberty of plundering, pillaging, and breaking into houſes, to the ruin and 'detriment of whole families, not regarding the poor, the widow and the fatherleſs,
'beyond all precedent or excuſe; and that we are informed it is your purpoſe, inſtead of 'relaxing your hand, to ſupply the defects of that Act by ſuch explanatory Clauſes as 'will inevitably expoſe us to the fury and intereſt of our ſeveral adverſaries, that under
'pretence of anſwering the intents of the ſaid Act, will only gratify their private hu-
'mours, and doubtleſs extend it beyond its original purpoſe, to the utter deſtruction of 'us and our ſuffering friends;

'We therefore eſteem ourſelves obliged in Chriſtian duty, once more to remonſtrate,

'Firſt, That we own Civil Government, or Magiſtracy, as God's Ordinance for the 'puniſhment of Evil-doers, and the praiſe of them that do well; and though we can'not comply with thoſe laws, that prohibit us to worſhip God according to our Con-
'ſciences, as believing it to be His alone Prerogative to preſide in matters of Faith and
'Worſhip, yet we both own, and are ready to yield Obedience to, every Ordinance of 'Man relating to Human Affairs, and that for Conſcience-ſake.

'Secondly, That we deny and renounce, as an horrible impiety, all Plots and Con-
'ſpiracies, or to promote our Intereſt, or Religion, by the blood and deſtruction of 'ſuch as diſſent from us, or yet thoſe that perſecute us.

'Thirdly, That in all Revolutions we have demeaned ourſelves with much Peace and 'Patience, (diſowning all contrary actings) notwithſtanding the numerous provocations
'of cruel and ungodly men; which is a demonſtration of our Harmleſs Behaviour, that 'ought not to be of little moment with you.

'Fourthly, That as we have ever lived moſt peaceably under all the various Govern'ments that have been ſince our firſt appearance (notwithſtanding we have been as their 'anvil to ſmite upon) ſo we do hereby ſignify that it is our Fixed Reſolution to conti'nue the ſame, that where we cannot ACTUALLY OBEY, WE PATIENTLY SHALL 'SUFFER, (leaving our innocent cauſe with God, not daring to love our lives unto the 'death, for our bleſſed teſtimony's ſake,) thereby manifeſting to the whole world, that 'we love GOD above all, and our Neighbours as ourſelves.

'If this prevails not with you to ſuſpend your thoughts of reinforcing your former 'Act, we do deſire that we, or ſome of our Friends, may receive a free hearing from 'you, (as ſeveral of us had upon the firſt Act for Uniformity) having many great and 'weighty reaſons to offer againſt all ſuch ſevere proceedings, to the end all wrong mea-
'ſures of us and of our Principles may be rectified, and that you, being better informed

'of both, may remove our heavy burdens, and let the oppreſſed go free, for ſuch 'Moderation will be well-pleaſing both to GOD and Good Men. 1671.

'From us who are now priſoners at Newgate (for Conſcience-ſake) on the 'behalf of ourſelves, and all our ſuffering Friends in England, &c.'

'Newgate, Second
'Month, 1671.

'W. PENN, and ſeveral others.'

The keepers of Newgate being at this time very abuſive to the Quakers there impriſoned (for honeſt men bringing leſs griſt to the Jailor's mill than riotous debauchees, are hardly welcome gueſts) he wrote a letter, by way of complaint to the Sheriffs, who, that year, were men of good temper and moderation, being as follows.

'To the SHERIFFS of LONDON.'

'FRIENDS,

'THOUGH we are a People the plainneſs of whoſe principles will not admit 'of Vain Compliments, yet are we by them required to expreſs our Gratitude; and we muſt confeſs, that ſince your being in Office, we have received many 'inſtances of your Kindneſs, for which you never will be condemned of God or virtuous men, as well as that we ſend you by the bearer our Acknowledgments.

'This done, we think fit to let you know, that though we are in a diſtinct Houſe, 'yet not in a diſtinct Capacity, with mere Felons; unleſs it be, that they have a Free 'Priſon, and we have none: For the Keeper is ſo far from ſhewing us that Common 'Reſpect, or we enjoy that which differenced us from Malefactors, that we are 'not leſs reſtrained, if not ſo much abuſed; for one of us deſiring liberty to fetch 'ſome beer, the Turnkey thruſt him back, calling him Loggerhead, Puppy, Rogue, '&c. and that to ſeveral others.

'In ſhort, we are not willing to be Bondſmen at our own Coſt; not for the Value 'of our Houſe-Rent, with other additional expences, but for our Teſtimony againſt 'the inſulting Menaces and Extortions of ſome of the Jailors, who would caſt us 'into the Common Stinking Jail! and therefore are reſolved to undergo that Severity: 'Which is all at preſent from thoſe that have wronged no man, but fear God, and 'have peace with him.'

'Newgate, Third
'Month, 1671.'

'Your true Friends, W. P. &c.'

His ſix months impriſonment in Newgate being expired, he was ſet at liberty, and ſhortly after went over into Holland and Germany: Of his miniſtry and ſervices at this time in thoſe countries, ſome account is given by himſelf in the beginning of his ſubſequent Travels into thoſe parts, herein-after inſerted. Is diſcharged from Newgate.

In the beginning of the year 1672, and the 28th of his age, our author took to wife Gulielma Maria Springett, daughter of Sir William Springett, formerly of Darling in Suſſex, who was killed in the time of the civil wars at the ſiege of Bamber: His widow was afterward married to Iſaac Pennington, of Peters-Chalfont in Buckinghamſhire, in whoſe family her ſaid daughter was brought up; a young woman whom a virtuous diſpoſition, joined to a comely perſonage, rendered well accompliſhed. 1672. His firſt marriage.

Soon after his marriage, pitching upon a convenient habitation at Rickmerſworth in Hertfordſhire, he reſided there with his family, often viſiting the Meetings of Friends, and returning home again.

In the ſeventh month this year, he took a journey to viſit his Friends in Kent, Suſſex and Surrey; of which his own Memorandums furniſh us with an obſervation of that ſingular induſtry which the free miniſters of the Goſpel exerciſe in the diſcharge of their office; for in the ſpace of Twenty-one days, he, with his companion under the like concern, were preſent at, and preached to as many Aſſemblies of People at diſtant Places, viz. Rocheſter, Canterbury, Dover, Deal, Folkſtone, Aſhford, and other places in Kent; at Lewes, Horſham, Stenning, &c. in Suſſex; and at Charlewood and Rygate in Surrey. Great was their ſervice in theſe counties; Their teſtimonies effectual to the ſtrengthening of their Friends, ſilencing of Gainſayers, and to a General Edification, were received by the people with joy and openneſs of heart; and themſelves, in the performance of their duty, filled with ſpiritual conſolation. Our author gives this account of their laſt meeting in that journey, being at Rygate: 'The Lord ſealed up our labours and travels, according to the deſire 'of my ſoul and ſpirit, with his heavenly Refreſhments and ſweet living Power and 'Word of Life, unto the reaching of all, and conſolating our own hearts abundantly.' And concludes his narrative with theſe words: 'And thus hath the Lord been with 'us in all our travels for his Truth, and with his bleſſings of peace are we returned, 'which is a reward beyond all worldly treaſure.' Travels into Kent and Suſſex.

1672. In the ninth month this year, being at home again, he wrote the following letter to one Dr. Haſbert, a phyſician at Embden in Germany.

'To Dr. HASBERT, Phyſician at the City of EMBDEN.'

'DEAR FRIEND,

'I Have very often remembered thee in the deep ſenſe of that weighty love of God, which his heavenly Truth raiſed in my heart to viſit thee in; earneſtly praying in ſpirit, that thou mighteſt receive a clear underſtanding of that bleſſed way of life and ſalvation, which he hath counted a remnant worthy both to know and to ſuffer for in this day: Glory and everlaſting honour to his moſt holy name! O my friend, it is my heart's deſire to the Lord, that he would preſerve thee ſimple, upright and conſtant in the obedience to that meaſure of the heavenly Light, wherewith the God and Father of Light hath illuminated thee, and unto which thou art now turned; in which as thou abideſt, with thy mind rightly exerciſed in the fear and dread of the Lord God, thou wilt be preſerved out of the vain janglings of the angry, peeviſh, and perverſe profeſſor, and kept clean from the ſins and pollutions that are in the prophane world. O how many profeſs God and Chriſt, according to the Hiſtorical Knowledge of both, but never come to the Myſtical and Experimental Knowledge of them! No, it is utterly impoſſible, that any thing ſhould bring to the Internal Knowledge and Experience of the work and will of God, but the Light and Spirit only, by an Inward Revelation and Operation: And ſuch as intitle themſelves to Chriſtianity, whilſt ſtrangers to the Terrors of the Lord for Sin, and to a Purgation from it, by the Fiery trials of his inward judgments, as well as outward tribulations (who is as Refiner's Fire, and as Everlaſting Burnings to all the workers of iniquity) they are of the Synagogue of Satan, and ſubjects of the god of this World, whoſe throne is in the hearts of the children of diſobedience unto the heavenly Light within: And therefore, in the name and authority of the Lord God of heaven and earth, I teſtify, that the way for every man and woman to come to God (whom darkneſs can have no acceſs to, for to it is he inacceſſible) is to bring his or her deeds to the Light in him or herſelf, and ſee if they be wrought in God, or by him: If they be, the Fire cannot conſume the pure gold; if they be not, Judgment with the Light will paſs, on God's behalf, upon the Creature, from whence there is no Appeal, without due Repentance, and turning to the Light, in it to walk in thought, word, and deed, in which the nations of them that be ſaved muſt walk and live for ever.

'And becauſe of the righteous judgment this heavenly Light brings (for, for Judgment is it come into the World) upon the Profeſſor, that is at eaſe in the Outward Courts of Profeſſion (that were given to the Gentiles to tread down, and which were left out in the meaſuring the Evangelical Temple of God) therefore is he ſo nettled, vexed, and in enmity, ſaying, "You deny the Scriptures; you renounce Chriſt; "you ſet up your own Works, and your Light is inſufficient," with ſuch-like. O but the Wiſe Man loves Reproof, and the Way thereof is Life to his upright ſoul: But this thou muſt expect from the Carnal, Fleſhly, and Hiſtorical Chriſtian of the Outward Courts and Suburbs of Religion, who is an Enemy to the Spiritual Seed, that ſees to the end of all Meats, Drinks, Waſhings, Figures, and Bodily Exerciſes: But as thy mind is kept ſtayed upon the Light, thou wilt have a good Underſtanding given to thee, and a right Diſcerning, whereby to comprehend and confound all that which may let or ſtop, whether it be within, or whether it be without: For this know, that the very ſame PRINCIPLE that gives LIGHT, adminiſters Strength, Knowledge, Life, Raiment, and all that ſhall or can be needed in the Spiritual Journey to the Eternal Reſt: So, dear Friend, unto that I recommend thee, beſeeching thee to dwell in it, for by it are all things, that are either reproveable or juſtifiable, made manifeſt, and whatſoever can be known of God (whom to know effectually is life eternal) is manifeſted within. And, O the peace! O the joy! O the heavenly refreſhment that they witneſs, that know a paſſing, (not from one Form to another) but from Death and Darkneſs, unto Life and Light, and are in the ſpiritual travel from Egypt's Land, through the State of Condemnation for Sin (which is MOSES in Spirit) unto Juſtification, through Life Eternal, which is the gift of God by JESUS CHRIST. The Lord God eternal preſerve thee, and keep thee ſtayed in thy mind, out of all wanderings, doubtings or murmurings, in holy faith, reſignation and patience, till thou witneſſeſt his kingdom to be come, and his will to be done on earth as it is in heaven; that ſo thou mayſt be a ſpiritual Candle in thy place, giving Light in the Life of Righteouſneſs, to the eclipſing of all the dim appearances of the Formal Righteouſneſs, that is among the Carnal and Hiſtorical Chriſtians there-away (who talk of Chriſt in ſwelling words of vanity, but leave the Croſs behind) which they are to be convinced of, and condemned for, by the Holy Paraclete, as well as for the groſſeſt of their iniquity, both being an abomination to the Lord. And if thou doſt freely give up, counting nothing dear, to anſwer the Lord's heavenly viſitation of Love and Light into thee, by living in the Croſs to the Sin, Righteouſneſs and Judgment that are of this World, and teſtifying to the ſpiritual inviſible way of Salvation, as in the Light thou haſt received, and yet mayeſt receive, Experimental Knowledge, glory, immortality, and eternal life will be thy inheritance, when time ſhall be no more: Only this I would leave in caution with thee, Think not that thou haſt attained All that in the Holy Viſion of Light may be preſented to thee, but rather in the Light wait to feel the Heavenly Power to ariſe, that is able to bring into the actual Enjoyment of thoſe States; and when thou comeſt thus experimentally to know the work of God wrought in thyſelf, thou canſt with boldneſs ſpeak, as one knowing whereof thou affirmeſt, having taſted and handled of the Word of Life, whether as an Hammer, Fire, Sword, a Waſher and Reconciler.

1672.

'So the Lord God of his remnant and children of Light, yet more and more enlighten, confirm and preſerve thee, in and by his eternal Power, to the end; for they, and they only, come to be ſaved. I am, in the fellowſhip of the Light, and Way of the Croſs of Chriſt,

'Thy endeared Friend,
'W. P.'

'My love is to thy Wife; and ſalute me kindly to thoſe that were at meeting when I was at Embden.

POSTSCRIPT.

'Such as can be baptized with that Baptiſm, and drink of that Cup which JESUS was baptized with, and drank deeply of, ſuch, and ſuch alone, ſhall ſit at his Right-hand in the high and heavenly place: Which is a hard ſaying to all the National and Carnal Profeſſors, but the Children of Light receive it with thankfulneſs, and ſanctify God in their hearts.'

At this time ſundry oppoſers, ſome of whom being Diſſenters themſelves, had enough to do in time of perſecution, by a Cautious Privacy, which they called 'Chriſtian Prudence,' to ſecure their own heads from the ſtorm the Quakers weathered, began, under the ſunſhine of the King's Indulgence, to peep out, and, by gainſaying the Truth, to make its defence neceſſary: So that our Author, who never turned his back in the day of battle, had plenty of Controverſial Exerciſe for his pen, the remainder of this year, and the two next enſuing; about which time likewiſe he wrote ſeveral remarkable letters, ſome of which are here inſerted; viz.

'To Juſtice FLEMING, a Juſtice of Quorum, and Deputy Lieutenant in Weſtmorland.'

'THE obligation thy civility laid upon the perſon that is now my wife, when in the North, anno 1664, is, with her being ſo, become mine. Not to acknowledge, though I could never retaliate it, were a rudeneſs I have not uſually been guilty of; for however differing I am from other men Circa Sacra, and that World, which, reſpecting Men, may be ſaid to begin when this ends, I know no Religion that deſtroys Courteſy, Civility, and Kindneſs; which, rightly underſtood, are great indications of True Men, if not of Good Chriſtians. Certainly there is ſuch a thing as Civil Uniformity, where a Religious one may be unobtainable; and methinks there can be nothing more irrational, than to ſacrifice the ſerenity of the one, to an adventurous (if not impoſſible) procurement of the other. Let Men be MEN before CHRISTIANS, and not repute that the beſt way of making them the laſt, which inevitably deſtroys the very conſtitution of the firſt. Natural Affection, Quiet Living, Honeſt Commerce, and an Exemplary Life, ſo ſtrongly plead for Toleration of Opinion, that where Opinion aims not at the Deſtruction of Government, it is high pity, and not a little injuſtice, to moleſt thoſe that are ſo qualified. It is not my purpoſe to diſpute for Liberty of Conſcience, but recommend it. Several diſcourſes are extant, which, with me, ſeem irrefutable. I hope the unſucceſsfulneſs of ſuch ſeverity as hath been acted, will be an unanſwerable argument with them to leave it, with whom other reaſons would not prevail; though I cannot think, but a perſon of thoſe parts ſeveral have repreſented thee to have, would have been ſatisfied with leſs Coſt of Controverſy: For, indeed, there can be nothing more irrational, than to fanſy that eternal Penalties ſhould work right Conviction, or Information upon the Conſcience in the Underſtanding of any. Sure I am, it is beneath the True Religion to do ſo, as well as unbecoming one that has been obſerved to uſe that ill argument againſt others.

1673. ‘But the ſcene is changed, and from the ſeverity of Magiſtrates, we are fallen under the implacable hate and perſecution of ſome Co-Diſſenters. It is for our credit they quarrel with us, eſpecially that they begin: Truth then beſt advocates her innocence unto mens conſciences, when it is moſt queſtioned: She loſes nothing by being tried, but the Wolfs-Skin, which the Wolf in Sheep's Cloathing is wont to caſt upon her; and I no-ways doubt of that ſucceſs in our undertakings for her defence. An Independent and an Anabaptiſt, both preachers, have lately bedirted us in Three Diſcourſes they have publiſhed againſt us, it is ſaid, with no ſmall applauſe; but then it is to be underſtood, with our Enemies, or ſuch as know us not: For them we have Charity; therefore have we writ; for truly neither is the Truth hurt in herſelf, nor are we brought into the leaſt Doubt of our Holy Faith by them. Our unhappineſs is, we are not underſtood, and Envy takes great care we ſhould not: I have ſent with this our Anſwers: Be pleaſed to accept and peruſe them; I hope I need not ſay, impartially, to a man of ſo much wiſdom and prudence. I leave the conſequence with Almighty God, to whom we muſt all render our account for the deeds done in this mortal body, whether they be good or evil. Excuſe my freedom, and accept my acknowledgment of former favour, and be aſſured it ſhall ever meet with a grateful return from ‘1673.

‘Rickmerſworth,

‘Thy ſincere Friend, however unknown,
‘W. P.’

‘To all Suffering FRIENDS in Holland, or Germany, particularly in ‘Frederickſtadt, and in or near Dantzick.

‘My dear FRIENDS, ‘Rickmerſworth 1ſt of the 7th Month, 1673.

‘IN God's everlaſting Truth, and that heavenly Power, Srength and Dominion that ſtands therein, doth my ſoul very dearly ſalute you all, who have taſted of the inviſible and heavenly Life, that is made known unto that reſidue of the Woman's Seed, who have been begotten into the living way of Light and Righteouſneſs: Oh! pleaſant are the outgoings of the Lord to and in his children, whoſe minds are truly ſtaid upon him, and are freely reſigned up into his all-wiſe diſpoſal; ſuch ſhall abound in the joy of God's ſalvation, even in ſufferings, perſecutions, tribulations, yea deaths, and every peril that may attend your moſt holy faith. Therefore, hold up your heads, and be ye comforted, O little Flock, your Shepherd will not fly, though the Wolf come: Know your Shepherd, and dwell with him; and he will bring you into ſweet and green paſtures, in the midſt of your enemies. Conſult not with fleſh and blood, to know what may be the cauſe of your trials, how you may ſhun them, or which way you may keep Mammon and a Good Conſcience too; but eye the Lord, without whoſe Providence a ſparrow falls not to the ground. No new or ſtrange thing can happen unto you: Dwell in the Faith that works by Love, and that will caſt out all Fear, that begets any ſtaggering from your holy teſtimony: Remember that many eyes are upon you, and as you acquit yourſelves in this exerciſe that may quickly be ſuffered to come upon you, ſo will God's Truth be well or ill ſpoken of; for people will meaſure your moſt holy Way by YOU. The Way they ſee not, YOU they will behold: What know ye, but the Lord is now preparing and brightening of you for farther ſervice, both where you live, and in other places? Oh! in the Light of JESUS, “the Juſt Man's Path,” live and walk, that to the end you may endure; ſo ſhall you glorify God, anſwer their labours who have travailed among you, and obtain unto yourſelves eternal ſalvation. So, dear hearts, be ſtill, quiet, and given up in life and death, God's great work is going on: He always comes upon the WORLD in a STORM, and ſometimes to his CHILDREN, that they may be the more weaned from the World, that people may be the more ſtirred up to mind them, and that Truth may be more effectually manifeſted through their ſelf-denial, patience, and reſolution. Stand then, be valiant, and keep your minds to the inviſible Life, that in the Light is felt; and then, I am perſuaded, “Neither Principalities, nor Powers, nor Life, nor Death, nor any other Thing, ſhall ever be able to ſeparate you from the Love of God,” that hath been, and daily is, revealed to you in Chriſt Jeſus, the Lamb of God, and Light of the World.

‘The God of all peace keep your minds and ſpirits in perfect peace, amidſt the greateſt troubles and diſquiets from without, that you may finiſh your teſtimonies with us, to his eternal praiſe that hath called us, who is over every name worthy, even God bleſſed for ever. Amen, Amen.

‘Your fellow-feeling Brother in the Unchangeable Truth,
‘W. P.’

POSTSCRIPT.

‘Truth greatly prevails in theſe Iſlands, and grows daily famous over the heads of its peeviſh oppoſers: And my Friends, that have heard lately of you, travail and ſympathize with you: You are not alone, and He that is in you is greater than he that is in the World. Farewell.’

‘To the LITTLE FLOCK and FAMILY of GOD, the People whom he hath called and gathered to the Knowledge and Belief of his Everlaſting Way to Life and Salvation (of GOD beloved, but of MEN traduced, and ſpoken evil of); as alſo ſuch as have of late any deſires begotten in them after his eternal Truth, now reſiding in the UNITED PROVINCES;

‘Right Underſtanding, Sound Faith, and Perfect Obedience, with all Spiritual Bleſſings, be increaſed amongſt you, according to your ſeveral Neceſſities!

‘DEAR and Well-beloved FRIENDS,

‘MY true and tender love in God, our Life, who by the Power that raiſed our Lord Jeſus Chriſt from the dead, hath quickened us unto an hope of eternal felicity, when days, and years, and times ſhall be no more, do I at this time ſalute you, and the reſt of Friends in all thoſe parts, unto whom is the iſſuing forth of the Light and Love of God in an abundant manner, that you may all receive plentiful Redemption, and be refreſhed in him, who is an Everlaſting Fountain, that can never be exhauſted; and for the Thirſty it is ſet open, that they who want inward conſolation and ſatisfaction for their immortal ſouls, might be abundantly repleniſhed with the living cryſtal ſtreams thereof: Bleſſed are they of the Father of all bleſſings and mercies, that have their eye turned unto him, that watch and wait upon him, who dare not to offend or grieve his good Spirit, that ſtands ready not only to convince the World of Sin, and turn many into the Way of Life; but ſeal all the faithful unto the inheritance of eternal life: That as you once bore the Earthly Image, and wore the Beaſt's Seal in your Foreheads, ſo now you may daily witneſs the renewing of the Heavenly Image upon you, by the power of the Lord, inwardly felt, and a wearing of the Lamb's Seal in your Foreheads, by the Spirit of our God.

‘Oh! be not ſcattered from this bleſſed hope, nor let the bawlings of ſome thick, carnal, head-wiſe oppoſers, who are more in word than in deed, and only ſkilled in Science falſely ſo called (for it is filled with endleſs jangles and debates) any whit move you, my dear Friends, from your holy ſtanding; neither the reproaches of the prophane, nor cruel ſufferings of ſome perſecuting Phariſees, nor, finally, the falling-away, and treacherous apoſtaſy, of any Judas, Demas, or Alexander the Copper-ſmith; but as pilgrims, eſtranged from the life and ſpirit of this world, who are embarked for a more durable country and building that is eternal in the Heavens, paſs away your ſojourning here below in fear and trembling, in diligence and godly converſation; that ſo the Goſpel may be adorned, the life and power of godlineſs ſhine brightly forth through thoſe black clouds, with which envious men ſeek to obſcure and eclipſe the beauty of your principles and practice, and God ſhall have the glory, and you ſhall be preſerved to his eternal kingdom: And therefore, my dear Friends, have a care of the ſnares the Evil-one lays in the ſpirit of this World, whereby to draw out your minds from the heavenly Watch, againſt that which makes not for God's honour and your own true peace: That no ſluggiſh, negligent, or earthly ſpirit overtake you, ſince the fatherly viſitation has reached unto you. Neither let vain Thoughts or unneceſſary Diſputations be cheriſhed, for none of thoſe things make for true comfort in the day of God. O that the Croſs of Chriſt may evermore be precious among you! And you whom the Lord of late hath more particularly extended his loving kindneſs unto, leave the Dead to bury the Dead; part with all, that you may have eternal life: Make no bargains of Eaſe for your Fleſh and Blood, which muſt never enter into the Kingdom of God, and whoſe Conſultings, if you yield to them, will run you into eternal perdition.

‘“Bleſſed are the Poor in Spirit, for theirs is the Kingdom of God;” and a man is then ſo, when he hath parted with all for Chriſt's name ſake. I mean not a comfortable Livelihood, as Popiſh Friars do, that they may live on the hard labours of other men; that is, at beſt, but the Outſide of the platter; but thoſe Faſhions, Cuſtoms, Pleaſures, Honours, Luſts, &c. that are from below, and formed and brought forth by the Spirit of this World, unto which the freeborn Children of God, by the eternal Spirit, have been made ſtrangers, not touching therewith. O let not the Fooliſhneſs of the Croſs be over-reaſoned, cavilled, and diſputed; a willing Offering, reſigned Spirit, and contented Bearer of the reproach of men for Con-

1673. ' ſcience-ſake, ſuch God loves, and hath in great regard: He is a ſufficient recompence; and every light affliction he repays with a far more exceeding weight of glory, even that pure ſpiritual glory, that was with the Father ere this World began.

' O prize your precious and high calling, and diligently ſeek to make your Calling and Election ſure, by working out your ſo great ſalvation by the Power and Spirit of Jeſus our Lord: And as many as are led by it, are children and heirs, yea co-heirs, of that life and kingdom with him, which abideth for evermore. So the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by his holy Arm and Power, compaſs you about, and have your ſouls and bodies in his keeping, that in his fear and love you may live towards him and one another the remainder of your days: So ſhall honour aſcend to him, and his peace like a river flow amongſt you to your unutterable rejoicing, world without end.

' I am

' Your ſenſible, tender, and ſincere Friend and Brother in the Everlaſting
' Truth, to ſerve you to the utmoſt of my ability therein,

' From my Houſe at Rickmerſworth,
' in the Nation of England, the ' 4th of the 10th Month
S. V. 1673.

' W. P.'

' TO FRIENDS IN MARYLAND.

' DEAR FRIENDS,

' THOUGH unknown to you in Body, yet well known in Spirit, by that eternal living Union and Fellowſhip that the Light of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt hath brought us into, which comprehends the world, the life, wiſdom, and works of it, and reproves them all as degenerated from the Life of God, and the commonwealth of his bleſſed ſpiritual Iſrael: And bleſſed will you be for ever, as you keep therein; for a growing-up into immortality, and the life, peace, and joy that are eternal, you will witneſs more and more, which is the heavenly durable treaſure in the earthen veſſel. In the living ſenſe of his precious Truth, and glorious day of Light, Life, and Love, that has dawned and is breaking up clearer and clearer upon us, my ſoul ſalutes you, the honeſt and faithful-hearted Friends of Maryland Plantation; wiſhing you the increaſes of God day by day, to the building you more and more up into the Image that is glorious, being the expreſs Repreſentation of Him that hath called you to the hope that gives comfort in the day of the Lord: Oh, my dear Friends, up and work for the Lord God, for the deſpiſed Light and Truth of Jeſus, in your day; and let not us be leſs vigilant, in the tender, diligent, fervent ſpirit for God, than the World is for their Mammon, that ſo we may appear Men for God, not for Ourſelves, minding the Things of Chriſt, and not our own, Phil. ii. 21. So ſhall God's Truth ſpread to the utmoſt Parts of the Earth, and the Heathen ſhall become the Inheritance of that True Light, that lighteth every Man that cometh into the World.

' Dear Friends, It fell to my lot to manage your concerns with the Attorney-General of the Colony, and the Lord Baltimore, about Oaths: I obtained to George Fox's paper the Anſwer endorſed on the back-ſide. Now my advice to you is to repreſent to them,

' Firſt, That Oaths have riſen from Corruptions; that Falſeneſs, Diſtruſt, and Jealouſies brought them into the world, as ſay Polybius, Grotius, Biſhop Gawden, and others; and God having redeemed you to Truth-Speaking, the Cauſe is taken away, viz. Falſehood; Therefore the Effect, by way of Remedy, to wit, Oaths, ſhould ceaſe.

' Secondly, Chriſt expreſly forbids Swearing; inaſmuch as he doth not only prohibit VAIN Swearing, which was already forbidden under the Law, but that Swearing which the Law ALLOWED.

' Thirdly, That it is not only OUR Senſe: Polycarpus, Ponticus, Blandina, Baſilides, Primitive Martyrs, were of this mind; and Juſtin Martyr, Cyprian, Origen, Lactantius, Clemens Alexandrinus, Baſilius Magnus, Chryſoſtom, Theophylact, Oecumenius, Chromatius, Euthymius, (Fathers) ſo read the text, not to mention any of the Proteſtant Martyrs. Therefore ſhould they be tender.

' Fourthly, There is no injury done to the Plantation to take your WORDS, if any, to you that ſuffer the ſame penalty for a LYE which is only due to PERJURY, and which the Law, without your Conſent, does not inflict; your caution and pledge for HONESTY is as large as he that ſwears; for, as Truth-Speaking fulfils the Law, ſo equal Puniſhment with perjured Perſons, ſatisfies it.

' Laſtly,

1673.

‘ Laſtly, That your coming thither as to a Sanctuary, makes it reaſonable that they ſhould not drive you thence for mere Conſcience, ſo well grounded and confirmed by Scripture, Reaſon and Authorities. Let your Yea and Nay be all.

‘ The Lord Baltimore mentioned ſomething about your allowing ſome ſmall matter for not performing Martial Matters: In that be wiſe, deliberate and paſſive; only if they preſs too hard, interpoſe. I ſuppoſe they will be moderate in that, and all other caſes relating to you, at leaſt I was told and aſſured ſo.

‘ I have no more, but that Truth proſpers, in Meetings and out of them: Our adverſaries fall before us: And the ſober People of theſe Three Nations are open to hear, and ready both to think and ſpeak well of, the Way of the Lord. I ſent you one of Edward Burrough's books, and two ſmall ones of my own, as a token of my love, which accept. So the Lord God of eternal ſtrength preſerve us all, living, freſh, zealous, and wiſe, in that which is Pure of Himſelf, which he hath ſhed abroad in our hearts, to his eternal praiſe, and our everlaſting comfort. Amen, Amen, ſaith my ſoul.

‘ Your Friend and Brother, in the Truth and Cauſe of Chriſt Jeſus, the Light of the World.’

‘ Anno 1673.’ ‘ W. PENN.’

‘ To J. H. and his Companions, JUSTICES in Middleſex.’

‘ Rickmerſworth, the 31ſt of the 1ſt month, called March, 1674.

‘ BEcauſe you are Juſtices as well as Neighbours, and reputed Gentlemen; not only Civility, but Duty, engages me to govern myſelf with all due reſpect in this epiſtle: Which, as it proceeds out of love to your perſons, and that hearty deſire I have your actions may not fall ſhort of that courteſy, neighbourhood, Conſcience, and fundamental law that becomes every man, much more a Gentleman, and he an Engliſhman, and a Juſtice too, but moſt of all a True Chriſtian, to ſquare himſelf by, rather than any ſiniſter end; ſo, I beſeech you, give it your peruſal and ſerious conſideration; and then, if you pleaſe, afford me your anſwer.

‘ I offered, as you may remember, ſeveral things, to abate your proceedings with us at Ruſlipe, which then it did not pleaſe you to hear enough to embrace. Perhaps a reiteration may conduce more to your ſatisfaction; at leaſt, it will acquit my conſcience; which, whatever you ſaid, or think, is of great value with me. And thoſe that have known me better than you do, are not ignorant how much I have been thought to ſtand in my own light, merely to preſerve that unblemiſhed.

‘ I told you then, that ſince you affirmed the report of this Meeting to have reached you a Month ſince (which, I think, was at leaſt a Week before any ſuch thing was intended) it had been handſome and neighbourly, indeed but natural and juſt, to give us notice of your intentions: For in a country ſo quiet as this (as where is there now any diſquiet?) Who could have expected ſuch a ſand or rock to ſtrike upon? Men uſe to provide land-marks and ſuch-like tokens for caution, where danger is, to prevent it. We never heard you to be ſevere; on the contrary, moderate; men of more candor than to expreſs ſeverity, or extend the letter of the law upon your neighbours.

‘ For what elſe, I beſeech you, can I call your ſending for all that ſhould meet there to appear before you, without any the leaſt preceding intimation of your diſpleaſure? Again, the Conſtable could give no Evidence of a Meeting, who left the People, ſome in the Houſe, ſome in the Yard, ſome in the Orchard, and ſeveral walking in the Highway: No more Preaching or Praying, then, where no People were. When you came, thoſe that the Conſtable ſaw, were diſperſed, and had been near an hour: Which we thought the thing you only aimed at: Finding ſome Five that remained, either at ſome Repaſt, or Diſcourſe, very remote from a CONVENTICLE, in your own ſenſe of the word, how fair an opportunity had you to clear your hands, as Juſtices and Friends, nothing offenſive to the Law in your hands being preſent to you. Perhaps we expected to hear that you were glad to find the People gone; and that the occaſion of any Rigour, to you unpleaſant, was removed; with, it may be, ſome gentle Caution for the future, that you might quit yourſelves as well like Men in Power, as kind Neighbours. But truly none of us, I dare ſay, ſo much as conceived one Thought like your Actions. Not that I think them the harſheſt that were ever ſhown; by no means; but exceeding our Expectations, the Circumſtances conſidered, and the door that was thereby opened for you to get out at: Eſpecially when you would not take our Words to be gone, but, after an untoward manner, compelled us out. I farther urged the general Quiet of the Seaſon, the Un-

1673. ‘ pleaſantneſs of theſe things to the King, his abſolute Renunciation of all ſuch Proceedings; that his DECLARATION was a great Inſtance; that though IT be cancelled, yet not the LIBERTY; for the quarrel lay not againſt the Indulgence, but the GRANT of it formaliter. It was not by an ACT of PARLIAMENT; and an ill precedent, ſaid the Parliament. I farther added, that the Parliament had voted Indulgence to the King's Diſſenting Proteſtant Subjects, and intended to ratify the former more firmly, at leaſt to all Proteſtant Diſſenters; and that ſuch WE are.

‘ I intreat you to peruſe this ſhort diſcourſe againſt the Papiſts, to ſay nothing of the vaſt Diſparity and Antipathy of OUR Principles and Worſhip. To theſe latter allegations, you ſingly and jointly anſwered, That the ACT was in Force, by the repealing or cancelling of the Declaration. True, ſtrictly taken: But do not you know, that there be many Acts never formally repealed, that obtain no force among us; but as much neglected as if they were abrogated by new Laws? I much queſtion if that very Law, by which the Proteſtants were burnt for their noble teſtimonies againſt Rome, were ever revoked. This might be ſufficient to you, that the KING diſlikes it; that the Parliament declared their Readineſs to repeal the Law that countenanceth it; that all are quiet; that the Reaſon of the Law ceaſing, the Law, as to its Execution, ſhould ceaſe alſo; that the King and Council, in the Preamble to the Declaration, have diſclaimed all pretence to better ſettlements, by ſeverity upon Diſſenters; that you have work enough to employ yourſelves about, in firſt living, and then executing all laws, that recover and preſerve morality, mercy, juſtice, ſobriety, and godly living: And laſtly, that you had nothing offenſive to the Law before your eyes, when you came among us.

‘ I farther urged, Argumentum ad hominem, The King's power in Eccleſiaſtical Matters: That if you acknowledged him Head of the Church, it ſeemed ſomewhat unnatural, that any Members ſtraggle from the judgment and direction of the Head. It was anſwered by one of you, and the beſt thing ſaid, “ That the king was head in Civils too, yet we would not forbear recovering a Debt by law, though the King ſhould interpoſe his Civil Headſhip to prevent receiving it,” or words to that purpoſe. I ſaid then, and now more fully reply; The caſe is vaſtly differing, upon your own principles. The Civil Government of England depends upon Law grounded upon Sincerity, the Eternal Law; and it is not, by the Antient and Fundamental Conſtitution, allowable, that Meum and Tuum ſhould be over-ruled by any Prince whatever. It is the glory of the King of England's Government, that he is a Prince by Right, not Might; by Law, not Power. He has Power, but from and according to Law; not that he makes his Will and Power Law. This right is agreeable to Human Nature, ſo called, and the Oeconomy which God hath imprinted upon it: But in matters Eccleſiaſtical, you ſay (if old Proteſtants) that it is inherent to, and inſeparable from, the Civil Magiſtrate, ſo ſoon as he profeſſeth Chriſt, to be the Head of the Church in his Dominions (upon the ſtrain of the Jewiſh Story, how reaſonable ſo ever it be): And upon this very foot, was, and is, the Engliſh Reformation ſet; where all Original Compact, all Coronation Oaths, all fundamental Law, and Legiſlators too, are ſet aſide; for the King is not conſtituted Head of the Church by common Conſent of Lords and Commons, though thereby declared ſo; but by being a CHRISTIAN King.

‘ Again, I diſtinguiſh between Laws: Some are fundamental, and thoſe are durable, and indiſſoluble; ſome are circumſtantial and ſuperficial, and thoſe be alterable. By the firſt, I mean all thoſe Laws, that conſtitute the Ancient Civil Government of England, and which make up theſe two words ENGLISH MEN. By the latter, I underſtand all Laws ſuited to State, or National emergencies, which are pro tempore and away. They live, as long as the Reaſon of them lives, and then die, oftentimes of themſelves. Theſe may be both Civil and Eccleſiaſtical: Civil, as the Act againſt tranſporting Iriſh Cattle: A FAMINE repeals that, by the ancient law-maxim; ceſſante ratione legis, ceſſat Lex. Eccleſiaſtical; as this in queſtion: They that made it, had UNITY, PEACE, and PLENTY in their eyes: It is found, upon trial, to increaſe Animoſities, diſturb the Peace, and lay waſte honeſt and induſtrious Families. Thus much the King, whom you confeſs to be the Head of the Church, by the advice of his Privy Council, men, doubtleſs, wiſer than any of us, has almoſt in ſo many words declared.

‘ Farther, let it be weighed, that we came not to our Liberties and Properties by the Proteſtant Religion; their date riſes higher. Why, then, ſhould a Non-conformity to it, purely conſcientious, deprive us of them? This, or that, ſort of Religion, was not ſpecified in the Ancient Civil Government; though the Clergy twiſted into the Great Charter: Yet let it be conſidered, that it was not intended to deny others Liberty of Conſcience; but to ſecure their Church, Properties, and Revenues, from the King's Seizure. The nature of Body and Soul, Earth and Heaven, this World and that to come, differs: There can be no reaſon to perſecute any man in THIS world, about any thing that belongs to the NEXT. “ Who art thou (ſaith the Holy “ Scripture, in this caſe,) that judgeſt another Man's Servant?” He muſt ſtand or fall to his Maſter, the Great God. Let Tares and Wheat grow together, till the Great Harveſt: To call for Fire from Heaven, was no part of Chriſt's Religion, though the reproved Zeal of ſome of his Diſciples. His Sword is ſpiritual, like his Kingdom. Be pleaſed to remember, that Faith is the gift of God, and what is not of Faith, is Sin. We muſt either be Hypocrites, in doing what we believe in our Conſciences we ought not to do; or forbearing what we are fully perſuaded we ought to do. Either give us better Faith, or leave us with ſuch as we have; for it ſeems unreaſonable in you, to diſturb us for this that we have, and yet be unable to give us any other. Oh! ye do not to us as you would be done by: Can it become Proteſtants to uſe that ſeverity to others, they once condemned in others? There can be no pretence of Conſcience, for limiting other Mens, that are virtuous, and who wiſh you heartily well. Were we immoral, or did our Religion and Worſhip border upon an Impiety, we ſhould bluſh to apologize as we do. But being no ways conſcious of any affinity with immoral principles or practices; on the contrary, knowing ourſelves to be better taught, by God's Grace, that leads to all moral and holy living, however different we may be in ſome particular perſuaſions; we do take confidence to remonſtrate our caſe, and to intreat your ſerious conſideration of it, that we, your countrymen and neighbours, may enjoy ourſelves, in the worſhip of Almighty God, with quietneſs and ſecurity. And I am well aſſured it ſhall leſs repent you, upon your dying bed, to have acted moderately, than ſeverely. You cannot but know how fallible Proteſtants acknowledge themſelves to be in matters of Religion, and conſequently, with what Caution they ſhould proceed againſt any about Religion. You alſo ſee how much more deſtructive Vice and Intemperance are to Body and Soul, than mere Opinion, and conſequently, how much more reaſonable it is to puniſh the One, than proſecute the other. Think not that mere Perſuaſion damns us; it is SIN whoſe Wages is Death. I love and honour all virtuous perſons, that differ from me, and hope God will have regard to every ſuch one, according to Sincerity. And however it ſhall pleaſe you to deal with us, at this or any other time, I pray God forgive you, open your eyes, tender your hearts, and make you ſenſible, how much more Moderation and Virtue are worth your ſtudy and purſuit, than the Diſturbance of Religious Diſſenting Aſſemblies, that, ſo far as I know of them, deſire to honour the King, love their Neighbours as themſelves, and to do unto all Men as they would have all Men do unto them.

1674.

‘ Be pleaſed to accept this in good part, and with the moſt favourable conſtruction; which becomes your quality, and is but to do right to his intentions, who, with good wiſhes for you, ſubſcribes himſelf,

‘ Your very true Friend,

‘ WILLIAM PENN.’

POSTSCRIPT.

‘ I have ſent you a “ Diſcourſe againſt the Papiſts,” and another of “ Liberty of Conſcience;” ſeveral hundreds of which were preſented to the Houſe that year it was printed.

‘ I could produce a dozen precedents to confirm this: And truly it looks hard upon your own principles, that you ſhould give your ſervants liberty to uſe their diſcretion in errands, or conſtables in the execution of their truſts, provided they anſwer the main end, which is, Voluntas Magiſtri, Saluſque Regis & Populi, nay that you can uſe ſometimes a prerogative yourſelves, & relaxare Legem, remembering, doubtleſs, that ſummum Jus is ſumma Injuria, as the old King ſaid; and yet that you ſhould not allow the King a power to ſuſpend the Execution of but a Temporary Law, when the Execution of it is impracticable, without deſtroying thoſe very ends for which it was firſt made. I beſeech you call to mind the ancient Veneration of Proteſtants to Princes Prerogative in Eccleſiaſticks, and their Principles about it, in the reigns of H. 8. E. 6. Q. E. K. Ja. and particularly K. C. the firſt.’

Writes to the Senate of Embden.

The ſame zeal and affection which made him a conſtant advocate for his Friends at home, led him alſo to ſollicit on their behalf with foreign powers and ſtates, under whoſe government they ſuffered Perſecution: For there was a decree made this year at Dantzick for baniſhing the Quakers; and a law of the like nature at Embden, where that People had alſo undergone other grievous ſufferings: Whereupon he wrote to the Senate of Embden an Epiſtle in Latin, which hath been ſince tranſlated into Engliſh, and is in this Collection.

Publiſhes a treatiſe of Oaths.

The perſecution at home now becoming hot again, and many Quakers being impriſoned for refuſing the Oath of Allegiance, our author publiſhes their Reaſons 1675.

againſt "Swearing at all," and confirms the ſame by numerous authorities, in a book intituled "A Treatiſe of Oaths."

England's preſent Intereſt.

This year alſo he publiſhed a choice piece, intituled, "England's preſent Intereſt diſcovered;" wherein, to allay the heats of contending parties, he ſhews the conſiſtency of a General Liberty of Conſcience with the Peace of the Kingdom; diſcovering at once the generous Charity of a real Chriſtian, and the noble Spirit of a True Patriot.

In the eighth month this year, being at London, he wrote the following remarkable Letter to a Roman Catholick.

‘MY FRIEND,

‘CHRIST JESUS did redeem a people with his moſt precious blood; and the ancient Church of Rome, among other churches, was one: But as the ſea loſes and gets, and as proſperity changes its ſtation, ſo the CHASTITY of the Church of Rome is loſt; ſhe having taken in principles and diſcipline that are not of Chriſt, neither can be found in Holy Scripture.

‘If thou waſt to die, wouldſt thou not leave a PLAIN Will to thy children? So have Chriſt and his Apoſtles in the Scripture. Read, and thou mayeſt behold the Simplicity, Purity, Meekneſs, Patience, and Self-denial, of thoſe Chriſtians and Churches. They are Chriſt's, that take up his Croſs to the glory and ſpirit of this world, which the Church of Rome lives in. Behold the Pride, Luxury, Cruelty, that hath for ages been in that church, even the heads and chieftains thereof! It is a miſtake to think THAT Chriſt's Church that has loſt its heavenly qualifications, becauſe it once WAS. What is become of Antioch, Jeruſalem, &c. both churches of Chriſt, and before ROME? Nor is it Number; (the Devil has that) nor Antiquity; (for he has that) but CHRIST-LIKENESS and Conformity to Jeſus; who hath divorced thoſe that have adulterated: And tho' he had left but Two or Three (tho' there were Thouſands) yet he would be in the midſt of them: And they have been in the Wilderneſs, people crying in ſackcloth. The generality declined from CHRIST'S SPIRIT, and it was loſt, and the teachings of it: And then came up FORM without POWER, and a Wrathful Spirit to propagate it; and this made up the Great Whore, that looked like the Lamb's Bride, Chriſt's Church, but was not, which God will judge. Remember, that God was not without a Church, tho' the Natural Church and Prieſthood of the Jews apoſtatized: So in the caſe of the Church of Rome.

‘Now is the Lord raiſing up his old Power, and giving his Spirit, and moving upon the Waters (the People) that out of that ſtate all may come, and know God in Spirit, and Chriſt his Son, whom he has ſent into people's hearts, a True LIGHT. And, my friend, build not upon Fancies, nor the Traditions of Men, but CHRIST, the ſure foundation, as he appears to thee in thy Conſcience; that thou mayeſt feel his Power to redeem thee up to himſelf, out of the earthly ſenſual ſpirit, to know thy right eye plucked out, the true mortification; and this brings thee to the Church of the FIRST-BORN, that is more divine and noble than an Outward Glittering Church, that is inwardly polluted: For know, as thou ſoweſt, thou reapeſt, in the great day of account. So to God's Spirit, in thy own Conſcience, do I recommend thee, that leads out of all Evil, and quickens thee to God, as thou obeyeſt it, and makes thee a Child of God, and an Heir of Glory. I am, in much haſte, and as much love,

‘Thy True Friend,

‘London, 9th October,
‘1675.

‘W. PENN.’

In the 12th month of this year, one Matthew Hide, a perſon that had been very troubleſome in the Quakers meetings, by oppoſing their miniſters in their publick teſtimony and prayers, was taken ſick; and on his death-bed, being under great remorſe of conſcience for what he had done, he could not be eaſy till he had ſent for ſome of that People, and particularly George Whitehead, to whom he expreſſed great ſorrow for the abuſes done them, declaring them to be the children of God, and begging mercy of the Lord for his wilful oppoſition to known truth in gainſaying them; and ſo died penitent. This gave occaſion to our author to publiſh, as a warning to others, a narrative, intituled, "Saul ſmitten to the Ground."

1676.

Is made Proprietor of Weſt Jerſey.

In the year 1676, he became one of the proprietors of Weſt Jerſey in America, and was inſtrumental in the firſt colonizing of that province by the Engliſh: For King Charles II. having given the propriety of that country to the Duke of York, he granted the ſame to Sir George Berkley and the Lord Carteret, the former of whom ſold his part to one Edward Billing, a Quaker; whoſe circumſtances in the world afterward declining, he transferred his right to William Penn, Gawen Lawrey, and Nicholas Lucas, in truſt for the payment of his debts: They accordingly allotted out and ſold the lands; and many people from England tranſported themſelves, and ſettling there, in a few years it became a flouriſhing plantation, and ſo continues. The chief town of it is Burlington, ſituate on the great river Delaware. But we return to religious matters. 1676.

About this time it pleaſed God to inſpire the hearts of two proteſtant ladies of great quality in Germany, with a ſenſe of the follies and vanities of the world, and to excite them to an earneſt inquiry after the knowledge of Himſelf. The one was the Princeſs Elizabeth, daughter of Frederick V. Prince Palatine of the Rhine and King of Bohemia, grand-daughter to king James I. and ſiſter to Prince Rupert and the late Princeſs Sophia, King George the Firſt's mother: The other, Anna Maria de Hornes, Counteſs of Hornes, a familiar acquaintance of the ſaid Princeſs. The report of their religious inclination coming to our author's intelligence, who embraced every opportunity of watering the growing ſeeds of virtue, he ſent them a letter of encouragement and conſolation, exhorting thoſe noble women to a conſtancy and perſeverance in that holy way which the Lord had directed their feet into. The letter itſelf, though large, being worthy of the reader's peruſal, he will find at p. 445 of this Collection.

Writes to the Princeſs Palatine, and Counteſs of Hornes.

In the year 1677. he travelled into Holland and Germany; an account of which, written and publiſhed by himſelf, is likewiſe hereafter inſerted. 1677.

Soon after his return from Holland, he wrote a letter in anſwer to one he had received from John Pennyman, a perſon who had once profeſſed himſelf a Quaker, but was now become an oppoſer of them; part of which letter containing advice well adapted to the caſe of ſuch a backſlider, we here ſubjoin.

'TO JOHN PENNYMAN.'

'JOHN PENNYMAN,

'I Received a letter from thee ſince my arrival in this land.------Let me tell thee, 'in the ſpirit of truth and meekneſs, my ſoul has been frequently ſad and heavy 'for thy ſake, becauſe of thoſe degenerate and ſour grapes which thou haſt brought 'forth, the unnatural and unkindly fruits that of late years have proceeded from thee. 'Ah! Whence art thou fallen, and what art thou turned to? What is become of 'thy Tenderneſs, and thy Zeal for the Way of Truth, as profeſſed amongſt us? Verily thou art increaſing thy burthen, and ſtrengthening the Lord's Judgment againſt 'thee, and treaſuring up wrath againſt the day of wrath.

'Hadſt thou been told of the things thou haſt done, ten years ſince, thou wouldſt 'never have believed it; thou wouldſt have cried out, "God forbid! far be it from "me!" But one weakneſs brings on another, and one unfaithfulneſs increaſeth another. O that thou wouldſt be adviſed! That thou wouldſt ſee from whence thou 'art fallen, and repent, and turn to thy firſt Love, and do thy firſt Works; for I 'have nothing but love and good-will in my heart, both to thee and thy wife; and 'it is with the grief of a friend of God, and of you both, that I behold the evil and 'pernicious uſe that ſome envious, prejudiced, and unreaſonable people make of you, 'and your carriage to us; yet ſcorn and deride you in their hearts, after they have 'ſerved their turns of you. O return, if yet mercy may be found with the Lord, 'and be not found fighting againſt him. O that my love could take hold of you, 'and that my life could raiſe any tenderneſs in you, that yet you might be gathered, 'and not utterly periſh.

'This I tell you, in the name and fear of the Lord, the weighty power and life 'and glory of God is amongſt us as a people: And tho' there may be ſome perſonal 'weakneſſes, or miſcarriages, through the unfaithfulneſs of ſome particulars, that 'ſerve as food for prejudiced ſpirits to feed upon, and though ſome go out from us, 'and turn againſt us, ſpeaking lies in Hypocriſy, that is, under the pretence of Truth, 'which may cauſe ſome to ſtumble, and ſeveral to be aſtoniſhed, yet all this ſhall 'work together for good to them that fear the Lord. It ſhall tend to greater watchfulneſs, diligence, and faithfulneſs to the Lord; and the juſt ſhall live more and 'more by Faith, through which they ſhall overcome all their enemies, and ſtand in 'their lot at the end of all days, and live and reign with the Lord for ever. I ſhould 'willingly ſpend an hour with thee upon this ſubject, if I knew when and where 'without inconvenience to either of us. In the mean while I wiſh thee well, and 'for ever,

'Thy True Friend,

'London, 18th of the 9th
'Month, 1677.

'WILLIAM PENN.'

The people called Quakers being now harraſſed with ſevere proſecutions in the Exchequer, on penalties of twenty pounds per month, or two thirds of their eſtates, by laws made againſt Papiſts, but unjuſtly turned upon them; William Penn, ſoliciting the parliament for redreſs of thoſe grievances, preſented the following Petitions, viz.

'To

1677.

‘ To the COMMONS of ENGLAND aſſembled in Parliament.’

‘ The Requeſt of the People called Quakers.’

‘ BEſides thoſe many and great ſufferings we have ſuſtained by the execution of laws made againſt us, to the ruin of many induſtrious families, we have been many of us much damnified both in our eſtates and perſons, ſometimes even to death itſelf, by laws neither made againſt us, nor ſo much as deſigned againſt ſuch a People as we are, and ſuch Principles as we hold.

‘ And underſtanding that you are pleaſed to inſert and enact ſuch a diſtinguiſhing clauſe in the Bill againſt Popery, as that they who will take the Oath and ſubſcribe a Declaration therein expreſſed, ſhall not ſuffer by ſuch laws; and becauſe, for pure conſcience, we cannot ſwear at all (in which we are not alone, for that many of the Philoſophers, Jews, and many of the beſt of Chriſtians have had the ſame tenderneſs) we intreat you to take our particular caſe into your ſerious conſideration, and give us ſome relief, otherwiſe we are like to come under penalties that belong not to us, becauſe we cannot take this Oath; though the ground of our Refuſal be not the Matter to which the penalty is affixed, but the Form of it; and that, which with due reſpect and integrity we offer, is, That our WORD may be taken inſtead of an OATH, and if we are found faulty, that we may undergo that penalty which ſhall be inflicted in the other Caſe: That we and our families may not be expoſed to the malice, ſelf-ends, or revenge of any, which we ſhall certainly be, if you relieve us not; many of us having already ſuffered upon this ſingle account: And it is not to be thought, by wiſe and charitable men, that we have any ill deſign in refuſing to ſwear, ſince we always refuſed it in our OWN caſe, though to our great DETRIMENT.’

‘ The Requeſt of ſome called Quakers, preſented to the HOUSE of LORDS, on the behalf of their ſuffering Friends.

‘ BEcauſe we are informed that this day you are pleaſed to conſider of Religion, particularly the Romiſh, we think it not improper to let you know, that there are many hundreds of us, that are ſeverely proſecuted, not only upon thoſe Laws that look upon us as Diſſenters in general from the Church of England, but by ſeveral Statutes particularly deſigned againſt Popery, and perſons profeſſing the Romiſh Religion; inſomuch that our perſecutors are proceeding to a ſeizure of Two Thirds of our Eſtates, and give us that trouble, as well as ſubjecting us to the loſs, which will not only render Tenants unable to pay their Rents, and others to live upon their own, but make both a Charge to the Country, who have hitherto by their Callings and Eſtates contributed to others.

‘ The injuſtice of ſuch ſtrained executions, and cruel miſapplications of Law conſidered, we intreat you that you would be pleaſed to compaſſionate our Caſe, and out of your mercy and juſtice relieve and right us: The Way of doing it is left to your Wiſdom.’

Being thereupon admitted to an hearing before a committee, on the 22d of the month called March, 1678, he made the following ſpeeches.

His firſt Speech to the COMMITTEE.

‘ IF we ought to believe that it is our duty, according to the doctrine of the Apoſtle, to be always ready to give an account of the Hope that is in us, and that to every ſober and private enquirer; certainly much more ought we to hold ourſelves obliged to declare with all readineſs, when called to it by ſo Great an Authority, what is NOT our hope, eſpecially when our very ſafety is eminently concerned in ſo doing, and that we cannot decline this Diſcrimination of ourſelves from Papiſts, without being conſcious to ourſelves of the guilt of our own ſufferings; for that muſt every man needs be that ſuffers mutely, under another character than that which truly and properly belongeth to him and his belief. That which giveth me a more than ordinary Right to ſpeak at this Time, and in this Place, is the great abuſe that I have received above any other of my Profeſſion; for of a long time I have not only been ſuppoſed a Papiſt, but a Seminary, a Jeſuit, an Emiſſary of Rome, and in pay from the POPE, a man dedicating my endeavours to the intereſt and advancement of that party. Nor hath this been the report of the Rabble, but the jealouſy and inſinuation of perſons otherwiſe ſober and diſcreet: Nay, ſome zealous for the Proteſtant Religion, have been ſo far gone in this miſtake, as not

1678.

'only to think ill of us, and to decline our converſation, but to take courage to themſelves to proſecute us for a ſort of concealed Papiſts; and the truth is, what with one thing, and what with another, we have been as the Wool-ſacks, and common Whipping-Stock of the kingdom: All laws have been let looſe upon us, as if the deſign were not to reform, but to deſtroy us, and that not for what we ARE, but for what we are NOT: It is hard that we muſt thus bear the ſtripes of another intereſt, and be their proxy in puniſhment; but it is worſe that ſome men can pleaſe themſeves in ſuch a ſort of Adminiſtration.

'I would not be miſtaken: I am far from thinking it fit that Papiſts ſhould be whipt for their Conſciences, becauſe I exclaim againſt the injuſtice of whipping Quakers for Papiſts: No; for though the hand pretended to be lifted up againſt them, hath (I know not by what diſcretion) lit heavy upon us, and we complain, yet we do not mean that any ſhould take a freſh aim at Them, or that they muſt come in our Room; for we muſt give the Liberty we aſk, and cannot be falſe to our Principles, though it were to relieve ourſelves; for we have good-will to all men, and would have none ſuffer for a truly Sober and Conſcientious Diſſent on any hand: And I humbly take leave to add, that thoſe methods againſt perſons ſo qualified, do not ſeem to me to be convincing, or indeed adequate to the REASON of Mankind; but this I ſubmit to your Conſideration.

'To conclude, I hope we ſhall be held excuſed of the men of that Profeſſion in giving this Diſtinguiſhing Declaration, ſince it is not with deſign to expoſe them, but firſt to pay that regard we owe to the Enquiry of this Committee, and in the next place, to relieve ourſelves from the daily ſpoil and ruin which now attendeth and threatneth many hundreds of families, by the Execution of LAWS, that (we humbly conceive) were never made AGAINST us.'

His Second Speech to the COMMITTEE.

'THE candid hearing our ſufferings have received from this Committee, and the fair and eaſy entertainment that you have given us, obligeth me to add whatever can increaſe your ſatisfaction about us. I hope you do not believe I would tell you a LIE; I am ſure I ſhould chuſe an ill Time and Place to tell it in; but I thank God it is too late in the day for that. There are ſome here that have known me formerly; I believe they will ſay, I never was THAT MAN; and it would be hard, if after a voluntary neglect of the advantages of this world, I ſhould ſit down in my Retirement ſhort of Common Truth.

'Excuſe the length of my introduction; it is for this I make it. I was bred a PROTESTANT, and that ſtrictly too: I loſt nothing by Time or Study; for years, reading, travel and obſervations, made the Religion of my Education the Religion of my JUDGMENT: My Alteration hath brought none to that Belief; and though the Poſture I am in may ſeem odd, or ſtrange to you, yet I am Conſcientious; and (till you know me better) I hope your charity will rather call it my Unhappineſs than my Crime. I do tell you again, and here ſolemnly declare in the Preſence of Almighty God, and before you all, that the Profeſſion I now make, and the Society I now adhere to, have been ſo far from altering that Proteſtant Judgment I had, that I am not conſcious to myſelf of having receded from an IOTA of any one Principle maintained by thoſe firſt Proteſtants and Reformers of Germany, and our own Martyrs at Home, againſt the POPE and SEE of ROME.

'On the contrary, I do with great truth aſſure you, that we are of the ſame NEGATIVE Faith with the Ancient Proteſtant Church, and upon occaſion ſhall be ready (by God's aſſiſtance) to make it appear, that we are of the ſame Belief as to the Moſt Fundamental POSITIVE Articles of her CREED too. And therefore it is we think it hard, that though we deny, in common with her, thoſe doctrines of Rome ſo zealouſly proteſted againſt (from whence the name Proteſtants) yet that we ſhould be ſo unhappy as to ſuffer, and that with extreme Severity, by thoſe very Laws on purpoſe made againſt the Maintainers of thoſe Doctrines we do ſo deny. We CHUSE no ſuffering, for God knows what we have already ſuffered, and how many ſufficient and trading families are reduced to great poverty by it. We think ourſelves an uſeful People: We are ſure, we are a Peaceable People; yet, if we muſt ſtill ſuffer, let us not ſuffer as POPISH RECUSANTS, but as PROTESTANT DISSENTERS.

'But I would obviate another objection, and that none of the leaſt that hath been made againſt us, viz. That we are Enemies to Government in general, and particularly diſaffected to this we live under: I think it not amiſs, but very ſeaſonable, yea, my duty, now to declare to you (and that I do with Good Conſcience in the ſight of the Almighty God) firſt, that we believe GOVERNMENT to be God's Ordinance; and next, that this PRESENT Government is eſtabliſhed by the Providence of God and Law of the Land, and that it is our Chriſtian Duty readily to obey it in all its Juſt 1678.

'Laws; and wherein we cannot comply, through Tenderneſs of Conſcience, in all ſuch caſes, not to revile or conſpire againſt the Government, but with Chriſtian Humility and Patience tire out all miſtakes about us, and wait their better information, who, we believe, do as undeſervedly as ſeverely treat us; and I know not what greater ſecurity can be given by any people, or how any Government can be eaſier from the ſubjects of it.

'I ſhall conclude with this; That we are ſo far from eſteeming it hard or ill, that the Houſe hath put us upon this Diſcrimination, that on the contrary we value it, as we ought to do, for an high Favour (and cannot chuſe but ſee and humbly acknowledge God's Providence therein) that you ſhould give us this fair Occaſion to diſcharge ourſelves of a Burden we have, not with more Patience than Injuſtice, ſuffered but too many years under: And I hope our Converſation ſhall always manifeſt the Grateful Reſentment of our Minds for the Juſtice and Civility of this Opportunity; and ſo I pray God direct you.'

The Committee agreed to inſert, in a Bill then depending, a Proviſo or Clauſe for Relief in the Caſe complained of; and the ſame did paſs the Houſe of Commons: But before it had gone through the Houſe of Lords, it was quaſhed by a ſudden Prorogation of the Parliament.

The generality of people being now in a hurry and conſternation of mind upon the Diſcovery of the Popiſh Plot, and apprehenſions of a French Invaſion; he, leſt the minds of any of his Friends the Quakers ſhould be drawn from their wonted Dependence upon God, to partake of the popular Uneaſineſs, writ an Epiſtle to them, directed, "To the Children of Light in this Generation," which is inſerted in this Collection.

1679.

Publiſhes his Addreſs to Proteſtants.

And in the next year, the nation ſtill continuing under fears of wicked deſigns on foot for ſubverting the Proteſtant Religion, and introducing Popery, he publiſhed a book intituled, "An Addreſs to Proteſtants," wherein he ſets forth the reigning evils of the times, and endeavours to excite men to repentance and amendment of life, as the beſt means to cure their fears, and prevent the impending dangers.

Writes a Preface to Samuel Fiſher's works.

The ſame year alſo he prefixed to the Works of Samuel Fiſher, then printing in folio, a Teſtimony concerning that Author, who having been a Miniſter of the Church of England, and afterwards a Preacher among the Baptiſts, at length joined in profeſſion with the Quakers, and died a priſoner for his teſtimony in the year 1665.

Publiſhes a ſheet called "England's "great Intereſt, &c.

The riſing hopes of Papiſts, and the juſt fears of Proteſtants, kept the nation ſtill in a ferment; and writs being iſſued for ſummoning a New Parliament, party-ſtruggles for power ran high, on which occaſion our Author dedicated to the Freeholders and Electors, a ſheet called "England's great Intereſt in the Choice of this New Parliament;" and ſoon after the Parliament ſitting, he preſented to them a book intituled, "One Project for the Good of England."

1680.

Death of Princeſs Elizabeth. And of I. Pennington.

In this year 1680, died that excellent Princeſs Elizabeth of the Rhine, before mentioned, to whoſe real worth our author's religious gratitude dedicated a memorial, by tranſmitting to poſterity her exemplary character, in the ſecond edition of his "No Croſs, No crown," printed anno 1682.

On the eighth of the eighth month this year alſo, departed this life his dear friend and father-in-law Iſaac Pennington; to whoſe virtues he publiſhed a teſtimony, and prefixed it to his Works, that year printed in folio.

1681.

Publiſhes a "Brief Examination, "&c."

There being about this time ſome difference in judgment among his Friends the Quakers about eſtabliſhing Church Diſcipline, (a point not eaſily fixed, ſo as neither to ſubject the Conſcience to an Eccleſiaſtical Authority, nor yet to give an Unlimited Liberty of running into Anarchy and Confuſion) he publiſhed a little book, called, "A Brief Examination of Liberty Spiritual."

Perſecution in Briſtol.

A freſh perſecution being now raiſed in the city of Briſtol, where Sir John Knight, Sheriff, John Hellier, Attorney at Law, and other their accomplices, put the penal laws in a rigorous execution, many of the people called Quakers there were fined and impriſoned. To whom W. P. wrote the following Epiſtle for their Chriſtian Conſolation and Encouragement, directed,

'To the Friends of GOD in the City of Briſtol.'

'This ſent to be read among them, when aſſembled to wait upon the Lord.'

'My Beloved in the Lord!

'I Do herewith ſend amongſt you the dear and tender ſalutation of my unfeigned love, that is held in the fellowſhip of the laſting Goſpel of Peace, that has many years been preached and believed amongſt you, beſeeching the God and Father of this glorious Day of the Son of Man, to increaſe and multiply his grace, mercy and 1681.

‘ peace among you, that you may be faithful, and abound in every good word and work, ‘ doing and ſuffering what is pleaſing unto God, that you may prove what is that good
‘ and acceptable and perfect will of God, which becomes you to be found daily doing,
‘ that ſo an entrance may be adminiſtered unto you abundantly into the kingdom of ‘ our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, that is an everlaſting kingdom. My beloved ‘ brethren and ſiſters! Be not caſt down at the rage of evil men, whoſe anger works
‘ not the righteouſneſs of God, and whoſe cruelty the Lord will limit. Nothing ‘ ſtrange or unuſual is come to paſs; it makes well for them that eye the Lord in
‘ and through theſe ſufferings: There is food in affliction, and though the inſtruments
‘ of it cannot ſee it, all ſhall work together for good to them that fear the Lord: Keep ‘ your ground in the TRUTH, that was, and is, the Saints Victory: They that ſhrink, ‘ go out of it; it is a ſhield to the righteous: Feel it; and ſee, I charge you by the ‘ preſence of the Lord, that you turn not aſide the Lord's end towards you in this ‘ ſuffering, by conſulting with fleſh and blood in eaſing your Adverſaries, for that will ‘ load you. Keep out of baſe bargainings, or conniving at fleſhly evaſions of the ‘ Croſs. Our Captain would not leave us ſuch an Example: Let them ſhrink, that ‘ know not why they ſhould ſtand; we know in whom we have believed: He is ‘ mightier in the faithful to ſuffer and endure to the end, than the world to perſecute:
‘ Call to mind thoſe bleſſed Ancients, “ that by Faith overcame of old, that endured “ cruel Mockings and Scourgings, yea, moreover, Bonds and Impriſonments, that accepted
“ not Deliverance (to deny their Teſtimony) that they might obtain a better “ Reſurrection: They were ſtoned, they were tempted, they were ſawn aſunder, they “ were ſlain with the Sword;” but YE have not ſo reſiſted unto BLOOD; and it ſufficeth,
‘ I hope to you, “ That the Lord knoweth how to deliver the Godly out of Temptation,
“ and to reſerve the Unjuſt unto the day of judgment to be puniſhed,” when,
“ it may be truly ſaid, “ It ſhall go well with the Righteous, but very ill with the “ Wicked.” The Lord God by his Power keep your hearts living to him, that it may ‘ be your Delight to WAIT upon him, and receive the bounty of his Love; that being ‘ fed with his Daily Bread, and drinking of his Cup of Bleſſing, you may be raiſed ‘ above the fear or trouble of earthly things, and grow ſtrong in him who is your ‘ Crown of Rejoicing; that having anſwered his requirings, and walked faithfully before ‘ him, you may receive, in the END of your Days the welcome ſentence of gladneſs.
‘ ETERNAL RICHES are before you, an Inheritance incorruptible: Preſs after ‘ that glorious mark: Let your minds be ſet on things that are ABOVE; and when ‘ Chriſt, that is the Glory of his poor People, ſhall appear, THEY ſhall appear with ‘ him in Glory; when all tears ſhall be wiped away, and there ſhall be no more ſorrow
‘ or ſighing, but they that overcome ſhall ſtand as Mount Sion, that cannot ‘ be moved.

‘ So my dear Friends and Brethren, endure, that you may be ſaved, and you ſhall ‘ reap, if you faint not. What ſhould we be troubled for? Our kingdom is not of ‘ THIS World, nor can be ſhaken by the Overturning here below. Let all give Glory
‘ to God on high, live peaceably on Earth, and ſhew Good-will to all Men, and our ‘ Enemies will at laſt ſee, they do they know not what, and repent, and glorify God
‘ our heavenly Father. O! Great is God's work on earth. Be UNIVERSAL in your ‘ ſpirits, and keep out of all Straitneſs and Narrowneſs: Look to God's great and glorious ‘ Kingdom and its Proſperity: Our Time is not our own, nor are WE our own:
‘ God hath bought us with a PRICE, not to ſerve ourſelves, but to glorify him, both in ‘ Body, Soul, and Spirit; and by bodily ſufferings for the Truth, he is glorified. Look
‘ to the accompliſhing of the will of God in theſe things, that the meaſure of Chriſt's
‘ ſufferings may be filled up in us, who bear about the “ Dying of the Lord Jeſus;”
‘ elſe our ſuffering is in vain. Wherefore, as the Flock of God, and Family and ‘ Houſhold of Faith, walk with your Loins girded, being ſober, hoping to the End
‘ for the Grace and Kindneſs which ſhall be brought unto you at the Revelation of ‘ Jeſus Chriſt, to whom you and yours are committed: His precious Spirit miniſter ‘ unto you, and his own Life be ſhed abroad plenteouſly among you, that you may ‘ be kept blameleſs to the end.

‘ I am

‘ Your Friend and Brother, in the Fellowſhip of the Suffering for the ‘ TRUTH, as it is in JESUS.

‘ Worminghurſt the 24th of the 12th month, 1681.

‘ WILLIAM PENN.

Having hitherto attended our author through a continued ſeries of his labours and travels in the ſervice of the Goſpel, and work of the miniſtry in theſe parts of the world; we ſhall now accompany him to his province of Pennſylvania.

1681.

The Province of Pennſylvania granted to him and his heirs.

King Charles the ſecond, in conſideration of the ſervices of Sir W. Penn, and ſundry debts due to him from the crown at the time of his deceaſe, by letters-patent bearing date the 4th of March 1680-1, granted to W. P. and his heirs that Province lying on the Weſt Side of the river Delaware in North America, formerly belonging to the Dutch, and then called the New Netherlands: The name was now changed by the King, in honour of W. P. whom and his heirs he made abſolute Proprietors and Governors of it. Upon this, he preſently publiſhes an "Account of the Province of "Pennſylvania," with the king's patent, and other papers relating thereto, deſcribing the country and its produce, and propoſing an eaſy purchaſe of lands, and good terms of ſettlement, for ſuch as might incline to tranſport themſelves. Many ſingle perſons, and ſome families, out of England and Wales, went over; and with ſingular induſtry and application having cleared their purchaſed lands, ſettled and ſoon improved plantations to good advantage, and began to build the City of Philadelphia, in a commodious ſituation on the aforeſaid navigable river Delaware. And to ſecure the new planters from the native Indians, (who, in ſome other provinces, being injuriouſly dealt with, had made repriſals, to the loſs of many lives) the governor gave orders to treat them with all candour and humanity; and appointed commiſſioners to confer with them about land, and to confirm a league of peace; by whom he alſo ſent them the following letter.

The firſt Planting of Pennſylvania by the Engliſh.

'My Friends, London, the 18th of the 8th month, 1681.

'THERE is a GREAT GOD and Power, that hath made the world and all things therein, to whom you and I and all people owe their being and well-being; and to whom you and I muſt one day give an account for all that we do in the world: This Great God hath written his LAW in our Hearts, by which we are taught and commanded to love and help, and do good to one another, and not to do harm and miſchief one unto another: Now this Great God hath been pleaſed to make me concerned in your part of the world, and the King of the Country where I live hath given me a great Province therein; but I deſire to enjoy it with your Love and Conſent, that we may always live together as Neighbours and Friends; elſe what would the Great God do to us? who hath made us not to devour and deſtroy one another, but to live ſoberly and kindly together in the world. Now I would have you well obſerve, that I am very ſenſible of the unkindneſs and injuſtice that hath been too much exerciſed towards you by the people of theſe parts of the world, who have ſought themſelves, and to make great advantages by you, rather than to be examples of juſtice and goodneſs unto you, which I hear hath been matter of trouble to you, and cauſed great grudgings and animoſities, ſometimes to the ſhedding of blood, which hath made the Great God angry. But I am not ſuch a man, as is well known in my own country: I have great love and regard towards you, and I deſire to win and gain your love and friendſhip by a kind, juſt, and peaceable life, and the people I ſend are of the ſame mind, and ſhall in all things behave themſelves accordingly; and if in any thing any ſhall offend you, or your people, you ſhall have a full and ſpeedy ſafaction for the ſame, by an equal number of juſt men on both ſides, that by no means you may have juſt occaſion of being offended againſt them. I ſhall ſhortly come to you myſelf, at what time we may more largely and freely confer and diſcourſe of theſe matters; in the mean time I have ſent my Commiſſioners to treat with you about land, and a firm league of peace: Let me deſire you to be kind to them and the people, and receive theſe preſents and tokens which I have ſent you, as a teſtimony of my good-will to you, and my reſolution to live juſtly, peaceably, and friendly with you.

'I am your Loving Friend,

W. PENN.

His friendly and pacifick manner of treating the Indians begat in them an extraordinary love and regard to him and his people, ſo that they have maintained a perfect amity with the Engliſh of Pennſylvania ever ſince. And it is obſervable, that upon renewing the treaty with Sir William Keith, bart. their Governor in 1722, they mention the name of William Penn with much gratitude and affection, calling him, * "A GOOD MAN," and, as their higheſt compliment to Sir William, uſe this expreſſion, † "We eſteem and love you as if you were WILLIAM PENN himſelf." So univerſally doth a Principle of Peace, Juſtice and Morality, operate on the hearts even of thoſe we call Heathens.

---

* See the hiſtorical regiſter for the year 1723, numb. XXX. pag. 107. † Ib. pag. 108.

1681. The Fundamental Conſtitutions of Pennſylvania drawn up.

He alſo drew up the Fundamental Conſtitutions of Pennſylvania, in twenty-four articles, conſented to and ſubſcribed by the firſt adventurers and freeholders of that province, as the ground and rule of all future government: The firſt of which articles, ſhewing that his principle was to give, as well as take, Liberty of Conſcience in matters of religion, we ſhall tranſcribe:

The First Constitution.

‘IN Reverence to God, the Father of Light and Spirits, the Author, as well as Object, of all divine knowledge, faith and worſhip, I do, for me and mine, declare and eſtabliſh, for the Firſt Fundamental of the Government of this country, that every perſon that doth or ſhall reſide therein, ſhall have and enjoy the free Profeſſion of his or her Faith, and Exerciſe of Worſhip toward God, in ſuch way and manner as every ſuch perſon ſhall in Conſcience believe is moſt acceptable to God: And ſo long as every ſuch perſon uſeth not this Chriſtian Liberty to Licentiouſneſs, or the Deſtruction of others; that is to ſay, to ſpeak looſely and prophanely or contemptuouſly of God, Chriſt, the Holy Scriptures, or Religion, or commit any moral evil or injury againſt others in their converſation, he or ſhe ſhall be protected in the enjoyment of the aforeſaid Chriſtian Liberty by the Civil Magiſtrate.’

1682. The Frame of Government of Pennſylvania.

In the next year, 1682, he publiſhed “The Frame of Government of Pennſylvania,” containing twenty-four articles, ſomewhat varying from the aforeſaid Conſtitutions, together with certain other laws to the number of forty, agreed on in England, by the governor and divers freemen of the ſaid Province: Of which laws one was,

> ‘That all perſons living in this province, who confeſs and acknowledge the One Almighty and Eternal God, to be the Creator, Upholder and Ruler of the World, and that hold themſelves obliged in conſcience to live peaceably and juſtly in civil ſociety, ſhall in no-wiſe be moleſted or prejudiced for their Religious perſuaſion or practice in matters of faith and worſhip; nor ſhall they be compelled at any time to frequent or maintain any religious worſhip, place, or miniſtry whatſoever.’

The reſt of thoſe laws relating to the encouragement of the planters, ſuppreſſing of vice and immorality, and the good government and regulation of the province, our reader may peruſe at his pleaſure.

The time of his departure for America being now at hand, he wrote the following letter to his wife and children a little before he embarked.

‘My dear Wife and Children:

‘MY love, that ſea nor land, nor death itſelf can extinguiſh or leſſen toward you, moſt endearedly viſits you with eternal embraces, and will abide with you for ever: And may the God of my life watch over you, and bleſs you, and do you good in this world, and for ever.---Some things are upon my ſpirit to leave with you in your reſpective capacities; as I am to one a huſband, and to the reſt a father; if I ſhould never ſee you more in this world.

‘My dear wife; Remember thou waſt the love of my youth, and much the joy of my life; the moſt beloved, as well as moſt worthy, of all my earthly comforts: and the reaſon of that love was more thy inward, than thy outward excellencies (which yet were many). God knows, and thou knoweſt it, I can ſay it was a match of Providence's making; and God's image in us both was the firſt thing, and the moſt amiable and engaging ornament in our eyes. Now I am to leave thee, and that without knowing whether I ſhall ever ſee thee more in this world, take my counſel into thy boſom, and let it dwell with thee in my ſtead while thou liveſt.

1ſt, ‘Let the fear of the Lord, and a zeal and love to his glory, dwell richly in thy heart; and thou wilt watch for good over thyſelf and thy dear children and family, that no rude, light, or bad thing be committed: elſe God will be offended, and he will repent himſelf of the good he intends thee and thine.

2dly, ‘Be diligent in meetings for worſhip and buſineſs; ſtir up thyſelf and others herein; it is thy day and place: and let meetings be kept once a day in the family, to wait upon the Lord, who has given us much time for ourſelves: and my deareſt, to make thy family-matters eaſy to thee, divide thy time, and be regular; it is eaſy and ſweet; thy retirement will afford thee to do it: as in the morning to view the buſineſs of the houſe, and fix it as thou deſireſt, ſeeing all be in order; that by thy counſel all may move, and to thee render an account every evening. The time for work, for walking, for meals, may be certain, at leaſt as near as may be; and grieve not thyſelf with careleſs ſervants, they will diſorder thee; rather pay them, and let them go, if they will not be better by admonitions; this is beſt to avoid many words, which I know wound the ſoul, and offend the Lord.

1682. 3dly, ‘ Caſt up thy income, and ſee what it daily amounts to; by which thou mayeſt be ſure to have it in thy ſight and power to keep within compaſs: and I beſeech thee to live low and ſparingly, till my debts are paid; and then enlarge as thou ſeeſt it convenient. Remember thy mother's example, when thy father's publick-ſpiritedneſs had worſted his eſtate (which is my caſe). I know thou loveſt plain things, and art averſe to the pomps of the world; a nobility natural to thee. I write not as doubtful, but to quicken thee, for my ſake, to be more vigilant herein; knowing that God will bleſs thy care, and thy poor children and thee for it. My mind is wrapt up in a ſaying of thy father's, “ I deſire not riches, but to owe nothing;” and truly that is wealth; and more than enough to live, is a ſnare attended with many ſorrows. I need not bid thee be humble, for thou art ſo; nor meek and patient, for it is much of thy natural diſpoſition: but I pray thee be oft in retirement with the Lord, and guard againſt encroaching friendſhips. Keep them at arm's end; for it is giving away our power, aye, and ſelf too, into the poſſeſſion of another; and that which might ſeem engaging in the beginning, may prove a yoke and burthen too hard and heavy in the end. Wherefore keep dominion over thyſelf, and let thy children, good meetings and friends, be the pleaſure of thy life.

4thly, ‘ And now, my deareſt, let me recommend to thy care my dear children; abundantly beloved of me, as the Lord's bleſſings, and the ſweet pledges of our mutual and endeared affection. Above all things endeavour to breed them up in the love of virtue, and that holy plain way of it which we have lived in, that the world, in no part of it, get into my family. I had rather they were homely than finely bred, as to outward behaviour; yet I love ſweetneſs mixed with gravity, and chearfulneſs tempered with ſobriety. Religion in the heart leads into this true civility, teaching men and women to be mild and courteous in their behaviour; an accompliſhment worthy indeed of praiſe.

5thly, ‘ Next breed them up in a love one of another; tell them, it is the charge I left behind me; and that it is the way to have the love and bleſſing of God upon them: alſo what his portion is who hates, or calls his brother fool. Sometimes ſeparate them, but not long; and allow them to ſend and give each other ſmall things, to endear one another with. Once more, I ſay, tell them it was my counſel, they ſhould be tender and affectionate one to another. For their learning be liberal: ſpare no coſt; for by ſuch parſimony all is loſt that is ſaved; but let it be uſeful knowledge, ſuch as is conſiſtent with truth and godlineſs, not cheriſhing a vain converſation or idle mind; but ingenuity mixed with induſtry is good for the body and mind too. I recommend the uſeful parts of mathematicks, as building houſes or ſhips, meaſuring, ſurveying, dialling, navigation, &c. but agriculture is eſpecially in my eye: let my children be huſbandmen and houſewives; it is induſtrious, healthy, honeſt, and of good example: like Abraham, and the holy antients, who pleaſed God, and obtained a good report. This leads to conſider the works of God and Nature, of things that are good, and diverts the mind from being taken up with the vain arts and inventions of a luxurious world. It is commendable in the princes of Germany, and the nobles of that empire, that they have all their children inſtructed in ſome uſeful occupation. Rather keep an ingenious perſon in the houſe to teach them, than ſend them to ſchools; too many evil impreſſions being commonly received there. Be ſure to obſerve their genius, and do not croſs it as to learning: let them not dwell too long on one thing, but let their change be agreeable, and all their diverſions have ſome little bodily labour in them. When grown big, have moſt care for them; for then there are more ſnares both within and without. When marriageable, ſee that they have worthy perſons in their eye, of good life, and good fame for piety and underſtanding. I need no wealth but ſufficiency; and be ſure their love be dear, fervent, and mutual, that it may be happy for them. I chuſe not they ſhould be married to earthly covetous kindred; and of cities and towns of concourſe beware; the world is apt to ſtick cloſe to thoſe who have lived and got wealth there: A country life and eſtate I like beſt for my children. I prefer a decent manſion of an hundred pounds per annum, before ten thouſand pounds in London, or ſuch-like place, in a way of trade. In fine, my dear, endeavour to breed them dutiful to the Lord, and his bleſſed light, truth, and grace in their hearts, who is their Creator; and his fear will grow up with them. Teach a child (ſays the wiſe man) the way thou wilt have him to walk, and when he is old he will not forget it. Next, obedience to thee their dear mother; and that not for wrath, but for conſcience ſake; liberal to the poor, pitiful to the miſerable, humble and kind to all. And may my God make thee a bleſſing, and give thee comfort in our dear children; and in age, gather thee to the joy and bleſſedneſs of the juſt (where no death ſhall ſeparate us) for ever.

‘ And now, my dear children, that are the gifts and mercies of the God of your tender father; hear my counſel, and lay it up in your hearts; love it more than treaſure, and follow it, and you ſhall be bleſſed here, and happy hereafter.

‘ In

1682.

‘ In the firſt place, remember your Creator in the days of your youth. It was the glory of Iſrael in the 2d of Jeremiah: And how did God bleſs Joſiah, becauſe he feared him in his youth! And ſo he did Jacob, Joſeph, and Moſes. Oh! my dear children, remember, and fear and ſerve him who made you, and gave you to me and your dear mother: that you may live to him, and glorify him, in you generations.

‘ To do this, in your youthful days ſeek after the Lord, that you may find him; remembering his great love in creating you; that you are not beaſts, plants, or ſtones; but that he has kept you, and given you his grace within, and ſubſtance without, and provided plentifully for you. This remember in your youth, that you may be kept from the evil of the world: for, in age, it will be harder to overcome the temptations of it.

‘ Wherefore, my dear children, eſchew the appearance of evil, and love and cleave to that in your hearts, that ſhews you evil from good, and tells you when you do amiſs, and reproves you for it. It is the Light of Chriſt, that he has given you for your ſalvation. If you do this, and follow my counſel, God will bleſs you in this world, and give you an inheritance in that which ſhall never have an end. For the light of Jeſus is of a purifying nature; it ſeaſons thoſe who love it, and take heed to it; and never leaves ſuch, till it has brought them to the city of God, that has foundations. Oh! that ye may be ſeaſoned with the gracious nature of it; hide it in your hearts, and flee, my dear children, from all youthful luſts; the vain ſports, paſtimes and pleaſures of the world; redeeming the time becauſe the days are evil. You are now beginning to live---what would ſome give for your time? Oh! I could have lived better, were I, as you, in the flower of youth.---Therefore, love and fear the Lord, keep cloſe to meetings; and delight to wait on the Lord God of your father and mother, among his deſpiſed people, as we have done; and count it your honour to be members of that ſociety, and heirs of that living fellowſhip, which is enjoyed among them---for the experience of which your father's ſoul bleſſeth the Lord for ever.

‘ Next, be obedient to your dear mother; a woman whoſe virtue and good name is an honour to you; for ſhe hath been exceeded by none in her time for her plainneſs, integrity, induſtry, humanity, virtue, and good underſtanding: qualities not uſual among women of her worldly condition and quality. Therefore honour and obey her, my dear children, as your mother, and your father's love and delight; nay, love her too, for ſhe loved your father with a deep and upright love; chuſing him before all her many ſuitors: and though ſhe be of a delicate conſtitution and noble ſpirit, yet ſhe deſcended to the utmoſt tenderneſs and care for you; performing the painfulleſt acts of ſervice to you in your infancy, as a mother and a nurſe too. I charge you before the Lord, honour and obey, love and cheriſh your dear mother.

‘ Next, betake yourſelves to ſome honeſt, induſtrious courſe of life; and that not of ſordid covetouſneſs, but for example, and to avoid idleneſs. And if you change your condition and marry, chuſe with the knowledge and conſent of your mother, if living, guardians, or thoſe that have the charge of you.---Mind neither beauty nor riches, but the fear of the Lord, and a ſweet and amiable diſpoſition; ſuch as you can love above all this world, and that may make your habitations pleaſant and deſirable to you.

‘ And being married, be tender, affectionate, and patient, and meek. Live in the fear of the Lord, and he will bleſs you and your offspring. Be ſure to live within compaſs; borrow not, neither be beholden to any.---Ruin not yourſelves by kindneſs to others, for that exceeds the due bounds of friendſhip: neither will a true friend expect it. Small matters I heed not.

‘ Let your induſtry and parſimony go no farther than for a ſufficiency for life, and to make a proviſion for your children, and that in moderation, if the Lord gives you any. I charge you help the poor and needy; let the Lord have a voluntary ſhare of your income, for the good of the poor, both in our ſociety and others: for we are all his creatures; remembering that “ he that giveth to the poor, lendeth to the Lord.”

‘ Know well your in-comings, and your out-goings may be better regulated. Love not money, nor the world: uſe them only, and they will ſerve you; but if you love them you ſerve them;---which will debaſe your ſpirits, as well as offend the Lord.

‘ Pity the diſtreſſed, and hold out a hand of help to them; it may be your caſe: and as you mete to others, God will mete to you again.

‘ Be humble and gentle in your converſation;---of few words, I charge you; but always pertinent when you ſpeak; hearing out before you attempt to anſwer; and then ſpeaking as if you would perſuade, not impoſe.

‘ Affront none, neither revenge the affronts that are done to you; but forgive, and you ſhall be forgiven of your Heavenly Father.

‘ In making friends conſider well firſt; and when you are fixed, be true; not wavering by reports, nor deſerting in affliction: for that becomes not the good and virtuous.

‘ Watch againſt anger, neither ſpeak nor act in it; for, like drunkenneſs, it makes a man a beaſt, and throws people into deſperate inconveniencies.

‘ Avoid flatterers; for they are thieves in diſguiſe; their praiſe is coſtly, deſigning to get by thoſe they beſpeak; they are the worſt of creatures; they lye to flatter, and flatter to cheat:---and, which is worſe, if you believe them, you cheat yourſelves moſt dangerouſly. But the virtuous, though poor, love, cheriſh, and prefer. Remember David, who aſking the Lord “ Who ſhall abide in thy tabernacle; who ſhall dwell upon thy holy hill?” anſwers, “ He that walketh uprightly, worketh righteouſneſs, and ſpeaketh the truth in his heart; in whoſe eyes the vile perſon is contemned, but honoureth them who fear the Lord.”

‘ Next, my children, be temperate in all things: in your diet, for that is phyſick by prevention; it keeps, nay it makes people healthy, and their generation ſound. This is excluſive of the ſpiritual advantage it brings. Be alſo plain in your apparel; keep out that luſt which reigns too much over ſome; let your virtues be your ornaments; remembering life is more than food, and the body than raiment. Let your furniture be ſimple and cheap. Avoid pride, avarice and luxury. Read my NO CROSS, NO CROWN! There is inſtruction.---Make your converſation with the moſt eminent for wiſdom and piety; and ſhun all wicked men, as you hope for the bleſſing of God, and the comfort of your father's living and dying prayers. Be ſure you ſpeak no evil of any, no not of the meaneſt; much leſs of your ſuperiors, as magiſtrates, guardians, tutors, teachers, and elders in Chriſt.

‘ Be no buſy-bodies; meddle not with other folks matters, but when in conſcience and duty preſt: for it procures trouble, and is ill-manners, and very unſeemly to wiſe men.

‘ In your families remember Abraham, Moſes and Joſhua, their integrity to the Lord; and do as you have them for your examples.

‘ Let the fear and ſervice of the living God be encouraged in your houſes, and that plainneſs, ſobriety, and moderation in all things, as becometh God's choſen people: and, as I adviſe you, my beloved children, do you counſel yours, if God ſhould give you any. Yea, I counſel and command them, as my poſterity, that they love and ſerve the Lord God with an upright heart; that he may bleſs you and yours, from generation to generation.

‘ And as for you who are likely to be concerned in the government of Pennſylvania, and my parts of Eaſt Jerſey, eſpecially the firſt, I do charge you, before the Lord God and his holy Angels, that you be lowly, diligent, and tender; fearing God, loving the people, and hating covetouſneſs. Let juſtice have its impartial courſe, and the law free paſſage. Though to your loſs, protect no man againſt it: for you are not above the law, but the law above you. Live therefore the lives yourſelves you would have the people live; and then you have right and boldneſs to puniſh the tranſgreſſor.---Keep upon the ſquare, for God ſees you; therefore do your duty: and be ſure you ſee with your own eyes, and hear with your own ears.----Entertain no lurchers; cheriſh no informers for gain or revenge:---uſe no tricks, fly to no devices, to ſupport or cover injuſtice: but let your hearts be upright before the Lord, truſting in him above the contrivances of men, and none ſhall be able to hurt or ſupplant.

‘ Oh! the Lord is a ſtrong God; and he can do whatſoever he pleaſes: and though men conſider it not, it is the Lord that rules and over-rules in the kingdoms of men: and he builds up and pulls down. I, your father, am the man that can ſay, he that truſts in the Lord, ſhall not be confounded. But God, in due time, will make his enemies be at peace with him.

‘ If you thus behave yourſelves, and ſo become a terror to evil-doers, and a praiſe to them that do well, God, my God, will be with you, in wiſdom and a ſound mind: and make you bleſſed inſtruments in his hand, for the ſettlements of ſome of thoſe deſolate parts of the world;---which my ſoul deſires above all worldly honours and riches; both for you that go, and you that ſtay; you that govern, and you that are governed: that in the end you may be gathered with me to the reſt of God.

‘ Finally, my children, love one another with a true endeared love, and your dear relations on both ſides: and take care to preſerve tender affection in your children to each other: often marrying within themſelves, ſo as it be without the bounds forbidden in God's Law. That ſo they may not, like the forgetting and unnatural world, grow out of kindred, and as cold as ſtrangers; but, as becomes a truly natural and chriſtian ſtock, you and yours after you may live in the pure and fer-

1682.

'vent love of God towards one another, as becometh brethren in the ſpiritual and natural relation.

'So my God, that has bleſſed me with his abundant mercies, both of this and the other and better life, be with you all; guide you by his counſel, bleſs you, and bring you to his eternal glory; that you may ſhine, my dear children, in the firmament of God's power, with the bleſſed ſpirits of the juſt, that celeſtial family, praiſing and admiring him, the God and Father of it, for ever and ever. For there is no God like unto him; the God of Abraham, of Iſaac, and of Jacob; the God of the Prophets, the Apoſtles, and Martyrs of Jeſus; in whom I live for ever.

'So farewell to my thrice dearly beloved wife and children. Yours, as God pleaſeth, in that which no waters can quench, no time forget, nor diſtance wear away, but remains for ever,'

'Worminghurſt, 4th ſixth month,
'1682.

'WILLIAM PENN.'

In the 6th month, 1682, himſelf, accompanied with divers of his Friends, took ſhipping for his province of Pennſylvania, and on the 30th of the ſame month, he writ from the Downs, "A Farewell to England, being an Epiſtle containing a Salutation to all faithful Friends."

Goes to Pennſylvania.

After a proſperous voyage of ſix weeks, they came within ſight of the American coaſt, from whence the air, at twelve leagues diſtance, ſmelt as ſweet as a new-blown garden. Sailing up the river, the inhabitants, as well Dutch and Swedes, as Engliſh, met him with demonſtrations of joy and ſatisfaction. He landed at Newcaſtle, a place moſtly inhabited by the Dutch, and the next day he ſummoned the people to the Court-Houſe, where poſſeſſion of the country was legally given him: He then made a Speech, ſetting forth the purpoſe of his coming, and the ends of government, giving them aſſurances of a free enjoyment of Liberty of Conſcience in things ſpiritual, and of civil freedom in temporal, and recommending to them to live in ſobriety and peace one with another: After which, he renewed the magiſtrates commiſſions, and then departed to Upland or Cheſter, where he called an aſſembly, to whom he made the like declaration, and received their thankful acknowledgments. Here alſo the Swedes deputed one Captain Lucey Cook, in their names, to congratulate him upon his ſafe arrival, and to aſſure him of their fidelity, love and obedience.

Heads of his ſpeech to an aſſembly, at Newcaſtle.

And to another at Cheſter. Is congratulated by the Swedes.

By this time ſome progreſs had been made in building at Philadelphia, and ſeveral pretty houſes were run up on the ſide of the River Delaware: The governor himſelf had a fair manſion-houſe erected at Penn's-Bury, near the fall of the ſaid river, at which he ſometimes reſided. The country was unexceptionable, the air exceeding clear, ſweet and healthy; and proviſions, both meat and drink, good and plentiful.

In the tenth month following, a general aſſembly of the freeholders was held at Cheſter aforeſaid, at which Newcaſtle was annexed to Pennſylvania: The foreigners there inhabiting were naturalized, and the laws before agreed on in England, with ſome amendments and alterations, were confirmed and ratified; and the whole proceedings of the aſſembly carried on with love and unanimity.

A general aſſembly of the freeholders at Cheſter.

After the adjournment of that aſſembly, he went to Maryland, and was there kindly received by the Lord Baltimore, and the chiefs of that colony: They held a treaty about ſettling the bounds of their provinces; but the ſeaſon of the year not admitting the concluſion of that buſineſs, after two days conference he took his leave, and the Lord Baltimore accompanied him back ſome miles to the houſe of one William Richardſon; from thence he went two miles farther to a meeting of his friends, at the houſe of Thomas Hooker, and afterward forwarded his journey to Choptank, on the eaſtern-ſhore; where was to be an appointed meeting of colonels, magiſtrates, and people of ſeveral ranks and qualities. Thus he proceeded to ſettle his government and province, and to eſtabliſh a good correſpondence with his neighbours. Nor was the advancement of himſelf or his family in worldly wealth and grandeur, his aim in the adminiſtration of government; but in the greateſt honour of his publick ſtation, he ſtill retained the meekneſs and humility of a private Chriſtian: The ſincerity of his intentions, and with what zeal and ardour he purſued a general good, are beſt expreſſed by his own words, in a letter to a perſon who had unduly reflected on him; viz.

His Reception at Maryland.

A meeting of magiſtrates, &c. at Choptank, on the eaſtern ſhore.

'MY OLD FRIEND,

---------- 'I could ſpeak largely of God's dealings with me in getting this thing: What an inward exerciſe of faith and patience it coſt me in paſſing. The travail was mine, as well as the debt and coſt, through the envy of many, both profeſſors, falſe friends, and profane: My GOD hath given it me in the face of the world, and

His defence of himſelf againſt a cavilling objector.

1682.

‘ it is to hold it in true judgment, as a reward of my ſufferings; and that is ſeen here, whatever ſome deſpiſers may ſay or think: The place God hath given me, and I never felt judgment for the power I kept, but trouble for what I parted with. It is MORE than a Worldly Title or Patent that hath clothed me in this place.--- Keep thy place: I am in mine, and have ſerved the God of the whole earth ſince I have been in it: Nor am I ſitting down in a Greatneſs that I have denied.--- I am day and night ſpending my life, my time, my money, and am not ſix-pence enriched by this greatneſs: Coſts in getting, ſettling, tranſportation, and maintenance, now in a publick manner at my own charge duly conſidered; to ſay nothing of my hazard, and the diſtance I am at from a conſiderable Eſtate, and, which is more, my dear Wife and poor Children.

‘ Well! --- the Lord is a God of righteous judgment: Had I ſought Greatneſs, I had ſtayed at home, where the difference between what I am here, and was offered and could have been there, in Power and Wealth, is as wide as the places are: No, I came for the LORD's ſake, and therefore have I ſtood to this day, well, and diligent, and ſucceſsful, bleſſed be his Power.--- Nor ſhall I trouble myſelf to tell thee what I am to the people of this place, in travails, watchings, ſpendings, and my ſervants every way, FREELY, (not like a SELFISH man) I have many witneſſes.--- To conclude, it is now in Friends hands: Through my travail, faith and patience it came.--- If Friends here keep to God, and in the juſtice, mercy, equity and fear of the Lord, their enemies will be their footſtool: If not, their heirs, and my heirs too, will loſe all, and deſolation will follow: But bleſſed be the Lord, we are well, and live in the dear love of God, and the fellowſhip of his tender heavenly Spirit; and our faith is, for ourſelves and one another, that the Lord will be with us a KING and a COUNSELLOR for ever.

‘ Cheſter, 5th of the 12th
‘ Month, 1682.

‘ Thy Ancient, though Grieved Friend,

‘ WILLIAM PENN.’

1683.

Writes to the ſociety of traders at London.

In the ſixth month, 1683, having been about a year in Pennſylvania, he writ a letter “ To the Free Society of Traders of that Province, reſiding at London,” wherein he deſcribes the country, relates the cuſtoms and manners of the Indians, the condition of the firſt planters, and the preſent ſtate and ſettlement of that province, with an account of the new-laid-out city of Philadelphia; which the reader may find no ſmall pleaſure in peruſing.

1684.

And being no leſs ſollicitous for the ſpiritual good, than for the temporal advantages of his people, he writ in the year 1684, “ An Epiſtle to the People of God called “ Quakers, in the Province of Pennſylvania,” &c.

Returns to England.

After about two years reſidence there, having ſettled all things in a thriving and proſperous condition, he returned to England, where he arrived ſafe the 12th of the 6th month, 1684.

Death of K. Charles II.

Acceſſion of K. James.

On the 6th of the 12th month following, King Charles the Second died, and was ſucceeded by his brother the Duke of York, by the name of King James the Second, who being a profeſſed Papiſt, his acceſſion to the crown filled the people's hearts with juſt apprehenſions and fears, leſt he ſhould take into the wonted meaſures of thoſe of his perſuaſion, and eſtabliſh his own religion by the deſtruction of others; and had W. P. at that time fomented the general uneaſineſs, by encouraging multitudes then upon the wing, he might, as himſelf ſaid, ‘ have put many thouſands of people into ‘ his province, as well as pounds into his pocket.’ But he, who had been intimate with that King when Duke of York, and for whom, excepting their difference in matters of Religion, the Duke had always ſhewn a perſonal reſpect and eſteem, was induced, by the repeated proteſtations he had heard him make, to believe that he was really PRINCIPLED for Granting Liberty of Conſcience; and accordingly embraced the preſent opportunity of ſollicitng afreſh for the relief of his innocent and ſuffering Friends, who at that time filled the jails; and that he might be the nearer on all occaſions for the ſervice of them and his country, he took lodgings, in 1685, near Kenſington.

1685.

W. P. undeſervedly cenſured as a Papiſt or Jeſuit.

And now his acquaintance and frequency at court ſubjected him to the undeſerved cenſure of ſuch as leaſt knew him, as being a Papiſt, or Jeſuit; and about this time Two Copies of Verſes were printed, with the initial letters of his name ſubſcribed, condoling the ‘ Late King's Death, and congratulating the Acceſſion of the preſent:’ Theſe verſes, though ſavouring both of Popery and Flattery, were, as perhaps the Publiſher's Malice intended, preſently imputed to him: Whereupon, to undeceive the world and clear himſelf, he publiſhed the following paper, called, 1685.

“ Fiction

“Fiction found out.”

‘To my Eſteemed Friends, called QUAKERS, on occaſion of Two ‘Copies of Verſes printed, and ſubſcribed W. P.

‘DEAR FRIENDS,

‘I Have writ this for your Satisfaction; and yet not for yours, as you well ſay, but to inform thoſe many that importune you on my account, aſking, If I was the author of the condoling and congratulating verſes on the late and preſent king; printed (ſay they) in my name: Concluding, if I were the Author, I muſt needs have turned Papiſt, Flatterer, and what they pleaſe.

‘Others, I perceive, without this help, as well as without truth or modeſty, ſtick not to ~~report me~~ a declared Papiſt, and that I openly go to Maſs.

‘Now, though it looks idle in any to wonder I ſhould be a Papiſt at this time of day, that have been thought, and upon juſt as good ground, a Jeſuit ſo many years; yet becauſe they have no better evidence, a man would wonder why they ſhould be ſo believing, but that we lamentably ſee men are apter to be injurious than juſt. In the mean while I have a fine time of it, to be reported a Papiſt on one hand, and preſented and proſecuted as a Diſaffected Perſon on the other hand: But I know myſelf and the world too well, to be troubled at this, and worſe, if that can be: It is enough for me it is FALSE.

‘For the Verſes, if it be conſidered, the two letters W. P. begin 500 names beſides mine; and I, that pretend not to POETRY at any time, ſhould hardly have done it then, when I muſt needs look to have ſuch ſad company as the dull flattery of all the ſuburbs of the town.

‘But that I did not write them, the Stuff itſelf ſhows; and they muſt be bereaved of Senſe, as well as Charity, that can think it: For to own myſelf a Quaker, and jeer the Profeſſion; to uſe their Phraſes, and profane them; to promiſe, as Quakers, to live peaceably, and yet engage to be no more ſuch; to make ourſelves Loyal in one ſtanza, and aſk Pardon for NOT being ſo in another; be now a Miſtaken and wilful ROUT; and preſently the Loving and Loyal FRIENDS of Charles and James; make up a jarr and a nonſenſe that I have not been uſed to be guilty of in Proſe; and whenever I turn ſuch a PENNY-POET, let ſuch Confuſion be my Judgment: However, it would look rude to be angry at them; for certainly they put a mighty compliment upon my name, that thought two letters of it would make their Drug Sell: And becauſe I am ſo known a Friend to PROPERTY, to the unknown Hawker-Wit that writ them I leave them, with the credit of all the fine and fooliſh Fancy they are laboured with: Contenting myſelf, againſt all Defamations, that I have this defence for my Religion and Conduct in my concluſions:

‘Firſt, That the Grace of God WITHIN me, and the Scriptures WITHOUT me, are the Foundation and Declaration of my Faith and Religion; and let any man get better if he can.

‘Secondly, That the Profeſſion I make of this Religion, is in the ſame Way and Manner that I have uſed for almoſt theſe eighteen years laſt paſt.

‘Thirdly, That my Civil Conduct, I humbly bleſs my God, has been with Peace on Earth, and Good-will to all Men, from the King on the Throne, to the Beggar on the Dunghill.

‘I have ever loved ENGLAND, and Moderation to all Parties in it; and long ſeen, and foreſeen, the conſequences of the want of it: I would yet heartily wiſh it might take place, and PERSUASION that of PERSECUTION, that we might not grow BARBAROUS for CHRISTIANITY, nor abuſe and undo one another for GOD's SAKE.

‘Theſe have been, theſe are, and with God's ſtrength ſhall be, through all the crooked and uneven paths of Time, the principles and practice of

‘Your ancient and conſtant Friend,

‘Worminghurſt-place, the laſt of the ‘ſecond month called April, 1683

‘WILLIAM PENN.’

POSTSCRIPT.

If this will not ſerve and ſatisfy the miſtaken, (for the Malicious I fear are paſt cure) let them but prove the Report upon any-body, and I will yet, as late in the day as it looks for ſuch work, effectually convince them with the Judgment of the Law, that ought to be every honeſt man's Shield.

‘W. P.’

1685.

The occaſion of an epiſtolary conference between doctor Tillotſon and W. Penn.

But yet the miſtaken notions entertained by the common people of his being a Papiſt, or at leaſt holding a correſpondence with Jeſuits at Rome, began to enter the minds of ſome of better judgment; and among others, his acquaintance Dr. Tillotſon (afterward Archbiſhop of Canterbury) having let in a ſuſpicion of him, dropt ſome expreſſions, which were improved to his diſadvantage: W. P. being informed of this, wrote a letter to the doctor on that ſubject, which was followed by ſeveral others that paſſed between them, until at laſt the doctor declared himſelf fully ſatisfied that his ſuſpicion was groundleſs: And that our reader may not miſs of as full ſatisfaction in this caſe, a copy of thoſe letters here follows, viz.

W. Penn to Dr. Tillotson.

‘Worthy Friend,

‘Being often told that Dr. Tillotſon ſhould ſuſpect me, and ſo report me, a Papiſt, (I think a Jeſuit) and being cloſely preſſed, I take the liberty to aſk thee, if any ſuch reflection fell from thee? If it did, I am ſorry one I eſteemed ever the Firſt of his robe, ſhould ſo undeſervedly ſtain me, for ſo I call it; and if the ſtory be falſe, I am ſorry they ſhould abuſe Dr. Tillotſon, as well as myſelf, without a cauſe. I add no more, but that I abhor Two Principles in Religion, and pity them that own them. The firſt is, Obedience upon Authority without Conviction; and the other, Deſtroying them that differ from me for God's Sake. Such a Religion is without Judgment, though not without Teeth: Union is beſt, if right; elſe Charity: And as Hooker ſaid, “The Time will come, when a few Words ſpoken with Meekneſs and Humility and Love, ſhall be more acceptable than Volumes of Controverſies;” which commonly deſtroy Charity, the very beſt Part of the True Religion: I mean not a Charity that can CHANGE with All, but BEAR All, as I can Dr. Tillotſon in what he diſſents from me, and in this Reflection too, if ſaid, which is not yet believed by

‘Thy Chriſtian True Friend,

‘Charing-Croſs, 22d of the ‘11th month, 1685-6.

‘W. Penn.’

Dr. Tillotson to W. Penn.

‘Honoured Sir, Jan. 26, 1685.

‘The demand of your letter is very juſt and reaſonable, and the manner of it very kind; therefore in anſwer to it, be pleaſed to take the following account. The laſt time you did me the favour to ſee me at my houſe, I did, according to the Freedom I always uſe, where I profeſs any Friendſhip, acquaint you with ſomething I had heard of a Correſpondence you held with ſome at Rome, and particularly with ſome of the Jeſuits there; at which you ſeemed a little ſurprized; and after ſome general diſcourſe about it, you ſaid you would call on me ſome other time, and ſpeak farther of it: Since that time I never ſaw you, but by accident and in paſſage, where, I thought, you always declined me, particularly at Sir William Jones's chamber, which was the laſt time, I think, I ſaw you; upon which occaſion I took notice to him of your ſtrangeneſs to me, and told him what I thought might be the reaſon of it, and that I was ſorry for it, becauſe I had a particular Eſteem of your Parts and Temper. The ſame, I believe, I have ſaid to ſome others, but to whom I do not ſo particularly remember. Since your going to Pennſylvania, I never thought more of it; till lately being in ſome company, one of them preſſed me to declare, Whether I had not heard ſomething of you, which had ſatisfied me that you were a Papiſt? I anſwered, No, by no means. I told him what I had heard, and what I ſaid to you, and of the ſtrangeneſs that enſued upon it; but that this never went farther with me, than to make me ſuſpect there was more in that report which I had heard, than I was at firſt willing to believe; and that if any made more of it, I ſhould look upon them as very injurious both to Mr. Penn and myſelf.

‘This is the truth of that matter; and whenever you will pleaſe to ſatisfy me that my ſuſpicion of the truth of that report I had heard was groundleſs, I will heartily beg your pardon for it. I do fully concur with you in the abhorrence of the Two Principles you mention, and in your approbation of that excellent ſaying of Mr. Hooker's, for which I ſhall ever highly eſteem him. I have endeavoured to make it one of the governing principles of my life, never to abate any thing of Humanity or Charity to any man for his difference from me in Opinion, and particularly to thoſe of your Perſuaſion, as ſeveral of them have had experience. I have been ready upon 1686.

‘all

‘ all occaſions to do all offices of kindneſs, being truly ſorry to ſee them ſo hardly uſed; and though I thought them MISTAKEN, yet in the main I believed them to be very HONEST. I thank you for your letter, and have a juſt eſteem of the Chriſtian Temper of it, and reſt,

‘ Your faithful Friend,

‘ Jo. TILLOTSON.’

W. PENN to Dr. TILLOTSON.

‘ WORTHY FRIEND,

‘ HAVING a much leſs opinion of my own Memory, than of Dr. Tillotſon's Truth, I will allow the Fact, though not the Jealouſy: For beſides that I cannot look ſtrange where I am well uſed, I have ever treated the name of Dr. Tillotſon with another regard. I might be grave, and full of my own buſineſs; I was alſo then diſappointed by the Doctor's; but my Nature is not harſh, my Education leſs, and my Principle leaſt of all. It was the Opinion I have had of the Doctor's Moderation, Simplicity, and Integrity, rather than his Parts, or Poſt, that always made me ſet a value upon his Friendſhip, of which, perhaps, I am better judge; leaving the latter to men of deeper talents. I blame him nothing, but leave it to his better thoughts, if, in my affair, his Jealouſy was not too nimble for his Charity. If he can believe me, I ſhould hardly prevail with myſelf to endure the ſame thought of Dr. Tillotſon on the like occaſion, and leſs to ſpeak of it. For the Roman Correſpondence I will freely come to confeſſion: I have not only no ſuch thing with any Jeſuit at ROME, (though Proteſtants MAY have, without offence) but I hold none with ANY Jeſuit, Prieſt, or Regular in the World of that Communion. And that the Doctor may ſee what a novice I am in that buſineſs, I know not one ANY-WHERE. And yet, when all this is ſaid, I am a CATHOLICK, though not a ROMAN. I have Bowels for Mankind, and dare not deny others what I crave for myſelf, I mean Liberty for the Exerciſe of my Religion; thinking Faith, Piety, and Providence a better Security than Force; and that if Truth cannot prevail with her OWN weapons, all others will fail her.

‘ Now, though I am not obliged to this Defence, and that it can be no Temporizing now to make it; yet that Dr. Tillotſon may ſee how much I value his good opinion, and dare own the Truth and myſelf at all turns, let him be confident I am no Roman Catholick, but a Chriſtian, whoſe creed is the Scripture; of the Truth of which I hold a NOBLER Evidence, than the Beſt CHURCH AUTHORITY in the World; and yet I refuſe not to believe the Porter, though I cannot leave the Senſe to his Diſcretion; and when I ſhould, if he offends againſt thoſe plain Methods of Underſtanding God hath made us to know things by, and which are inſeparable from us, I muſt beg his pardon; as I do the Doctor's for this Length, upon the aſſurance he has given me of his doing the like upon better Information; which that he may fully have, I recommend him to my “ Addreſs to Proteſtants,” from pag. 133. to the end, and to the four firſt chapters of my “ No Croſs, No Crown;” to ſay nothing of OUR moſt Inceremonious and Unworldly Way of Worſhip, and THEIR Pompous Cult; where at this time I ſhall leave the buſineſs, with all due and ſenſible acknowledgments to thy friendly temper, and aſſurance of the ſincere wiſhes and reſpects of

‘ Thy affectionate real Friend,

‘ Charing-Croſs, the 29th of
‘ the 11th month, 1686.

‘ W. PENN.’

W. PENN to Dr. TILLOTSON.

‘ WORTHY FRIEND, Charing-Croſs, 27th of 2d month, 1686.

Third letter to Dr. Tillotſon.

‘ THIS ſhould have been a viſit; but being of opinion that Dr. Tillotſon is yet a debtor to me this way, I choſe to provoke him to another letter by this, before I made him one: For though he was very juſt and obliging when I laſt ſaw him, yet certainly no Expreſſion, however kindly ſpoken, will ſo eaſily and effectually purge me from the unjuſt imputation ſome people caſt upon me in his name, as his LETTER will do. The need of this he will better ſee when he has read the incloſed; which coming to hand ſince my laſt, is, I preſume, enough to juſtify this addreſs, if I had no former pretenſions: And therefore I cannot be ſo wanting to myſelf, as not to preſs him to a LETTER in my juſt defence; nor ſo uncharitable to him, as to think he ſhould not frankly write what he has ſaid, when it is to right a man's Reputation, 1686.

‘ and diſabuſe the too credulous World. For to me it ſeems from a Private Friendſhip, ‘ to become a Moral Duty to the Publick, which, with a perſon of ſo great Morality, ‘ muſt give ſucceſs to the reaſonable deſire of

‘ Thy very real Friend,

‘ WILLIAM PENN.’

Dr. TILLOTSON to W. PENN.

‘ SIR, April the 29th, 1686.

‘ I Am very ſorry that the Suſpicion which I had entertained concerning you, of ‘ which I gave you the true account in my former letter, hath occaſioned ſo much ‘ trouble and inconvenience to you: And I do now declare, with Great Joy, that I ‘ am fully ſatisfied that there was no juſt ground for that Suſpicion, and therefore I ‘ do heartily beg your pardon for it. And ever ſince you were pleaſed to give me that ‘ ſatisfaction, I have taken all occaſions to vindicate you in this matter; and ſhall be ‘ ready to do it to the perſon that ſent you the incloſed, whenever he will pleaſe to ‘ come to me. I am very much in the country, but will ſeek the firſt opportunity to ‘ viſit you at Charing-Croſs, and renew our acquaintance, in which I took great ‘ pleaſure. I reſt,

‘ Your Faithful Friend,

‘ JO. TILLOTSON.’

W. P. writes a defence of a book of the Duke of Buckingham's.

Publiſhes a “ Perſuaſive “ to Moderation.”

In this year he publiſhed “ A farther Account of the Province of Pennſylvania;” and about this time the Duke of Buckingham having writ a book in favour of Liberty of Conſcience, for which he was always a known advocate, a Nameleſs Author put forth an Anſwer, reflecting not only on the Duke himſelf, but alſo on W. P. ſaying, ‘ The ‘ Pennſylvanian had entered him, (i. e. the Duke) with his Quakeriſtical Doctrine.’ W. P. gave that Anſwerer a Reply, intituled, “ A Defence of the Duke of Buckingham's Book of Religion and Worſhip,” &c. a ſmall piece; in the concluſion of which, he refers to another excellent and larger diſcourſe, ſoon after publiſhed by himſelf, intituled, “ A Perſuaſive to Moderation to Diſſenting Chriſtians, in Prudence and “ Conſcience, humbly ſubmitted to the King and his great Council:” In which he confutes the ſeveral pleas for Perſecution, and confirms his own arguments for a Toleration, by the teſtimonies of authors, and the examples of flouriſhing kingdoms and ſtates, and ſhews the diſmal effects and conſequences of the contrary: A treatiſe well worthy the reader's ſerious peruſal.

King James's Proclamation for a general pardon:

How far this book, and other ſollicitations of its author, did influence the King and Council, we determine not, but ſhortly after, viz. on the 14th of the month called March, 1685-6, came forth the King's Proclamation for a General Pardon; and inſtructions being given to the Judges of Aſſize, in their ſeveral Circuits, to extend the benefit of it to the Quakers, about Thirteen Hundred of that People, moſt of whom had been divers years impriſoned, were ſet at liberty: Joyful, no doubt, to their diſtreſſed Families, as well as beneficial to the Country, was the reſtoring ſo many induſtrious people to their own homes, and lawful employments; and, whatever private views ſome in authority may be ſuppoſed to have had in granting that general amneſty, it was certainly the duty of the afflicted to receive the preſent favour with a becoming gratitude.

1687.

And alſo a Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience.

On the 4th of the month called April, 1687, came forth the ‘ King's Declaration ‘ for Liberty of Conſcience, ſuſpending the Execution of all Penal Laws in Matters ‘ Eccleſiaſtical;’ by which, (though probably done in favour of the Papiſts) Diſſenters received a general eaſe, and enjoyed their meetings peaceably. The People called Quakers, having ſmarted by thoſe laws more than others, could not be leſs ſenſible of the preſent relief; wherefore at their next Annual Aſſembly held at London, in the third month this year, they drew up an “ Addreſs of Thanks to the King,” deputing W. P. and others to preſent the ſame: His Speech at the preſenting of it, with the Addreſs itſelf, and the King's Anſwer, were as follows.

1687.

W. Penn's Speech to the KING, upon his delivering the Quakers Addreſs.

‘ May It pleaſe the KING,

‘ It was the ſaying of our Bleſſed Lord to the captious Jews in the caſe of Tribute, “ Render to Cæſar the Things that are Cæſar's, and to God the Things that are God's.” As this diſtinction ought to be obſerved by all men in the conduct of their lives, ſo the King has given us an illuſtrious Example in his own Perſon that excites us to it: For while he was a SUBJECT, he gave Cæſar his Tribute; and now he is a CÆSAR, he gives GOD his Due, viz. “ The Sovereignty over Conſciences.” It were a great ſhame, then, for any Engliſhman (that profeſſes Chriſtianity) not to give God his Due. By this grace he has relieved his diſtreſſed ſubjects from their cruel ſufferings, and raiſed to himſelf a new and laſting Empire, by adding their Affections to their Duty: And we pray God to continue the King in this noble reſolution; for he is now upon a principle that has Good-nature, Chriſtianity, and the Good of Civil Society on its ſide; a Security to him beyond the Little Arts of Government.

‘ I would not that any ſhould think, that we came hither with deſign to fill the Gazette with our Thanks; but as our Sufferings would have moved Stones to Compaſſion, ſo we ſhould be HARDER, if we were not moved to GRATITUDE.

‘ Now ſince the King's Mercy and Goodneſs have reached to us throughout the Kingdom of England, and Principality of Wales, our General Aſſembly from all thoſe parts, met at London about our Church Affairs, has appointed us to wait upon the King with our humble thanks, and me to deliver them; which I do, by this ADDRESS, with all the affection and reſpect of a dutiful ſubject.’

The ADDRESS.

‘ To King JAMES the Second, over ENGLAND, &c.

‘ The Humble and Grateful Acknowledgment of his Peaceable Subjects ‘ called QUAKERS, in this Kingdom.

‘ From their uſual YEARLY MEETING in LONDON, the Nineteenth Day of the Third ‘ Month, vulgarly called May, 1687.

‘ We cannot but bleſs and praiſe the Name of Almighty God, who hath the Hearts of Princes in his Hand, that he hath inclined the King to hear the Cries of his Suffering Subjects for Conſcience Sake: And we rejoice that inſtead of troubling him with Complaints of our Sufferings, he hath given us ſo eminent an occaſion to preſent him with our Thanks: And ſince it hath pleaſed the King, out of his great compaſſion, thus to commiſerate our afflicted condition, which hath ſo particularly appeared by his gracious Proclamation, and Warrants laſt year, whereby Twelve hundred priſoners were releaſed from their ſevere impriſonments, and many others from ſpoil and ruin in their eſtates and properties; and his princely Speech in Council, and Chriſtian Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience, in which he doth not only expreſs his Averſion to all Force upon Conſcience, and grant all his Diſſenting Subjects an ample Liberty to worſhip God, in the Way they are perſuaded is moſt agreeable to his Will, but gives them his Kingly Word the ſame ſhall CONTINUE during his Reign; we do (as our Friends of this City have already done) render the King our Humble, Chriſtian, and Thankful Acknowledgments, not only in behalf of ourſelves, but with reſpect to our Friends throughout England and Wales; And pray God, with all our hearts, to bleſs and preſerve thee, O King, and thoſe under thee, in ſo good a work: And as we can aſſure the King it is well accepted in the ſeveral counties from whence we came, ſo we hope the good effects thereof, for the Peace, Trade, and Proſperity of the Kingdom, will produce ſuch a concurrence from the Parliament, as may ſecure it to our Poſterity in After-times: And while we live, it ſhall be our endeavour (through God's Grace) to demean ourſelves, as, in Conſcience to God, and Duty to the King, we are obliged,

‘ His Peaceable, Loving, and Faithful Subjects.’

The

1687.

The KING's Anſwer.

‘ GENTLEMEN,

‘ I Thank you heartily for your Addreſs: Some of you know (I am ſure YOU do, ‘ Mr. Penn) that it was always my principle, “ That Conſcience ought not to be “ FORCED; and that all men ought to have the LIBERTY of their Conſciences:” ‘ And what I have promiſed in my Declaration, I will continue to perform as long as ‘ I live: And I hope, before I die, to ſettle it ſo, that After-Ages ſhall have no reaſon to alter it.’

Some have objected againſt the Quakers, and other Diſſenters, for addreſſing King James upon the aforeſaid Declaration of Indulgence, as though they had thereby countenanced the King's Diſpenſing with the Laws in General: Let ſuch obſerve their imputation, as to our Author, and his Friends the Quakers, ſufficiently guarded againſt in that part of their Addreſs where they ſay, ‘ We hope the good effects thereof, for ‘ the Peace, Trade, and Proſperity of the Kingdom, will produce ſuch a Concurrence ‘ from the Parliament, as may ſecure it to our Poſterity.’ It is plain, therefore they gratefully accepted of the Suſpenſion of the Penal Laws, by the King's Prerogative, (as who, in their caſe, would not?) a thing in itſelf juſt and reaſonable, in hopes of having the ſame afterward confirmed by the Legiſlative Authority; there being at that time much talk of an approaching Parliament: And that their expectation centered not in the King's Diſpenſing Power, is evident, by our author's continuing his endeavours to ſhew the neceſſity of aboliſhing the PENAL LAWS; for ſoon after this he writ a large Tract, called, “ Good Advice to the Church of England, Roman Catho“ licks, and Proteſtant Diſſenters;” in which he ſhews the diſannulling of thoſe Laws to be their General Intereſt.

He wrote alſo, preſently after this, a book intituled, “ The Great and Popular “ Objection againſt the Repeal of the Penal Laws, briefly ſtated and conſidered.”

1688. K. James's Declaration renewed.

On the 27th of the month called April, 1688, King James renewed his Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience, with an order of council for the reading of it in churches; againſt which Seven Biſhops petitioning, were committed to the Tower.

Our author labouring at this time under many Jealouſies and Reflections as a Countenancer of the Court Proceedings, a particular friend of his, William Popple, Secretary to the Plantation-Office, ſent him the following Letter.

‘ To the Honourable WILLIAM PENN, Eſq; Proprietor and Governor ‘ of Pennſylvania.

‘ HONOURED SIR!

‘ THOUGH the Friendſhip with which you are pleaſed to honour me, doth ‘ afford me ſufficient opportunities of diſcourſing with you upon any ſubject, ‘ yet I chuſe rather at this time to offer unto you in writing, ſome Reflections which ‘ have occurred to my thoughts, in a matter of no common importance. The im‘ portance of it doth, primarily and directly, reſpect yourſelf, and your own private ‘ concernments; but it alſo, conſequentially and effectually, regards the King, his ‘ Government, and even the Peace and Settlement of this whole Nation. I intreat ‘ you, therefore, to bear with me, if I endeavour in this manner to give ſomewhat ‘ more weight unto my words than would be in a tranſient diſcourſe, and leave them ‘ with you, as a ſubject that requires your retired conſideration.

‘ You are not ignorant that the part you have been ſuppoſed to have had of late ‘ years in Publick Affairs, though without either the title, or honour, or profit of any ‘ public office, and that eſpecially your avowed endeavours to introduce amongſt us a ‘ general and inviolable Liberty of Conſcience in matters of mere Religion, have oc‘ caſioned the Miſtakes of ſome men, provoked the Malice of others, and, in the ‘ end, have raiſed againſt you a Multitude of Enemies, who have unworthily de‘ famed you with ſuch imputations, as, I am ſure, you abhor. This I know you have ‘ been ſufficiently informed of, though I doubt you have not made ſufficient reflection ‘ upon it: The Conſciouſneſs of your own Innocence ſeems to me to have given you ‘ too great a Contempt of ſuch unjuſt and ill-grounded ſlanders: For however glorious ‘ it is, and reaſonable, for a truly virtuous mind, whoſe inward peace is founded upon ‘ that rock of innocence, to deſpiſe the empty noiſe of popular reproach, yet even that ‘ ſublimity of ſpirit may ſometimes ſwell to a reproveable exceſs. To be ſteady ‘ and immoveable in the proſecution of wiſe and honeſt reſolutions, by all honeſt and ‘ prudent means, is indeed a duty that admits of no exception: But nevertheleſs it ‘ ought not to hinder, that, at the ſame time, there be alſo a due care taken of pre-ſerving a fair Reputation. “A good Name,” ſays the Wiſe Man, “is better than precious Ointment.” It is a Perfume that recommends the perſon whom it accompanies, that procures him every-where an eaſy Acceptance, and that facilitates the ſucceſs of all his enterprizes: And for that reaſon, though there were no other, I intreat you obſerve, that “The Care of a Man's Reputation is an eſſential Part of that very ſame Duty that engages him in the purſuit of any worthy Deſign.”

1688.

‘But I muſt not entertain you with a declamation upon this general theme. My buſineſs is to repreſent to you, more particularly, thoſe very Imputations which are caſt upon yourſelf, together with ſome of their evident Conſequences; that, if poſſible, I may thereby move you to labour after a Remedy. The ſource of all ariſes from the Ordinary Acceſs you have unto the King, the Credit you are ſuppoſed to have with him, and the Deep Jealouſy that ſome people have conceived of his intentions in reference to Religion. Their jealouſy is, that his aim has been to ſettle POPERY in this nation, not only in a fair and ſecure Liberty, but even in a Predominating Superiority over all other profeſſions: And from hence the inference follows, That whoſoever has any part in the Councils of this Reign, muſt needs be popiſhly affected: But that to have ſo great a part in them, as you are ſaid to have had, can happen to none but an Abſolute Papiſt. That is the direct charge; but that is not enough, your Poſt is too conſiderable for a Papiſt of an ordinary form, and therefore you muſt be a Jeſuit: Nay, to confirm that ſuggeſtion, it muſt be accompanied with all the circumſtances that may beſt give it an air of probability; as that you have been bred at St. OMER's in the Jeſuits College; that you have taken Orders at Rome, and there obtained a Diſpenſation to Marry; and that you have ſince then frequently officiated as a Prieſt, in the celebration of the Maſs at Whitehall, St. James's, and other places. And this being admitted, nothing can be too black to be caſt upon you. Whatſoever is thought amiſs either in Church or State, though never ſo contrary to your advice, is boldly attributed to it, and if other proofs fail, the Scripture itſelf muſt be brought in to confirm, “That whoſoever offends in one point (in a point eſpecially ſo eſſential as that of our too much affected Uniformity) is guilty of the breach of all our laws.” Thus the Charge of Popery draws after it a tail like the Et Cetera Oath, and, by endleſs innuendos, prejudicates you as guilty of whatſoever Malice can invent, or Folly believe: But that Charge therefore being removed, the inferences that are drawn from it will vaniſh, and your Reputation will eaſily return to its former brightneſs.

‘Now that I may the more effectually perſuade you to apply ſome remedy to this diſeaſe, I beſeech you, Sir, ſuffer me to lay before you ſome of its pernicious conſequences. It is not a trifling matter for a perſon raiſed, as you are, above the common level, to lie under the Prejudice of ſo General a Miſtake, in ſo important a matter. The general and the long prevalency of any opinion gives it a ſtrength, eſpecially among the vulgar, that is not eaſily ſhaken. And as it happens that you have alſo enemies of an higher rank, who will be ready to improve ſuch popular miſtakes, by all ſorts of malicious artifices, it muſt be taken for granted that thoſe errors will be thereby ſtill more confirmed, and the inconveniences that may ariſe from thence no leſs increaſed. This, Sir, I aſſure you, is a melancholy proſpect to your friends; for we know you have ſuch enemies. The deſign of ſo Univerſal a Liberty of Conſcience as your principles have led you to promote, has offended many of thoſe whoſe intereſt is to croſs it: I need not tell you how many and how powerful they are: Nor can I tell you either how far, or by what ways and means, they may endeavour to execute their revenge. But this, however, I muſt needs tell you, that in your preſent circumſtances, there is ſufficient ground for ſo much Jealouſy, at leaſt, as ought to excite you to uſe the precaution of ſome Publick Vindication. This the Tenderneſs of Friendſhip prompts your friends to deſire of you; and this the Juſt Senſe of your Honour, which true Religion does not extinguiſh, requires you to execute.

‘Pardon, I intreat you, Sir, the earneſtneſs of theſe expreſſions; nay, ſuffer me, without offence, to expoſtulate with you yet a little farther. I am fearful leſt theſe Perſonal Conſiderations ſhould not have their due weight with you, and therefore I cannot omit to reflect alſo upon ſome more general conſequences of your Particular Reproach. I have ſaid it already, That the King, his Honour, his Government, and even the Peace and Settlement of this whole Nation, either are, or have been, concerned in this matter: Your Reputation, as you are ſaid to have meddled in publick affairs, has been of publick concernment. The promoting a General Liberty of Conſcience having been your particular province; the aſperſion of Popery and Jeſuitiſm, that has been caſt upon you, has reflected upon HIS MAJESTY, for having made uſe, in that affair, of ſo diſguiſed a perſonage as you are ſuppoſed to have been. It has weakened the force of all your endeavours, obſtructed their effect, and contributed greatly to diſappoint this poor nation of that ineſtimable happineſs, and ſecure eſtabliſhment, which I am perſuaded you deſigned, and which all good and 1688. ‘wiſe men agree, that a juſt and inviolable Liberty of Conſcience would infallibly produce. I heartily wiſh this conſideration had been ſooner laid to heart, and that ſome demonſtrative evidence of your ſincerity in the profeſſion you make, had accompanied all your endeavours for Liberty.

‘But what do I ſay, or what do I wiſh for? I confeſs that I am now ſtruck with aſtoniſhment at that abundant evidence which I know you have conſtantly given, of the Oppoſition of your Principles to thoſe of the Romiſh Church, and at the little regard there has been had to it. If an open profeſſion of the directeſt Oppoſition againſt Popery, that has ever appeared in the world, ſince Popery was firſt diſtinguiſhed from Common Chriſtianity, would ſerve the turn, this cannot be denied to all thoſe of that SOCIETY, with which you are joined in the duties of Religious Worſhip. If to have maintained the Principles of that Society, by frequent and fervent Diſcourſes, by many elaborate Writings, by ſuffering Ignominy, Impriſonment, and other manifold diſadvantages in Defence thereof, can be admitted as any proof of your ſincere adherence thereunto; this, it is evident to the world, you have done already: Nay farther, if to have enquired as far as was poſſible for you, into the Particular Stories that have been framed againſt you, and to have ſought all means of rectifying the miſtakes upon which they were grounded, could in any meaſure avail to the ſettling a true character of you in mens judgments; this alſo I know you have done. For I have ſeen, under the hand of a * reverend Dean of our Engliſh Church, a full Acknowledgment of Satiſfaction received from you, in a ſuſpicion he had entertained upon one of thoſe ſtories, and to which his report had procured too great credit. And though I know you are averſe to the publiſhing of his Letter without his expreſs Leave, and perhaps may not now think fit to aſk it; yet I am ſo thoroughly aſſured of his Sincerity and Candor, that I cannot doubt but he has already vindicated you in that matter, and will (according to his promiſe) be ſtill ready to do it upon all occaſions. Nay I have ſeen alſo your juſtification from another calumny of common fame, about your having kidnapped one who had been formerly a MONK, out of your American Province, to deliver him here into the hands of his Enemies; I ſay, I have ſeen your juſtification from that ſtory under that perſon's own hand: And his Return to Pennſylvania, where he now reſides, may be an irrefragable confutation of it, to any that will take the pains to enquire thereinto.

‘Really it afflicts me very much to conſider that all this does not ſuffice. If I had not that particular reſpect for you which I ſincerely profeſs; yet I could not but be much affected, that any man who had deſervedly acquired ſo fair a reputation as you have formerly had, whoſe Integrity and Veracity had always been reputed ſpotleſs, and whoſe Charity had been continually exerciſed in ſerving others, at the dear expence of his Time, his Strength, and his Eſtate, without any other recompence than what reſults from the conſciouſneſs of doing good; I ſay, I could not but be much affected, to ſee any ſuch perſon fall innocently and undeſervedly under ſuch unjuſt reproaches as you have done. It is an hard caſe; and I think no man, that has any bowels of humanity, can reflect upon it without great relentings.

‘Since therefore it is ſo, and that ſomething remains yet to be done, ſomething more expreſs, and eſpecially more Publick, than has yet been done for your Vindication, I beg of you, dear Sir, by all the tender efficacy that Friendſhip, either mine, or that of your friends and relations together, can have upon you; by the due regard which Humanity, and even Chriſtianity, obliges you to have to your Reputation; by the Duty you owe unto the King; by your Love to the Land of your Nativity; and by the Cauſe of Univerſal Religion and Eternal Truth; let not the ſcandal of Inſincerity, that I have hinted at, lie any longer upon you; but let the ſenſe of all theſe Obligations perſuade you to gratify your Friends and Relations, and to ſerve your King, your Country, and your Religion, by ſuch a publick Vindication of your Honour, as your own Prudence, upon theſe ſuggeſtions, will now ſhew you to be moſt neceſſary, and moſt expedient. I am, with unfeigned and moſt reſpectful affection,

‘Honoured Sir,

‘Your moſt humble, and ‘moſt obedient Servant.’

‘London, October the ‘20th, 1688.

---

* Dr. Tillotſon.

W. PENN's Anſwer to the foregoing Letter.

1688.

‘ WORTHY FRIEND,

‘ IT is now above twenty years, I thank God, that I have not been very ſolicitous what the world thought of me. For ſince I have had the Knowledge of Religion from a PRINCIPLE in MYSELF, the firſt and main point with me has been, to approve myſelf in the ſight of God, through patience and well-doing: So that the world has not had weight enough with me, to ſuffer its good Opinion to raiſe me, or its ill Opinion to deject me. And if THAT had been the only motive or conſideration, and not the Deſire of a good Friend, in the name of many others, I had been as ſilent to thy letter, as I uſe to be to the idle and malicious ſhams of the times: But as the Laws of Friendſhip are ſacred, with thoſe that value that relation, ſo I confeſs this to be a principal one with me, Not to deny a friend the ſatisfaction he deſires, when it may be done without offence to a good conſcience.

‘ The buſineſs chiefly inſiſted upon, is my POPERY, and endeavours to promote it. I do ſay then, and that with all ſincerity; That I am not only no Jeſuit, but no PAPIST. And, which is more, I never had any Temptation upon me to be it, either from Doubts in my own mind about the Way I profeſs, or from the Diſcourſes or Writings of any of that Religion. And, in the Preſence of Almighty God, I do declare, that the King did never once, directly or indirectly, attack me, or tempt me, upon that ſubject, the many years that I have had the advantage of a Free Acceſs to him; ſo unjuſt, as well as ſordidly falſe, are all thoſe ſtories of the town.

‘ The only reaſon, that I can apprehend, they have to repute me a Roman Catholick, is, my frequent going to WHITE-HALL, a place no more forbid to me than to the reſt of the world, who yet, it ſeems, find much fairer Quarter. I have almoſt continually had one buſineſs or other there for our Friends, whom I ever ſerved with a ſteady ſolicitation, through all times, ſince I was of their communion. I had alſo a great many perſonal good offices to do, upon a principle of Charity, for people of all Perſuaſions, thinking it a duty to improve the little intereſt I had for the good of thoſe that needed it, eſpecially the poor. I might add ſomething of my own affairs too; though I muſt own (if I may without vanity) that they have ever had the leaſt ſhare of my thoughts or pains, or elſe they would not have ſtill depended as they yet do.

‘ But becauſe ſome people are ſo unjuſt, as to render Inſtances for my Popery, (or rather Hypocriſy, for ſo it would be in me) it is fit I contradict them as particularly as they accuſe me. I ſay then ſolemnly, That I am ſo far from having been bred at St. OMER's, and having received Orders at ROME, that I never was at either place, nor do I know any body there; nor had I ever a Correſpondency with any body in thoſe places; which is another ſtory invented againſt me. And as for my officiating in the King's Chapel, or any other, it is ſo ridiculous, as well as untrue, that beſides that nobody can do it but a Prieſt, and that I have been married to a woman of ſome condition above ſixteen years, which no Prieſt can be, by any Diſpenſation whatever; I have not ſo much as looked into any Chapel of the Roman Religion, and conſequently not the King's, though a common Curioſity warrants it daily to people of all Perſuaſions.

‘ And once for all, I do ſay, That I am a Proteſtant Diſſenter, and to that degree ſuch, that I challenge the moſt celebrated Proteſtant of the Engliſh Church, or any other, on that head, be he Layman or Clergyman, in publick or in private. For I would have ſuch people know, It is not impoſſible for a True Proteſtant Diſſenter to be dutiful, thankful, and ſerviceable to the KING, though he be of the Roman Catholick Communion. We hold not our property or protection from him by our Perſuaſion; and therefore his Perſuaſion ſhould not be the Meaſure of our Allegiance. I am ſorry to ſee ſo many that ſeem fond of the Reformed Religion, by their Diſaffection to him recommend it ſo ill. Whatever practices of Roman-Catholicks we might reaſonably object againſt, (and no doubt but ſuch there are) yet he has diſclaimed and reprehended thoſe ill things by his declared Opinion againſt PERSECUTION, by the Eaſe in which he actually indulges all Diſſenters; and by the Confirmation he offers in Parliament, for the Security of the Proteſtant Religion and Liberty of Conſcience. And in his Honour, as well as in my own Defence, I am obliged in Conſcience to ſay, that he has ever declared to me, It was his Opinion; and on all occaſions, when Duke, he never refuſed me the repeated proofs of it, as often as I had any poor ſufferers for Conſcience-ſake to ſollicit his help for.

‘ But ſome may be apt to ſay, “ Why not any body elſe as well as I? Why muſt “ I have the preferable Acceſs to other Diſſenters, if not a PAPIST?” I anſwer, I know not that it is ſo. But this I know, That I have made it my Province and Bu-

1688. ‘ ſineſs; I have followed and preſſed it; I took it for my Calling and Station, and have kept it above theſe Sixteen Years; and, which is more (if I may ſay it without vanity or reproach) wholly at my own CHARGES too. To this let me add the Relation my Father had to this King's Service, his particular Favour in getting me releaſed out of the Tower of London in 1669, my Father's humble Requeſt to him, upon his Death-bed, to protect me from the Inconveniencies and Troubles my Perſuaſion might expoſe me to, and his friendly Promiſe to do it, and exact performance of it, from the moment I addreſſed myſelf to him: I ſay, when all this is conſidered, any body, that has the leaſt pretence to Good-nature, Gratitude, or Generoſity, muſt needs know how to interpret my Acceſs to the King. Perhaps ſome will be ready to ſay, “ This is not all, nor is this yet a Fault, but that I have been an Adviſer in other Matters diſguſtful to the Kingdom, and which tend to the Overthrow of the Proteſtant Religion, and the Liberties of the People.” A likely thing indeed, that a Proteſtant Diſſenter, who from Fifteen Years old has been (at times) a Sufferer in his Father's Family, in the Univerſity, and by the Government, for being ſo, ſhould deſign the Deſtruction of the Proteſtant Religion. This is juſt as probable as it is true, that I died a Jeſuit ſix years ago in America. Will men ſtill ſuffer ſuch ſtuff to paſs upon them? Is any thing more Fooliſh, as well as Falſe, than that becauſe I am often at WHITE-HALL, therefore I muſt be the AUTHOR of all that is done there, that does not pleaſe abroad? But ſuppoſing ſome ſuch things to have been done, pray tell me, if I am bound to oppoſe any thing that I am not called to do? I never was a Member of Council, Cabinet, or Committee, where the affairs of the kingdom are tranſacted. I have had no Office, or Truſt, and conſequently, nothing can be ſaid to be done by me; nor, for that reaſon, could I lie under any teſt or obligation to diſcover my opinion of Publick Acts of State; and therefore neither can any ſuch Acts, nor my Silence about them, in juſtice be made my Crime. Volunteers are blanks and cyphers in all Governments. And unleſs calling at White-hall once a day, upon many occaſions, or my not being turned out of nothing (for that no Office is) be the evidence of my Compliance in diſagreeable things, I know not what elſe can, with any truth, be alledged againſt me. However, one thing I know, that I have every-where moſt religiouſly obſerved, and endeavoured in converſation with perſons of all ranks and opinions, to allay heats, and moderate extremities, even in the politicks. It is below me to be more particular; but I am ſure it has been my endeavour, that if we could not all meet upon a Religious Bottom, at leaſt we might upon a Civil One, the Good of England; which is the common intereſt of king and people: That He might be great by Juſtice, and we free by Obedience; diſtinguiſhing rightly on the one hand, between Duty and Slavery; and on the other, between Liberty and Licentiouſneſs.

‘ But, alas, I am not without my apprehenſions of the cauſe of this behaviour towards me, and in this I perceive we agree; I mean my conſtant zeal for an impartial Liberty of Conſcience. But if that be it, the cauſe is too good to be in pain about. I ever underſtood that to be the natural right of all men; and that he that had a Religion without it, his Religion was none of his own. For what is not the Religion of a Man's Choice, is the Religion of him that impoſes it: So that Liberty of Conſcience is the firſt ſtep to have a Religion. This is no new opinion with me. I have writ many apologies within the laſt twenty years to defend it, and that impartially. Yet I have as conſtantly declared, that Bounds ought to be ſet to this Freedom, and that Morality was the BEST; and that as often as that was violated, under a pretence of Conſcience, it was fit the Civil Power ſhould take place. Nor did I ever once think of promoting any ſort of Liberty of Conſcience for any body, which did not preſerve the COMMON PROTESTANCY of the Kingdom, and the ANCIENT RIGHTS of the Government. For, to ſay truth, the one cannot be maintained without the other.

‘ Upon the whole matter, I muſt ſay, I love ENGLAND; I ever did ſo; and that I am not in her debt. I never valued Time, Money, or Kindred, to ſerve her and do her good. No party could ever biaſs me to her Prejudice, nor any Perſonal Intereſt oblige me in her Wrong. For I always abhorred diſcounting private Favours at the publick Coſt.

‘ Would I have made my market of the fears and jealouſies of people, when this King came to the Crown, I had put Twenty Thouſand Pounds into my pocket, and an Hundred Thouſand into my Province; for mighty numbers of people were then upon the wing: But I waved it all; hoped for better times; expected the effects of the king's word for Liberty of Conſcience, and happineſs by it: And till I ſaw my Friends, with the Kingdom, delivered from the legal bondage which Penal Laws for Religion had ſubjected them to, I could with no ſatisfaction think of leaving England; though much to my prejudice beyond ſea, and at my great expence here; having, in all this time, never had either Office or Penſion, and always refuſing the Rewards or Gratuities of thoſe I have been able to oblige.

1688.

'If therefore an Univerſal Charity, if the aſſerting an Impartial Liberty of Conſcience, if doing to others as one would be done by, and an open avowing and ſteady practiſing of theſe things, in all Times, to all Parties, will juſtly lay a man under the reflection of being a Jeſuit, or a Papiſt of any rank, I muſt not only ſubmit to the Character, but embrace it too; and I care not who knows that I can wear it with more pleaſure, than it is poſſible for them with any juſtice to give it me. For theſe are Corner-Stones and Principles with me; and I am ſcandalized at all Buildings that have them not for their Foundations. For Religion itſelf is an empty Name without them, a Whited Wall, a Painted Sepulchre, no LIFE or VIRTUE to the Soul; no Good, or Example, to one's Neighbour. Let us not flatter ourſelves, "We can never be the better for our Religion, if our Neighbour be the worſe for it." Our fault is, we are apt to be mighty hot upon ſpeculative Errors, and break all bounds in our reſentments; but we let practical ones paſs without Remark, if not without Repentance: As if a Miſtake about an Obſcure Propoſition of FAITH were a greater Evil, than the Breach of an Undoubted PRECEPT. Such a Religion the Devils themſelves are not without; for they have both Faith and Knowledge; but their Faith doth not work by Love, nor their Knowledge by Obedience. And if this be their Judgment, can it be our Bleſſing? Let us not then think Religion a litigious thing; nor that Chriſt came only to make us good Diſputants, but that he came alſo to make us good Livers. Sincerity goes farther than Capacity. It is CHARITY that deſervedly excels in the Chriſtian Religion; and happy would it be, if where Unity ends, Charity did begin, inſtead of Envy and Railing, that almoſt ever follow. It appears to me to be the way that God has found out and appointed to moderate our Differences, and make them at leaſt harmleſs to Society; and therefore, I confeſs, I dare not aggravate them to Wrath and Blood. Our Diſagreement lies in our Apprehenſion or Belief of Things; and if the Common Enemy of Mankind had not the governing of our Affections and Paſſions, that Diſagreement would not prove ſuch a Canker, as it is, to Love and Peace, in Civil Societies.

'He that ſuffers his Difference with his neighbour about the other world to carry him beyond the line of Moderation in this, is the worſe for his OPINION, even though it be true. It is too little conſidered by Chriſtians, that men may hold the Truth in Unrighteouſneſs; that they may be Orthodox, and not know what Spirit they are of: So were the Apoſtles of our Lord; they believed in him, yet let a falſe Zeal do violence to their Judgment, and their unwarrantable Heat contradict the Great End of their Saviour's Coming, LOVE.

'Men may be angry for GOD's ſake, and kill people too. CHRIST ſaid it, and too many have practiſed it. But what ſort of Chriſtians muſt they be, I pray, that can hate in his name, who bids us, love; and kill for his ſake, that forbids killing, and commands Love, even to Enemies?

'Let not men or parties think to ſhift it off from themſelves: It is not this Principle, or that Form, to which ſo great a defection is owing, but a Degeneracy of Mind from GOD. Chriſtianity is not at Heart: No Fear of God in the Inward Parts: No Awe of his Divine Omnipreſence. Self prevails, and breaks out, more or leſs, through all Forms, but too plainly, (Pride, Wrath, Luſt, Avarice); ſo that though people ſay to God, "Thy Will be done," they do their own; which ſhews them to be true Heathens, under a maſk of Chriſtianity, that believe without Works, and repent without Forſaking; buſy for Forms, and the temporal Benefits of them, while True Religion, which is "to viſit the Fatherleſs, and the Widow, and to keep ourſelves unſpotted from the World," goes bare-foot, and, like Lazarus, is deſpiſed. Yet this was the definition the Holy Ghoſt gave of Religion, before Synods and Councils had the meddling with it, and modelling of it. In thoſe days, Bowels were a good part of Religion, and that to the Fatherleſs and Widow at large. We can hardly now extend them to thoſe of our own Way. It was ſaid by him that could not ſay amiſs, "Becauſe Iniquity abounds, the Love of many waxeth cold." Whatſoever divides Man's Heart from God, ſeparates it from his Neighbour; and he that loves Self more than God, can never love his Neighbour as himſelf. For, as the apoſtle ſaid, "If we do not love him, whom we have ſeen; how can we love God, whom we have not ſeen?"

'O that we could ſee ſome men as eager to turn people to God, as they are to blow them up, and ſet them one againſt another. But, indeed, thoſe only can have that pure and pious Zeal, who are themſelves turned to God, and have taſted the Sweetneſs of that Converſion, which is to Power, not Form; to Godlineſs, not Gain. Such as thoſe do bend their thoughts and pains to appeaſe, not increaſe, heats and animoſities; to exhort people to look at Home, ſweep their own Houſes and weed their own Gardens. And in no age or time was there more need to ſet men at work in their own Hearts, than this we live in, when ſo buſy, wandering, licentious a ſpirit prevails. For, whatever ſome men may think, "The Diſeaſe of this kingdom is Sin; Impiety againſt God, and Want of Charity to Men." And while this Guilt is at our door, Judgment cannot be far off.

1688.

‘ Now this being the Diſeaſe, I will briefly offer two things for the Cure of it:

‘ The firſt is, David's Clean Heart and Right Spirit, which he aſked, and had of God: Without this, we muſt be a Chaos ſtill. For the diſtemper is WITHIN; and our Lord ſaid, ALL EVIL comes from THENCE. Set the Inward Man right, and the Outward Man cannot be wrong: That is the Helm that governs the human veſſel; And this nothing can do but an Inward Principle, the LIGHT and GRACE that came by Chriſt, which, the Scripture tells us, “ enlightens Every one, and hath appeared to all Men.” It is prepoſterous to think that He, who made the World, ſhould ſhow leaſt Care of the beſt Part of it, our Souls. No, he that gave us an outward Luminary for our BODIES, hath given us an inward one for our Minds to act by. We have it; and it is our Condemnation that we do not love it, and bring our deeds to it. It is by this we ſee our ſins, are made ſenſible of them, ſorry for them, and finally forſake them, And he that thinks to go to Heaven a nearer Way, will, I fear, belate his ſoul, and be irreparably miſtaken. There are but Goats and Sheep at laſt, whatever ſhapes we wear here. Let us not therefore, dear friend, deceive ourſelves. Our ſouls are at ſtake: “ God will not be mocked: What we ſow we muſt expect to reap. There is no Repentance in the Grave;” which ſhows, that if none there, then no-where elſe, To ſum up this Divinity of mine: It is the LIGHT of JESUS in our ſouls, that gives us a true Sight of ourſelves, and that Sight that leads us to Repentance; which Repentance begets Humility, and Humility that true Charity, that covers a Multitude of Faults; which I call GOD's Expedient againſt MAN's Infirmity.

‘ The Second remedy to our preſent Diſtemper, is this: Since all of all parties profeſs to believe in God, Chriſt, the Spirit, and Scripture, that the Soul is immortal, that there are Eternal Rewards and Puniſhments, and that the Virtuous ſhall receive the one, and the Wicked ſuffer the other; I ſay, ſince this is the Common Faith of Chriſtendom, let us all reſolve, in the ſtrength of God, to live up to what we agree in, before we fall out ſo miſerably about the reſt in which we differ. I am perſuaded, the change and comfort which that pious courſe would bring us to, would go very far to diſpoſe our natures to compound eaſily for all the reſt, and we might hope yet to ſee happy days in poor England; for there I would have ſo good a work begun. And how it is poſſible for the Eminent Men of every Religious Perſuaſion (eſpecially the preſent Miniſters of the Pariſhes of England) to think of giving an Account to God at the laſt day, without uſing the utmoſt of their endeavours to MODERATE the Members of their reſpective Communions toward thoſe that DIFFER from them, is a Myſtery to me! But this I know, and muſt lay it at their doors, I charge alſo my own ſoul with it, “ GOD requires Moderation and Humility from us;” for he is at hand, who will not ſpare to judge our Impatience, if we have no Patience for one another. The Eternal God rebuke (I beſeech him) the Wrath of Man, and humble all under the ſenſe of the evil of this day; and yet (unworthy as we are) give us Peace, for his Holy Name's Sake!

‘ It is now time to end this letter, and I will do it without ſaying any more than this: Thou ſeeſt my Defence againſt Popular Calumny; thou ſeeſt what my Thoughts are of our Condition, and the Way to better it; and thou ſeeſt my hearty and humble Prayer to Almighty God, to incline us to be wiſe, if it were but for our own ſakes. I ſhall only add, that I am extremely ſenſible of the Kindneſs and Juſtice intended me by my friends on this occaſion, and that I am, for that and many more reaſons,

‘ Thy obliged and affectionate Friend,

‘ Teddington, October
‘ the 24th 1688.

‘ WILLIAM PENN.’

Prince of Orange's landing.

On the 5th of November this Year, William Prince of Orange landed at Torbay in Devonſhire, to the great joy of the Engliſh Nation: Many of K. James's officers and army ſoon joined the Prince; and the King, perceiving the hearts of the people alienated from him, withdrew himſelf, and went over to France; and by a Convention, called ſhortly after, the ſaid Prince of Orange and the Princeſs Mary his Spouſe, King James's Daughter, were declared King and Queen of England, &c. and were proclaimed on the 13th of the month called February, 1688-9. Upon this turn of the times, our author's late Friendſhip at Court made him ſuſpected of Diſaffection to the preſent Government; ſo that on the 10th of December 1688, walking in White-Hall, he was ſent for by the Lords of the Council then ſitting; and though nothing appeared againſt him, and himſelf aſſured them ‘ That he had done nothing, but what he could anſwer before God, and all the Princes in the World, that he loved his Country and the Proteſtant Religion above his Life, and never acted againſt either; that all he ever aimed at in his publick Endeavours, was no other than what the Prince himſelf had declared for; that King James was always his Friend, and his Father's Friend, and in gratitude he was the King's, and did ever, as much as in him lay, influence him to

W. P. is examined by the Lords of the Council.

‘ his true Intereſt;’ notwithſtanding this, they obliged him to give Sureties for his Appearance the firſt day of the next Term; which he did, and then was continued on the ſame Security to Eaſter Term following; on the laſt day of which, nothing having been laid to his charge, he was cleared in open court.

1689. Is ſet at Liberty.

1690. Is a ſecond time examined, and appeals to King William.

In the year 1690, he was again brought before the Lords of the Council, upon an accuſation of holding Correſpondence with the late King James; and they requiring Sureties for his Appearance, he appealed to King William himſelf, who, after a conference of near two hours, inclined to acquit him; but, to pleaſe ſome of the Council, he was held upon bail for a while, and in Trinity-Term, the ſame year, again diſcharged.

A Proclamation iſſued againſt him and others.

He was yet attacked a third time, and his name inſerted in a Proclamation, dated July the 18th this year, wherein he, with divers Lords and others, to the number of eighteen, were charged with adhering to the Kingdom's Enemies; but proof failing reſpecting him, he was again cleared by order of the King's Bench Court at Weſtminſter, on the laſt day of Michaelmas Term, 1690.

Prevented from going again to Pennſylvania, by a freſh Accuſation.

Being now again at liberty, he purpoſed to go over a ſecond time to Pennſylvania, and publiſhed propoſals in print for another ſettlement there: He had ſo far prepared for his tranſportation, that an order for a convoy was granted him by the Secretary of State, when his voyage was prevented by a freſh accuſation againſt him, backed by the Oath of one William Fuller; a WRETCH afterward by Parliament declared a CHEAT and IMPOSTOR; and a warrant was thereupon granted for his apprehenſion, which he narrowly eſcaped, at his return from G. Fox's burial, on the 16th of the month called January, 1690.

Retires for ſome years.

He had hitherto defended himſelf before the King and Council; but now thought it rather adviſable to retire for a time, than hazard the ſacrificing his Innocence to the Oaths of a Profligate Villain; and accordingly he appeared but little in publick for two or three years. During this receſs, he applied himſelf to writing; and firſt, leſt his own Friends, the Quakers, ſhould entertain any ſiniſter thought of him, he ſent the following Epiſtle to their Yearly-Meeting in London, viz.

The 30th of the Third Month, 1691.

‘ My Beloved, Dear, and Honoured Brethren,

‘ MY unchangeable love ſalutes you; and though I am abſent from you, yet I feel the ſweet and lowly Life of your heavenly Fellowſhip, by which I am with you, and a partaker amongſt you, whom I have loved above my chiefeſt joy: Receive no evil ſurmiſings, neither ſuffer hard thoughts, through the inſinuations of any, to enter your minds againſt me, your afflicted, but not forſaken, Friend and Brother. MY Enemies are YOURS, and, in the Ground, mine for your ſakes; and that God ſeeth in ſecret, and will one day reward openly. My Privacy is not becauſe men have ſworn truly, but falſely againſt me; “For wicked men have laid in wait for me, and falſe witneſſes have laid to my charge things that I knew not,” who have never ſought Myſelf, but the Good of All, through great exerciſes, and have done ſome good, and would have done more, and hurt to no man; but always deſired that Truth and Righteouſneſs, Mercy and Peace, might take place amongſt us. Feel me near you, and lay me near you, my dear and beloved Brethren; and leave me not, neither forſake, but wreſtle with Him that is able to prevail againſt the cruel deſires of ſome, that we may yet meet in the Congregations of his People, as in days paſt, to our mutual comfort. The Everlaſting God of his Choſen in all Generations, be in the midſt of you, and crown your moſt ſolemn aſſemblies with his bleſſed Preſence! that his tender, meek, lowly, and heavenly Love and Life may flow among you, and that he would pleaſe to make it a ſeaſoning and fruitful opportunity to you! that edified and comforted you may return home, to his glorious high praiſe, who is worthy for ever! To whom I commit you, deſiring to be remembered of you before Him, in the neareſt and freſheſt acceſſes, who cannot forget you in the neareſt relation,

‘ Your Faithful Friend and Brother,

‘ W. P.’

1691. Writes prefaces to Barclay's and Burnyeat's Works.

His excellent Preface to Robert Barclay's Works, and another to thoſe of John Burnyeat, both printed this year, were farther fruits of his retirement; as were alſo,

1. A ſmall treatiſe, intituled, “Juſt Meaſures, in an Epiſtle of Peace and Love, to ſuch Profeſſors as are under any Diſſatisfaction about the preſent Order practiſed in the Church of Chriſt.”

1692. Publiſhes his Juſt Meaſures. And his Key.

2. "A Key opening the Way to every Common Underſtanding, how to diſcern the "Difference between the Religion profeſſed by the People called Quakers, and the "Perverſions, Miſrepreſentations, and Calumnies of their Adverſaries, both upon their "Principles and Practices; wherein ſeveral Doctrines of that People are ſet in a clear "Light:" A book ſo generally accepted, that it has been re-printed even to the fifteenth edition.

1693. Reflections and Maxims.

3. "Reflections and Maxims, relating to the Conduct of Human Life:" An uſeful little book, which has alſo paſt many impreſſions.

Having thus improved the times of his retirement to his own comfort, and the common good, it pleaſed God to diſſipate that cloud, and open his way again to a publick ſervice; for in the latter end of the year 1693, through the mediation of his friends, the Lord Ranelagh, Lord Somers, Duke of Buckingham, and Sir John Trenchard, or ſome of them, he was admitted to appear before the King and Council, where he ſo pleaded his innocency, that he was acquitted.

Appears before the King and Council, and is acquitted.

Death of his wife, Gulielma Maria.

In the 12th month, 1693, departed this life his beloved wife, Gulielma Maria, with whom he had lived in all the endearments of that neareſt relation, about twenty-one years. The loſs of her was a very great exerciſe; ſuch, himſelf ſaid, as all his other troubles were nothing in compariſon of. Her character, dying expreſſions, and pious end, were related by himſelf, in an account he publiſhed, which is as follows:

'An Account of the Bleſſed End of my dear Wife GULIELMA 'MARIA PENN.

'The Memory of the Juſt is bleſſed. Prov. x. 7.

'MY dear wife, after eight months illneſs (though ſhe never perfectly recovered 'her weakneſs the year before, which held her about ſix months) departed 'this life the 23d of the 12th month, 1693-4, about half an hour paſt two in the af'ternoon, being the ſixth day of the week, and the fiftieth year of her age, and was ſen'ſible to the very laſt.

'During her illneſs ſhe uttered many living and weighty expreſſions, upon divers oc'caſions, both before and near her end. Some of which I took down, for mine and 'her dear childrens conſolation.

At one of the many meetings held in her Chamber, we and our children and one of 'our ſervants being only preſent, in a tendering and living power ſhe broke out as ſhe 'ſat in her chair, "Let us all prepare, not knowing what hour or watch the Lord "cometh. Oh! I am full of matter! Shall we receive good, and ſhall we not receive "evil things at the hands of the Lord? I have caſt my care upon the Lord; he is "the phyſician of value; my expectation is wholly from him: He can raiſe up, and "he can caſt down." A while after ſhe ſaid, "Oh! what ſhall be done to the unpro"fitable ſervant?" At another meeting, before which much heavineſs ſeemed to lie up'on her natural ſpirits; ſhe ſaid, "This has been a precious opportunity to me; I am "finely relieved and comforted, bleſſed be the Lord." At another time, as I was ſpeaking to her of the Lord's Love and Witneſs of his Spirit that was with her, to give her the peace of well-doing, ſhe returned to me, looking up, "For," ſaid ſhe, "I never did, to my knowledge a wicked thing in all my life."

To a friend, aged 75 years, that came to ſee her, ſhe ſaid, "Thou and I, to all ap"pearance, are near our ends:" And to another, about 65 years old, that came alſo to "ſee her, ſhe ſaid, "How much older has the Lord made me by this weakneſs, than "thou art! But I am contented; I do not murmur; I ſubmit to his holy will."

In the ſtrength of her fits and vapours, ſhe ſaid, "It is the great goodneſs of the "Lord, that I ſhould be able to lie thus ſtill. He is the phyſician of value to me, "can I ſay: Let my tongue ſet forth his praiſe, and my ſpirit magnify him whilſt I "have breath. Oh! I am ready to be tranſported beyond my ſtrength. God was "not in the Thunder, nor in the Lightening, but he was heard in the STILL VOICE."

'She did, at ſeveral times, pray very ſweetly, and in all her weakneſs manifeſted the 'moſt equal, undaunted, and reſigned ſpirit, as well as in all other reſpects. She 'was an excellent perſon, both as child, wife, mother, miſtreſs, friend, and neigh'bour.

She called the children one day when weak, and ſaid, "Be not frighted, chil"dren; I do not call you to take my leave of you, but to ſee you; and I would "have you walk in the Fear of the Lord, and with his People in his holy Truth," 'or to that effect.

'Speaking at another time ſolemnly to the children, ſhe ſaid, "I never deſired any "great things for you, but that you may fear the Lord, and walk in his Truth, "among his People, to the end of your days," &c.

1691.

'She would not ſuffer me to neglect any publick meeting, after I had my liberty, 'upon her account, ſaying often, "O go, my deareſt! Do not hinder any good for "me. I deſire thee go: I have caſt my care upon the Lord: I ſhall ſee thee again."

'About three hours before her end, a relation taking leave of her, ſhe ſaid again, "I have caſt my care upon the Lord: My dear love to all Friends;" and (lifting up 'her dying hands and eyes) prayed the Lord to preſerve them and bleſs them.

'About an hour after, cauſing all to withdraw, we were half an hour together, in 'which we took our laſt leave, ſaying all that was fit upon that ſolemn occaſion. She 'continued ſenſible, and did eat ſomething about an hour before her departure; at 'which time our children, and moſt of the family, were preſent. She quietly expired 'in my arms, her head upon my boſom, with a ſenſible and devout reſignation of her 'ſoul to Almighty God. I hope I may ſay, ſhe was a publick as well as a private loſs; 'for ſhe was not only an excellent Wife and Mother, but an intire and conſtant 'Friend, of a more than common Capacity, and greater Modeſty and Humility; yet 'moſt equal and undaunted in danger. Religious, as well as ingenuous, without af'fectation. An eaſy miſtreſs, and good Neighbour, eſpecially to the POOR. Neither 'laviſh, nor penurious, but an example of induſtry, as well as of other virtues: 'Therefore, our great loſs, though her own Eternal Gain.'

Travels in the miniſtry.

In the 9th, 10th, and 11th months this year, he travelled in the work of the miniſtry, in the counties of Glouceſter, Somerſet, Devon and Dorſet, having meetings almoſt daily, in the moſt conſiderable towns, and other places in thoſe counties, at which the people flocked in abundantly; and his Teſtimony to the TRUTH, anſwering to that of GOD in their Conſciences, was aſſented to by many.

1695.

Replies to an anſwer to his Key.

In the year 1695, a Nameleſs Author writ what he called, "An Anſwer to William "Penn's Key;" and W. P. returned, "A Reply to a Nameleſs Anſwer to William "Penn's Key, in which the Principles of the People called Quakers are farther ex"plained and confirmed:" A paſſage or two in which Reply, being a Defence of his own Conduct, under the ſeveral Changes of Government, we think it but juſtice to tranſcribe.

The ſaid Nameleſs Author charges W. Penn as being the author of a Pamphlet in Defence of the Bill of Excluſion, and tells him, "He was then a Man principled "for the Civil Liberties of his Country:" To which W. P. thus anſwers: 'But if 'I may be ſo bold with the Author, pray, why then principled for Civil Liberties, 'and not afterwards? And why this upon me at all? But why at this Time, and 'upon this Occaſion, to be brought in by head and ſhoulders, as the Proverb is? But 'what if I never writ ſuch a pamphlet, (as to be ſure I did not) what is to be ſaid 'to, and of, ſuch an Author, in ſuch a Caſe, and in ſuch a Time, and to a man un'der my Circumſtances? Let him know, then, that I did not only never write ſuch 'a Pamphlet, but I am ſure that I do not remember that I ever read one of ſuch a 'Title, or heard of it; nor was I of that Principle, and therefore I return the civility 'of his Concluſion to him again; for, I thank God, I was always ſo much for Civil 'Liberties, that I thought no man ought to loſe them for his Religious Principles; 'and farther, that they were never to be ſecured by this or that Man, but by a good 'and equal Conſtitution of Government, as ſome papers by me, which I writ at that 'time, as well as divers perſons yet living, of good reputation, can evidence for me.'

The aforeſaid author alſo charges him with prevaricating in the late Reign, and ſhewing an intemperate Zeal for a boundleſs Liberty of Conſcience, &c. To which he ſays, 'In this he would be charitable, but let him firſt be juſt. If there were no 'Prevarications, then there is no need of an intemperate Zeal for Liberty to ſhadow 'or reconcile them to my former Principles; and I am ſo much a friend to him and 'his brethren, that I wiſh them free from all Intemperance and Prevarications too, 'and that in all reigns: And if it be poſſible, or worth while, to reconcile him bet'ter to my conduct, let him peruſe my "Great Caſe of Liberty of Conſcience," 'printed 1671, and my "Letter to the States of Embden, 1672," and my "Pre"ſent State of England, 1675." and he will find I was the ſame Man then, and 'acted by the ſame Principles: Not more intemperate in the Reign that favoured 'it, than in the reign I contended with that did not favour it: And no man, but a 'Perſecutor, which I count a Beaſt of Prey, and a declared Enemy to Mankind, can, 'without great injuſtice or ingratitude, reproach that part I had in King James's 'Court. For I think I may ſay without Vanity, upon this Provocation, I endea'voured at leaſt to do ſome Good at my own Coſt, and would have been glad to 'have done more: I am very ſure I intended, and I think I did, Harm to none, nei'ther Parties nor private Perſons, my own Family excepted; for which I doubt not this 'author's Pardon, ſince he ſhews himſelf ſo little concerned for the Maſter of it.'

Diſpute at Melkſham.

About the latter end of the ſummer this year, he again went down into the Weſt of England, and was preſent in the 8th month at a diſpute held at Melkſham in 1695. Wiltſhire, between one John Plympton a Baptiſt, and John Clark a Quaker. The Baptiſt had dared the Quakers to a conference on five heads, viz. 1. "The Univerſality of Grace. 2. Baptiſm. 3. The Supper. 4. Perfection. 5. The Reſurrection." John Clark notably anſwered his objections; but Plympton continuing to cavil againſt the plaineſt ſcripture proofs, even when the auditors were ſatisfied, would not be ſilent. The evening approaching, and William Penn finding himſelf under a Concern to bear his teſtimony to the Truth in that aſſembly, terminated the diſpute by an open and free Declaration, which the auditory received with ſingular attention; and he concluded the meeting with Prayer.

A large meeting at Wells broke up by the Mayor's order.

On the 15th of the 9th month a meeting was appointed at Wells, and a large room at an inn, with a balcony next the ſtreet, was taken for that purpoſe, and the Biſhop duly certified of the ſame. The room was quickly filled, and there was alſo a great concourſe of people in the ſtreet; ſo that, for the conveniency of his double auditory, W. P. placed himſelf in the Balcony, and thence preached to the people; but in the midſt of his Declaration came officers from the Mayor with the following Warrant, viz.

'Wells City and 'Burrough. } To the Conſtables, Verderors, and Serjeants at Mace, of the ſaid City.

'WHEREAS William Penn, and ſeveral others called Quakers, are now riotouſly and unlawfully aſſembled and gathered together in this City, and the ſaid William Penn is now preaching or teaching in an Houſe not licenſed according to the late Act of Parliament. Theſe are therefore in his Majeſty's name to require you to take the ſaid William Penn, and him immediately to bring before us to anſwer the Premiſes. Given under our Hands and Seals this 15th day of November, 1695.

'Matthew Baron, Mayor.
'William Salmon.'

The officers, rudely officious, though deſired to tarry till he had done, forced him away inſtantly before the magiſtrates; who upon examination finding the houſe was certified, and that, by diſturbing a lawful for an unlawful aſſembly, they had overſhot themſelves, excuſed the matter as well as they could, and preſently diſmiſſed him.

Preſents a paper on ſwearing to the H. of Commons.

About this time, the People called Quakers ſolliciting the Parliament in the caſe of Oaths, W. P. preſented to the Houſe of Commons, before whom a Bill for their Eaſe was then depending, the following Paper, viz.

'To the Honourable HOUSE of COMMONS.'

'A Few Words crave their Peruſal, upon occaſion of the Bill to excuſe 'the People called Quakers from Swearing.'

'THAT the requeſt of the People called Quakers may be indulged by the members of this honourable houſe, it is humbly propoſed to them to conſider the Nature and Fulneſs of the SECURITY they offer; and if it be found to amount to the Weight and Value of an OATH, it is hoped there will be no difficulty in accepting it in Lieu of an Oath.

'The pledge that every man upon oath gives of his truth, is his SOUL; he means that God ſhould deal with him according to the truth of his affirmative or negative given by him in the name of God. Now that the ſaid People do as much, viz. That they pledge their Souls too, in their Way; that they mean the ſame Caution with them that Swear, and are under the ſame Reverence in their ſimple and ſolemn AY or NO, and therefore give the ſame Security; I ſhall beg this honourable houſe to conſider three things:

'Firſt, That this People make it an article of their faith and practice, and a great part of their characteriſtick, NOT TO SWEAR AT ALL: They think (whether miſtaken or no) that the righteouſneſs of Chriſtianity does not need or uſe an Oath; ſo that you have their Religion, in the higheſt exerciſes of it, in human affairs, for your ſecurity.

'Secondly, That they have often, and at very dear rates, proved to the world they MEAN what they SAY; ſince they have frequently choſen to loſe their eſtates, and lie and die in jail, rather than ſave the one, or deliver the other, by deviating from their principle; and ſince, in ſuch caſes, Integrity is the ſecurity all aim at, it is hard to conceive which way any man can give a greater: Nor are they ſo inſenſible, as not to know that Untruth in them, after this great Indulgence, is a more aggra-

1695.

‘vated crime than Perjury in others: ſince they excuſe themſelves from not Swearing, by a profeſſion of an exacter Simplicity and greater Strictneſs.

‘Laſtly, They humbly hope, that being to ſuffer for Untruth as for Perjury, their requeſt will not be uneaſy; ſince they ſubject their integrity to trial, upon the hazard of a correction, that is ſo much greater than the nature of the offence, in the eye of the law, would bear. Let them then, pray, ſpeak in their OWN way; and if falſe, be puniſhed in YOURS. And ſince this honourable houſe has teſtified an excelling zeal to ſecure the rights and privileges of that great body they repreſent, this inferior member, with all due reſpect claiming a relation to it, requeſts they may not be left expoſed in theirs; but that, by your wiſdom and goodneſs, they may be provided for, in true proportion to the exigencies they are under; which will engage them in the beſt wiſhes for your proſperities.’

‘W. P.’

His ſecond marriage.

On the 5th of the 1ſt month, 1695-6. he conſummated his ſecond marriage at Briſtol, with Hannah the daughter of Thomas Callowhill, and grandaughter of Dennis Holliſter, an eminent man of that city: She was a ſober and religious young woman, with whom he had a comfortable cohabitation during the reſt of his life, and had iſſue by her four ſons and one daughter.

1696.

Death of his eldeſt ſon.

In the 2d month, 1696. his eldeſt ſon by his former wife, named Springett, died of a conſumption, at Worminghurſt in Suſſex, in the 21ſt year of his age, a moſt hopeful and promiſing young man; whoſe character, publiſhed together with that of his mother, in the account before mentioned, is as follows:

‘SORROW and JOY, in the Loſs and End of ‘SPRINGETT PENN.’

‘MY very dear child and eldeſt ſon, Springett Penn, did from his childhood maniſeſt a diſpoſition to Goodneſs, and gave me hope of a more than ordinary Capacity; and time ſatisfied me in both reſpects. For beſides a good ſhare of Learning, and eſpecially of Mathematical Knowledge, he ſhewed a judgment in the uſe and application of it, much above his years. He had the ſeeds of many good qualities riſing in him, that made him beloved, and conſequently lamented; but eſpecially his Humility, Plainneſs, and Truth; with a Tenderneſs and Softneſs of Nature, that, if I may ſay it, were an improvement upon his other good qualities. But though theſe were no ſecurity againſt ſickneſs and death, yet they went a good way to facilitate a due Preparation for them. And indeed the good ground that was in him ſhewed itſelf very plainly ſome time before his illneſs: For more than half a year before it pleaſed the Lord to viſit him with weakneſs, he grew more retired, and much diſengaged from youthful Delights; ſhewing a remarkable Tenderneſs in Meetings, even when they were ſilent: But when he ſaw himſelf doubtful as to his recovery, he turned his mind and meditations more apparently towards the Lord; ſecretly (as alſo when they that attended upon him were in the Room) praying, often with great Fervency, to the Lord, and uttering very many thankful expreſſions and praiſes to him in a very deep and ſenſible manner. One day he ſaid to us, “I am reſigned; what God pleaſeth; he knows what is beſt. I would live, if it pleaſed him, that I might ſerve him: But, O Lord, not my will, but thy will be done.”

‘One ſpeaking to him of the things of this world, and what might pleaſe him when recovered; he anſwered, “My eye looks another way, where the trueſt pleaſure is.” When he told me he had reſted well, and that I ſaid it was a mercy to him, he quickly replied upon me, with a ſerious, yet ſweet look, “ALL is Mercy, dear father, EVERY thing is Mercy.” Another time when I went to meeting, at parting, he ſaid, “Remember me, my dear father, before the Lord: Though I cannot go to meetings, yet I have many good meetings; the Lord comes in upon my ſpirit; I have heavenly meetings with him by myſelf.”

‘And not many days before he died, the Lord appearing by his holy Power upon his ſpirit when alone, at my return, aſking him how he did, he told me, “O I have had a ſweet time, a bleſſed time! Great enjoyments! The Power of the Lord overcame my ſoul: A ſweet time indeed!”

‘And telling him how ſome of the gentry, that had been to viſit him, were gone to their games, and ſports and pleaſures, and how little conſideration the children of men had of God and their latter end; and how much happier he was in this weakneſs to have been otherwiſe educated, and to be preſerved from thoſe temptations to vanity, &c. he anſwered, “It is all ſtuff, my dear father: It is ſad ſtuff. O that I might live to tell them ſo!” Well, my dear child, I replied, let this be the time of thy entering into ſecret covenant with God, that if he raiſe thee, thou wilt dedicate

1696. ‘ thy youth, ſtrength and life, to him, and his people, and ſervice: He returned, “ Father, that is not NOW to do; it is not NOW to do;” with great tenderneſs upon his ſpirit.

‘ Being ever almoſt near him, and doing any thing for him he wanted or deſired, he broke out with much ſenſe and love, “ My dear father! if I live I will make thee amends.” And ſpeaking to him of divine enjoyments, that the eye of man ſaw not, but the ſoul made alive by the Spirit of Chriſt plainly felt; he, in a lively remembrance, cried out, “ O I had a ſweet time yeſterday by myſelf! O the Lord hath preſerved me to this day! O bleſſed be his name; my ſoul praiſes him for his mercy! O father, it is of the goodneſs of the Lord that I am ſo well as I am!” Fixing his eyes upon his ſiſter, he took her by the hand, ſaying, “ Poor TISHE! Look to good things, poor child! there is no comfort without it. One drop of the Love of God is worth more than all the world. I know it; I have taſted it: I have felt as much, or more, of the Love of God in this weakneſs, than in all my life before.”

‘ At another time, as I ſtood by him, he looked up upon me, and ſaid, “ Dear father, ſit by me; I love thy company, and I know thou loveſt mine; and if it be the Lord's will that we muſt part, be not troubled, for that will trouble me.”

‘ Taking ſomething one night in bed, juſt before his going to reſt, he ſat up, and fervently prayed thus: “ O Lord God! thou whoſe Son ſaid to his diſciples, Whatever ye aſk in my Name, ye ſhall receive; I pray thee, in His Name, bleſs this to me this night, and give me reſt, if it be thy bleſſed will, O Lord!” And accordingly he had a very comfortable night, of which he took a thankful notice before us, next day.

‘ And when he, at one time, more than ordinarily, expreſſed a deſire to live, and intreated me to pray for him; he added, “ And, dear father, if the Lord ſhould raiſe me, and enable me to ſerve him and his people, then I might travel with thee ſometimes, and we might eaſe one another;” meaning in the Miniſtry: He ſpoke it with great Modeſty: Upon which I ſaid to him: My dear child, if it pleaſe the Lord to raiſe thee, I am ſatisfied it will be ſo; and if not, then inaſmuch as it is thy fervent deſire in the Lord, he will look upon thee juſt as if thou didſt live to ſerve him, and thy comfort will be the ſame: So either way it will be well. For if thou ſhouldſt not live, I do verily believe thou wilt have the recompence of thy good deſires, without the temptations and troubles that would attend, if long life were granted to thee.

‘ Saying one day thus, “ I am reſolved I will have ſuch a thing done;” he immediately catched himſelf, and fell into this reflection, with much contrition, “ Did I ſay, I WILL? O Lord, forgive me that irreverent and haſty expreſſion! I am a poor weak creature, and live by thee; and therefore I ſhould have ſaid, If it pleaſeth thee that I live, I INTEND to do ſo, or ſo; Lord forgive my raſh Expreſſion!”

‘ Seeing my preſent wife ready to be helpful and do any thing for him, he turned to her and ſaid, “ Do not thou do ſo; let THEM; do not trouble thyſelf ſo much for ſuch a poor creature as I am.” And taking leave of him a few nights before his end, he ſaid to her, “ Pray for me, dear mother; thou art good and innocent; it may be the Lord may hear thy prayers for me; for I deſire my ſtrength again, that I might live and employ it more in the Lord's ſervice.”

‘ Two or three days before his departure, he called his brother to him, and looking awfully upon him ſaid, “ Be a good boy; and know there is a God, a Great and Mighty God, who is a rewarder of the Righteous, and ſo he is of the Wicked; but their rewards are not the ſame. Have a care of idle People, and idle Company; and love good Company, and good Friends, and the Lord will bleſs thee: I have ſeen good things for thee ſince my ſickneſs, if thou doſt but fear the Lord: And if I ſhould not live (though the Lord is all-ſufficient) remember what I ſay to thee, when I am dead and gone: Poor child! The Lord bleſs thee! Come and kiſs me!” Which melted us all into great tenderneſs, but his brother more particularly.

‘ Many good exhortations he gave to ſome of the ſervants, and others that came to ſee him, that were not of our communion, as well as thoſe that were, which drew tears from their eyes.

‘ The day but one before he died, he went to take the air in a coach; but ſaid at his return, “ Really, father, I am exceeding weak, thou canſt not think how weak I am:” My dear child, I replied, thou art weak, but God is ſtrong, who is the Strength of thy Life: “ Ay, THAT is it,” ſaid he, “ which upholdeth me.” And the day before he departed, being alone with him, he deſired me to faſten the door; and looking earneſtly upon me, ſaid, “ Dear father, thou art a Dear father, and I know THY Father: Come, let us Two have a little Meeting, a private ejaculation together, now no body elſe is here. O my ſoul is ſenſible of the Love of God!” And indeed a ſweet time we had, like to precious Ointment for his Burial.

‘ He deſired to go home, if not to live, to die there; and we made preparation for it, being twenty miles from my houſe; and ſo much ſtronger was his ſpirit than his 1696.

'body, that he ſpoke of going next day, which was the morning he departed; and a 'ſymptom it was of his greater journey to his longer home. That morning he left us, 'growing more and more ſenſible of his extreme weakneſs, he aſked me, as doubtful
'of himſelf, "How ſhall I go home?" I told him, in a Coach; he anſwered, "I "am beſt in a Coach." But obſerving his decay, I ſaid, Why, child? Thou art at 'home every where. "Ay," ſaid he, "So I am, in the LORD." I took that opportunity 'to aſk him if I ſhould remember his Love to his Friends at Briſtol, London,
'&c. "Yes, Yes," ſaid he, "my Love in the Lord, my Love to all Friends in "the Lord:" And Relations too? He ſaid, "Ay, to be ſure." Being aſked if he 'would have his aſs's milk, or eat any thing; he anſwered, "No more Outward Food,
"but Heavenly Food is provided for me."

'His time drawing on apace, he ſaid to me, "My dear father, kiſs me: Thou art a
"dear father; I deſire to prize it: How can I make thee amends?"

'He alſo called his ſiſter, and ſaid to her, "Poor child! come and kiſs me;" between 'whom ſeemed a tender and long farewell. I ſent for his brother, that he might kiſs
'him too, which he did: All were in tears about him. Turning his head to me, he 'ſaid ſoftly, "Dear father, haſt no hope for me?" I anſwered, My dear child, I am 'afraid to hope, and I dare not deſpair; but am, and have been, reſigned, though
'one of the hardeſt leſſons I ever learned. He pauſed a while; and with a compoſed
'frame of mind he ſaid, "Come, Life, come Death, I am RESIGNED. O the Love "of God overcomes my Soul!" Feeling himſelf decline apace, and ſeeing him not able 'to bring up the matter that was in his throat, ſomebody fetched the doctor; but ſo
'ſoon as he came in, he ſaid, "Let my Father ſpeak to the Doctor, and I will go to
"ſleep;" which he did, and waked no more; breathing his laſt on my breaſt, the 10th 'day of the 2d month, between the hours of nine and ten in the morning, 1696, in his
'One and Twentieth Year.

'So ended the life of my dear child, and eldeſt ſon; much of my comfort and hope, and 'one of the moſt tender and dutiful, as well as ingenuous and virtuous youths, I knew,
'if I may ſay ſo of my own dear child: In whom I loſt all that any father can loſe
'in a child, ſince he was capable of any thing that became a ſober young man; my 'friend and companion, as well as moſt affectionate and dutiful child.

'May this loſs and end have its due weight and impreſſion upon all his dear relations
'and friends, and thoſe to whoſe hands this account may come, for their Remembrance,
'and Preparation for their Great and Laſt Change; and I have MY End in making my
'dear CHILD's thus far publick.'

'W. PENN.'

This year he publiſhed a treatiſe, intituled, "Primitive Chriſtianity revived, in the "Faith and Practice of the People called Quakers:" A book which rightly repreſented that people's principles, and hath been ſerviceable to the information of many.

G. Keith's ſeparation.

At this time George Keith, having been diſowned by the Quakers for his contentious and diſorderly ſpirit, kept up a meeting, with ſome adherents, at Turner's-Hall, London; where, under the name of Religion, he foſtered Strife and Debate; ſending out peremptory challenges and ſummonſes to the Quakers to diſpute with them; and muſtering up againſt them quotations out of their books, ſuch as himſelf formerly could candidly interpret, and had ſucceſsfully vindicated againſt other oppoſers. To put a check to his confidence, by employing him to beat down the batteries himſelf had raiſed, W. P. ſets before him his own Vindications of the Quakers from thoſe very Lies, when told by others, which himſelf had now licked up afreſh. This book our author intituled, "More Work for George Keith." It has a ſuitable preface, wherein he aptly deſcribes the man, and his ſelf-contradictious methods of procedure.

His confidence checked.

1697.

W. P. preſents to the H. of Lords a Caution about the Bill againſt Blaſphemy.

There being about this time a bill depending in the Houſe of Lords againſt Blaſphemy, he preſented to that Houſe, "A Caution requiſite in the conſideration of that "bill," wherein he adviſes that the word BLASPHEMY be ſo explained, as that no ambiguous interpretation might miniſter occaſion to malicious or envious perſons to proſecute under that name whatſoever they ſhould be pleaſed to call ſo: After which the Houſe thought fit to drop the Bill.

1698.

Departs from Briſtol for Ireland.

In the 2d month 1698, he ſet out, together with John Everott and Thomas Story, from Briſtol, where he then dwelt, for Ireland. Some time after his arrival there, John Plympton, the tenacious Baptiſt diſputant mentioned before, being at Dublin publiſhed a paper, intituled, "A Quaker no Chriſtian," to which W. P. replied under the title of, "The Quaker a Chriſtian;" and the more effectually to wipe away that adverſary's aſperſions, he alſo writ and diſperſed a paper intituled, "Goſpel Truths "held by the People called Quakers," ſubſcribed by himſelf and three others of his friends; and likewiſe reprinted the 8th and 9th chapters of his "Primitive Chriſti-"anity revived;" which gave the people a general ſatisfaction that Plympton's charges were groundleſs.

1696. His ſervices in Ireland.

After this, he travelled to other parts of that nation in the work of the miniſtry to the edification of the churches, of which himſelf gave ſome account, in an "Epiſtle "ſent to the yearly-meeting at London," which is as follows:

‘An EPISTLE to the YEARLY-MEETING at LONDON.

‘Lamb's-Town in Ireland, the 2d of the 4th month, 1698.

‘Dear FRIENDS and BRETHREN,

‘IT is not the leaſt of our exerciſes that we are thus far outwardly ſeparated from you at this time of your Holy and Bleſſed Solemnity: But becauſe we have great reaſon to believe it is in the Will of God, we humbly ſubmit to his ordering Hand, and with open arms of deep and tender love embrace you, our Living and our Loving Brethren, who are given up to ſerve the Lord in your generation, and that have long preferred Jeruſalem, and the peace and proſperity of her Borders, above your chiefeſt joy. The ſalutation of our endeared brotherly love, in CHRIST JESUS, is unto you, deſiring that he may richly appear among you in power, wiſdom and love, to guide your judgments, and influence your ſpirits, in this weighty and anniverſary aſſembly, that ſo nothing may appear, or have place among you, but what ſingly ſeeks the Honour of the Lord, the Exaltation of his Truth, and the Peace and Eſtabliſhment of his Heritage. For this, Brethren, you and we know, has been the aim, end, and practice of thoſe whom the Lord hath made willing to forſake and give up all for his name's-ſake; and through various exerciſes and tribulations, yea, in the way of the Daily Croſs, and through the Fight and Baptiſm of manifold Afflictions, to have their converſation, and ſojourning here below upon the earth, in fear and love, looking for their reward in the heavens that ſhall never paſs away; who have not been lifted up by Good Report, nor caſt down by Evil Report, from their Love to the Lord and his precious TRUTH, but hold on their Way, and whoſe hands, being clean of evil things towards all men, have waxed ſtronger and ſtronger in the Lord. Wherefore, dear Brethren, let us all be found in the ſame ſteps, and walking the ſame way, not being high-minded, but fearing to the end, that we may ſerve up our generation in diligence and faithfulneſs, and ſo enter into the reſt that God has reſerved for his true travellers and labourers in his vineyard.

‘And now, dear Brethren, know that the Lord hath brought us well into this kingdom of Ireland, and given us many large and bleſſed opportunities in ſeveral parts; Meetings being crowded by people of all ranks and perſuaſions, eſpecially at Dublin, who, for aught we have heard, have given the Truth a good report; and indeed the Lord has mightily appeared for his own Name, and owned us with a more than ordinary Preſence, ſuitable to the occaſions, and made very heavy and hard things eaſy to us, becauſe of the Glory of his Power, with which he aſſiſted us in our needful times; for which our ſouls bow before him, and bleſs, reverence, and praiſe, his holy and worthy Name. So that, dear Brethren, we have good tidings to give you of Truth's proſperity at large, and more eſpecially, in the Churches, having had the comfort of the General Meeting of this Nation, conſiſting of many weighty Brethren and Siſters, from all parts thereof, which was held in the City of Dublin, in much love, peace and unity, for ſeveral days; wherein we had occaſion to obſerve their commendable care for the proſperity of the Bleſſed Truth, in all the branches of its holy Teſtimony, both in the general and in the particular, improving the good Order practiſed among the Churches of Chriſt in our nation.

‘Indeed, their Simplicity, Gravity, and Coolneſs, in managing their Church Affairs; their Diligence in Meetings, both for Worſhip and Buſineſs; their Diſpatch in ending Differences, and Expedients to prevent them, but eſpecially their Zeal againſt Covetouſneſs, and Indifferency in Truth's Service, and Exemplary Care, to diſcourage IMMODERATE CONCERN in purſuit of the Things of this Life, and to excite Friends to do GOOD with what they have, very greatly comforted us: And in the ſweet and bleſſed Power of Chriſt Jeſus the Meeting ended, and Friends departed. The Lord grant that you may alſo ſee of the travel of your ſouls, and end of your labour, and ſervice of love, who ſeek not your OWN Things, but the Things of JESUS CHRIST, in this your ſolemn General Meeting.

‘And, dear Brethren, we muſt tell you, here is Room enough for True Labourers in God's Vineyard; and cannot well forbear to recommend the Service of Truth in this Nation to your ſerious conſideration, if haply the Lord may put it into the hearts of any faithful and weighty Brethren to viſit it, in the WORD of ETERNAL LIFE; for we cannot but ſay, The Harveſt appears to us to be GREAT, and the Labourers, in compariſon, but a FEW: So in that LOVE which many Waters cannot quench, 1698.

‘ nor Diſtance wear out of our remembrances, and in which we deſire to be remembered of you to the Lord of our Houſhold, we dearly and tenderly ſalute and embrace you, and remain

‘ Your Loving and Faithful Brethren,

William Penn,
John Everott,
Thomas Story.

‘ P. S. Friends here have been zealous and liberal in printing and re-printing, and freely diſtributing great quantities, and to very good purpoſe, of ſeveral books and papers writ in Defence of Truth, and for Information of the Simple and Miſ-informed, which we hope will alſo fall under your Conſideration.’

A ſhort time after, being at Cork, he viſited the Biſhop, and occaſionally preſented him with one of the forementioned papers, called “ Goſpel Truths,” which he then ſeemed to receive favourably, but afterward unexpectedly publiſhed ſome exceptions againſt it in print; to which W. P. after his coming back to England, the ſame year returned an anſwer, being, “ A Defence of a Paper, intituled Gospel Truths, “ againſt the Exceptions of the Biſhop of Cork's Teſtimony.”

1699.

Diſpute at Weſt Dereham in Norfolk.

In the year 1699, was a Diſpute at Weſt-Dereham in Norfolk, between ſome Clergymen and the Quakers; in which the former, having miſſed their aim, the Vain-Glory of a Conqueſt, grew angry: And in hopes of whetting the Magiſtrates Sword to cut aſunder thoſe knots themſelves wanted Skill to untie, preſented to the King and Parliament a book called, “ A Brief Diſcovery,” &c. wherein they painted the Quakers as black as their own Robes: Upon which our author publiſhed the following ſhort obſervations, viz.

His obſervations on the Norfolk Clergymens book.

‘ It does not ſurprize us to be evilly intreated, and eſpecially by thoſe that have an Intereſt in doing it. But if Conſcience prevailed more than Contention, and Charity over-ruled Prejudice, we might hope for fairer quarter from our adverſaries.

‘ But ſuch is our Unhappineſs, that nothing leſs will ſatisfy them than breaking in upon the INDULGENCE that we enjoy; if they could perſuade the government to ſecond their attempts to a NEW PERSECUTION. In order to which, we perceive they have been hard at work to pervert our Books, violate our Senſe, abuſe our Practice, and ridicule our Perſons; knowing very well with whom they have to do, and that the Patience of our Profeſſion is their Security in ABUSING of it.

‘ However, if it has weight enough with our Superiors to expect a freſh defence of our principles and practices, we ſhall, with God's aſſiſtance, be ready, for their ſatisfaction, once more to juſtify both, againſt the inſults of our reſtleſs adverſaries; who otherwiſe, we take leave to ſay, would not deſerve our Notice, ſince we have already repeatedly anſwered their Objections in Print, and think it our Duty, as well as Wiſdom, to uſe the Liberty the Government has favoured us with, in as peaceable and inoffenſive a manner as may be.’

Takes ſhipping for Pennſylvania.

In the ſixth month this year, himſelf with his wife and family took ſhipping for his province of Pennſylvania; and on the third of the ſeventh month following, from on board the ſhip lying in Cowes Road near the Iſle of Wight, he took his farewell of his Friends, in an Epiſtle directed “ To the People of God called Quakers, wherever ſcattered or gathered, in England, Ireland, Scotland, Holland, Germany, or in any other parts of Europe” which is as follows:

‘ An EPISTLE of Farewell, to the People of GOD called ‘ Quakers, wherever ſcattered or gathered, in England, Ireland, Scotland, ‘ Holland, Germany, or in any other Parts of EUROPE.

‘ MY dearly beloved, and highly eſteemed in Chriſt, our heavenly Head; the Living and Good Shepherd of the Sheep, by whom we have been found out (One of a Family, and Two of a Tribe) and made One Holy Flock and Family unto Him, in this Day of his ſpiritual and glorious Appearance: Grace, Mercy and Peace, yea, HIS Peace, which the World can neither give you, nor take from you, be plentifully multiplied amongſt you from day to day; that an holy, harmleſs, and faithful people you may be, yielding to the Lord the fruits of his goodneſs, by a circumſpect and ſelf-denying converſation to the end.

‘ And now, my dear Friends, whom I know and love, and you alſo whom I truly love, though I do not know perſonally, nor may be ſo known of ſome of you, ſince 1699. ‘ it has pleaſed the good and all-wiſe God to order my courſe from you, ſo that I cannot viſit you, as I have often deſired before I left you, this, therefore, is to be my Brotherly Farewell unto you. And ſurely my ſoul is bowed in humble petitions to Iſrael's God, the True, and Living, and Powerful God, that it may be WELL with you all, here and for ever. And, my dear Brethren, this is certain, if you DO well, you ſhall certainly FARE well; and in the end of all your trials, troubles and temptations, it ſhall be ſaid unto you, “ WELL DONE, good and faithful ſervants, enter ye into the Joy of the Lord.” O it is that which crowns the work: Not Saying, but Doing: We muſt not only Begin, but End Well; and hold out to the End: Not be of thoſe who are weary of Well-doing, but who follow the Lord fully, as Caleb and Joſhua did in old time, and are famed for it. So that though God has appeared to us, and given us many and undeniable teſtimonies that it was HE, and not another, who reached our Hearts, and touched our Conſciences, and brought us to Confeſſion, yea, and forſaking too, of that which offended him, in great meaſure, bleſſed be his name; yet we are not to ſtop, or take up our reſt here: We muſt watch ſtill, pray ſtill, fight ſtill, that good fight of Faith, till we have overcome the Enemy of our ſouls: And even then muſt we watch and pray, and that to the end of our days; that we may not loſe that Crown of Glory, which God, the Righteous Judge, ſhall give to all thoſe that love his Appearance, and overcome, and perſevere to the End: For, be aſſured, we ſhall reap if we faint not: But we ſhall faint, if we WAIT NOT upon GOD, who alone is the Strength of his People.

‘ This, my dear Friends, is that which lies with greateſt ſtreſs upon my ſpirit; WATCH to your DAILY PRESERVATION, and be not ſatisfied unleſs you feel it. “ Sufficient is the Day for the Evil thereof,” ſaid our bleſſed Lord. God is not wanting: He that long ſtood at the door of our hearts, under our impenitency in times paſt, “ till his Locks were wet with the Dew, and his Hair with the Drops of the Night,” till we were wakened out of our carnal ſecurity, and came to judgment in ourſelves, unto unfeigned repentance; to be ſure he is not weary of waiting to be gracious now to his poor people; eſpecially if they are poor in ſpirit, and hungering and thirſting after righteouſneſs; and are not filled, overlaid and choaked with the cares and incumbrances of this world. No, he was ever good unto Iſrael, yea, unto all that are of an upright and clean heart: Wherefore, Brethren, let your eye be to the Lord, and wait often upon him; walk with him, and dwell with him, and he will walk and dwell with you: And then no weapon formed againſt you, be it in Particular, or in General, ſhall proſper; that is, not FINALLY. It may perhaps try you, and bruiſe your Heel, as it did your Lord and Maſter's; but it ſhall never finally prevail againſt you, if you keep the eye of your minds to him, and have faith in him, who ſaved Daniel in the lion's den, and Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abednego in the fiery furnace, and has upheld us to this day under various afflictions.

‘ And though Balaams there are, that may be hired by the Balaks of our age, to curſe our Iſrael-Family of God, of which ſome of us have been very ſenſible, yet this we know, The Son of God is among us, who commands the Fire and the Water, and the Winds, as well now as then: And there is no Inchantment againſt Jacob, or Divination againſt Iſrael, that can proſper. And who knows, but even ſome of theſe preſent Balaams may yet live to ſay, before they die, as others of them have done ſince we were a People, “ How Goodly are thy Tents, O Jacob! How Pleaſant is thy Dwelling-place, O Iſrael!” But then, Friends, we muſt KEEP our Tents, we muſt be a Retired and a Peculiar People, and dwell ALONE. We muſt keep above the World, and clear of the Spirit of it, and thoſe many trifles, cares and troubles that abound in it, with which but too many have viſibly wounded and pierced their own ſouls.

‘ Beware of this, in the Name of the Lord, and do not tempt GOD: It is in CHRIST ye have Peace; in the WORLD is the Trouble: Keep, therefore, in Him who has called himſelf (and we have found him ſo) the WAY, TRUTH, and LIFE; and you ſhall live, becauſe HE lives: He the Root, you the Branches; by whom you will be kept green and fruitful, bringing forth the fruits and graces of the Holy Spirit, in all your converſe and commerce, that it may be ſeen and ſaid, “ God is with you, and amongſt you.” O! Let Humility, Charity, Meekneſs, and Self-denial, ſhine amongſt you; ſo will you come to ſit, as did the Primitive Chriſtians, in Heavenly Places in Chriſt Jeſus, and be preſerved through the noiſe, ſnares, and hurry of this preſent evil world.

‘ Much I could ſay, for my heart is open, and full too of divine love and matter to you; but time fails me: Therefore FEEL me, my dear Friends, in that Love of God which is over ſea and land; where Diſtance cannot ſeparate, or Time decay, nor many Waters quench. In which Love I embrace and ſalute you all, with the kiſs of our heavenly fellowſhip, which the Lord hath given us in the Bleſſed TRUTH. And my ſtrong deſires are to him, that we may maintain our Bleſſed Relation by the ſame Means by which we came at firſt into it, viz. The true Fear and Love of God; which did not only make us careful not to offend him, but alſo to be willing to forſake all things that came in competition with him, or our duty to him.

1699.

'Oh! let this chaſte Fear and firſt Love abound amongſt you, my beloved, in Chriſt, our bleſſed Light and Life; or you will decay, wither, and die to God, and your good beginnings; which God Almighty forbid.'

'I know there is a ſerious and diligent people amongſt you, who do not only know when Good comes from the Hand of the Lord, but wait upon him for it, and that daily; that their ſouls may be ſtrengthened in the way and work of the Lord: And theſe can no more live without his Preſence, his myſtical and hidden MANNA, in their ſpiritual journey to the Eternal Canaan of God, than outward Iſrael was able to live without Manna in the Wilderneſs, in their journey to their Temporal Canaan. And I beſeech my God and my Father, and your God and your Father, my dear Brethren, to attend all theſe holy waiters upon him with the good things of his Houſe, and daily make them glad in his holy Houſe of Prayer.

'But the condition of ſome, who pretend to follow Chriſt, yet are afar off, affects my ſpirit; for they know little of theſe enjoyments, and hardly eat ſo much as the Crumbs which fall from CHRIST's Table, and ſeem to ſatisfy themſelves with a mere Convincement of the Truth, or, at beſt, with a bare Confeſſion to it. Who taking up with a formal going to Meetings, and hearing what others have to ſay of the work and goodneſs of God in and to them, they ſhun the Daily Croſs of Chriſt, whereby they ſhould die daily to their earthly Wills and vain Affections, and overcome the World, the Fleſh, and the Devil. Oh! Theſe are ſtill their OWN, and not the LORD's; and gird themſelves, and go Whither, and do What, they liſt! For which cauſe they are lean, barren, and unfruitful to God, and to their own Souls; and worſhip him in the Form only, and not the Power of Godlineſs; ſuch muſt needs be weak in Faith, ready to ſlip and ſtart aſide at every windy Doctrine, or ſenſual Temptation.

'Oh! my dear Friends, let me prevail with you, in this my Farewell to you, to turn your minds INWARD, and wait to feel your Redeemer, and meet him in the way of his righteous judgments; for there is no Redemption but through Judgment, nor Converſion, but through Righteouſneſs. Come and be baptized by Chriſt; he will baptize you with his Fire and Holy Ghoſt. He will ſcower and rinſe you; for, believe me, his Fan is ſtill in his HAND, and he will, if you will let him, thoroughly purge his Floor, viz. your HEARTS, and make all things clean and new there, by his Spirit and Power. So will you come to find your Intereſt in Chriſt, as you feel his Workmanſhip and Intereſt in and over YOU: And as you thus come to be related to Chriſt, the Heavenly Head, (by knowing him to be Head IN you) ſo will you come to be related to his Body, the Church, and ſee your proper Memberſhip and Service therein; which I pray God effect, to his glory, and your comfort.

'And now to the whole Family and Flock of God, in this European Part of the World, of the ſame Communion, according to the diſpenſation of God; be they High or Low, Young or Old, Rich or Poor, Wiſe or Simple, Strong or Weak, Male or Female, Bond or Free; I ſend this Parting Salutation of my moſt dear Love in the TRUTH; beſeeching you all to have me and mine in your remembrance, not only when upon the Mighty Waters, but when in the Solitary Deſerts of America, if it pleaſe the Lord to bring us ſafe thither: For I am not above the Love and Prayers of my dear Brethren, knowing I need them, and have often found, by good experience, That they avail much with the Lord.

'I muſt leave you, but I can never FORGET you; for my Love to you has been, even as David's and Jonathan's, above the Love of Women: And ſuffer me to ſay, That, to my power, I have from the firſt endeavoured to ſerve you (and my poor country too) and that at MY OWN Charges, with an upright mind, however miſunderſtood and treated by ſome, whom I heartily forgive. Accept you my ſervices; and ever love and remember, my dear Friends and Brethren,

'Your Old, True, and Affectionate

'Friend, Brother, and Servant in Chriſt Jeſus,

'WILLIAM PENN.

'Cowes, Iſle of Wight, weighing Anchor,
'the 3d of the 7th Month, 1699.'

On the 9th of the ſame month they ſet ſail, and were near three months out at ſea; Providence, by the tediouſneſs of their voyage, protracting the time of their arrival, until the danger of a contagious Diſtemper, then reigning in that country, was over. Upon their coming thither, they were received with the univerſal joy of the inhabitants.

Arrives there in ſafety.

1700.

His paternal Adminiſtration of Government.

A Bill in the H. of Lords for diſſolving Proprietary Governments.

Being now determined to ſettle in his province, he applied himſelf to the offices of government, always preferring the good of the country and its inhabitants to his own private intereſt; rather remitting, than rigorouſly exacting his lawful revenues: So that under the influence of his paternal adminiſtration, the province was in an eaſy and flouriſhing condition: When ſome perſons here in England, taking advantage of his abſence, were endeavouring to undermine both his and other Proprietary Governments, under the ſpecious pretence of advancing the Prerogative of the Crown; and a Bill for that purpoſe was brought into the Houſe of Lords. His friends, the proprietors and adventurers here, preſently repreſented the hardſhip of their caſe to the Parliament, ſolliciting time for his return to anſwer for himſelf; and accordingly giving him a ſpeedy account how matters ſtood, they preſſed his coming over forthwith; with which he ſeeing it neceſſary to comply, ſummoned an Aſſembly to meet at Philadelphia, to whom, on the 15th of September 1701, he made the following Speech, viz.

'FRIENDS,

His Speech to the Aſſembly at Philadelphia.

'YOU cannot be more concerned than I am at the frequency of your ſervice in Aſſembly, ſince I am very ſenſible of the Trouble and Charge it contracts upon the Country: But the motives being conſidered, and that you muſt have met of courſe in the next month, I hope you will not think it an hardſhip now.

'The reaſon that haſtens your ſeſſions, is the neceſſity I am under, through the endeavours of the enemies of the proſperity of this country, to go for England; where, taking advantage of my abſence, ſome have attempted, by falſe or unreaſonable charges, to undermine our Government, and thereby the true value of our Labours and Property. Government having been our firſt encouragement, I confeſs I cannot think of ſuch a voyage without great reluctancy of mind, having promiſed myſelf the quietneſs of a Wilderneſs, and that I might ſtay ſo long at leaſt with you, as to render every body entirely eaſy and ſafe. For my Heart is among you, as well as my Body, whatever ſome people may pleaſe to think; and no unkindneſs or diſappointment ſhall (with ſubmiſſion to God's Providence) ever be able to alter my love to the country, and reſolution to return and ſettle my family and poſterity in it: But having reaſon to believe I can at this time beſt ſerve you and myſelf on that ſide of the water, neither the Rudeneſs of the Seaſon, nor Tender Circumſtances of my Family, can over-rule my Inclinations to undertake it.

'Think, therefore, (ſince all men are mortal) of ſome ſuitable expedient and proviſion for your Safety, as well in your Privileges as Property, and you will find me ready to comply with whatſoever may render us happy by a nearer Union of our Intereſts.

'Review again your laws; propoſe new ones that may better your circumſtances; and what you do, do it quickly, remembering that the Parliament ſits the end of the next month, and that the ſooner I am there, the ſafer I hope we ſhall be here.

'I muſt recommend to your ſerious thoughts and care, the King's Letter to me for the Aſſiſtance of New-York with three hundred and fifty pounds ſterling, as a Frontier Government; and therefore expoſed to a much greater expence in proportion to other Colonies; which I called the laſt Aſſembly to take into their conſideration, and they were pleaſed, for the reaſons then given, to refer to this.

'I am alſo to tell you the good news of the governor of New-York his happy iſſue of his conferences with the Five Nations of Indians, that he hath not only made peace with them, for the King's Subjects of that Colony; but (as I had by ſome letters before deſired him) for thoſe of all other Governments under the Crown of England on the Continent of America, as alſo the Nations of Indians within thoſe reſpective Colonies: Which certainly merits our acknowledgements.

'I have done, when I have told you, That Unanimity and Diſpatch are the Life of Buſineſs, and that I deſire and expect from you for your own ſakes, ſince it may ſo much contribute to the diſappointment of thoſe that too long have ſought the ruin of our young country.'

The Aſſembly's ADDRESS.

'May it pleaſe the PROPRIETARY and GOVERNOR!

'WE have this day in our Aſſembly read thy Speech, delivered yeſterday in Council; and having duly conſidered the ſame, cannot but be under a deep ſenſe of ſorrow for thy purpoſe of ſo ſpeedily leaving us, and at the ſame time taking notice of thy Paternal Regard to us and our Poſterity, the Freeholders of this Province, and Territories annexed, in thy loving and kind expreſſions of being ready to comply with whatſoever Expedient and Proviſions we ſhall offer for our Safety, as well in Privileges as Property, and what elſe may render us happy in a nearer 1701.

‘ Union of our Intereſts; not doubting the performance of what thou haſt been ſo ‘ lovingly pleaſed to promiſe, we do in much humility, and as a token of our grati‘ tude, return unto thee the unfeigned thanks of this Houſe.

‘ Subſcribed by Order of the Houſe,

‘ JOSEPH GROWDON, Speaker.’

Returns to England.

The next month he took ſhipping for England, and ſafely arrived at Portſmouth about the middle of December; and the ſame month came up to London: After his return, the Bill which, through his friends ſollicitations, had been poſtponed the laſt Seſſions of Parliament, was wholly dropped, and no farther progreſs made in that affair.

K. William's death, and Q. Anne's acceſſion to the throne.

About two months after this, viz. on the eighth of the month called March 1701-2. K. William died; and the Princeſs Anne of Denmark aſcended the throne, who began her reign with Moderation and Clemency, and declared for maintaining the Act of Toleration. Our author, being in the Queen's favour, was often at Court, and for his conveniency took lodgings at Kenſington; where he wrote, “More Fruits of Solitude, “being a ſecond part of Reflections and Maxims relating to the Conduct of Human “Life.” After which he removed to Knightſbridge, over-againſt Hyde-Park corner, where he reſided for ſome years.

1702.

Occaſional Conformity Bill.

About this time, a Bill to prevent Occaſional Conformity was brought into the Houſe of Commons; on which occaſion he wrote a ſheet intituled, “Conſiderations “upon the Bill againſt Occaſional Conformity.”

1703.

W. P. publiſhes Prefaces to ſeveral books.

1704.

In the year 1703, he wrote a Preface to a Book publiſhed by Dan. Philips, M. D. intituled, “Vindiciæ Veritatis, being a Defence of the Quakers Principles, from the “Miſrepreſentations of John Stillingfleet, a Clergyman in Lincolnſhire:” And in the ſame year he publiſhed a Preface to a Collection of Charles Marſhall's Writings, intituled, “Zion's Travellers comforted:” And in the next year, a Preface to the Written Labours of John Whitehead; all which the reader may find in the front of the books they were deſigned for.

1705.

Anno 1705, he wrote a ſhort Epiſtle, by way of Exhortation, to his Friends the Quakers, being as follows, viz.

‘ MY DEAR FRIENDS!

An Epiſtle to his Friends called Quakers.

‘ HOLD all your Meetings in that which ſat them up, the Heavenly POWER of ‘ GOD, both Miniſters and Hearers; and live under it, and not above it, and the ‘ Lord will give you Dominion over that which ſeeks to draw you again into Captivity
‘ to the Spirit of this World, under divers appearances: That the Truth may ſhine
‘ through you, in Righteouſneſs and Holineſs, in Self-denial, Long-Suffering, Pati‘ ence, and Brotherly Kindneſs; ſo ſhall you approve yourſelves the Redeemed of the ‘ Lord, and his living Witneſſes in and to an Evil Generation. So prays your Friend
‘ and Brother through the many tribulations that lead to the reſt and kingdom of God.’

‘ W. PENN.

Viſits again the Weſtern parts of England.

In this year he again viſited the meetings of his friends in the Weſtern Parts of England; where he had good ſervice, and his teſtimony was effectual to the information of many.

1706.

Settles at Brentford.

In the year 1706, he removed with his family to a convenient habitation, about a mile from Brentford, and eight from London, where he dwelt ſome years; and frequently attended the meeting at Brentford; which his friends, as well for the accommodation of his family, as the general ſervice of their perſuaſion, then firſt appointed to be held there once a month.

1707.

Is unhappily involved in a ſuit at law.

1708.

In the year 1707, he was unhappily involved in a Suit at Law with the Executors of a perſon who had been formerly his Steward; againſt whoſe Demands he thought both Conſcience and Juſtice required his endeavours to defend himſelf. But his Cauſe, (though many thought him aggrieved) was attended with ſuch circumſtances, as that the Court of Chancery did not think it proper to relieve him; wherefore he was obliged to dwell in the Old Baily, within the Rules of the Fleet, ſome part both of this and the next enſuing year, until ſuch time as the matter in diſpute was accommodated.

1709.

His laſt travels in the work of the miniſtry.

Now although the infirmities of old age began to viſit him, and to leſſen his abilities of continuing his ſervice in the work of the miniſtry with his wonted alacrity; yet he travelled, as his ſtrength and health would admit, into the Weſt of England, as alſo the counties of Berks, Buckingham, Surry and other places.

1710.

Removes to Ruſhcomb.

In the year 1710, the air near London not being agreeable to his declining conſtitution, he took a handſome ſeat at Ruſhcomb near Twyford in Buckinghamſhire, where he had his reſidence during the remainder of his life.

1711. Writes a preface to John Banks's Journal.

In the year 1711, the Works of an ancient Friend of his, John Banks, being ready for the preſs, he dictated to a perſon, that wrote it from his mouth (as he walked to and fro with his cane in his hand, and gave occaſional anſwers to other matters intervening) the following Preface, which being the laſt piece he publiſhed, and obſervable for its conciſe and pithy expreſſions, we here inſert;

The PREFACE to JOHN BANKS's JOURNAL.

‘ FRIENDLY READER,

‘ THE Labours of the Servants of God ought always to be precious in the eyes of his People, and for that reaſon, the very Fragments of their Services are not to be loſt, but gathered up for Edification; and that is the cauſe we expoſe the following Diſcourſes to publick View: And I hope it will pleaſe God to make them effectual, to ſuch as ſeriouſly peruſe them; ſince we have always found the Lord ready to ſecond the Services of his Worthies upon the Spirits of the Readers, not ſuffering that which is his OWN to go without a Voucher in every Conſcience, I mean thoſe Divine Truths it has pleaſed him to reveal among his children by his own bleſſed SPIRIT, without which no man can rightly perceive the Things of God, or be truly ſpiritually-minded, which is Life and Peace. And this, indeed, is the only BENEFICIAL Evidence of heavenly Truths; which made that excellent Apoſtle ſay in his day, “ We know that we are of God, and that the whole World lieth in Wickedneſs:” “ For in that day, True Religion and undefiled before God and the Father, conſiſted in viſiting the Fatherleſs and Widows in their Afflictions, and keeping unſpotted from the World;” not only a GODLY TRADITION of what others have enjoyed, but the EXPERIMENTAL ENJOYMENT and Knowledge thereof, by the Operation of the DIVINE POWER in their own hearts, which makes up the Inward Jew, and Accompliſhed Chriſtian, whoſe praiſe is not of Men but of God: Such are Chriſtians of CHRIST's making, that can ſay with the apoſtle, “ It is not WE that live, but CHRIST that liveth in us,” dying daily to Self, and riſing up, through Faith in the Son of God, to Newneſs of Life. Here Formality bows to REALITY, Memory to FEELING, Letter to SPIRIT, and Form to POWER; which brings to the Regeneration, without which no man can inherit the Kingdom of God; and by which he is enabled, in every eſtate, to cry, Abba Father.

‘ Thou wilt ſee a great deal of this in the following author's Writings; and that he rightly began with a juſt diſtinction between True Wiſdom and the Fame of Wiſdom; what was of God, and taught of God, and of Man, and taught by Man; which, at beſt, is a Sandy Foundation for Religion to be built upon; or rather, the Faith and Hope of Man in reference to Religion, and Salvation by it. And, oh! that none, who make profeſſion of the diſpenſation of the Spirit, may build beſide the Work of JESUS CHRIST in their own ſouls, in reference to his Prophetical, Prieſtly, and Kingly Office! In which regard, God, his Father, gave him as a tried Stone, Elect and Precious, to build by and upon: Concerning which great and glorious Truth, we do moſt humbly beſeech the Almighty, who is God of the ſpirits of all fleſh, the Father of light and ſpirits, to ground and eſtabliſh all his viſited and convinced ones, that they may grow up an holy Houſe and Building to the Lord: ſo ſhall purity, peace and charity abound in the houſe and ſanctuary that He hath pitched, and not Man.

‘ Now as to this worthy man, the author of the following treatiſes, I hope I may without offence ſay, his memorial is bleſſed, having known him above forty-four years, an heavenly Miniſter of Experimental Religion, of a ſound judgment and pious practice, valiant for the truth upon the earth, and ready to ſerve all in the love and peace of the Goſpel. He was amongſt the firſt in Cumberland that received the glad tidings of it, and then readily gave up, with other brethren, to declare to others what the Lord had done for their ſouls.

‘ Thus I firſt met him, and as I received his teſtimony through the ſavour of Life, ſo I was kindly accepted and encouraged by him in the belief of the bleſſed teſtimony of the Light, Spirit, Grace and Truth of Chriſt in the inward parts, reproving, inſtructing, reforming and redeeming thoſe ſouls from the Evil of the World that were obedient thereunto: Here he was a ſtrength to my ſoul, in the early days of my convincement; together with his dear and faithful friend, brother, and fellow traveller, John Wilkinſon of Cumberland, formerly a very zealous and able Independent Miniſter.

‘ And as I hope this piece of labour of our ancient friend and brother will find acceptance every-where among God's people; ſo I hope it will be more eſpecially acceptable in the North, where he began and had his early ſervices; and in the Weſt, where they were witneſſes of his care to preſerve good order in the Church.

1711.

‘ Now, Reader, before I take my leave of thee, let me adviſe thee to hold thy Religion in the SPIRIT, whether thou prayeſt, praiſeſt, or miniſtereſt to others; go forth in the ability God giveth thee; preſume not to awaken thy Beloved before his Time; be not thy OWN in thy performances, but the LORD's; and thou ſhalt not hold the Truth in Unrighteouſneſs, as too many do, but according to the Oracle of God, that will never leave nor forſake them who will take counſel at it: Which that all God's People may do, is, and hath long been, the earneſt deſire and ſervent ſupplication of

‘ Theirs and thy faithful Friend in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt,

‘ London 23d of the 12th
‘ month 1711.

‘ W. PENN.’

1712. Is taken with apoplectick fits.

In the year 1712, he was ſeized at diſtant times with three ſeveral fits, ſuppoſed to be apoplectick; by the laſt of which, though beyond all probability or expectation he ſurvived it, his Underſtanding and Memory were ſo impaired, as to render him incapable of publick action for the future: Neverthleſs we ſhall continue our annals to the cloſe of his days, from the accounts an intimate friend hath left of his condition at the viſits he yearly made him.

1713. His memory becomes weak.

In the third month 1713, the aforeſaid friend being at his houſe ſome days, found him to appearance pretty well in health, and cheerful of diſpoſition, but defective in Memory; ſo that though he could relate many paſt tranſactions, yet could he not readily recollect the names of abſent perſons; nor could he deliver his words ſo readily as heretofore; yet many ſenſible and ſavoury expreſſions came from him, rendering his company even yet acceptable, and manifeſting the religious ſettlement and ſtability of his mind.

1714. His health much as laſt year.

At a ſecond viſit made him in the ſpring, 1714, he was very little altered from what he had been the laſt year. The friend accompanied him in his chariot to Reading Meeting, where he ſpoke ſeveral ſenſible ſentences; but was not able to ſay much. At parting he took leave of his Friends with much tenderneſs and affection.

1715. His memory yet more deficient.

In the year 1715 his Memory became yet more deficient; but his love to, and his ſenſe of, religious enjoyments, apparently continued; for he ſtill often went in his chariot to the Meeting at Reading, and there ſometimes uttered ſhort, but very ſound and ſavoury expreſſions. One morning, while the friend was at his houſe, being about to go to the meeting, he expreſſed his deſires to the Lord, that they might receive ſome Good from him. This year he went to the Bath, but the waters there proved of no benefit to his long-continued diſtemper.

1716. Is very weak, and knows not his friends by name.

In the year 1716, the ſaid friend and another went to viſit him, at whoſe coming he ſeemed glad; and though he could not then remember their Names, yet, by his anſwers, it appeared he knew their Perſons. He was now much weaker than laſt year, but ſtill expreſſed himſelf ſenſibly at times, and particularly took his leave of them at their going away in theſe words, “ My Love is with you: The Lord preſerve you, “ and remember me in the Everlaſting Covenant!”

1717. His ſtrength of body much decayed.

In the 5th month 1717, being the laſt viſit the ſaid friend made him, he found his Underſtanding ſo much weakened, as that he ſcarce knew his old Acquaintance, and his bodily Strength ſo much decayed, that he could not well walk without leading; nor ſcarce expreſs himſelf intelligibly.

1718. His death and burial.

After a continued and gradual declenſion for about ſix years, his Body drew near to its diſſolution; and on the thirtieth day of the fifth month, 1718, in the ſeventy-fourth year of his age, his Soul, prepared for a more Glorious Habitation, forſook the decayed Tabernacle, which was committed to the earth on the fifth of the ſixth month following, at Jordans in Buckinghamſhire, where his former wife, and ſeveral of his family, had been before interred.

The concluſion.

As he had led in this life a courſe of patient Continuance in Well-doing, and, through Faith in our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, had been enabled to overcome the World, the Fleſh and the Devil, the grand enemies of man's ſalvation; he is, we doubt not, admitted to that everlaſting Inheritance, which God hath prepared for his people, and made partaker of the promiſe of Chriſt, Rev. iii. 21. “ To him that overcometh will “ I grant to ſit with me in my Throne, even as I alſo overcame, and am ſet down with “ my Father in his Throne.”

7 AP 59

TRUTH EXALTED:

IN

A SHORT but SURE TESTIMONY

AGAINST

All thoſe Religions, Faiths, and Worſhips, that have been formed and followed in the Darkneſs of Apoſtaſy:

AND

For that GLORIOUS LIGHT which is now riſen, and ſhines forth, in the Life and Doctrine of the deſpiſed QUAKERS, as the alone good old Way of Life and Salvation.

PRESENTED

To Princes, Prieſts, and People, that they may repent, believe and obey,

By WILLIAM PENN,

Whom Divine LOVE conſtrains in an holy Contempt, to trample on Ægypt's Glory, not fearing the King's Wrath, having beheld the Majeſty of HIM who is inviſible.

BRITISH MUSEUM

TRUTH EXALTED, &c.

To PRINCES, PRIESTS, and PEOPLE.

1668. Life, p. 5.

JEHOVAH, the everlaſting power, that ſpans out the heavens with his ſpan, and meaſures the waters in the hollow of his hand, before whom all nations, tongues and people, are leſs than the drop to the ocean, or the ſand to the ſea-ſhore; who ſaid, ‘let all things be,’ and they were, and by the ſame word of his might, preſerves them to this very day, is holy, merciful, and juſt; and, as the moſt excellent part of the whole creation, made he man, ‘the image of himſelf,’ by inveſting him with that righteous principle, and innocent life, which gave him dominion and authority over all his works, allowing him to eat of every tree, ſaving that of the knowledge of good and evil, of which if he did eat, he ſhould certainly die.

Happy had it been for Adam and his poſterity, had he obeyed God's commands; but tranſgreſſion by diſobedience getting entrance, he ſoon died to his innocent ſtate, in which God created him, and became alive in the dominion ſin had over him, being now as one without law, in whoſe fallen ſtate all nations have been, and are, (let their profeſſions ſeem never ſo great, and their ſacrifices never ſo many) that live in the diſobedient nature, and ſo ſtrangers to that immortality and life eternal, the firſt Adam became dead and darkened to by his tranſgreſſion, and which the ſecond Adam raiſes to the knowledge and poſſeſſion of, by the power of his quickening ſpirit; yet where the devil (that ſubtil ſerpent) hath not totally extinguiſhed the notion of a God, and the neceſſity of his being worſhipped, it has been rather his intereſt than diſſervice, to put the ſelfiſh part of the creature upon ſacrificing, wickedly inſinuating that none can be freed from ſin, and that the performing of rites, duties, and ceremonies, is all God requires, and what is neceſſary to procure acceptance with him. Thus 'twas that murdering Cain became a ſacrificer, whoſe ſacrifice God rejected, becauſe offered in the fallen, unrighteous, and accurſed nature.

Such alſo were thoſe generations who drew near to God with their lips, and to whom he ſaid of old, ‘to what purpoſe is the multitude of your ſacrifices unto me? I am full of burnt-offerings, bring no more vain oblations; incenſe is an abomination unto me; the new moons and ſabbaths; the calling of the aſſemblies I cannot away with, it is iniquity; even the ſolemn meeting: I am weary to bear them; and when you ſpread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes; yea, when you make many prayers, I will not hear, your hands are full of blood: Waſh you, make you clean, put away the evil of your doings, &c.’ Iſa. i. 11, 13, 14, 15, 16.

Therefore, O ye princes, prieſts, and people, the ſolid, neceſſary, and weighty queſtion I have to aſk you all, in the dread and fear of the everlaſting, holy, Lord God almighty, (by whoſe eternal Spirit the ſenſe of your preſent ſtate and condition I perfectly have received) is this: what nature, what heart, what ſpirit, and what ground is it in which your religions, faiths, works, words and worſhips ſtand and grow? is it the divine, not the fallen nature? is it the broken, not the ſtony heart? is it the contrite, not the formal ſpirit? is it the goſpel increaſing good, not old Adam's corrupt, thorny ground? for this know, that no performances but by clean hands, and a pure heart, from whence evil doings are put away, can give acceptance with the pure God.

Come, anſwer me firſt, you papiſts, whoſe popes for many hundred years have ſat exalted in the hearts of nations, (God's temple) above all that is called God: what ſcripture ever made a pope, or gave authority to any one to lord it over the conſciences of others, ſince Chriſt enjoins that chriſtians ſhould be brethren? and by what warrantable tradition can he make, diſpoſe, and depoſe civil empires? whence came your creeds, but from factious and corrupted councils, dyed in the blood of thoſe who refuſed conformity? what ſcriptures of the holy prophets, and apoſtles, or any tradition for the firſt three hundred years, mention a maſs-book, ſpeak of Peter's chair, and a ſucceſſive infallibility, or ſay a wafer is corporally the fleſh, blood and bones, which ſuffered without Jeruſalem? And where did they teach to adore images, conſume many thouſands and millions in building, carving, and painting outward temples, after Jeruſalem (the type) was deſtroyed, whilſt thouſands of poor families languiſhed through extreme poverty? when did they enjoin baby-baptiſm, churching of women, marrying by prieſts, holy water to frighten the devil, hallowing of bells to ſcare evil ſpirits, making and worſhipping of croſſes, erecting of altars? and where did they command bowings, inſtitute muſicks, appoint holy days, canonize ſaints, chaffer and merchandize about indulgences, pray for the dead, preach, or write for a purgatory? and what book, or chapter, in the old or new teſtament, mentions the degrees of popes, cardinals, archbiſhops, deans, prebends, Jeſuits, Franciſcans, Dominicans, Urſulines, Capuchines, Benedictines, with other ſuch like lazy nuns and fryars, for the edification of Chriſt's church? but above all, when and where did they authorize, or indulge your cruel, perſecuting, whipping, racking, inquiſition, murdering ſpirit? whoſe popes, faith, church-government, and whole religion, were founded, and are maintained by inhumane blood-ſhed, as your own hiſtories plainly manifeſt. Who gave life to theſe things but the devil, 'who was a murderer from the beginning'?

Mat. xv. 9. Thus have you papiſts, through many generations, 'received for doctrine the precepts of men,' who for much ſpeaking, and ſacrificing of your own inventions, expect to be heard, whilſt in the luſtful, wanton, ignorant, and killing nature, which has been always ſhedding the precious blood of thoſe whom God in every age raiſed to teſtify againſt your ſuperſtitions and will-worſhips: Therefore woes from God almighty Rev. xvii. 3, 4, 6. Chap. xviii. 6, 8. to that Romiſh whore, who has corrupted the nations, 'and ſits upon a ſcarlet-coloured beaſt full of names of blaſphemy, drunk with the blood of ſaints, and martyrs of Jeſus; the hour of her deſolation is nigh, and in the cup which ſhe hath filled, ſhall it be filled unto her double; for ſtrong is the Lord God of hoſts who judgeth her.'

Come now, you that are called Proteſtants, however denominated or diſtinguiſhed, who profeſs the ſcriptures for the rule of life and doctrine, ſtand your trial by them; and firſt thoſe who are called Epiſcopalians, who date your religion from the martyrs: that thoſe who firſt proteſted againſt the darkneſs and groſs idolatry of the popiſh antichriſt, were directed thereto, and ſupported therein, by the mighty power of God, is not denied; and that the ſeals of blood they ſet to recommend their teſtimonies to poſterity, are with us in high eſteem, I openly affirm and declare: but that you of the church of England (who now perſecute us) have any more to do with them than had the Acts vii. 52. Jews and phariſees, who crucified the Lord of life, with Abraham, Moſes, and the prophets, is as poſitively diſowned: for as they were out of the life and ſpirit of thoſe holy men, (though building and garniſhing their ſepulchres, and making great profeſſion with their words) inſomuch as that they ſlew thoſe whom God ſent in the ſame ſpirit, to preach a farther glory, and to diſcover a more excellent way; ſo are you out of the power and ſpirit your fore-fathers lived and died in, profeſſing their words, but perſecuting the ſame ſpirit in others, and crucifying it in yourſelves: no wonder therefore you have made ſo little progreſs ſince the firſt dawning of reformation, being not yet got out of the borders of Babylon's form, and altogether in her luſtful, proud, perſecuting, and wicked nature: for have not you, proteſtant princes, condemned that in others, which you have and do allow in yourſelves, contrary to your forefathers proteſtations? did you not return ſevere perſecutions, not only upon the heads of the Roman-catholics in queen Elizabeth's time, who eſteemed it antichriſtian in them; but even your fellow-proteſtants, who through zeal for God, declared againſt your backſlidings? witneſs her ſeverity, and what followed in the reigns of James, and the deceaſed Charles, but more particularly the many thouſands now of late that have been clubbed, bruiſed, impriſoned, exiled, poiſoned to death by ſtinking dungeons, and ruined in their outward eſtates, contrary to law, chriſtian or humane: therefore well may I Iſa. xxix. 21. take up the lamentation and reproof that was of old, 'ye make offenders for a word, Amos iii. 10. Jer. xxiii. 17. and lay a ſnare for him that reproveth in the gate: ye turn aſide the juſt for a thing of nought, and lay burthens upon the backs of the righteous, whilſt evil-doers paſs Ezek. xiii. 19, 20. unpuniſhed; you ſtore up violence in your palaces, and many are the oppreſſed that Iſa. lvi. 10, 11. are amongſt you? yet do not your prieſts propheſy ſmooth things, that ſew pillows under your arms, and cry peace? who provoke you to ſlay thoſe, by executing cruel acts, that ſhould not die, and preach ſafety to them that ſhould not live, like greedy dogs, ſhepherds that cannot underſtand, they all look for gain from their quarters; Mic. iii. 5, 6, 11. they teach for hire; they divine for money, and you all judge for rewards;' for all which abominations God is departed;' 'viſion is ceaſed, the ſun is gone down over you, and your day is turned into thick darkneſs:' therefore it is you deny the neceſſity as well as the preſent enjoyment of revelation to any, though without it, as Chriſt John xvii. 3. ſaith, 'no man can know God, whom to know is life eternal;' and place the ground of divine knowledge in human arts and ſciences, that thereby you may ingroſs a function to yourſelves, and keep up your trade of yearly gain upon the poor people; preaching ſin for term of life, thereby rendering invalid the glorious power of the ſecond Adam, and indulging people in tranſgreſſion; though 'he that committeth ſin is of the 1 John iii. 8. Heb. xii. 14. Jer. xxiii. 32. devil, and without holineſs none ſhall ſee God;' miniſters he never ſent, but were commiſſionated by men, void of the Holy Ghoſt, and therefore ye profit not the people; a badge inſeparable to lying prophets, who run in their own name.

Come and tell me now, ye of the church of England, that ſay the ſcriptures are your rule, where do they own ſuch perſecutors, falſe-prophets, tythe-mongers, deniers of revelations, oppoſers of perfection, men-pleaſers, time-ſervers, unprofitable teachers (witneſs the abominations of the land) extollers of humane learning, as the only way to know God; admirers of univerſities, (ſignal places for idleneſs, looſeneſs prophaneneſs, prodigality, and groſs ignorance;) and where do we find the prophets, apoſtles, and ſervants of the Lord, to live in wordly pomp, poſſeſs hundreds and thouſands a year, be called lords of their brethren, and exerciſe civil and ſpiritual juriſdiction over the bodies and ſouls of chriſtians in their days? Whence came your forms of prayers, and church-government, from the ſcriptures of truth, and the practice of the primitive chriſtians, or the maſs-book, and popiſh canons? Where is it that maſs-houſes are called churches? and what precedent do you find for litanies, reſponſes, ſinging, choiriſters, organs, altars, bowing, ſurplices, ſquare caps, hoods, rochets, fonts, baby-baptiſm, holy days, (as you call them) with much more ſuch like dirty traſh, and foul ſuperſtition? Are theſe your ſcripture doctrines, and this the ſpiritual worſhip of the holy Jeſus, his apoſtles, and the ancient chriſtians? Stand up and anſwer me, ye members of the church of England; but are they not the off-ſpring of that idolatrous popiſh generation, amounting at beſt to will-worſhip, which is abominable to the God of heaven, who is now breaking forth in vengeance, to thunder down and conſume all the fair buildings, and pleaſant pictures of Babyloniſh inventions? Therefore from you may I expect an anſwer to the queſtion I aſked the Romaniſts, in what nature and ſpirit is it, O princes, prieſts, and people, you hold and profeſs religion, and worſhip towards God? Is it the divine and heavenly one, which is pure and perfect? Are you baptized by the Holy Ghoſt, and with fire; crucified through the daily croſs to the Acts xix. 2. 3, 4, 5.

world; born again, and your affections ſet on things above? But alas, poor ſouls! are Col. iii. 2.
you not at 'have mercy upon us miſerable ſinners, there is no health in us,' from ſeven to ſeventy? and as in truth it is to the ſhame of religion, and deſtruction of humane ſociety; how do you abound in evil? equalizing, if not outſtripping papiſts and heathens (againſt whom you proteſt in words) in all kinds of impiety: therefore, 'wo unto you proteſtants, that are mighty to drink ſtrong drink, that give your neigh- Iſa. v. 11, 12.
bours drink, and put the bottle to them that they may be drunk; that put far away Amos vi. 3, 4, 5, 6.
the evil day, and cauſe the ſeat of violence to come near; that lie upon beds of ivory, and ſtretch yourſelves upon your couches; that eat the fat of the flock, and drink the ſweet of the vine; that anoint yourſelves with the chief ointments; that chant to the ſound of the viol, and invent to yourſelves inſtruments of muſick, but conſider not the afflictions of Joſeph.' How ſport you away your precious time, as if ye were born not to die, at leaſt never to be judged? O what ſwearing, what uncleanneſs, what drunkenneſs, what prophanation, what vanity, what pride, what expence, what patching, what painting, what laſcivious intrigues, what wanton appointments, what publick unclean houſes, what merry maſks, what luſtful inſinuating treats at your plays, parks, mulberry and ſpring-gardens, with whatſoever elſe may pleaſe the luſtful eye, and gratify the wanton mind! Is not this your caſe and practice, ye gallants, young and old, men and women? and by theſe courſes, have not debts ſurprized your eſtates, poverty plenty, diſeaſes health, debauchery chaſtity? Whole families ruined both in ſoul and body; yea, ſuch a deluge of intemperance has ſo overwhelmed the nations, that hard it is to light upon ſobriety and virtue.

Well, my friends, when I ruminate on theſe things, my heart affects mine eye, and grief overcomes my ſoul for your ſakes: repent therefore, O ye proteſtants, or elſe know, 'that for all theſe things God almighty will bring you to judgment;' and in Mat. vii. 21.
the day that his indignation ſhall be kindled, your religion of words ſhall fly away, and your Lord, Lord, cryings ſhall be rejected, becauſe you were ſtrangers to the ſpiritual nature (tho' babblers of the name) of true chriſtianity, and therefore ſhall ye periſh by the ſword.

Now as for you ſeparatiſts of divers names, although I ſhall not diſallow the zeal that once you had, yet muſt I on God's behalf bear my teſtimony concerning you; therefore be it known unto all, 'that you are teaching and receiving for doctrine the traditions of Iſa. l. 11.
men,' running and ſtriving in your own ſpirits, 'compaſſing yourſelves with the ſparks of your own fire,' being not yet come to ſtand ſtill and know that Will done on earth which is done in heaven: you tell people, Chriſt Jeſus has ſuffered and ſatisfied for ſins paſt, preſent, and to come; and that though they are never ſo corrupt, vile, and polluted in themſelves, yet are they reconciled to, and juſtified in the ſight of God, by his perſonal righteouſneſs imputed unto them, and not from a work of grace or regeneration in the creature; therefore no wonder at your vehement cries againſt a ſtate of perfect ſeparation from ſin, as being a dangerous doctrine, who preach acceptance with the holy God, whilſt in an unholy ſtate: you generally ſcoff at revelation as being ceaſed; moſt of you alſo abetting God to have ordained a remnant abſolutely to ſalvation, and conſequently making ſin as well as torment unavoidably neceſſary to the major part; whereby the glorious God of mercy is repreſented more infamouſly unjuſt than the worſt of men; doctrines of devils indeed, and grounds of all looſeneſs and ranteriſm; and the pleaders, and fighters for liberty of conſcience when oppreſſed, are the greateſt oppreſſors when in power, not minding the end of God's loving kindneſs: becauſe of 1668. your wanton neglect is your day darkened, and your ſun ſet, and grovelling you are in beggarly elements, imitations, and ſhadows of the heavenly good things, relating to the diſpenſation of the ſecond covenant, hoping by your many duties to be heard, and find acceptance, whilſt very ſtrangers to the covering of God's ſpirit, and ignorant of him (whom to know is life eternal) from the revelation of his eternal ſpirit, and operation of his mighty power, but from the conceivings and apprehenſions of other men, and books well reputed, whereby God's grace and light have loſt their office of leading and teaching; and thus true counſel becomes darkened, the fountain ſhut, the book ſealed, and you in this ſtate ſtrangers unto God, ſo that you periſh for want of ſound knowledge; for I declare and teſtify on the behalf of God's everlaſting way to life, and againſt you all, that you are yet in the man's ſpirit, which works not God's will and righteouſneſs, being found helpers of the mighty againſt that pure and unchangeable principle of light, grace and life, in which God only did, does, and will reveal and manifeſt himſelf unto the ſons and daughters of men, for which cauſe you are yet in your ups and downs, toſſed Gen. xii. 3. Gal. iii. 8. to and fro, not knowing the 'rock of ages, and foundation of many generations, which is that only holy ſeed, wherein the duties and performances of all nations only can be bleſſed,' and from whence proceeds that pure, righteous, and immortal birth, to whom is the promiſe of an everlaſting inheritance, but are ſticking in your own imaginations, and patching out a peace unto yourſelves from your duties, performances, and the imitations of weak times and ſeaſons in ſome periſhing obſervations, that no way relate to the Rom. xiv. 19. Mat. xi. 23, xxiv. nature of the 'pure ſpiritual and internal kingdom of peace, righteouſneſs and joy in the Holy Ghoſt:' therefore well may I ſay, as was ſaid of old, 'wo unto thee Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven; for if the mighty works that have been done in thee, had been done in Tyre, Sidon, or Sodom, they would have repented in duſt and aſhes, and would have remained unto this day.'

Wherefore, O ye zealous profeſſors, who in the ſpirit of a man are ſtriving to com- John i. 9. prehend the myſtery of God, unleſs ye repent and believe in 'that light, wherewith Chriſt hath enlightened every man,' that you may attain to the true diſcerning of the ſpirit and nature, in which you live and worſhip, that ſo you may come to witneſs the Rev. iii. 9. work and will of God, 'it ſhall be more tolerable for them, in the day that God ſhall judge the ſecrets of men, by Jeſus Chriſt; God will make them of the ſynagogue of Satan, who ſay they are chriſtians, and are not.'

Therefore unto you, princes, prieſts, and people, whether papiſts or proteſtants, or any other ſeparated way, that are in your idolatry, ſuperſtition, carnal ordinances, and will-worſhip; whoſe faith in, and fear towards God, are grounded on other mens apprehenſions, perſwaſions and precepts, and not from the teaching of God's Holy Spirit or grace; to you all am I conſtrained to ſound forth and proclaim, that unto us, the moſt deſpiſed, afflicted and forſaken, by all the families of the earth is a child born, Iſa. ix 6. 7. Cap. xlix. 6. 'unto us a ſon is given, we call him wonderful, counſeller, the mighty God, the everlaſting father, the prince of peace; of the increaſe of whoſe government, there ſhall be no end: this is he the prophet ſtiles, a light unto the gentiles, and for ſalvation unto John i. 7, 8, 9. c. 8. 12. the ends of the earth; unto whom John Baptiſt bore this certain record, that he was the true light which enlighteneth every man that cometh into the world; who alſo 1 John i. 7. 1 Cor. xv. 47. gave this teſtimony of himſelf, that whoſoever followed him ſhould not abide in darkneſs, but have the light of life, and the blood of Jeſus, (ſaith the beloved diſciple) cleanſeth us from all ſin.'

John vi. 51, 52, 53. Iſa. xlii. 6. Jer. xxxi. 32, 33, 34. John xiv. 6. 1 Cor. i. 20. Ezek. xxxiv. 29. Gen. iii. 15. Tit. ii. 11, 12. 'This is the ſecond Adam, the quickning ſpirit, the Lord from heaven, the new and ſpiritual man, the heavenly bread, the true vine; the fleſh and blood that was given for the life of the world; the ſecond covenant; the law written in the heart and ſpirit, put in the inward parts; the way in which the fool cannot err; the truth, before deceit was, the life that's hid in God, eternal in the heavens, glorified before the world began; the power, the wiſdom, the righteouſneſs of God; the plant of renown; the royal ſeed that bruiſeth the ſerpent's head; in ſhort, that grace which hath appeared unto all men, teaching them to deny all ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, and to live godlikely and ſoberly in this preſent world.' He ſtands at the door of every heart, and knocks, if by any means he may be heard and have admittance, whereby God's promiſe may be fulfilled, that God will dwell with men; and my teſtimony is, that a remnant have obeyed this heavenly voice, and now walk in this pure light, in which Rev. xxi. 3. God almighty is known to tabernacle with them: therefore, in the fear of God eternal, do I cry aloud unto you all, who are wandering in the by-paths of mens inventions, traditions and precepts, to empty your hearts and minds of thoſe unprofitable gueſts, that better entertainment than a manger may be had to receive this Lord of Deut. xviii. 18. 19. 20. Jer. xvii. 10. John iv. 29. glory; the mighty prophet, all muſt hear or die, 'who ſearcheth the heart, trieth the reins, and is able to tell you all that ever you did:'-----this is the Quakers Chriſt, and ſon of the living God, whom we are not aſhamed to confeſs before men, as that glorious light, which ſince we have believed and walked in, according to our diſtinct meaſures, we have not only received a perfect diſcovery of all the will-worſhips, pollutions, and vain faſhions, or cuſtoms that have been brought forth by, and ſtand in the dark, luſtful, ful, and apoſtatized nature; but as we have continued in an holy watchfulneſs, to obſerve and obey its righteous dictates; God's mighty power we have, and do experience to ſubdue and redeem therefrom; yea, that ſpiritual blood is ſenſibly felt, to 'ſprinkle Heb. ix. 14. 'and cleanſe the conſcience from dead works.' x. 22.

1668.

And to you all muſt I declare, that by no other way did I ever receive the knowledge of the leaſt evil, or ability to conquer it, than in this univerſal light, who is given for a captain and a leader out of all the by-paths and petty perſwaſions of men, through judgment that purifies, and the red ſea of troubles, trials, and afflictions, unto the reſt which is pure and undefiled: 'this is God's beloved ſon, hear ye him;' for I proclaim, another way there is not to eternal life and peace, than this everlaſting goſpel which now is preached; for the time is come that the angel of his preſence is flying through the midſt of heaven, having this ancient goſpel to preach to them that dwell upon the earth, and are in their earthly nature, wiſdom, and worſhip, 'crying with a loud voice, fear Rev. xiv. 6. 'God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come:' therefore away, 7. away with all your own ways, works and worſhips, that are grounded upon mens command, and fallible apprehenſions, whoſe breath is in their noſtrils; and no more do homage according to ſuch preſcriptions, but fear and dread the living Lord God of heaven and earth: 'for if the righteous ſcarcely be ſaved, where ſhall the ungodly and ſinner 1 Pet. iv. 18. 'appear? but wo, anguiſh, tribulation and ſorrow ſhall come upon every ſoul that 'remains in ſin.'

Therefore be warned, ye dark and idolatrous papiſts, ye ſuperſtitious and looſe proteſtants, ye zealous, yet carnal profeſſors, to come out of all your own ways, works, worſhips, nature, ſpirit and practice: in ſilence and fear to wait in this glorious light which God almighty has diſplayed, and raiſed us contemned Quakers to walk in, and teſtify of, in theſe laſt ages; that by believing therein, and circumſpectly adhering thereto, you may come to experience the riſing of that eternal power which overcomes and removes tranſgreſſion, that hath ſo long ſeparated between you and your God; hereby ſhall you receive ſound judgment and heavenly wiſdom.

This will not deſtroy, but fulfil the ſcriptures of truth, and ſo ſhall you know the baptiſm that is from above, and eat the heavenly bread, and drink the ſpiritual wine at Chriſt's table, in his kingdom, which the ſaints of old ſaw the coming of before they taſted of death; 'for the kingdom of God is within:---here all old things, covenant, Luke xvii. 20, ſigns, ordinances, and whatever periſheth with the uſing,' ſhall be done away; and the 21. everlaſting unchangeable ſubſtance witneſſed; and no more ſhall you profeſs religion, or perform worſhip from the imagining and tranſgreſſing nature, but from a certain ſenſe of God's own operation; ſo ſhall your faith ſtand in that power the gates of hell can never prevail againſt: for this I once more am neceſſitated to declare, by virtue of the ſound knowledge given me of God, that whilſt you are fulfilling the luſts of the fleſh, and walking after your own will and imaginations, you are altogether ſtrangers to the yoak, to the daily croſs, and ſelf-denying life, but are yet the corrupt ground, and evil tree, which bringeth forth evil fruits, thorns, briars, and ſour grapes: 'be ye Job iv. 8. 'undeceived, God will not be mocked; ſuch as you ſow, ſuch ſhall you reap:'---- Gal. vi. 7. 8.

Wherefore I intreat, adviſe, and warn you all, before the day of your viſitation be ſhut up, in the eternal withdrawings of God's love, and revelation of his dreadful, endleſs vengeance, O ye idolatrous, ſuperſtitious, carnal, proud, wanton, unclean, mocking and perſecuting princes, prieſts and people, to repent; return, return, believe and obey this light, which manifeſts and reproves all your evil deeds, that in it you may know your redemption from the captivity of ſin effectually wrought.

O tremble and quake with the prophet Habakkuk, you who ſcoff at Quakers, 'that 'you may all reſt in the day of trouble.' Hab. iii. 16.

But if you ſhall ſtill go on to rebel againſt the reproofs and inſtructions of this holy light, and deſpiſe and perſecute the children of it; be it known to you all, that before the brightneſs of its glory ſhall your ſhadows vaniſh, your imitations fly away, your beggarly elements melt, and you ſhall die in your ſins.

Nor ſhall we be ſolicitous what your intentions are concerning us, well knowing him in whom we have believed, 'to be much greater in us than he that is in the world,' 2 Tim. i. 12. who in love hath called us out of it, and we doubt not will by his everlaſting arm of 1 John iv. 4. ſtrength defend and preſerve us over all oppoſition, and by us exalt his name, truth, and ſalvation unto the ends of the earth.

Therefore let the winds of imagination blow, the ſtorms of perſecution beat, and the ſea of raging malice foam: yea, 'though the fig-tree ſhall not bloſſom, neither fruit Hab. iii. 17. 'be in the vine; though the labour of the olive fail, and the fields yield not their meat; 18. 'though the flock be cut off from the fold, and there be no herd in the ſtalls;' though nations ſhould combine againſt us, and multitudes aſſemble themſelves to our overthrow;---yet, be it reported to the nations, and let it be told unto the people, that we ſhall ſtill confide and rejoyce in that everlaſting holy God almighty, Lord of hoſts, and king of ſaints, who hath gathered us and therefore is by us; over all things in heaven, and things on earth, bleſſed and renowned for ever.

A

1668.
Life p. 40.

A cautionary Postscript to the people of England.

Friends,

WHILST you have a day, prize it, and whilſt you have the light, believe in it; for this is the word of the Lord God, that made heaven and earth, to you all; the time is at hand, that he that is unrighteous, muſt be unrighteous ſtill. Be not deceived, put not the day far from you; neither cry, the Lord is on our ſide, for his indignation is ready to be revealed, and deſtruction is at the door.

Calamity, pining, and diſtreſs, is coming upon you, yea, a conſumption is decreed, and trouble, perplexity, and terrible deſolation; and what hand ſhall ſtop it? for the Lord God of hoſts is ariſing, to avenge himſelf of his enemies, and to eaſe himſelf of the cruel oppreſſor of his righteous ſeed; yea, the mighty he will humble, and the proud ſhall be laid low. He will ſmite the wanton with paleneſs, and the deſpiſer ſhall periſh off the earth; and all the inſtruments of wickedneſs and oppreſſion will he daſh in pieces; and you ſhall know, that the Majeſty which dwells on high is on our ſide, and that the nations of them who are ſaved ſhall walk in obedience to the light.

But unto ſuch as believe in the light, and live in the daily croſs, who have forſaken either father, mother, ſiſter, brother, houſe, land, huſband or wife, for this bleſſed teſtimony; and that through the good report and bad report are journeying on, towards an everlaſting inheritance: bleſſings, honour, immortality, and eternal life, from God the father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Amen.

Newgate in London, the 7th of the 2d Month, 1671.

I am not of this world, but ſeek a country eternal in the heavens.

WILLIAM PENN.

THE

SANDY FOUNDATION SHAKEN;

OR,

Thoſe ſo generally believed and applauded DOCTRINES,

Of
One God, ſubſiſting in three diſtinct and ſeparate perſons,
The impoſſibility of God's pardoning ſinners, a plenary ſatisfaction,
The juſtification of impure perſons, by an imputative righteouſneſs, Refuted,

From the authority of Scripture Teſtimonies, and right reaſon.

By WILLIAM PENN, jun.

A Builder on that foundation which cannot be moved.

But to us there is but one God the father, of whom are all things. 1 Cor. viii. 6.

Who is a God like unto thee, that pardoneth iniquity? he retaineth not his anger for ever, becauſe he delighteth in mercy. Micah vii. 18.

For I will not juſtify the wicked. Exod. xxiii. 7.

To the Unprejudiced READER.

1668. Life, p. 6. IT was the fault of ſome in ancient times, that they made void God's law by mens traditions; and certainly I may now aſſume the ſame complaint; for whilſt I take a ſerious proſpect of the ſpiritual nature and tendency of the ſecond covenant, which God almighty, in the fulneſs of time, by his prophets, propheſied to make and perfect; and alſo the accompliſhment thereof by Jeſus Chriſt, and what was brought to paſs amongſt the primitive believers; methinks I do not only ſee an utter aboliſhment of ceremonial worſhips, but the inſcribing that ſpiritual law on the heart, and infuſion of holy fear to the inward parts, whereby each perſon became capacitated to know ſo much of God, as ſuited with his preſent ſtate, from an infallible demonſtration in himſelf, and not on the ſlender grounds of mens lo-here interpretations, or lo-there; for the kingdom of God is within, where himſelf muſt be the teacher of his people: but on the other hand, when from the noiſe of every party's pretenſions to and contentions for their own way, as moſt infallible, I am induced to an impartial examination of them: alas! how have all adulterated from the purity both of ſcripture record, and primitive example? receiving for unqueſtionable doctrines, the fallible apprehenſions, and uncertain determinations of ſuch councils, whoſe faction, prejudice, and cruelty ſoon parallelled the foregoing heatheniſh perſecutions; and yet that the reſults of perſons ſo incompetently qualified, ſhould at this day in their authority remain unqueſtioned by the nations, is matter both of aſtoniſhment and pity; but an implicit faith has ever been the conſequence of ignorance, idleneſs and fear, being ſtrong impediments to a judicious enquiry how far profeſt and impoſed opinions have their conſiſtency with reaſon, and the true religion. But that which moſt of all deſerves a lamentation is, that proteſtants, whoſe better arguments have confuted the plea of ſuch as made tradition and mens preſcriptions unqueſtionable in circumſtantials, ſhould themſelves, by print and practice, ſo openly declare and contend for its authority in eſſentials; as muſt be obvious to any that obſerve their zealous anathemas againſt whomſoever refuſe a compliance with them in doctrines, manifeſtly bottomed upon mens nice inventions.

This is the right ſtate of the controverſy that is maintained by us (contemptibly called Quakers) againſt the world, and the undoubted reaſon of our ſevere treatment at its hands; the end of God almighty's raiſing us, being for no other purpoſe, than to declare, that which our eyes have ſeen, our ears heard, and which our hands have handled of the Eternal Word, in oppoſition to the private opinions, conjectures, and interpretations of men concerning God and religion, that all people might thereby be reduced to faith in and obedience to the univerſal grace which brings ſalvation; which as it only can reſtore ſound judgment concerning God, and effect redemption from iniquity, ſo its being relinquiſhed by men, was the very ground both of their diviſion in judgment, and corruption in manners.

That this hath been, and is our caſe, I ſhall produce an inſtance, which is indeed the occaſion of this treatiſe.

Two perſons lately of Thomas Vincent's auditory in Spittle-fields, (who goes under the notion of a preſbyter) being deſirous to prove all things, and to hold faſt the beſt, viſited our meeting, to underſtand if we were as really deſerving blame, as repreſented by our enemies; where it then pleaſed divine goodneſs to viſit them with the call of his light, from the inventions, carnal obſervations, will-worſhip, and vain converſation of thoſe to whom they were formerly related, that they might be made children of the day; and though its appearance might be ſmall, yet ſufficient to diſcover them to have been inhabitants of the night, and can never be rejected, but it ſhall bring that condemnation which will farther teſtify it to be of God.

But their relinquiſhing his congregation ſo incenſed this preſbyterian preacher, as that his peeviſh zeal tranſported him beyond not only the moderation of chriſtianity, but the civility of education, venting his folly and prejudice much to this purpoſe, That he had as lieve they ſhould go to a bawdy-houſe, as to frequent the Quakers meetings, becauſe of their erroneous and damnable doctrines. And pointing to the window ſaid, If there ſhould ſtand a cup of poiſon, I would rather drink it, then ſuck in their damnable doctrines. He farther expreſſed himſelf in this manner to one of them: If ever you go again, I will give you up, and God will give you up, that you may believe a lie, and be damned. Which ſtorms of foul and railing accuſation, proving ineffectual to ſhipwrack that little grain of faith, his hearers, as forgetting they hold their preaching by connivance, and the many appeals made by their non-conforming brethren, for an indulgence, came with this caution to the Pater-familias, (or he that was both huſband and father to the concerned parties) that he would exerciſe his authority, as well to refuſe them to all Quaker-viſitants, as prohibit them the liberty of their conſciences in frequenting our meetings.

All which we could not for the truth-ſake let paſs in ſilence, and therefore did require him to let us have a public meeting, in which we might have liberty to anſwer on the behalf both of ourſelves and principles; which after ſome demur was granted, the day he appointed, and at the ſecond hour in the afternoon. But that he might not want applauſe of many voices, and doubtleſs to prevent our friends, (as I am informed) beſpoke his uſual auditory to be there at one; and, as a man that would not over-ſpend himſelf, or incur a nonplus for want of ſeconds, he had his third and fourth, to wit, Thomas Danſon, Thomas Doolittle, and---Maddocks, who at their times (and often out of them) did interpoſe, to whom George Whitehead moſtly anſwered; nor had there any thing been ſpoken by another, but from their own example.

The matter in controverſy will be related in the beginning of this treatiſe, as a neceſſary preludium, or introduction to the following diſcourſe: the manner of it was ſo groſs, that I know not how to repreſent it better, than by the levity and rudeneſs of ſome prize; laughing, hiſſing, ſhoving, ſtriking, and ſtigmatizing us with the opprobrious terms of confident fellow, impudent villain, blaſphemer, &c. And, as the uſual refuge of ſhallow perſons (when they have little elſe to ſay, to prepoſſeſs their hearers with prejudice againſt the principles of ſuch as do oppoſe them) he queſtioned much whether I was not ſome jeſuit; not remembering, or at leaſt unwilling to let the people know, that none have been, nor are more inſtant in the vindication of that doctrine he and his brother did aſſert, (to wit, God ſubſiſting in three diſtinct perſons) than the jeſuits: ſo that if I ſhould not as well reflect a ſcandal upon their learning by a compariſon, as he did upon my principle, I could more truly invert jeſuitiſm upon himſelf: in ſhort, they neither would keep to ſcripture-terms themſelves, nor ſuffer it in any others; but looking upon G. Whitehead's explanation of their terms, and reduction of their matter (if poſſible) to a ſcripture-ſenſe (thereby fitting it to the auditors apprehenſion) to be an indirect way of anſwering (as that which nakedly did expoſe their traditional folly to the vulgar) T. V. in an abrupt manner fell to his prayer, in which he falſly, and with many ſtrangely-affected whines, accuſed us for blaſphemers unto God; and that he might prevent the clearing of ourſelves, he deſired the people, when he had finiſhed, to be gone, giving them an example by his and three brethrens retreat: but we being deſirous farther to inform the people of our innocency, they did not only (as before) endeavour to pull us down, but put the candles out, though ſeveral perſons, of good eſteem, continued whilſt we ſpoke in vindication of ourſelves, from the invectives of our adverſaries.

The people ſtill remaining undiſperſed, T. V. came very palely down the ſtairs (having a candle in his hand) requiring their diſmiſſion, at which time he promiſed us, at our requeſt, another meeting; but as one that knew not well what he ſaid, or never purpoſed to perform what he promiſed, has given us ſince to underſtand, he cannot in conſcience ſpare us ſo much time; yet to ſatisfy G. W. and myſelf, in private, he could agree; which ſurely cannot be termed another meeting, ſince then it muſt relate to the preceding one: but how near the relation is betwixt an accuſation before hundreds, and a ſatisfaction before none, muſt needs be obvious to every unbiaſſed perſon:----our right ſhould have been altogether as public as our wrong:------for which cauſe we were neceſſitated to viſit his meeting, where, on a lecture-day, (after a continued ſilence during all his worſhip) we modeſtly intreated we might be cleared from thoſe unjuſt reflections before his congregation, leaving a diſputation (if he could not then attend it) to ſome more ſeaſonable opportunity: but as one, who reſolved injuſtice to mens reputation, as well as cowardice, in baulking a defence of his own principles, he flung moſt ſhamefully away; nor would any there, though urged to it, aſſume his place to vindicate his practice towards us, or his doctrines then delivered.

Reader, what is thy opinion of this ſavage entertainment? Would Socrates, Cato, or Seneca, whom they called heathens, have treated us with ſuch unſeemly carriage? I ſuppoſe not: and well is it for the truly ſober and conſcientious, they are not liable to thoſe ſevere laſhes, and that peeviſh uſage, which are the inſeparable appendix to a Scotch directory, whoſe cold and cutting gales ever have deſigned to nip and blaſt the faireſt bloſſoms of greater reformation. So much for hiſtory.

What remains is, to inform the reader, that with great brevity I have diſcuſſed, and endeavoured a total enervation of thoſe cardinal points, and chief doctrines ſo firmly believed, and continually impoſed for articles of chriſtian faith: 1. The trinity of ſeparate perſons, in the unity of eſſence. 2. God's incapacity to forgive, without the fulleſt ſatisfaction paid him by another. 3. A juſtification of impure perſons, from an imputative righteouſneſs. Which principles let me tell thee, reader, are not more repugnant to ſcripture, reaſon, and ſouls-ſecurity, than moſt deſtructive to God's honour, in his unity, mercy, and purity.

Therefore I beſeech thee to exterminate paſſion from her predominancy, in the peruſal 1668. ſal of this diſcourſe, ſince it was writ in love to thee; that whilſt 'tis thy deſire to know, love, and fear God almighty above mens precepts, thou mayeſt not miſs ſo good an end, by the blind embraces of tradition for truth. But in the nobility of a true Berean, ſearch and enquire; letting the good old verity, not a pretended antiquity, (whilſt a meer novelty) and ſolid reaſon, not an over-fond credulity, ſway the balance of thy judgment, that both ſtability and certainty may accompany thy determinations. Farewel.

A ſhort confutation by way of recapitulation, of what was objected againſt us at Thomas Vincent's meeting.

IF diſputations prove at any time ineffectual, 'tis either to be imputed to the ignorance and ambiguity of the diſputants, or to the rudeneſs and prejudice of the auditory: all which may be truly affirmed of T. V. with his three brethren, and congregation.

The accuſation being general, viz. that the Quakers held damnable doctrines: George Whitehead on their behalf ſtood up, and, as it was his place, willingly would have given the people an information of our principles, which, if objected againſt, he was as ready to defend them by the authority of ſcripture and reaſon; but inſtead of this better method, T. V. as one that is often employed in catechiſtical lectures, falls to interrogatories, begging that himſelf, he in his ſlander had taken for granted, to wit, the knowledge of our principles.

The queſtion was this, Whether we owned one God-head, ſubſiſting in three diſtinct and ſeparate perſons, as the reſult of various reviſes and amendments; which being denied by us, as a doctrine no where ſcriptural, T. V. frames this ſyllogiſm from the beloved diſciple's words.

John v. 7. 'There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy 'Ghoſt; and theſe three are one.'

'Theſe are either three manifeſtations, three operations, three ſubſtances, or three 'ſomethings elſe beſides ſubſiſtences.'

'But they are not three manifeſtations, three operations, three ſubſtances, nor three 'any thing elſe beſides ſubſiſtences;'

Ergo, Three ſubſiſtences.

G. W. utterly rejected his terms, as not to be found in ſcripture, nor deduceable from the place he inſtanced: wherefore he deſires their explanation of their terms, inaſmuch as God did not chuſe to wrap his truths up in heatheniſh metaphyſicks, but in plain language: notwithſtanding we could not obtain a better explanation, than perſon, or of perſon, than the mode of a ſubſtance; to all which G. W. and myſelf urged ſeveral ſcriptures, proving God's compleat unity: and when we queried how God was to be underſtood, if in an abſtractive ſenſe from his ſubſtance: they concluded it a point more fit for admiration then diſputation. But a little to review his ſyllogiſm; the manner of it ſhews him as little a ſcholar, as it's matter does a chriſtian; but I ſhall overlook the firſt, and ſo much of the ſecond, as might deſerve my objection to his major, and give in ſhort my reaſon, why I flatly deny his minor propoſition. No one ſubſtance can have three diſtinct ſubſiſtences, and preſerve its own unity: for granting them the moſt favourable definition, every ſubſiſtence will have its own ſubſtance; ſo that three diſtinct ſubſiſtences, or manners of being, will require three diſtinct ſubſtances, or beings; conſequently three Gods. For if the infinite God-head ſubſiſts in three ſeparate manners or forms, then is not any one of them a perfect and complete ſubſiſtence without the other two; ſo parts, and ſomething finite is in God: or if infinite, then three diſtinct infinite ſubſiſtences; and what's this but to aſſert three Gods, ſince none is infinite but God? and on the contrary, there being an inſeparability betwixt the ſubſtance and its ſubſiſtence, the unity of ſubſtance will not admit a trinity of incommunicable or diſtinct ſubſiſtences.

T. D. being aſked Of whom was Chriſt the expreſs image, from his alledging that ſcripture in the Hebrews; anſwered, Of God's ſubſiſtence, or manner of being: from whence two things in ſhort follow as my reply, It makes God a father only by ſubſiſtence, and Chriſt a ſon without a ſubſtance. Beſides 'tis falſly rendered in the Hebrews, ſince the greek does not ſay Χαρακτὴρ προσώπου, but Χαρακτὴρ τῆς ὑποστάσεως, the character of ſubſtance.

And if he will peruſe a farther diſcovery of his error, and explanation of the matter, let him read Col. i. 15. 'who is the image of the inviſible God.'

And becauſe G. W. willing to bring this ſtrange doctrine to the capacity of the people, compared their three perſons to three apoſtles, ſaying, he did not underſtand how Paul, Peter, and John could be three perſons, and one apoſtle, (a moſt apt compariſon to detect their doctrine) one---Maddocks, whoſe zeal out-ſtript his knowledge, buſtling hard, as one that had ſome neceſſary matter for the deciſion of our controverſy, inſtead thereof (perhaps to ſave his brethren, or ſhow himſelf) ſilences our farther controverting of the principle, by a ſyllogiſtical, but impertinent reflection upon G. W's. perſon. It runs thus, ‘ He that ſcornfully and reproachfully compares our doctrine of the bleſſed trinity ‘ of father, ſon, and ſpirit, one in eſſence, but three in perſons, to three finite men, as ‘ Paul, Peter, and John, is a blaſphemer. But you G. W. have ſo done. Ergo.’

A ſtrange way of argumentation, to beg what cannot be granted him, and take for granted what ſtill remains a queſtion, viz. that there are three diſtinct and ſeparate perſons in one eſſence: let them firſt prove their trinity, and then charge their blaſphemy: but I muſt not forget this perſon's ſelf-confutation, who, to be plainer, called them three He's, and if he can find an He without a ſubſtance, or prove that a ſubſiſtence is any other than the form of an He, he would do well to juſtify himſelf from the imputation of ignorance.

And till their hypotheſis be of better authority, G. W. neither did, nor does by that compariſon deſign mens invention ſo much honour.

For 'tis to be remarked, that G. W. is no otherwiſe a blaſphemer, than by drawing direct conſequences from their own principles, and re-charging them upon themſelves: ſo that he did not ſpeak his own apprehenſions by his compariſon, but the ſenſe of their aſſertion; therefore blaſphemer and blaſphemy are their own.

The trinity of diſtinct and ſeparate perſons, in the unity of eſſence, refuted from ſcripture.

‘ AND he ſaid, Lord God, there is no god like unto thee, to whom then will ye liken ‘ me? or ſhall I be equal, ſaith the Holy One?---I am the Lord, and there is ‘ none elſe, there is no God beſides me. Thus ſaith the Lord thy redeemer, the ‘ Holy One of Iſrael, I will alſo praiſe thee, O my God; unto thee will I ſing, O Holy ‘ One of Iſrael, Jehovah ſhall be One, and his name One.’ Which with a cloud of other teſtimonies that might be urged, evidently demonſtrate, that in the days of the firſt covenant, and prophets, but One was the Holy God, and God but that Holy One.---Again, ‘ and Jeſus ſaid unto him, why calleſt thou me good? there is none ‘ good but One, and that is God. And this is life eternal, that they might know ‘ Thee (father) the Only true God. Seeing it is One God that ſhall juſtify. There ‘ be gods many, --- but unto us there is but One God, the father, of whom are ‘ all things. One God and father who is above all things. For there is One God. ‘ To the Only-wiſe God be glory now and ever.’ From all which I ſhall lay down this one aſſertion, that the teſtimonies of ſcripture, both under the law, and ſince the goſpel diſpenſation, declare One to be God, and God to be One, on which I ſhall raiſe this argument:

1. Kings. viii. 23.
Iſa. xl. 25.
c. xlv. 5, 6.
c. xlviii, 17.
Pſal. xxi. 22.
Zac. xiv. 9.

Mat. xix. 17.
John xvii. 3.
Rom. iii. 30.
1 Cor. viii. 6.
Eph. iv 6.
1 Tim. ii 5.
Jude, ver 25.

If God, as the ſcriptures teſtify, hath never been declared or believed, but as the Holy One, then will it follow, that God is not an Holy Three, nor doth ſubſiſt in Three diſtinct and ſeparate Holy Ones: but the before-cited ſcriptures undeniably prove that One is God, and God only is that Holy One; therefore he cannot be divided into, or ſubſiſt in an Holy Three, or Three diſtinct and ſeparate Holy Ones.---Neither can this receive the leaſt prejudice from that frequent but impertinent diſtinction, that he is One in ſubſtance, but Three in perſons or ſubſiſtences; ſince God was not declared or believed incompletely, or without his ſubſiſtences: nor did he require homage from his creatures, as an incomplete or abſtracted being, but as God the Holy One: for ſo he ſhould be manifeſted and worſhipped without that which was abſolutely neceſſary to himſelf:-------------ſo that either the teſtimonies of the aforementioned ſcriptures are to be believed concerning God, that he is intirely and completely, not abſtractly and diſtinctly, the Holy One, or elſe their authority to be denied by theſe trinitarians: and on the contrary, if they pretend to credit thoſe holy teſtimonies, they muſt neceſſarily conclude their kind of trinity a fiction.

Refuted from right reaſon.

1. If there be three diſtinct and ſeparate perſons, then three diſtinct and ſeparate ſubſtances, becauſe every perſon is inſeparable from its own ſubſtance; and as there is no perſon that is not a ſubſtance in common acceptation among men, ſo do the ſcriptures plentifully agree herein: and ſince the father is God, the ſon is God, and the ſpirit is God (which their opinion neceſſitates them to confeſs) then unleſs the father, ſon, and ſpirit, are three diſtinct nothings, they muſt be three diſtinct ſubſtances, and conſequently three diſtinct gods.

2. It is farther proved, if it be conſidered, that either the divine perſons are finite or infinite; if the firſt, then ſomething finite is inſeparable to the infinite ſubſtance, whereby ſomething finite is in God; if the laſt, then three diſtinct infinites, three omnipotents, three eternals, and ſo three gods.

1668. 3. If each perſon be God, and that God ſubſiſts in three perſons, then in each perſon are three perſons or gods, and from three, they will encreaſe to nine, and ſo ad infinitum.

4. But if they ſhall deny the three perſons, or ſubſiſtences to be infinite, (for ſo there would unavoidably be three gods) it will follow that they muſt be finite, and ſo the abſurdity is not abated from what it was; for that of one ſubſtance having three ſubſiſtences, is not greater, than that an infinite being ſhould have three finite modes of ſubſiſting. But though that mode which is finite cannot anſwer to a ſubſtance that is infinite; yet to try if we can make their principle to conſiſt, let us conceive that three perſons, which may be finite ſeparately, make up an infinite conjunctly; however this will follow, that they are no more incommunicable or ſeparate, nor properly ſubſiſtences, but a ſubſiſtence; for the infinite ſubſtance cannot find a bottom or ſubſiſtence in any one or two, therefore jointly. And here I am alſo willing to overlook finiteneſs in the father, ſon, and ſpirit, which this doctrine muſt ſuppoſe.

5. Again, if theſe three diſtinct perſons are one, with ſome one thing, as they ſay they are with the God-head, then are not they incommunicable among themſelves; but ſo much the contrary, as to be one in the place of another: for if that the only God is the father, and Chriſt be that only God, then is Chriſt the father. So if that one God be the ſon, and the ſpirit that one God, then is the ſpirit the ſon, and ſo round. Nor is it poſſible to ſtop, or that it ſhould be otherwiſe, ſince if the divine nature be inſeparable from the three perſons, or communicated to each, and each perſon have the whole divine nature, then is the ſon in the father, and the ſpirit in the ſon, unleſs that the God-head be as incommunicable to the perſons, as they are reported to be amongſt themſelves; or that the three perſons have diſtinctly allotted them ſuch a proportion of the divine nature, as is not communicable to each other; which is alike abſurd. Much more might be ſaid to manifeſt the groſs contradiction of this trinitarian doctrine, as vulgarly received; but I muſt be brief.

Information and caution.

Before I ſhall conclude this head, it is requiſite I ſhould inform thee, reader, concerning its original: thou mayeſt aſſure thyſelf, it is not from the ſcriptures, nor reaſon, ſince ſo expreſly repugnant; although all broachers of their own inventions ſtrongly endeavour to reconcile them with that holy record. Know then, my friend, it was born above three hundred years after the ancient goſpel was declared; and that through the nice diſtinctions, and too daring curioſity of the biſhop of Alexandria, who being as hotly oppoſed by Arius, their zeal ſo reciprocally blew the fire of contention, animoſity, and perſecution, till at laſt they ſacrificed each other to their mutual revenge.

Thus it was conceived in ignorance, brought forth and maintained by cruelty; for though he that was ſtrongeſt impoſed his opinion, perſecuting the contrary, yet the ſcale turning on the trinitarian ſide, it has there continued through all the Romiſh generations: and notwithſtanding it hath obtained the name of Athanaſian from Athanaſius, (a ſtiff man, witneſs his carriage towards Conſtantine the emperor) becauſe ſuppoſed to have been moſt concerned in the framing that creed in which this doctrine is aſſerted; yet have I never ſeen one copy void of a ſuſpicion, rather to have been the reſults of popiſh ſchool-men; which I could render more perſpicuous, did not brevity neceſſitate me to an omiſſion.

Be therefore cautioned, reader, not to embrace the determination of prejudiced councils, for evangelical doctrine; which the ſcriptures bear no certain teſtimony to; neither was believed by the primitive ſaints, or thus ſtated by any I have read of in the firſt, ſecond, or third centuries; particularly Ireneus, Juſtin Martyr, Tertullian, Origen, with many others who appear wholly foreign to the matter in controverſy.---But ſeeing that private ſpirits, and thoſe none of the moſt ingenious, have been the parents and guardians of this ſo generally received doctrine; let the time paſt ſuffice, and be admoniſhed to apply thy mind unto that light and grace which brings ſalvation; that by obedience thereunto, thoſe miſts tradition hath caſt before thy eyes may be expelled, and thou receive a certain knowledge of that God, whom to know is life eternal, not to be divided, but One pure intire and eternal being; who in the fulneſs of time ſent forth his Son, as the true light which enlightneth every man; that whoſoever followed him (the light) might be tranſlated from the dark notions, and vain converſations of men, to this holy light, in which only ſound judgment and eternal life are obtainable: who ſo may hundred years ſince, in perſon, teſtified the virtue of it, and has communicated unto all ſuch a proportion, as may enable them to follow his example.

The vulgar doctrine of ſatisfaction, being dependent on the ſecond perſon of the trinity, refuted from ſcripture.

Doctr.

'THAT man having tranſgreſſed the righteous law of God, and ſo expoſed to the penalty of eternal wrath, it is altogether impoſſible for God to remit or forgive without a plenary ſatisfaction; and that there was no other way by which God could obtain ſatisfaction, or ſave men, than by inflicting the penalty of infinite wrath and vengeance on Jeſus Chriſt the ſecond perſon of the trinity, who for ſins paſt, preſent and to come, hath wholly borne and paid it, (whether for all, or but ſome) to the offended infinite juſtice of his father.'

Exod. xxxiv. 6. 7.

1. 'And the Lord paſſed by before him, (Moſes) and proclaimed, the Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, keeping mercy for thouſands, forgiving iniquity, tranſgreſſion and ſin.' [From whence I ſhall draw this poſition, that ſince God has proclaimed himſelf a gracious, merciful, and forgiving God, 'tis not inconſiſtent with his nature to remit, without any other conſideration than his own love: otherwiſe he could not juſtly come under the imputation of ſo many gracious attributes, with whom it is impoſſible to pardon, and neceſſary to exact the payment of the utmoſt farthing.]

2 Chron. xxx. 9.

2. 'For if ye turn again to the Lord, the Lord your God is gracious and merciful, and will not turn away his face from you.' [Where how natural is it to obſerve that God's remiſſion is grounded on their repentance; and not that it is impoſſible for God to pardon, without plenary ſatisfaction, ſince the poſſibility, nay, certainty of the contrary, viz. his grace and mercy, is the great motive or reaſon, of that loving invitation to return.]

Neh. ix. 16, 17.

3. 'They hardened their necks, and hearkened not to thy commandments; but thou art a God ready to pardon, gracious and merciful.' [Can the honeſt-hearted reader conceive, that God ſhould thus be mercifully qualified, whilſt executing the rigor of the law tranſgreſſed, or not acquitting without the debt be paid him by another? I ſuppoſe not.]

Iſa. lv. 7.

4. 'Let the wicked forſake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon.' [Come, let the unprejudiced judge, if this ſcripture doctrine is not very remote from ſaying, his nature cannot forgive ſin, therefore let Chriſt pay him full ſatisfaction, or he will certainly be avenged; which is the ſubſtance of that ſtrange opinion.

Jer. xxxi. 31, 33. 34.

5. 'Behold the days come, ſaith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the Houſe of Iſrael; I will put my law in their inward parts; I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their ſin no more. [Here is God's meer grace aſſerted, againſt the pretended neceſſity of a ſatisfaction to procure his remiſſion; and this Paul acknowledgeth to be the diſpenſation of the goſpel, in his eighth chapter to the Hebrews: ſo that this new doctrine doth not only contradict the nature and deſign of the ſecond covenant, but ſeems, in ſhort, to diſcharge God, both from his mercy and omnipotence.]

Micah, vii. 18.

6. 'Who is a God like unto thee, that pardoneth iniquity, and paſſeth by the tranſgreſſion of the remnant of his heritage? he retaineth not his anger for ever, becauſe he delighteth in mercy.' [Can there be a more expreſs paſſage to clear, not only the poſſibility, but real inclinations in God to pardon ſin, and 'not retain his anger for ever;' ſince the prophet ſeems to challenge all other gods, to try their excellency by his God: herein deſcribing the ſupremacy of his power, and ſuperexcellency of his nature, 'that he pardoneth iniquity, and retaineth not his anger for ever:' ſo that if the ſatisfactioniſts ſhould aſk the queſtion, who is a God like unto ours, that cannot pardon iniquity, nor paſs by tranſgreſſion, but retaineth his anger until ſome body make him ſatisfaction? I anſwer, many amongſt the harſh and ſevere rulers of the nation; but as for my God, he is exalted above them all, upon the throne of his mercy, 'who pardoneth iniquity, and retaineth not his anger for ever, but will have compaſſion upon us.'

Mat. vi. 12.

7. 'And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.' [Where nothing can be more obvious, than that that which is forgiven, is not paid: and if it is our duty to forgive our debtors, without a ſatisfaction received, and that God is to forgive us, as we forgive them, then is a ſatisfaction totally excluded: Chriſt farther paraphraſes upon that part of his prayer, V. 14. 'For if ye forgive their treſpaſſes, your heavenly father will alſo forgive you.' Where he as well argues the equity of God's forgiving them, from their forgiving others, as he encourages them to forgive others, from the example of God's mercy, in forgiving them: which is more amply expreſſed, cap. xviii. where the kingdom of heaven (that conſiſts in righteouſneſs) is repreſented by a king; 'who upon his debtor's petition, had compaſſion, and forgave him; but the ſame treating his fellow-ſervant without the leaſt forbearance, the king condemned his unrighteouſneſs, and delivered him over to the tormentors.' But how had this been a fault in the ſervant, if his king's mercy had not been propoſed for his example? how moſt unworthy therefore is it of God, and blaſphemous, may I juſtly term it, for any to dare to aſſert that forgiveneſs impoſſible to God, which is not only poſſible, but enjoined to men.]

John iii. 16. 8. ‘ For God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only-begotten ſon, that whoſoever believeth in him ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life.’ [By which it appears, that God's love is not the effect of Chriſt's ſatisfaction, but Chriſt is the proper gift and effect of God's love.]

Acts, x. 43. 9. ‘ To him give all the prophets witneſs, that through his name, whoſoever believeth in him, ſhall receive remiſſion of ſins.’ [So that remiſſion came by believing his teſtimony, and obeying his precepts, and not by a ſtrict ſatisfaction.]

Rom. viii. 31, 32. 10. ‘ If God be for us, who can be againſt us? he that ſpared not his own ſon, but delivered him up for us all.’ [Which evidently declares it to be God's act of love, otherwiſe, if he muſt be paid, he ſhould be at the charge of his own ſatisfaction, for he delivered up the ſon.]

2 Cor. v. 18, 19. 11. ‘ And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himſelf by Jeſus Chriſt, and hath given to us the miniſtry of reconciliation, to wit, that God was in Chriſt, reconciling the world to himſelf, not imputing their treſpaſſes unto them.’ [How undeniably apparent is it, that God is ſo far from ſtanding off in high diſpleaſure, and upon his own terms, contracting with his ſon for a ſatisfaction, as being otherwiſe uncapable to be reconciled, that he became himſelf the reconciler by Chriſt, and afterwards by the apoſtles, his ambaſſadors, to whom was committed the miniſtry of reconciliation.]

Eph. i. 7. 12. ‘ In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveneſs of ſins, according to the riches of his grace.’ [Now what relation ſatisfaction has to forgiveneſs of ſins, or how any can conſtrue grace to be ſtrict juſtice, the meaneſt underſtanding may determine.]

1 Pet. v. 10. 13. ‘ But the God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory, by Chriſt Jeſus.’ [He does not ſay that God's juſtice, in conſideration of Chriſt's ſatiſfaction, acquitted us from ſins paſt, preſent, and to come, and therefore hath called us to his eternal glory; but from his grace.]

1 John iv. 9. 14. ‘ In this was manifeſt the love of God towards us, becauſe that God ſent his only-begotten ſon, into the world, that we might live through him.’ [Which plainly attributes Chriſt, in his doctrine, life, miracles, death, and ſufferings, to God, as the gift and expreſſion of his eternal love, for the ſalvation of men.]

1. In aboliſhing that other covenant, which conſiſted in external and ſhadowy ordinances, and that made none clean as concerning the conſcience.

2. In promulgating his meſſage, of a moſt free and univerſal tender of life and ſalvation, unto all that believed and followed him, (the light) in all his righteouſneſs, the very end of his appearance being to deſtroy the works of the devil, and which every man only comes to experience, as he walks in an holy ſubjection, to that meaſure of light and grace, wherewith the fulneſs hath enlightened him.

3. In ſeconding his doctrines with ſigns, miracles, and a moſt innocent ſelf-denying life.

4. In ratifying and confirming all (with great love and holy reſignation) by the offering up of his body, to be crucified by wicked hands: who is now aſcended far above all heavens, and is thereby become a moſt complete captain, and perfect example.

So that I can by no means conclude, but openly declare, that the ſcriptures of truth are not only ſilent in reference to this doctrine of rigid ſatisfaction, but that it is altogether inconſiſtent with the dignity of God, and very repugnant to the conditions, nature, and tendency of that ſecond covenant, concerning which their teſtimony is ſo clear.

The abſurdities, that unavoidably follow the compariſon of this doctrine with the ſenſe of ſcripture.

1. THAT God is gracious to forgive, and yet 'tis impoſſible for him, unleſs the debt be fully ſatisfied.

2. That the finite and impotent creature is more capable of extending mercy and forgiveneſs, than the infinite and omnipotent creator.

3. ‘ That God ſo loved the world, he gave his only ſon to ſave it; and yet that God ſtood off in high diſpleaſure, and Chriſt gave himſelf to God as a complete ſatisfaction to his offended juſtice: with many more ſuch like groſs conſequences that might be drawn.

1668.

Refuted from right reaſon.

But if we ſhould grant a ſcripture ſilence, as to the neceſſity of Chriſt's ſo ſatisfying his father's juſtice; yet ſo manifeſt would be the contradictions, and foul the repugnancies to right reaſon, that who had not vailed his underſtanding with the dark ſuggeſtions of unwarrantable tradition, or contracted his judgment to the implicit apprehenſions of ſome over-valued acquaintance, might with great facility diſcriminate to a full reſolution in this point: for admitting God to be a creditor, or he to whom the debt ſhould be paid, and Chriſt, he that ſatisfies or pays it on the behalf of man, the debtor, this queſtion will ariſe, Whether he paid that debt, as God, or man, or both? (to uſe their own terms.)

Not as God.

1. In that it divides the unity of the God-head, by two diſtinct acts, of being offended, and not offended; of condemning juſtice and redeeming mercy; of requiring a ſatisfaction, and then making of it.

2. Becauſe if Chriſt pays the debt as God, then the father and the ſpirit being God, they alſo pay the debt.

3. Since God is to be ſatisfied, and that Chriſt is God, he conſequently is to be ſatisfied; and who ſhall ſatisfy his infinite juſtice?

4. But if Chriſt has ſatisfied God the father, Chriſt being alſo God, it will follow then that he has ſatisfied himſelf, (which cannot be.)

5. But ſince God the father was once to be ſatisfied, and that it is impoſſible he ſhould do it himſelf, nor yet the ſon or ſpirit, becauſe the ſame God; it naturally follows, that the debt remains unpaid, and theſe ſatisfactioniſts thus far are ſtill at a loſs.

Not as man.

6. The juſtice offended being infinite, his ſatisfaction ought to bear a proportion therewith, which Jeſus Chriſt, as man, could never pay, he being finite, and from a finite cauſe could not proceed an infinite effect; for ſo man may be ſaid to bring forth God, ſince nothing below the divinity itſelf, can rightly be ſtiled infinite.

Not as God and man.

7. For where two mediums, or middle propoſitions, are ſingly inconſiſtent with the nature of the end, for which they were at firſt propounded, their conjunction does rather augment than leſſen the difficulty of its accompliſhment; and this I am perſwaded muſt be obvious to every unbiaſſed underſtanding.

But admitting one of theſe three mediums poſſible for the payment of an infinite debt; yet, pray obſerve the moſt unworthy and ridiculous conſequences, that will unavoidably attend the impoſſibility of God's pardoning ſinners without a ſatisfaction.

Conſequences irreligious and irrational.

1. That 'tis unlawful and impoſſible for God almighty to be gracious and merciful, or to pardon tranſgreſſors; than which, what is more unworthy of God?

2. That God was inevitably compelled to this way of ſaving men; the higheſt affront to his incontroulable nature.

3. That it was unworthy of God to pardon, but not to inflict puniſhment on the innocent, or require a ſatisfaction where there was nothing due.

4. It doth not only diſ-acknowledge the true virtue and real intent of Chriſt's life and death, but intirely deprives God of that praiſe which is owing to his greateſt love and goodneſs.

5. It repreſents the ſon more kind and compaſſionate than the father; whereas if both be the ſame God, then either the father is as loving as the ſon, or the ſon as angry as the father.

6. It robs God of the gift of his ſon for our redemption (which the ſcriptures attribute to the unmerited love he had for the world) in affirming the ſon purchaſed that redemption from the father, by the gift of himſelf to God, as our complete ſatisfaction.

7. Since Chriſt could not pay what was not his own, it follows, that in the payment of his own, the caſe ſtill remains equally grievous; ſince the debt is not hereby abſolved or forgiven, but transferred only; and by conſequence we are no better provided for ſalvation than before, owing that now to the ſon, which was once owing to the father.

8. It no way renders man beholding, or in the leaſt obliged to God; ſince by their doctrine he would not have abated us, nor did he Chriſt the laſt farthing; ſo that the acknowledgments are peculiarly the ſon's; which deſtroys the whole current of ſcripture-teſtimony, for his good-will towards men.-----O the infamous portraiture this doctrine draws of the infinite goodneſs! Is this your retribution, O injurious ſatisfactioniſts?

9. That God's juſtice is ſatisfied for ſins paſt, preſent, and to come; whereby God and Chriſt have loſt both their power of enjoining godlineſs, and prerogative of puniſhing diſobedience; for what is once paid is not revokeable; and if puniſhment ſhould arreſt any for their debts, it either argues a breach on God's or Chriſt's part, or elſe that it has not been ſufficiently ſolved, and the penalty completely ſuſtained by another; for- Rom. xiv. 12. 2 Cor. xv. 10. getting, 'that every one muſt appear before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, to receive according to the things done in the body: yea, every one muſt give an account of himſelf to God.' But many more are the groſs abſurdities and blaſphemies that are the genuine fruits of this ſo-confidently-believed doctrine of ſatisfaction.

A Caution.

Let me adviſe, nay warn thee, reader, by no means to admit an entertainment of this principle, by whomſoever recommended; ſince it does not only diveſt the glorious God of his ſovereign power, both to pardon and puniſh, but as certainly inſinuates a licentiouſneſs, at leaſt a liberty, that unbecomes the nature of that ancient goſpel once preached amongſt the primitive ſaints, and that from an apprehenſion of a ſatisfaction once paid for all. Whereas I muſt tell thee, that unleſs thou ſeriouſly repent, and no more grieve God's holy Spirit, placed in thy inmoſt parts, but art thereby taught to deny all ungodlineſs, and led into all righteouſneſs; at the tribunal of the great judge, thy plea ſhall prove invalid, and thou receive thy reward without reſpect to any other thing than the Gal. vi. 7. deeds done in the body: 'be not deceived, God will not be mocked; ſuch as thou ſoweſt, ſuch ſhalt thou reap:' which leads me to the conſideration of my third head, viz. 'juſtification by an imputative righteouſneſs.'

The juſtification of impure perſons, by an imputative righteouſneſs, refuted from ſcripture.

Doctrine. 'THAT there is no other way for ſinners to be juſtified in the ſight of God, than 'by the imputation of that righteouſneſs of Chriſt, long ſince performed perſonally; and that ſanctification is conſequential, not antecedent.'

Exod. xxiii. 7. 1. Keep thee far from a falſe matter; and the innocent and righteous ſlay thou not; for I will not juſtify the wicked. [Whereon I ground this argument, that ſince God has preſcribed an inoffenſive life, as that which can only give acceptance with him, and on the contrary hath determined never to juſtify the wicked, then will it neceſſarily follow, that unleſs this ſo-much-believed imputative righteouſneſs had that effectual influence, as to regenerate and redeem the ſoul from ſin, on which the malediction lies, he is as far to ſeek for juſtification as before; for whilſt a perſon is really guilty of a falſe matter, I poſitively aſſert, from the authority and force of this ſcripture, he cannot be in a ſtate of juſtification; and as God will not juſtify the wicked, ſo, by the acknowledged reaſon of contraries, the juſt he will never condemn, but they, and they only, are the juſtified of God.]

Prov. xvii. 15. 2. 'He that juſtifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the juſt, even they both 'are an abomination to the Lord.' [It would very opportunely be obſerved, that if it is ſo great an abomination in men to juſtify the wicked, and condemn the juſt, how much greater would it be in God, which this doctrine of imputative righteouſneſs neceſſarily does imply, that ſo far diſengages God from the perſon juſtified, as that his guilt ſhall not condemn him, nor his innocency juſtify him? But will not the abomination appear greateſt of all, when God ſhall be found condemning of the juſt, on purpoſe to juſtify the wicked, and that he is thereto compelled, or elſe no ſalvation, which is the tendency of their doctrine, 'who imagine the righteous and merciful God, to condemn 'and puniſh his innocent ſon, that he having ſatisfied for our ſins, we might be juſtified '(whilſt unſanctified) by the imputation of his perfect righteouſneſs.' O! why ſhould this horrible thing be contended for by chriſtians?]

Ezek. xviii. 20, 26, 27, 28. 3. 'The ſon ſhall not bear the iniquity of his father; the righteouſneſs of the righteous ſhall be upon him, and the wickedneſs of the wicked ſhall be upon him. When 'a righteous man turneth away from his righteouſneſs, for his iniquity that he hath 'done ſhall he die. Again, when the wicked man turneth away from his wickedneſs, 'and doth that which is lawful and right, he ſhall ſave his ſoul alive; yet ſaith the houſe 'of Iſrael, the ways of the Lord are not equal: Are not my ways equal?' If this was once equal, 'tis ſo ſtill, for God is unchangeable; and therefore I ſhall draw this argument, that the condemnation or juſtification of perſons is not from the imputation of another's righteouſneſs, but the actual performance and keeping of God's righteous ſtatutes or commandments, otherwiſe God ſhould forget to be equal: therefore how wickedly unequal are thoſe, who, not from ſcripture evidences but their own dark conjectures and interpretations of obſcure paſſages, would frame a doctrine ſo manifeſtly inconſiſtent with God's moſt pure and equal nature; making him to condemn the righteous to death, and juſtify the wicked to life, from the imputation of another's righteouſneſs:---A moſt unequal way indeed!]

Mat. vii. 21, 24, 25.

4. ‘ Not every one that ſaith unto me, Lord, Lord, ſhall enter into the kingdom of ‘ heaven, but he that doth the will of my father. Whoſoever heareth theſe ſayings of ‘ mine, and doth them, I will liken him unto a wiſe man which built his houſe upon ‘ a rock, &c.’ [How very fruitful are the ſcriptures of truth, in teſtimonies againſt this abſurd and dangerous doctrine! theſe words ſeem to import a twofold righteouſneſs; the firſt conſiſts in ſacrifice, the laſt in obedience; the one makes a talking, the other a doing chriſtian. I in ſhort argue thus: If none can enter into the kingdom of heaven, but they that do the father's will, then none are juſtified, but they who do the father's will, becauſe none can enter into the kingdom but ſuch as are juſtified; ſince therefore there can be no admittance had, without performing that righteous will, and doing thoſe holy and perfect ſayings; alas! to what value will an imputative righteouſneſs amount, when a poor ſoul ſhall awake polluted in his ſin, by the haſty calls of death, to make its appearance before the judgment-ſeat, where 'tis impoſſible to juſtify the wicked, or that any ſhould eſcape uncondemned, but ſuch as do the will of God?]

John xv. 10.

5. ‘ If ye keep my commandments, ye ſhall abide in my love, even as I have kept ‘ my father's commandments, and abide in his love.’ [From whence this argument doth naturally ariſe; If none are truly juſtified that abide not in Chriſt's love, and that none abide in his love who keep not his commandments; then conſequently none are juſtified but ſuch as keep his commandments. Beſides, here is the moſt palpable oppoſition to an imputative righteouſneſs that may be; for Chriſt is ſo far from telling them of ſuch a way of being juſtified, as that he informs them the reaſon why he abode in his father's love was, his obedience; and is ſo far from telling them of their being juſtified, whilſt not abiding in his love, by virtue of his obedience imputed unto them, that unleſs they keep his commands, and obey for themſelves, they ſhall be ſo remote from an acceptance, as wholly to be caſt out; in all which Chriſt is our example.]

John xv. 14.

6. ‘ Ye are my friends, if you do whatſoever I command you.’ [We have almoſt here the very words, but altogether the ſame matter, which affords us thus much, that without being Chriſt's friends there is no being juſtified; but unleſs we keep his commandments, it is impoſſible we ſhould be his friends: it therefore neceſſarily follows, that except we keep his commandments, there is no being juſtified: or, in ſhort thus; if the way to be a friend is, to keep the commandments; then the way to be juſtified is, to keep the commandments, becauſe none can obtain the quality of a friend, and remain unjuſtified, or be truly juſtified whilſt an enemy; which he certainly is that keeps not the commandments.]

Rom. ii. 13.

7. ‘ For not the hearers of the law are juſt before God, but the doers of the law ſhall ‘ be juſtified.’ [From whence how unanſwerably may I obſerve, unleſs we become doers of that law, which Chriſt came not to deſtroy, but, as our example to fulfil, we can never be juſtified before God; wherefore obedience is ſo abſolutely neceſſary, that ſhort of it there can be no acceptance; nor let any fancy that Chriſt hath ſo fulfilled it for them, as to exclude their obedience from being requiſite to their acceptance, but as their pattern: ‘ for unleſs ye follow me, ſaith Chriſt, ye cannot be my diſciples’: and it is not only repugnant to reaſon, but in this place particularly refuted; for if Chriſt had fulfilled it on our behalf, and we not enabled to follow his example, there would not be doers, but one doer only, of the law juſtified before God. In ſhort, if without obedience to the righteous law none can be juſtified, then all our hearing of the law, with but the meer imputation of another's righteouſneſs, whilſt we are actually breakers of it, is excluded, as not juſtifying before God. ‘ If you fulfil the royal law, ye do well; ſo ſpeak ‘ ye, and ſo do ye, as they that ſhall be judged thereby.’]

Rom. viii. 13.

8. ‘ If ye live after the fleſh, ye ſhall die; but if ye through the ſpirit, do mortify ‘ the deeds of the body, ye ſhall live.’ [No man can be dead, and juſtified before God, for ſo he may be juſtified that lives after the fleſh; therefore they only can be juſtified that are alive; from whence this follows, if the living are juſtified and not the dead, and that none can live to God, but ſuch as have mortified the deeds of the body through the ſpirit, then none can be juſtified but they who have mortified the deeds of the body through the ſpirit; ſo that juſtification does not go before, but is ſubſequential to the mortification of luſts, and ſanctification of the ſoul, through the ſpirit's operation.]

Rom. viii. 14.

9. ‘ For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, are the ſons of God.’ [How clearly will it appear to any but a cavilling and tenacious ſpirit, that man can be no farther juſtified, than as he becomes obedient to the ſpirit's leadings; for if none can be a ſon of God, but he that is led by the Spirit of God, then none can be juſtified without being led by the Spirit of God, becauſe none can be juſtified but he that is a ſon of God: ſo that the way to juſtification and ſon-ſhip, is through the obedience to the ſpirit's leadings, that is, manifeſting the holy fruits thereof by an innocent life and converſation.]

Gal. vi. 4, 7.

10. ‘ But let every man prove his own work, and then ſhall he have rejoicing in him‘ ſelf alone, and not in another. Be not deceived, for whatſoever a man ſoweth that ‘ ſhall he reap.’ [If rejoicing and acceptance with God, or the contrary, are to be reaped from the work that a man ſoweth, either to the fleſh or to the ſpirit, then is the doctrine of acceptance, and ground of rejoicing, from the works of another, utterly excluded, every man reaping according to what he hath ſown, and bearing his own burden.]

1 Jam. ii. 21, 24. 11. ‘Was not Abraham our father juſtified by works, when he had offered Iſaac his ‘ſon upon the altar? Ye ſee then how that by works a man is juſtified, and not by faith ‘only.’ He that will ſeriouſly peruſe this chapter, ſhall doubtleſs find ſome, to whom this epiſtle was wrote, of the ſame ſpirit with the ſatisfactioniſts and imputarians of our time, they fain would have found out a juſtification from faith in the imputation of another's righteouſneſs; but James, an apoſtle of the moſt high God, who experimentally knew what true faith and juſtification meant, gave them to underſtand from Abraham's ſelf-denying example, that unleſs their faith, in the purity and power of God's grace, had that effectual operation to ſubdue every beloved luſt, wean from every Delilah, and intirely to reſign and ſacrifice Iſaac himſelf, their faith was a fable, or as a body without a ſpirit: and as righteouſneſs therefore in one perſon cannot juſtify another from unrighteouſneſs; ſo whoever now pretend to be juſtified by faith, whilſt not led and guided by the ſpirit into all the ways of truth, and works of righteouſneſs, their faith they will find at laſt a fiction.]

1 John ii. 7, 8. 12. ‘Little children, let no man deceive you, he that doth righteouſneſs is righte-‘ous, as God is righteous, (but) he that committeth ſin is of the devil.’ [From whence it may be very clearly argued, that none can be in a ſtate of juſtification, from the righteouſneſs performed by another imputed unto them, but as they are actually redeemed, from the commiſſion of ſin: ‘for if he that committeth ſin is of the devil,’ then cannot any be juſtified completely before God, who is ſo incompletely redeemed, as yet to be under the captivity of luſt, ſince then the devil's ſeed or offſpring may be juſtified; but that is impoſſible: it therefore follows, that as he who doth righteouſneſs is righteous as God is righteous, ſo no farther is he like God, or juſtifiable; for in whatſoever he derogates from the works of that faith, which is held in a pure conſcience, he is no longer righteous or juſtified, but under condemnation as a trangreſſor, or diſobedient perſon to the righteous commandment; and if any would obtain the true ſtate of juſtification, let them circumſpectly obſerve the holy guidings and inſtructions of that unction, to which the apoſtle recommended the ancient churches, that thereby they may be led out of all ungodlineſs, into truth and holineſs; ſo ſhall they find acceptance with the Lord, who has determined, never to juſtify the wicked.]

Refuted from right reaſon.

1. Becauſe it is impoſſible for God to juſtify that which is both oppoſite and deſtructive to the purity of his own nature, as this doctrine neceſſarily obliges him to do, in accepting the wicked, as not ſuch, from the imputation of another's righteouſneſs.

2. Since man was juſtified before God, whilſt in his native innocency, and never condemned till he had erred from that pure ſtate; he never can be juſtified, whilſt in the frequent commiſſion of that for which the condemnation came; therefore, to be juſtified, his redemption muſt be as intire as his fall.

3. Becauſe ſin came not by imputation, but actual tranſgreſſion; for God did not condemn his creature for what he did not, but what he did; therefore muſt the righteouſneſs be as perſonal for acceptance, otherwiſe theſe two things will neceſſarily follow: firſt, that he may be actually a ſinner, and yet not under the curſe. Secondly, that the power of the firſt Adam to death, was more prevalent than the power of the ſecond Adam unto life.

4. It is therefore contrary to ſound reaſon, that if actual ſinning brought death and condemnation, any thing beſides actual obedience unto righteouſneſs, ſhould bring life and juſtification; for death and life, condemnation and juſtification, being vaſtly oppoſite, no man can be actually dead and imputatively alive; therefore this doctrine ſo much contended for carries this groſs abſurdity with it, that a man may be actually ſinful, yet imputatively righteous; actually judged and condemned, yet imputatively juſtified and glorified. In ſhort, he may be actually damned, and yet imputatively ſaved; otherwiſe it muſt be acknowledged, that obedience to juſtification ought to be as perſonally extenſive, as was diſobedience to condemnation: in which real, not imputative ſenſe, thoſe various terms of ſanctification, righteouſneſs, reſurrection, life, redemption, juſtification, &c. are moſt infallibly to be underſtood.

5. Nor are thoſe words, impute, imputed, imputeth, imputing, uſed in ſcripture by way of oppoſition to that which is actual and inherent, as the aſſertors of an imputative righteouſneſs do by their doctrine plainly intimate; but ſo much the contrary, as that they are never mentioned, but to expreſs men really and perſonally to be that which is
Lev. xvii. 4. imputed to them, whether as guilty, as remitted, or as righteous: for inſtance: ‘What ‘man ſoever of the houſe of Iſrael, that killeth an Ox, and bringeth it not to the door ‘of the tabernacle, to offer unto the Lord, blood ſhall be imputed unto that man,’ or 2 Sam. xix. 18, 19, 20. charged upon him as guilty thereof. ‘And Shimei ſaid unto the King, let not my Lord ‘impute iniquity unto me, for thy ſervant doth know that I have ſinned.

Rom. v. 13. 6. ‘But ſin is not imputed where there is no law.’ From whence it is apparent that there could be no imputation, or charging of guilt upon any, but ſuch as really were guilty. Next, it is uſed about remiſſion: 'Bleſſed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity;' or, as the foregoing words have it, 'whoſe tranſgreſſion is forgiven.' Pſal. xxxii. 2. Where the non-imputation doth not argue a non-reality of ſin, but the reality of God's pardon; for otherwiſe there would be nothing to forgive, nor yet a real pardon, but only imputative, which, according to the ſenſe of this doctrine, I call imaginary. Again, 'God was in Chriſt reconciling the world unto himſelf, not imputing 2 Cor. v. 19. their treſpaſſes unto them.' Where alſo non-imputation, being a real diſcharge for actual treſpaſſes, argues an imputation, by the reaſon of contraries, to be a real charging of actual guilt. Laſtly, 'tis uſed in relation to righteouſneſs, 'was not Abraham juſtified Jam. ii. 21, 22, 23. by works, when he offered Iſaac? and by works was faith made perfect, and the ſcripture was fulfilled, which ſaith, Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteouſneſs.' By which we muſt not conceive, as do the dark imputarians of this age, that Abraham's offering perſonally was not a juſtifying righteouſneſs, but that God was pleaſed to account it ſo; ſince God never accounts a thing that which it is not; nor was there any imputation of another's righteouſneſs to Abraham, but on the contrary, his perſonal obedience was the ground of that juſt imputation; and therefore, that any ſhould be juſtified from the imputation of another's righteouſneſs, not inherent, or actually poſſeſſed by them, is both ridiculous and dangerous---Ridiculous, ſince it is to ſay a man is rich to the value of a thouſand pounds, whilſt he is not really or perſonally worth a groat, from the imputation of another who has it all in his poſſeſſion. Dangerous, becauſe it begets a confident perſwaſion in many people of their being juſtified, whilſt in captivity to thoſe luſts, whoſe reward is condemnation; whence came that uſual ſaying amongſt many profeſſors of religion, 'that God looks not on them as they are in themſelves, but as they are in Chriſt;' not conſidering that none can be in Chriſt, who are not new creatures, which thoſe cannot be reputed, who have not diſrobed themſelves of their old garments, but are ſtill inmantled with the corruptions of the old man.

1668.

Conſequences irreligious and irrational.

1. It makes God guilty of what the ſcriptures ſay is an abomination, to wit, that he juſtifieth the wicked.
2. It makes him look upon perſons as they are not, or with reſpect, which is unworthy of his moſt equal nature.
3. He is hereby at peace with the wicked, (if juſtified whilſt ſinners) who ſaid 'there is no peace to the wicked.'
4. It does not only imply communion with them here, in an imperfect ſtate, but ſo to Rom. viii. 30. all eternity, 'for whom he juſtified, them he alſo glorified.' Therefore whom he juſtified, whilſt ſinners, them he alſo glorified, whilſt ſinners.
5. It only ſecures from the wages, not the dominion of ſin, whereby ſomething that is ſinful comes to be juſtified, and that which defileth, to enter God's kingdom.
6. It renders a man juſtified and condemned, dead and alive, redeemed and not redeemed at the ſame time, the one by an imputative righteouſneſs, the other a perſonal unrighteouſneſs.
7. It flatters men, whilſt ſubject to the world's luſt, with a ſtate of juſtification, and thereby invalidates the very end of Chriſt's appearance, which was to deſtroy the works of the devil, and take away the ſins of the world; a quite contrary purpoſe than what the ſatisfactioniſts, and imputarians of our times have imagined, viz. to ſatisfy for their ſins, and by his imputed righteouſneſs, to repreſent them holy in him, whilſt unholy in themſelves; therefore ſince it was to take away ſin, and deſtroy the devil's works, which were not in himſelf, for that Holy One ſaw no corruption, conſequently in mankind; what can therefore be concluded more evidently true, than that ſuch in whom ſin is taken away, and the devil's works undeſtroyed, are ſtrangers (notwithſtanding their conceits) to the very end and purpoſe of Chriſt's manifeſtation.

Concluſion, by way of caution.

THUS, reader, have I led thee through thoſe three ſo generally applauded doctrines, whoſe confutation I hope, though thou haſt run, thou haſt read; and now I call the righteous God of heaven to bear me record, that I have herein ſought nothing below the defence of his unity, mercy, and purity, againſt the rude and impetuous aſſaults of tradition, preſs and pulpit, from whence I daily hear, what rationally induceth me to believe, a conſpiracy is held by counter-plots, to obſtruct the exaltation of truth, and to betray evangelical doctrines, to idle traditions: but God will rebuke the winds, and deſtruction ſhall attend the enemies of his anointed.----Miſtake me not, we never have diſowned a Father, Word, and Spirit, which are One, but mens inventions: for, 1. Their trinity has not ſo much as a foundation in the ſcriptures. 2. Its original was three hundred years after chriſtianity was in the world. 3. It having coſt much blood; in the council of Sirmium, anno 355, it was decreed, 'that thenceforth the controverſy ſhould not be Socrat. Schol. An. 355.

Conc. Sirm. cap. xxv. pag. 275.

'remembered, becauſe the ſcriptures of God made no mention thereof.' Why then ſhould it be mentioned now, with a maranatha on all that will not bow to this abſtruſe opinion. 4. And it doubtleſs hath occaſioned idolatry, witneſs the popiſh images of Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. 5. It ſcandalizeth turks, jews, and infidels, and palpably obſtructs their reception of the chriſtian doctrine.----Nor is there more to be ſaid on the behalf of the other two; for I can boldly challenge any perſon to give me one ſcripture phraſe which does approach the doctrine of ſatisfaction, (much leſs the name,) conſidering to what degree it is ſtretched; not that we do deny, but really confeſs, that Jeſus Chriſt, in life, doctrine, and death, fulfilled his father's will, and offered up a moſt ſatisfactory ſacrifice, but not to pay God, or help him, (as otherwiſe being unable) to ſave men; and for a juſtification by an imputative righteouſneſs, whilſt not real, 'tis meerly an imagination, not a reality, and therefore rejected; otherwiſe confeſſed and known to be juſtifying before God, becauſe 'there is no abiding in Chriſt's love without keeping his commandments.' I therefore caution thee in love, of whatſoever tribe, or family of religion thou mayeſt be, not longer to deceive thyſelf, by the over-fond embraces of human apprehenſions, for divine myſteries; but rather be informed that God hath beſtowed 'a meaſure of his grace on thee and me, to ſhew us what is good, that we may obey and do it;' which if thou diligently wilt obſerve, thou ſhalt be led out of all unrighteouſneſs, and in thy obedience ſhalt thou 'receive power to become a ſon of God;' in which happy eſtate God only can be known by men, and they know themſelves to be juſtified before him, whom experimentally to know, by Jeſus Chriſt, is life eternal.

A poſtſcript of animadverſions, upon T. V's contradictions, delivered in his ſermon from 1 John v. 4. at the evening lecture in Spittle-yard: 'For whatſoever is born of God, overcometh the world.'

Doctrine. 'WHATSOEVER perſon is born of God overcometh the world.

'There is a twofold victory; the firſt complete, the ſecond incomplete.'

Animad. This is as well a contradiction to his text and doctrine, as to common ſenſe; for beſides that they neither of them ſay, 'he that is born of God, cannot perfectly overcome the world,' but much the contrary; I fain would underſtand his intention by an incomplete victory: if he means not ſuch a one as is obtained by the ſlaughter of every individual, but that which only does ſubdue the force, and lead captive their enemies, yet will the victory prove complete; for if they be ſo far overcome as to be diſarmed of farther power to miſchieve, the diſpute is properly determined: but whatſoever is incomplete is but overcoming, or in the way to victory, and victory is the completing of what was before imperfect.

Contradict. 'Such overcome as are born again, who are in Chriſt, that have caſt off the old man, and know a change altogether new.

'Worldly luſts cannot be extirpated out of God's people in this world.'

Animad. If ſin muſt have a place in them, how can they be born of God, and have a place in Chriſt, or caſt off the old man, and know a change altogether new?

Contradict. 'God's children are the greateſt conquerors; Alexander and Cæſar were conquerors, but theſe overcome their luſts.

'God's children cannot perfectly overcome the luſts of this world, they ſometimes take them captive.'

Animad. What ſtrange divinity is this! that God's people ſhould be conquerors, and yet captives; overcome the world, and yet be overcome thereby.

Contradict. 'Sin may tyrannize over believers.

'But not have dominion; it is in captivity; it is in chains.'

Animad. Who is ſo abſolutely injurious, and incontroulable, as a tyrant? and notwithſtanding that he ſhould have no dominion, but be in captivity, and in chains, at beſt are Bedlam-diſtinctions, and conſequently unworthy of any man's mouth that has a ſhare of common ſenſe.

Contradict. 'You muſt kill, or be killed; either you muſt overcome the world, or the world you.

'If ye fight ye ſhall overcome.

'Incompletely; he overcomes, when he breaks their force, leads them captive, and puts them into chains; but they are not at all ſlain, they ſometimes take him captive.'

Animad. To kill, or be killed, admits no middle way to eſcape; yet that both ſin and God's children ſhould lead one another captive; and that he which fights ſhall overcome, and yet be in danger of being led captive, becauſe completely a conqueror; to me ſeems very ſtrange doctrine.

However, he goes on to tell them, 'whoſoever is born of God, overcometh the luſts of the world, and he that overcometh the luſts of the world, overcomes the devils of hell; God's children have to do with a conquered enemy.' Yet he would all this while be underſtood in an incomplete ſenſe; and to excite all to fight for this incomplete victory, he recommended to their conſideration, the excellent rewards of conquerors, that is 'to him that overcometh, will I give to eat of the tree of life, the hidden 'manna. I will give him a white ſtone, a new name, power over nations, white 'raiment: yea, I will make him a pillar in the temple of my God; he ſhall go no 'more out, and I will grant him to ſit with me in my throne.' Admirable privileges, I acknowledge! but are they promiſed to incomplete conquerors? I judge not.

Reader, by this thou mayeſt be able to give a probable conjecture of the reſt; and as I have begun with him and his co-diſputants, with them I will end; who, notwithſtanding all their boaſts and calumnies againſt us, have ſo evaded thoſe many opportunities we have offered them by letters, verbal meſſages, and perſonal viſits, that had they any zeal for their principles, love for their reputation, or conſcience in their promiſes, they would have been induced to a more direct and candid treaty.

But as it hath occaſioned the publication of this little treatiſe, ſo I am credibly informed, through the too buſy and malicious inquiſition of ſome concerning it, (which have amounted to no leſs than poſitive reports) it is currently diſcourſed, how that a certain Quaker hath lately eſpouſed the controverſy againſt R. F. and therein has perverted the chriſtian religion, to that degree, as plainly to deny Chriſt's coming in the fleſh; with much more than was fit to be ſaid, or is fit to be anſwered.

But, reader, I ſhall aſk no other judge to clear me from that moſt uncharitable accuſation; ſince firſt, I am altogether unacquainted with R. F. nor ever did deſign directly ſuch a thing, being unwilling to ſeek more adverſaries than what more nearly ſeek the overthrow of truth, although I doubt not but this plain and ſimple treatiſe may prove ſome confutation of his ſentiments.

And laſtly, as concerning Chriſt; although the ſlander is not new, yet neverthelefs falſe: For I declare on the behalf of that deſpiſed people, vulgarly called Quakers, the grace, of which we teſtify, hath never taught us to acknowledge another God than he that is the 'father of all things, who fills heaven and earth:' neither to confeſs another Lord Jeſus Chriſt, than he that appeared ſo many hundred years ago, 'made of a virgin, 'like unto us in all things, ſin excepted;' or any other doctrine than was by him declared and practiſed: therefore let every mouth be ſtopt for ever opening more, in blaſphemy againſt God's innocent heritage, who in principle, life and death, bear an unanimous teſtimony for the only true God, true Chriſt, and heavenly doctrine, which in their vindication is openly atteſted by

WILLIAM PENN, jun.

INNOCENCY with Her open Face.

Preſented by way of Apology for the Book entituled,

THE SANDY FOUNDATION SHAKEN,

TO

All ſerious and enquiring perſons, particularly the Inhabitants of the City of LONDON.

By WILLIAM PENN, jun.

He that uttereth a ſlander is a fool, Prov. x. 18.
A falſe ballance is an abomination to the Lord, Prov. xi. 1.

1668. RELIGION, although there can be nothing of greater concernment, nor which doth more eſſentially import the immortal happineſs of men; yet ſuch is the calamity of the age, that there is not any thing they are leſs ſolicitous about, or ſerious in the proſecution of, vainly imagining it to conſiſt in the implicit ſubſcription to, and verbal confeſſion of mens invented traditions and precepts, whilſt they neglect that more Jam. i. 17. orthodox definition of the apoſtle James, (viz.) ‘ pure religion and undefiled, before ‘ God is, to viſit the fatherleſs, and to keep himſelf unſpotted from the world;’ and inſtead thereof, believe they are performing the beſt of ſervices, in ſacrificing the reputation, liberty, eſtate, if not life itſelf, of others to their own tenacious conceptions; becauſe perhaps, though perſons of more virtue, they cannot in all punctillios correſpond therewith; how much I have been made an inſtance muſt needs be too notorious to any that hold the leaſt intelligence with common fame, that ſcarce ever took more pains to make the proverb good, by proving herſelf a lyar, than in my concern; who have been moſt egregiouſly ſlandered, reviled and defamed by pulpit, preſs and talk, terming me a blaſphemer, ſeducer, ſocinian, denying the divinity of Chriſt the ſaviour, and what not? and all this about my late anſwer to a diſputation with ſome preſbyterians; but how unjuſtly, it is the buſineſs of this ſhort apology to ſhew, which had not been thus long retarded, if an expectation firſt to have been brought upon my examination had not required a ſuſpence; and if I ſhall acquit myſelf from the injurious imputations of my adverſaries, I hope the cry will have an end; to which purpoſe, let but my innocency have your hearing in her own defence, who, as ſhe never can detract from her intentions in what ſhe really hath done; ſo will ſhe as eaſily diſprove her enemies, in manifeſting their accuſations to be fictitious: judge not before you read, neither believe any farther than you ſee.

I. That which I am credibly informed to be the greateſt reaſon for my impriſonment, and that noiſe of blaſphemy, which hath pierced ſo many ears of late, is, my denying the divinity of Chriſt, and diveſting him of his eternal God-head, which moſt buſily hath been ſuggeſted as well to thoſe in authority, as maliciouſly inſinuated amongſt the people; wherefore let me beſeech you to be impartial and conſiderate, in the peruſal of my vindication, which being in the fear of the almighty God, and the ſimplicity of ſcripture dialect preſented to you, I hope my innocency will appear beyond a ſcruple. The proverbs, which, as moſt agree, intend Chriſt the ſaviour, ſpeak in this Prov. 8. 15, 20, 23. manner; ‘ by me kings reign, and princes decree juſtice; I (wiſdom) lead in the midſt ‘ of the paths of judgment: I was ſet up from everlaſting;’ to which Paul's words al- 1 Cor. i. 24. lude, ‘ unto them which are called (we preach) Chriſt the power of God, and the wiſ‘ dom of God;’ from whence I conclude Chriſt the ſaviour to be God; for otherwiſe God would not be himſelf; ſince if Chriſt be diſtinct from God, and yet God's power and wiſdom; God would be without his own power and wiſdom; but in as much as it is impoſſible God's power and wiſdom ſhould be diſtinct or divided from himſelf, it reaſonably follows, that Chriſt, who is that power and wiſdom, is not diſtinct from God, but intirely that very ſame God.

Next, the prophets, David and Iſaiah ſpeak thus: ‘ The Lord is my light and my Pſal. xxvii. 1. ‘ ſalvation. I will give thee for a light unto the gentiles;’ and ſpeaking to the church, Iſa. xlix. 6. and c. lx. 20. ‘ for the Lord ſhall be thine everlaſting light;’ to which the evangeliſt adds, concerning ing Chriſt, ‘ that was the true light which lighteth every man that cometh into ‘ the world. God is light, and in him is no darkneſs at all;’ from whence I aſſert the unity of God and Chriſt, becauſe though nominally diſtinguiſhed, yet eſſentially the ſame divine light; for if Chriſt be that light, and that light be God, then is Chriſt God; or if God be that light, and that light be Chriſt, then is God Chriſt. Again, ‘ and the city had no need of the ſun, for the glory of God did lighten it, and the ‘ lamb (Chriſt) is the light thereof,’ by which the Oneneſs of the nature of theſe lights plainly appears; for ſince God is not God without his own glory, and that his glory lightens, (which it could never do if it were not light) and that the lamb, or Chriſt, is that very ſame light, what can follow, but that Chriſt the light and God the light are One pure and eternal light?

John i. 9.
1 John i. 5.
Rev. xxi. 23.

Next, from the word Saviour, it is manifeſt, ‘ I even I am the Lord, and beſides ‘ me there is no Saviour: and thou ſhalt know no God but me, for there is no Sa- ‘ viour beſides me. And Mary ſaid, my ſpirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour: and ‘ the Samaritans ſaid unto the woman, now we know that this is indeed the Chriſt the ‘ Saviour of the world. According to his grace made manifeſt by the appearing of our ‘ Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. Simon Peter to them that have obtained like precious faith ‘ with us, through the righteouſneſs of God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. For there- ‘ fore we ſuffer reproach, becauſe we truſt in the living God, who is the Saviour of all ‘ men: to the only wiſe God our Saviour be glory,’ &c.

Iſa. xliii. 11.
Hoſ. xiii. 4.
Luke i. 47.
John iv. 42.
2 Tim. i. 9, 10.
2 Pet. i. 1.
1 Tim. iv. 10.
Jude ver. xxv.

From which I conclude Chriſt to be God; for if none can ſave, or be ſtiled properly a Saviour but God, and yet that Chriſt is ſaid to ſave, and properly called a Saviour, it muſt needs follow, that Chriſt the Saviour is God.

Laſtly, ‘ in the beginning was the (ΛΟΓΟΣ) Word, (which the Greeks ſometimes un- ‘ derſtood for wiſdom and divine reaſon) and the Word was with God, and the Word ‘ was God: all things were made by him, and without him was not any thing made ‘ that was made. For by him were all things created that are in heaven, and that are ‘ in earth. He is before all things, and by him all things conſiſt. Upholding all things ‘ by the Word of his power,’ &c. Wherefore I am ſtill confirmed in the belief of Chriſt the Saviour's divinity; for he that made all things, and by whom they conſiſt and are upheld, becauſe before all things; he was not made nor upheld by another, and conſequently is God: now that this ΛΟΓΟΣ, or Word that was made fleſh, or Chriſt the light, power and wiſdom of God, and Saviour of men, hath made all things, and is he by whom they only conſiſt and are upheld, becauſe he was before them, is moſt evident from the recited paſſages of ſcripture; therefore he was not made, nor is he upheld by any other power than his own, and conſequently is truly God. in ſhort, this concluſive argument for the proof of Chriſt the Saviour's being God, ſhould certainly perſwade all ſober perſons of my innocency, and my adverſaries malice; He that is the ‘ everlaſting wiſdom, the divine power, the true light, the only Saviour, the creating ‘ word of all things, (whether viſible or inviſible) and their upholder by his own power, ‘ is without contradiction God;’ but all theſe qualifications and divine properties are by the concurrent teſtimonies of ſcripture aſcribed to the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; therefore, without a ſcruple, I call and believe him really to be the mighty God. And for more ample ſatisfaction, let but my * reply to J. Clapham be peruſed, in which Chriſt's divinity and eternity are very fully aſſerted.

John i. 1. 3.
Col. i. 16, 17.
Heb. i. 3, 10.
John i. 14.
* See Guide Miſtaken.

Judge then, impartial readers, (to whom I appeal in this concern) whether my chriſtian reputation hath not been unworthily traduced; and that thoſe ſeveral perſons who have been poſting out their books againſt me (whilſt a cloſe priſoner) have not been beating the air, and fighting with their own ſhadows, in ſuppoſing what I never thought, much leſs writ of, to be the intention of my book; and then as furiouſly have faſtened on me their own conceits, expecting I ſhould feel the ſmart of every blow, who thus far am no ways intereſted in their heat.

As for my being a Socinian, I muſt confeſs I have read of one Socinus, of (what they call) a noble family in Sene in Italy, who about the year 1574, being a young man, voluntarily did abandon the glories, pleaſures and honours of the great duke of Tuſcany's court at Florence, (that noted place for all worldly delicacies) and became a perpetual exile for his conſcience, whoſe parts, wiſdom, gravity and juſt behaviour made him the moſt famous with the Polonian and Tanſilvanian churches; but I was never baptiſed into his name, and therefore deny that reproachful epithet; and if in any thing I acknowledge the verity of his doctrine, it is for the truth's ſake, of which, in many things, he had a clearer proſpect than moſt of his contemporaries; but not therefore a Socinian, any more than a ſon of the Engliſh-church, whilſt eſteemed a Quaker, becauſe I juſtify many of her principles, ſince the reformation, againſt the Roman church.

II. As for the buſineſs of ſatisfaction, I am prevented by a perſon whoſe reputation is generally great amongſt the proteſtants of theſe nations; for ſince the doctrine againſt which I moſtly levelled my arguments, was, ‘ the impoſſibility of God's forgiving ſin ‘ upon repentance, without Chriſt's paying his juſtice, by ſuffering infinite vengeance ‘ and eternal death for ſins paſt, preſent and to come,’ he plainly in his late * diſcourſe

* Stillingfleet contra Crell.

1668. about Chriſt's ſufferings, againſt Crellius, acknowledges me no leſs, by granting, upon a new ſtate of the controverſy, 'both the poſſibility of God's pardoning ſins, as debts, with- pag. 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274. 'out ſuch a rigid ſatisfaction, and the impoſſibility of Chriſt's ſo ſuffering for the world;' reflecting cloſely upon thoſe perſons, as 'giving ſo juſt an occaſion to the church's adverſaries to think they triumph over her faith, whilſt it is only over their miſtakes who 'argue with more zeal than judgment:' nay, one of the main ends which firſt induced me to that diſcourſe, I find thus delivered by him, namely, If they did believe Chriſt p. 160. came into the world to reform it, 'that the wrath of God is now revealed from heaven againſt all unrighteouſneſs; that his love, which is ſhown to the world, is to deliver them from the hand of their enemies, that they might ſerve him in righteouſneſs 'and holineſs all the days of their lives; they could never imagine that ſalvation is entailed by the goſpel upon a mighty confidence, or vehement perſwaſion of what Chriſt 'hath done and ſuffered for them:' thus doth he confeſs, upon my hypotheſis or propoſition, what I mainly contend for: and however poſitively I may reject or deny my adverſaries unſcriptural and imaginary ſatisfaction, let all know this, that I pretend to know no other name by which remiſſion, atonement and ſalvation can be obtained, but Jeſus Chriſt the Saviour, who is the power and wiſdom of God, what apprehenſions ſoever people may have entertained concerning me.

III. As for juſtification by an imputed righteouſneſs, I ſtill ſay, that whoſoever belives in Chriſt ſhall have remiſſion and juſtification: but then it muſt be ſuch a faith as Jam. ii. 26. can no more live without works, than a body without a ſpirit; wherefore I conclude, that true faith comprehends evangelical obedience; and here the ſame * Dr. Stillingfleet comes in to my relief (tho' it is not wanting) by a plain aſſertion of the neceſſity of obe- * Id. p. 164, 165, 166. dience, (viz.) 'ſuch who make no other condition of the goſpel but believing, ought to 'have a great care to keep their hearts ſounder than their heads;' thereby intimating the grand imperfection and danger of ſuch a notion; and therefore (God almighty bears me record) my deſign was nothing leſs, or more, than to wreſt thoſe beloved and ſinpleaſing principles out of the hands, heads and hearts of people, that by the fond perſwaſion of being juſtified from the perſonal righteouſneſs of another, without relation to their own obedience, they might not ſin on upon truſt, till the arreſt of eternal vengeance ſhould irrecoverably overtake them; that all might be induced to an earneſt purſuit after holineſs, by a circumſpect obſervance to God's Holy Spirit, without which none ſhall ever ſee the Lord. And (to ſhut up my apology for religious matters) that all may ſee the ſimplicity, ſcripture-doctrine, and phraſe of my faith, in the moſt important matters of eternal life, I ſhall here ſubjoin a ſhort confeſſion.

I ſincerely own, and unfeignedly believe (by virtue of the ſound knowledge and expe- 1 Cor. viii. 5, 6. rience received from the gift of that holy unction, and divine grace inſpired from on Heb. i. 1. high) in one holy, juſt, merciful, almighty and eternal God, who is the father of all 1 Cor. viii. 6. things; that appeared to the holy patriarchs and prophets of old, at ſundry times, and in divers manners; And in One Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the everlaſting wiſdom, divine power, true light, only Saviour and preſerver of all, the ſame one, holy, juſt, merciful, almighty and eternal God, who in the fulneſs of time took, and was manifeſted in the John. i. 14. 1 Tim. iii. 16. fleſh, at which time he preached (and his diſciples after him) the everlaſting goſpel of Mat. iv. 17. repentance, and promiſe of remiſſion of ſins and eternal life, to all that heard and obey- Luke xxiv. 47. ed; who ſaid, he that is with you (in the fleſh) ſhall be in you, (by the ſpirit) and John xiv. 17, 18. though he left them (as to the fleſh) yet not comfortleſs, for he would come to them again, (in the ſpirit:) 'for a little while, and they ſhould not ſee him (as to the fleſh;) ch. xvi. 16. 'again, a little while and they ſhould ſee him (in the ſpirit;') for the Lord (Jeſus Chriſt) 2 Cor. iii. 17. 1 Cor. i. 7. is that ſpirit a manifeſtation whereof is given to every one to profit withal; In which Rom. viii. 14, 17. Holy Spirit I believe, as the ſame almighty and eternal God, who, as in thoſe times he ended all ſhadows, and became the infallible guide to them that walked therein, by which they were adopted heirs and co-heirs of glory; ſo am I a living witneſs, that the ſame holy, juſt, merciful, almighty and eternal God, is now, as then, (after this tedious night of idolatry, ſuperſtition and human inventions, that hath overſpread the Rev. xxi. 3. world) glorioufly manifeſted to diſcover and ſave from all iniquity, and to conduct unto Prov. xxviii. 13. the holy land of pure and endleſs peace; in a word, to tabernacle in men: And I alſo Luke xiv. 33. firmly believe, that without repenting and forſaking of paſt ſins, and walking in obedi- Rev. xxi. 27. ch. xxii. 14. ence to this heavenly voice, which would guide into all truth, and eſtabliſh there, remiſſion and eternal life can never be obtained; but unto them that fear his name, and keep his commandments, they, and they only ſhall have right unto the tree of life; for whoſe Mat. x. 37, 38, 39. name's ſake I have been made willing to relinquiſh and forſake all the vain faſhions, enticing pleaſures, alluring honours and glittering glories of this tranſitory world, and readily to accept the portion of a fool, from this deriding generation, and become a man of ſorrow, and a perpetual reproach to my familiars; yea, and with the greateſt chearfulneſs can obſignate and confirm, (with no leſs ſeal, than the loſs of whatſoever 1 Pet. iv. 14. this doting world accounts dear) this faithful confeſſion, having my eye fixt upon a more enduring ſubſtance, and laſting inheritance; and being moſt infallibly aſſured, that when time ſhall be no more, I ſhall (if faithful hereunto) poſſeſs the manſions of eternal life, and be received into his everlaſting habitation of reſt and glory.

IV. Laſtly, it may not be unreaſonable to obſerve, that however induſtrious ſome (and thoſe diſſenters too) have been to repreſent me as a perſon diſturbing the civil peace, I have not violated any truly fundamental law which relates to external property and good behaviour, and not to religious apprehenſions, it being the conſtant principle of myſelf and friends, to maintain good works, and keep our conſciences void of offence, paying active or paſſive obedience, ſuitable to the meek example of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; nor would I have any ignorant, how forward I was by meſſages, letters and viſits, to have determined this debate in a ſober and ſelect aſſembly, notwithſtanding the rude entertainment we had met with before; but contrary to their own appointments our adverſaries failed us, which neceſſitated me to that defence; and finding the truth ſo preſt with ſlander, I cannot but ſay I ſaw my juſt call to her relief: but, alas! how have thoſe two or three extemporary ſheets been toſt, tumbled, and torn on all hands, yea, aggravated to a monſtrous deſign, even the ſubverſion of the chriſtian religion, than which there could be nothing more repugnant to my principle and purpoſe; wherefore how very intemperate as well as unjuſt have all my adverſaries been in their revilings, ſlanders and defamations? uſing the moſt opprobrious terms of * 'ſeducer, heretick, 'blaſphemer, deceiver, Socinian, Pelagian, Simon Magus, impiouſly robbing Chriſt of 'his divinity, for whom the vengeance of the great day is reſerved,' &c. Nor have theſe things been whiſpered, but, in one book and pulpit after another, have more or leſs been thundred out againſt me, as if ſome bull had lately been arrived from Rome; and all this acted under the foul pretence of zeal and love to Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe meek and gentle example always taught it for a principal mark of true chriſtianity, to ſuffer the moſt outrageous injuries, but never to return any; nay, if my adverſaries would but be juſt and conſtant to themſelves, how can they offer to conſpire my deſtruction upon a religious ground, who either are themſelves under a preſent limitation, or have been formerly by the papiſts: tell me, I pray, did Luther, that grand reformer, whom you ſo much reverence, juſtly demand from the emperor at the diet of Worms (where he was ſummoned to appear) that none ſhould ſit judge upon his doctrines but the ſcripture, and in caſe they ſhould be caſt, that no other ſentence ſhould be paſt upon him, than what Gamaliel offered to the Jewiſh council, If it were not of God it would not ſtand; and if you will not cenſure him who firſt of all arraigned the chriſtian world (ſo called) at the bar of his private judgment, (that had ſo many hundred years ſoundly ſlept, without ſo much as giving one conſiderable ſhrug or turn, during that tedious winter-night of dark apoſtacy, but juſtify his proceedings) can you ſo furiouſly aſſault others? But above all, you, who refuſe conformity to others, and that have been writing theſe eight years for liberty of conſcience, and take it at this very ſeaſon by an indulgent connivance; what pregnant teſtimonies do you give of your unwillingneſs to grant that to others you ſo earneſtly beg for yourſelves? Doth it not diſcover your injuſtice, and plainly expreſs what only want of power hinders you to act? But of all proteſtants in general I demand, do you believe that perſecution to be chriſtian in yourſelves, that you condemned for antichriſtian in the papiſt? You judged it a weakneſs in their religion, and is it a cogent argument in yours? Nay, is it not the readieſt way to enhance and propagate the reputation of what you would depreſs? If you were diſpleaſed at their aſſuming an infallibility, will you believe it impoſſible in yourſelves to err? Have Whitaker, Reynolds, Laud, Owen, Baxter, Stillingfleet, Poole, &c. diſarmed the Romaniſts of theſe inhuman weapons, that you might employ them againſt your inoffenſive countrymen? Let the example and holy precepts of Chriſt diſſuade you, who came not to deſtroy, but ſave; and ſoberly reflect upon his equal law of doing as you would be done unto. Remember I have not dethroned a divinity, ſubverted faith, made void obedience, nor fruſtrated the hope of an eternal recompence; much leſs have I injured your perſons, or in any thing deviated from that θεὸς ἔνθετος and συντήρησις, or holy principle, ſo much inſiſted on by philoſophers and lawyers as the original of good laws, and life: no, your own conſciences ſhall advocate on my behalf. Let it ſuffice then, that we who are nick-named Quakers have under every revolution of power and religion been the moſt reviled, contemned and perſecuted, as if God indeed 'had ſet us forth in theſe laſt days as a 'ſpectacle to the world, to angels and to men;' and treated as if, by being what we are, our common right and intereſt in human ſocieties were forfeited; neither accept that for a true meaſure of our life and doctrines, which hath been taken by the ill-will or ignorance of others; but rather make an impartial examination, that what you judge may be from what you know, and not from what you hear at ſecond-hand; and then we ſhall as little queſtion your juſt opinion of our innocency, as we have too much been made ſenſible of the ſad effects that follow an ignorant and unadviſed zeal; for ſo monſtrouſly fond are ſome of their perſwaſions, and doting on the patrons of them, that they ſeldom have diſcretion, much leſs religious deſires, to conſider how true or falſe another religion is, or what may be the conſequence of its toleration; but with a fury, not inferior to their ignorance, cry, crucify, crucify; and phariſee-like, out of pretence of honour and ſervice done to God almighty, and the memory of his holy prophets, ſtick not to perſecute his beloved Son, and righteous ſervants; ſo cruel, blind, and obſtinate is perſecution: be

* See T. Vincent's late railing piece againſt the Quakers, alſo T. Danſon's and Dr. Owen's.

Mat. v. 39, 40.

Coun. Trent. p. 14.

1 Cor. iv. 9.

1668. be therefore adviſed in the words of that meek example Jeſus Chriſt; call not for fire any more; let the tares grow with the wheat; neither employ that ſword any more, which was commanded to be ſheathed ſo many hundred years ago (ſuppoſe we were enemies to the true religion; but have a care you are not upon one of Saul's errands to Damaſcus, and helping the mighty againſt God and his anointed;) and rather chuſe by fair and moderate debates (not penalties ratified by imperial decrees) to determine religious differences; ſo will you at leaſt obtain tranquillity, which may be called a civil-unity. But if you are reſolved ſeverity ſhall take its courſe, in this; our caſe can never change, nor happineſs abate; for no human edict can poſſibly deprive us of his glorious preſence, who is able to make the diſmalleſt priſons ſo many receptacles of pleaſure, and whoſe heavenly fellowſhip doth unſpeakably repleniſh our ſolitary ſouls with divine conſolation; by whoſe holy, meek, and harmleſs ſpirit I have been taught moſt freely to forgive, and not leſs earneſtly to ſolicit the temporal and eternal good of all my adverſaries. Farewel.

WILLIAM PENN, jun.

A queſtionary POSTSCRIPT.

WHERE doth the ſcripture ſay, that Chriſt ſuffered an eternal death, and infinite vengeance? For did not Chriſt riſe the third day? And is not infinite vengeance and eternal death without end? And doth not God ſay he was well-pleaſed with his Son before his death? And was not his offering acceptable? And did not the apoſtle ſay, that the ſaints were accepted in Chriſt that was God's beloved? And this was after Chriſt died and roſe; and God was ſaid to be well-pleaſed with his Son, both before he ſuffered, in his ſuffering, and after he ſuffered, though diſpleaſed with thoſe that cauſed him to ſuffer.

No Cross, No Crown.

A

DISCOURSE

SHOWING THE

NATURE AND DISCIPLINE

OF THE

HOLY CROSS of CHRIST:

AND THAT

The denial of ſelf, and daily bearing of Chriſt's croſs, is the alone way to the reſt and kingdom of God.

To which are added,

The living and dying teſtimonies of many perſons of fame and learning, both of ancient and modern times, in favour of this treatiſe.

In Two PARTS.

By WILLIAM PENN, jun.

And Jeſus ſaid unto his diſciples; if any man will come after me, let him deny himſelf, and take up his croſs daily, and follow me, Luke ix. 23.

I have fought a good fight, I have finiſhed my courſe, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteouſneſs, &c. 1 Tim. iv. 7, 8.

The PREFACE.

Reader,

THE great buſineſs of man's life is, to anſwer the end for which he lives; and that is, to glorify God, and ſave his own ſoul: this is the decree of heaven, as old as the world. But ſo it is, that man mindeth nothing leſs than what he ſhould moſt mind; and deſpiſeth to inquire into his own being, its original duty and end; chuſing rather to dedicate his days (the ſteps he ſhould make to bleſſedneſs) to gratify the pride, avarice, and luxury of his heart; as if he had been born for himſelf, or rather given himſelf being, and ſo not ſubject to the reckoning and judgment of a ſuperior power. To this wild and lamentable paſs, hath poor man brought himſelf, by his diſobedience to the law of God in his heart, by doing that which he knows he ſhould not do, and leaving undone what he knows he ſhould do. And as long as this diſeaſe continueth upon man, he will make his God his enemy, and himſelf uncapable of the love and ſalvation that he hath manifeſted by his Son, Jeſus Chriſt, to the world.

If, reader, thou art ſuch an one, my counſel to thee is, to retire into thyſelf, and take a view of the condition of thy ſoul; for Chriſt hath given thee light with which to do it: ſearch carefully and thoroughly; thy life is upon it; thy ſoul is at ſtake. 'Tis but once to be done; if thou abuſeth thyſelf in it, the loſs is irreparable; the world is not price enough to ranſom thee: wilt thou then, for ſuch a world, be-late thyſelf, over-ſtay the time of thy ſalvation, and loſe thy ſoul? Thou haſt to do (I grant thee) with great patience; but that alſo muſt have an end: therefore provoke not that God that made thee, to reject thee. Doſt thou know what it is? 'Tis Tophet, 'tis hell, the eternal anguiſh of the damned. Oh! reader, as one knowing the terrors of the Lord, I perſwade thee to be ſerious, diligent and fervent about thy ſalvation! aye, and as one knowing the comfort, peace, joy and pleaſure of the ways of righteouſneſs too, I exhort and invite thee, to embrace the reproofs and convictions of Chriſt's light and ſpirit in thine own conſcience, and bear the judgment, who haſt wrought the ſin. The fire burns but the ſtubble; the wind blows but the chaff: yield up thy body, ſoul and ſpirit, to him that maketh all things new; new heavens and new earth, new love, new joy, new peace, new works, a new life and converſation. Men are grown corrupt and droſſy by ſin, and they muſt be ſaved through fire, which purgeth it away; therefore the word of God is compared to a fire, and the day of ſalvation to an oven; and Chriſt himſelf to a refiner of gold, and purifier of ſilver.

Come, reader, hearken to me a while; I ſeek thy ſalvation; that is my plot; thou wilt forgive me. A refiner is come near thee, his grace hath appeared to thee: it ſhews thee the world's luſts, and teacheth thee to deny them. Receive his leaven, and it will change thee: his medicine, and it will cure thee: he is as infallible as free; without money, and with certainty. A touch of his garment did it of old; it will do it ſtill: his virtue is the ſame, it cannot be exhauſted; for in him the fulneſs dwells: bleſſed be God for his ſufficiency. He laid help upon him, that he might be mighty to ſave all that come to God through him: do thou ſo, and he will change thee: aye, thy vile body like unto his glorious body. He is the great philoſopher indeed, the wiſdom of God, that turns lead into gold, vile things into things precious: for he maketh ſaints out of ſinners, and almoſt gods of men. What reſts to us then, that we muſt do, to be thus witneſſes of his power and love? This is the Crown: but where is the Croſs? Where is the bitter cup and bloody baptiſm? Come, reader, be like him; for this tranſcendent joy, lift up thy head above the world; then thy ſalvation will draw nigh indeed.

Chriſt's Croſs, is Chriſt's way to Chriſt's Crown. This is the ſubject of the following diſcourſe; firſt writ during my confinement in the Tower of London, in the year 1668, now reprinted with great enlargements of matter and teſtimonies, that thou, reader, mayeſt be won to Chriſt; and if won already, brought nearer to him. It is a path, God in his everlaſting kindneſs guided my feet into, in the flower of my youth, when about two and twenty years of age: then he took me by the hand, and led me out of the pleaſures, vanities, and hopes of the world. I have taſted of Chriſt's judgments, and of his mercies, and of the world's frowns and reproaches: I rejoice in my experience, and dedicate it to thy ſervice in Chriſt. It is a debt I have long owed, and has been long expected: I have now paid it, and delivered my ſoul. To my country, and to the world of chriſtians I leave it: may God, if he pleaſe, make it effectual to them all, and turn their hearts from that envy, hatred and bitterneſs, they have one againſt another, about worldly things; (ſacrificing humanity and charity to ambition and covetouſneſs, for which they fill the earth with trouble and oppreſſion) that receiving the ſpirit of Chriſt into their hearts, (the fruits of which are love, peace, joy, temperance and patience, brotherly kindneſs and charity) they may in body, ſoul and ſpirit, make a triple league againſt the world, the fleſh and the devil, the only common enemies of mankind; and having conquered them through a life of ſelf-denial, by the power of the Croſs of Jeſus, they may at laſt attain to the eternal reſt and kingdom of God.

1668.

So deſireth, ſo prayeth,
friendly reader,
thy fervent chriſtian friend,
WILLIAM PENN.

No CROSS, no CROWN.

Life, p. 6.

The contents of the firſt chapter.

Chap. I.

§. 1. Of the neceſſity of the croſs of Chriſt in general; yet the little regard chriſtians have to it. §. 2. The degeneracy of Chriſtendom from purity to luſt, and moderation to exceſs. §. 3. That worldly luſts and pleaſures are become the care and ſtudy of chriſtians, ſo that they have advanced upon the impiety of infidels. §. 4. This defection a ſecond part to the Jewiſh tragedy, and worſe than the firſt: the ſcorn chriſtians have caſt on their Saviour. §. 5. Sin is of one nature all the world over; ſinners are of the ſame church, the devil's children: profeſſion of religion in wicked men, makes them but the worſe. §. 6. A wolf is not a lamb, a ſinner cannot be (whilſt ſuch) a ſaint. §. 7. The wicked will perſecute the good; this falſe chriſtians have done to the true, for non-compliance with their ſuperſtitions: the ſtrange carnal meaſures falſe chriſtians have taken of chriſtianity; the danger of that ſelf-ſeduction. §. 8. The ſenſe of that has obliged me to this diſcourſe, for a diſſuaſive againſt the world's luſts, and an invitation to take up the daily croſs of Chriſt, as the way left us by him to bleſſedneſs. §. 9. Of the ſelf-condemnation of the wicked; that religion and worſhip are compriſed in doing the will of God. The advantage good men have upon bad men in the laſt judgment. §. 10. A ſupplication for Chriſtendom, that ſhe may not be rejected in that great aſſize of the world. She is exhorted to conſider, what relation ſhe bears to Chriſt; if her Saviour, how ſaved, and from what: what her experience is of that great work. That Chriſt came to ſave from ſin, and wrath by conſequence: not ſave men in ſin, but from it, and ſo the wages of it.

CHAP. I.

§. I. THO' the knowledge and obedience of the doctrine of the croſs of Chriſt, be of infinite moment to the ſouls of men; for that is the only door to true chriſtianity, and that path the ancients ever trod to bleſſedneſs: yet, with extreme affliction, let me ſay, it is ſo little underſtood, ſo much neglected, and what is worſe, ſo bitterly contradicted, by the vanity, ſuperſtition, and intemperance of profeſſed chriſtians, that we muſt either renounce to believe what the Lord Jeſus hath told us, Luke xiv. 27. 'That whoſoever doth not bear his croſs, and come after him, cannot be his diſciple:' or, admitting that for truth, conclude, that the generality of Chriſtendom do miſerably deceive and diſappoint themſelves in the great buſineſs of chriſtianity, and their own ſalvation.

§. II. For, let us be never ſo tender and charitable in the ſurvey of thoſe nations, that intitle themſelves to any intereſt in the holy name of Chriſt, if we will but be juſt too, we muſt needs acknowledge, that after all the gracious advantages of light, and obligations to fidelity, which theſe latter ages of the world have received, by the coming, life, doctrine, miracles, death, reſurrection, and aſcenſion of Chriſt, with the gifts of his Holy Spirit; to which add, the writings, labours, and martyrdom of his dear followers in all times, there ſeems very little left of chriſtianity but the name: which being now uſurped by the old heathen nature and life, makes the profeſſors of it but true heathens in diſguiſe. For tho' they worſhip not the ſame idols, they worſhip Chriſt with the ſame heart: And they can never do otherwiſe, whilſt they live in the ſame luſts. So that the unmortified chriſtian and the heathen are of the ſame religion. For tho' they have different objects, to which they do direct their prayers, that adoration in both is but forced and ceremonious, and the deity they truly worſhip, is the god of the world, the great lord of luſts: to him they bow with the whole powers of ſoul and ſenſe. What ſhall we eat? What ſhall we drink? What ſhall we wear? And how ſhall we paſs away our time? Which way may we gather wealth, increaſe our power, enlarge our territories, and dignify and perpetuate our names and families in the earth? Which baſe ſenſuality is moſt pathetically expreſſed and comprized by the beloved apoſtle John, in theſe words:

'the

1 John ii. 16.

'the luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eyes, and the pride of life, which (ſays he) are not of the Father, but of the world, that lieth in wickedneſs.'

§. III. It is a mournful reflection, but a truth no confidence can be great enough to deny, that theſe worldly luſts fill up the ſtudy, care and converſation of wretched Chriſtendom! and, which aggravates the miſery, they have grown with time. For as the world is older, it is worſe; and the examples of former lewd ages, and their miſerable concluſions, have not deterred, but excited ours; ſo that the people of this, ſeem improvers of the old ſtock of impiety, and have carried it ſo much farther than example, that inſtead of advancing in virtue, upon better times, they are ſcandalouſly fallen below the life of heathens. Their high-mindedneſs, laſciviouſneſs, uncleanneſs, drunkenneſs, ſwearing, lying, envy, backbiting, cruelty, treachery, covetouſneſs, injuſtice, and oppreſſion, are ſo common, and committed with ſuch invention and exceſs, that they have ſtumbled and embittered infidels to a degree of ſcorning that holy religion, to which their good example ſhould have won their affections.

Heb. vi. 6.
Rev. xi. 8.
Mat. xxvii.

§. IV. This miſerable defection from primitive times, when the glory of chriſtianity was the purity of its profeſſors, I cannot but call the ſecond and worſt part of the Jewiſh tragedy, upon the bleſſed Saviour of mankind. For the Jews, from the power of ignorance, and the extreme prejudice they were under to the unworldly way of his appearance, would not acknowledge him when he came, but for two, or three years perſecuted, and finally crucified him in one day. But the falſe chriſtians cruelty laſts longer: they have firſt, with Judas profeſſed him, and then, for theſe many ages, moſt baſely betrayed, perſecuted, and crucified him, by a perpetual apoſtacy in manners, from the ſelf-denial and holineſs of his doctrine; their lives giving the lye to their faith. Theſe are they that the author of the epiſtle to the Hebrews tells us, 'crucify to themſelves the Son of God afreſh, and put him to open ſhame:' whoſe defiled hearts, John, in his Revelation, ſtiles, the ſtreets of Sodom and Egypt, ſpiritually ſo called, where he beheld the Lord Jeſus crucified, long after he had been aſcended. And as Chriſt ſaid of old, a man's enemies are thoſe of his own houſe; ſo Chriſt's enemies now, are chiefly thoſe of his own profeſſion: 'they ſpit upon him, they nail and pierce him, they crown him with thorns, and give him gall and vineagar to drink.' Nor is it hard to apprehend; for they that live in the ſame evil nature and principle the Jews did, that crucified him outwardly, muſt needs crucify him inwardly; ſince they that reject the grace now in their own hearts, are one in ſtock and generation with the heard-harted Jews, that reſiſted the grace that then appeared in and by Chriſt.

John viii. 34, to 45.
Rom. vi. 16.
1 John iii. 7. 8.
Mat. xxvi. 49.
Mat. xxv. 24.
Iſa. xliii. 24.

§. V. Sin is of one nature all the world over; for though a lyar is not a drunkard, nor a ſwearer a whoremonger, nor either properly a murderer; yet they are all of a church; all branches of the wicked root; all of kin. They have but one father the devil, as Chriſt ſaid to the profeſſing Jews, the viſible church of that age: he ſlighted their pretenſions to Abraham and Moſes, and plainly told them, that he that committeth ſin was the ſervant of ſin. They did the devil's works, and therefore were the devil's children. The argument will always hold upon the ſame reaſons, and therefore good ſtill: 'his ſervants you are, ſaith Paul, whom you obey:' and ſaith John to the church of old, 'let no man deceive you; he that committeth ſin is of the devil.' Was Judas ever the better chriſtian, for crying hail, maſter, and kiſſing Chriſt? By no means; they were the ſignal of his treachery; the token given, by which the bloody Jews ſhould know and take him. He called him maſter, but betrayed him; he kiſſed, but ſold him to be killed: this is the upſhot of the falſe chriſtians religion. If a man aſk them, Is Chriſt your Lord? They will cry, God forbid elſe: yes, he is our Lord. Very well; But do you keep his commandments? No. How ſhould we? How then are you his diſciples? It is impoſſible, ſay they; what! would you have us keep his commandments? No man can: What! impoſſible to do that, without which Chriſt hath made it impoſſible to be a chriſtian? Is Chriſt unreaſonable? Does he reap where he has not ſown; require where he has not enabled? Thus it is, that with Judas they call him maſter, but take part with the evil of the world to betray him; and kiſs and embrace him as far as ſpecious profeſſion goes; and then ſell him, to gratify the paſſion that they moſt indulge. Thus, as God ſaid of old, they make him ſerve with their ſins, and for their ſins too.

Mat. vii. 16.
Rev. xvii. 5.

§. VI. 'Let no man deceive his own ſoul; grapes are not gathered of thorns, nor figs of thiſtles:' a wolf is not a ſheep, nor is a vulture a dove. What form, people, or church ſoever thou art of, it is the truth of God to mankind, that they who have even the form of godlineſs, but (by their unmortified lives) deny the power thereof, make not the true, but falſe church: which though ſhe intitle herſelf the lamb's bride, or church of Chriſt, ſhe is that myſtery, or myſterious Babylon, fitly called by the Holy Ghoſt, the mother of harlots, and all abominations; becauſe degenerated from chriſtian chaſtity and purity, into all the enormities of heathen Babylon: a ſumptuous city of old time, much noted for the ſeat of the kings of Babylon, and at that time the place in the world of greateſt pride and luxury. As ſhe was then, ſo myſtical Babylon is now, the great enemy of God's people.

Gal. iv. 29.

§. VII. True it is, 'they that are born of the fleſh, hate and perſecute them that 'are born of the ſpirit,' who are the circumciſion in heart. It ſeems they cannot own, nor worſhip God after her inventions, methods and preſcriptions, nor receive for doctrine her vain traditions, any more than they can comply with her corrupt faſhions and cuſtoms in their converſation. The caſe being thus, from an apoſtate ſhe becomes a perſecutor. 'Tis not enough that ſhe herſelf declines from ancient purity, others muſt do ſo too. She will give them no reſt, that will not partake with her in that degeneracy, or receive her mark. Are any wiſer than ſhe, than mother church? No, no: nor can any make war with the beaſt ſhe rides upon, thoſe worldly powers that protect her, and vow her maintenance againſt the cries of her diſſenters. Apoſtacy and ſuperſtition are ever proud and impatient of diſſent: all muſt conform, or periſh. Therefore the ſlain Rev. vi. 9. witneſſes, and blood of the ſouls under the altar, are found within the walls of this myſtical Babylon, this great city of falſe chriſtians, and are charged upon her by the Holy Ghoſt, in the revelation. Nor is it ſtrange that ſhe ſhould ſlay the ſervants, who firſt crucified the Lord: but ſtrange and barbarous too, that ſhe ſhould kill her huſband, and murder her Saviour, titles ſhe ſeems ſo fond of, and that have been ſo profitable to her; and that ſhe would recommend herſelf by, though without all juſtice. But her children are reduced ſo entirely under the dominion of darkneſs, by means of their continued diſobedience to the manifeſtation of the divine light in their ſouls, that they forget what man once was, or they ſhould now be; and know not true and pure chriſtianity when they meet it, yet pride themſelves to profeſs it. Their meaſures are ſo carnal and falſe about ſalvation, they call good evil, and evil good: they make a devil a chriſtian, and a ſaint a devil. So that though the unrighteous latitude of their lives be matter of lamentation, as to themſelves it is of deſtruction; yet that common apprehenſion, that they may be children of God while in a ſtate of diſobedience to his holy commandments; and diſciples of Jeſus, though they revolt from his croſs; and members of his true church, which is without ſpot or wrinkle, notwithſtanding their lives are full of ſpots and wrinkles; is, of all other deceptions upon themſelves, the moſt pernicious to their eternal condition. For they are at peace in ſin, and under a ſecurity in their tranſgreſſion. Their vain hope ſilences their convictions, and over-lays all tender motions to repentance: ſo that their miſtake about their duty to God, is as miſchievous as their rebellion againſt him.

Thus they walk on precipices, and flatter themſelves, till the grave ſwallows them up, and the judgment of the great God breaks the lethargy, and undeceives their poor wretched ſouls with the anguiſh of the wicked, as the reward of their work.

§. VIII. This has been, is, and will be the doom of all worldly chriſtians: an end ſo dreadful, that if there were nothing of duty to God, or obligation to men, being a man, and one acquainted with the terrors of the Lord in the way and work of my own ſalvation, compaſſion alone were ſufficient to excite me to this diſſuaſive againſt the world's ſuperſtitions and luſts, and to invite the profeſſors of chriſtianity to the knowledge and obedience of the daily croſs of Chriſt, as the alone way, left by him, and appointed us to bleſſedneſs: that they who now do but uſurp the name, may have the thing; and by the power of the croſs, (to which they are now dead, inſtead of being dead to the world by it) may be made partakers of the reſurrection that is in Chriſt Jeſus, unto newneſs of life. For they that are truly in Chriſt, that is, redeemed by, and intereſted in him, are new creatures. Gal. vi. 15. They have received a new will, ſuch as does the will of God, not their own. They pray in truth, and do not mock God, when they ſay, 'thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven.' Col. iii. 1, 2, 3. They have new affections, ſuch as are ſet on things above, and make Chriſt their eternal treaſure. New faith, ſuch as overcomes ſnares and temptations of the world's ſpirit in themſelves, or as it appears through others: 1 John v. 45. and laſtly, new works, not of ſuperſtitious contrivance, or of human invention, but the pure fruits of the ſpirit of Chriſt, working in them, as love, joy, peace, meekneſs, Gal. v. 22, 23. long-ſuffering, temperance, brotherly-kindneſs, faith, patience, gentleneſs and goodneſs, againſt which there is no law; and they that have not this ſpirit of Chriſt, and walk not in it, the apoſtle Paul has told us, are none of his; but the wrath of God, Rom. viii. and condemnation of the law, will lie upon them. For if 'there is no condemnation to 'them that are in Chriſt, who walk not after the fleſh, but after the ſpirit,' which is Paul's doctrine; they that walk not according to that Holy Spirit, by his doctrine, are not in Chriſt: that is, have no intereſt in him, nor juſt claim to ſalvation by him: and conſequently there is condemnation to ſuch.

§. IX. And the truth is, the religion of the wicked is a lye: 'there is no peace, ſaith Iſa. xlviii. 22. the prophet, to the wicked.' Indeed there can be none, they are reproved in their own conſciences, and condemned in their own hearts, in all their diſobedience. Go where they will, rebukes go with them, and oftentimes terrors too: for it is an offended God that pricks them, and who, by his light, ſets their ſins in order before them. Sometimes they ſtrive to appeaſe him, by their corporal framed devotion and worſhip, but in vain; for true worſhipping of God, is doing his will, which they tranſgreſs. Mat. xxi. 30. The reſt is a falſe compliment, like him that ſaid, he would go, and did not. Sometimes they fly to ſports and company, to drown the reprover's voice, and blunt his arrows, to chaſe away troubled thoughts, and ſecure themſelves out of the reach of the diſquieter of their pleaſures: but the Almighty firſt or laſt is ſure to overtake them. There is no flying his final juſtice, for thoſe that reject the terms of his mercy. Impenitent rebels to his law may then call to the mountains, and run to the caves of the earth for protection, but in vain: his all-ſearching eye will penetrate their thickeſt coverings, and ſtrike up a light in that obſcurity, which ſhall terrify their guilty ſouls; and which they ſhall never be able to extinguiſh. Indeed their accuſer is with them, they can no more be rid of him, than of themſelves; he is in the midſt of them, and will ſtick cloſe to them. That ſpirit which bears witneſs with the ſpirits of the juſt, will bear witneſs againſt

1 John iii. 20. theirs. Nay, their own hearts will abundantly come in againſt them; and, 'If our 'heart condemn us, ſays the apoſtle John, God is greater, and knows all things:' that is, there is no eſcaping the judgments of God, whoſe power is infinite, if a man is not able to eſcape the condemnation of himſelf. 'Tis at that day, proud and luxurious chriſtians ſhall learn, that God is no reſpecter of perſons; that all ſects and names ſhall be ſwallowed up in theſe two kinds, ſheep and goats, juſt and unjuſt: and the very righteous
1 Pet. iv. 18. muſt have a trial for it. Which made that holy man cry out, 'if the righteous ſcarcely 'are ſaved, where ſhall the wicked and ungodly appear?' If their thoughts, words and works muſt ſtand the teſt, and come under ſcrutiny before the impartial judge of heaven and earth, how then ſhould the ungodly be exempted? No, we are told by him that cannot lye, many ſhall then even cry, Lord, Lord; ſet forth their profeſſion, and recount the works that they have done in his name, to make him propitious, and yet be
Mat. vii. 23. rejected with this direful ſentence, 'depart from me, ye workers of iniquity, I know 'you not.' As if he had ſaid, get you gone, you evil doers; though you have profeſſed me, I will not know you: your vain and evil lives have made you unfit for my holy kingdom: get you hence, and go to the gods whom you have ſerved; your beloved luſts, which you have worſhipped, and the evil world that you have ſo much coveted and adored: let them ſave you now, if they can, from the wrath to come upon you, which is the wages of the deeds you have done. Here is the end of their work that build upon the ſand, the breath of the judge will blow it down; and woful will the fall thereof be. Oh, it is now, that the righteous have the better of the wicked! which made an Numb. xxiii. 10. apoſtate cry in old time, 'let me die the death of the righteous, and let my laſt end be 'like unto his.' For the ſentence is changed, and the judge ſmiles: he caſts the eye of
Mat. xxv. 34. love upon his own ſheep, and invites them with a 'come ye bleſſed of my Father,' that through patient continuance in well-doing, have long waited for immortality: you have been the true companions of my tribulations and croſs, and with unwearied faithfulneſs, in obedience to my holy will, valiantly endured to the end, looking to me, the author of your precious faith, for the recompence of reward, that I have promiſed to them that love me, and faint not: 'O enter ye into the joy of your Lord, and inherit the 'kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.'

§. X. O Chriſtendom! my ſoul moſt fervently prays, that after all thy lofty profeſſions of Chriſt and his meek and holy religion, thy unſuitable and un-chriſt-like life may not caſt thee at that great aſſize of the world, and loſe thee ſo great ſalvation at laſt. Hear me once, I beſeech thee. Can Chriſt be thy Lord, and thou not obey
Gal. vi. 7. him? Or, can thou be his ſervant and never ſerve him? 'Be not deceived, ſuch as thou 'ſoweſt ſhalt thou reap:' he is none of thy Saviour, whilſt thou rejecteſt his grace in thy heart, by which he ſhould ſave thee. Come, what has he ſaved thee from? Has he ſaved thee from thy ſinful luſts, thy worldly affections and vain converſations? If not, then he is none of thy Saviour. For though he be offered a Saviour to all, yet he is actually a Saviour to thoſe only, that are ſaved by him; and none are ſaved by him, that live in thoſe evils, by which they are loſt from God, and which he came to ſave them from.

It is ſin that Chriſt is come to ſave man from, and death and wrath, as the wages of it: but thoſe that are not ſaved, that is, delivered, by the power of Chriſt in their ſouls, from the power that ſin has had over them, can never be ſaved from the death and wrath, that are the aſſured wages of the ſin they live in.

So that look, how far people obtain victory over thoſe evil diſpoſitions and fleſhly luſts they have been addicted to, ſo far they are truly ſaved, and are witneſſes of the redemp-
Mat. i. xxi. tion that comes by Jeſus Chriſt. His name ſhews this work: 'and thou ſhalt call his John i. xxix. 'name Jeſus, for he ſhall ſave his people from their ſins.' 'And lo (ſaid John of Chriſt) 'the lamb of God that takes away the ſin of the world!' that is, behold him, whom God hath given to enlighten people, and for ſalvation to as many as receive him, and his light and grace in their hearts, and take up their daily croſs, and follow him: ſuch as rather deny themſelves the pleaſure of fulfilling their luſts, than ſin againſt the knowledge he has given them of his will; or do that they know they ought not to do.

CHAP. II.

§. 1. By this Chriſtendom may ſee her lapſe, how foul it is; and next, the worſe for her pretence of chriſtianity, §. 2. But there is mercy with God upon repentance, and propitiation in the blood of Jeſus. §. 3. He is the light of the world, that reproves the darkneſs, that is, the evil of the world; and he is to be known within. §. 4. Chriſtendom, like the inn of old, is full of other gueſts: ſhe is adviſed to believe in, receive and apply to Chriſt. §. 5. Of the nature of true faith; it brings power to overcome every appearance of evil: this leads to conſider the croſs of Chriſt, which has been ſo much wanted. §. 6. The apoſtolick miniſtry, and end of it; its bleſſed effect; the character of apoſtolick times. §. 7. The glory of the croſs, and its triumph over the heathen world. A meaſure to Chriſtendom, what ſhe is not, and ſhould be. §. 8. Her declenſion, and cauſe of it. §. 9. The miſerable effects that followed. §. 10. From the conſideration of the cauſe, the cure may be more eaſily known, viz. not faithfully taking up the daily croſs; then faithfully taking it daily up, muſt be the remedy.

§. I. BY all which has been ſaid, O Chriſtendom! and by that better help, if thou wouldſt uſe it, the lamp the Lord has lighted in thee, not utterly extinct, it may evidently appear, firſt, how great and foul thy backſliding has been, who, from the temple of the Lord, art become a cage of unclean birds; and of an houſe of prayer, a den of thieves, a ſynagogue of Satan, and the receptacle of every defiled ſpirit. Next that, under all this manifeſt defection, thou haſt nevertheleſs valued thy corrupt ſelf upon thy profeſſion of chriſtianity, and fearfully deluded thyſelf with the hopes of ſalvation. The firſt makes thy diſeaſe dangerous, but the laſt almoſt incurable.

§. II. Yet becauſe there is mercy with the God of bowels, that he may be feared, and that he takes no delight in the eternal death of poor ſinners, no, though backſliders themſelves, but is willing all ſhould come to the knowledge and obedience of the truth, and be ſaved. He has ſet forth his Son a propitiation, and given him a Saviour to take away the ſins of the whole world, that thoſe that believe and follow him may feel the righteouſneſs of God in the remiſſion of their ſins, and blotting out their tranſgreſſions for ever. Now, behold the remedy! an infallible cure, one of God's appointing; a precious elixir indeed, that never failed; and that univerſal medicine which no malady could ever eſcape.

Ezek. xviii. 20, 23, 24.
Mat. i. 21.
Luke i. 77.
Rom. 3. 25,
Heb. ix. 24, to 28.
1 John ii. 1, 2.

§. III. But thou wilt ſay, what is Chriſt, and where is he to be found? And how received and applied in order to this mighty cure? I tell thee then: firſt, he is the great ſpiritual light of the world, that enlightens every one that comes into the world; by which he manifeſts to them their deeds of darkneſs and wickedneſs, and reproves them for committing them. Secondly, he is not far away from thee, as the apoſtle Paul ſaid of God to the Athenians: behold (ſays Chriſt himſelf) 'I ſtand at the door 'and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, 'and ſup with him, and he with me.' What door can this be, but that of the heart of man?

Acts xvii. 27.
Rev. iii. 20.

§. IV. Thou, like the inn of old, haſt been full of other gueſts: thy affections have entertained other lovers: there has been no room for thy Saviour in thy ſoul. Wherefore ſalvation is not yet come into thy houſe, tho' it is come to thy door, and thou haſt been often proffered it, and haſt profeſt it long. But if he calls, if he knocks ſtill, that is, if his light yet ſhines, if it reproves thee ſtill, there is hopes thy day is not over; and that repentance is not yet hid from thine eyes; but his love is after thee ſtill, and his holy invitation continues to ſave thee.

Wherefore, O Chriſtendom! believe, receive, and apply him rightly; this is of abſolute neceſſity, that thy ſoul may live for ever with him. He told the Jews, 'If you 'believe not that I am he, ye ſhall die in your ſins; and whither I go ye cannot come.' And becauſe they believed him not, they did not receive him, nor any benefit by him: but they that believed him, received him; 'and as many as received him,' his own beloved diſciple tells us, 'to them gave he power to become the ſons of God, which are 'born not of blood, nor of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will of man, but of God.' That is, who are not children of God after the faſhions, preſcriptions, and traditions of men, that call themſelves his church and people (which is not after the will of fleſh and blood, and the invention of carnal man, unacquainted with the regeneration and power of the Holy Ghoſt) but of God; that is, according to his will, and the working and ſanctification of his ſpirit and word of life in them. And ſuch were ever well verſed in the right application of Chriſt, for he was made to them indeed propitiation, reconciliation, ſalvation, righteouſneſs, redemption and juſtification.

1 John viii. 22, 24.
John i. 12, 13.

So I ſay to thee, unleſs thou believeſt, that he that ſtands at the door of thy heart and knocks, and ſets thy ſins in order before thee, and calls thee to repentance, be the Saviour of the world, thou wilt die in thy ſins, and where he is gone, thou wilt never come. For if thou believeſt not in him, it is impoſſible that he ſhould do thee good, or effect thy ſalvation: Chriſt works not againſt faith, but by it. 'Tis ſaid of old, he did not many mighty works in ſome places, becauſe the people believed not in him. So Mark. vi. 5. that if thou truly believeſt in him, thine ear will be attentive to his voice in thee, and the door of thine heart open to his knocks. Thou wilt yield to the diſcoveries of his light, and the teachings of his grace will be very dear to thee.

§. V. It is the nature of true faith to beget an holy fear of offending God, a deep reverence to his precepts, and a moſt tender regard to the inward teſtimony of his ſpirit, as that, by which his children, in all ages, have been ſafely led to glory. For as they that truly believe, receive Chriſt in all his tenders to the ſoul, ſo, as true it is, that thoſe who receive him thus, with him, receive power to become the ſons of God: that is, an inward force and ability to do whatever he requires: ſtrength to mortify their luſts, controul their affections, reſiſt evil motions, deny themſelves, and overcome the world in its moſt inticing appearances. This is the life of the bleſſed Croſs of Chriſt, which is the ſubject of the following diſcourſe, and what thou, O man, muſt take up, if thou intendeſt to be the diſciple of Jeſus. Nor canſt thou be ſaid to receive Chriſt, or to believe in him, whilſt thou rejecteſt his croſs. For as receiving of Chriſt is the means appointed of God to ſalvation, ſo bearing thy daily croſs after him is the only true teſtimony of receiving him; and therefore it is enjoined by him, as the great token of diſ- Mat. xvi. 24. cipleſhip, 'whoſoever will be my diſciple, let him take up his daily croſs and follow 'me.'

This, Chriſtendom, is that thou haſt ſo much wanted, and the want of which has proved the only cauſe of thy miſerable declenſion from pure chriſtianity. To conſider which well (as it is thy duty) ſo it is of great uſe to thy reſtoration.

For as the knowledge of the cauſe of any diſtemper guides the phyſician to make a right and ſafe judgment in the application of his medicine, ſo it will much enlighten thee in the way of thy recovery, to know and weigh the firſt cauſe of this ſpiritual lapſe and malady that has befallen thee. To do which, a general view of thy primitive eſtate, and conſequently of their work that firſt laboured in the chriſtian vineyard, will be needful; and if therein ſomething be repeated, the weight and dignity of the ſubject will bear it without the need of an apology.

Acts xxvi. 18. §. VI. The work of apoſtleſhip, we are told by a prime labourer in it, was, to turn people from darkneſs to light, and from the power of Satan unto God. That is, inſtead of yielding to the temptations and motions of Satan, who is the prince of darkneſs, (or wickedneſs, the one being a metaphor to the other) by whoſe power their underſtandings were obſcured, and their ſouls held in the ſervice of ſin, they ſhould turn their minds to the appearance of Chriſt, the light and Saviour of the world; who by his light ſhines in their ſouls, and thereby gives them a ſight of their ſins, and diſcovers every temptation and motion in them unto evil, and reproves them when they give way thereunto; that ſo they might become the children of light, and walk in the path of righteouſneſs. And for this bleſſed work of reformation, did Chriſt endue his apoſtles with his ſpirit and power, that ſo men might not longer ſleep in a ſecurity of ſin and ignorance of God, but awake to righteouſneſs, that the Lord Jeſus might give them life: that is, that they might leave off ſinning, deny themſelves the pleaſure of wickedneſs, and by true repentance turn their hearts to God, in well-doing, in which is peace. And truly, God ſo bleſſed the faithful labours of theſe poor mechanicks, yet his great ambaſſadors to mankind, that in a few years many thouſands (that had lived without God in the world, without a ſenſe or fear of him, lawleſly, very ſtrangers to the work of his ſpirit in their hearts, being captivated by fleſhly luſts) were inwardly ſtruck and quickened by the word of life, and made ſenſible of the coming and power of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as a judge and law-giver in their ſouls, by whoſe holy light and ſpirit, the hidden things of darkneſs were brought to light and condemned, and pure repentance from thoſe dead works begotten in them, that they might ſerve the living God in newneſs of ſpirit. So that thence-forward they lived not to themſelves, neither were they carried away of thoſe former divers luſts, by which they had been ſeduced Rom. viii. 2. from the true fear of God; but the law of the ſpirit of life, by which they overcame the law of ſin and death, was their delight; and therein did they meditate day and night. Iſa. xxix. 13. Their regard towards God, was not taught by the precepts of men any longer, but from the knowledge they had received by his own work and impreſſions in their ſouls. They had now quitted their old maſters, the world, the fleſh, and the devil, and delivered Tit. ii. 11. 12. up themſelves to the holy guidance of the grace of Chriſt, that taught them to deny ungodlineſs, and the world's luſts, and to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly in this preſent life; this is the Croſs of Chriſt indeed; and here is the victory it gives to them that take it up: by this croſs they died daily to the old life they had lived; and by holy watchfulneſs againſt the ſecret motions of evil in their hearts, they cruſhed ſin in its conceptions, yea, in its temptations. So that they (as the apoſtle John adviſed them) kept 1 John v. 18. themſelves, that the evil one touched them not.

For the light, which Satan cannot endure, and with which Chriſt had enlightened them, diſcovered him in all his approaches and aſſaults upon the mind, and the power they received through their inward obedience to the manifeſtations of that bleſſed light, enabled them to reſiſt and vanquiſh him in all his ſtratagems. And thus it was, that where once nothing was examined, nothing went unexamined. Every thought muſt come to judgment, and the riſe and tendency of it be alſo well approved, before they allowed it any room in their minds. There was no fear of entertaining enemies for friends, whilſt this ſtrict guard was kept upon the very wicket of the ſoul. Now the old heavens and earth, that is, the old earthly converſation, and old carnal, that is Jewiſh or ſhadowy worſhip paſſed away apace, and every day all things became new. ‘He Rom. ii. 28, 29. ‘was no more a Jew, that was one outwardly, nor that circumciſion that was in the ‘fleſh; but he was the Jew, that was one inwardly; and that circumciſion, which was ‘of the heart, in the ſpirit, and not in the letter, whoſe praiſe is not of man, but of ‘God.’

§. VII. Indeed the glory of the Croſs ſhined ſo conſpicuouſly through the ſelf-denial of their lives who daily bore it, that it ſtruck the heathen with aſtoniſhment, and in a ſmall time ſo ſhook their altars, diſcredited their oracles, ſtruck the multitude, invaded the court, and overcame their armies, that it led prieſts, magiſtrates, and generals, in triumph after it, as the trophies of its power and victory.

And while this integrity dwelt with chriſtians, mighty was the preſence and invincible that power that attended them: Heb. xi. 32, to the end. Iſa. lxiii. 2, Dan. iii. 12, to the end. it quenched fire, daunted lions, turned the edge of the ſword, out-faced inſtruments of cruelty, convicted judges, and converted executioners. In fine, the ways their enemies took to deſtroy, increaſed them; and by the deep wiſdom of God, they were made great promoters of the truth, who in all their deſigns endeavoured to extinguiſh it. Now not a vain thought, nor an idle word, nor an unſeemly action was permitted; chap. vi. 16, to the end. no, not an immodeſt look: no courtly dreſs, gay apparel, complimental reſpects, or perſonal honours; much leſs thoſe lewd immoralities, and ſcandalous vices, now in vogue with chriſtians, could find either example or connivance among them. Their care was not how to ſport away their precious time, but how to Eph. v. 15, 16. redeem it, that they might have enough to work out their great ſalvation (which they carefully did) with fear and trembling; not with balls and maſks, with play-houſes, dancing, feaſting, and gaming: no, no: to make ſure of their heavenly calling and election, was much dearer to them, than the poor and trifling joys of mortality. For they having with Moſes ſeen him that is inviſible, and found that his loving-kindneſs was better than life, the peace of his ſpirit than the favour of princes; as they feared not Cæſar's wrath, ſo they choſe rather to ſuſtain the afflictions of Chriſt's true pilgrims, than enjoy the pleaſures of ſin, that were but for a ſeaſon; eſteeming his reproaches of more value than the periſhing treaſures of the earth. And if the tribulations of chriſtianity were more eligible than the comforts of the world, and the reproaches of one than all the honour of the other; there was then ſurely no temptation in it, that could ſhake the integrity of Chriſtendom.

§. VIII. By this ſhort draught of what Chriſtendom was, thou mayeſt ſee, O Chriſtendom, what thou art not, and conſequently what thou oughteſt to be. But how comes it, that from a Chriſtendom that was thus meek, merciful, ſelf-denying, ſuffering, temperate, holy, juſt and good, ſo like to Chriſt, whoſe name ſhe bore, we find a Chriſtendom now, that is ſuperſtitious, idolatrous, perſecuting, proud, paſſionate, envious, malicious, ſelfiſh, drunken, laſcivious, unclean, lying, ſwearing, curſing, covetous, oppreſſing, defrauding, with all other abominations known in the earth, and that to an exceſs juſtly ſcandalous to the worſt of heathen-ages, ſurpaſſing them more in evil than in time: I ſay, how comes this lamentable defection?

I lay this down, as the undoubted reaſon of this degeneracy, to wit, the inward diſregard of thy mind to the light of Chriſt ſhining in thee; the firſt ſhewed thee thy ſins, and reproved them, and that taught and enabled thee to deny and reſiſt them. For as thy fear towards God, and holy abſtinence from unrighteouſneſs was, at firſt, not taught by the precepts of men, but by that light and grace, which revealed the moſt ſecret thoughts and purpoſes of thine heart, and ſearched the moſt inward parts of thy belly, (ſetting thy ſins in order before thee, and reproving thee for them, not ſuffering one unfruitful thought, word or work of darkneſs, to go unjudged) ſo when thou didſt begin to diſregard that light and grace, to be careleſs of that holy watch, that was once ſet up in thine heart, and didſt not keep centinel there, (as formerly) for God's glory, and thy own peace; the reſtleſs enemy of man's good quickly took advantage of this ſlackneſs, and often ſurprized thee with temptations, whoſe ſuitableneſs to thy inclinations made his conqueſt over thee not difficult.

In ſhort, thou didſt omit to take up Chriſt's holy yoak, to bear thy daily croſs; thou waſt careleſs of thy affections, and kept no journal or check upon thy actions; but didſt decline to audit accounts, in thy own conſcience, with Chriſt thy light, the great biſhop of thy ſoul, and judge of thy works, whereby the holy fear decayed, and love waxed cold; vanity abounded, and duty became burdenſom. Then up came formality, inſtead of the power of godlineſs; ſuperſtition, in place of Chriſt's inſtitution: and whereas Chriſt's buſineſs was, to draw off the minds of his diſciples from an outward temple, and carnal rites and ſervices, to the inward and ſpiritual worſhip of God, (ſuitable to the nature of divinity) a worldly, human, pompous worſhip is brought in again, and a worldly prieſthood, temple and altar are re-eſtabliſhed. Now it was that the ‘ſons of God once ‘more ſaw the daughters of men were fair:’ that is, the pure eye grew dim, which repentance had opened, that ſaw no comelineſs out of Chriſt; and the eye of luſt became uncloſed again, by the god of the world; and thoſe worldly pleaſures, that make ſuch as love them forget God, (though once deſpiſed for the ſake of Chriſt) began now to recover their old beauty, and intereſt in thy affections; and from liking them, to be the ſtudy, care, and pleaſure of thy life.

1668.
Chap. II.
Gen. vi. 2.

True, there ſtill remained the exterior forms of worſhip, and a nominal and oral reverence to God and Chriſt; but that was all; for the offence of the holy Croſs ceaſed, the power of godlineſs was denied, ſelf-denial loſt; and though fruitful in the invention of ceremonious ornaments, yet barren in the bleſſed fruits of the Spirit. And a thouſand ſhells cannot make one kernel, or many dead corps one living man.

§. IX. Thus religion fell from experience to tradition, and worſhip from power to form, from life to letter; that inſtead of putting up lively and powerful requeſts, animated by the deep ſenſe of want, and the aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit, by which the ancients prayed, wreſtled and prevailed with God; behold, a by-rote mumpſimus, a dull and inſipid formality, made up of corporal bowings, and cringings, garments and furnitures, perfumes, voices and muſick; fitter for the reception of ſome earthly prince, than the heavenly worſhip of the only true and immortal God, who is an eternal, inviſible ſpirit.

Prov. xv. 8.
James iv. 3.

But thy heart growing carnal, thy religion did ſo too; and not liking it as it was, thou faſhioned'ſt it to thy liking; forgetting what the holy prophet ſaid, ‘the ſacrifice of ‘the wicked is an abomination to the Lord,’ and what James ſaith, ‘ye aſk, and ye ‘receive not, (why?) becauſe ye aſk amiſs;’ that is, with an heart that is not right, but inſincere, unmortified, not in the faith that purifies the ſoul, and therefore can never receive what is aſked: ſo that a man may ſay with truth, thy condition is worſe by thy religion, becauſe thou art tempted to think thyſelf the better for it, and art not.

§. X. Well! by this proſpect, that is given thee, of thy ſoul fall from primitive chriſtianity, and the true cauſe of it, to wit, a neglect of the daily croſs of Chriſt, it may be eaſy for thee to inform thyſelf of the way of thy recovery.

Mat. xvi. 21.
Mark viii. 34.
Luke xiv. 27.
Hoſ. xiii, 14.
1 Cor. xv. 55.

For look, at what door thou wenteſt out, at that door thou muſt come in: and as letting fall, and forbearing the daily croſs loſt thee; ſo taking up, and enduring the daily croſs, muſt recover thee. It is the ſame way, by which the ſinners and apoſtates become the diſciples of Jeſus. ‘Whoſoever (ſays Chriſt) will come after me, and be my ‘diſciple, let him deny himſelf, and take up his daily croſs, and follow me.’ Nothing ſhort of this will do; mark that, for as it is ſufficient, ſo is it indiſpenſible: no Crown, but by the Croſs; no life eternal, but through death: and it is but juſt, that thoſe evil and barbarous affections, that crucified Chriſt afreſh, ſhould, by his holy croſs, be crucified. Blood requires blood; his croſs is the death of ſin, that cauſed his death; and he the death of death, according to that paſſage, O death! I will be thy death!

CHAP. III.

§. 1. What the croſs of Chriſt is? A figurative ſpeech, but truly, the divine power, that mortifies the world. §. 2. It is ſo called by the apoſtle Paul to the Corinthians. §. 3. Where it is the croſs appears and muſt be borne? Within, where the luſts are, there they muſt be crucified. §. 4. Experience teaches every one this, to be ſure Chriſt aſſerts it, from within comes murder, &c. and that is the houſe where the ſtrong man muſt be bound. §. 5. How is the croſs to be borne? The way is ſpiritual, a denial of ſelf, the pleaſure of ſin, to pleaſe God and obey his will, as manifeſted to the ſoul by the light he gives it. §. 6. This ſhews the difficulty, yet the neceſſity of the croſs.

Chap. III.

THE daily croſs being then, and ſtill, O Chriſtendom, the way to glory; that the ſucceeding matter, which wholly relates to the doctrine of it, may come with moſt evidence and advantage upon thy conſcience, it is moſt ſeriouſly to be conſidered by thee,

Firſt, What the croſs of Chriſt is?

Secondly, Where the croſs of Chriſt is to be taken up?

Thirdly, How, and after what manner it is to be borne?

Fourthly, What is the great work and buſineſs of the croſs? In which

The ſins it crucifies, with the miſchiefs that attend them, will be at large expreſſed.

Fifthly, and laſtly, I ſhall add many teſtimonies from living and dying perſons, of great reputation either for their quality, learning, or piety, as a general confirmation of the whole tract.

To the firſt, what is the croſs of Chriſt?

§. I. The croſs of Chriſt is a figurative ſpeech, borrowed from the outward tree, or wooden croſs, on which Chriſt ſubmitted to the will of God, in permitting him to ſuffer death at the hands of evil men. So that the croſs myſtical is that divine grace and power, which croſſeth the carnal wills of men, and gives a contradiction to their corrupt affections, and that conſtantly oppoſeth itſelf to the inordinate and fleſhly appetite of their minds, and ſo may be juſtly termed the inſtrument of man's holy dying to the world, and being made conformable to the will of God. For nothing elſe can mortify ſin, or make it eaſy for us to ſubmit to the divine will, in things otherwiſe very contrary to our own.

§. II. the preaching of the croſs therefore in primitive times was fitly called by Paul (that famous and ſkilful apoſtle in ſpiritual things) the power of God, tho' to them that periſh, then, as now, fooliſhneſs. That is, to thoſe that were truly weary and heavy laden, and needed a deliverer; to whom ſin was burdenſome and odious, the preaching of the croſs, by which ſin was to be mortified, was, as to them, the power of God, or a preaching of the divine power, by which they were made diſciples of Chriſt, and children of God: and it wrought ſo powerfully upon them, that no proud or licentious mockers could put them out of love with it. But to thoſe that walked in the broad way, in the full latitude of their luſts, and dedicated their time and care to the pleaſure of their corrupt appetites, to whom all yoke and bridle were and are intolerable, the preaching of the croſs was, and is, fooliſhneſs: to which I may add, in the name but of too many now-a-days, and the practice ridiculous; embraced by none, if they may be believed, but half-witted people, of ſtingy and ſingular tempers, affected with the hypochondry, and oppreſſed with the power of melancholy; for all this, and more, is beſtowed upon the life of the bleſſed croſs of Chriſt, by the very profeſſors and pretended admirers of it, in the perſons of thoſe that truly bear it.

§. III. Well, but then where does this croſs appear, and muſt it be taken up?

I anſwer, within: that is, in the heart and ſoul; for where the ſin is, the croſs muſt be. Now, all evil comes from within: this Chriſt taught. From within (ſaith Chriſt) 'out of the heart of men proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders, 'thefts, covetouſneſs, wickedneſs, deceit, laſciviouſneſs, an evil eye, blaſphemy, pride, 'fooliſhneſs: all theſe evils come from within, and defile the man.'

Mark vii. 11. 22, 23.

The heart of man is the ſeat of ſin, and where he is defiled, he muſt be ſanctified; and where ſin lives, there it muſt die: it muſt be crucified. Cuſtom in evil hath made it natural to men to do evil; and as the ſoul rules the body, ſo this corrupt nature ſways the whole man: but ſtill, it is all from within.

§. IV. Experience teaches every ſon and daughter of Adam an aſſent to this; for the enemies temptations are ever directed to the mind, which is within: if they take not, the ſoul ſins not; if they are embraced, luſt is preſently conceived, (that is, inordinate deſires) 'luſt conceived, brings forth ſin; and ſin finiſhed, (that is, acted) brings forth 'death.' Here is both the cauſe and the effect, the very genealogy of ſin, its riſe and end.

Jam. i. 15.

In all this, the heart of evil man is the devil's mint, his work-houſe, the place of his reſidence, where he exerciſes his power and art. And therefore the redemption of the ſoul is aptly called, the deſtruction of the works of the devil, and bringing in of everlaſting righteouſneſs, When the Jews would have defamed Chriſt's miracle of caſting out devils, by a blaſphemous imputation of it to the power of Beelzebub, he ſays, 'That 'no man can enter a ſtrong man's houſe, and ſpoil his goods, till he firſt bind the ſtrong 'man.' Which, as it ſhews the contrariety that was between Beelzebub, and the power by which he diſpoſſeſſed him; ſo it teaches us to know, that the ſouls of the wicked are the devil's houſe, and that his goods, his evil works, can never be deſtroyed, till firſt he that wrought them, and keeps the houſe, be bound. All which makes it eaſy to know, where the croſs muſt be taken up, by which alone the ſtrong man muſt be bound, his goods ſpoiled, and his temptations reſiſted: this is, within, in the heart of man.

1 John iii. 8.
Mark iii. 27.

§. V. But in the next place, how, and in what manner is the croſs to be daily borne?

The way, like the croſs, is ſpiritual: that is, an inward ſubmiſſion of the ſoul to the will of God, as it is manifeſted by the light of Chriſt in the conſciences of men: though it be contrary to their own inclinations. For example: when evil preſents, that which ſhews the evil does alſo tell them, they ſhould not yield to it; and if they cloſe with its counſel, it gives them power to eſcape it. But they that look and gaze upon the temptation, at laſt fall in with it, and are overcome by it; the conſequence of which is guilt and judgment. Therefore, as the croſs of Chriſt is that ſpirit and power in men, though not of men, but of God, which croſſeth and reproveth their fleſhly luſts and affections: ſo the way of taking up the croſs is, an intire reſignation of ſoul to the diſcoveries and requirings of it: not to conſult their worldly pleaſure, or carnal eaſe, or intereſt, (for ſuch are captivated in a moment) but continually to watch againſt the very appearances of evil, and by the obedience of faith, that is, of true love to and confidence in God, chearfully to offer up, to the death of the croſs, that evil part, that Judas in themſelves, which, not enduring

1668. Chap. III.

enduring the heat of the ſiege, and being impatient in the hour of temptation, would, by its near relation to the tempter, more eaſily betray their ſouls into his hands.

§. VI. O this ſhews to every experience, how hard it is to be a true diſciple of Jeſus! the way is narrow indeed, and the gate very ſtrait, where not a word, no not a thought muſt ſlip the watch, or eſcape judgment: ſuch circumſpection, ſuch caution, ſuch patience, ſuch conſtancy, ſuch holy fear and trembling. This gives an eaſy interpretation to that hard ſaying, 'fleſh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God:' thoſe that are captivated with fleſhly luſts and affections; for they cannot bear the croſs; and they that cannot endure the croſs, muſt never have the crown. To reign, it is neceſſary firſt to ſuffer.

Mat. xxiv. 42. ch. xxv. 13. ch. xxvi. 38.--42. Phil. ii. 12. 1 Th. iii. 5. 1 Cor. xv. 50.

CHAP. IV.

§. 1. What is the great work of the croſs? The anſwer to this of great moment. §. 2. The work of the croſs is ſelf-denial. §. 3. What was the cup and croſs of Chriſt? §. 4. What is our cup and croſs? §. 5. Our duty is to follow Chriſt as our captain. §. 6. Of the diſtinction upon ſelf, a lawful and unlawful ſelf. §. 7. What the lawful ſelf is. §. 8. That it is to be denied in ſome caſes, by Chriſt's doctrine and example. §. 9. By the apoſtles pattern. §. 10. The danger of preferring lawful ſelf, above our duty to God. §. 11. The reward of ſelf-denial an excitement to it. §. 12. This doctrine as old as Abraham. §. 13. His obedience of faith memorable. §. 14. Job a great inſtance of ſelf-denial, his contentment. §. 15. Moſes alſo a mighty example, his neglect of Pharaoh's court. §. 16. His choice. §. 17. The reaſon of it, viz. the recompence of reward. §. 18. Iſaiah no inconſiderable inſtance, who of a courtier became an holy prophet. §. 19. Theſe inſtances concluded with that of holy Daniel, his patience and integrity, and the ſucceſs they had upon the king. §. 20. There might be many mentioned to confirm this bleſſed doctrine. §. 21. All muſt be left for Chriſt, as men would be ſaved. §. 22. The way of God is a way of faith and ſelf-denial. §. 23. An earneſt ſupplication and exhortation to all to attend upon theſe things.

Chap. IV. Q. BUT fourthly, what is the great work and buſineſs of the croſs reſpecting man?

Anſw. §. I. This indeed is of that mighty moment to be truly, plainly and throughly anſwered, that all that went before ſeems only to ſerve for preface to it; and miſcarrying in it, to be no leſs than a miſguidance of the ſoul about its way to bleſſedneſs. I ſhall therefore purſue the queſtion, with God's help, and the beſt knowledge he hath given me, in the experience of ſeveral years diſcipleſhip.

The great work and buſineſs of the croſs of Chriſt, in man, is ſelf-denial; a word, as of much depth in itſelf, ſo of ſore contradiction to the world; little underſtood, but leſs embraced by it; yet it muſt be borne for all that. The Son of God is gone before us, and by the bitter cup he drank, and baptiſm he ſuffered, has left us an example, that we ſhould follow his ſteps. Which made him put that hard queſtion to the wife of Zebedee and her two ſons, upon her ſolliciting that one might ſit at his right, and the other at his left hand in his kingdom; 'are ye able to drink of the cup that I ſhall drink 'of, and to be baptized with the baptiſm I am baptized with?' It ſeems their faith was ſtrong; they anſwered, we are able. Upon which he replied, 'ye ſhall drink indeed 'of my cup, and be baptized with the baptiſm I am baptized with;' but their reward he left to his Father.

Mat. xx. 21, 22, 23

§. III. What was his cup he drank, and baptiſm he ſuffered? I anſwer; they were the denial and offering up of himſelf by the eternal ſpirit to the will of God, undergoing the tribulations of his life, and agonies of his death upon the croſs, for man's ſalvation.

§. IV. What is our cup and croſs that we ſhould drink and ſuffer? They are the denial and offering up of ourſelves, by the ſame ſpirit, to do or ſuffer the will of God for his ſervice and glory: which is the true life and obedience of the croſs of Jeſus: narrow ſtill, but before, an unbeaten way. For when there was none to help, not one to open the ſeals, to give knowledge, to direct the courſe of poor man's recovery, he came in the greatneſs of his love and ſtrength; and though clothed with the infirmities of a mortal man, being within fortified by the almightineſs of an immortal God, he travelled through all the ſtraits and difficulties of humanity; and firſt, of all others, trod the untrodden path to bleſſedneſs.

§. V. O come let us follow him, the moſt unwearied, the moſt victorious captain of our ſalvation! to whom all the great Alexanders and mighty Cæſars of the world are leſs than the pooreſt ſoldier of their camps could be to them. True, they were all great princes of their kind, and conquerors too, but on very differing principles. For Chriſt made himſelf of no reputation to ſave mankind; but theſe plentifully ruined people, to augment theirs. They vanquiſhed others, not themſelves; Chriſt conquered ſelf, that ever vanquiſhed them: of merit therefore the moſt excellent prince and conqueror.

queror. beſides, they advanced their empire by rapine and blood, but he by ſuffering and perſuaſion: he never by compulſion, they always by force, prevailed. Miſery and ſlavery followed all their victories; his brought greater freedom and felicity to thoſe he overcame. In all they did, they ſought to pleaſe themſelves; in all he did, he aimed to pleaſe his Father, who is God of gods, King of kings, and Lord of lords.

It is this moſt perfect pattern of ſelf-denial we muſt follow, if ever we will come to glory: to do which, let us conſider ſelf-denial in its true diſtinction and extent.

§. VI. There is a lawful and unlawful ſelf, and both muſt be denied for the ſake of him, that in ſubmiſſion to the will of God counted nothing dear, that he might ſave us. And tho' the world be ſcarcely in any part of it at that paſs, as yet to need that leſſon of the denial of lawful ſelf, that every day moſt greedily ſacrifices to the pleaſure of unlawful ſelf: yet to take the whole thing before me, and for that it may poſſibly meet with ſome that are ſo far advanced in this ſpiritual warfare, as to receive ſome ſervice from it, I ſhall at leaſt touch upon it.

§. VII. The lawful ſelf, which we are to deny, is that conveniency, eaſe, enjoyment and plenty, which in themſelves are ſo far from being evil, that they are the bounty and bleſſings of God to us: as huſband, wife, child, houſe, land, reputation, liberty, and life itſelf: theſe are God's favours, which we may enjoy with lawful pleaſure, and juſtly improve as our honeſt intereſt. But when God requires them, at what time ſoever the lender calls for them, or is pleaſed to try our affections by our parting with them; I ſay, when they are brought in competition with him, they muſt not be preferred, they muſt be denied. Chriſt himſelf deſcended from the glory of his Father, and willingly made himſelf of no reputation among men, that he might make us of ſome with God; and from the quality of thinking it no robbery to be equal with God, he humbled himſelf to the poor form of a ſervant; yea, the ignominious death of the croſs, that he might deliver us an example of pure humility, and entire ſubmiſſion to the will of our heavenly Father.

Phil. ii. 5, 6, 7, 8.

§. VIII. It is the doctrine he teaches us in theſe words: 'he that loveth father or 'mother, ſon or daughter, more than me, he is not worthy of me.' Again, 'who-'ſoever he be of you, that forſaketh not all that he hath, cannot be my diſciple.' And he plainly told the young rich man, that if he would have eternal life, he ſhould ſell all, and follow him: a doctrine ſad to him, as it is to thoſe, that like him (for all their high pretences to religion) in truth love their poſſeſſions more than Chriſt. This doctrine of ſelf-denial is the condition to eternal happineſs: 'he that will come after me, let 'him deny himſelf, and take up his croſs, and follow me.' Let him do as I do: as if he had ſaid, he muſt do as I do, or he cannot be as I am, the ſon of God.

Mat. x. 37.
Luke xiv. 33.
Mark x. 21, 22.
Mat. xvi. 24.

§. IX. This made thoſe honeſt fiſhermen quit their lawful trades, and follow him, when he called them to it; and others, that waited for the conſolation of Iſrael, to offer up their eſtates, reputations, liberties, and alſo lives, to the diſpleaſure and fury of their kindred, and the government they lived under, for the ſpiritual advantage that accrued to them, by their faithful adherence to his holy doctrine. True, many would have excuſed their following of him in that parable of the feaſt: ſome had bought land, ſome had married wives, and others had bought yokes of oxen, and could not come; that is, an immoderate love of the world hindered them: their lawful enjoyments, from ſervants, became their idols; they worſhipped them more than God, and would not quit them, to come to God. But this is recorded to their reproach: and we may herein ſee the power of ſelf upon the worldly man, and the danger that comes to him by the abuſe of lawful things. What, thy wife dearer to thee than thy Saviour! and thy land and oxen preferred before thy ſoul's ſalvation! O beware, that thy comforts prove not ſnares firſt, and then curſes: to over-rate them, is to provoke him that gave them to take them away again: come and follow him that giveth life eternal to the ſoul.

Luke xiv. 18, 19, 20.

§. X. Wo to them that have their hearts in their earthly poſſeſſions! for when they are gone, their heaven is gone with them. It is too much the ſin of the beſt part of the world, that they ſtick in the comforts of it: and it is lamentable to behold how their affections are bemired, and entangled with their conveniencies and accommodations in it. The true ſelf-denying man is a pilgrim; but the ſelfiſh man is an inhabitant of the world: the one uſes it, as men do ſhips, to tranſport themſelves or tackle in a journey, that is, to get home; the other looks no farther, whatever he prates, than to be fixed in fulneſs and eaſe here, and likes it ſo well, that if he could, he would not exchange. However, he will not trouble himſelf to think of the other world, till he is ſure he muſt live no longer in this: but then, alas! it will prove too late; not to Abraham, but to Dives, he muſt go; the ſtory is as true as ſad.

§. XI. But on the other hand, it is not for nought, that the diſciples of Jeſus deny themſelves; and indeed, Chriſt himſelf had the eternal joy in his eye: for the joy that was ſet before him (ſays the author to the Hebrews) he endured the croſs; that is, he denied himſelf, and bore the reproaches and death of the wicked: and deſpiſed the ſhame, to wit, the diſhonour and deriſion of the world. It made him not afraid or ſhrink, he contemned it: and is ſet down on the right hand of the throne of God. And to

Heb. xii. 2.

1668. Chap. IV. Mat. xix. 27, 28, 29. to their encouragement, and great conſolation, when Peter aſked him, what they ſhould have that had forſaken all to follow him? he anſwered them, ‘ verily I ſay unto you, that ye which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of man ſhall ſit on the throne of his glory, ye alſo ſhall ſit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Iſrael,’ that were then in an apoſtacy from the life and power of godlineſs. This was the lot of his diſciples; the more immediate companions of his tribulations, and firſt meſſengers of his kingdom. But the next that follows is to all: ‘ and every one that hath forſaken houſes, or brethren, or ſiſters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's ſake, ſhall receive an hundred fold, and ſhall inherit everlaſting life.’ It was this recompence of reward, this eternal crown of righteouſneſs, that in every age has raiſed, in the ſouls of the juſt, an holy neglect, yea, contempt of the world. To this is owing the conſtancy of the martyrs, as to their blood the triumph of the truth.

Gen. xii. §. XII. Nor is this a new doctrine; it is as old as Abraham. In ſeveral moſt remarkable inſtances, his life was made up of ſelf-denial. Firſt, in quitting his own land, where we may well ſuppoſe him ſettled in the midſt of plenty, at leaſt ſufficiency: and why? Becauſe God called him. Indeed this ſhould be reaſon enough; but ſuch is the world's degeneracy, that in fact it is not: and the ſame act, upon the ſame inducement, in any now, though praiſed in Abraham, would be derided. So apt are people not to underſtand what they commend; nay, to deſpiſe thoſe actions, when they meet them in the people of their own times, which they pretend to admire in their anceſtors.

§. XIII. But he obeyed: the conſequence was, that God gave him a mighty land. This was the firſt reward of his obedience. The next was, a ſon in his old age; and Gen. xviii. which greatened the bleſſing, after it had been in nature, paſt the time of his wife's bearing of children. Yet God called for his darling, their only child, the joy of their age, the ſon of a miracle, and he upon whom the fulfilling of the promiſe made to Abraham did depend. For this ſon, I ſay, God called: a mighty trial, that which, one would have thought, might very well have overturned his faith, and ſtumbled his integrity; at leaſt have put him upon this diſpute in himſelf: this command is unreaſonable and cruel; it is the tempter's, it cannot be God's. For, is it to be thought that God gave me a ſon to make a ſacrifice of him? That the father ſhould be butcher of his only child? Again, that he ſhould require me to offer up the ſon of his own promiſe, by whom his covenant is to be performed? this is incredible. I ſay, thus Abraham might naturally enough have argued, to withſtand the voice of God, and indulge chap. xxi. his great affections to his beloved Iſaac. But good old Abraham, that knew the voice that had promiſed him a ſon, had not forgot to know it, when it required him back again: he diſputes not, tho' it looked ſtrange, and perhaps with ſome ſurprize and horror, as a man. He had learned to believe, that God that gave him a child by a miracle, could work another to preſerve or reſtore him. His affections could not balance his duty, much leſs overcome his faith; for he received him in a way that would let him doubt of nothing that God had promiſed of him.

To the voice of this Almightineſs he bows, builds an altar, binds his only ſon upon it, kindles the fire, and ſtretches forth his hand to take the knife: but the angel ſtopped the ſtroke. ‘Hold, Abraham, thy integrity is proved.’ What followed? A ram ſerved, and Iſaac was his again. This ſhews how little ſerves, where all is reſigned, and how mean a ſacrifice contents the Almighty, where the heart is approved. So that 'tis not the ſacrifice that recommends the heart, but the heart that gives the ſacrifice acceptance.

God often touches our beſt comforts, and calls for that which we moſt love, and are leaſt willing to part with. Not that he always takes it utterly away, but to prove the ſoul's integrity, to caution us from exceſſes, and that we may remember God, the author of thoſe bleſſings we poſſeſs, and live looſe to them. I ſpeak my experience: the way to keep our enjoyments, is to reſign them; and tho' that be hard, 'tis ſweet to ſee them returned, as Iſaac was to his father Abraham, with more love and bleſſing than before. O ſtupid world! O worldly chriſtians! Not only ſtrangers, but enemies to this excellent faith! and whilſt ſo, the reward of it you can never know.

§. XIV. But Job preſſed hard upon Abraham: his ſelf-denial alſo was very ſignal. For when the meſſengers of his afflictions came thick upon him, one doleful ſtory after another, till he was left as naked as when he was born; the firſt thing he did, he fell to the ground, and worſhipped that power, and kiſſed that hand that ſtripped him: ſo far from murmuring, that he concludes his loſſes of eſtate and children with theſe words: Job. i. 21. ‘ naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked ſhall I return: the Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, bleſſed be the name of the Lord.’ O the deep faith, patience, and contentment of this excellent man! one would have thought, this repeated news of ruin had been enough to have overſet his confidence in God: but it did not; that ſtay'd him. But indeed he tells us why: his Redeemer lived; ‘ I know (ſays he) Job xix. 25, 26. that my Redeemer lives.’ And it appeared he did; for he had redeemed him from the world: his heart was not in his worldly comforts; his hope lived above the joys of time, and troubles of mortality; not tempted by the one, nor ſhaken by the other; but firmly believed, ‘ that when after his ſkin worms ſhould have conſumed his body, yet ‘ with his eyes he ſhould ſee God.’ Thus was the heart of Job both ſubmitted to, and comforted in, the will of God.

§. XV. Moſes is the next great example in ſacred ſtory for remarkable ſelf-denial, before the times of Chriſt’s appearance in the fleſh. He had been ſaved, when an infant, by an extraordinary providence, and it ſeems, by what followed, for an extraordinary ſervice: Pharoah’s daughter (whoſe compaſſion was the means of his preſervation when the king decreed the ſlaughter of the Hebrew males) took him for her ſon, and gave him the education of her father’s court. His own graceful preſence and extraordinary abilities, joined with her love for him and intereſt in her father to promote him, muſt have rendered him, if not capable of ſucceſſion, at leaſt of being chief miniſter of affairs under that wealthy and powerful prince. For Egypt was then what Athens and Rome were after, the moſt famous for learning, arts and glory.

Exod. ii. 1--11.

§. XVI. But Moſes, ordained for other work, and guided by a better ſtar, an higher principle, no ſooner came to years of diſcretion, than the impiety of Egypt, and the oppreſſions of his brethren there, grew a burthen too heavy for him to bear. And though ſo wiſe and good a man could not want thoſe generous and grateful reſentments, that became the kindneſs of the king’s daughter to him; yet he had alſo ‘ ſeen that God that ‘ was inviſible,’ and did not dare to live in the eaſe and plenty of Pharoah’s houſe, whilſt his poor brethren were required ‘ to make brick without ſtraw.’

Heb. xi. 24, 27.
Exod. v. 7, 16.

Thus the fear of the Almighty taking deep hold of his heart, he nobly refuſed to be called the ſon of Pharoah’s daughter, and choſe rather a life of affliction with the moſt deſpiſed and oppreſſed Iſraelites, and to be the companion of their temptations and jeopardies, ‘ than to enjoy the pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon;’ eſteeming the reproaches of Chriſt (which he ſuffered for making that unworldly choice) greater riches than all the treaſures of that kingdom.

§. XVII. Nor was he ſo fooliſh as they thought him; he had reaſon on his ſide: for it is ſaid, ‘ He had an eye to the recompence of reward:’ he did but refuſe a leſſer benefit for a greater. In this his wiſdom tranſcended that of the Egyptians; for they made the preſent world their choice (as uncertain as the weather) and ſo loſt that which has no end. Moſes looked deeper, and weighed the enjoyments of this life in the ſcales of eternity, and found they made no weight there. He governed himſelf not by the immediate poſſeſſion, but the nature and duration of the reward. His faith corrected his affections, and taught him to ſacrifice the pleaſure of ſelf to the hope he had of a future more excellent recompence.

§. XVIII. Iſaiah was no inconſiderable inſtance of this bleſſed ſelf-denial; who of a courtier became a prophet, and left the worldly intereſts of the one for the faith, patience and ſufferings of the other. For his choice did not only loſe him the favour of men; but their wickedneſs, enraged at his integrity to God, in his fervent and bold reproofs of them, made a martyr of him in the end. For they barbarouſly ſaw’d him aſunder in the reign of king Manaſſes. Thus died that excellent man, and commonly call’d the Evangelical prophet.

Dorotheus in his lives of the prophets.

§. XIX. I ſhall add, of many, one example more, and that is from the fidelity of Daniel; an holy and wiſe young man, that when his external advantages came in competition with his duty to Almighty God, he relinquiſhed them all: and inſtead of being ſollicitous how to ſecure himſelf, as one minding nothing leſs, he was, with utmoſt hazard of himſelf, moſt careful how to preſerve the honour of God, by his fidelity to his will. And though at the firſt it expoſed him to ruin, yet, as an inſtance of great encouragement to all, that like him will chuſe to keep a good conſcience in an evil time, at laſt it advanced him greatly in the world; and the God of Daniel was made famous and terrible through his perſeverance, even in the eyes of heathen kings.

§. XX. What ſhall I ſay of all the reſt, who, counting nothing dear that they might do the will of God, abandoned their worldly comforts, and expoſed their eaſe and ſafety, as often as the heavenly viſion called them, to the wrath and malice of degenerate princes and an apoſtate church? More eſpecially Jeremiah, Ezekiel and Micah, that after they had denied themſelves in obedience to the divine voice, ſealed up their teſtimony with their blood.

Dorotheus, ib.

Thus was ſelf-denial the practice and glory of the antients, that were predeceſſors to the coming of Chriſt in the fleſh: and ſhall we hope to go to heaven without it now, when our Saviour himſelf is become the moſt excellent example of it? And that not as ſome would fain have it, viz. ‘ for us, that we need not;’ but for us, that we might deny ourſelves, and ſo be the true followers of his bleſſed example.

1 Pet. ii. 20, 21, 22.

§ XXI. Whoever therefore thou art, that wouldeſt do the will of God, but fainteſt in thy deſires from the oppoſition of worldly conſiderations; remember I tell thee, in the name of Chriſt, that he that prefers father or mother, ſiſter or brother, wiſe or child, houſe or land, reputation, honour, office, liberty or life, before the teſtimony of the light of Jeſus in his own conſcience, ſhall be rejected of him, in the ſolemn and general inqueſt upon the world, when all ſhall be judged, and receive according to the deeds done, not the profeſſion made, in this life. It was the doctrine of Jeſus, 'that if thy Mat. v. 29, 30. 'right hand offend thee, thou muſt cut it off; and if thy right eye offend thee, thou 'muſt pluck it out:' that is, if the moſt dear, the moſt uſeful and tender comforts thou enjoyeſt, ſtand in thy ſoul's way, and interrupt thy obedience to the voice of God, and thy conformity to his holy will revealed in thy ſoul, thou art engaged under the penalty of damnation to part with them.

§. XXII. The way of God is a way of faith, as dark to ſenſe, as mortal to ſelf. 'Tis the children of obedience, who count with holy Paul, all things droſs and dung, that they may win Chriſt, and know and walk in this narrow way. Speculation will not do, Iſa. i. 19. nor can refined notions enter, 'the obedient only eat the good of this land:' 'They that John vii. 17. 'do his will' (ſays the bleſſed Jeſus) ſhall know of my doctrine; them he will inſtruct. There is no room for inſtruction, where lawful ſelf is lord, and not ſervant. For ſelf cannot receive it: that which ſhould, is oppreſſed by ſelf; fearful, and dares not. O what will my father or mother ſay? How will my huſband uſe me? Or, finally, what will the magiſtrate do with me? For though I have a moſt powerful perſuaſion, and clear conviction upon my ſoul, of this or that thing, yet conſidering how unmodiſh it is, what enemies it has, and how ſtrange and ſingular I ſhall ſeem to them, I hope God will pity my weakneſs: if I ſink, I am but fleſh and blood; it may be hereafter he may better enable me; and there is time enough. Thus ſelfiſh, fearful man.

But deliberating is ever worſt; for the ſoul loſes in parly: the manifeſtation brings power with it. Never did God convince people, but, upon ſubmiſſion, he impowered them. He requires nothing without ability to perform it: that were mocking, not ſaving of men. It is enough for thee to do thy duty, that God ſhews thee thy duty; provided thou cloſeſt with that light and ſpirit, by which he gives thee that knowledge. They that want power, are ſuch as do not receive Chriſt in his convictions upon the ſoul; and ſuch will always want it: but ſuch as do, they receive power (like thoſe of old) to become the children of God, through the pure obedience of faith.

§. XXIII. Wherefore, let me beſeech you, by the love and mercy of God, by the life and death of Chriſt, by the power of his ſpirit, and the hope of immortality, that you, whoſe hearts are eſtabliſhed in your temporal comforts, and ſo lovers of ſelf more than of theſe heavenly things, would 'let the time paſt ſuffice:' that you would not think it enough to be clear of ſuch impieties, as too many are found in, whilſt your inordinate love of lawful things has defiled your enjoyment of them, and drawn your hearts from the fear, love, obedience, and ſelf-denial of a true diſciple of Jeſus. Tack about then, and hearken to the ſtill voice in thy conſcience; it tells thee thy ſins, and of miſery in them. It gives a lively diſcovery of the very vanity of the world, and opens to thy ſoul ſome proſpect of eternity, and the comforts of the juſt that are at reſt. If thou adhereſt to this, it will divorce thee from ſin and ſelf: thou wilt ſoon find, that the power of its charms exceed that of the wealth, honour, and beauty of the world, and finally will give thee that tranquillity, which the ſtorms of time can never ſhipwreck nor diſorder. Here all thine enjoyments are bleſt; though ſmall, yet great by that preſence that is within them.

Even in this world the righteous have the better of it, for they uſe the world without rebuke, becauſe they do not abuſe it. They ſee and bleſs the hand that feeds, and cloaths, and preſerves them. And as by beholding him in all his gifts, they do not adore them, but him, ſo the ſweetneſs of his bleſſings that gives them, is an advantage ſuch have upon thoſe that ſee him not. Beſides, in their increaſe they are not lifted up, nor in their adverſities are they caſt down: and why? Becauſe they are moderated in the one, and comforted in the other, by his divine preſence.

In ſhort, heaven is the throne, and the earth but the footſtool, of that man, that hath ſelf under foot. And thoſe that know that ſtation will not eaſily be moved; ſuch learn Eph. v. 15, 16. to number their days, that they may not be ſurprized with their diſſolution; and to 're'deem their time, becauſe the days are evil;' remembering, that they are but ſtewards, and muſt deliver up their accompts to an impartial judge. Therefore, not to ſelf, but to him they live, and in him die, and are bleſſed with them that die in the Lord. And thus I conclude my diſcourſe of the right uſe of lawful ſelf.

CHAP.

CHAP. V.

§. 1. Of unlawful ſelf, 'tis twofold, 1. In Religion, 2. In Morality. §. 2. Of thoſe that are moſt formal, ſuperſtitious and pompous in worſhip. §. 3. God's rebuke of carnal apprehenſions. §. 4. Chriſt drew off his diſciples from the Jewiſh exterior worſhip, and inſtituted a more ſpiritual one. §. 5. Stephen is plain and full in this matter. §. 6. Paul refers the temple of God twice to man. §. 7. Of the croſs of theſe worldly worſhippers. §. 8. Fleſh and blood make their croſs, therefore cannot be crucified by it. §. 9. They are yokes without reſtraint. §. 10. Of the gawdineſs of their croſs, and their reſpect to it. §. 11. A recluſe life no true goſpel abnegation. §. 12. A compariſon between Chriſt's ſelf-denial and theirs: his leads to purity in the world, theirs to voluntary impriſonment, that they might not be tempted of the world. The miſchief which that example, followed, would do to the world. It deſtroys uſeful ſociety, honeſt labour. A lazy life the uſual refuge of idleneſs, poverty and guilty age. §. 13. Of Chriſt's croſs in this caſe. The impoſſibility that ſuch an external application can remove an internal cauſe. §. 14. An exhortation to the men of this belief, not to deceive themſelves.

§. I. I Am now come to unlawful ſelf, which, more or leſs, is the immediate concernment of much the greater part of mankind. This unlawful ſelf is twofold. Chap. V. 1ſt. That which relates to religious worſhip: 2dly, That which concerns moral and civil converſation in the world. And they are both of infinite conſequence to be conſidered by us. In which I ſhall be as brief as I may, with eaſe to my conſcience, and no injury to the matter.

§. II. That unlawful ſelf in religion, that ought to be mortified by the croſs of Chriſt, is man's invention and performance of worſhip to God, as divine, which is not ſo, either in its inſtitution or performance. In this great error, thoſe people have the van, of all, that attribute to themſelves the name of Chriſtians, that are moſt exterior, pompous, and ſuperſtitious in their worſhip: For they do not only miſs exceedingly, by a ſpiritual unpreparedneſs, in the way of their performing worſhip to God Almighty, who is an eternal ſpirit; but the worſhip itſelf is compoſed of what is utterly inconſiſtent with the very form and practice of Chriſt's doctrine, and the apoſtolical example. For whereas that was plain and ſpiritual, this is gawdy and worldly: Chriſt's moſt inward and mental; their's moſt outward and corporal: that ſuited to the nature of God, who is a ſpirit; this accommodated to the moſt carnal part. So that inſtead of excluding fleſh and blood, behold a worſhip calculated to gratify them: as if the buſineſs were not to preſent God with a worſhip to pleaſe him, but to make one to pleaſe themſelves. A worſhip dreſſed with ſuch ſtately buildings, and imagery, rich furniture and garments, rare voices and muſic, coſtly lamps, wax-candles and perfumes; and all acted with that moſt pleaſing variety, to the external ſenſes, that art can invent, or coſt procure: as if the world were to turn Jew or Egyptian again; or that God was an old man, indeed, and Chriſt a little boy, to be treated with a kind of religious maſk, for ſo they picture him in their temples; and too many in their minds. And the truth is, ſuch a worſhip may very well ſuit ſuch an idea of God: For when men can think him ſuch an one as themſelves, it is not to be wondered, if they addreſs to him, and entertain him in a way that would be moſt pleaſing from others to themſelves.

§. III. But what ſaid the Almighty to ſuch a ſenſual people of old, much upon the like occaſion? 'Thou thoughteſt I was ſuch an one as thyſelf, but I will reprove thee, Pſal. l. 21, 22, 'and ſet thy ſins in order before thee. Now conſider this, ye that forget God, leſt I 23. 'tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver. But to him that ordereth his converſation aright, will I ſhew the ſalvation of God.' This is the worſhip acceptable to him, 'To do juſtice, love mercy, and walk humbly with God,' For he that 'ſearch- Mic. vi. 8. 'eth the heart and tries the reins of man, and ſets his ſins in order before him, who is 'the God of the ſpirits of all fleſh,' looks not to the external fabrick, but internal frame of the ſoul, and inclination of the heart. Nor is it to be ſoberly thought, that he, who is 'cloathed with divine honour and majeſty, who covers himſelf with light, as with a 'garment, who ſtretches out the heavens like a curtain, who layeth the beams of his 'chambers in the deep, who maketh the clouds his chariots, and who walks upon the 'wings of the wind, who maketh his angels ſpirits, and his miniſters a flaming fire, who 'laid the foundation of the earth, that it ſhould not be moved for ever,' can be adequately worſhipped by thoſe human inventions, the refuge of an apoſtate people, from the primitive power of religion, and ſpirituality of chriſtian worſhip.

§. IV. Chriſt drew off his diſciples from the glory and worſhip of the outward temple, and inſtituted a more inward and ſpiritual worſhip, in which he inſtructed his followers, 'Ye ſhall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jeruſalem (ſays Chriſt to the John iv. 21, Samaritan woman) 'worſhip the Father. God is a ſpirit, and they that worſhip him, muſt 24. 'worſhip him in ſpirit and in truth.' As if he had ſaid: for the ſake of the weakneſs of ~~the people~~, God condeſcended in old time, to limit himſelf to an outward time, place, temple and ſervice, in and by which he would be worſhipped: but this was during mens ignorance of his omnipreſence, and that they conſidered not what God is, nor where he is. But I am come to reveal him, to as many as receive me. And I tell you that God is a ſpirit, and he will be worſhipped in ſpirit and in truth. People muſt be acquainted with him as a ſpirit, conſider him, and worſhip him as ſuch. 'Tis not that bodily worſhip, nor theſe ceremonious ſervices, in uſe among you now, that will ſerve, or give acceptance with this God that is a ſpirit: no, you muſt obey his ſpirit that ſtrives with you, to gather you out of the evil of the world; that by bowing to the inſtructions and commands of his ſpirit in your own ſouls, you may know what it is to worſhip him as a ſpirit; then you will underſtand, that 'tis not going to this mountain, nor Jeruſalem, but to do the will of God, to keep his commandments; and commune with thine own heart, and ſin not, take up thy croſs, meditate in his holy law, and follow the example of him whom the Father hath ſent.

Acts vii. 47—51.
Iſa. lxvi. 1, 2.

§. V. Wherefore Stephen, that bold and conſtant martyr of Jeſus, thus told the Jews, when a priſoner at their bar for diſputing about the end of their beloved temple, and its ſervices, (but falſly accuſed of blaſphemy) 'Solomon (ſaid Stephen) built God an houſe; howbeit, God dwelleth not in temples made with hands; as ſaith the prophet, Heaven is my throne, and earth is my footſtool; what houſe will ye build me, ſaith the Lord? Or what is the place of my reſt? Hath not my hand made all theſe things?' Behold a total overthrow to all worldly temples, and their ceremonious appendencies! The martyr follows his blow upon thoſe apoſtate Jews, who were of thoſe times, the pompous, ceremonious, worldly worſhippers: 'Ye ſtiff-necked and uncircumciſed in heart and ears, ye do always reſiſt the Holy Ghoſt; as did your fathers, ſo do ye.' As if he had told them: no matter for your outward temple, rites, and ſhadowy ſervices, your pretenſions to ſucceſſion in nature from Abraham, and by religion from Moſes; you are reſiſters of the ſpirit, gainſayers of its inſtructions: You will not bow to its counſel, nor are your hearts right towards God: You are the ſucceſſors of your father's iniquity; and though verbal admirers, yet none of the ſucceſſors of the prophets in faith and life.

Iſa. lxvi. 2.

But the prophet Iſaiah carries it a little farther than is cited by Stephen. For after having declared what is not God's houſe, 'the place where his honour dwells,' immediately follow theſe words: 'But to this man will I look, even to him that is poor, and of a contrite ſpirit, and trembleth at my word.' Behold, O carnal and ſuperſtitious man, the true worſhipper, and the place of God's reſt! This is the houſe and temple of Him whom the heaven of heavens cannot contain; an houſe ſelf cannot build, nor the art nor power of man prepare or conſecrate.

1 Cor. vi. 9.
2 Cor. vi. 16.
Prov. viii. 22, 23, 25, 31.
Hag. ii. 9.

§ VI. Paul, that great apoſtle of the Gentiles, twice expreſly refers the word temple to man: once in his firſt epiſtle to the church at Corinth; 'Know ye not (ſays he) that you are the temples of the Holy Ghoſt, which is in you, which ye have of God?' &c. and not the building of man's hand and art. Again, he tells the ſame people (in his Second epiſtle) 'For ye are the temple of the living God, as God hath ſaid;' (and then cites God's words by the prophet) 'I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they ſhall be my people.' This is the evangelical temple, the chriſtian church, whoſe ornaments are not the embroideries and furnitures of worldly art and wealth, but the graces of the ſpirit; 'meekneſs, love, faith, patience, ſelf-denial, and charity.' Here it is, that the eternal Wiſdom, that was with God from everlaſting, before the hills were brought forth, or the mountains laid, chuſes to dwell, 'rejoicing (ſays Wiſdom) in the habitable part of the earth, and my delights were with the ſons of men;' not in houſes built of wood and ſtone. This living houſe is more glorious than Solomon's dead houſe; and of which his was but a figure, as he, the builder, was of Chriſt, who 'builds us up an holy temple to God.' 'Twas promis'd of old, that 'the glory of the latter houſe ſhould tranſcend the glory of the former;' which may be applied to this: not one outward temple or houſe to excel another in outward luſtre; for where is the benefit of that? but the divine glory, the beauty of holineſs in the goſpel-houſe or church, made up of renewed believers, ſhould exceed the outward glory of Solomon's temple, which in compariſon of the latter days, was but fleſh to ſpirit, fading reſemblances to the eternal ſubſtance.

But for all this, chriſtians have meeting-places, yet not in Jewiſh or Heathen ſtate, but plain; void of pomp and ceremony; ſuiting the ſimplicity of their bleſſed Lord's life and doctrine. For God's preſence is not with the houſe, but with them that are in it, who are the goſpel-church, and not the houſe. O! that ſuch as call themſelves chriſtians, knew but a real ſanctity in themſelves, by the waſhing of God's regenerating grace; inſtead of that imaginary ſanctity aſcribed to places, they would then know what the church is, and where, in theſe evangelical days, is the place of God's appearance. This made the prophet David ſay, 'The King's daughter is all glorious within, her cloathing is of wrought gold.' What is the glory that is within the true church, and that gold that makes up that inward glory? Tell me, O ſuperſtitious man! is it thy ſtately temples, altars, carpets, tables, tapeſtries; thy veſtments, organs, voices, candles, lamps, cenſers, plate and jewels, with the like furniture of thy wordly temples? No ſuch matter; they bear no proportion with the divine adornment of the King of heaven's daughter, the bleſſed and redeemed church of Chriſt. Miſerable apoſtacy that it is! and a wretched ſupplement in the loſs and abſence of the apoſtolick life, the ſpiritual glory of the primitive church.

§ VII. But yet ſome of theſe admirers of external pomp and glory in worſhip, would be thought lovers of the Croſs, and to that end have made to themſelves many. But alas! what hopes can there be of reconciling that to chriſtianity, that the nearer it comes to its reſemblance, the farther off it is in reality? For their very croſs and ſelf-denial, are moſt unlawful ſelf: and whilſt they fancy to worſhip God thereby, they moſt dangerouſly err from the true croſs of Chriſt, and that holy abnegation that was of his bleſſed appointment. 'Tis true, they have got a croſs, but it ſeems to be in the room of the true one; and ſo mannerly, that it will do as they will have it that wear it: for inſtead of mortifying their wills by it, they made it, and uſe it according to them. So that the croſs is become their enſign, that do nothing but what they liſt. Yet by that they would be thought his diſciples, that never did his own will, but the will of his heavenly Father.

§. VIII. This is ſuch a croſs as fleſh and blood can carry, for fleſh and blood invented it; therefore not the croſs of Chriſt, that is to crucify fleſh and blood. Thouſands of them have no more virtue than a chip; poor empty ſhadows, not ſo much as images of the true one. Some carry them for charms about them, but never repel one evil with them. They ſin with them upon their backs; and though they put them in their boſoms, their beloved luſts lie there too without the leaſt diſquiet. They are as dumb as Elijah's mock-gods; no life nor power in them: and how ſhould they, whoſe matter is earthly, and whoſe figure and workmanſhip are but the invention and labour of worldly artiſts? Is it poſſible that ſuch croſſes ſhould mend their makers? Surely not. 1 Kings xviii. 27.

§. IX. Theſe are yokes without reſtraint, and croſſes that never contradict: a whole cart-load of them would leave a man as unmortified as they find him. Men may ſooner knock their brains out with them, than their ſins: and that, I fear, too many of them know in their very conſciences that uſe them, indeed, adore them, and (which can only happen to the falſe croſs) are proud of them too, ſince the true one leaves no pride where it is truly borne.

§. X. For as their religion, ſo their croſs is very gawdy and triumphant: but in what? In precious metals and gems, the ſpoil of ſuperſtition upon the people's pockets. Theſe croſſes are made of earthly treaſure, inſtead of learning their hearts that wear them to deny it: and like men, they are reſpected by their finery. A rich croſs ſhall have many gazers and admirers; the mean, in this, as other things, are more neglected. I could appeal to themſelves of this great vanity and ſuperſtition. O! how very ſhort is this of the bleſſed croſs of Jeſus, that takes away the ſins of the world!

§. XI. Nor is a recluſe life, (the boaſted righteouſneſs of ſome) much more commendable, or one whit nearer to the nature of the true croſs: for if it be not unlawful as other things are, it is unnatural, which true religion teaches not. The chriſtian convent and monaſtery are within, where the ſoul is encloiſtered from ſin. And this religious houſe the true followers of Chriſt carry about with them, who exempt not themſelves from the converſation of the world, though they keep themſelves from the evil of the world in their converſation. That is a lazy, ruſty, unprofitable ſelf-denial, burdenſome to others, to feed their idleneſs; religious bedlams, where people are kept up, leſt they ſhould do miſchief abroad; patience per force; ſelf-denial againſt their will, rather ignorant than virtuous; and out of the way of temptation, than conſtant in it. No thanks if they commit not, what they are not tempted to commit. What the eye views not, the heart craves not, as well as rues not.

§. XII. The croſs of Chriſt is of another nature: it truly overcomes the world, and leads a life of purity in the face of its allurements: they that bear it, are not thus chained up, for fear they ſhould bite; nor locked up, leſt they ſhould be ſtole away: no, they receive power from Chriſt their captain, to reſiſt the evil, and do that which is good in the ſight of God; to deſpiſe the world, and love its reproach above its praiſe: and not only not to offend others, but love thoſe that offend them, though not for offending them. What a world ſhould we have, if every body, for fear of tranſgreſſing, ſhould mew himſelf up within four walls! No ſuch matter; the perfection of chriſtian life extends to every honeſt labour or traffick uſed among men. This ſeverity is not the effect of Chriſt's free ſpirit, but a voluntary, fleſhly humility; meer trammels of their own making and putting on, without preſcription or reaſon. In all which, it is plain, they are their own law-givers, and ſet their own rule, mulct and ranſom: a conſtrained harſhneſs, out of joint to the reſt of the creation: for ſociety is one great end of it, and not to be deſtroyed for fear of evil; but ſin baniſhed that ſpoils it, by ſteady reproof, and a conſpicuous example of tried virtue. True godlineſs does not turn men out of the world, but enables them to live better in it, and excites their endeavours to mend it: ‘not hide ‘their candle under a buſhel, but ſet it upon a table in a candleſtick.’ Beſides, it is a ſelfiſh invention; and that can never be the way of taking up the croſs, which the true croſs is therefore taken up to ſubject. But again, this humour runs away by itſelf, and leaves the world behind to be loſt; chriſtians ſhould keep the helm, and guide the veſſel to its port; not meanly ſteal out at the ſtern of the world, and leave thoſe that are in it without a pilot, to be driven by the fury of evil times, upon the rock or ſand of ruin. In fine, this ſort of life, if taken up by young people, is commonly to cover idleneſs, or to pay portions; to ſave the lazy from the pain of puniſhment, or quality from the diſgrace of poverty: one will not work and the other ſcorns it. If aged, a long life of guilt ſometimes flies to ſuperſtition for refuge; and after having had its own will in other things, would finiſh it in a wilful religion to make God amends.

§. XIII. But taking up the croſs of Jeſus is a more interior exerciſe: it is the circumſpection and diſcipline of the ſoul, in conformity to the divine mind therein revealed. Does not the body follow the ſoul, and not the ſoul the body? Do not ſuch conſider, that no outward cell can ſhut up the ſoul from luſt, the mind from an infinity of unrighteous imaginations? The thoughts of man's heart are evil, and that continually. Evil comes from within, and not from without: how then can an external application remove an internal cauſe; or a reſtraint upon the body, work a confinement of the mind? Leſs much than without doors: for where there is leaſt of action, there is moſt time to think; and if thoſe thoughts are not guided by an higher principle, convents are more miſchievous to the world than exchanges. And yet a retirement is both an excellent and needful thing: crowds and throngs were not much frequented by the ancient holy pilgrims.

§. XIV. But then examine, O man, thy bottom, what it is, and who placed thee there; leſt in the end it ſhould appear, thou haſt put an eternal cheat upon thy own ſoul. I muſt confeſs I am jealous of the ſalvation of my own kind, having found mercy with my heavenly Father: I would have none deceive themſelves to perdition, eſpecially about religion, where people are moſt apt to take all for granted, and loſe infinitely by their own flatteries and neglect. The inward ſteady righteouſneſs of Jeſus is another thing, than all the contrived devotion of poor ſuperſtitious man: and to ſtand approved in the eye of God, excels that bodily exerciſe in religion, reſulting from the invention of men. And the ſoul that is awakened and preſerved by his holy power and ſpirit, lives to him in the way of his own inſtitution, and worſhips him in his own ſpirit, that is, in the holy ſenſe, life, and leadings of it; which indeed is the evangelical worſhip. Not that I would be thought to ſlight a true retirement: for I do not only acknowledge, but admire ſolitude. Chriſt himſelf was an example of it: he loved and choſe to frequent mountains, gardens, ſea-ſides. They are requiſite to the growth of piety; and I reverence the virtue that ſeeks and uſes it; wiſhing there were more of it in the world: but then it ſhould be free, not conſtrained. What benefit to the mind, to have it for a puniſhment, and not a pleaſure? Nay, I have long thought it an error among all ſorts, that uſe not monaſtick lives, that they have no retreats for the afflicted, the tempted, the ſolitary, and the devout; where they might undiſturbedly wait upon God, paſs through their religious exerciſes; and, being thereby ſtrengthened, may, with more power over their own ſpirits, enter into the buſineſs of the world again; tho' the leſs the better to be ſure. For divine pleaſures are found in a free ſolitude.

CHAP. VI.

§. 1. But men of more refined belief and practice are yet concerned in this unlawful ſelf about religion. §. 2. It is the riſe of the performance of worſhip God regards. §. 3. True worſhip is only from an heart prepared by God's ſpirit. §. 4. The ſoul of man dead, without the divine breath of life, and ſo not capable of worſhipping the living God. §. 5. We are not to ſtudy what to pray for. How chriſtians ſhould pray. The aid they have from God. §. 6. The way of obtaining this preparation: it is by waiting, as David and others did of old, in holy ſilence, that their wants and ſupplies are beſt ſeen. §. 7. The whole and the full think they need not this waiting, and ſo uſe it not: but the poor in ſpirit are of another mind; wherefore the Lord hears and fills them with his good things. §. 8. If there were not this preparation, the Jewiſh times would have been more holy and ſpiritual than the goſpel; for even then it was required, and much more now. §. 9. As ſin, ſo formality cannot worſhip God: thus David, Iſaiah, &c. §. 10. God's own forms and inſtitutions hateful to him, unleſs his own ſpirit uſe them; much more thoſe of man's contriving. §. 11. God's children ever met God in his way, not their own; and in his way they always found help and comfort. In Jeremiah's time it was the ſame; his goodneſs was manifeſted to his children that waited truly upon him: it was an inward ſenſe and enjoyment of him they thirſted after. Chriſt charged his diſciples alſo to wait for the ſpirit. §. 12. This doctrine of waiting farther opened, and ended with an alluſion to the pool of Betheſda; a lively figure of inward waiting, and its bleſſed effects. §. 13. Four things neceſſary to worſhip; the ſanctification of the worſhipper, and the conſecration of of the offering, and the thing to be prayed for: and laſtly, faith to pray in: and all muſt be right, that is, of God's giving. §. 14. The great power of faith in prayer; witneſs the importunate widow. The wicked and formal aſk, and receive not; the reaſon why. But Jacob and his true offſpring, the followers of his faith, prevail. §. 15. This ſhews, why Chriſt upbraided his diſciples with their little faith. The neceſſity of faith. Chriſt works no good on men without it. §. 16. This faith is not only poſſible now, but neceſſary. §. 17. What it is, farther unfolded. §. 18. Who the heirs of this faith are; and what were the noble works of it in the former ages of the juſt.

§. I. BUT there be others, of a more refined ſpeculation, and reformed practice, who dare not uſe, and leſs adore, a piece of wood or ſtone, an image of ſilver or gold; nor yet allow of that Jewiſh, or rather Pagan pomp in worſhip, practiſed by others, as if Chriſt's worſhip were of this world, tho' his kingdom be of the other; but are doctrinally averſe to ſuch ſuperſtition, and yet refrain not to bow to their own religious duties, and eſteem their formal performance of ſeveral parts of worſhip, that go againſt the grain of their fleſhly eaſe, and a preciſeneſs therein, no ſmall croſs unto them; and that if they abſtain from groſs and ſcandalous ſins, or if the act be not committed, though the thoughts of it are embraced, and that it has a full career in the mind, they hold themſelves ſafe enough, within the pale of diſcipleſhip, and wall of chriſtianity. But this alſo is too mean a character of the diſcipline of Chriſt's croſs: and thoſe that flatter themſelves with ſuch a ſort of taking it up, will in the end be deceived with a ſandy foundation, and a midnight cry. For ſaid Chriſt, 'but I ſay unto you, that every idle word that men ſhall ſpeak, they ſhall give an account thereof in the day of 'judgment.' Mat. xii. 36.

§. II. For firſt, it is not performing duties of religion, but the riſe of the performance, that God looks at. Men may, and ſome do, croſs their own wills, in their own wills; voluntary omiſſion, or commiſſion: 'who has required this at your hands?' ſaid the Lord of old to the Jews, when they ſeemed induſtrious to have ſerved him; but it was in a way of their own contriving or inventing, and in their own time and will; not with the ſoul truly touched and prepared by the divine power of God; but bodily worſhip only, that the apoſtle tells us, profits little. Not keeping to the manner of taking up the croſs in worſhip, as well as other things, has been a great cauſe of the troubleſome ſuperſtition that is yet in the world. For men have no more brought their worſhip to the teſt, than their ſins: nay, leſs; for they have ignorantly thought the one a ſort of excuſe for the other; and not that their religious performances ſhould need a croſs, or an apology. Iſa. i. 12.

§. III. But true worſhip can only come from an heart prepared by the Lord. This preparation is by the ſanctification of the Spirit; by which, if God's children are led in the general courſe of their lives, (as Paul teaches) much more in their worſhip to their Creator and Redeemer. And whatever prayer be made, or doctrine be uttered, and not from the preparation of the Holy Spirit, it is not acceptable with God: Nor can it be the true evangelical worſhip, which is in ſpirit and truth; that is, by the preparation and aid of the Spirit. For what is an heap of the moſt pathetical words to God Almighty; or the dedication of any place or time to him? He is a ſpirit, to whom words, places and times (ſtrictly conſidered) are improper or inadequate. And tho' they be the inſtruments of public worſhip, they are but bodily and viſible, and cannot carry our requeſts any farther, much leſs recommend them to the inviſible God; by no means: they are for the ſake of the congregation: it is the language of the ſoul God hears; nor can that ſpeak, but by the Spirit; or groan aright to Almighty God, without the aſſiſtance of it. Prov. xvi. 1. Rom. 8. 14.

§. IV. The ſoul of man, however lively in other things, is dead to God, till he breathe the ſpirit of life into it: it cannot live to him, much leſs worſhip him without it. Thus God by Ezekiel tells us, when in a viſion of the reſtoration of mankind, in the perſon of Iſrael, (an uſual way of ſpeaking among the prophets, and as often miſtaken) 'I will 'open your graves (ſaith the Lord) and put my ſpirit in you, and ye ſhall live.' So, tho' Chriſt taught his diſciples to pray, they were, in ſome ſort, diſciples before he taught them; not worldly men, whoſe prayers are an abomination to God. And his teaching them is not an argument that every body muſt ſay that prayer, whether he can ſay it with the ſame heart, and under the ſame qualifications, as his poor diſciples and followers did, or not, as is now too ſuperſtitiouſly and preſumptuouſly practiſed. But rather, that as they then, ſo we now, are not to pray our own prayers, but his; that is, ſuch as he enables us to make, as he enabled them then. Ezek. xxxvii. 12, 13, 14.

§. V. For if we are not to take thought what we ſhall ſay when we come before worldly princes, becauſe it ſhall then be given us; and that it is not we that ſpeak, but the ſpirit of our heavenly Father that ſpeaketh in us; much leſs can our ability be needed, or ought we to ſtudy to ourſelves forms of ſpeech in our approaches to the great Prince of princes, King of kings, and Lord of lords. For be it his greatneſs, we ought not by Chriſt's command: be it our relation to him, as children, we need not: he will Mat. x. 19, 20. Mat. vi.

help us, he is our father; that is, if he be ſo indeed. Thus not only the mouth of the body, but of the ſoul is ſhut, till God opens it; and then he loves to hear the language of it. In which the body ought never to go before the ſoul: his ear is open to ſuch requeſts, and his ſpirit ſtrongly intercedes for thoſe that offer them.

§. VI. But it may be aſked, how ſhall this preparation be obtained?

Pſal. x. 17. I anſwer: by waiting patiently, yet watchfully and intently upon God: ‘ Lord (ſays ‘ the Pſalmiſt) thou haſt heard the deſire of the humble; thou wilt prepare their heart, Prov. xvi. 1. ‘ thou wilt cauſe thine ear to hear:’ and, (ſays Wiſdom) ‘ the preparation of the heart ‘ in man is from the Lord.’ Here it is thou muſt not think thy own thoughts, nor ſpeak thy own words, (which indeed is the ſilence of the holy croſs) but be ſequeſtered from all the confuſed imaginations, that are apt to throng and preſs upon the mind in thoſe holy retirements. It is not for thee to think to overcome the Almighty by the moſt compoſed matter, caſt into the apteſt phraſe: no, no; one groan, one ſigh, from a wounded ſoul, an heart touched with true remorſe, a ſincere and godly ſorrow, which is the work of God's ſpirit, excels and prevails with God. Wherefore ſtand ſtill in thy mind, wait to feel ſomething that is divine, to prepare and diſpoſe thee to worſhip God truly and acceptably. And thus taking up the croſs, and ſhutting the doors and windows of the ſoul againſt every thing that would interrupt this attendance upon God, how pleaſant ſoever the object be in itſelf, how lawful or needful at another ſeaſon, the power of the Almighty will break in, his ſpirit will work and prepare the heart, that it may offer up an acceptable ſacrifice. It is he that diſcovers and preſſes wants upon the ſoul; and when it cries, it is he alone that ſupplies them. Petitions, not ſpringing from ſuch a ſenſe and preparation, are formal and fictitious: they are not true; for men pray in their own blind deſires, and not in the will of God; and his ear is ſtopped to them: but Pſal. xii. 5. for the very ſighing of the poor, and crying of the needy, God has ſaid, he will ariſe; that is, the poor in ſpirit, the needy ſoul, thoſe that want his aſſiſtance, who are ready to be overwhelmed, that feel a need, and cry aloud for a deliverer, and that have none on earth to help, ‘ none in heaven but him, nor in the earth in compariſon of him: he Pſal. lxxii. 12, 14. ‘ will deliver (ſaid David) the needy, when he cries, and the poor, and him that has no ‘ helper. He ſhall redeem their ſoul from deceit and violence, and precious ſhall their Pſal. xxxiv. 6, 7, 8. ‘ blood be in his ſight. This poor man (ſays he) cried, and the Lord heard him, and ‘ ſaved him out of all his troubles. The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them ‘ that fear him, and delivers them:’ and then invites all to come and taſte how good the Pſal. cxv. 13. Lord is. Yea, ‘ he will bleſs them that fear the Lord, both ſmall and great.’

Mat. ix. 12. §. VII. But what is that to them that are not hungry? The whole need not the phyſician: the full have no need to ſigh, nor the rich to cry for help. Thoſe that are not ſenſible of their inward wants, that have not fears and terrors upon them, who feel no need of God's power to help them, nor of the light of his countenance to comfort them; what have ſuch to do with prayer? Their devotion is but, at beſt, a ſerious mockery of the Almighty. They know not, they want not, they deſire not what they pray for. They pray the will of God may be done, and do conſtantly their own: for, tho' it be ſoon ſaid, it is a moſt terrible thing to them. They aſk for grace, and abuſe that they have: they pray for the ſpirit, but reſiſt it in themſelves, and ſcorn at it in others: they requeſt the mercies and goodneſs of God, and feel no real want of them. And in this inward inſenſibility, they are as unable to praiſe God for what they have, as to pray for what they have not. Pſal. xxii. 26. Pſal. cvii. 9. ‘ They ſhall praiſe the Lord (ſays David) that ſeek him: for he ſatisfieth the longing ‘ ſoul, and filleth the hungry with good things.’ This alſo he reſerves for the poor and Pſal. lxxiv. 21. needy, and thoſe that fear God. ‘ Let the (ſpiritually) poor and the needy praiſe thy Pſal. xxii. 23. ‘ name: ye that fear the Lord, praiſe him; and ye the ſeed of Jacob, glorify him.’ Jacob was a plain man, of an upright heart; and they that are ſo, are his ſeed. And tho' (with him) they may be as poor as worms in their own eyes, yet they receive power to wreſtle with God, and prevail as he did.

Numb. viii. and ch. xix. 2 Chron. xxix. 36. & ch. xxx. 16, 17. §. VIII. But without the preparation and conſecration of this power, no man is fit to come before God; elſe it were matter of leſs holineſs and reverence to worſhip God under the goſpel, than it was in the times of the law, when all ſacrifices were ſprinkled, before offered; the people conſecrated, that offered them, before they preſented themſelves before the Lord. If the touching of a dead or unclean beaſt then made people unfit for temple or ſacrifice, yea, ſociety with the clean, till firſt ſprinkled and ſanctified, how can we think ſo meanly of the worſhip that is inſtituted by Chriſt in goſpel-times, as that it ſhall admit of unprepared and unſanctified offerings? or, allow that thoſe who either in thoughts, words, or deeds, do daily touch that which is morally unclean, can (without coming to the blood of Jeſus, that ſprinkles the conſcience from dead works) acceptably worſhip the pure God: it is a downright contradiction to good ſenſe: the unclean cannot acceptably worſhip that which is holy; the impure that which is perfect. There is an holy intercourſe and communion betwixt Chriſt and his fol- 2 Cor. vi. 15, 16. lowers; but none at all betwixt Chriſt and Belial; between him and thoſe that diſobey his commandments, and live not the life of his bleſſed croſs and ſelf-denial.

§. IX. But as ſin, ſo formality cannot worſhip God; no, though the manner were of his own ordination. Which made the prophet, perſonating one in a great ſtreight, cry out, ‘ wherewith ſhall I come before the Lord, and bow myſelf before the high ‘ God? ſhall I come before him with burnt-offerings? With calves of a year old? Will Mic. vi. 6, 7,

‘ the Lord be pleaſed with thouſands of rams, or with ten thouſands of rivers of oil? Shall 8.
‘ I give my firſt-born for my tranſgreſſions, the fruit of my body for the ſin of my ſoul?
‘ He hath ſhewed thee, O man what is good. And what doth the Lord require of ‘ thee, but to do juſtly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?’ The royal prophet, ſenſible of this, calls thus alſo upon God; ‘ O Lord, open thou my lips, and Pſal. li. 15, ‘ my mouth ſhall ſhew forth thy praiſe.’ He did not dare open his own lips, he knew 16, 17.
that could not praiſe God; and why? ‘ For thou deſireſt not ſacrifice, elſe would I give ‘ it:’ (if my formal offerings would ſerve, thou ſhouldſt not want them) ‘ thou delighteſt
‘ not in burnt-offerings. The ſacrifices of God are a broken ſpirit, a broken
‘ and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not deſpiſe:’ and why? Becauſe this is God’s work, the effect of his power; and his own works praiſe him. To the ſame purpoſe doth God himſelf ſpeak, by the mouth of Iſaiah, in oppoſition to the formalities and lip-worſhip of the degenerate Jews: ‘ thus ſaith the Lord, the heaven is my throne, Pſal. lxvi. 1,
‘ and the earth is my foot-ſtool, where is the houſe that ye build to me? And where is 2, 3.
‘ the place of my reſt? For all theſe things hath my hand made. But to this man ‘ will I look, even him that is poor, and of a contrite ſpirit, and trembleth at my ‘ word.’ O behold the true worſhipper! one of God’s preparing, circumciſed in heart and ear, that reſiſts not the Holy Spirit, as thoſe lofty profeſſing Jews did. Was this ſo then, even in the time of the law, which was the diſpenſation of external and ſhadowy performances, and can we now expect acceptance without the preparation of the Spirit of the Lord in theſe goſpel-times, which are the proper times for the effuſion of the Spirit?
By no means: God is what he was; and none elſe are his true worſhippers, but ſuch as worſhip him in his own ſpirit: theſe he tenders as the apple of his eye: the reſt do but mock him, and he deſpiſes them. Hear what follows to that people, for it is the ſtate and portion of Chriſtendom at this day: ‘ he that killeth an ox, is as if he ſlew a ‘ man; he that ſacrificeth a lamb, as if he cut off a dog’s neck; he that offereth an oblation,
‘ as if he offered ſwines blood; he that burneth incenſe, as if he bleſſed an idol.
‘ Yea, they have choſen their own ways, and their ſoul delighteth in their abominations.’
‘ Let none ſay, we offer not theſe kinds of oblations, for that is not the matter;
God was not offended with the offerings, but offerers. Theſe were the legal forms of ſacrifice by God appointed; but they not preſenting them in that frame of ſpirit, and under that right diſpoſition of ſoul that was required, God declares his abhorrence, and that with great aggravation; and elſewhere, by the ſame prophet, forbids them to ‘ bring any more vain oblations before him: incenſe (ſays God) is an abomination to Iſa. i. 13, to ‘ me: your ſabbaths and calling of aſſemblies I cannot away with; it is iniquity, even 18.
‘ the ſolemn meeting. And when you ſpread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes
‘ from you; when you make many prayers, I will not hear you.’ A moſt terrible renunciation of their worſhip; and why? Becauſe their hearts were polluted; they loved not the Lord with their whole hearts, but broke his law, and rebelled againſt his ſpirit, and did not that which was right in his ſight. The cauſe is plain, by the amendments he requires: ‘ waſh you, (ſays the Lord) make you clean, put away the ‘ evil of your doings from before mine eyes: ceaſe to do evil, learn to do well: ſeek ‘ judgment, relieve the oppreſſed, judge the fatherleſs, plead for the widow.’ Upon theſe terms (and nothing ſhort) he bids them come to him, and tells them, that though their ‘ ſins be as ſcarlet, they ſhall be white as ſnow; and though they be as crimſon, ‘ they ſhall be white as wool.’

So true is that notable paſſage of the Pſalmiſt: ‘ Come and hear, all ye that fear God, Pſal. lxvi. 16,
‘ and I will declare what he hath done for my ſoul: I cried to him with my mouth, 20.
‘ and he was extolled with my tongue. If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord
‘ will not hear me. But verily God hath heard me, he hath attended to the voice of ‘ my prayer. Bleſſed be God which hath not turned away my prayer, nor his mercy ‘ from me.’

§. X. Much of this kind might be cited, to ſhew the diſpleaſure of God againſt even his own forms of worſhip, when performed without his own ſpirit, and that neceſſary preparation of the heart in man, that nothing elſe can work or give: which above all other penmen of ſacred writ, is moſt frequently and emphatically recommended to us by the example of the Pſalmiſt, who, ever and anon calling to mind his own great ſlips, and the cauſe of them, and the way by which he came to be accepted of God, and obtain ſtrength and comfort from him, reminds himſelf to wait upon God.
‘ Lead me in thy truth and teach me, for thou art the God of my ſalvation; on thee do Pſal. xxv. 5.
‘ I wait all the day long.’ His ſoul looked to God for ſalvation, to be delivered from the ſnares and evils of the world. This ſhews an inward exerciſe, a ſpiritual attendance, that ſtood not in external forms, but an inward divine aid.

And truly, David had great encouragement ſo to do, the goodneſs of God invited him to it, and ſtrengthened him in it. For, ſays he, ‘ I waited patiently upon the Lord, Pſal. xl. 1, 2,

‘ and 3.

‘ and he inclined unto me, and heard my cry. He brought me out of the miry clay,
‘ and ſet my feet upon a rock.’ That is, the Lord appeared inwardly to conſolate David's ſoul, that waited for his help, and to deliver it from the temptations and afflictions that were ready to overwhelm it, and gave him ſecurity and peace. Therefore he ſays, ‘the ‘ Lord hath eſtabliſh'd my going;’ that is, fixed his mind in righteouſneſs. Before, every ſtep he took bemired him, and he was ſcarce able to go without falling: temptations on all hands; but he waited patiently upon God; his mind retired watchful and intent to his law and ſpirit; and he felt the Lord to incline to him. His needy and ſenſible cry entered heaven, and prevailed; then came reſcue and deliverance to David, (in God's time, not David's) ſtrength to go through his exerciſes, and ſurmount all his troubles.
For which he tells us, ‘a new ſong was put into his mouth, even praiſe,’ ſays he, ‘to ‘ our God.’ But it was of God's making and putting, and not his own.

Another time, we have him crying thus: ‘As the hart panteth after the water-brooks, ‘ ſo panteth my ſoul after thee, O God. My ſoul thirſteth for God, for the living God;
‘ when ſhall I come and appear before him?’ This goes beyond formality, and can be tied to no leſſon. But we may by this ſee, that true worſhip is an inward work; that the ſoul muſt be touched and raiſed in its heavenly deſires, by the heavenly ſpirit, and that the true worſhip is in God's preſence. ‘When ſhall I come and appear?’ Not in the temple, nor with outward ſacrifices, but before God, in his preſence. So that the ſouls of true worſhippers ſee God, make their appearance before him; and this they wait, they pant, they thirſt for. O how is the better part of Chriſtendom degenerated from David's example! No wonder therefore that this good man tells us, ‘truly my ‘ ſoul waiteth upon God;’ and that he gives it in charge to his ſoul ſo to do; ‘O my ‘ ſoul, wait thou upon God; for my expectation is from him.’ As if he ſaid, None elſe can prepare my heart, or ſupply my wants; ſo that my expectation is not from my own voluntary performances, or the bodily worſhip I can give him; they are of no value: they can neither help me, nor pleaſe him. But I wait upon him for ſtrength and power to preſent myſelf ſo before him, as may be moſt pleaſing to him: for he that prepares the ſacrifice, will certainly accept it. Wherefore in two verſes he repeats it Pſal. cxxx. 5, 6. thrice, ‘I wait for the Lord---My ſoul doth wait---My ſoul waiteth for the Lord, more ‘ than they that watch for the morning.’ Yea, ſo intenſely, and with that unweariedneſs
Pſal. lxix. 3. of ſoul, that he ſays in one place, ‘Mine eyes fail, while I wait for my God.’
He was not contented with ſo many prayers, ſuch a ſet of worſhip, or limited repetition; no: he leaves not till he finds the Lord, that is, the comforts of his preſence; which bring the anſwer of love and peace to his ſoul. Nor was this his practice only, as a man more than ordinarily inſpired; for he ſpeaks of it as the way of worſhip then amongſt the true people of God, the ſpiritual Iſrael, and circumciſion in heart, of that day.
Pſal. cxxiii. 2. ‘ Behold (ſays he) as the eyes of ſervants look to the hand of their maſters, and as the ‘ eye of a maiden unto the hand of her miſtreſs, ſo our eyes wait upon the Lord our Pſal. xxxiii. 20. ‘ God, until he have mercy upon us.’ In another place, ‘Our Soul waiteth for the ‘ Lord, he is our help and our ſhield. I will wait upon thy name, for it is good before Pſal. lii. 9. thy ſaints, It was in requeſt with the truly godly of that day, and the way they came to enjoy God, and worſhip him acceptably. And from his own experience of the benefit of waiting upon God, and the ſaints practice of thoſe times, he recommends it to others:
Pſal. xxvii. 14. ‘ Wait upon the Lord, be of good courage, ‘and he ſhall ſtrengthen thy heart: wait,
I ſay, upon the Lord.’ That is, wait in faith and patience, and he will come to ſave Pſal. xxxvii. 7. thee. Again, ‘Reſt in the Lord, and wait patiently upon him:’ that is, caſt thyſelf upon him; be contented, and wait for him to help thee in thy wants: thou canſt not think how near he is to help thoſe that wait upon him: O try, and have faith! Yet Pſal. xxxvii. 34. again, he bids us, ‘wait upon the Lord, and keep his way.’ Behold the reaſon ſo few profit! they are out of his way, and ſuch can never wait rightly upon him. Great reaſon had David for what he ſaid, that had with ſo much comfort and advantage met the Lord in his bleſſed way.

Iſa. xxvi. 8. §. XI. The prophet Iſaiah tells us, that though the chaſtiſements of the Lord were ſore upon the people for their backſlidings, yet in the way of his judgments (in the way of his rebukes and diſpleaſure) they waited for him, and the deſire of their ſoul (that is the great point) was to his name, and the remembrance of him. They were contented to be chid and chaſtiſed, for they had ſinned; and the knowledge of him ſo, was very deſireable to them. But what! did he not come at laſt, and that in mercy too?
Yes, he did, and they knew him when he came, (a doctrine the brutiſh world knows not) ch. xxv. 9. ‘ This is our God, we have waited for him, and he will ſave us.’ O bleſſed enjoyment!
O precious confidence. Here was a waiting in faith, which prevailed. All worſhip, not in faith, is fruitleſs to the worſhipper, as well as diſpleaſing to God: and this faith is the gift of God, and the nature of it is to purify the heart, and give ſuch as truly believe ‘victory over the world.’ Well! but they go on: ‘We have waited for him, we Iſa. xxx. 18. ‘ will be glad, and rejoice in his ſalvation.’ The prophet adds, ‘Bleſſed are all they ch. xl. 31. ‘ that wait upon God:’ and why? ‘For they that wait upon the Lord, ſhall renew their
ch. lxiv. 4. ‘ ſtrength; they ſhall never faint, never be weary:’ The encouragement is great. O hear him once more! ‘For ſince the beginning of the world, men have not heard, nor ‘perceived by the ear, neither hath the eye ſeen, O God! beſides thee, what he hath ‘prepared for him that waiteth for him.’ Behold the inward life and joy of the righteous, the true worſhippers! thoſe whoſe ſpirits bowed to the appearance of God's ſpirit in them, leaving and forſaking all it appeared againſt, and embracing whatever it led them to. In Jeremiah's time, the true worſhippers alſo waited upon God: and he aſſures us, ‘that the Lord is good to them that wait for him, to the ſoul that ſeeketh him.’ Hence Jer. xiv. 22. it is that the prophet Hoſea exhorts the church then, to turn and wait upon God: Lament. [illegible] 25. ‘Therefore turn thou to thy God; keep mercy and judgment, and wait on thy God Hoſ. xii. 6. ‘continually.’ And Micah is very zealous and reſolute in this good exerciſe: ‘I will Mic. vii. 7. ‘look unto the Lord, I will wait for the God of my ſalvation: my God will hear me.’ Thus did the children of the ſpirit, that thirſted after an inward ſenſe of him. The wicked cannot ſay ſo; nor they that pray, unleſs they wait. 'Tis charged upon Iſrael in the wilderneſs, as the cauſe of their diſobedience and ingratitude to God, that they ‘waited not for his counſels.’ We may be ſure it is our duty, and expected from us; for God requires it in Zephaniah: ‘Therefore wait upon me, ſaith the Lord, until the Zeph. iii. 8. ‘day that I ariſe, &c.’ O that all who profeſs the name of God, would wait ſo, and not offer to ariſe to worſhip without him! and they would feel his ſtirrings and ariſings in them, to help, and prepare, and ſanctify them. Chriſt expreſly charged his diſciples, they ſhould not ſtir from Jeruſalem, but wait till they had received the promiſe of Acts i. 4--8. the Father, the baptiſm of the Holy Ghoſt, in order to their preparation for the preaching of the glorious goſpel of Chriſt to the world. And tho' that were an extraordinary effuſion for an extraordinary work, yet the degree does not change the kind. On the contrary, if ſo much waiting and preparation by the Spirit was requiſite to fit them to preach to man; ſome, at leaſt, may be needful to fit us to ſpeak to God.

§. XII. I will cloſe this great ſcripture doctrine of waiting, with that paſſage in John, about the pool of Betheſda. ‘There is at Jeruſalem, by the ſheep-market, a pool, John. v. 2, 3, 4. ‘which is called in the Hebrew tongue Betheſda, having five porches; in theſe lay a ‘great multitude of impotent folks, of blind, halt, and withered, waiting for the moving ‘of the water. For an angel went down at a certain ſeaſon into the pool, and troubled ‘the water: whoſoever then firſt, after the troubling of the water, ſtepped in, was made ‘whole of whatſoever diſeaſe he had.’ A moſt exact repreſentation of what is intended by all that has been ſaid upon the ſubject of waiting. For as there was then an outward and legal, ſo there is now a goſpel and ſpiritual Jeruſalem, the church of God, conſiſting of the faithful. The pool in that old Jeruſalem, in ſome ſort, repreſented that fountain, which is now ſet open in the New Jeruſalem. That pool was for thoſe that were under infirmities of body; this fountain for all that are impotent in ſoul. There was an angel then that moved the water, to render it beneficial; it is God's angel now, the great angel of his preſence, that bleſſeth this fountain with ſucceſs. They that then went in before, and did not watch the angel, and take advantage of his motion, found no benefit of their ſtepping in: thoſe that now wait not the moving of God's angel, but by the devotion of their own forming and timing, ruſh before God, as the horſe into the battle, and hope for ſucceſs, are ſure to miſcarry in their expectations. Therefore, as then, they waited with all patience and intention upon the angel's motion, that wanted and deſired to be cured; ſo do the true worſhippers of God now, that need and pray for his preſence, which is the life of their ſouls, as the ſun is to the plants of the field. They have often tried the unprofitableneſs of their own work, and are now come to the ſabbath indeed. They dare not put up a device of their own, or offer an unſanctified requeſt, much leſs obtrude bodily worſhip, where the ſoul is really inſenſible or unprepared by the Lord. In the light of Jeſus they ever wait to be prepared, retired, and recluſe from all thoughts that cauſe the leaſt diſtraction and diſcompoſure in the mind, till they ſee the angel move, and till their beloved pleaſe to wake: nor dare they call him before his time. And they fear to make a devotion in his abſence; for they know it is not only unprofitable, but reprovable: ‘Who has required this at your hands?’ ‘He that believes, Iſa. i. 12. ‘makes not haſte.’ They that worſhip with their own, can only do as the Iſraelites, ch. xxviii. 15. turn their ear-rings into a molten image, and be curſed for their pains. Nor fared they better, ‘that gathered ſticks of old, and kindled a fire, and compaſſed themſelves ch. l. 11. ‘about with the ſparks that they had kindled;’ for God told them, ‘they ſhould lie ‘down in ſorrow.’ It ſhould not only be of no advantage, and do them no good, but incur a judgment from him: ſorrow and anguiſh of ſoul ſhould be their portion. Alas! fleſh and blood would fain pray, tho' it cannot wait; and be a ſaint, tho' it cannot abide to do or ſuffer the will of God. With the tongue it bleſſes God, and with the tongue it curſes men, made in his ſimilitude. It calls Jeſus Lord, but not by the Holy Ghoſt; and often names the name of Jeſus, yea, bows the knee to it too, but departs not from iniquity: this is abominable to God.

§ XIII. In ſhort, there are four things ſo neceſſary to worſhipping of God aright, and which put its performance beyond man's power, that there ſeems little more needed than the naming of them. The firſt is, the ſanctification of the worſhipper. Secondly, the

Rom. viii. 26.

the conſecration of the offering, which has been ſpoken to before ſomewhat largely. Thirdly, what to pray for; which no man knows, that prays not by the aid of God's ſpirit; and therefore, without that ſpirit no man can truly pray. This the apoſtle puts beyond diſpute; 'We know not (ſays he) what we ſhould pray for, as we ought, but the Spirit helpeth our infirmities.' Men unacquainted with the work and power of the Holy Spirit, are ignorant of the mind of God; and thoſe, certainly, can never pleaſe him with their prayers. It is not enough to know, we want; but we ſhould learn, whether it be not ſent us as a bleſſing: diſappointments to the proud, loſſes to the covetous, and to the negligent ſtripes: to remove theſe, were to ſecure the deſtruction, not help the ſalvation of the ſoul.

Mat. vi. 7, 8.
Iſa. lxvi. 2.

The vile world knows nothing, but carnally, after a fleſhly manner and interpretation; and too many that would be thought enlightened, are apt to call providences by wrong names. For inſtance, afflictions they ſtile judgments; and trials (more precious than the beloved gold) they call miſeries. On the other hand, they call the preferments of the world by the name of honour, and its wealth, happineſs; when for once that they are ſo, 'tis much to be feared they are ſent of God an hundred times for judgments, at leaſt trials, upon their poſſeſſors. Therefore, what to keep, what to reject, what to want, is a difficulty God only can reſolve the ſoul. And ſince God knows, better than we, what we need, he can better tell us what to aſk, than we can him: which made Chriſt exhort his diſciples to avoid long and repetitious prayers; telling them, that their heavenly Father knew what they needed, before they aſked: and therefore gave them a pattern to pray by; not as ſome fancy, to be a text for human liturgies, which of all ſervices are moſt juſtly noted and taxed for length and repetition; but expreſsly to reprove and avoid them. But if thoſe wants, that are the ſubject of prayer, were once agreed upon (tho' that be a mighty point) yet how to pray is ſtill of greater moment, than to pray; 'tis not the requeſt, but the frame of the petitioner's ſpirit. The what may be proper, but the how defective. As I ſaid, God needs not be told of our wants by us, who muſt tell them to us; yet he will be told them from us, that both we may ſeek him, and he may come down to us. But when this is done, 'To this man will I look, ſaith the Lord, even to him that is poor, and of a contrite ſpirit, and that trembleth at my word:' To the ſick heart, the wounded ſoul, the hungry and thirſty, the weary and heavy laden ones; ſuch ſincerely want an helper.

1 Tim. i. 5.
Acts xv. 9.
Tit. i. 1.
2 Pet. i. 1.
1 John v. 4.
Mat. xv. 28.
Jam. iv. 3.

§. XIV. Nor is this ſufficient to compleat goſpel-worſhip; the fourth requiſite muſt be had, and that is faith, true faith, precious faith, the faith of God's choſen, that purifies their hearts, that overcomes the world, and is the victory of the ſaints. This is that which animates prayer, and preſſes it home, like the importunate widow, that would not be denied; to whom Chriſt (ſeeming to admire) ſaid, 'O woman, great is thy faith.' This is of higheſt moment on our part, to give our addreſſes ſucceſs with God; and yet not in our power neither, for it is the gift of God: from him we muſt have it; and with one grain of it more work is done, more deliverance is wrought, and more goodneſs and mercy received, than by all the runnings, willings, and toilings of man, with his inventions and bodily exerciſes. Which, duly weighed, will eaſily ſpell out the meaning, why ſo much worſhip ſhould bring ſo little profit to the world, as we ſee it does, viz. True faith is loſt. They aſk, and receive not; they ſeek, and find not; they knock, and it is not opened unto them: the caſe is plain; their requeſts are not mixed with purifying faith, by which they ſhould prevail, as good Jacob's were, when he wreſtled with God, and prevailed. And the truth is, the generality are yet in their ſins, following their hearts luſts, and living in worldly pleaſures, being ſtrangers to this precious faith. It is the reaſon rendered by the deep author to the Hebrews, of the unprofitableneſs of the word preached to ſome of thoſe days; 'not being (ſays he) mixed with faith in them that heard it.' Can the miniſter then preach without faith? No, and much leſs can any man pray to purpoſe without faith, eſpecially when we are told, 'that the juſt live by faith.' For worſhip is the ſupreme act of man's life; and whatever is neceſſary to inferior acts of religion, muſt not be wanting there.

John ix. 6.
Luke viii. 47, 48.
Mat. ix. 29, 30.
Mat. ix. 23.

§. XV. This may moderate the wonder in any, why Chriſt ſo often upbraided his diſciples with, 'O ye of little faith!' yet tells us, that one grain of it, (though as little as that of muſtard, one of the leaſt of ſeeds) if true and right, is able to remove mountains. As if he had ſaid, there is no temptation ſo powerful, that it cannot ſupply: wherefore thoſe that are captivated by temptations, and remain unſupplied in their ſpiritual wants, have not this powerful faith: that's the true cauſe. So neceſſary was it of old, that Chriſt did not many mighty works where the people believed not; and tho' his power wrought wonders in other places, faith opened the way: ſo that 'tis hard to ſay, whether that power by faith, or faith by that power, wrought the cure. Let us call to mind what famous things a little clay and ſpittle, one touch of the hem of Chriſt's garment, and a few words out of his mouth did, by the force of faith in the patients: 'Believe ye that I am able to open your eyes?' Yea, Lord, ſay the blind, and ſee. To the ruler, only believe; he did, and his dead daughter recovered life. Again, 'If thou ‘canſt believe: I do believe,’ ſays the father, ‘help my unbelief;’ and the evil ſpirit was chaſed away, and the child recovered. He ſaid to one, ‘go, thy faith has made thee whole;’ and to another, ‘Thy faith has ſaved thee; thy ſins are forgiven thee.’ And to encourage his diſciples to believe, that were admiring how ſoon his ſentence was executed upon the fruitleſs fig-tree, he tells them, ‘Verily if ye have faith, and doubt not, ye ſhall not only do this, which is done to the fig-tree; but alſo, if ye ſhall ſay unto this mountain, be thou removed, and caſt into the ſea, it ſhall be done; and all things whatſoever ye ſhall aſk in prayer, believing, ye ſhall receive.’ This one paſſage convicts Chriſtendom of groſs infidelity; for ſhe prays, and receives not.

Mark x. 52. Luke vii. 49, 50. Mat. xxi. 20, 21, 22.

§. XVI. But may ſome ſay, ’tis impoſſible to receive all that a man may aſk. ’Tis not impoſſible to receive all that a man, that ſo believes, can aſk. The fruits of faith are not impoſſible to thoſe that truly believe in the God that makes them poſſible. When Jeſus ſaid to the ruler, ‘if thou canſt believe,’ he adds, ‘all things are poſſible to him that believeth.’ Well, but then ſome will ſay, it is impoſſible to have ſuch faith: for this very faithleſs generation would excuſe their want of faith by making it impoſſible to have the faith they want. But Chriſt’s anſwer to the infidelity of that age, will beſt confute the diſbelief of this. ‘The things that are impoſſible with men, are poſſible with God.’ It will follow then, that it is not impoſſible with God to give that faith; though, it is certain, that ‘without it, it is impoſſible to pleaſe God;’ for ſo the author to the Hebrews teaches. And if it be elſe impoſſible to pleaſe God, it muſt be ſo to pray to God without this precious faith.

Mat. xviii. 19. Luke xviii. 27. Mark ix. 23. Mat. xix. 24, 25, 26. Luke xviii. 25, 26, 27. Heb. xi. 6.

§. XVII. But ſome may ſay, what is this faith, that is ſo neceſſary to worſhip, and that gives it ſuch acceptance with God, and returns that benefit to men? I ſay, it is an holy reſignation to God, and confidence in him, teſtified by a religious obedience to his holy requirings, which gives ſure evidence to the ſoul of the things not yet ſeen, and a general ſenſe and taſte of the ſubſtance of thoſe things that are hoped for; that is, the glory which is to be revealed hereafter. As this faith is the gift of God, ſo it purifies the hearts of thoſe that receive it. The apoſtle Paul is witneſs, that it will not dwell, but in a pure conſcience: He therefore in one place, couples a pure heart and faith unfeigned together: in another, faith and a good conſcience. James joins faith with righteouſneſs, and John with victory over the world: ‘This, ſays he, is the victory which overcomes the world, even your faith.’

1 Tim. iii. 9. ch. i. 5. James ii. 1 John v. 4.

§. XVIII. The heirs of this faith are the true children of Abraham (though the uncircumciſion in the fleſh) in that they walk in the ſteps of father Abraham, according to the obedience of faith, which only entitles people to be the children of Abraham. This lives above the world, not only in its ſin, but righteouſneſs; to which, no man comes, but through death to ſelf, by the croſs of Jeſus, and an entire dependence, by him, upon God.

Rom. iv. 12. John xvi. 9, 10.

Famous are the exploits of this divine gift: time would fail to recount them: all ſacred ſtory is filled with them. But let it ſuffice, that by it the holy ancients endured all trials, overcame all enemies, prevailed with God, renowned his truth, finiſhed their teſtimony, and obtained the reward of the faithful, a crown of righteouſneſs, which is the eternal bleſſedneſs of the juſt.

CHAP. VII.

§. 1. Of pride, the firſt capital luſt, it's riſe. §. 2. It's definition and diſtinction. §. 3. That an inordinate deſire of knowledge in Adam, introduced man's miſery. §. 4. He thereby loſt his integrity. §. 5. Who are in Adam's ſtate. §. 6. Knowledge puffs up. §. 7. The evil effects of falſe, and the benefit of true knowledge. §. 8. Cain's example a proof in the caſe. §. 9. The Jews pride in pretending to be wiſer than Moſes, God's ſervant, in ſetting their poſt by God's poſt. §. 10. The effect of which was the perſecution of the true prophets. §. 11. The divine knowledge of Chriſt brought peace on earth. §. 12. Of the blind guides, the prieſts, and the miſchief they have done. §. 13. The fall of Chriſtians, and the pride they have taken in it, hath exceeded the Jews; under the profeſſion of their new-moulded chriſtianity, they have murdered the witneſs of the Lord Jeſus. §. 14. The angels ſung peace on earth, at the birth of the Lord of meekneſs and humility: but the pride of the Phariſees withſtood and calumniated him. §. 15. As Adam and the Jews loſt themſelves by their ambition, ſo the Chriſtians loſing the fear of God, grew creed and worſhip-makers, with this injunction, conform or burn. §. 16. The evil effects of this in Chriſtendom (ſo called.) §. 17. The way of recovery out of ſuch miſerable defection.

Chap. VII.

§. I. HAVING thus diſcharged my conſcience againſt that part of unlawful ſelf, that fain would be a chriſtian, a believer, a ſaint, whilſt a plain ſtranger to the croſs of Chriſt, and the holy exerciſes of it; and in that briefly diſcovered what is true worſhip, and the uſe and buſineſs of the holy croſs, therein to render its performance pleaſing to Almighty God; I ſhall now (the ſame Lord aſſiſting me) more largely proſecute that other part of unlawful ſelf, which fills the ſtudy, care, and converſation of the world, preſented to us in theſe three capital luſts; that is to ſay, Pride, avarice, and luxury; from whence all other miſchiefs daily flow, as ſtreams from their proper fountains: the mortifying of which makes up the other; and indeed a very great part of the work of the true croſs; and tho' laſt in place, yet firſt in experience and duty; which done, it introduces in the room of thoſe evil habits, the bleſſed effects of that ſo-much-needed reformation, to wit, 'mortification, humility, temperance, love, 'patience, and heavenly-mindedneſs,' with all other graces of the Spirit, becoming the followers of the perfect Jeſus, that moſt heavenly man.

Gal. v. 22,23.

The care and love of mankind are either directed to God or themſelves. Thoſe that love God above all, are ever humbling ſelf to his commands, and only love ſelf in ſubſerviency to him that is Lord of all. But thoſe that are declined from that love to God, are lovers of themſelves, more than God: for ſupreme love muſt center in one of theſe two. To that inordinate ſelf-love, the apoſtle rightly joins proud and high-minded. For no ſooner had the angels declined their love, duty and reverence to God, than they inordinately loved and valued themſelves; which made them exceed their ſtation, and aſpire above the order of their creation. This was their pride, and this ſad defection their diſmal fall; who are reſerved in chains of darkneſs unto the judgment of the great day of God.

2 Tim. iii. 2, 3.

§. II. Pride, that pernicious evil, which begins this chapter, did alſo begin the miſery of mankind: a moſt miſchievous quality; and ſo commonly known by its motions, and ſad effects, that every unmortified breaſt carries its definition in it. However I will ſay, in ſhort, that pride is an exceſs of ſelf-love, joined with an undervaluing of others, and a deſire of dominion over them: the moſt troubleſome thing in the world. There are four things by which it hath made itſelf beſt known to mankind, the conſequences of which have brought an equal miſery to it's evil. The firſt is, an inordinate purſuit of knowledge. The ſecond, an ambitious ſeeking and craving after power. The third, an extreme deſire of perſonal reſpect and deference. The laſt exceſs is that of worldly furniture and ornaments. To the juſt and true witneſs of the eternal God, placed in the ſouls of all people, I appeal as to the truth of theſe things.

§. III. To the firſt, 'tis plain that an inordinate deſire of knowledge introduced man's miſery, and brought an univerſal lapſe from the glory of his primitive ſtate. Adam would needs be wiſer than God had made him. It did not ſerve his turn to know his Creator, and give him that holy homage, his being and innocence naturally engaged and excited him to; nor to have an 'underſtanding above all the beaſts of the field, the 'fowls of the air, and the fiſhes of the ſea,' joined with a power to rule over all the viſible creation of God, but he muſt be as wiſe as God too. This unwarrantable ſearch, and as fooliſh as unjuſt ambition, made him unworthy of the bleſſings he received from God. This drives him out of paradiſe; and inſtead of being lord of the whole world, Adam becomes the wretchedeſt vagabond of the earth.

Gen. ii. 19, 20.
Gen. iii. 5.
ch. iii. 4.

§. IV. A ſtrange change! that inſtead of being as gods, they ſhould fall below the very beaſts; in compariſon of whom even God had made them as gods. The lamentable conſequence of this great defection has been, an exchange of innocency for guilt, and a paradiſe for a wilderneſs. But, which is yet worſe, in this ſtate Adam and Eve had got another god than the only true and living God: and he that had enticed them to all this miſchief, furniſhed them with a vain knowledge, and pernicious wiſdom: the ſkill of lies and equivocations, ſhifts, evaſions and excuſes. They had loſt their plainneſs and ſincerity; and from an upright heart, the image in which God had made man, he became a crooked, twining, twiſting ſerpent; the image of that unrighteous ſpirit, to whoſe temptations he yielded up, with his obedience, his paradiſical happineſs.

§. V. Nor is this limited to Adam; for all who have fallen ſhort of the glory of God, are right-born ſons of his diſobedience. They, like him, have eaten of what they have been forbidden: they have 'committed the things they ought not to have done, and left un- 'done the things they ought to have done.' They have ſinned againſt that divine light of knowledge, which God has given them: they have grieved his ſpirit; and that diſmal ſentence has been executed, 'In the day that thou eateſt thereof thou ſhalt die.' That is, when thou doeſt the thing which thou oughteſt not to do, thou ſhalt no more live in my favour, and enjoy the comforts of the peace of my ſpirit: which is a dying to all thoſe innocent and holy deſires and affections, which God created man with; and he becomes as one cold and benumbed; inſenſible of the love of God, of his Holy Spirit, power and wiſdom; of the light and joy of his countenance, and of the evidence of a good conſcience, and the co-witneſſing and approbation of God's Holy Spirit.

Rom. vii.
Gen. ii. 17.

§. VI. So that fallen Adam's knowledge of God ſtood no more in a daily experience of the love and work of God in his ſoul, but in a notion of what he once did know and experience: which being not the true and living wiſdom that is from above, but a mere picture, it cannot preſerve man in purity; but puffs up, makes people proud, high-minded, and impatient of contradiction. This was the ſtate of the apoſtate Jews before Chriſt came; and has been the condition of apoſtate chriſtians ever ſince he came: their religion ſtanding (ſome bodily performances excepted) either in what they once knew, of the work of God in themſelves, and which they have revolted from; or in an hiſtorical belief, and an imaginary conception and paraphraſe upon the experiences and prophecies of ſuch holy men and women of God, as in all ages have deſerved the ſtile and character of his true children.

§. VII. As ſuch a knowledge of God cannot be true, ſo by experience we find, that it ever brings forth the quite contrary fruits to the true wiſdom. For as this is firſt pure, then peaceable, then gentle, and eaſy to be intreated; ſo the knowledge of degenerated Jam. iii. 17. and unmortified men is firſt impure: for it came by the commiſſion of evil, and is held in an evil and impure conſcience and heart, that diſobey God's law, and that daily do thoſe things which they ought not to do; and for which they ſtand condemned before God's judgment-ſeat in the ſouls of men: the light of whoſe preſence ſearches the moſt hidden things of darkneſs, the moſt ſecret thoughts, and concealed inclinations of ungodly men. This is the ſcience, falſly ſo called; and as it is impure, ſo 'tis unpeaceable, croſs, and hard to be intreated; froward, perverſe, and perſecuting; jealous that any ſhould be better than they, and hating and abuſing thoſe that are.

§. VIII. 'Twas this pride made Cain a murderer: 'tis a ſpiteful quality; full of envy Gen. iv. 8. and revenge. What! was not his religion and worſhip as good as his brother's? He had all the exterior parts of worſhip; he offered as well as Abel; and the offering of itſelf might be as good: but it ſeems the heart, that offered it, was not. So long ago did God regard the interior worſhip of the ſoul. Well! what was the conſequence of this difference? Cain's pride ſtomached it: he could not bear to be outdone by his brother. He grew wrathful, and reſolved to vindicate his offering, by revenging the refuſal of it upon his brother's life; and without any regard to natural affection, or the low and early condition of mankind, he barbarouſly dyed his hands in his brother's blood.

§. IX. The religion of the apoſtatized Jews did no better; for, having loſt the inward life, power and ſpirit of the law, they were puffed up with that knowledge they had; and their pretences to Abraham, Moſes, and the promiſes of God, in that frame, ſerved only to blow them up into an unſufferable pride, arrogance, and cruelty. For they could not bear true viſion, when it came to viſit them, and entertained the meſſengers of their peace as if they had been wolves and tygers.

§. X. Yea, 'tis remarkable, the falſe prophets, the great engineers againſt the true ones, were ever ſure to perſecute them as falſe; and by their intereſt with earthly princes, or the poor ſeduced multitude, made them the inſtruments of their malice. Thus 'twas that one holy prophet was ſawn aſunder, another ſtoned to death, &c. So proud and obſtinate is falſe knowledge, and the aſpirers after it: which made holy Stephen cry out, 'O ye ſtiff-necked and uncircumciſed in heart and ear, ye reſiſt the Holy Ghoſt; as Acts vii. 51. 'did your fathers, ſo do ye.'

§. XI. The true knowledge came with the joy of angels, ſinging 'peace on earth, Luke ii. 14. 'and good-will towards men:' the falſe knowledge entertained the meſſage with calumnies: Chriſt muſt needs be an impoſtor; and that muſt prove him ſo, to wit, his power of working of miracles; which was that which proved the contrary. They ſtoned him, and frequently ſought to kill him; which at laſt they wickedly accompliſhed. But what was their motive to it? Why, he cried out againſt their hypocriſy, the broad phylacteries, the honour they ſought of men. To be ſhort, they give the reaſon themſelves in theſe words; 'If we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him:' that is, he will John xlvii. 11. take away our credit with the people; they will adhere to him, and deſert us; and ſo we ſhall loſe our power and reputation with the multitude.

§. XII. And, the truth is, he came to level their honour, to overthrow their rabbyſhip, and by his grace to bring the people to that inward knowledge of God, which they, by tranſgreſſion, were departed from; that ſo they might ſee the deceitfulneſs of their blind guides, who, by their vain traditions, had made void the righteouſneſs of the law; and who were ſo far from being the true doctors, and lively expounders of it, that in reality they were the children of the devil, who was a proud lyar, and cruel murderer, from the beginning.

§. XIII. Their pride in falſe knowledge having made them uncapable of receiving the ſimplicity of the goſpel, Chriſt thanks his Father, that he had hid the myſteries of it Mat. xi. 25. from the wiſe and prudent, and revealed them to babes. It was this falſe wiſdom ſwelled the minds of the Athenians to that degree, that they deſpiſed the preaching of the apoſtle Paul, as a vain and fooliſh thing. But that apoſtle, who of all the reſt had an education in the learning of thoſe times, bitterly reflects on that wiſdom, ſo much valued by Jews and Greeks; 'Where (ſays he) is the wiſe? where is the ſcribe? where is the diſputer 1 Cor. i. 20. 'of this world? Hath not God made fooliſh the wiſdom of this world?' And he gives a good reaſon for it, 'that no fleſh ſhould glory in his preſence.' Which is to ſay, God ver. 29. will ſtain the pride of man in falſe knowledge, that he ſhould have nothing on this occaſion to be proud of: it ſhould be owing only to the revelation of the Spirit of God. The apoſtle goes farther, and affirms, 'that the world by wiſdom knew not God: that is, it ibid. ver. 21.

was ſo far from an help, that, as men uſe it, it was an hindrance to the true knowlege of God. And in his firſt epiſtle to his beloved Timothy, he concludes thus: 'O Timothy! 1 Tim. vi. 20. 'keep that which is committed to thy truſt, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and 'oppoſitions of ſcience, falſly ſo called.' This was the ſenſe of apoſtolical times, when the divine grace gave the true knowledge of God, and was the guide of chriſtians.

§. XIV. Well! but what has been the ſucceſs of thoſe ages, that followed the apoſtolical? any whit better than that of the Jewiſh times? Not one jot. They have exceeded them; as with their pretences to greater knowledge, ſo in their degeneracy from the true chriſtian life: for tho' they had a more excellent pattern than the Jews, to whom God ſpoke by Moſes his ſervant, he ſpeaking to them by his beloved Son, the expreſs image of his ſubſtance, the perfection of all meekneſs and humility; and tho' they ſeemed addicted to nothing more, than an adoration of his name, and a veneration to the memory of his bleſſed diſciples, and apoſtles; yet ſo great was their defection from the inward power and life of chriſtianity in the ſoul, that their reſpect was little more than formal and ceremonious. For notwithſtanding they, like the Jews, were mighty zealous in garniſhing their ſepulchres, and curious in carving of their images, not only keeping with any pretence what might be the reliques of their perſons, but recommending a thouſand things as reliques, which are purely fabulous, and very often ridiculous, and to be ſure altogether unchriſtian; yet, as to the great and weighty things of the chriſtian law, viz. love, meekneſs, and ſelf-denial, they were degenerated: they grew high-minded, proud, boaſters, without natural affection, curious, and controverſial; ever perplexing the church with doubtful and dubious queſtions; filling the people with diſputations, ſtrife and wrangling, drawing them into parties, till at laſt they fell into blood: as if they had been the worſe for being once chriſtians.

O the miſerable ſtate of theſe pretended chriſtians! that inſtead of Chriſt's and his apoſtles doctrine, of loving enemies, and bleſſing them that curſe them, they ſhould teach the people, under the notion of chriſtian zeal, moſt inhumanly to butcher one another; and inſtead of ſuffering their own blood to be ſhed for the teſtimony of Jeſus, they ſhould ſhed the blood of the witneſſes of Jeſus, for hereticks: thus that ſubtil ſerpent, or crafty evil-ſpirit, that tempted Adam out of innocency, and the Jews from the law of God, has beguiled the chriſtians, by lying vanities, to depart from the chriſtian law of holineſs, and ſo they are become ſlaves to him; for he rules in the hearts of the children of diſobedience.

§. XV. And it is obſervable, that as pride (which is ever followed by ſuperſtition and obſtinacy) put Adam upon ſeeking an higher ſtation than God placed him in; and as the Jews, out of the ſame pride, to out-do their pattern, given them of God by Moſes upon the mount, ſet their poſt by God's poſt, and taught for doctrines their own traditions, inſomuch that thoſe that refuſed conformity to them ran the hazard of Crucify, crucify: ſo the nominal chriſtians, from the ſame ſin of pride, with great ſuperſtition and arrogance, have introduced, inſtead of a ſpiritual worſhip and diſcipline, that which is evidently ceremonious and worldly; with ſuch innovations and traditions of men, as are the fruit of the wiſdom that is from below: witneſs their numerous and perplex councils and creeds, with Conform, or burn, at the end of them.

§. XVI. And as this unwarrantable pride ſet them firſt at work, to pervert the ſpirituality of the chriſtian cult, making it rather to reſemble the ſhadowy religion of the Jews, and the gawdy worſhip of the Egyptians, than the great plainneſs and ſimplicity of the chriſtian inſtitution, which is neither to reſemble that of the mountain, nor the other of Jeruſalem; ſo has the ſame pride and arrogancy ſpurred them on, by all imaginable cruelties, to maintain this great Diana of theirs. No meek ſupplications, nor humble remonſtrances of thoſe that kept cloſe to primitive purity in worſhip and doctrine, could prevail with theſe nominal chriſtians, to diſpenſe with the impoſition of their un-apoſtolical traditions. But as the miniſters and biſhops of theſe degenerate chriſtians left their painful viſitation and care over Chriſt's flock, and grew ambitious, covetous and luxurious, reſembling rather worldly potentates, than the humble-ſpirited and mortified followers of the bleſſed Jeſus; ſo almoſt every hiſtory tells us, with what pride and cruelty, blood and butchery, and that with unuſual and exquiſite tortures, they have perſecuted the holy members of Chriſt, out of the world; and that upon ſuch anathemas, that, as far as they could, they have diſappointed them of the bleſſings of heaven too. Theſe, true chriſtians call martyrs; but the clergy, like the perſecuting Jews, have ſtiled them blaſphemers and hereticks: in which they have fulfilled the prophecy of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; who did not ſay, that they ſhould think they do the gods good ſervice to kill the chriſtians, his dear followers (which might refer to the John xvi. 2. perſecutions of the idolatrous Gentiles) but that they ſhould think they do God good ſervice to kill them: which ſhews, that they ſhould be ſuch as profeſſedly owned the true God, as the apoſtate chriſtians have all along pretended to do. So that they muſt Acts xx. 29. be thoſe wolves, that the apoſtle foretold ſhould ariſe out of themſelves, and worry the flock of Chriſt, after the great falling-away ſhould commence, that was foretold by him, and made neceſſary, in order to the proving of the faithful, and the revelation of the great myſtery of iniquity.

I ſhall conclude this head with this aſſertion, that it is too undeniable a truth, where the clergy has been moſt in power and authority, and has had the greateſt influence upon princes and ſtates, there has been moſt confuſions, wrangles, blood-ſhed, ſequeſtrations, impriſonments and exiles: to the juſtifying of which, I call the teſtimony of the records of all times. How it is in our age, I leave to the experience of the living: yet there is one demonſtration that can hardly fail us: the people are not converted but debauched, to a degree, that time will not allow us an example. The worſhip of Chriſtendom is viſible, ceremonious and gawdy, the clergy ambitious of worldly preferments, under the pretence of ſpiritual promotions; making the earthly revenues of church-men, much the reaſon of their function; being almoſt ever ſure, to leave the preſent ſmaller incumbence, to ſollicit and obtain benefices of larger title and income. So that with their pride and avarice, which good old Peter foreſaw would be their ſnares, they have drawn after them, ignorance, miſery, and irreligion upon Chriſtendom.

§. XVII. The way of recovery from this miſerable defection is, to come to a ſaving knowledge of religion; that is, an experience of the divine work of God in the ſoul; to obtain which, be diligent to obey the grace that appears in thy own ſoul, O man! that Tit. ii. 4, 11, 12, 14.
brings ſalvation, it turns thee out of the broad way, into the narrow way; from thy luſts to thy duty, from ſin to holineſs, from Satan to God. Thou muſt ſee and abhor ſelf, thou muſt watch, and thou muſt pray, and thou muſt faſt: thou muſt not look at thy tempter, but at thy preſerver; avoid ill company, retire to thy ſolitudes, and be a chaſte pilgrim in this evil world: and thus thou wilt arrive to the knowledge of God and Chriſt, that brings eternal life to the ſoul; a well-grounded aſſurance from what a man feels and knows within himſelf; ſuch ſhall not be moved with evil tidings.

CHAP. VIII.

§. 1. Pride craves power as well as knowledge. §. 2. The caſe of Korah, &c. a proof. §. 3. Abſalom's ambition confirms it. §. 4. Nebuchadnezzar's does the like. §. 5. The hiſtory of Piſiſtratus, Alexander, Cæſar, &c. ſhews the ſame thing. §. 6. The Turks are a lively proof, who have ſhed much blood to gratify pride for power. §. 7. The laſt ten years in Chriſtendom exceed in proof of this. §. 8. Ambition reſts not in courts, it finds room in private breaſts too, and ſpoils families and ſocieties. §. 9. Their peace is great, that limit their deſires by God's grace, and having power, uſe it to the good of others.

§. I. BUT let us ſee the next moſt common, eminent, and miſchievous effect of this evil. Pride does extremely crave power, than which, not one thing has proved more troubleſome and deſtructive to mankind. I need not labour myſelf much in evidence of this, ſince moſt of the wars of nations, depopulation of kingdoms, ruin of cities, with the ſlavery and miſery that have followed, both our own experience and unqueſtionable hiſtories acquaint us to have been the effect of ambition, which is the luſt of pride after power. Ch. VIII.

§. II. How ſpecious ſoever might be the pretences of Korah, Dathan and Abiram againſt Moſes, it was their emulation of his mighty power in the camp of Iſrael, that put them upon conſpiracies and mutinies. They longed for his authority, and their not having it was his crime: for they had a mind to be the heads and leaders of the people. The conſequence of which was, a remarkable deſtruction to themſelves, and all their unhappy accomplices.

§. III. Abſalom too was for the people's rights, againſt the tyranny of his father and his 2 Sam. xv.
king; at leaſt, with this pretence he palliated his ambition: but his rebellion ſhewed he was impatient for power, and that he reſolved to ſacrifice his duty, as a ſon and ſubject, to the importunities of his reſtleſs pride, which brought a miſerable death to himſelf, and an extraordinary ſlaughter upon his army.

§. IV. Nebuchadnezzar is a lively inſtance of the exceſſive luſt of pride for power. His ſucceſſes and empire were too heady for him: ſo much too ſtrong for his underſtanding, that he forgot he did not make himſelf, or that his power had a ſuperior. He makes Dan. iii.
an image, and all muſt bow to it, or be burnt. And when Shadrach, Meſhach and Abednego refuſed to comply, 'who (ſays he) is that God that ſhall deliver you out of 'my hands?' And notwithſtanding the convictions he had upon him, at the conſtancy of thoſe excellent men, and Daniel's interpretation of his dreams, it was not long before the pride of his power had filled his heart, and then his mouth, with this haughty queſtion, 'Is not this great Babylon that I have built for the houſe of the kingdom by the ch. iv. 30.
'might of my power, and for the honour of my majeſty?' But we are told, that while the words were in his mouth, 'a voice from heaven rebuked the pride of his ſpirit, and 'he was driven from the ſociety of men, to graze among the beaſts of the field.'

§. V. If we look into the hiſtories of the world, we ſhall find many inſtances to prove the miſchief of this luſt of pride. I will mention a few of them for their ſakes, who have either not read or conſidered them.

Solon made Athens free by his excellent conſtitution of laws: but the ambition of Piſiſtratus began the ruin of it before his eyes. Alexander, not contented with his own kingdom, invades others, and filled with ſpoil and ſlaughter thoſe countries he ſubdued: and it was not ill ſaid of him, who, when Alexander accuſed him of piracy, told him to his face, that Alexander was the greateſt pirate in the world. It was the ſame ambition that made Cæſar turn traytor to his maſters, and with their own army, put into his hand for their ſervice, ſubdue them to his yoke, and uſurp the government; which ended in the expulſion of freedom and virtue together in that common-wealth: for goodneſs quickly grew to be faction in Rome; and that ſobriety and wiſdom which ever rendred her ſenators venerable, became dangerous to their ſafety: inſomuch that his ſucceſſors hardly left one they did not kill or baniſh; unleſs ſuch as turned to be flatterers of their unjuſt acquiſition, and the imitators of their debauched manners.

§. VI. The Turks are a great proof to the point in hand; who, to extend their dominion, have been the cauſe of ſhedding much blood, and laying many ſtately countries waſte. And yet they are to be out-done by apoſtate chriſtians; whoſe practice is therefore more condemnable, becauſe they have been better taught: they have had a maſter of another doctrine and example. It is true, they call him Lord ſtill, but let their ambition reign: they love power more than one another; and to get it, kill one another; tho' charged by him, not to ſtrive, but to love and ſerve one another. And, which adds to the tragedy, all natural affection is ſacrificed to the fury of this luſt: and therefore are ſtories ſo often ſtained with the murder of parents, children, uncles, nephews, maſters, &c.

Mat. xviii. 1, to 6. Mark ix. 33, ot 37.

§. VII. If we look abroad into remoter parts of the world, we ſhall rarely hear of wars; but in Chriſtendom of peace. A very trifle is too often made a ground of quarrel here: nor can any league be ſo ſacred or inviolable, that arts ſhall not be uſed to evade and diſſolve it, to increaſe dominion. No matter who, nor how many are ſlain, made widows and orphans, or loſe their eſtates and livelihoods: what countries are ruined; what towns and cities ſpoiled; if by all theſe things the ambitious can but arrive at their ends? To go no farther back than ſixty years, that little period of time will furniſh us with many wars begun upon ill grounds, and ended in great deſolation. Nay, the laſt twelve years of our time make as pregnant a demonſtration, as we can furniſh ourſelves with from the records of any age. It is too tedious, nor is it my buſineſs to be particular: It has been often well obſerved by others, and is almoſt known to all; I mean the French, Spaniſh, German, Engliſh, and Dutch wars.

§. VIII. But ambition does not only dwell in courts and ſenates: it is too natural to every private breaſt to ſtrain for power. We daily ſee how much men labour their utmoſt wit and intereſt to be great, to get higher places, or greater titles than they have, that they may look bigger, and be more acknowledged; take place of their former equals, and ſo equal thoſe that were once their ſuperiors; compel friends, and be revenged on enemies. This makes chriſtianity ſo little loved of worldly men, it's kingdom is not of this world: and though they may ſpeak it fair, it is the world they love: that without uncharitableneſs we may truly ſay, people profeſs chriſtianity, but they follow the world. They are not for ſeeking the kingdom of heaven firſt, and the righteouſneſs thereof, and to truſt God with the reſt; but for ſecuring to themſelves the wealth and glory of this world, and adjourning the care of ſalvation to a ſick-bed, and the extreme moments of life; if yet they believe a life to come.

Mat. vi. 33.

§. IX. To conclude this head; great is their peace, who know a limit to their ambitious minds, that have learnt to be contented with the appointments and bounds of providence; that are not careful to be great, but being great, are humble and do good. Such keep their wits with their conſciences, and with an even mind, can at all times meaſure the uneven world, reſt fixt in the midſt of all its uncertainties, and as becomes thoſe who have an intereſt in a better, in the good time and will of God, chearfully leave this; when the ambitious, conſcious of their evil practices, and weighed down to their graves with guilt, muſt go to a tribunal, that they can neither awe nor bribe.

CHAP. IX.

§. 1. The third evil effect of pride is love of honour and reſpect. Too many are guilty of it. §. 2. It had like to have coſt Mordecai dear. Great miſchief has befallen nations on this account. §. 3. The world is out in the buſineſs of true honour, as well as in that of true ſcience. §. 4. Reaſons why the author, and the reſt of the people he walks with, uſe not theſe faſhions. §. 5. The firſt is, the ſenſe they had in the hour of their conviction, of the unſuitableneſs of them to the chriſtian ſpirit and practice, and that the root they came from was pride and ſelf-love. §. 6. Reproach could not move them from that ſenſe and practice accordingly. §. 7. They do it not to make ſects, or for diſtinction. §. 8. Nor yet to countenance formality, but paſſively let drop vain cuſtoms, and ſo negative to forms. §. 9. Their behaviour is a teſt upon the world. §. 10. And this croſs to the world a teſt upon them. §. 11. The ſecond reaſon againſt them is their emptineſs. §. 12. Honour in ſcripture, is not ſo taken as it is in the world. It is uſed for obedience. §. 13. It is uſed for preferment. §. 14. A digreſſion about folly in a ſcripture ſenſe.

§. 15.

§. 15. Honour is uſed for reputation. §. 16. Honour is alſo attributed to functions and capacities, by way of eſteem. §. 17. Honour is taken for help and countenance of inferiors. §. 18. Honour is uſed for ſervice and eſteem to all ſtates and capacities: honour all men. §. 19. Yet there is a limitation in a ſenſe to the righteous by the Pſalmiſt; to honour the godly and contemn the wicked. §. 20. Little of this honour found in the world's faſhions. §. 21. The third reaſon againſt them is, they mock and cheat people of the honour due to them. §. 22. The author and his friends are for True Honour. §. 23. The fourth reaſon is, that if the faſhions carried true honour in them, the debauched could honour men, which cannot be. §. 24. The fifth reaſon is, that then men of ſpite, hypocriſy, and revenge, could pay honour, which is impoſſible. §. 25. The ſixth reaſon is drawn from the antiquity of true honour. §. 26. The ſeventh reaſon is from the riſe of the vain honour, and the teachers of it, wherein the clown, upon a compariſon, excels the courtier for a man of breeding. §. 27. The eighth reaſon againſt theſe honours is, that they may be had for money, which true honour cannot be. §. 28. The ninth and laſt reaſon is, becauſe the holy ſcripture expreſly forbids them to true chriſtians. §. 29. As in the caſe of Mordecai. §. 30. A paſſage between a biſhop and the author in this matter. §. 31. Likewiſe the caſe of Elihu in Job. §. 32. Alſo the doctrine of Chriſt to his diſciples. §. 33. Paul againſt conforming to the world's faſhions. §. 34. Peter againſt faſhioning ourſelves according to the world's luſts. §. 35. James againſt reſpect to perſons. §. 36. Yet chriſtians are civil and mannerly in a right way. §. 37. But unlike the world in the nature of it, and motives to it. §. 38. Teſtimonies in favour of our diſſent and practice.

Chap. IX.

§. I. THE third evil effect of pride, is, An exceſſive deſire of perſonal honour and reſpect.

Pride therefore loves power, that ſhe might have homage, and that every one may give her honour; and ſuch as are wanting in that, expoſe themſelves to her anger and revenge. And as pride, ſo this evil effect, is more or leſs diffuſed through corrupt mankind; and has been the occaſion of great animoſity and miſchief in the world.

§. II. We have a pregnant inſtance in holy writ, what malice and revenge the ſtomach of proud man is capable of, when not gratified in this particular. It had almoſt coſt Mordecai his neck, and the whole people of the Jews their lives, becauſe he would not bow himſelf to Haman, who was a great favourite to king Ahaſuerus. And the practice of the world, even in our own age, will tell us, that not ſtriking a flag or ſail; and not ſaluting certain ports or garriſons; yea, leſs things have given riſe to mighty wars between ſtates and kingdoms, to the expence of much treaſure, but more blood. The like has followed about the precedency of princes, and their ambaſſadors. Alſo the envy, quarrels and miſchiefs, that have happened among private perſons, upon conceit that they have not been reſpected to their degree of quality among men, with hat, knee, or title: to be ſure duels and murders not a few. I was once myſelf in France * ſet upon about eleven at night, as I was walking to my lodging, by a perſon that way-laid me, with his naked ſword in his hand, who demanded ſatisfaction of me for taking no notice of him, at a time when he civilly ſaluted me with his hat; tho' the truth was, I ſaw him not when he did it. I will ſuppoſe he had killed me, for he made ſeveral paſſes at me, or I in my defence had killed him, when I diſarmed him, (as the earl of Crawford's ſervant ſaw, that was by) I aſk any man of underſtanding or conſcience, if the whole ceremony were worth the life of a man, conſidering the dignity of the nature, and the importance of the life of man, both with reſpect to God his Creator, himſelf, and the benefit of civil ſociety?

* Which was before I profeſſed the communion I am now of.

§. III. But the truth is, the world, under its degeneracy from God, is as much out of the way, as to true honour and reſpect, as in other things; for meer ſhews (and thoſe vain ones too) are much of the honour and reſpect that are expreſſed in the world: that a man may ſay concerning them, as the apoſtle ſpeaks of ſcience, that is, they are honours and reſpects falſly ſo called; having nothing of the nature of true honour and reſpect in them: but as degenerate men, loving to be honoured, firſt deviſed them; ſo pride only loves and ſeeks them, and is affronted and angry for want of them. Did men know a true chriſtian ſtate, and the honour that comes from above, which Jeſus teaches, they would not covet theſe very vanities, much leſs inſiſt upon them.

John v. 44.

§. IV. And here give me leave to ſet down the reaſons more particularly, why I, and the people with whom I walk in religious ſociety, have declined as vain and fooliſh, ſeveral worldly cuſtoms and faſhions of reſpect, much in requeſt at this time of day: and I beſeech thee, reader, to lay aſide all prejudice and ſcorn, and with the meekneſs and enquiry of a ſober and diſcreet mind, read and weigh what may be here alledged in our defence: and if we are miſtaken, rather pity and inform, than deſpiſe and abuſe our ſimplicity.

§. V. The firſt and moſt preſſing motive upon our ſpirits, to decline the practice of theſe preſent cuſtoms of pulling off the hat, bowing the body or knee, and giving people gaudy titles and epithets, in our ſalutations and addreſſes, was, that ſavour, ſight and ſenſe, that God, by his light and ſpirit, has given us of the chriſtian world's apoſtacy from God, and the cauſe and effects of that great and lamentable defection. In the diſcovery of which, the ſenſe of our ſtate came firſt before us, and we were made to ſee him whom we pierced, and to mourn for it. A day of humiliation overtook us, and we fainted to that pleaſure and delight we once loved. Now our works went beforehand to judgment, and a thorow ſearch was made, and the words of the prophet be- Mal. iii. 2. came well underſtood by us: 'who can abide the day of his coming? And who ſhall 'ſtand when he appears? He is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's ſoap.' And as the 1 Pet. iv. 18. apoſtle ſaid, 'if the righteous ſcarcely be ſaved, where ſhall the ungodly and the ſinner 2 Cor. v. 11. 'appear?' Wherefore, ſays the apoſtle Paul, knowing the terrors of the Lord, we 'perſwade men: what to do?' To come out of the nature, ſpirit, luſts and cuſtoms of Mat. xii. 36. this wicked world: remembring that, as Jeſus has ſaid, for every idle word that man ſpeaketh, he ſhall give an account in the day of judgment.

This concern of mind, and dejection of ſpirit, was viſible to our neighbours; and we are not aſhamed to own, that the terrors of the Lord took ſuch hold upon us, becauſe we had long under a profeſſion of religion grieved God's Holy Spirit, that reproved us in ſecret for our diſobedience; that as we abhorred to think of continuing in our old ſins, ſo we feared to uſe lawful things, leſt we ſhould uſe them unlawfully. The words of the Jer. xxx. 6. prophet were fulfilled on us: 'Wherefore do I ſee every man with his hands on his loins, 'as a woman in travail?' Many a pang and throw have we had; our heaven ſeemed to melt away, and our earth to be removed out of its place; and we were like men, as the apoſtle ſaid, 'upon whom the ends of the world were come.' God knows it was ſo in this day, the brightneſs of his coming to our ſouls diſcovered, and the breath of his mouth deſtroyed, every plant he had not planted in us. He was a ſwift witneſs againſt every evil thought, and every unfruitful work; and, bleſſed be his name, we were not offended in him, or at his righteous judgments. Now it was, that a grand inqueſt came upon our whole life: every word, thought and deed was brought to judgment, the root 1 John ii. 16. examined, and its tendency conſidered. 'The luſt of the eye, the luſt of the fleſh, and 'the pride of life were opened to our view; the myſtery of iniquity in us.' And by knowing the evil leaven, and its divers evil effects in ourſelves, how it had wrought, and what it had done, we came to have a ſenſe and knowledge of the ſtates of others: and what we could not, nay, we dare not let live and continue in ourſelves (as being manifeſted to us to proceed from an evil principle in the time of man's degeneracy) we could not comply with in others. Now this I ſay, and that in the fear and preſence of the all-ſeeing juſt God, the preſent honours and reſpect of the world, among other things, became burdenſome to us: we ſaw they had no being in paradiſe, that they grew in the night-time, and came from an ill root; and that they only delighted a vain and ill mind, and that much pride and folly were in them.

§. VI. And though we eaſily foreſaw the ſtorms of reproach that would fall upon us, for our refuſing to practiſe them; yet we were ſo far from being ſhaken in our judgment, that it abundantly confirmed our ſenſe of them. For ſo exalted a thing is man, and ſo loving of honour and reſpect even from his fellow-creatures, that ſo ſoon as in tenderneſs of conſcience towards God, we could not perform them, as formerly, he became more concerned than for all the reſt of our differences, however material to ſalvation. So that let the honour of God, and our own ſalvation, do as it will, it was greater hereſy and blaſphemy to refuſe him the homage of the hat, and his uſual titles of honour; to deny to pledge his healths, or play with him at cards and dice, than any other principle we maintained; for being leſs in his view, it ſeemed not ſo much in his way.

§. VII. And though it be frequently objected, that we ſeek to ſet up outward forms of preciſeneſs, and that it is but as a green ribbon, the badge of the party, the better to be known: I do declare in the fear of Almighty God, that theſe are but the imaginations and vain conſtructions of unſenſible men, that have not had that ſenſe, which the Lord hath given us, of what ariſes from the right and the wrong root in man: and when ſuch cenſurers of our ſimplicity ſhall be inwardly touched and awakened, by the mighty power of God, and ſee things as they are in their proper natures and ſeeds, they will then know their own burden, and eaſily acquit us without the imputation of folly or hypocriſy herein.

§. VIII. To ſay, that we ſtrain at ſmall things, which becomes not people of ſo fair pretenſions to liberty and freedom of ſpirit: I anſwer with meekneſs, truth and ſobriety; firſt, nothing is ſmall, that God makes matter of conſcience to do, or leave undone. Next, as inconſiderable as they are made, by thoſe that object upon us, they are much ſet by; ſo greatly, as for our not giving them, to be beaten, impriſoned, refuſed juſtice, &c. To ſay nothing of the deriſion and reproach that hath been frequently flung at us on this account. So that if we had wanted a proof of the truth of our inward belief and judgment, the very practice of them that oppoſed it would have abundantly con- Mat. xi. 19. firmed us. But let it ſuffice to us, that 'wiſdom is juſtified of her children:' we only paſſively let fall the practice of what we are taught to believe is vain and unchriſtian: in which we are negative to forms: for we leave off, we do not ſet up forms.

§. IX. The world is ſo ſet upon the ceremonious part and outſide of things, that it has well beſeemed the wiſdom of God in all ages, to bring forth his diſpenſations with very different appearances to their ſettled cuſtoms; thereby contradicting human inventions, and proving the integrity of his confeſſors. Nay, it is a teſt upon the world: it tries what patience, kindneſs, ſobriety and moderation they have: if the rough and homely outſide of truth ſtumble not their minds from the reception of it (whoſe beauty is within) it makes a great diſcovery upon them. For he who refuſes a precious jewel, becauſe it is preſented in a plain box, will never eſteem it to its value, nor ſet his heart upon keeping it: therefore I call it a teſt, becauſe it ſhews where the hearts and affections of people ſtick, after all their great pretences to more excellent things.

§. X. It is alſo a mighty trial upon God's people, in that they are put upon the diſcovery of their contradiction to the cuſtoms generally received and eſteemed in the world; which expoſes them to the wonder, ſcorn, and abuſe of the multitude. But there is an hidden treaſure in it: it inures us to reproach, it learns us to deſpiſe the falſe reputation of the world, and ſilently to undergo the contradiction and ſcorn of it's votaries; and finally, with a chriſtian meekneſs and patience, to overcome their injuries and reproaches. Add to this; it weans thee off thy familiars; for by being ſlighted of them as a ninnee, a fool, a frantick, &c. thou art delivered from a greater temptation, and that is, the power and influence of their vain converſation. And, laſt of all, it liſts thee of the company of the bleſſed, mocked, perſecuted Jeſus; to fight under his banner, againſt the world, the fleſh, and the devil: that after having faithfully ſuffered with them in a ſtate of humiliation, thou mayeſt reign with him in a ſtate of glorification; who glorifies his poor, deſpiſed, conſtant followers, with the glory he had with his Father before the John xvii. 5.
world began. This was the firſt reaſon of our declining to practiſe the before-mentioned honours, reſpects, &c.

§. XI. The ſecond reaſon, why we decline and refuſe the preſent uſe of theſe cuſtoms in our addreſſes and ſalutations is, from the conſideration of their very emptineſs and vanity: that there is nothing of true honour and reſpect in them, ſuppoſing them not to be evil. And as religion and worſhip are degenerated into form and ceremony (and they not according to primitive practice neither) ſo is honour and reſpect too; there being little of that in the world, as well as of the other; and to be ſure, in theſe cuſtoms, none that is juſtifiable by ſcripture or reaſon.

§. XII. In ſcripture, we find the word Honour often and diverſly uſed. First, for 1 Sam. ii. 30. obedience: as when God ſaith, 'they that honour me;' that is, that keep my command- 1 Pet. ii. 17.
ments. 'Honour the king;' that is, obey the king. 'Honour thy father and mother;' Exod. xx. 12.
that is, (ſaith the apoſtle to the Epheſians) 'obey thy father and thy mother in the Lord, Eph. vi. 1, 2.
'for that is right;' take heed to their precepts and advice; preſuppoſing always, that rulers and parents command lawful things, elſe they diſhonour themſelves to enjoin unlawful things; and ſubjects and children diſhonour their ſuperiors and parents, in complying with their unrighteous commands. Alſo, Chriſt uſes this word ſo, when he ſays,
'I have not a devil, but I honour my Father, and ye diſhonour me:' that is, I do my John viii. 49.
Father's will, in what I do; but you will not hear me; you reject my counſel, and will not obey my voice. It was not refuſing hat and knee, nor empty titles: no, it was diſobedience; reſiſting him that God had ſent, and not believing him. This was the diſhonour he taxed them with; uſing him as an impoſtor, that God had ordained for the ſalvation of the world. And of theſe diſhonourers, there are but too many at this day.
Chriſt has a ſaying to the ſame effect; 'that all men ſhould honour the Son, even as they John v. 23.
'honour the Father; and he that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the Father, 'which hath ſent him:' that is, they that hearken not to Chriſt, and do not worſhip and obey him, they do not hear, worſhip, nor obey God. As they pretended to believe in God, ſo they were to have believed in him; he told them ſo. This is pregnantly manifeſted in the caſe of the centurion, whoſe faith was ſo much commended by Chriſt, where, giving Jeſus an account of his honourable ſtation, he tells him, 'he had ſoldiers under Luke vii. 8.
'his authority, and when he ſaid to one, go, he went; to another, come, he came; 'and to a third, do this, he did it.' In this it was he placed the honour of his capacity, and the reſpect of his ſoldiers, and not in hats and legs: nor are ſuch cuſtoms yet in uſe amongſt ſoldiers, being effeminate, and unworthy of maſculine gravity.

§. XIII. In the next place, honour is uſed for preferment to truſt and eminent employments. So the Pſalmiſt ſpeaking to God; 'for thou haſt crowned him with glory and Pſal. viii. 5.
'honour:' again, 'Honour and majeſty haſt thou laid on him:' that is, God had given and xxi. 5.
Chriſt power over all his enemies, and exalted him to great dominion. Thus the wiſe man intimates, when he ſays, 'the fear of the Lord is the inſtruction of wiſdom, and Prov. xv. 33.
'before honour is humility.' That is, before advancement or preferment, is humility.
Farther, he has this ſaying, 'as ſnow in ſummer, and as rain in harveſt, ſo honour is ch. xxvi. 1.
'not ſeemly for a fool:' that is, a fool is not capable of the dignity of truſt, employment, or preferment; they require virtue, wiſdom, integrity, diligence, of which fools are unfurniſhed. And yet if the reſpects and titles, in uſe amongſt us, are to go for marks of honour, Solomon's Proverb will take place, and doubtleſs doth, upon the Prov. xiii. 18. practice of this age, that yields ſo much of that honour to a great many of Solomon's fools; who are not only ſilly men, but wicked too; ſuch as refuſe inſtruction, and hate the fear of the Lord; which only maketh one of his wiſe men.

Gen. xxxiv. 7. §. XIV. And as virtue and wiſdom are the ſame, ſo folly and wickedneſs. Thus Joſh. vii. 14, 15. Sechem's raviſhment of Dinah, Jacob's daughter, is called: ſo is the rebellion and Pſal. xxxviii. 5. wickedneſs of the Iſraelites in Joſhua. The Pſalmiſt expreſſes it thus: 'My wounds 'ſtink becauſe of my fooliſhneſs;' that is, his ſin. And, 'the Lord will ſpeak peace to Pſal. lxxxv. 8. 'his ſaints, that they turn not again to folly;' that is, to evil. 'His own iniquities, Prov. v. 22, 23. '(ſays Solomon) ſhall take the wicked himſelf, and he ſhall be holden with the cords of 'his ſins: he ſhall die without inſtruction, and in the greatneſs of his folly he ſhall go Mark vii. 21, 24. 'aſtray.' Chriſt puts fooliſhneſs with blaſphemy, pride, thefts, murders, adulteries, wickedneſs, &c. I was the more willing to add theſe paſſages, to ſhew the difference that there is between the mind of the Holy Ghoſt, and the notion that thoſe ages had of fools, that deſerve not honour, and that which is generally meant by fools and folly in our time; that we may the better underſtand the diſproportion there is between honour, as then underſtood by the Holy Ghoſt, and thoſe that were led thereby; and the apprehenſion of it, and practice of theſe latter ages of profeſſed chriſtians.

Prov. xi. 16. §. XV. But honour is alſo taken for reputation, and ſo it is underſtood with us: 'A 'gracious woman (ſays Solomon) retaineth honour;' that is, ſhe keeps her credit; and, Prov. xx. 3. by her virtue, maintains her reputation of ſobriety and chaſtity. In another place, 'It Mat. xiii. 57. 'is an honour for a man to ceaſe from ſtrife:' that is, it makes for his reputation, as a wiſe and good man. Chriſt uſes the word thus, where he ſays, 'a prophet is not without 1 Theſ. iv. 4. 'honour, ſave in his own country:' that is, he has credit, and is valued, ſave at home. The apoſtle to the Theſſalonians has a ſaying to that effect: 'that every one of you 'ſhould know how to poſſeſs his veſſel in ſanctification and honour;' that is, in chaſtity and ſobriety. In all which, nothing of the faſhions by us declined is otherwiſe concerned, than to be totally excluded.

§. XVI. There is yet another uſe of the word [honour] in ſcripture, and that is to 1 Tim. v. 17. functions and capacities: as, 'an elder is worthy of double honour:' that is, he deſerves double eſteem, love, and reſpect; being holy, merciful, temperate, peaceable, humble, Philip. ii. 29. &c. eſpecially one that 'labours in word and doctrine.' So Paul recommends Epaphroditus to the Philippians: 'Receive him therefore in the Lord with all gladneſs, and hold 'ſuch in reputation.' As if he had ſaid, let them be valued and regarded by you in what they ſay and teach. Which is the trueſt, and moſt natural and convincing way of teſtifying reſpect to a man of God, as Chriſt ſaid to his diſciples, 'If you love me, you will 'keep my ſayings.' Farther, the apoſtle bids us, 'to honour widows indeed;' that is, ſuch women as are of chaſte lives, and exemplary virtue, are honourable. Marriage is Heb. xiii. 4. honourable too, with this proviſo, that the bed be undefiled: ſo that the honour of marriage, is the chaſtity of the married.

§. XVII. The word Honour in the ſcripture, is alſo uſed of ſuperiors to inferiors; which is plain in that of Ahaſuerus to Haman: 'What ſhall be done to the man whom Eſth. vi. 6. 'the king delighteth to honour? Why, he mightily advanced him, as Mordecai afterwards. And more particularly it is ſaid, 'that the Jews had light, and gladneſs, and joy, Eſth. viii. 16. 'and honour:' that is, they eſcaped the perſecution that was like to fall upon them, and, by the means of Eſther and Mordecai, they enjoyed, not only peace, but favour and countenance too. In this ſenſe, the apoſtle Peter adviſed men, 'to honour their wives;' that is, to love, value, cheriſh, countenance and eſteem them for their fidelity and affection to their huſbands; for their tenderneſs and care over their children, and for their di- 1 Pet. iii. ligence and circumſpection in their families: there's no ceremonious behaviour, or gawdy 1 Sam. ii. 30. titles, requiſite to expreſs this honour. Thus God honours holy men: 'they (ſays the Lord) 'that honour me, I will honour; and they that deſpiſe me, ſhall be lightly 'eſteemed:' that is, I will do good to them, I will love, bleſs, countenance, and proſper them that honour me, that obey me: but they that deſpiſe me, that reſiſt my ſpirit, and break my law, they ſhall be lightly eſteemed, little ſet by, or accounted of; they ſhall not find favour with God, nor righteous men. And ſo we ſee it daily among men: if the great viſit, or concern themſelves to aid the poor, we ſay, that ſuch a great man did me the honour to come and ſee or help me in my need.

§. XVIII. I ſhall conclude this with one paſſage more, and that is a very large, plain, 1 Pet. ii. 17. and pertinent one: 'Honour all men, and love the brotherhood:' that is, love is above honour, and that is reſerved for the brotherhood. But honour, which is eſteem and regard, that thou oweſt to all men; and if all, then thy inferiors. But why, for all men? Becauſe they are the creation of God, and the nobleſt part of his creation too; they are alſo thy own kind: be natural, have bowels, and aſſiſt them with what thou canſt; be ready to perform any real reſpect, and yield them any good or countenance thou canſt.

§. XIX. And yet there ſeems a limitation to this command, honour all men, in that Pſal. xv. 4. godly paſſage of David, 'Who ſhall abide in thy tabernacle? who ſhall dwell in thy ‘ holy hill? He in whoſe eyes a vile perſon is contemned; but he honoureth them that fear the Lord.’ Here honour is confined and affixed to godly perſons, and diſhonour made the duty of the righteous to the wicked, and a mark of their being righteous, that they diſhonour; that is, ſlight or diſregard them. To conclude this ſcripture-enquiry after honour, I ſhall contract the ſubject of it under three capacities, ſuperiors, equals, and inferiors: honour to ſuperiors, is obedience; to equals, love; to inferiors, countenance and help: that is honour after God's mind, and the holy people's faſhion of old.

§. XX. But how little of all this is to be ſeen or had in a poor empty hat, bow, cringe, or gaudy, fluttering title? Let the truth-ſpeaking witneſs of God in all mankind judge. For I muſt not appeal to corrupt, proud, and ſelf-ſeeking man, of the good or evil of theſe cuſtoms; that, as little as he would render them, are loved and ſought by him, and he is out of humour, and angry, if he has them not.

This is our ſecond reaſon, why we refuſe to practiſe the accuſtomed ceremonies of honour and reſpect, becauſe we find no ſuch notion or expreſſion, of honour and reſpect, recommended to us by the Holy Ghoſt in the ſcriptures of truth.

§. XXI. Our third reaſon, for not uſing them as teſtimonies of honour and reſpect is, becauſe there is no diſcovery of honour or reſpect to be made by them: 'tis rather eluding and equivocating it; cheating people of the honour or reſpect that is due to them; giving them nothing in the ſhew of ſomething. There is in them no obedience to ſuperiors; no love to equals; no help or countenance to inferiors.

§. XXII. We are, we declare to the whole world, for true honour and reſpect: we honour the king, our parents, our maſters, our magiſtrates, our landlords, one another, yea all men, after God's way, uſed by holy men and women of old time: but we refuſe theſe cuſtoms, as vain and deceitful; not anſwering the end they are uſed for.

§. XXIII. But fourthly, there is yet more to be ſaid: we find that vain, looſe, and worldly people, are the great lovers and practiſers of them, and moſt deride our ſimplicity of behaviour. Now we aſſuredly know, from the ſacred teſtimonies, that thoſe people cannot give true honour, that live in a diſhonourable ſpirit; they underſtand it not: but they can give the hat and knee; and that they are very liberal of; nor are any more expert at it. This is to us, a proof, that no true honour can be teſtified by thoſe cuſtoms, which vanity and looſeneſs love and uſe.

§. XXIV. Next to them, I will add hypocriſy and revenge too. For how little do many care for each other? Nay, what ſpite, envy, animoſity, ſecret back-biting, and plotting one againſt another, under the uſe of theſe idle reſpects; till paſſion, too ſtrong for cunning, break through hypocriſy into open affront and revenge. It cannot be ſo with the ſcripture-honour: to obey, or prefer a man, out of ſpite, is not uſually done; and to love, help, ſerve, and countenance a perſon, in order to deceive and be revenged of him, is a thing never heard of: theſe admit of no hypocriſy, nor revenge. Men do not theſe things to palliate ill-will, which are the teſtimonies of quite the contrary. 'Tis abſurd to imagine it, becauſe impoſſible to be done.

§. XXV. Our ſixth reaſon is, that honour was from the beginning, but hat-reſpects and moſt titles are of late: therefore there was true honour before hats or titles; and conſequently true honour ſtands not in them. And that which ever was the way to expreſs true honour, is the beſt way ſtill; and this the ſcripture teaches better than dancing-maſters can do.

§. XXVI. Seventhly, if honour conſiſts in ſuch like ceremonies, then will it follow, that they are moſt capable of ſhewing honour, who perform it moſt exactly, according to the mode or faſhion of the times; conſequently, that man hath not the meaſure of true honour, from a juſt and reaſonable principle in himſelf, but by the means and ſkill of the fantaſtic dancing-maſters of the times: and for this cauſe it is we ſee, that many give much money to have their children learn their honours, falſly ſo called. And what doth this but totally exclude the poor country people; who, tho' they plow, ſow, till, reap, go to market; and in all things obey their juſtices, landlords, fathers, and maſters, with ſincerity and ſobriety, rarely uſe thoſe ceremonies; but if they do, it is ſo awkwardly and meanly, that they are eſteemed by a court-critic ſo ill-favoured, as only fit to make a jeſt of, and be laughed at: but what ſober man will not deem their obedience beyond the other's vanity and hypocriſy? This baſe notion of honour turns out of doors the true, and ſets the falſe in it's place. Let it be farther conſidered, that the way or faſhion of doing it is much more in the deſign of it's performers, as well as view of it's ſpectators, than the reſpect itſelf. Whence 'tis commonly ſaid, he is a man of good mein; or, ſhe is a woman of exact behaviour. And what is this behaviour, but fantaſtic, crampt poſtures, and cringings, unnatural to their ſhape, and if it were not faſhionable, ridiculous to the view of all people; and therefore to the Eaſtern countries a proverb.

§. XXVII. But yet eighthly, real honour conſiſts not in a hat, bow, or title, becauſe all theſe things may be had for money. For which reaſon, how many dancing-ſchools, plays, &c. are there in the land, to which youth is generally ſent to be educated in theſe vain faſhions? whilſt they are ignorant of the honour that is of God, and their minds are allured to viſible things that periſh; and inſtead of remembering their Creator, are taken up with toys and fopperies; and ſometimes ſo much worſe, as to coſt themſelves a diſinheriting, and their indiſcreet parents grief and miſery all their days. If parents would honour God in the help of his poor, with the ſubſtance they beſtow on ſuch an education, Prov. iii. 9. they would find a better account in the end.

§. XXVIII. But laſtly, We cannot eſteem bows, titles, and pulling off of hats, to be real honour, becauſe ſuch like cuſtoms, have been prohibited by God, his Son and ſervants in days paſt. This I ſhall endeavour to ſhew by three or four expreſs authorities.

§. XXIX. My firſt example and authority is taken from the ſtory of Mordecai and Haman; ſo cloſe to this point, that methinks it ſhould at leaſt command ſilence to the objections frequently advanced againſt us. Haman was firſt miniſter of ſtate and favourite to king Ahaſuerus. The text ſays, 'that the king ſet his ſeat above all the princes 'that were with him; and all the king's ſervants bowed and reverenced Haman; for 'the king had ſo commanded concerning him: but Mordecai (it ſeems) bowed not, nor Eſth. iii. 1, 2. 'did him reverence.' This, at firſt, made ill for Mordecai: a gallows was prepared for him at Haman's command. But the ſequel of the ſtory ſhews, that Haman proved his own invention, and ended his pride with his life upon it. Well now, ſpeaking as the world ſpeaks, and looking upon Mordecai without the knowledge of the ſucceſs; was not Mordecai a very clown, at leaſt a ſilly, moroſe, and humorous man, to run ſuch a hazard for a trifle? What hurt had it done him to have bowed to, and honoured one the king honoured? did he not deſpiſe the king, in diſregarding Haman? nay, had not the king commanded that reſpect? and are not we to honour and obey the king? One would have thought, he might have bowed for the king's ſake, whatever he had in his heart, and yet have come off well enough; for that he bowed not merely to Haman, but to the king's authority; beſides, it was but an innocent ceremony. But it ſeems, Mordecai was too plain and ſtout, and not fine and ſubtil enough to avoid the diſpleaſure of Haman.

Howbeit, he was an excellent man: 'he feared God, and wrought righteouſneſs.' And in this very thing alſo, he pleaſed God, and even the king too at laſt, that had moſt cauſe to be angry with him: for he advanced him to Haman's dignity; and, if it could be, to greater honour. 'Tis true, ſad news firſt came; no leſs than deſtruction to Mordecai, and the whole people of the Jews beſides, for his ſake: but Mordecai's integrity and humiliation, his faſting and ſtrong cries to God prevailed, and the people were ſaved, and poor condemned Mordecai comes, after all, to be exalted above the princes. O this has great doctrine in it, to all thoſe that are in their ſpiritual exerciſes and temptations, whether in this or any other reſpect! They that endure faithful in that which they are convinced God requires of them, tho' againſt the grain and humour of the world, and themſelves too, they ſhall find a bleſſed recompence in the end. My brethren, remember the cup of cold water! 'We ſhall reap, if we faint not:' and call to mind, that our captain bowed not to him that told him, 'If thou wilt fall down and worſhip me, I will Mat. iv. 8, 9. 'give thee all the glory of the world:' ſhall we bow then? O no! let us follow our bleſſed leader.

§. XXX. But before I leave this ſection, 'tis fit I add, that in conference with a late biſhop (and none of the leaſt eminent) upon this ſubject and inſtance, I remember he ſought to evade it thus: Mordecai (ſays he) did not refuſe to bow, as it was a teſtimony of reſpect to the king's favourite; but he being a figure and type of Chriſt, he refuſed it, becauſe Haman was of the uncircumciſion, and ought to bow to him rather. To which I replied; that allowing Mordecai to be a figure of Chriſt, and the Jews of God's people or church; and that as the Jews were ſaved by Mordecai, ſo the church is ſaved by Chriſt; this makes for me: for then, by that reaſon, the ſpiritual circumciſion, or people of Chriſt, are not to receive and bow to the faſhions and cuſtoms of the ſpiritual uncircumciſion, who are the children of the world; of which, ſuch as were condemnable ſo long ago, in the time of the type and figure, can by no means be juſtifiably received or practiſed in the time of the anti-type or ſubſtance itſelf. On the contrary, this ſhews expreſly, we are faithfully to decline ſuch worldly cuſtoms, and not to faſhion ourſelves according to the converſation of earthly-minded people; but be renewed and changed in our ways; and keep cloſe to our Mordecai, who having not bowed, we muſt not bow, that are his people and followers. And whatever be our ſuffering, or reproaches, they will have an end: Mordecai, our captain, that appears for his people throughout all the provinces, in the king's gate, will deliver us at laſt; and, for his ſake, we ſhall be favoured and loved of the king himſelf too. So powerful is faithful Mordecai at laſt. Therefore let us all look to Jeſus, our Mordecai, the Iſrael indeed; he that has power with God, and would not bow in the hour of temptation, but has mightily prevailed; and therefore is a prince for ever, and of his government there ſhall never be an end. Iſa. ix. 7.

§. XXXI. The next ſcripture-inſtance I urge againſt theſe cuſtoms, is a paſſage in Job, thus expreſſed; 'Let me not, I pray you, accept any man's perſon; neither let me Job. xxxii. 21, 22. 'give flattering titles unto man, for I know not to give flattering titles; in ſo doing 'my Maker would ſoon take me away.' The queſtion that will ariſe upon the allegation

tion of this ſcripture, is this, viz. What titles are flattering? The anſwer is as obvious, namely, Such as are empty and fictitious, and make him more than he is. As to call a man what he is not, to pleaſe him; or to exalt him beyond his true name, office, or deſert, to gain upon his affection; who, it may be, luſteth to honour and reſpect: ſuch as theſe, Moſt excellent, moſt ſacred, your grace, your lordſhip, moſt dread majeſty, right honourable, right worſhipful, may it pleaſe your majeſty, your grace, your lordſhip, your honour, your worſhip, and the like unneceſſary titles and attributes; calculated only to pleaſe and tickle poor, proud, vain, yet mortal man. Likewiſe to call man what he is not, as my lord, my maſter, &c. and wiſe, juſt, or good, (when he is neither) only to pleaſe him, or ſhew him reſpect.

It was familiar thus to do among the Jews, under their degeneracy; wherefore one came to Chriſt and ſaid; ‘Good maſter, what ſhall I do to have eternal life? It was a ſalutation or addreſs of reſpect in thoſe times. 'Tis familiar now: good my lord, good ſir, good maſter, do this, or do that. But what was Chriſt's anſwer? how did he take it? ‘Why calleſt thou me good?’ ſays Chriſt, ‘there is none good ſave one, that is ‘God.’ He rejected it, that had more right to keep it than all mankind: and why? becauſe there was one greater than he; and that he ſaw the man addreſſed it to his manhood, after the way of the times, and not his divinity which dwelt within it; therefore Chriſt refuſes it, ſhewing and inſtructing us that we ſhould not give ſuch epithets and titles commonly to men: for good being due alone to God and godlineſs, it can only be ſaid in flattery to fallen man, and therefore ſinful to be ſo ſaid.

Luke xvii. 13, 19.

This plain and exact life well became him that was on purpoſe manifeſted to return and reſtore man from his lamentable degeneracy, to the innocency and purity of his firſt creation, who has taught us to be careful, how we uſe and give attributes unto man, by that moſt ſevere ſaying, ‘that every idle word that men ſhall ſpeak, they ſhall give ‘an account thereof in the day of judgment.’ And that which ſhould warn all men of the latitude they take herein, and ſufficiently juſtify our tenderneſs, is this, that man can ſcarcely commit greater injury and offence againſt Almighty God, than to aſcribe any of his attributes unto man, the creature of his word, and the work of his hands. He is a jealous God of his honour, and will not give his glory unto another. Beſides, it is ſo near the ſin of the aſpiring, fallen angels, that affected to be greater and better than they were made and ſtated by the great Lord of all; and to entitle man to a ſtation above his make and orb looks ſo like idolatry (the unpardonable ſin under the law,) that it is hard to think, how men and women profeſſing chriſtianity, and ſeriouſly reflecting upon their vanity and evil in theſe things, can continue in them, much leſs plead for them, and leaſt of all reproach and deride thoſe that through tenderneſs of conſcience cannot uſe and give them. It ſeems that Elihu did not dare to do it; but put ſuch weight upon the matter, as to give this for one reaſon of his forbearance, to wit, ‘leſt my Maker ſhould ‘ſoon take me away:’ that is, for fear God ſhould ſtrike me dead, I dare not give man titles, that are above him, or titles merely to pleaſe him. I may not, by any means, gratify that ſpirit which luſteth after ſuch things. God is to be exalted, and man abaſed. God is jealous of man's being ſet higher than his ſtation: he will have him keep his place, know his original, and remember the rock from whence he came: that what he has is borrowed, not his own, but his Maker's, who brought him forth, and ſuſtained him; which man is very apt to forget. And leſt I ſhould be acceſſary to it by flattering titles, inſtead of telling him truly and plainly what he is, and uſing him as he ought to be treated, and thereby provoke my Maker to diſpleaſure, and he, in his anger and jealouſy ſhould take me ſoon away, or bring ſudden death, and an untimely end upon me, I dare not uſe, I dare not give ſuch titles unto men.

Mat. xii. 36.

§. XXXII. But if we had not this to alledge from the old-teſtament-writings, it ſhould and ought to ſuffice with chriſtians, that theſe cuſtoms are ſeverely cenſured by the great Lord and Maſter of all their religion; who is ſo far from putting people upon giving honour one to another, that he will not indulge them in it, whatever be the cuſtoms of the country they live in: for he charges it upon the Jews, as a mark of their apoſtacy: ‘How ‘can ye believe, which receive honour one of another, and ſeek not the honour that ‘cometh from God only?’ Where their infidelity concerning Chriſt is made the effect of ſeeking worldly, and not heavenly honour only. And the thing is not hard to apprehend, if we conſider, that ſelf-love, and deſire of honour from men, is inconſiſtent with the love and humility of Chriſt. They ſought the good opinion and reſpect of the world; how then was it poſſible, they ſhould leave all and follow him, whoſe kingdom is not of this world; and that came in a way ſo croſs to the mind and humour of it? and that this was the meaning of our Lord Jeſus, is plain: for he tells us, what that honour was, they gave and received, which he condemned them for, and of which he bid the diſciples of his humility and croſs beware. His words are theſe (and he ſpeaks them not of the rabble, but of the doctors, the great men, the men of honour among the Jews) ‘They ‘love (ſays he) the uppermoſt rooms at feaſts;’ that is, places of greateſt rank and reſpect; ‘and greetings,’ that is, ſalutations of reſpect, ſuch as pulling off the hat, and bowing the body, are in our age; ‘in the market-places,’ (viz. in the places of note and concourſe, the public walks and exchanges of the country.) And laſtly, ‘they love

Mat. xxiii. 6, 10, 11.
Mark xii. 38.
Luke xi. 43.

(ſays Chriſt) to be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi: one of the moſt eminent titles among the Jews. A word comprehending an excellency equal to many titles: it may ſtand for your grace, your lordſhip, right reverend father, &c. It is upon theſe men of breeding and quality, that he pronounces his woes, making theſe practices ſome of the evil marks, by which to know them, as well as ſome of the motives of his threatnings againſt them. But he leaves it not here; he purſues this very point of honour, above all the reſt, in his caution to his diſciples; to whom he gave in charge thus: ‘But be not ye called rabbi, for ‘ one is your maſter, even Chriſt, and all ye are brethren. Neither be ye called maſters; ‘ but he that is greateſt among you ſhall be your ſervant: and whoſoever ſhall exalt him‘ ſelf, ſhall be abaſed.’ Plain it is, that theſe paſſages carry a ſevere rebuke, both to worldly honour in general, and to thoſe members and expreſſions of it in particular, which, as near as the language of ſcripture and cuſtoms of that age will permit, do diſtinctly reach and allude to thoſe of our own time; for the declining of which, we have ſuffered ſo much ſcorn and abuſe, both in our perſons and eſtates: God forgive the unreaſonable authors of it!

§. XXXIII. The apoſtle Paul has a ſaying of great weight and fervency, in his epiſtle Rom. xii. 1, 2. to the Romans, very agreeable to this doctrine of Chriſt; ’tis this: ‘I beſeech you there‘ fore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye preſent your bodies a living ſacrifice, ‘ holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reaſonable ſervice: and be not conformed to ‘ this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove ‘ what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God.’ He writ to a people in the midſt of the enſnaring pomp and glory of the world: Rome was the ſeat of Cæſar, and the empire: the miſtreſs of invention. Her faſhions, as thoſe of France now, were as laws to the world, at leaſt at Rome: whence it is proverbial;

Cum fueris Romæ, Romano vivito more.

When thou art at Rome, thou muſt do as Rome does.

But the apoſtle is of another mind: he warns the chriſtians of that city, ‘that they be ‘ not conformed;’ that is, that they do not follow the vain faſhions and cuſtoms of this world, but leave them: the emphaſis lies upon This, as well as upon Conformed: and it imports, that this world, which they were not to conform to, was the corrupt and degenerate condition of mankind in that age. Wherefore the apoſtle proceeds to exhort thoſe believers, and that by the mercies of God, (the moſt powerful and winning of all arguments) ‘that they would be transformed;’ that is, changed from the way of life, cuſtomary among the Romans; ‘and prove what is that acceptable will of God.’ As if he had ſaid, examine what you do and practiſe; ſee if it be right, and that it pleaſe God: John iii. 21, 22. call every thought, word, and action to judgment; try whether they are wrought in God or not; that ſo you may prove or know what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God.

§. XXXIV. The next ſcripture-authority we appeal to, in our vindication, is a paſſage of the apoſtle Peter, in his firſt epiſtle, writ to the believing ſtrangers throughout the countries of Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Aſia, and Bithynia; which were the churches of Chriſt Jeſus in thoſe parts of the world, gathered up by his power and ſpirit: ’tis this; 1 Pet. i. 13, 14. ‘Gird up the loins of your mind; be ſober, and hope to the end, for the grace that is ‘ to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt; as obedient children, not ‘ faſhioning yourſelves according to the former luſts of your ignorance.’ That is, be not found in the vain faſhions and cuſtoms of the world, unto which you conformed in your former ignorance: but as ye have believed in a more plain and excellent way, ſo be ſober and fervent, and hope to the end: do not give out; let them mock on; bear ye the contradiction of ſinners conſtantly, as obedient children, that you may receive the kindneſs of God, at the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt. And therefore does the apoſtle call them ‘ſtrangers (a figurative ſpeech) people eſtranged from the cuſtoms of the world, of new ‘ faith and manners; and ſo unknown of the world:’ and if ſuch ſtrangers, then not to be faſhioned or conformed to their pleaſing reſpects and honours, whom they were enſtranged from: becauſe the ſtrangeneſs lay in leaving that which was cuſtomary and familiar to them before. The following words (ver. 17.) prove he uſed the word ſtrangers in a ſpiritual ſenſe; ‘Paſs the time of your ſojourning here in fear;’ that is, paſs the time of your being here as ſtrangers on earth in fear: not after the faſhions of the world. A word in the next chapter farther explains his ſenſe, where he tells the believers, that ‘they are a peculiar people;’ to wit, a diſtinct, a ſingular and ſeparate people from the reſt of the world; not any longer to faſhion themſelves according to their cuſtoms: but I do not know how that could be, if they were to live in communion with the world, in its reſpects and honours; for that is not to be a peculiar or ſeparate people from them, but to be like them, becauſe conformable to them.

§. XXXV. I ſhall conclude my ſcripture-teſtimonies againſt the foregoing reſpects, with that memorable and cloſe paſſage of the apoſtle James, againſt reſpect to perſons in James ii. 1, 2, 3, 4. general, after the world's faſhion: ‘My brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jeſus ‘ Chriſt, the Lord of glory, with reſpect of perſons: for if there come unto your aſſem‘ bly, a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel; and there come in alſo a poor man, in vile raiment, and ye have reſpect to him that weareth the gay cloathing, and ſay unto him, ſit thou here in a goodly place (or well and ſeemly, as the word is) and ſay to the poor, ſtand thou there, or ſit here under my footſtool; are ye not then partial in yourſelves, and are become judges of evil thoughts [that is, they knew they did amiſs]? If ye fulfil the royal law, according to the ſcripture, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as Ver. 8. thyſelf, ye do well; but if ye have reſpect to perſons, ye commit ſin, and are convinced of the law as tranſgreſſors.' This is ſo full, there ſeems nothing left for me to add, or others to object. We are not to reſpect perſons, that's the firſt thing: and the next is, if we do, we commit ſin, and break the law: at our own peril be it. And yet perhaps ſome will ſay, that by this we overthrow all manner of diſtinction among men, under their divers qualities, and introduce a reciprocal and relational reſpect in the room of it: but if it be ſo, I can't help it, the apoſtle James muſt anſwer for it, who has given us this doctrine for chriſtian and apoſtolical. And yet one greater than he told his diſciples, of whom James was one, viz. 'Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exerciſe Mat. xx. 25, 26, 27. dominion over them, &c. But it ſhall not be ſo among you; but whoſoever will be great among you, let him be your miniſter; and whoſoever will be chief among you, let him be your ſervant:' that is, he that affects rule, and ſeeks to be uppermoſt, ſhall be eſteemed leaſt among you. And to ſay true, upon the whole matter, whether we regard thoſe early times of the world, that were antecedent to the coming of Chriſt, or ſoon after, there was yet a greater ſimplicity, than in the times in which we are fallen. For thoſe early times of the world, as bad as they were in other things, were great ſtrangers to the frequency of theſe follies: nay, they hardly uſed ſome of them, at leaſt very rarely. For if we read the ſcriptures, ſuch a thing as my lord Adam, (though lord of the world) is not to be found; nor my lord Noah neither, the ſecond lord of the earth; nor yet my lord Abraham, the father of the faithful; nor my lord Iſaac; nor my lord Jacob: but much leſs my lord Peter, and my lord Paul, to be found in the bible: and leſs your holineſs, or your grace. Nay, among the Gentiles, the people wore their own names with more ſimplicity, and uſed not the ceremoniouſneſs of ſpeech that is now practiſed among Chriſtians, nor yet any thing like it. My lord Solon, my lord Phocion, my lord Plato, my lord Ariſtotle, my lord Scipio, my lord Fabius, my lord Cato, my lord Cicero, are not to be read in any of the Greek or Latin ſtories, and yet they were ſome of the ſages and heroes of thoſe great empires. No, their own names were enough to diſtinguiſh them from other men, and their virtue and employment in the public were their titles of honour. Nor has this vanity yet crept far into the latin writers, where it is familiar for authors to cite the moſt learned, and the moſt noble, without any addition to their names, unleſs worthy or learned: and if their works give it them, we make conſcience to deny it them. For inſtance: the fathers they only cite thus; Polycarpus, Ignatius, Irenæus, Cyprian, Tertullian, Origen, Arnobius, Lactantius, Chryſoſtom, Jerom, &c. More modern writers; Damaſcen, Rabanus, Paſchaſius, Theophilact, Bernard, &c. And of the laſt age; Luther, Melancthon, Calvin, Beza, Zuinglius, Marlorat, Voſſius, Grotius, Dalleus, Amaraldus, &c. And of our own country; Gildas, Beda, Alcuinus, Horn, Bracton, Groſteed, Littleton, Cranmer, Ridley, Jewel, Whitaker, Selden, &c. And yet, I preſume, this will not be thought uncivil or rude. Why then is our ſimplicity (and ſo honeſtly grounded too, as conſcience againſt pride in man, that ſo eagerly and perniciouſly loves and ſeeks worſhip and greatneſs) ſo much deſpiſed and abuſed, and that by profeſſed Chriſtians too, who take themſelves to be the followers of him, that has forbid theſe fooliſh cuſtoms, as plainly as any other impiety condemned in his doctrine? I earneſtly beg the lovers, uſers, and expecters of theſe ceremonies, to let this I have writ have ſome conſideration and weight with them.

§. XXXVI. However, Chriſtians are not ſo ill-bred as the world thinks: for they ſhew reſpect too: But the difference between them lies in the nature of the reſpect they perform, and the reaſons of it. The world's reſpect is an empty ceremony, no ſoul or ſubſtance in it: the Chriſtian's is a ſolid thing, whether by obedience to ſuperiors, love to equals, or help and countenance to inferiors. Next, their reaſons and motives to honour and reſpect, are as wide one from the other: for fine apparel, empty titles, or large revenues, are the world's motives, being things her children worſhip: but the Chriſtian's motive is, the ſenſe of his duty in God's ſight; firſt, to parents and magiſtrates; and then to inferior relations: and laſtly, to all people, according to their virtue, wiſdom, and piety: which is far from reſpect to the meer perſons of men, or having their perſons in admiration for reward; much leſs on ſuch mean and baſe motives as wealth and ſumptuous raiment.

§. XXXVII. We ſhall eaſily grant, our honour, as our religion, is more hidden; and that neither is ſo diſcernible by worldly men, nor grateful to them. Our plainneſs is odd, uncouth, and goes mightily againſt the grain; but ſo does Chriſtianity too, and that for the ſame reaſons. But had not the heathen ſpirit prevailed too long under a chriſtian profeſſion, it would not be ſo hard to diſcern the right from the wrong. O that Chriſtians would look upon themſelves, with the glaſs of righteouſneſs, that which tells true, and gives them an exact knowledge of themſelves! and then let them examine, what in them, and about them, agrees with Chriſt's doctrine and life; and they may ſoon reſolve, whether they are real Chriſtians, or but Heathens chriſtened with the name of Chriſtians.

Some teſtimonies from ancient and modern writers, in favour of our behaviour.

§. XXXVIII. Marlorat out of Luther, and Calvin, upon that remarkable paſſage, I juſt now urged from the apoſtle James, gives us the ſenſe thoſe primitive reformers had of reſpect to perſons, in theſe words, viz. "To reſpect perſons (here) is to have regard to the habit and garb: the apoſtle ſignifies, that ſuch reſpecting perſons is ſo contrary to true faith, that they are altogether inconſiſtent: but if the pomp, and other worldly regards, prevail, and weaken what is of Chriſt, it is a ſign of a decaying faith; yea, ſo great is the glory and ſplendor of Chriſt, in a pious ſoul, that all the glories of the world have no charms, no beauty, in compariſon of that, unto one ſo righteouſly inclined: the apoſtle maketh ſuch reſpecting of perſons, to be repugnant to the light (within them) inſomuch, as they who follow thoſe practices, are condemned from within themſelves. So that ſanctity ought to be the reaſon, or motive, of all outward reſpects; and that none is to be honoured, upon any account, but holineſs:" thus much Marlorat. But if this be true doctrine, we are much in the right in refuſing conformity to the vain reſpects of worldly men.

§. XXXIX. But I ſhall add to theſe the admonition of a learned ancient writer, who lived above 1200 years ſince, of great eſteem, namely, Jerom, who writing to a noble matron, Celantia, directing her how to live in the midſt of her proſperity and honours, amongſt many other religious inſtructions, ſpeaks thus: "Heed not thy nobility, nor let that be a reaſon for thee to take place of any; eſteem not thoſe of a meaner extraction to be thy inferiors; for our religion admits of no reſpect of perſons, nor doth it induce us to repute men from any external condition, but from their inward frame and diſpoſition of mind: it is hereby that we pronounce men noble or baſe. With God, not to ſerve ſin, is to be free; and to excel in virtue, is to be noble: God has choſen the mean and contemptible of this world, whereby to humble the great ones. Beſides, it is a folly for any to boaſt his gentility, ſince all are equally eſteemed by God. The ranſom of the poor, and rich, coſt Chriſt an equal expence of blood. Nor is it material in what ſtate a man is born; the new creature hath no diſtinction. But if we will forget, how we all deſcended from one Father, we ought at leaſt perpetually to remember, that we have but one Saviour."

§. XL. But ſince I am engaged againſt theſe fond and fruitleſs cuſtoms, (the proper effects and delights of vain and proud minds) let me yet add one memorable paſſage more, as it is related by the famous Cauſabon, in his Diſcourſe of Uſe and Cuſtom; where he briefly reports what paſt between Sulpitius Severus, and Paulinus biſhop of Nola, (but ſuch an one as gave all to redeem captives, whilſt others of that function, that they may ſhew who is their maſter, are making many both beggars and captives, by countenancing the plunder and impriſonment of Chriſtians, for pure conſcience to God) he brings it in thus: "He is not counted a civil man now, of late years amongſt us, who thinks it much, or refuſeth, to ſubſcribe himſelf ſervant, tho' it be to his equal or inferior. Yet Sulpitius Severus was once ſharply chid by Paulinus, for ſubſcribing himſelf his ſervant, in a letter of his; ſaying, Take heed hereafter, how Thou, being from a ſervant called into liberty, doſt ſubſcribe thyſelf ſervant unto one who is thy brother and fellow-ſervant; for it is a ſinful flattery, not a teſtimony of humility, to pay thoſe honours to a man, and a ſinner, which are due to the one Lord, and one maſter, and one God." This biſhop was (as it ſeems) of Chriſt's mind, 'Why calleſt thou me good? there is none good but one.' By this we may ſee the ſenſe of ſome of the more apoſtolical biſhops about the civilities and faſhions, ſo much reputed with people that call themſelves Chriſtians and Biſhops, and who would be thought their ſucceſſors. It was then a ſin, it is now an accompliſhment; it was then a flattery, it is now reſpect; it was then fit to be ſeverely reproved; and now, alas! it is to deſerve ſevere reproof not to uſe it. O monſtrous vanity! how much, how deeply, have thoſe who are called Chriſtians revolted from the plainneſs of the primitive days, and practice of holy men and women in former ages! How are they become degenerated into the looſe, proud and wanton cuſtoms of the world, which knows not God; to whom uſe hath made theſe things, condemned by ſcripture, reaſon and example, almoſt natural! And ſo inſenſible are they of both their cauſe and bad effects, that they not only continue to practiſe them, but plead for them, and unchriſtianly make a very mock of thoſe who cannot imitate them. But I ſhall proceed to what remains yet farther to be ſaid in our defence for declining another cuſtom, which helps to make us ſo much the ſtumbling-block of this light, vain, and inconſiderate age.

CHAP.

CHAP. X.

§. 1. Another piece of non-conformity to the world, which is our ſimple and plain ſpeech, Thou for You. §. 2. Juſtified from the uſe of words and numbers, ſingular and plural. §. 3. It was, and is, the Hebrew, Greek, and Latin ſpeech, in ſchools and univerſities. §. 4. It is the language of all nations. §. 5. The original of the preſent cuſtom defends our diſuſe of it. §. 6. If cuſtom ſhould prevail, in a ſenſe it would be on our ſide. §. 7. It cannot be uncivil, or improper; for God himſelf, the fathers, prophets, Chriſt and his apoſtles uſed it. §. 8. An inſtance given in the caſe of Peter, in the palace of the high prieſt. §. 9. It is the practice of men to God in their prayers: the pride of man to expect better to himſelf. §. 10. Teſtimonies of ſeveral writers in vindication of us. §. 11. The author's convictions; and his exhortation to his reader.

Chap. X.

§. I. THERE is another piece of our non-conformity to the world, that renders us very clowniſh to the breeding of it, and that is Thou for You, and that without difference or reſpect to perſons: a thing that to ſome looks ſo rude, it cannot well go down without deriſion or wrath. But as we have the ſame original reaſon for declining this, as the foregoing cuſtoms, ſo I ſhall add what to me looks reaſonable in our defence; though, it is very probable, height of mind, in ſome of thoſe that blame us, will very hardly allow them to believe that the word reaſonable is reconcileable with ſo ſilly a practice as this is eſteemed.

§. II. Words, of themſelves, are but as ſo many marks ſet and employed for neceſſary and intelligible mediums, or means, whereby men may underſtandingly expreſs their minds and conceptions to each other; from whence comes converſation. Now, though the world be divided into many nations, each of which, for the moſt part, have a peculiar language, ſpeech, or dialect, yet have they ever concurred in the ſame numbers and perſons, as much of the ground of right ſpeech. For inſtance; I love, Thou loveſt, He loveth, are of the ſingular number, importing but One, whether in the firſt, ſecond, or third perſon: alſo We love, Ye love, They love, are of the plural number, becauſe in each is implied More than One. Which undeniable grammatical rule might be enough to ſatisfy any, that have not forgot their Accidence, that we are not beſide Reaſon in our practice. For if Thou loveſt, be ſingular, and You love, be plural, and if Thou loveſt, ſignifies but One; and You love, Many; is it not as proper to ſay, Thou loveſt, to Ten men, as to ſay, You love, to One man? Or, why not I love, for We love, and We love, inſtead of I love? Doubtleſs it is the ſame, though moſt improper, and in ſpeech ridiculous.

§. III. Our next reaſon is; if it be improper or uncivil ſpeech (as termed by this vain age) how comes it, that the Hebrew, Greek and Roman authors, uſed in ſchools and univerſities, have no other? Why ſhould they not be a rule in that, as well as other things? And why, I pray then, are we ſo ridiculous for being thus far grammatical? Is it reaſonable that children ſhould be whipt at ſchool for putting You for Thou, as having made falſe Latin, and yet that we muſt be, tho' not whipt, reproached, and often abuſed, when we uſe the contrary propriety of ſpeech?

§. IV. But in the third place, it is neither improper nor uncivil, but much otherwiſe; becauſe it is uſed in all languages, ſpeeches, and dialects, and that through all ages. This is very plain: as for example, it was God's language when he firſt ſpake to Adam, viz. Hebrew: alſo it is the Aſſyrian, Chaldean, Grecian, and Latin ſpeech. And now amongſt the Turks, Tartars, Muſcovites, Indians, Perſians, Italians, Spaniards, French, Dutch, Germans, Polonians, Swedes, Danes, Iriſh, Scottiſh, Welch, as well as Engliſh, there is a diſtinction preſerved; and the word Thou, is not loſt in the word which goes for You. And though ſome of the modern tongues have done as we do, yet upon the ſame error. But by this it is plain, that Thou is no upſtart, nor yet improper; but the only proper word to be uſed in all languages to a ſingle perſon; becauſe otherwiſe all ſentences, ſpeeches, and diſcourſes may be very ambiguous, uncertain, and equivocal. If a jury pronounce a verdict, or a judge a ſentence (Three being at the bar upon three occaſions, very differently culpable) and ſhould ſay, You are here guilty and to die, or innocent and diſcharged; who knows who is guilty or innocent? May be but One, perhaps Two; or it may be all Three. Therefore our indictments run in the ſingular number, as Hold up Thy hand: Thou art indicted by the name of, &c. for that Thou, 'not having the fear of God, &c.' and it holds the ſame in all converſation. Nor can this be avoided, but by many unneceſſary circumlocutions. And as the preventing of ſuch length and obſcurity was doubtleſs the firſt reaſon for the diſtinction, ſo cannot that be juſtly diſuſed, till the reaſon be firſt removed; which can never be, whilſt Two are in the world.

§. V. But this is not all: it was firſt abſcribed in way of flattery to proud popes and emperors; imitating the Heathens vain homage to their gods; thereby aſcribing a plural honour to a ſingle perſon; as if One Pope had been made up of Many Gods, and One Emperor of many Men. For which reaſon, You, only to be uſed to Many, became firſt ſpoken to One. It ſeems the word Thou looked like too lean and thin a reſpect; and therefore ſome, bigger than they ſhould be, would have a ſtile ſuitable to their own ambition: a ground we cannot build our practice on; for what begun it, only loves it ſtill. But ſuppoſing You to be proper to a prince, it will not follow it is to a common perſon. For his edict runs, 'We will and require,' becauſe perhaps in conjunction with his council; and therefore You to a private perſon, is an abuſe of the word. But as pride firſt gave it birth, ſo hath ſhe only promoted it. * Monſieur, ſir, and madam, were, originally, names given to none but the king, his brother, and their wives, both in France and England; yet now the plow-man in France is called monſieur, and his wife, madam: and men of ordinary trades in England, ſir, and their wives, dame; (which is the legal title of a lady) or elſe miſtreſs, which is the ſame with madam in French. So prevalent hath pride and flattery been in all ages, the one to give, and the other to receive reſpect, as they term it.

* Howel's hiſtory of France.

§. VI. But ſome will tell us, cuſtom ſhould rule us; and that is againſt us. But it is eaſily anſwered, and more truly, that though in things reaſonable or indifferent, cuſtom is obliging or harmleſs, yet in things unreaſonable or unlawful, ſhe has no authority. For cuſtom can no more change numbers than genders, nor yoke One and You together, than make a man into a woman, or one a thouſand. But if cuſtom be to conclude us, it is for us: for as cuſtom is nothing elſe but ancient uſage, I appeal to the practice of mankind, from the beginning of the world, through all nations, againſt the novelty of this confuſion, viz. You to one perſon. Let cuſtom, which is ancient practice and fact, iſſue this queſtion. Miſtake me not: I know words are nothing, but as men give them a value or force by uſe: but then, if you will diſcharge Thou, and that You muſt ſucceed in its place, let us have a diſtinguiſhing word in the room of You, to be uſed in ſpeech to Many. But to uſe the ſame word for One and Many, when there are two, and that only to pleaſe a proud and haughty humour in man, is not reaſonable in our ſenſe; which, we hope, is chriſtian, tho' not modiſh.

§. VII. But if Thou to a ſingle perſon be improper or uncivil, God himſelf, all the holy fathers and prophets, Chriſt Jeſus and his apoſtles, the primitive ſaints, all languages throughout the world, and our own law-proceedings are guilty; which, with ſubmiſſion, were great preſumption to imagine. Beſides, we all know, it is familiar with the moſt of authors, to preface their diſcourſes to the reader in the ſame language of Thee and Thou: as, Reader Thou art deſired, &c. or, Reader this is writ to inform Thee, of the occaſion, &c. And it cannot be denied, that the moſt famous poems, dedicated to love or majeſty, are writ in this ſtile. Read of each in Chaucer, Spencer, Waller, Cowley, Dryden, &c. why then ſhould it be ſo homely, ill-bred, and inſufferable in us? This, I conceive, can never be anſwered.

§. VIII. I doubt not at all, but that ſomething altogether as ſingular attended the ſpeech of Chriſt and his diſciples: for I remember it was urged upon Peter in the high prieſt's palace, as a proof of his belonging to Jeſus, when he denied his Lord: 'ſurely (ſaid they) Thou alſo art one of them; for thy ſpeech bewrayeth Thee:' they had gueſſed by his looks, but juſt before, that he had been with Jeſus; but when they diſcourſed him, his language put them all out of doubt: ſurely then he was one of them, and he had been with Jeſus. Something it was he had learned in his company, that was odd and obſervable; to be ſure, not of the world's behaviour. Without queſtion, the garb, gait and ſpeech of his followers differed, as well as his doctrine, from the world; for it was a part of his doctrine it ſhould be ſo. It is eaſy to believe, they were more plain, grave and preciſe; which is more credible, from the way which poor, confident, fearful Peter took, to diſguiſe the buſineſs; for he fell to curſing and ſwearing. A ſad ſhift! but he thought that the likelieſt way to remove the ſuſpicion, that was moſt unlike Chriſt. And the policy took; for it ſilenced their objections; and Peter was as orthodox as they. But tho' they found him not out, the cock's-crow did; which made Peter remember his dear ſuffering Lord's word, and 'he went forth and wept bitterly;' that he had denied his maſter, who was then delivered up to die for him.

Mat. xxvi. 71, 73, 74.

§. IX. But our laſt reaſon is of moſt weight with me; and, becauſe argumentum ad hominem, it is moſt heavy upon our deſpiſers; which is this: It ſhould not therefore be urged upon us, becauſe it is a moſt extravagant piece of pride in a mortal man, to require or expect from his fellow-creature a more civil ſpeech, or grateful language, than he is wont to give the immortal God, and his Creator, in all his worſhip to him. Art thou, O man, greater than he that made thee? Canſt thou approach the God of thy breath, and great judge of thy life, with Thou and Thee, and when thou riſeſt off thy knees, ſcorn a Chriſtian for giving to thee (poor muſhroom of the earth) no better language than thou haſt given to God but juſt before? An arrogancy not to be eaſily equalled! But again, it is either too much or too little reſpect; if too much, do not reproach and be angry, but gravely and humbly refuſe it: if too little, why doſt thou ſhow to God no more? O whither is man gone! to what a pitch does he ſoar? he would be uſed more civilly by us, than he uſes God; which is to have us make more than a god of him: but he ſhall want worſhippers of us, as well as he wants the divinity in himſelf that deſerves to be worſhipped.

ped. Certain we are, that the Spirit of God ſeeks not theſe reſpects, much leſs pleads for them, or would be wroth with any that conſcientiouſly refuſe to give them. But that this vain generation is guilty of uſing them, to gratify a vain mind, is too palpable. What capping, what cringing, what ſcraping, what vain unmeant words, moſt hyperbolical expreſſions, compliments, groſs flatteries, and plain lyes, under the name of civilities, are men and women guilty of in converſation! Ah, my friends! whence fetch you theſe examples? What part of all the writings of the holy men of God warrants theſe things? But to come near to your own profeſſions: Is Chriſt your example herein, whoſe name you pretend to bear? or thoſe ſaints of old, that lived in deſolate places, of whom the world was not worthy? Or do you think you follow the practice of thoſe chriſtians, that, in obedience to their Maſter's life and doctrine, forſook the reſpect of perſons, and relinquiſhed the faſhions, honour and glory of this tranſitory world: whoſe qualifications lay not in external geſtures, reſpects and compliments, but in a meek and quiet ſpirit, adorned with temperance, virtue, modeſty, gravity, patience, and brotherly-kindneſs, which were the tokens of true honour, and only badges of reſpect and nobility in thoſe chriſtian times? O no! But is it not to expoſe ourſelves both to your contempt and fury, that we imitate them, and not you? And tell us, pray, are not romances, plays, maſks, gaming, fiddlers, &c. the entertainments that moſt delight you? Had you the ſpirit of chriſtianity indeed, could you conſume your moſt precious little time in ſo many unneceſſary viſits, games, and paſtimes; in your vain compliments, courtſhips, feigned ſtories, flatteries, and fruitleſs novelties, and what not? invented and uſed to your diverſion, to make you eaſy in your forgetfulneſs of God: which never was the chriſtian way of living, but entertainment of the Heathens that knew not God. Oh, were you truly touched with the ſenſe of your ſins, and in any meaſure born again; did you take up the croſs of Jeſus, and live under it, theſe things (which ſo much pleaſe your wanton and ſenſual nature) would find no place with you! This is not ſeeking the things that are above, to have the heart thus ſet on things that are below; nor 'working out your own ſalvation with fear and trembling,' to ſpend your days in vanity. This is not crying with Elihu, 'I know not to give flattering titles to men; for in ſo doing my Maker would ſoon take me away:' this is not to deny ſelf, and lay up a more hidden and enduring ſubſtance, an eternal inheritance in the heavens, that will not paſs away. Well, my friends, whatever you think, your plea of cuſtom will find no place at God's tribunal: the light of Chriſt in your own hearts will over-rule it, and this ſpirit, againſt which we teſtify, ſhall then appear to be what we ſay it is. Say not, I am ſerious about ſlight things: but beware you of levity and raſhneſs in ſerious things.

Heb. xi.
1 Pet. iii. 3, 4.
Col. iii. 1.

§. X. Before I cloſe, I ſhall add a few teſtimonies from men of general credit, in favour of our non-conformity to the world in this particular.

Luther, the great reformer, (whoſe ſayings were oracles with the age he lived in, and of no leſs reputation now, with many that object againſt us) was ſo far from condemning our plain ſpeech, that, in his Ludus, he ſports himſelf with You to a ſingle perſon, as an incongruous and ridiculous ſpeech, viz. Magiſter vos eſtis iratus? Maſter, are You angry? as abſurd with him in Latin, as, My Maſters, art Thou angry? is in Engliſh. Eraſmus, a learned man, and an exact critick in ſpeech, (than whom, I know not any we may ſo properly refer the grammar of the matter to) not only derides it, but beſtows a whole diſcourſe upon rendering it abſurd: plainly manifeſting, that it is impoſſible to preſerve numbers, if You, the only word for more than One, be uſed to expreſs One: as alſo, that the original of this corruption, was the corruption of flattery. Lipſius affirms of the ancient Romans, that the manner of greeting, now in vogue, was not in uſe amongſt them. To conclude: Howell, in his hiſtory of France, gives us an ingenious account of its original; where he not only aſſures us, that anciently the peaſants Thou'd their kings, but that pride and flattery firſt put inferiors upon paying a plural reſpect to the ſingle perſon of every ſuperior, and ſuperiors upon receiving it. And though we had not the practice of God and man ſo undeniably to juſtify our plain and homely ſpeech, yet, ſince we are perſuaded that its original was from pride and flattery, we cannot in conſcience uſe it. And however we may be cenſured as ſingular, by thoſe looſe and airy minds, that, through the continual love of earthly pleaſures, conſider not the true riſe and tendency of words and things, yet, to us, whom God has convinced, by his Light and Spirit in our hearts, of the folly and evil of ſuch courſes, and brought into a ſpiritual diſcerning of the nature and ground of the world's faſhions, they appear to be fruits of pride and flattery, and we dare not continue in ſuch vain compliances to earthly minds, leſt we offend God, and burden our own conſciences. But having been ſincerely affected with the reproofs of inſtruction, and our hearts being brought into a watchful ſubjection to the righteous law of Jeſus, ſo as to bring our deeds to the light, to ſee in whom they are wrought, if in God, or not; we cannot, we dare not conform ourſelves to the faſhions of the world, that paſs away; knowing aſſuredly, that 'for every idle word that men ſpeak, they ſhall give an account in the day of judgment.'

The teſtimonies of ſeveral.
John iii. 19, 20.
Mat. xii. 36.

§. XI. Wherefore, reader, whether thou art a night-walking Nicodemus, or a ſcoffing ſcribe; one that would viſit the bleſſed Meſſiah, but in the dark cuſtoms of the world, that thou mighteſt paſs as undiſcerned, for fear of bearing his reproachful croſs; or elſe a favourer of Haman's pride, and counteſt theſe teſtimonies but a fooliſh ſingularity; I muſt ſay, divine love enjoins me to be a meſſenger of truth to thee, and a faithful witneſs againſt the evil of this degenerate world, as in other, ſo in theſe things; in which the ſpirit of vanity and luſt hath got ſo great an head, and lived ſo long uncontrouled, that it hath impudence enough to term its darkneſs light, and to call its evil off-ſpring by the names due to a better nature, the more eaſily to deceive people into the practice of them. And truly, ſo very blind and inſenſible are moſt, of what ſpirit they are, and ignorant of the meek and ſelf-denying life of holy Jeſus, whoſe name they profeſs, that to call each other Rabbi, that is, Maſter; to bow to men, (which I call worſhip) and to greet with flattering titles; and do their fellow-creatures homage; to ſcorn that language to themſelves that they give to God, and to ſpend their time and eſtate to gratify their wanton minds; (the cuſtoms of the Gentiles, that knew not God) paſs with them for civility, good breeding, decency, recreation, accompliſhments, &c. O that man would conſider, ſince there are but two ſpirits, one good, the other evil, which of them it is that inclines the world to theſe things! and whether it be Nicodemus or Mordecai in thee, that doth befriend theſe deſpiſed Chriſtians, which makes thee aſhamed to diſown that openly in converſation with the world, which the true light hath made vanity and ſin to thee in ſecret? Or, if thou art a deſpiſer, tell me, I pray thee, which doſt thou think thy mockery, anger, or contempt do moſt reſemble, proud Haman, or good Mordecai? My friend, know, that no man hath more delighted in, or been prodigal of thoſe vanities called civilities, than myſelf; and could I have covered my conſcience under the faſhions of the world, truly I had found a ſhelter from ſhowers of reproach that have fallen very often and thick upon me; but had I, with Joſeph, conformed to Ægypt's cuſtoms, I had ſinned againſt my God, and loſt my peace. But I would not have thee think it is a mere Thou or Title, ſimply or nakedly in themſelves, we boggle at, or that we would beget or ſet up any form inconſiſtent with ſincerity or true civility: there's but too much of that: but the eſteem and value the vain minds of men do put upon them, that ought to be croſſed and ſtripped of their delights, conſtrains us to teſtify ſo ſteadily againſt them. And this know, from the ſenſe God's Holy Spirit hath begotten in us, that that which requires theſe cuſtoms, and begets fear to leave them, and pleads for them, and is diſpleaſed if not uſed and paid, is the ſpirit of pride and flattery in the ground, though frequency, uſe, or generoſity, may have abated its ſtrength in ſome: and this being diſcovered by the light that now ſhines from heaven, in the hearts of the deſpiſed Chriſtians I have communion with, neceſſitates them to this teſtimony, and myſelf, as one of them, and for them, in a reproof of the unfaithful, who would walk undiſcerned, though convinced to the contrary; and for an allay to the proud deſpiſers, who ſcorn us as a people guilty of affectation and ſingularity. For the eternal God, who is great amongſt us, and on his way in the earth to make his power known, 'will root up every plant that his right hand hath not planted.' Wherefore let me beſeech thee, reader, to conſider the foregoing reaſons, which were moſtly given me from the Lord, in that time, when my condeſcenſion to theſe faſhions would have been purchaſed at almoſt any rate; but the certain ſenſe I had of their contrariety to the meek and ſelf-denying life of holy Jeſus, required of me my diſuſe of them, and faithful teſtimony againſt them. I ſpeak the truth in Chriſt; I lye not; I would not have brought myſelf under cenſure and diſdain for them, could I, with peace of conſcience, have kept my belief under a worldly behaviour. It was extreme irkſome to me, to decline and expoſe myſelf: but having an aſſured and repeated ſenſe of the original of theſe vain cuſtoms, that they riſe from pride, ſelf-love, and flattery, I dared not gratify that mind in myſelf or others. And for this reaſon it is, that I am earneſt with my readers to be cautious, how they reprove us on this occaſion; and do once more intreat them, that they would ſeriouſly weigh in themſelves, whether it be the ſpirit of the world, or of the Father, that is ſo angry with our honeſt, plain, and harmleſs Thou and Thee: that ſo every plant that God, our heavenly Father, hath not planted in the ſons and daughters of men, may be rooted up.

CHAP. XI.

§. 1. Pride leads people to an exceſſive value of their perſons. §. 2. It is plain from the racket that is made about blood and families: alſo in the caſe of ſhape and beauty. §. 3. Blood no nobility, but virtue. §. 4. Virtue no upſtart: antiquity, no nobility without it, elſe age and blood would bar virtue in the preſent age. §. 5. God teaches the true ſenſe of nobility, who made of one blood all nations: there's the original of all blood. §. 6. Theſe men of blood, out of their feathers, look like other men. §. 7. This is not ſaid to reject, but humble the gentleman: the advantages of that condition above others. An exhortation to recover their loſt oeconomy in families, out of intereſt and credit. §. 8. But the author has a higher motive; the goſpel, and the excellencies of it, which they profeſs. §. 9. The pride of perſons, reſpecting ſhape and beauty: the waſhes, patches, paintings, dreſ- dreſſings, &c. This exceſs would keep the poor: the miſchiefs that attend it. §. 10. But pride in the old, and homely, yet more hateful: that it is uſual. The madneſs of it. Counſel to the beautiful, to get their ſouls like their bodies; and to the homely, to ſupply want of that, in the adornment of their laſting part, their ſouls, with holineſs. Nothing homely with God, but ſin. The bleſſedneſs of thoſe that wear Chriſt's yoke and croſs, and are crucified to the world.

§. 1. BUT pride ſtops not here; ſhe excites people to an exceſſive value and care of their perſons: they muſt have great and punctual attendance, ſtately furniture, rich and exact apparel: all which help to make up that pride of life, that John tells us, 'is not of the Father, but of the world.' A ſin God charged upon the haughty daughters of Zion, Iſa. iii. and on the proud prince and people of Tyrus, Ezek. xxvii. 28. Read theſe chapters, and meaſure this age by their ſins, and what is coming on theſe nations by their judgments. But at the preſent I ſhall only touch upon the firſt, viz. the exceſſive value people have of their perſons; leaving the reſt to be conſidered under the laſt head of this diſcourſe, which is luxury, where they may be not improperly placed. Chap. XI. 1 John ii. 16, 17.

§. II. That people are generally proud of their perſons, is too viſible and troubleſome; eſpecially if they have any pretence either to blood or beauty: the one has raiſed many quarrels among men; and the other among women, and men too often, for their ſakes, and at their excitements. But to the firſt: what a pother has this noble blood made in the world, antiquity of name or family? whoſe father or mother, great grand-father, or great grand-mother, was beſt deſcended or allied? what ſtock, or what clan, they came of? what coat of arms they gave? which had, of right, the precedence? But, methinks, nothing of man's folly has leſs ſhew of reaſon to palliate it.

§. III. For firſt, what matter is it of whom any one is deſcended, that is not of ill fame; ſince 'tis his own virtue that muſt raiſe, or vice depreſs him? An anceſtor's character is no excuſe to a man's ill actions, but an aggravation of his degeneracy: and ſince virtue comes not by generation, I am neither the better nor the worſe for my fore-father: to be ſure, not in God's account, nor ſhould it be in man's. Nobody would endure injuries the eaſier, or reject favours the more, for coming by the hand of a man well or ill deſcended. I confeſs, it were greater honour to have had no blots, and with an hereditary eſtate to have had a lineal deſcent or worth: but that was never found, no, not in the moſt bleſſed of families upon earth, I mean Abraham's. To be deſcended of wealth and titles, fills no man's head with brains, or heart with truth: thoſe qualities come from an higher cauſe. 'Tis vanity then, and moſt condemnable pride, for a man of bulk and character to deſpiſe another of leſs ſize in the world, and of meaner alliance, for want of them; becauſe the latter may have the merit, where the former has only the effects of it in an anceſtor: and though the one be great, by means of a fore-father; the other is ſo too, but 'tis by his own: then, pray, which is the braveſt man of the two?

§. IV. O, ſays the perſon proud of blood, it was never a good world, ſince we have had ſo many upſtart gentlemen! But what ſhould others have ſaid of that man's anceſtor, when he ſtarted firſt up into the knowledge of the world? for he, and all men and families, ay, and all ſtates and kingdoms too, have had their upſtarts, that is, their beginnings. This is like being the true church becauſe old, not becauſe good; for families to be noble by being old, and not by being virtuous. No ſuch matter: it muſt be age in virtue, or elſe virtue before age; for otherwiſe a man ſhould be noble by means of his predeceſſor, and yet the predeceſſor leſs noble than he, becauſe he was the acquirer: which is a paradox that will puzzle all their heraldry to explain! Strange, that they ſhould be more noble than their anceſtor, that got their nobility for them! But if this be abſurd, as it is, then the upſtart is the noble man; the man that got it by his virtue: and thoſe are only intitled to his honour, that are imitators of his virtue; the reſt may bear his name from his blood, but that is all. If virtue then give nobility, which Heathens themſelves agree, then families are no longer truly noble, than they are virtuous. And if virtue go not by blood, but by the qualifications of the deſcendents, it follows, blood is excluded: elſe blood would bar virtue; and no man that wanted the one, ſhould be allowed the benefit of the other: which were to ſtint and bound nobility for want of antiquity, and make virtue uſeleſs.

No, let blood and name go together; but pray let nobility and virtue keep company, for they are neareſt of kin. 'Tis thus poſited by God himſelf, that beſt knows how to apportion things with an equal and juſt hand. He neither likes nor diſlikes by deſcent; nor does he regard what people were, but are. He remembers not the righteouſneſs of any man that leaves his righteouſneſs; much leſs any unrighteous man for the righteouſneſs of his anceſtor. Ezek. xviii.

§. V. But if theſe men of blood pleaſe to think themſelves concerned to believe and reverence God, in his holy ſcriptures they may learn, that in the beginning he made of one blood all nations of men, to dwell upon all the face of the earth; and, that we all deſcended of one father and mother. A more certain original than the beſt of us can aſſign. Acts xvii. 26.

aſſign. From thence go down to Noah, who was the ſecond planter of human race, and we are upon ſome certainty for our fore-fathers. What violence has raped, or virtue merited ſince, and how far we that are alive are concerned in either, will be hard for us to determine but a very few ages off us.

§. VI. But, methinks, it ſhould ſuffice to ſay, our own eyes ſee that men of blood, out of their geers and trappings, without their feathers and finery, have no more marks of honour by nature ſtamped upon them, than their inferior neighbours. Nay, themſelves being judges, they will frankly tell us, they feel all thoſe paſſions in their blood, that make them like other men, if not farther from the virtue that truly dignifies. The lamentable ignorance and debauchery that now rages among too many of our greater ſort of folks, is too clear and caſting an evidence in the point: and pray tell me, of what blood are they come?

§. VII. Howbeit, when I have ſaid all this, I intend not, by debaſing one falſe quality, to make inſolent another that is not true. I would not be thought to ſet the churl upon the preſent gentleman's ſhoulder; by no means: his rudeneſs will not mend the matter. But what I have writ is, to give aim to all where true nobility dwells, that every one may arrive at it by the ways of virtue and goodneſs. But for all this, I muſt allow a great advantage to the gentleman; and therefore prefer his ſtation, juſt as the apoſtle Paul, who, after he had humbled the Jews, that inſulted upon the Chriſtians with their law and rites, gave them the advantage upon all other nations in ſtatutes and judgments. I muſt grant, that the condition of our great men is much to be preferred to the ranks of inferior people. For, firſt, they have more power to do good: and, if their hearts be equal to their ability, they are bleſſings to the people of any country. Secondly, the eyes of the people are uſually directed to them; and if they will be kind, juſt, and helpful, they ſhall have their affections and ſervices. Thirdly, they are not under equal ſtraits with the inferior ſort; and conſequently, they have more help, leiſure, and occaſion, to poliſh their paſſions and tempers with books and converſation. Fourthly, they have more time to obſerve the actions of other nations; to travel, and view the laws, cuſtoms and intereſts of other countries, and bring home whatever is worthy or imitable. And ſo an eaſier way is open for great men to get honour; and ſuch as love true reputation, will embrace the beſt means to it. But becauſe it too often happens, that great men do little mind to give God the glory of their proſperity, and to live anſwerable to his mercies; but on the contrary 'live without God in the world,' fulfilling the luſts thereof, his hand is often ſeen, either in impoveriſhing or extinguiſhing them, and raiſing up men of more virtue and humility to their eſtates and dignity. However, I muſt allow, that among people of this rank, there have been ſome of them of more than ordinary virtue, whoſe examples have given light to their families. And it has been ſomething natural for ſome of their deſcendents to endeavour to keep up the credit of their houſes, in proportion to the merit of their founder. And to ſay true, if there be any advantage in ſuch deſcent, 'tis not from blood, but education: for blood has no intelligence in it, and is often ſpurious and uncertain; but education has a mighty influence, and ſtrong bias upon the affections and actions of men. In this, the ancient nobles and gentry of this kingdom did excel: and it were much to be wiſhed, that our great people would ſet about to recover the ancient œconomy of their houſes, the ſtrict and virtuous diſcipline of their anceſtors, when men were honoured for their atchievements, and when nothing more expoſed a man to ſhame, than his being born to a nobility that he had not a virtue to ſupport.

§. VIII. O but I have an higher motive! the glorious goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, which having taught this northern iſle, and all ranks profeſſing to believe in it, let me prevail upon you to ſeek the honour that it has brought from heaven, to all the true diſciples of John i. 29. it, who are indeed the followers of God's Lamb, that 'takes away the ſins of the world.' Receive with meekneſs his gracious word into your hearts, that ſubdues the world's luſts, and leads in the holy way to bleſſedneſs. Here are charms no carnal eye hath ſeen, nor ear heard, nor heart perceived, but they are revealed to ſuch humble converts by his Spirit. Remember you are but creatures, and that you muſt die, and after all be judged.

§. IX. But perſonal pride ends not in nobility of blood; it leads folks to a fond value of their perſons, be they noble or ignoble; eſpecially if they have any pretence to ſhape or beauty. It is admirable to ſee, how much it is poſſible for ſome to be taken with themſelves, as if nothing elſe deſerved their regard, or the good opinion of others. It would abate their folly, if they could find in their hearts to ſpare but half the time to think of God, and their latter end, which they moſt prodigally ſpend in waſhing, perfuming, painting, patching, attiring, and dreſſing. In theſe things they are preciſe, and very artificial; and for coſt they ſpare not. But that which aggravates the evil is, the pride of one might comfortably ſupply the need of ten. 'Groſs impiety that it is, that 'a nation's pride ſhould not be ſpared to a nation's poor!' But what is this for at laſt? only to be admired, to have reverence, draw love, and command the eyes and affections of beholders. And ſo fantaſtick are they in it, as hardly to be pleaſed too. Nothing is good, or fine, or faſhionable enough for them: the ſun itſelf, the bleſſing of heaven and comfort of the earth, muſt not ſhine upon them, leſt it tan them; nor the wind blow, for fear it ſhould diſorder them. O impious nicety! yet while they value themſelves above all elſe, they make themſelves the vaſſals of their own pride: worſhipping their ſhape, feature, or complexion, which ſoever is their excellency. The end of all which is, but too often, to excite unlawful love, which I call luſt, and draw one another into as miſerable as evil circumſtances. In ſingle perſons it is of ill conſequence; for if it does not awaken unchaſte deſires, it lays no foundation for ſolid and laſting union: want of which helps to make ſo many unhappy marriages in the world: but in married people, the ſin is aggravated; for they have none of right to pleaſe, but one another; and to affect the gaiety and vanity of youth, is an ill ſign of loving and living well at home: it looks rather like dreſſing for a market. It has ſad effects in families; diſcontents, partings, duels, poiſonings, and other infamous murders. No age can better tell us the ſad effects of this ſort of pride, than this we live in; as, how exceſſive wanton, ſo how fatal it has been to the ſobriety, virtue, peace and health of families in this kingdom.

§. X. But I muſt needs ſay, that of all creatures this ſort of pride does leaſt become the old and homely, if I may call the ill-favoured and deformed ſo; for the old are proud only of what they had; which ſhews to their reproach, their pride has out-lived their beauty, and when they ſhould be a repenting, they are making work for repentance. But the homely are yet worſe, they are proud of what they never had, nor ever can have. Nay, their perſons ſeem as if they were given for a perpetual humiliation to their minds; and to be proud of them, is loving pride for pride's ſake, and to be proud without a temptation to be proud. And yet in my whole life I have obſerved nothing more doating on it ſelf: a ſtrange infatuation and inchantment of pride! what! not to ſee right with their eyes, becauſe of the partiality of their minds? This ſelf-love is blind indeed. But to add expence to the vanity, and to be coſtly upon that which cannot be mended, one would think they ſhould be downright mad; eſpecially if they conſider that they look the homelier for the things that are thought handſome, and do but thereby draw their deformity more into notice, by that which does ſo little become them.

But in ſuch perſons follies we have a ſpecimen of man; what a creature he is in his lapſe from his primitive image. All this (as Jeſus ſaid of ſin of old) comes from within; that is, the diſregard that man and woman have to the Word of their Creator in their hearts, which ſhews pride, and teaches humility and ſelf-abaſement, and directs the mind to the true object of honour and worſhip; and that with an awe and reverence ſuitable to his ſovereignty and majeſty. Poor mortals! but living dirt; made of what they tread on; who, with all their pride, cannot ſecure themſelves from the ſpoil of ſickneſs, much leſs from the ſtroke of death. O! did people conſider the inconſtancy of all viſible things, the croſs and adverſe occurrences of man's life, the certainty of his departure, and eternal judgment, 'tis to be hoped, they would bring their deeds to Chriſt's light in their hearts, and they would ſee if they were wrought in God or no, as the beloved diſciple tells us from his dear maſter's mouth. Art thou ſhapely, comely, beautiful; the exact draught of an human creature? admire that power that made thee ſo. Live an harmonious life to the curious make and frame of thy creation; and let the beauty of thy body teach thee to beautify thy mind with holineſs, the ornament of the beloved of God. Art thou homely or deformed? magnify that goodneſs which did not make thee a beaſt; and with the grace that is given unto thee, (for it has appeared unto all) learn to adorn thy ſoul with enduring beauty. Remember, the king of heaven's daughter, the church, (of which true chriſtians are members) is all glorious within: and if thy ſoul excel, thy body will only ſet off the luſtre of thy mind. Nothing is homely in God's ſight but ſin; and that man and woman, that commune with their own hearts, and ſin not; who in the light of holy Jeſus, watch over the movings and inclinations of their own ſouls, and that ſuppreſs every evil in its conception, they love the yoke and croſs of Chriſt, and are daily by it crucified to the world, but live to God in that life which out-lives the fading ſatisfactions of it.

Mat. xv. 11, 18, 19, 20.

Deut. xxx. 14. Rom. x. 8.

John iii. 20, 21.

CHAP. XII.

§. 1. The character of a proud man: a glutton upon himſelf. Is proud of his pedigree. §. 2. He is inſolent and quarrelſome, but cowardly, yet cruel. §. 3. An ill child, ſubject and ſervant. §. 4. Unhoſpitable. §. 5. No friend to any. §. 6. Dangerous and miſchievous in power. §. 7. Of all things pride bad in miniſters. §. 8. They claim prerogative above others. §. 9. And call themſelves the clergy: their lordlineſs and avarice. §. 10. Death ſwallows all. §. 11. The way to eſcape theſe evils.

Chap. XII.

§. I. TO conclude this great head of pride, let us briefly ſee upon the whole matter, what is the character of a proud man in himſelf, and in divers relations and capacities. A proud man then is a kind of glutton upon himſelf; for he is never ſatisfied with loving and admiring himſelf; whilſt nothing elſe with him is worthy either of love or care: if good enough to be the ſervant of his will, 'tis as much as he can find in his heart to allow; as if he had been only made for himſelf, or rather that he had made himſelf. For as he deſpiſes man, becauſe he cannot abide an equal, ſo he does not love God, becauſe he would not have a ſuperior: he cannot bear to owe his being to another, leſt he ſhould thereby acknowledge one above himſelf. He is one that is mighty big with the honour of his anceſtors, but not of the virtue that brought them to it; much leſs will he trouble himſelf to imitate them. He can tell you of his pedigree, his antiquity, what eſtate, what matches; but forgets that they are gone, and that he muſt die too.

§. II. But how troubleſome a companion is proud man! ever poſitive and controuling; and if you yield not, inſolent and quarrelſome: yet at the upſhot of the matter, cowardly: but if ſtrongeſt, cruel. He has no bowels of adverſity, as if it were below him to be ſenſible: he feels no more of other mens miſeries, than if he was not a man, or it was a ſin to be ſenſible. For not feeling himſelf intereſted, he looks no farther: he will not diſquiet his thoughts with other mens infelicities: it ſhall content him to believe they are juſt: and he had rather churliſhly upbraid them as the cauſe, than be ready to commiſerate or relieve them. So that compaſſion and charity are with him as uſeleſs, as humility and meekneſs are hateful.

§. III. A proud man makes an ill child, ſervant and ſubject: he contemns his parents, maſter and prince: he will not be ſubject. He thinks himſelf too wiſe, or too old, to be directed; as if it were a ſlaviſh thing to obey; and that none were free, that may not do what they pleaſe; which turns duty out of doors, and degrades authority. On the other hand, if it be an huſband, or father, or maſter, there is ſcarcely any enduring. He is ſo inſufferably curious and teſty, that it is an affliction to live with him: for hardly can any hand carry it even enough to pleaſe him. Some peccadillo about his cloaths, his diet, his lodging or attendance, quite diſorders him: but eſpecially if he fancies any want in the ſtate and reſpect he looks for. Thus pride deſtroys the nature of relations: on the one ſide, it learns to contemn duty; and on the other ſide it turns love into fear, and makes the wife a ſervant, and the children and ſervants, ſlaves.

§. IV. But the proud man makes an ill neighbour too; for he is an enemy to hoſpitality: he deſpiſes to receive kindneſs, becauſe he would not ſhew any, nor be thought to need it. Beſides, it looks too equal and familiar for his haughty humour. Emulation and detraction are his element; for he is jealous of attributing any praiſe to others, where juſt, leſt that ſhould cloud and leſſen him, to whom it never could be due: he is the man that fears what he ſhould wiſh, to wit, that others ſhould do well. But that is not all; he maliciouſly miſcals their acts of virtue, which his corruptions will not let him imitate, that they may get no credit by them. If he wants any occaſion of doing miſchief, he can make one; either, they uſe him ill, or have ſome deſign upon him; the other day they paid him not the cap and knee; the diſtance and reſpect he thinks his quality, parts or merits do require. A ſmall thing ſerves a proud man to pick a quarrel; of all creatures the moſt jealous, ſullen, ſpiteful and revengeful: he can no more forgive an injury, than forbear to do one.

§. V. Nor is this all; a proud man can never be a friend to any body. For beſides that his ambition may always be bribed by honour and preferment to betray that relation, he is unconverſible; he muſt not be catechiſed and counſeled, much leſs reproved or contradicted: no, he is too covetous of himſelf to ſpare another man a ſhare, and much to high, ſtiff, and touchy: he will not away with thoſe freedoms that a real friendſhip requires. To ſay true, he contemns the character; it is much too familiar and humble for him: his mighty ſoul would know nothing beſides himſelf and vaſſals to ſtock the world. He values other men as we do cattle, for their ſervice only; and, if he could, would uſe them ſo; but as it happens, the number and force are unequal.

§. VI. But a proud man in power is very miſchievous; for his pride is the more dangerous by his greatneſs, ſince from ambition in private men, it becomes tyranny in them: it would reign alone; nay, live ſo, rather than have competitors: aut Cæſar, aut nullus. Reaſon muſt not check it, nor rules of law limit it; and either it can do no wrong, or it is ſedition to complain of the wrong that it does. The men of this temper would have nothing thought amiſs they do; at leaſt, they count it dangerous to allow it to be ſo, though ſo it be; for that would imply they had erred, which it is always matter of ſtate to deny. No, they will rather chuſe to periſh obſtinately, than by acknowledging, yield away the reputation of better judging to inferiors; though it were their prudence to do ſo. And indeed, it is all the ſatisfaction that proud great men make to the world for the miſeries they often bring upon it, that, firſt or laſt, upon a diviſion, they leave their real intereſt to follow ſome one exceſs of humour, and are almoſt ever deſtroyed by it. This is the end pride gives proud men, and the ruin it brings upon them, after it has puniſhed others by them.

§. VII. But above all things, pride is intolerable in men pretending to religion; and, of them, in miniſters; for they are names of the greateſt contradiction. I ſpeak without reſpect or anger to perſons or parties; for I only touch upon the bad of all. What ſhall pride do with religion, that rebukes it? or ambition with miniſters, whoſe very office is humility? And yet there are but too many of them, that, beſides an equal guilt with others in the fleſhly pride of the world, are even proud of that name and office, which ought always to mind them of ſelf-denial. Yea, they uſe it as the beggars do the name of God and Chriſt, only to get by it: placing to their own account the advantages of that reverend profeſſion, and thereby making their function but a politick handle to raiſe themſelves to the great preferments of the world. But O then, how can ſuch be his miniſters, that ſaid, ‘ My kingdom is not of this world?’ Who, of mankind, more ſelf-conceited than theſe men? If contradicted, as arrogant and angry as if it were their calling to be ſo. Counſel one of them, he ſcorns you; reprove him, and he is almoſt ready to excommunicate you. ‘ I am a miniſter and an elder:’ flying thither to ſecure himſelf from the reach of juſt cenſure, which indeed expoſes him but the more to it: and therefore his fault cannot be the leſs, by how much ’tis worſe in a miniſter to do ill, and ſpurn at reproof, than an ordinary man.

§. VIII. O but he pleads an exemption by his office! What! ſhall he breed up chickens to pick out his own eyes? be rebuked or inſtructed by a lay-man, or pariſhioner! a man of leſs age, learning, or ability! no ſuch matter; he would have us believe that his miniſterial prerogative has placed him out of the reach of popular impeachment. He is not ſubject to vulgar judgments. Even queſtions about religion are ſchiſm: believe as he ſays: ’tis not for you to pry ſo curiouſly into the myſteries of religion: never good day ſince lay-men meddled ſo much with the miniſter's office. Not conſidering, poor man! that the contrary is moſt true; not many good days ſince miniſters meddled ſo much in lay-mens buſineſs. Though perhaps there is little reaſon for the diſtinction, beſide ſpiritual gifts, and the improvement of them by a diligent uſe of them for the good of others.

Such good ſayings as theſe, ‘ Be ready to teach; anſwer with meekneſs: let every man ‘ ſpeak as of the gift of God, that is in him: if any thing be revealed to him that ſits ‘ by, let the firſt hold his peace; be not lords over God's heritage, but meek and lowly; ‘ waſhing the feet of the people, as Jeſus did thoſe of his poor diſciples;’ are unreaſonable and antiquated inſtructions with ſome clergy; and it is little leſs then hereſy to remember them of theſe things: to be ſure, a mark of great diſaffection to the church, in their opinion. For by this time their pride has made them the church, and the people but the porch at beſt; a cypher that ſignifies nothing, unleſs they clap their figure before it: forgetting, that if they were as good as they ſhould be, they could be but miniſters, ſtewards and under-ſhepherds; that is, ſervants to the church, family, flock and heritage of God; and not that they are that church, family, flock and heritage which they are only ſervants unto. Remember the words of Chriſt, ‘ let him that would ‘ be greateſt be your ſervant.’

2 Tim. ii. 24, 25.
Tit. iii.
1 Cor. xiv. 30.
Mat. xx. 26.

§. IX. There is but one place to be found in the holy ſcripture, where the word clerus (κλῆρος) can properly be applied to the church, and they have got it to themſelves; from whence they call themſelves the clergy, that is, the inheritance or heritage of God. Whereas Peter exhorts the miniſters of the goſpel, ‘ not to be lords over God's heritage, nor to ‘ feed them for filthy lucre.’ Peter (belike) foreſaw pride and avarice to be the miniſters temptations; and indeed they have often proved their fall: and, to ſay true, they could hardly fall by worſe. Nor is there any excuſe to be made for them in theſe two reſpects, which is not worſe than their ſin. For if they have not been lords over God's heritage, it is becauſe they have made themſelves that heritage, and diſ-inherited the people: ſo that now they may be the people's lords, with a ſalvo to good old Peter's exhortation.

1 Pet. v. 2, 3.

And for the other ſin of avarice, they can only avoid it, and ſpeak truth, thus, ‘ that never feeding the flock, they cannot be ſaid to feed it for lucre:’ that is, they get the people's money for nothing. An example of which is given us, by the complaint of God himſelf, from the practice of the proud, covetous, falſe prophets of old, ‘ that the people gave their money for that which was not bread, and their labour for that which did ‘ not profit them:’ and why? Becauſe then the prieſt had no viſion; and too many now deſpiſe it.

Iſa. lv. 2.

§. X. But alas! when all is done, what folly, as well as irreligion, is there in pride? It cannot add one cubit to any man's ſtature: what croſſes can it hinder? What diſappointments help, or harm fruſtrate? It delivers not from the common ſtroke; ſickneſs disfigures; pain miſſhapes; and death ends the proud man's fabrick. Six foot of cold earth bounds his big thoughts; and his perſon, that was too good for any place, muſt at laſt lodge within the ſtrait limits of ſo little and ſo dark a cave: and who thought nothing well enough for him, is quickly the entertainment of the loweſt of all animals, even worms themſelves. Thus pride and pomp come to the common end; but with this difference, leſs pity from the living, and more pain to the dying. The proud man's antiquity cannot ſecure him from death, nor his heraldry from judgment. Titles of honour vaniſh at this extremity; and no power or wealth, no diſtance or reſpect can reſcue or inſure them: as the tree falls, it lies; and as death leaves men, judgment finds them.

§. XI. O, what can prevent this ill concluſion? and what can remedy this woful declenſion from ancient meekneſs, humility, and piety, and that godly life and power which were ſo conſpicuous in the authority of the preachings, and examples of the living

1668. of the firſt and pureſt ages of chriſtianity! truly, nothing but an inward and ſincere examination, Chap. XII. by the teſtimony of the holy Light and Spirit of Jeſus, of the condition of their ſouls and minds toward Chriſt, and a better enquiry into the matter and examples of John iii. 19. holy record. 'Twas his complaint of old, 'that light was come into the world, but 'men loved darkneſs rather than light, becauſe their deeds were evil.' If thou wouldeſt be a child of God, and a believer in Chriſt, thou muſt be a child of light. O man!
thou muſt bring thy deeds to it, and examine them by that holy lamp in thy ſoul, which is the candle of the Lord, that ſhews thee thy pride and arrogancy, and reproves thy delight in the vain faſhions of this world. Religion is a denial of ſelf; yea, of ſelf-religion too. It is a firm tie or bond upon the ſoul to holineſs, whoſe end is happineſs: for Mat. v. 8. by it men come to ſee the Lord. 'The pure in heart (ſays Jeſus) ſee God:' he that once comes to bear Chriſt's yoke, is not carried away by the devil's allurements; he finds excelling joys in his watchfulneſs and obedience. If men loved the croſs of Chriſt, his precepts and doctrine, they would croſs their own wills, which lead them to break Chriſt's holy will, and loſe their own ſouls in doing the devil's. Had Adam minded that holy light in paradiſe more than the ſerpent's bait, and ſtayed his mind upon his Creator, the rewarder of fidelity, he had ſeen the ſnare of the enemy, and reſiſted him. O do not delight in that which is forbidden! look not upon it, if thou wouldeſt not be captivated Heb. i. 2. by it. Bring not the guilt of ſins of knowledge upon thy own ſoul. Did Chriſt ſubmit his will to his Father's, and, for the joy that was ſet before him, endure the croſs, and deſpiſe the ſhame of a new and untrodden way to glory? Thou alſo muſt ſubmit thy will to Chriſt's holy law and light in thy heart, and for the reward he ſets before thee, to wit, eternal life, endure his croſs, and deſpiſe the ſhame of it. All deſire to rejoice with him, but few will ſuffer with him, or for him. Many are the companions of his table; not many of his abſtinence. The loaves they follow, but the cup of his agony they leave. It is too bitter: they like not to drink thereof. And divers will magnify Phil. ii. 7. his miracles, that are offended at the ignominy of his croſs. But, O man! as he for thy ſalvation, ſo thou for the love of him muſt humble thyſelf, and be contented to be of no reputation, that thou mayeſt follow him; not in a carnal, formal way, of vain man's tradition and preſcription, but as the Holy Ghoſt by the apoſtle doth expreſs it, 'in the Heb. x. 19, 20. 'new and living way,' which Jeſus hath conſecrated, that brings all that walk in it to the eternal reſt of God: whereinto he himſelf is entred, who is the holy and only bleſſed Redeemer.

CHAP. XIII.

§. 1. Avarice (the ſecond capital luſt) its definition and diſtinction. §. 2. It conſiſts in a deſire of unlawful things. §. 3. As in David's caſe about Uriah's wife. §. 4. Alſo Ahab's about Naboth's vineyard. §. 5. Next, in unlawful deſires of lawful things. §. 6. Covetouſneſs is a mark of falſe prophets. §. 7. A reproach to religion. §. 8. An enemy to government. §. 9. Treacherous. §. 10. Oppreſſive. §. 11. Judas an example. §. 12. So Simon Magus. §. 13. Laſtly, in unprofitable hoarding of money. §. 14. The covetous man a common evil. §. 15. His hypocriſy. §. 16. Gold his God. §. 17. He is ſparing to death. §. 18. Is reproved by Chriſt and his followers. §. 19. Ananias and Sapphira's ſin and judgment. §. 20. William Tindal's diſcourſe on that ſubject referred unto. §. 21. Peter Charron's teſtimony againſt it. §. 22. Abraham Cowley's witty and ſharp ſatire upon it.

Ch. XIII. §. I. I AM come to the ſecond part of this diſcourſe, which is avarice, or covetouſneſs, an epidemical and a raging diſtemper in the world, attended with all the miſchiefs that can make men miſerable in themſelves, and in ſociety: ſo near a-kin to the foregoing evil, pride, that they are ſeldom apart: liberality being almoſt as hateful to the proud, as to the covetous. I ſhall define it thus: Covetouſneſs is the love of money
Ephſ. v. 3, 5. or riches: 'which (as the apoſtle hath it) is the root of all evil.' It brancheth
1 Tim. vi. 9. 10. itſelf into theſe three parts: 1ſt, Deſiring of unlawful things. Secondly, Unlawfully deſiring of lawful things. And laſtly, Hoarding up, or unprofitably with-holding the benefit of them from the relief of private perſons, or the public. I ſhall firſt deliver the ſenſe of ſcripture, and what examples are therein afforded againſt this impiety: and next, my own reaſons, with ſome authorities from authors of credit: by which it will appear, that the working of the love of riches out of the hearts of people, is as much the buſineſs of the Croſs of Chriſt, as the rooting out of any one ſin that man is fallen into.

§. II. And firſt, of deſiring or coveting of unlawful things: It is expreſsly forbidden by God himſelf, in the law he delivered to Moſes upon Mount Sinai, for a rule to his Exod. xx. people, the Jews, to walk by: 'Thou ſhalt not covet (ſaith God) thy neighbour's houſe,
'thou ſhalt not covet thy neighbour's wife, nor his man-ſervant, nor his maid-ſervant, nor 'his ox, nor his aſs, nor any thing that is thy neighbour's.' This God confirmed by thunderings and lightnings, and other ſenſible ſolemnities, to ſtrike the people with more awe in receiving and keeping of it, and to make the breach of theſe moral precepts Mic. i. 2. more terrible to them. Micah complains full-mouth'd in his time, 'They covet fields, and take them by violence;' but their end was miſery. Therefore was it ſaid of old, 'Wo to them that covet an evil covetouſneſs:' this is to our point. We have many remarkable inſtances of this in ſcripture; two of which I will briefly report.

§. III. David, though otherwiſe a good man, by unwatchfulneſs is taken; the beauty of Uriah's wife was too hard for him, being diſarmed, and off from his ſpiritual watch. There was no diſſuaſive would do: Uriah muſt be put upon a deſperate ſervice, where it was great odds if he ſurvived it. This was to haſten the unlawful ſatiſfaction of his deſires by a way that looked not like direct murder. The contrivance took:
Uriah is killed, and his wife is quickly David's. This interpreted David's covetouſneſs. Pſal. li.
But went it off ſo? No, David had ſharp ſauce with his meat. 'His pleaſure ſoon turned Pſal. lxxvii. Pſal. xlii. 7.
'to anguiſh and bitterneſs of ſpirit: his ſoul was overwhelmed with ſorrow: the waves Pſal. lxix. 2, 14.
'went over his head: he was conſumed within him: he was ſtuck in the mire and clay; Pſal. vi. 6, 7.
'he cried, he wept; yea, his eyes were as a fountain of tears. Guiltineſs was upon him, 'and he muſt be purged; his ſins waſhed white as ſnow, that were as red as crimſon, or 'he is undone for ever.' His repentance prevailed: behold, what work this part of covetouſneſs makes! what evil, what ſorrow! O that the people of this covetouſneſs would let the ſenſe of David's ſorrows ſink deep into their ſouls, that they might come to David's ſalvation! 'Reſtore me,' ſaith that good man: it ſeems he once knew a better ſtate: yes, and this may teach the better ſort to fear, and ſtand in awe too, leſt they ſin and fall. For David was taken at a diſadvantage: he was off his watch, and gone from the croſs: the law was not his lamp and light, at that inſtant: he was a wanderer from his ſafety, his ſtrong tower, and ſo ſurprized: then and there it was the enemy met him, and vanquiſhed him.

§. IV. The ſecond inſtance is that of Naboth's vineyard: it was coveted by Ahab and 1 Kings xxi.
Jezebel: that which led them to ſuch an unlawful deſire, found means to accompliſh it. Naboth muſt die, for he would not ſell it. To do it, they accuſe the innocent man of blaſphemy, and find two knights of the poſt, ſons of Belial, to evidence againſt him. Thus, in the name of God, and in ſhew of pure zeal to his glory, Naboth muſt die; and accordingly was ſtoned to death. The news of which coming to Jezebel, ſhe bid Ahab ariſe and take poſſeſſion, for Naboth was dead: but God followed both of them with his fierce vengeance. 'In the place where the dogs licked the blood of Naboth' (ſaith Elijah in the name of the Lord) 'ſhall dogs lick thy blood; even thine; and I will bring 'evil upon thee, and take away thy poſterity:' and of Jezebel (his wife and partner in this covetouſneſs and murder) he adds 'the dogs ſhall eat her fleſh by the walls of 'Jezreel.' Here is the infamy and puniſhment due to this part of covetouſneſs. Let this deter thoſe that deſire unlawful things; the rights of others: for God, that is juſt, will certainly repay ſuch with intereſt in the end. But perhaps theſe are few: either that they do not or dare not ſhew it, becauſe the law will bite if they do. But the next part hath company enough, that will yet exclaim againſt the iniquity of this part of covetouſneſs; and by their ſeeming abhorrence of it, would excuſe themſelves of all guilt in the reſt: let us conſider that.

§. V. The next, and moſt common part of covetouſneſs is, the unlawful deſire of lawful things; eſpecially of riches. Money is lawful, but 'the love of it is the root of all 'evil,' if the man of God ſay true. So riches are lawful; but they that purſue them, 'fall 'into divers temptations, ſnares and luſts;' if the ſame good man ſay right. He calls them 'uncertain,' to ſhew their folly and danger that ſet their hearts upon them. Covetouſneſs is hateful to God: he hath denounced great judgments upon thoſe that are guilty of it. God charged it on Iſrael of old, as one of the reaſons of his judgments: 'For the Iſa. lvii. 17.
'iniquity of his covetouſneſs (ſaith God) was I wroth, and ſmote him.' In another Jer. vi. 13.
place, 'Every one is given to covetouſneſs; and from the prophet to the prieſt, every one ch. viii. 10.
'dealeth falſly; therefore will I give their wives unto others, and their fields to them & xxii. 17.
'that ſhall inherit them.' In another place God complained thus: 'But thine eyes 'and thy heart are not but for thy covetouſneſs.' By Ezekiel God renews and repeats his complaint againſt their covetouſneſs: 'and they come to thee as the people, and Ezek. xxxiii.
'ſit before thee as my people: they hear thy words, but will not do them; with their 31.
'mouths they ſhew much love, but their hearts go after covetouſneſs.' Therefore God, in the choice of magiſtrates, made it part of their qualification, to hate covetouſneſs; foreſeeing the miſchief that would follow to that ſociety or government where covetous men were in power; that ſelf would byaſs them, and they would ſeek their own ends at the coſt of the publick. David deſired, 'that his heart might not incline to Pſal. cxix. 36.
'covetouſneſs, but to the teſtimonies of his God.' And the wiſe man expreſsly tells us, that 'He that hateth covetouſneſs, ſhall prolong his days;' making a curſe to follow it.
And it is by Luke charged upon the Phariſees, as a mark of their wickedneſs. And Prov. xxvi.
Chriſt, in that evangeliſt, bids his followers 'take heed and beware of covetouſneſs:' 16.
and he giveth a reaſon for it, that carrieth a moſt excellent inſtruction in it; 'for (ſaith he) Luke xvi. 14.
'a man's life conſiſteth not in the abundance of the things which he poſſeſſeth:' but Luke xii. 15.
he goeth farther; he joins covetouſneſs with adultery, murder and blaſphemy. No won- Mark. vii. 22.
der then if the apoſtle Paul is ſo liberal in his cenſure of this evil: he placeth it with Rom. i. 29.

all unrighteouſneſs, to the Romans: to the Epheſians he writeth the like; and addeth, ‘ let not covetouſneſs be ſo much as named among you:’ and bids the Coloſſians, ‘ mortify their members;’ and names ſeveral ſins, as fornication, uncleanneſs, and ſuch like, but ends with covetouſneſs; with this at the tail of it, ‘which (ſaith he) is idolatry.’ And we know there is not a greater offence againſt God: nay this very apoſtle calls ‘ the ‘ love of money the root of all evil; which (ſaith he) whilſt ſome have coveted after, ‘ they have erred from the faith, and pierced themſelves through with divers ſorrows: ‘ for they that will be rich, fall into temptation, and a ſnare, and many fooliſh and hurtful luſts. O man of God, (ſaith he to his beloved friend Timothy) flee theſe things, ‘ and follow after righteouſneſs, faith, love, patience and meekneſs.’

Eph. v. 3.
Col. iii. 5, 6.
1 Tim. vi. 9, 10, 11.

2 Pet. ii. 3. §. VI. Peter was of the ſame mind; for he maketh covetouſneſs to be one of the great marks of the falſe prophets and teachers that ſhould ariſe among the chriſtians; and by that they might know them; ‘ Who (ſaith he) through covetouſneſs, ſhall, with ‘ feigned words, make merchandize of you.’ To conclude, therefore the author to the Hebrews, at the end of his epiſtle, leaves this (with other things) not without great zeal and weight upon them: ‘ Let (ſaith he) your converſation be without covetouſneſs,’ (he reſts not in this generality, but goes on) ‘ and be content with ſuch things as you have; ‘ for God hath ſaid, I will never leave thee, nor forſake thee:’ What then? Muſt we conclude that thoſe who are not content, but ſeek to be rich, have forſaken God? The concluſion ſeems hard; but yet it is natural: for ſuch, ’tis plain, are not content with what they have; they would have more; they covet to be rich, if they may: they live not with thoſe dependencies and regards to Providence, to which they are exhorted: nor is godlineſs, with content, great gain to them.

Heb. xiii. 5.

§. VII. And truly it is a reproach to a man, eſpecially the religious man, that he knows not when he hath enough; when to leave off; when to be ſatisfied: that notwithſtanding God ſends him one plentiful ſeaſon of gain after another, he is ſo far from making that the cauſe of withdrawing from the trafficks of the world, that he makes it a reaſon of launching farther into it; as if the more he hath, the more he may. He therefore reneweth his appetite, beſtirs himſelf more than ever, that he may have his ſhare in the ſcramble, while any thing is to be got: this is as if cumber, not retirement; and gain, not content, were the duty and comfort of a Chriſtian. O that this thing was better conſidered! for by not being ſo obſervable nor obnoxious to the law as other vices are, there is more danger, for want of that check. ’Tis plain that moſt people ſtrive not for ſubſtance, but wealth. Some there be that love it ſtrongly, and ſpend it liberally, when they have got it. Though this be ſinful, yet more commendable than to love money for money's ſake. That is one of the baſeſt paſſions the mind of man can be captivated with: a perfect luſt; and a greater, and more ſoul-defiling one there is not in the whole catalogue of concupiſcence. Which conſidered, ſhould quicken people into a ſerious examination, how far this temptation of love of money hath entered them; and the rather, becauſe the ſteps it maketh into the mind are almoſt inſenſible, which renders the danger greater. Thouſands think themſelves unconcerned in the caution, that yet are perfectly guilty of the evil. How can it be otherwiſe, when thoſe that have, from a low condition, acquired thouſands, labour yet to advance, yea, double and treble thoſe thouſands; and that with the ſame care and contrivance by which they got them. Is this to live comfortably, or to be rich? Do we not ſee how early they riſe; how late they go to bed? how full of the change, the ſhop, the warehouſe, the cuſtom-houſe; of bills, bonds, charter-parties, &c. they are? running up and down as if it were to ſave the life of a condemned innocent. An inſatiable luſt, and therein ungrateful to God, as well as hurtful to men; who giveth it to them to uſe, and not to love: that's the abuſe. And if this care, contrivance and induſtry, and that continually, be not from the love of money, in thoſe that have ten times more than they began with, and much more than they ſpend or need, I know not what teſtimony man can give of his love to any thing.

§. VIII. To conclude, It is an enemy to government in magiſtrates; for it tends to corruption. Wherefore thoſe that God ordained, were ſuch as feared him, and hated covetouſneſs. Next it hurts ſociety; for old traders keep the young ones poor: and the great reaſon why ſome have too little, and ſo are forced to drudge like ſlaves to feed their families, and keep their chin above water, is, becauſe the rich hold faſt, and preſs to be richer, and covet more, which dries up the little ſtreams of profit from ſmaller folks. There ſhould be a ſtandard, both as to the value and time of traffick; and then the trade of the maſter to be ſhared among his ſervants that deſerve it. This were both to help the young to get their livelihood, and to give the old time to think of leaving this world well, in which they have been ſo buſy, that they might obtain a ſhare in the other, of which they have been ſo careleſs.

§. IX. There is yet another miſchief to government; for covetouſneſs leads men to abuſe and defraud it, by concealing or falſifying the goods they deal in: as bringing in forbidden goods by ſtealth, or lawful goods ſo as to avoid the payment of dues, or owning the goods of enemies for gain; or that they are not well made, or full meaſure; with abundance of that ſort of deceit.

§. X.

§. X. But covetouſneſs has cauſed deſtructive feuds in families: for eſtates falling into the hands of thoſe, whoſe avarice has put them upon drawing greater profit to themſelves than was conſiſtent with juſtice, has given birth to much trouble, and cauſed great oppreſſion. It too often falling out, that ſuch executors have kept the right owners out of poſſeſſion with the money they ſhould pay them.

§. XI. But this is not all; for covetouſneſs betrays friendſhip: a bribe cannot be better placed to do an ill thing, or undo a man. Nay, it is a murderer too often both of ſoul and body: of the ſoul, becauſe it kills that life it ſhould have in God: where money maſters the mind, it extinguiſhes all love to better things: of the body, for it will kill for money, by aſſaſſinations, poiſons, falſe witneſs, &c. I ſhall end this head of covetouſneſs, with the ſin and doom of two covetous men, Judas and Simon Magus.

Judas's religion fell in thorny ground: love of money choaked him. Pride and anger in the Jews endeavoured to murder Chriſt; but till covetouſneſs ſet her hand to effect it, they were all at a loſs. They found Judas had the bag, and probably loved money; they would try him, and did. The price was ſet, and Judas betrays his maſter, his Lord (that never did him wrong) into the hands of his moſt cruel adverſaries. But to do him right, he returned the money, and to be revenged on himſelf, was his own hangman. A wicked act, a wicked end. Come on, you covetous! What ſay you now to brother Judas? Was he not an ill man? Did he not very wickedly? Yes, yes. Would you have done ſo? No, no, by no means. Very well; but ſo ſaid thoſe evil Jews of ſtoning the prophets, and that yet crucified the beloved Son of God; he that came to ſave them, and would have done it, if they had received him, and not rejected the day of their viſitation. Rub your eyes well, for the duſt is got into them; and carefully read in your own conſciences, and ſee, if, out of love to money, you have not betrayed the juſt One in yourſelves, and ſo are brethren with Judas in iniquity. I ſpeak for God againſt an idol; bear with me: have you not reſiſted, yea, quenched the good Spirit of Chriſt, in your purſuit after your beloved wealth? 'Examine yourſelves, try yourſelves; know ye not your own ſelves, that if Chriſt 2 Cor. xiii. 5. 'dwell not (if he rule not, and be not above all beloved) in you, you are reprobates;' in an undone condition?

§. XII. The other covetous man is Simon Magus, a believer too; but his faith could Acts viii. 8, not go deep enough for covetouſneſs. He would have driven a bargain with Peter, ſo 9, to 24. much money for ſo much Holy Ghoſt; that he might ſell it again, and make a good trade of it; corruptly meaſuring Peter by himſelf, as if he had only had a better knack of cozening the people than himſelf, who had ſet up in Samaria for the great power of God, before the power of God in Philip and Peter undeceived the people. But what was Peter's anſwer and judgment? 'Thy money (ſays he) periſh with thee: thou haſt neither 'part nor lot in this matter: thou art in the gall of bitterneſs, and in the bond of iniquity:' a diſmal ſentence. Beſides, it tends to luxury, and riſes often out of it: For from having much they ſpend much, and ſo become poor by luxury: ſuch are covetous to get, to ſpend more, which temperance would prevent. For if men would not, or could not, by good laws well executed, and a better education, be ſo laviſh in their tables, houſes, furniture, apparel and gaming, there would be no ſuch temptation to covet earneſtly after what they could not ſpend: for there is but here and there a miſer that loves money for money's ſake:---

§. XIII. Which leads to the laſt and baſeſt part of covetouſneſs, which is yet the moſt ſordid; to wit, Hoarding up, or keeping money unprofitably, both to others and themſelves too. This is Solomon's miſer, 'that makes himſelf rich, and hath nothing:' a great Prov. xvii. 7. ſin in the ſight of God. He complained of ſuch, as had ſtored up the labours of the poor Iſa. iii. 14, 15. in their houſes; he calls it their Spoils, and that it is a grinding of the poor, becauſe they ſee it not again. But he bleſſeth thoſe that conſider the poor, and commandeth Pſal. xli. 1. every one, 'to open freely to his brother that is in need;' not only he that is ſpiritually, Deut. xv. 7. but naturally ſo; and, not to withhold his gift from the poor. The apoſtle chargeth Timothy in the ſight of God, and before Jeſus Chriſt, 'that he fail not to charge them 1 Tim. vi. 17. 'that are rich in this world, that they truſt not in their uncertain riches, but in the 'living God, who giveth liberally; and that they do good with them, that they may 'be rich in good works.' Riches are apt to corrupt; and that which keeps them ſweet and beſt, is charity: he that uſes them not, gets them not for the end for which they are given; but loves them for themſelves, and not their ſervice. The avaritious is poor in his wealth: he wants for fear of ſpending; and increaſes his fear with his hope, which is his gain; and ſo tortures himſelf with his pleaſure: the moſt like to the man that hid his talent in a napkin, of all others; for this man's talents are hid in his bags out of ſight, in vaults, under boards, behind wainſcots; elſe upon bonds and mortgages, growing but as under ground; for it doth good to none.

§. XIV. This covetous man is a monſter in nature; for he has no bowels; and is like the poles, always cold. An enemy to the ſtate, for he ſpirits their money away. A diſeaſe to the body politick, for he obſtructs the circulation of the blood, and ought to be removed by a purge of the law: for theſe are vices at heart, that deſtroy by wholeſale. The covetous, he hates all uſeful arts and ſciences, as vain, leſt they ſhould coſt him ſomething the learning: wherefore ingenuity has no more place in his mind, than in his pocket. He lets houſes fall, and highways poche, to prevent the charge of repairs; and for his ſpare diet, plain cloaths, and mean furniture, he would place them to the account of moderation. O monſter of a man! that can take up the croſs for covetouſneſs, and not for Chriſt.

§. XV. But he pretends negatively to ſome religion too; for he always rails at prodigality, the better to cover his avarice. If you would beſtow a box of ſpikenard on a good man's head, to ſave money, and to ſhew righteous, he tells you of the poor: but if the poor come, he excuſes his want of charity with the unworthineſs of the object, or the cauſes of his poverty, or that he can beſtow his money upon thoſe that deſerve it better; who rarely opens his purſe till quarter-day, for fear of loſing it.

§. XVI. But he is more miſerable than the pooreſt; for he enjoys not what he yet fears to loſe; they fear not what they do not enjoy. Thus is he poor by over-valuing his wealth; but he is wretched, that hungers with money in a cook's ſhop: yet having made a god of his gold, who knows, but he thinks it unnatural to eat what he worſhips?

§. XVII. But, which aggravates this ſin, I have myſelf once known ſome, that to get money, have wearied themſelves into the grave; and to be true to their principle, when ſick, would not ſpare a fee to a doctor, to help the poor ſlave to live; and ſo died to ſave charges: a conſtancy that canonizes them martyrs for money.

§. XVIII. But now let us ſee what inſtances the ſcripture will give us in reproof of the ſordid hoarders and hiders of money. A good-like young man came to Chriſt, and enquired the way to eternal life: Chriſt told him he knew the commandments: he replied, he had kept them from his youth: (it ſeems he was no looſe perſon, and indeed ſuch are uſualſy not ſo, to ſave charges) 'and yet lackeſt thou one thing (ſaith Chriſt) 'ſell all, diſtribute it to the poor, and thou ſhalt have treaſure in heaven, and come and 'follow me.' It ſeems Chriſt pinched him in the ſore place; he hit the mark, and ſtruck him to the heart, who knew his heart: by this he tried how well he had kept the commandments, to love God above all. 'Tis ſaid, the young man was very ſorrowful, and went his way; and the reaſon which is given, is, that he was very rich. The tides met, money and eternal life: contrary deſires: but which prevailed? alas! his riches. But what ſaid Chriſt to this? 'How hardly ſhall they that have riches enter into the 'kingdom of God?' He adds, 'It is eaſier for a camel to go through a needle's eye, 'than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven:' that is, ſuch a rich man, to wit a covetous rich man, to whom it is hard to do good with what he has: 'tis more than an ordinary miracle: O who then would be rich and covetous! 'Twas upon theſe rich men that Chriſt pronounced his woe, ſaying, 'Wo unto you that are rich, for 'ye have received your conſolation here:' What! none in the heavens? no, unleſs you become willing to be poor men, can reſign all, live looſe to the world, have it at arm's-end, yea, under foot, a ſervant, and not a maſter.

§. XIX. The other inſtance is a very diſmal one too: 'tis that of Ananias and Sapphira. In the beginning of apoſtolick times, it was cuſtomary for thoſe who received the word of life, to bring what ſubſtance they had, and lay it at the apoſtles feet: of theſe, Joſes, ſurnamed Barnabas, was exemplary. Among the reſt, Ananias and his wife Sapphira, confeſſing to the truth, ſold their poſſeſſion, but covetouſly reſerved ſome of the purchaſe-money from the common purſe, to themſelves, and brought a part for the whole, and laid it at the apoſtle's feet. But Peter, a plain and a bold man, in the majeſty of the Spirit ſaid, 'Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart to lye to the Holy Ghoſt; and to keep back 'part of the price of the land? whilſt it remained, was it not thine own? and after it 'was ſold, was it not in thine own power? why haſt thou conceived this thing in thine 'heart? thou haſt not lied unto men, but unto God.' But what followed this covetouſneſs and hypocriſy of Ananias? why, Ananias hearing theſe words, 'he fell down, and gave 'up the ghoſt.' The like befel his wife, being privy to the deceit their avarice had led them to. And it is ſaid, that 'great fear came upon all the church, and thoſe that heard of theſe 'things:' and alſo ſhould on thoſe that now read them. For if this judgment was ſhewn and recorded, that we ſhould beware of the like evils, what will become of thoſe, that under the profeſſion of chriſtianity, a religion that teaches men to live looſe from the world, and to yield up all to the will and ſervice of Chriſt and his kingdom, not only retain a part, but all; and cannot part with the leaſt thing for Chriſt's ſake. I beſeech God to incline the hearts of my readers to weigh theſe things. This had not befallen Ananias and Sapphira, if they had acted as in God's preſence, and with that entire love, truth and ſincerity, that became them. O that people would uſe the light that Chriſt hath given them, to ſearch and ſee how far they are under the power of this iniquity! For would they but watch againſt the love of the world, and be leſs in bondage to the things that are ſeen, which are temporal, they would begin to ſet their hearts on things above, that are of an eternal nature. Their life would be hid with Chriſt in God, out of the reach of all the uncertainties of time, and troubles and changes of mortality. Nay, if people would but conſider how hardly riches are got, how uncertainly they are kept, the envy they bring; that they can neither make a man wiſe, nor cure diſeaſes, nor add to life, much leſs give peace in death: no, nor hardly yield any ſolid benefit above food and raiment (which may be had without them) and that if there be any good uſe for them, 'tis to relieve others in diſtreſs; being but ſtewards of the plentiful providences of God, and conſequently accountable for our ſtewardſhip: if, I ſay, theſe conſiderations had any room in our minds, we ſhould not thus poſt to get, nor care to hide and keep ſuch a mean and impotent thing. O that the croſs of Chriſt (which is the Spirit and Power of God in man) might have more place in the ſoul, that it might crucify us more and more to the world, and the world to us; that, like the days of paradiſe, the earth might again be the footſtool; and the treaſure of the earth a ſervant, and not a god, to man!----Many have writ againſt this vice; three I will mention.

§. XX. William Tindal, that worthy apoſtle of the Engliſh Reformation, has an intire diſcourſe, to which I refer the reader, intitled, 'The Parable of the Wicked Mammon.' The next is ---- §. XXI. Peter Charron (a famous Frenchman, and in particular for the book he wrote of Wiſdom) hath a chapter againſt covetouſneſs, part of which take as followeth: "To love and affect riches, is covetouſneſs: not only the love and affection, but alſo every over-curious care and induſtry about riches. The deſire of goods, and the pleaſure we take in poſſeſſing of them, is grounded only upon opinion: the immoderate deſire to get riches, is a gangrene in our ſouls, which with a venomous heat conſumeth our natural affections, to the end it might fill us with virulent humours. So ſoon as it is lodged in our hearts, all honeſt and natural affection, which we owe either to our parents or friends, or ourſelves, vaniſheth away: all the reſt, in reſpect of our profit, ſeemeth nothing; yea, we forget in the end, and condemn ourſelves, our bodies, our minds, for this tranſitory traſh; and as our proverb is, We ſell our horſe to get us hay. Covetouſneſs is the vile and baſe paſſion of vulgar fools, who account riches the principal good of a man, and fear poverty, as the greateſt evil; and not contenting themſelves with neceſſary means, which are forbidden no man, weigh that is good in a goldſmith's ballance, when nature hath taught us to meaſure it by the ell of neceſſity. For, what greater folly can there be, than to adore that which nature itſelf hath put under our feet, and hidden in the bowels of the earth, as unworthy to be ſeen; yea, rather to be contemned, and trampled under foot? This is that which the ſin of man hath only torn out of the entrails of the earth, and brought unto light to kill himſelf. We dig out the bowels of the earth, and bring to light thoſe things, for which we would fight: We are not aſhamed to eſteem thoſe things moſt highly, which are in the loweſt parts of the earth. Nature ſeemeth even in the firſt birth of gold, and the womb from whence it proceedeth, after a ſort to have preſaged the miſery of thoſe that are in love with it; for it hath ſo ordered the matter, that in thoſe countries where it groweth, there groweth with it neither graſs, nor plant, nor other thing that is worth any thing: as giving us to underſtand thereby, that in thoſe minds where the deſire of this metal groweth, there cannot remain ſo much as a ſpark of true honour and virtue. For what thing can be more baſe, than for a man to degrade, and to make himſelf a ſervant and a ſlave to that which ſhould be ſubject unto him? Riches ſerve wiſe men, but command a fool; for a covetous man ſerveth his riches, and not they him: and he is ſaid to have goods as he hath a fever, which holdeth and tyrannizeth over a man, not he over it. What thing more vile, than to love that which is not good, neither can make a good man? yea, is common, and in the poſſeſſion of the moſt wicked in the world; which many times perverts good manners, but never amends them? without which, ſo many wiſe men have made themſelves happy, and by which ſo many wicked men have come to a wicked end. To be brief; what thing more miſerable, than to bind the living to the dead, as Mezentius did, to the end their death might be languiſhing, and the more cruel; to tye the ſpirit unto the excrement and ſcum of the earth, to pierce through his own ſoul with a thouſand torments, which this amorous paſſion of riches brings with it; and to entangle himſelf with the ties and cords of this malignant thing, as the ſcripture calls them; which doth likewiſe term them thorns and thieves, which ſteal away the heart of man; ſnares of the devil, idolatry, and the root of all evil. And truly, he that ſhall ſee the catalogue of thoſe envies and moleſtations, which riches ingender into the heart of man, as their proper thunderbolt and lightning, they would be more hated than they are now loved. Poverty wants many things, but covetouſneſs all: a covetous man is good to none, and worſe to himſelf." Thus much of Charron, a wiſe and great man. My next teſtimony is yielded by an author not unlikely to take with ſome ſort of people for his wit; may they equally value his morality, and the judgment of his riper time.

§. XXII. Abraham Cowley, a witty and ingenious man, yieldeth us the other teſtimony: of avarice he writeth us: "There are two ſorts of avarice; the one is but a baſtard-kind, and that is a rapacious appetite of gain; not for its own ſake, but for the pleaſure of refunding it immediately through all the channels of pride and luxury. The other is the true kind, and properly ſo called, which is a reſtleſs and unſatiable 1668.

Chap.XIII.

“ deſire of riches, not for any farther end or uſe, but only to hoard and preſerve, and perpetually increaſe them. The covetous man of the firſt kind is like a greedy oſtrich, which devoureth any metal, but it is with an intent to feed upon it, and in effect it maketh a ſhift to digeſt and excern it. The ſecond is like the fooliſh chough, which loveth to ſteal money, only to hide it. The firſt doth much harm to mankind, and a little good to ſome few: the ſecond doth good to none, no, not to himſelf. The firſt can make no excuſe to God or angels, or rational men, for his actions: the ſecond can give no reaſon or colour, not to the Devil himſelf, for what he doth: he is a ſlave to Mammon without wages. The firſt maketh a ſhift to be beloved, ay, and envied too, by ſome people: the ſecond is the univerſal object of hatred and contempt. There is no vice hath been ſo pelted with good ſentences, and eſpecially by the poets, who have purſued it with ſatires and fables, and allegories, and alluſions, and moved (as we ſay) every ſtone to fling at it; among all which, I do not remember a more fine correction, than that which was given it by one line of Ovid's:

“ ---- ---- ---- ---- Multa “ Luxuriæ deſunt, omnia avaritiæ.

“ Which is, Much is wanting to luxury, All to avarice. To which ſaying I have a mind to add one member, and render it thus: Poverty wants ſome, luxury many, avarice all things. Somebody ſaith of a virtuous and wiſe man, that having nothing, he hath all. This is juſt his antipode, who having all things, yet hath nothing.

“ And Oh! what man's condition can be worſe,
“ Than his, whom plenty ſtarves, and bleſſings curſe?
“ The beggars but a common fate deplore;
“ The rich-poor man's emphatically poor.

“ I wonder how it cometh to paſs, that there hath never been any law made againſt him: againſt him, do I ſay? I mean, for him. As there are public proviſions made for all other mad-men, it is very reaſonable that the king ſhould appoint ſome perſons to manage his eſtate during his life (for his heirs commonly need not that care) and out of it to make it their buſineſs to ſee, that he ſhould not want alimony befitting his condition; which he could never get out of his own cruel fingers. We relieve idle vagrants, and counterfeit beggars, but have no care at all of theſe really poor men, who are, methinks, to be reſpectfully treated, in regard of their quality. I might be endleſs againſt them; but I am almoſt choaked with the ſuperabundance of the matter. Too much plenty impoveriſheth me, as it doth them.” Thus much againſt avarice, that moth of the ſoul, and canker of the mind.

CHAP. XIV.

§. 1. Luxury, what it is, and the miſchief of it to mankind. An enemy to the croſs of Chriſt. §. 2. Of luxury in diet, how unlike Chriſt, and contrary to ſcripture. §. 3. The miſchief it does to the bodies, as well as minds of people. §. 4. Of luxury in the exceſs of apparel, and of recreations: that ſin brought the firſt coat: people not to be proud of the badge of their miſery. §. 5. The recreations of the times enemies to virtue: they riſe from degeneracy. §. 6. The end of clothes allowable; the abuſe reprehended. §. 7. The chiefeſt recreation of good men of old, was to ſerve God, and do good to mankind, and follow honeſt vocations, not vain ſports and paſtimes. §. 8. The Heathens knew and did better things. The ſobriety of infidels above chriſtians. 9. Luxury condemned in the caſe of Dives. §. 10. The doctrine of the ſcripture poſitively againſt a voluptuous life.

Chap.XIV.

§. I. I AM now come to the other extream, and that is luxury, which is, An exceſſive indulgence of ſelf in eaſe and pleaſure. This is the laſt great impiety ſtruck at in this diſcourſe of the holy croſs of Chriſt, which indeed is much of the ſubject of its mortifying virtue and power. A diſeaſe as epidemical as killing: it creeps into all ſtations and ranks of men; the pooreſt often exceeding their ability to indulge their appetite; and the rich frequently wallowing in thoſe things that pleaſe the luſts of their eye and fleſh, and the pride of life; as regardleſs of the ſevere diſcipline of Jeſus, whom they call Saviour, as if luxury, and not the croſs, were the ordained way to heaven. ‘ What ſhall we eat, what ſhall we drink, and what ſhall we put on?’ once the care of luxurious Heathens, is now the practice, and (which is worſe) the ſtudy, of pretended Chriſtians. But let ſuch be aſhamed, and repent; remembering that Jeſus did not reproach the Gentiles for thoſe things, to indulge his followers in them. They that will have Chriſt to be theirs, muſt be ſure to be his, to be like-minded, to live in temperance and moderation, as knowing the Lord is at hand. Sumptuous apparel, rich unguents, delicate waſhes, ſtately furniture, coſtly cookery, and ſuch diverſions as balls, maſques, muſick-meetings, plays, romances, &c. which are the delight and entertainment of the times, belong not to the holy path that Jeſus and his true diſciples and followers trod to glory: no, ‘ through many tribulations (ſays none of the leaſt of them) muſt we enter

‘ into the kingdom of God.’ I do earneſtly beſeech the gay and luxurious, into whoſe hands this diſcourſe ſhall be directed, to conſider well the reaſons and examples here advanced againſt their way of living; if haply they may come to ſee how remote it is from true Chriſtianity, and how dangerous to their eternal peace. God Almighty by his grace ſoften their hearts to inſtruction, and ſhed abroad his tender love in their ſouls, that they may be overcome to repentance, and to the love of the holy way of the croſs of Jeſus, the bleſſed Redeemer of men. For they cannot think that he can benefit them, while they refuſe to lay down their ſins for the love of him that laid down his life for the love of them. Or that he will give them a place in heaven, that refuſe him any in their hearts on earth. But let us examine luxury in all its parts.

§. II. Luxury has many parts; and the firſt that is forbidden by the ſelf-denying Jeſus, is the belly: ‘Take no thought (ſays he to his diſciples) ſaying, what ſhall we Mat. vi. 31, 32. ‘eat, or what ſhall we drink?---for after theſe things do the Gentiles ſeek:’ as if he had ſaid, the uncircumciſed, the Heathen, ſuch as live without the true God, and make a god of their belly, whoſe care is to pleaſe their appetite, more than to ſeek God and his kingdom: you muſt not do ſo, but ‘ſeek you firſt the kingdom of God, and his ‘righteouſneſs, and all other things ſhall be added.’ That which is convenient for you will follow: let every thing have its time and order.

This carries a ſerious reprehenſion to the luxurious eater and drinker, who is taken up with an exceſſive care of his palate and belly, what he ſhall eat, and what he ſhall drink: who being often at a loſs what to have next, therefore has an officer to invent, and a cook to dreſs, diſguiſe and drown the ſpecies, that it may cheat the eye, look new and ſtrange; and all to excite an appetite, or raiſe an admiration. To be ſure there is great variety, and that curious and coſtly: the ſauce, it may be, dearer than the meat: and ſo full is he fed, that without it he can ſcarce find out a ſtomach; which is to force an hunger, rather than to ſatisfy it. And as he eats, ſo he drinks; rarely for thirſt, but pleaſure; to pleaſe his palate. For that purpoſe he will have divers ſorts, and he muſt taſte them all: one, however good, is dull and tireſome; variety is more delightful than the beſt; and therefore the whole world is little enough to fill his cellar. But were he temperate in his proportions, his variety might be imputed rather to curioſity than luxury. But what the temperate man uſes as a cordial, he drinks by full draughts, till, inflamed by exceſs, he is fitted to be an inſtrument of miſchief, if not to others, always to himſelf; whom perhaps at laſt he knows not: for ſuch brutality are ſome come to, they will ſip themſelves out of their own knowledge. This is the luſt of the fleſh, that is not of the Father, but of the world: for upon this comes in the muſic and dance, and mirth, and Ecc. ii. 2. the laughter which is madneſs, that the noiſe of one pleaſure may drown the iniquity of another, leſt his own heart ſhould deal too plainly with him. Thus the luxurious live; ‘they forget God, they regard not the afflicted.’ O that the ſons and daughters of men would conſider their wantonneſs and their iniquity in theſe things! How ill do they requite the goodneſs of God in the uſe and abuſe of the plenty he yields them: how cruel are they to his creatures, how laviſh of their lives and virtue, how thankleſs for them; forgetting the giver, and abuſing the gift by their luſts; and deſpiſing counſel, and caſting inſtruction behind them. They loſe tenderneſs, and forget duty, being ſwallowed up of voluptuouſneſs; adding one exceſs to another. God rebuked this ſin in the Jews by the prophet Amos: ‘Ye that put far away the evil day, and cauſe the ſeat Amos vi. 3, ‘of violence to come near; and lie upon beds of ivory, and ſtretch themſelves upon their 4, 5, 6. ‘couches, and eat the lambs out of the flock, and the calves out of the ſtall; and chant ‘to the ſound of the viol, and invent to themſelves inſtruments of muſick, like David; ‘that drink wine in bowls, and anoint themſelves with the chief ointments: but they are ‘not grieved for the affliction of Joſeph.’----Theſe, it ſeems, were the vices of the degenerate Jews, under all their pretence to religion; and are they not of Chriſtians at this day? Yea, they are; and theſe are the great parts of luxury ſtruck at in this diſcourſe. Remember Dives, with all his ſumptuous fare, went to hell: and the apoſtle pronounces heavy woes upon thoſe ‘whoſe God is their belly;’ for ſuch ‘glory in their ſhame.’ Phil. iii. 19.

Chriſt places theſe things to the courts of worldly kings, not his kingdom; making them unſeemly in his followers: his feaſt therefore (which was his miracle) to the multitude, was plain and ſimple; enough, but without curioſity, or the art of cookery: and it went down well, for they were hungry; the beſt and fitteſt time to eat. And the apoſtle, in his directions to his much beloved Timothy, debaſes the lovers of worldly fulneſs; adviſing him to ‘godlineſs and content, as the chiefeſt gain:’ adding, ‘and hav- 1 Tim. vi. 6, ‘ing food and raiment, let us therewith be content.’ Behold the abſtemious, and moſt 7, 8, 9, 10, contented life of thoſe royal pilgrims, the ſons of heaven, and immortal offspring of the 11. great power of God; they were in faſts and perils often, and eat what was ſet before them; and in all conditions learnt to be contented. O bleſſed men! O bleſſed ſpirits! let my ſoul dwell with yours for ever!

§. III. But the diſeaſes which luxury begets and nouriſhes, make it an enemy to mankind: for beſides the miſchief it brings to the ſouls of people, it undermines health, and ſhortens the life of man, in that it gives but ill nouriſhment, and ſo leaves and feeds corrupt humours, whereby the body becomes rank and foul, lazy and ſcorbutick; unfit for exerciſe, and more for honeſt labour. The ſpirits being thus loaded with ill fleſh, and the mind effeminated, a man is made unactive, and ſo unuſeful in civil ſociety; for idleneſs follows luxury, as well as diſeaſes. Theſe are the burdens of the world, devourers of good things, ſelf-lovers, and ſo forgetters of God: but (which is ſad, and yet juſt) the Pſal. ix. 17. end of thoſe that forget God, is to be 'turned into hell.'

§. IV. But there is another part of luxury, which has great place with vain man and woman, and that is the gorgeouſneſs of apparel; one of the fooliſheſt, becauſe moſt coſtly, empty and unprofitable exceſſes people can well be guilty of. We are taught by the ſcriptures of truth to believe that ſin brought the firſt coat; and if conſent of writers be of force, it was as well without as within: to thoſe that ſo believe, I direct my diſ- Gen. iii. 21. courſe, becauſe they, I am ſure, are the generality. I ſay, if ſin brought the firſt coat, poor Adam's offſpring have little reaſon to be proud or curious in their clothes; for it ſeems their original was baſe, and the finery of them will neither make them noble, nor man innocent again. But doubtleſs bleſſed was that time, when innocence, not ignorance, freed our firſt parents from ſuch ſhifts: they were then naked, and knew no ſhame; but ſin made them aſhamed to be longer naked. Since therefore guilt brought ſhame, and ſhame an apron and a coat, how very low are they fallen, that glory in their ſhame, that are proud of their fall? for ſo they are, that uſe care and coſt to trim and ſet off the very badge and livery of that lamentable lapſe. It is all one, as for a man that had loſt his noſe by a ſcandalous diſtemper, to take pains to ſet out a falſe one, in ſuch ſhape and ſplendor, as ſhould give but the greater occaſion for all to gaze upon him; as if he would tell them, he had loſt his noſe, for fear they ſhould think he had not. But would a wiſe man be in love with a falſe noſe, though ever ſo rich, and however finely made? Surely no: and ſhall people that call themſelves Chriſtians, ſhew ſo much love for clothes, as to neglect innocence, their firſt cloathing? Doth it not ſhew what coſt of time, pains and money, people are at to ſet off their ſhame, with the greateſt ſhew and ſolemnity of folly? is it not to delight in the effect of that cauſe, which they rather ſhould lament? If a thief were to wear chains all his life, would their being gold, and well made, abate his infamy? to be ſure his being choice of them would increaſe it. Why, this is the very caſe of the vain faſhion-mongers of this ſhameleſs age; yet will they be Chriſtians, judges in religion, ſaints, what not? O miſerable ſtate indeed! to be ſo blinded by the luſt of the eye, the luſt of the fleſh, and the pride of life, as to call ſhame decency, and to be curious and expenſive about that which ſhould be their humiliation. And not only are they grown in love with theſe vanities, and thereby expreſs how wide they are from primitive innocence; but 'tis notorious how many faſhions have been and are invented on purpoſe to excite luſt: which ſtill puts them at a greater diſtance from a ſimple and harmleſs ſtate, and enſlaves their minds to baſe concupiſcence.

§. V. Nor is it otherwiſe with recreations, as they call them; for theſe are nearly related. Man was made a noble, rational, grave creature: his pleaſure ſtood in his duty, and his duty in obeying God; which was to love, fear, adore and ſerve him; and in uſing the creation with true temperance and godly moderation; as knowing well that the Lord, his judge, was at hand, the inſpector and rewarder of his works. In ſhort, his happineſs was in his communion with God; his error was to leave that converſation, and let his eyes wander abroad, to gaze on tranſitory things. If the recreations of the age were as pleaſant and neceſſary as they are ſaid and made to be, unhappy then would Adam and Eve have been, that never knew them. But had they never fallen, and the world not been tainted by their folly and ill example, perhaps man had never known the neceſſity or uſe of many of theſe things. Sin gave them birth, as it did the other; they were afraid of the preſence of the Lord, which was the joy of their innocency, when they had ſinned; and then their minds wandered, ſought other pleaſures, and began to forget Amos vi. 3, 4, 5, 6. God; as he complained afterwards by the prophet Amos: 'They put far away the evil 'day: they eat the fat of the flock: they drink wine in bowls: they anoint themſelves 'with the chief perfumes: they ſtretch themſelves upon beds of ivory: they chant to 'the ſound of the viol, and invent unto themſelves inſtruments of muſick, like David, not heeding or remembering the afflictions and captivity of poor Joſeph;' him they wickedly ſold, innocency was quite baniſhed, and ſhame ſoon began to grow a cuſtom, till they were grown ſhameleſs in the imitation. And truly, 'tis now no leſs a ſhame to approach primitive innocence by modeſt plainneſs, than it was matter of ſhame to Adam that he loſt it, and became forced to tack fig leaves for a covering. Wherefore in vain do men and women deck themſelves with ſpecious pretences to religion, and flatter their miſerable ſouls with the fair titles of chriſtian, innocent, good, virtuous, and the like, whilſt ſuch vanities and follies reign. Wherefore to you all, from the eternal Gal. vi. 7. God, I am bound to declare, 'you mock him that will not be mocked, and deceive 'yourſelves; ſuch intemperance muſt be denied, and you muſt know yourſelves changed, and more nearly approach to primitive purity, before you can be entitled to Rom. viii. 14. Gal. v. 24. what you do but now uſurp; 'for none but thoſe who are led by the Spirit of God, are 'the children of God,' which guides into all temperance and meekneſs.

§. VI. But the chriſtian world (as it would be called) is juſtly reproveable, becauſe the very end of the firſt inſtitution of apparel is groſsly perverted. The utmoſt ſervice that clothes originally were deſigned for, when ſin had ſtripped them of their native innocence, was, as hath been ſaid, to cover their ſhame, therefore plain and modeſt: next, to fence out cold, therefore ſubſtantial: laſtly, to declare ſexes, therefore diſtinguiſhing. So that then neceſſity provoked to cloathing, now pride and vain curioſity: in former times ſome benefit obliged, but now wantonneſs and pleaſure: then they minded them for covering, but now that is the leaſt part; their greedy eyes muſt be provided with gaudy ſuperfluities; as if they made their clothes for trimming, to be ſeen rather than worn; only for the ſake of other curioſities that muſt be tacked upon them, although they neither cover ſhame, fence from cold, nor diſtinguiſh ſexes; but ſignally diſplay their wanton, fantaſtic, full-fed minds, that have them.

§. VII. Then the beſt recreations were to ſerve God, be juſt, follow their vocations, mind their flocks, do good, exerciſe their bodies in ſuch manner as was ſuitable to gravity, temperance and virtue; but now that word is extended to almoſt every folly that carries any appearance above open ſcandalous filth (deteſted of the very actors, when they have done it); ſo much are men degenerated from Adam in his diſobedience; ſo much more confident and artificial are they grown in all impieties: yea, their minds, through cuſtom, are become ſo very inſenſible of the inconveniency that attends the like follies, that what was once mere neceſſity, a badge of ſhame, at beſt but a remedy, is now the delight, pleaſure, and recreation of the age. How ignoble is it! how ignominious and unworthy of a reaſonable creature; man which is endued with underſtanding, fit to contemplate immortality, and made a companion (if not ſuperior) to angels, that he ſhould mind a little duſt; a few ſhameful rags; inventions of mere pride and luxury; toys, ſo apiſh and fantaſtick; entertainments ſo dull and earthy, that a rattle, a baby, a hobby-horſe, a top, are by no means ſo fooliſh in a ſimple child, nor unworthy of his thoughts, as are ſuch inventions of the care and pleaſure of men. It is a mark of great ſtupidity, that ſuch vanities ſhould exerciſe the noble mind of man, and image of the great Creator of heaven and earth.

§. VIII. Of this many among the very Heathens of old had ſo clear a proſpect, that they deteſted all ſuch vanity; looking upon curioſity in apparel, and that variety of recreations now in vogue and eſteem with falſe Chriſtians, to be deſtructive of good manners, in that it more eaſily ſtole away the minds of people from ſobriety to wantonneſs, idleneſs, effeminacy, and made them only companions for the beaſt that periſhes: witneſs thoſe famous men, Anaxagoras, Socrates, Plato, Ariſtides, Cato, Seneca, Epictetus, &c. who placed true honour and ſatisfaction in nothing below virtue and immortality. Nay, ſuch are the remains of innocence among ſome Moors and Indians in our times, that they do not only traffick in a ſimple poſture, but if a Chriſtian (though he muſt be an odd one) fling out a filthy word, 'tis cuſtomary with them, by way of moral, to bring him water to purge his mouth. How much do the like virtues, and reaſonable inſtances, accuſe people profeſſing chriſtianity, of groſs folly and intemperance? O! that men and women had the fear of God before their eyes! and that they were ſo charitable to themſelves, as to remember whence they came, what they are doing, and to what they muſt return: that ſo, more noble, more virtuous, more rational and heavenly things might be the matters of their pleaſure and entertainment! that they would be once perſuaded to believe how inconſiſtent the folly, vanity and converſation they are moſtly exerciſed in, really are with the true nobility of a reaſonable ſoul; and let that juſt principle, which taught the Heathens, teach them, leſt it be found more tolerable for Heathens than ſuch Chriſtians in the day of account! For if their ſhorter notions, and more imperfect ſenſe of things could yet diſcover ſo much vanity; if their degree of light condemned it, and they, in obedience thereunto, diſuſed it, doth it not behove Chriſtians much more? Chriſt came not to extinguiſh, no, but to improve that knowledge: and they who think they need do leſs now than before, had need to act better than they think. I conclude, that the faſhions and recreations now in repute are very abuſive of the end of man's creation; and that the inconveniencies that attend them, as wantonneſs, idleneſs, prodigality, pride, luſt, reſpect of perſons (witneſs a plume of feathers, or a lace-coat in a country village, whatever be the man that wears them) with the like fruits, are repugnant to the duty, reaſon, and true pleaſure of man, and abſolutely inconſiſtent with that wiſdom, knowledge, manhood, temperance, induſtry, which render man truly noble and good.

§. IX. Again, theſe things which have been hitherto condemned, have never been the converſation or practice of the holy men and women of old times, whom the ſcriptures recommend for holy examples, worthy of imitation. Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, were plain men, and princes, as graſiers are, over their families and flocks. They were not ſolicitous of the vanities ſo much lived in by the people of this generation, for in all things they pleaſed God by faith. The firſt forſook his father's houſe, kindred and country; a true type or figure of that ſelf-denial all muſt know, that would have Abraham to their father. They muſt not think to live in thoſe pleaſures, faſhions and cuſtoms toms they are called to leave; no, but part with all, in hopes of the great recompence of reward, ‘ and that better country, which is eternal in the heavens.’ The prophets were Heb. xi. generally poor mechanicks; one a ſhepherd, another an herdſman, &c. They often Amos vii. 15, cried out upon the full-fed, wanton Iſraelites to repent, to fear and dread the living God,

16. to forſake the ſins and vanities they lived in; but they never imitated them. John Baptiſt, the meſſenger of the Lord, who was ſanctified in his mother's womb, preached his Luke i. 15. embaſſy to the world in a coat of camel's hair, a rough and homely garment. Nor can
Mat. iii. 1, 2, it be conceived that Jeſus Chriſt himſelf was much better apparelled, who according to 3, 4. Mat. xiii. 55. the fleſh, was of poor deſcent, and in life of great plainneſs; inſomuch that it was uſual
Mark vi. 3. in way of deriſion to ſay, ‘ Is not this Jeſus the ſon of Joſeph a carpenter?’ And this Luke vii. 25. Jeſus tells his followers, that as for ſoft raiment, gorgeous apparel and delicacies, they were for kings courts: implying, that he and his followers were not to ſeek after thoſe things; but ſeems thereby to expreſs the great difference that was betwixt the lovers of the faſhions and cuſtoms of the world, and thoſe whom he had choſen out of it. And he did not only come in that mean and deſpicable manner himſelf, that he might ſtain the pride of all fleſh, but therein became exemplary to his followers, what a ſelf-denying life they muſt lead, if they would be his true diſciples. Nay, he farther leaves it with them in a parable, to the end that it might make the deeper impreſſion, and that they might ſee how inconſiſtent a pompous worldly-pleaſing life is with the kingdom he came to eſtabliſh and call men to the poſſeſſion of: and that is the remarkable ſtory of Dives; who is repreſented, firſt, as a rich man; next, as a voluptuous man, in his rich apparel, his many diſhes, and his pack of dogs; and laſtly, as an uncharitable man, or one who was more concerned how to pleaſe the luſt of the eye, the luſt of the fleſh, and the pride of life, and fare ſumptuouſly every day, than to take compaſſion of poor Lazarus at his gate: no, his dogs were more pitiful and kind than he. But what was the doom of this jolly man, this great Dives? we read it was everlaſting torment; but that of Lazarus eternal joy with Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, in the kingdom of God. In ſhort; Lazarus was a good man, the other a great man: the one poor and temperate, the other rich and luxurious: there are too many of them alive; and 'twere well, if his doom might awaken them to repentance.

§. X. Nor were the twelve apoſtles, the immediate meſſengers of the Lord Jeſus
Mat. iv. 18. Chriſt, other than poor men, one a fiſherman, another a tent-maker; and he that was
Mat. ix. 9. of the greateſt (though perhaps not the beſt employment) was a cuſtom-gatherer. So
Acts xviii. 1, that 'tis very unlikely that any of them were followers of the faſhions of the world: nay,
2, 3. they were ſo far from it, that, as became the followers of Chriſt, they lived poor, afflicted,
John xiii. v. 1 Cor. iv. 9, ſelf-denying lives; bidding the churches to walk as they had them for examples.
10, 11, 12, 13, 14. And to ſhut up this particular, they gave this pathetical account of the holy women in
Phi. iii. 17. former times, as an example of godly temperance, namely, that firſt they did expreſsly
1 Pet. ii. 21. abſtain from gold, ſilver, braided hair, fine apparel, or ſuch like; and next, ‘ that their
Jam. i. 15, 20. 1 Pet. iii. 4, 5. ‘ adornment was a meek and quiet ſpirit, and the hidden man of the heart, which are of 1 Tim. v. 6. ‘ great price with the Lord:’ affirming, ‘ that ſuch as live in pleaſure, are dead whilſt
Luke viii. 14. ‘ they live;’ for that the cares and pleaſures of this life choak and deſtroy the ſeed of the kingdom, and quite hinder all progreſs in the hidden and divine life. Wherefore we find, that the holy men and women of former times were not accuſtomed to theſe pleaſures
Heb. xii. 2, and vain recreations; but having their minds ſet on things above, ſought another 14, 15, 16. kingdom; which conſiſts in ‘ righteouſneſs, peace, and joy in the Holy Spirit; who
Heb. iv. 9. Rev. xiv. 13. ‘ having obtained a good report, entered into their eternal reſt,’ therefore their works follow, and praiſe them in the gates.

CHAP. XV.

§. 1. The judgments of God denounced upon the Jews for their luxury; all ranks included. §. 2. Chriſt charges his diſciples to have a care of the guilt of it: a ſupplication to the inhabitants of England. §. 3. Temperance preſſed upon the churches by the apoſtles. §. 4. An exhortation to England to meaſure herſelf by that rule. §. 5. What chriſtian recreations are. §. 6. Who need other ſports to paſs away their time, are unfit for heaven and eternity. §. 7. Man has but a few days: they may be better beſtowed: this doctrine is ungrateful to none that would be truly bleſſed. § 8. Not only good is omitted by this luxurious life, but evil committed, as breach of marriage and love, loſs of health and eſtate, &c. Play-houſes and ſtages moſt inſtrumental to this miſchief. §. 9. How youth is by them inflamed to vanity: what miſchief comes of revels, gamings, &c. Below the life of noble Heathens. §. 10. The true diſciples of Jeſus are mortified in theſe things: the pleaſure and reward of a good employment of time.

Chap. XV. §. 1. BUT ſuch exceſs in apparel and pleaſure was not only forbid in ſcripture, but it was the ground of that lamentable meſſage by the prophet Iſaiah to the Iſa. iii. 16. to 26. people of Iſrael: ‘ Moreover the Lord ſaith, Becauſe the daughters of Zion are haughty, ‘ and walk with ſtretched-forth necks and wanton eyes, walking and mincing as they ‘ go,

The very practice and garb, and vanity of this age, being as liable to the wrath of God which hangs over England and Europe, and is ready to be executed on their rebellious inhabitants.

go, and making a tinkling with their feet; therefore the Lord will ſmite with a ſcab the crown of the head of the daughters of Zion, and the Lord will diſcover their ſecret parts; in that day the Lord will take away the bravery of their tinkling ornaments, and their cauls (or networks, in the Hebrew) and their round tyres like the moon; the chains and the bracelets, and the ſpangled ornaments; the bonnets, and the ornaments of the legs, and the head-bands, and the tablets, and the ear-rings, the rings and noſe jewels; the changeable ſuits of apparel, and the mantles, and the wimples, and the criſping pins; the glaſſes, and the fine linnen, and the hoods and the veils: and it ſhall come to paſs, that inſtead of ſweet ſmells, there ſhall be a ſtink; and inſtead of a girdle, a rent; and inſtead of well-ſet hair, baldneſs; and inſtead of a ſtomacher, a girding of ſack-cloth, and burning inſtead of beauty: thy men ſhall fall by the ſword, and thy mighty in the war; and her gates ſhall lament and mourn, and ſhe, being deſolate, ſhall ſit upon the ground.' Behold, O vain and fooliſh inhabitants of England and Europe, your folly and your doom! Yet read the prophet Ezekiel's viſion of miſerable Tyre, what puniſhment her pride and pleaſure brought upon her; and amongſt many other circumſtances theſe are ſome; ‘ Theſe were thy merchants in all ſorts of things; in blue clothes and broidered work, and in cheſts of rich apparel, emeralds, purple, fine linnen, coral and agat, ſpices, with all precious ſtones and gold, horſes, chariots,' &c. For which hear part of her doom, ‘ Thy riches and thy fairs, thy merchandize, and all thy company, which is in the midſt of thee, ſhall fall into the midſt of the ſea, in the day of thy ruin; and the inhabitants of the iſles ſhall be aſtoniſhed at thee, and their merchants hiſs at thee; thou ſhalt be a terror, and ſhalt be no more.' Thus hath God declared his diſpleaſure againſt the luxury of this wanton world. Yet farther the prophet Zephaniah goes, for thus he ſpeaks: ‘ And it ſhall come to paſs, in the day of the Lord's ſacrifice, that I will puniſh the princes, and the king's children, and all ſuch as are cloathed with ſtrange apparel.' Of how evil conſequence was it in thoſe times, for the greateſt men to give themſelves the liberty of following the vain cuſtoms of other nations; or of changing the uſual end of clothes, or apparel, to gratify fooliſh curioſity?

Ezek. xxvii.

Zeph. i. 8.

§. II. This did the Lord Jeſus Chriſt expreſsly charge his diſciples not to be careful about; inſinuating that ſuch as were, could not be his diſciples: for, ſays he, ‘ Take no thought, ſaying what ſhall we eat? or what ſhall we drink? or wherewithal ſhall we be cloathed? (for after all theſe things do the Gentiles ſeek) for your heavenly Father knoweth that you have need of all theſe things; but ſeek ye firſt the kingdom of God, and his righteouſneſs, and all theſe things ſhall be added unto you.' Under which of eating, and drinking, and apparel, he comprehends all external things whatſoever; and ſo much appears, as well becauſe they are oppoſed to the kingdom of God and his righteouſneſs, which are inviſible and heavenly things, as that thoſe very matters he enjoins them not to be careful about, are the moſt neceſſary, and the moſt innocent in themſelves. If then, in ſuch caſes, the minds of his diſciples were not to be ſolicitous, much leſs in fooliſh, ſuperſtitious, idle inventions, to gratify the carnal appetites and minds of men: ſo certain it is, that thoſe who live therein, are none of his followers, but the Gentiles; and (as he elſewhere ſays) ‘ the nations of the world who know not God.' If then the diſtinguiſhing mark between the diſciples of Jeſus, and thoſe of the world, is, that one minds the things of heaven, and God's kingdom, that ‘ ſtands in righteouſneſs, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt,' (being not careful of external matters, even the moſt innocent and neceſſary) and that the other minds eating, drinking, apparel, and the affairs of the world, with the luſts, pleaſures, profits and honours that belong to it; be you intreated for your ſouls ſakes, O inhabitants of England, to be ſerious, to reflect a while upon yourſelves, what care and coſt you are at, of time and money, about fooliſh, nay, vicious things: ſo far are you degenerated from the primitive chriſtian life. What buying and ſelling, what dealing and chaffering, what writing and poſting, what toil and labour, what noiſe, hurry, buſtle and confuſion, what ſtudy, what little contrivances and over-reachings, what eating, drinking, vanity of apparel, moſt ridiculous recreations; in ſhort, what riſing early, going to bed late, expence of precious time, is there about things that periſh? View the ſtreets, ſhops, exchanges, plays, parks, coffee-houſes, &c. And is not the world, this fading world, writ upon every face? Say not within yourſelves, How otherwiſe ſhould men live, and the world ſubſiſt? the common, though frivolous objection: there is enough for all; let ſome content themſelves with leſs: a few things plain and decent, ſerve a chriſtian life. 'Tis luſt, pride, avarice, that thruſt men upon ſuch folly: were God's kingdom more the exerciſe of their minds, theſe periſhing entertainments would have but little of their time or thoughts.

Mat. vi. 31, 32, 33.

Luke xii. 22, to 36.

Rom. xiv. 17.

§. III. This ſelf-denying doctrine was confirmed and enforced by the apoſtles in their example, as we have already ſhewn; and in their precepts too, as we ſhall yet evince in thoſe two moſt remarkable paſſages of Paul and Peter; where they do not only tell us what ſhould be done, but alſo, what ſhould be denied and avoided. ‘ In like manner I will, that women adorn themſelves in modeſt apparel: (what's that?) with ſhamefacedneſs and ſobriety; not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or coſtly array,

1 Tim. ii. 9, 10.

[then it ſeems theſe are immodeſt] but, which becometh women profeſſing godlineſs, with good works:' abſolutely implying, that thoſe who attire themſelves with gold, ſilver, broidered hair, pearls, coſtly array, cannot in ſo doing be women profeſſing godlineſs; making thoſe very things to be contrary to modeſty and what is good; and conſequently that they are evil, and unbecoming 'women profeſſing godlineſs.' To which the apoſtle Peter joins another precept after the like ſort, viz. 'Whoſe adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plating the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on apparel: (what then?) but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet ſpirit, which is in the ſight of God of great price.' And as an inducement he adds, 'for after this manner in the old time, the holy * women, who ſo truſted in God, adorned themſelves.' Which doth not only intimate, that both holy women were ſo adorned, and that it behoves ſuch as would be holy, and truſt in the holy God, to be ſo adorned; but alſo, that they who uſed thoſe forbidden ornaments, were the women and people in all ages, that (for all their talk) were not holy, nor did truſt in God.' Such are ſo far from truſting in God, that the apoſtle Paul expreſsly ſays, that 'ſhe that liveth in pleaſure is dead (to God) whilſt ſhe liveth:' and the ſame apoſtle farther enjoined, 'that Chriſtians ſhould have their converſation in heaven, and their minds fixed on things above: walk honeſtly as in the day, not in rioting and drunkenneſs, not in chambering and wantonneſs, not in envy and ſtrife: let not fornication, uncleanneſs, or covetouſneſs, be once named amongſt you; neither filthineſs, nor fooliſh talking or jeſting, which are not convenient; but rather giving of thanks: and let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good, to the uſe of edifying, that it may miniſter grace unto the hearers. But put ye on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and make no proviſion for the fleſh, to fulfil the deſires thereof. And grieve not the Holy Spirit; (intimating ſuch converſation doth) but be ye followers of God, as dear children: walk circumſpectly, not as fools, but as wiſe; redeeming the time, becauſe the days are evil.'

* Note, not a word of men, as if this vanity belonged not to the ſex; let them obſerve that.

1 Tim. v. 6.
Phi. iii. 20.
Col. iii. 1, 2, 3, 4.
Rom. xiii. 13, 14.
Eph. v. 2, 3.
ch. iv. 29.
Rom. xiii. 14.
Eph. iv. 30.
ch. v. 1, 15, 16.

§. IV. By this meaſure yourſelves, O inhabitants of this land, who think yourſelves wronged, if not accounted Chriſtians: ſee what proportion your life and ſpirit bears with theſe moſt holy and ſelf-denying precepts and examples. Well, my friends, my ſoul mourns for you: I have been with and among you: your life and paſtime are not ſtrangers to my notice; and with compaſſion, yea, inexpreſſible pity, I bewail your folly. O that you would be wiſe! O that the juſt principle in yourſelves were heard! O that eternity had time to plead a little with you! Why ſhould your beds, your glaſſes, your clothes, your tables, your loves, your plays, your parks, your treats, your recreations (poor periſhing joys) have all your ſouls, your time, your care, your purſe and conſideration? be ye admoniſhed, I beſeech you, in the name of the living God, by one that, ſome of you know, hath had his ſhare in theſe things, and conſequently time to know how little the like vanities conduce to true and ſolid happineſs. No, my friends, God Almighty knows (and would to God, you would believe and follow me) they end in ſhame and ſorrow. Faithful is that moſt Holy One, who hath determined, that every man and woman ſhall reap what they ſow: and will not trouble, anguiſh and diſappointment, be a ſad and dreadful harveſt for you to reap, for all your miſ-ſpent time and ſubſtance about ſuperfluities and vain recreations? Retire then; quench not the Holy Spirit in yourſelves; redeem your precious abuſed time; frequent ſuch converſation as may help you againſt your evil inclinations; ſo ſhall you follow the examples, and keep the precepts of Jeſus Chriſt, and all his followers. For hitherto we have plainly demonſtrated, that no ſuch way of living, as is in requeſt among you of the land, ever was, or can be truly chriſtian.

§. V. But the beſt recreation is to do good: and all chriſtian cuſtoms tend to temperance, and ſome good and beneficial end; which more or leſs may be in every action. For inſtance: if men and women would be diligent to follow their reſpective callings, frequent the aſſemblies of religious people, viſit ſober neighbours to be edified, and wicked ones to reform them; be careful in the tuition of their children, exemplary to their ſervants, relieve the neceſſitous, ſee the ſick, viſit the impriſoned, adminiſter to their infirmities and indiſpoſitions, endeavour peace amongſt neighbours: alſo ſtudy moderately ſuch commendable and profitable arts as navigation, arithmetic, geometry, huſbandry, gardening, handicraft, medicine, &c. And, that women ſpin, ſow, knit, weave, garden, preſerve, and the like houſewifely and honeſt employments (the practice of the greateſt and nobleſt matrons and youth, among the very Heathens) helping others, who for want are unable to keep ſervants, to eaſe them in their neceſſary affairs: often and private retirements from all worldly objects, to enjoy the Lord; ſecret and ſteady meditations on the divine life and heavenly inheritance: which to leave undone, and proſecute other things, under the notion of recreations, is accurſed luſt and damnable impiety. It is moſt vain in any to object, that they cannot do theſe always, and therefore, why may not they uſe theſe common diverſions? For I aſk, what would ſuch be at? what would they do? and what would they have? They that have trades, have not

1 Pet. i. 15.
Heb. x. 25.
1 Pet. iv. 9. 10, 11.
Mat. xxv. 36, 37.
Phi. ii. 4.
ch. iv. 8.
Gen. v. 24.
Pſal. i. 2. lxiii. 6. cxix. 15. cxliii. 5.

time enough to do the half of what hath been recommended. And as for thoſe who have nothing to do, and indeed do nothing, which is worſe, but ſin, which is worſt of all, here is variety of pleaſant, of profitable, nay, of very honourable employments and diverſions for them. Such can with great delight ſit at a play, a ball, a maſque, at cards, Amos vi. 3, to 8. dice, &c. drinking, revelling, feaſting, and the like, an entire day; yea, turn night into day, and invert the very order of the creation, to humour their luſts. And were it not for eating and ſleeping, it would be paſt a doubt, whether they would ever find time to ceaſe from thoſe vain and ſinful paſtimes, till the haſty calls of death ſhould ſummon their appearance in another world. Yet do they think it intolerable, and hardly poſſible for any to ſit ſo long at a profitable or religious exerciſe.

§. VI. But how do theſe think to paſs their vaſt eternity away? 'for as the tree falls Ecc. xi. 3. 'ſo it lies.' Let none deceive themſelves, nor mock their immortal ſouls, with a pleaſant, but moſt falſe and pernicious dream, that they ſhall be changed by a conſtraining and irreſiſtible power, juſt when their ſouls take leave of their bodies: no, no, my Gal. vi. 4, to 9. friends, 'what you ſow, that ſhall you reap:' if vanity, folly, viſible delights, fading Eph. v. 6. pleaſures; no better ſhall you ever reap than corruption, ſorrow, and the woful anguiſh of eternal diſappointments. But alas! what is the reaſon that the cry is ſo common, Muſt we always doat on theſe things? why, moſt certainly it is this, they know not Ph. iv. 6, 7. what is the joy and peace of ſpeaking and acting as in the preſence of the moſt holy Eph. iv. 18, 19, 20. God: that paſſes ſuch vain underſtandings, darkened with the glories and pleaſures of the god of this world; whoſe religion is ſo many mumbled and ignorantly devout-ſaid Mat. xiii. 8, 9. words, as they teach parrots; for if they were of thoſe whoſe hearts are ſet on things Rom. x. 2. above, and whoſe treaſure is in heaven, there would their minds inhabit, and their greateſt pleaſure conſtantly be: and ſuch who call that a burden, and ſeek to be refreſhed by ſuch paſtimes, as a play, a morrice-dance, a punchanello, a ball, a maſque, cards, dice, or the like, I am bold to affirm, they not only never knew the divine excellency of God, and his truth, but thereby declare themſelves moſt unfit for them in another world. For how is it poſſible that they can be delighted to eternity, with that ſatisfaction which is ſo tedious and irkſome for thirty or forty years; that for a ſupply of recreation to their minds, the little toys and fopperies of this periſhing world muſt be brought into practice and requeſt? Surely, thoſe who are to reckon for every idle word, muſt not uſe ſports to Mat. xii. 18. paſs away that time, which they are commanded ſo diligently to redeem; conſidering no leſs work is to be done, than making their 'calling and election ſure:' much leſs ſtudy Eph. v. i. to invent recreations for their vain minds, and ſpend the greateſt part of their days and Ph. iii. 14. months, and years therein, not allowing a quarter of that time toward the great concern- 2 Pet. ii. 10. ment of their lives and ſouls, for which that time was given them. Col. iv. 5.

§. VII. There is but little need to drive away that, by fooliſh divertiſements, which flies away ſo ſwiftly of itſelf; and when once gone, is never to be recalled. Plays, parks, balls, treats, romances, muſics, love-ſonnets, and the like, will be a very invalid plea for any other purpoſe than their condemnation, who are taken and delighted with them, at the revelation of the righteous judgment of God. O my friends! theſe were never invented, but by that mind which had firſt loſt the joy and raviſhing delights of 1 Tim. iv. 5, to 11. God's holy preſence. So that we conclude, firſt, that of thoſe many excellent employments already mentioned, as worthy to poſſeſs ſuch minds as are inclined to theſe vanities, there is ſtore enough of time, not only to take up their ſpare hours, but double ſo much, and that with great delight, diverſion and profit, both to themſelves and others; were they but once weaned from vain and fruitleſs fopperies, and did they but conſider, how great the ſatisfaction, and how certain the rewards are, which attend this, and the other life, for ſuch univerſal benefits and virtuous examples. The ſecond concluſion is, that what is alledged by me can be diſpleaſing and ungrateful to none, but ſuch as know not what it is to walk with God, to prepare for an eternal manſion, to have the mind exerciſed on heavenly and good things, to follow the examples of the holy men and women of former happy ages: ſuch as know not Chriſt's doctrine, life, death, and reſurrection, but only have their minds faſtened to the fleſh, and by the objects of it are allured, deceived, and miſerably ruined: and laſtly, that deſpiſe heaven, and the joys that are not ſeen, though eternal, for a few periſhing trifles that they do ſee, though they are decreed to paſs away. How theſe are baptized with Chriſt, into his holy life, cruel Rom. vi. 3, to 8. ſufferings, ſhameful death, and raiſed with him to immortal deſires, heavenly meditations, a divine new life, growing into the knowledge of heavenly myſteries, and all 1 Cor. xii. 13. Gal. iii. 27. holineſs, even unto the meaſure of the ſtature of Jeſus Chriſt, the great example of all; Col. ii. 12, 13. how (I ſay) theſe reſemble moſt neceſſary chriſtian qualifications, and what ſhare they Eph. iii. 12, 13. have therein, let their conſciences tell them upon a ſerious inquiry in the cool of the day.

§. VIII. But, in the next place, ſuch attire and paſtimes do not only ſhew the exceeding worldlineſs of people's inclinations, and their very great ignorance of the divine joys, but by imitating theſe faſhions, and frequenting theſe places and diverſions, not only much good is omitted, but a certain door is opened to much evil to be committed. As firſt, precious time, that were worth a world on a dying bed, is loſt: money, that might be employed for ſome general good, vainly expended: pleaſure is taken in meer ſhame; luſts are gratified, the minds of people alienated from heavenly things, and exerciſed about meer folly: pride taken in clothes, firſt given to cover nakedneſs, whereby the creature is neglected, and the noble creation of God diſregarded, and men become acceptable by their trims and the alamodeneſs of their dreſs and apparel: from whence reſpect to perſons doth ſo naturally ariſe, that for any to deny it, is to affirm the ſun ſhines not at noon-day: nothing being more notorious, than the cringing, ſcraping, ſirring, and madaming of perſons, according to the gaudineſs of their attire, which is detestable to God, and ſo abſolutely forbidden in the ſcriptures, that to do it, is to break the James ii. 1, to 9. whole law, and conſequently to incur the puniſhment thereof. Next, what great holes do the like practices make in mens eſtates? how are their vocations neglected? young women deluded? the marriage-bed invaded? contentions and family-animoſities begotten? partings of man and wife? diſ-inheriting of children? diſmiſſing of ſervants? On the other hand, ſervants made ſlaves, children diſregarded, wives deſpiſed and ſhamefully abuſed, through the intemperance of their huſbands; which either puts them upon the ſame extravagance, or, laying ſuch cruel injuſtice to heart, they pine away their days in grief and miſery. But of all theſe wretched inventions, the play-houſes, like ſo many helliſh ſeminaries, do moſt perniciouſly conduce to theſe ſad and miſerable ends; where little beſides frothy, wanton, if not directly obſcene and prophane humours, are repreſented; which are of notorious ill conſequence upon the minds of moſt, eſpecially the youth that frequent them. And thus it is that idle and debauched ſtagers are encouraged and maintained; than which ſcarcely a greater abomination can be thought on of that rank of impieties, as will anon particularly be ſhown; and truly, nothing but the exceſſive pleaſure people take therein could blind their eyes from ſeeing it.

§. IX. But laſtly, the grand indiſpoſition of mind in people to ſolid, ſerious and heavenly meditations, by the almoſt continual as well as pleaſant rumination in their minds, Job. xxxv. 13. of thoſe various adventures they have been entertained with, which in the more youthful can never miſs to inflame and animate their boiling and airy conſtitutions. And in the reſt of the common recreations of balls, maſques, treats, cards, dice, &c. there are the like opportunities to promote the like evils. And yet farther; how many quarrels, animoſities, nay murders too, as well as expence of eſtate and precious time, have been the immediate conſequences of the like practices? In ſhort, theſe were the ways of Eph. iv. 17, to 25. the Gentiles that knew not God, but never the practice of them that feared him: nay, the more noble among the Heathens themſelves, namely, Anaxagoras, Socrates, Plato, Antiſthenes, Heraclitus, Zeno, Ariſtides, Cato, Tully, Epictetus, Seneca, &c. have left their diſguſt to theſe things upon record, as odious and deſtructive, not only of the honour of the immortal God, but of all good order and government, as leading into looſeneſs, idleneſs, ignorance and effeminacy, the great cankers and bane of all ſtates and empires. But ſuch is the latitudinarian impudence of this age, that they canonize themſelves for ſaints, if not guilty of every New-gate filth, and kennel impiety. And the pretended innocency of theſe things ſteals away their minds from that which is better, into the love of them: nay, it gives them confidence to plead for them, and by no means will they think the contrary: but why? becauſe it is a liberty that feeds the fleſh, and gratifies the luſtful eye and palate of poor mortality: wherefore they think it a laudable condition to be no better than the beaſt that eats and drinks but what his nature doth require, although the number is very ſmall of ſuch. So very exorbitant are men and women grown in this preſent age; for either they do believe their actions are to be ruled by their own will; or elſe, at beſt, that not to be ſtained with the vileſt wickedneſs is matter of great boaſting: and indeed it is ſo, in a time when nothing is too wicked to be done. But certainly, it is a ſign of univerſal impiety, in a land, when not to be guilty of ſins, the very Heathens loathe, is to be virtuous, yes, and Chriſtian too, and that to no ſmall degree of reputation: a diſmal ſymptom to a country! But is it not to be greatly blinded, that thoſe we call infidels ſhould deteſt thoſe practices as infamous, which people, that call themſelves Chriſtians, cannot or will not ſee to be ſuch, but gild them over with the fair titles of ornaments, decency, recreation, and the like; well, my friends, if there were no God, no heaven, no hell, no holy examples, no Jeſus Chriſt, in croſs, doctrine and life to be conformed unto; yet would charity to the poor, help Phil iv. 6, 7, 8, 9. to the needy, peace among neighbours, viſits to the ſick, care of the widow and fatherleſs, Job. xxiv. 12. with the reſt of thoſe temporal good offices already repeated, be a nobler employment, and much more worthy of your expence and pains. Nor indeed is it to be con- Prov. xviii. 14. ceived, that the way to glory is ſmoothed with ſuch variety of carnal pleaſures; for then Pſ. li. 17. conviction, a wounded ſpirit, a broken heart, a regenerate mind; in a word, immor- Mat. v. 4. Luke vi. 25. tality, would prove as meer fictions as ſome make them, and others therefore think them: Rom. ii. 7. no, theſe practices are for ever to be extinguiſhed, and expelled all chriſtian ſociety. For Pſal. xl. 8. Prov. xiii. 21. I affirm, that to one who internally knows God, and hath a ſenſe of his bleſſed preſence, Rom. vii. 22. all ſuch recreations are death; yea, more dangerouſly evil, and more apt to ſteal away Heb. xi. 13, 14, 15, 16. the mind from the heavenly exerciſe, than groſſer impieties. For they are ſo big, they are plainly ſeen; ſo dirty, they are eaſily detected: which education and common temperance, as well as conſtitution in many, teach them to abhor; and if they ſhould be committed, they carry with them a proportionable conviction. But theſe pretended innocents, theſe ſuppoſed harmleſs ſatisfactions, are more ſurprizing, more deſtructive; for as they eaſily gain an admiſſion by the ſenſes, ſo the more they pretend to innocency, the more they ſecure the minds of people in the common uſe of them; till they become ſo inſenſible of their evil conſequences, that with a mighty confidence they can plead for them.

Rom. i. 25, to 39.
Job i. 4.

§. X. But as this is plainly not to deny themſelves, but, on the contrary, to employ the vain inventions of carnal men and women to gratify the deſire of the eye, the deſire of the fleſh, and the pride of life; all which exerciſe the mind below the divine and only true pleaſure, or elſe, tell me what does: ſo, be it known to ſuch, that the heavenly life and chriſtian joys are of another kind, as hath already been expreſſed: nay, that the true diſciples of the Lord Chriſt muſt be hereunto crucified, as to objects and employments that attract downwards, and that their affections ſhould be raiſed to a more ſublime and ſpiritual converſation, as to uſe this world, even in its moſt innocent enjoyments, as if they uſed it not. But if they take pleaſure in any thing below, it ſhould be in ſuch good offices as before-mentioned; whereby a benefit may redound in ſome reſpect to others: in which God is honoured over all viſible things, the nation relieved, the government bettered, themſelves rendered exemplary of good, and thereby juſtly intituled to preſent happineſs, a ſweet memorial with poſterity, as well as to a ſeat at his right hand, where there are joys and pleaſures for ever: than which, there can be nothing more honourable, nothing more certain, world without end.

1 John ii. 15, 16, 17.
Job xxxvi. 7.
Pſal. v. 12.
Pſal. xxxvii. 25, 29.
Prov. x. 7.

CHAP. XVI.

§. 1. Luxury ſhould not be uſed by chriſtians, becauſe of its inconſiſtency with the ſpirit of Chriſtianity. §. 2. The cup of which Chriſt's true diſciples drank. §. 3. O! who will drink of this cup? §. 4. An objection anſwered of the nature of God's kingdom, and what it ſtands in. §. 5. Of the frame of the ſpirit of Chriſt's followers.

§. I. BUT the luxury oppoſed in this diſcourſe, ſhould not be allowed among Chriſtians, becauſe both that which invents it, delights in it, and pleads ſo ſtrongly for it, is inconſiſtent with the true ſpirit of Chriſtianity; nor doth the very nature of the chriſtian religion admit thereof. For therefore was it, that immortality and eternal life were brought to light, that all the invented pleaſures of mortal life, in which the world lives, might be denied and relinquiſhed; and for this reaſon it is, that nothing leſs than immenſe rewards and eternal manſions are promiſed, that men and women might therefore be encouraged willingly to forſake the vanity and fleſhly ſatisfactions of the world, and encounter with boldneſs the ſhame and ſufferings they muſt expect to receive at the hand of, it may be, their neareſt intimates and relations.

Chap. XVI.
Luke xvi. 15.
John xv. 17, 18, 19.
ch. xvi. 20.
ch. xvii. 15, 16, 17.
Heb. xi. 24, 25, 26, 27.
Rom. viii. 19.
2 Tim. iii. 11, 12.
Heb. xii. 1. 2.

For if the chriſtian religion had admitted the poſſeſſion of this world in any other ſenſe, than the ſimple and naked uſe of thoſe creatures really given of God for the neceſſity and convenience of the whole creation: for inſtance, did it allow all that pride, vanity, curioſity, pomp, exchange of apparel, honours, preferments, faſhions, and the cuſtomary recreations of the world, with whatever may delight and gratify their ſenſes; then what need of a daily croſs, a ſelf-denying life, 'working out ſalvation with fear and 'trembling,' ſeeking the things that are above, having the treaſure and heart in heaven, no idle talking, no vain jeſting, but fearing and meditating all the day long, undergoing all reproach, ſcorn, hard uſage, bitter mockings and cruel deaths? What need theſe things? and why ſhould they be expected in order to that glorious immortality and eternal crown, if the vanity, pride, expence, idleneſs, concupiſcence, envy, malice, and whole manner of living among the (called) Chriſtians, were allowed by the chriſtian religion? no certainly; but as the Lord Jeſus Chriſt well knew in what fooliſh trifles and vain pleaſures, as well as groſſer impieties, the minds of men and women were fixed, and how much they were degenerated from the heavenly principle of life, into a luſtful or unlawful ſeeking after the enjoyments of this periſhing world, nay, inventing daily new ſatisfactions to gratify their carnal appetites, ſo did he not leſs foreſee the difficulty that all would have to relinquiſh and forſake them at his call, and with what great unwillingneſs they would take their leave of them, and be weaned from them. Wherefore to induce them to it, he did not ſpeak unto them in the language of the law, that they ſhould have an earthly Canaan, great dignities, a numerous iſſue, a long life, and the like: no, rather the contrary, at leaſt to take theſe things in their courſe; but he ſpeaks to them in a higher ſtrain, namely, * he aſſures them of a kingdom and a crown that are immortal, that neither time, cruelty, death, grave or hell, with all its inſtruments, ſhall ever be able to diſappoint, or take away, from thoſe who ſhould believe and obey him. Farther, that they ſhould be taken into that near alliance of loving friends, yea, the intimate divine relation of dear brethren, and co-heirs with him of all celeſtial happineſs, and a glorious immortality. Wherefore if it be recorded, that thoſe who heard not Moſes,

Mat. xvi. 24.
Luke ix. 23.
Phil. ii. 12.
Col. iii. 1, 2.
Eph. v. 4, 5.
Neh. xiii.
Pſal. cxii. 1.
Iſa. xxviii. 14.
Pſal. cxix. 97.
Luke xviii. 23.
Heb. xi. 96.
Heb. x. 33.
ch. xi. 37, 38.
* Luke vi. 20.
ch. xii. 32.
ch. xxii. 29.
Col. i. 13.
1 Theſſ. ii. 12.
Heb. xii. 28.
Jam. ii. 5.
John xv. 14, 15.
Rom. viii. 17.
Heb. ii. 11.
ch. xii. 2.
1 Pet. ii. 21.
Luke xii. 29, to 31.
2 Tim. v. 6.
Mat. xix. 27, 28, 29.

Moſes were to die, much more they who refuſe to hear and obey the precepts of this Great and Eternal Rewarder of all that diligently ſeek and follow him.

Luke vi. 22.
John xv. 10.
Mat. x. 37, 38.
Luke xii. 32, 33, 34, 35, 36.
Mat. xvi. 19, 20, 31, 32, 33.
1 Tim. vi. 6, to 11.
Mat. viii. 31, to 39.

§. II. And therefore it was that he was pleaſed to give us, in his own example, a taſte of what his diſciples muſt expect to drink deeply of, namely, the cup of ſelf-denial, cruel trials, and moſt bitter afflictions: he came not to conſecrate a way to the eternal reſt through gold and ſilver, ribbons, laces, points, perfumes, coſtly clothes, curious trims, exact dreſſes, rich jewels, pleaſant recreations, plays, treats, balls, maſques, revels, romances, love-ſongs, and the like paſtimes of the world: no, no, alas! but by forſaking all ſuch kind of entertainments, yea, and ſometimes more lawful enjoyments too; and chearfully undergoing the loſs of all on the one hand, and the reproach, ignominy, and the moſt cruel perſecution from ungodly men on the other. He needed never to have wanted ſuch variety of worldly pleaſures, had they been ſuitable to the nature of his kingdom: for he was tempted, as are his followers, with no leſs bait than all the glories of the world: but he that commanded to ‘ ſeek another country, and to ‘ lay up treaſures in the heavens that fade not away,’ and therefore charged them, never to be much inquiſitive about what they ſhould eat, drink, or put on, becauſe (ſaith he) ‘ after theſe things the Gentiles, that knew not God, do ſeek;’ (and Chriſtians that pretend to know him too) ‘ but, having food and raiment, therewith be content:’ he, I ſay, that enjoined this doctrine, and led that holy and heavenly example, even the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, bad them, that would be his diſciples, ‘ take up the ſame croſs, and follow him.’

Heb. ii. 10.
Mat. xx. 22, 23.

§. III. O who will follow him? Who will be true Chriſtians? we muſt not think to ſteer another courſe, nor to drink of another cup than hath the Captain of our ſalvation done before us: no; for it is the very queſtion he aſked James and John, the ſons of Zebedee of old, when they deſired to ſit at his right and left hand in his kingdom, ‘ Are ‘ ye able to drink of the cup that I ſhall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptiſm ‘ that I am baptized withal?’ otherwiſe no diſciples, no Chriſtians. Whoever they are that would come to Chriſt, and be right Chriſtians, muſt readily abandon every delight that would ſteal away the affections of the mind, and exerciſe it from the divine principle of life, and freely write a bill of divorce for every beloved vanity; and all, under the Sun of righteouſneſs, is ſo, compared with him.

Objection 1.
Rom. vi. 3, 4, 5, 6.
Phi. iii. 10.
1 Pet. iv. 13.
Tit. ii. 11, 12, 13.
John i. 9.
Rom. vi. 6.
Gal. ii. 20.
ch. v. 24.
ch, vi. 4.
2 Tim. i. 10.
Gal. v. 11.
1 Cor. i. 17, 18.
ver. 27, 28, 29.
Heb. iv. 1, to 12.
2 Cor. iv. 1, 7, 8.

§. IV. But ſome are ready to object, (who will not ſeem to want ſcripture for their luſts, although it be evidently miſapplied) ‘ The kingdom of God ſtands not in meats, ‘ or in drinks, or in apparel,’ &c. Anſw. Right; therefore it is that we ſtand out of them. But ſurely, you have the leaſt reaſon of any to object this to us, who make thoſe things ſo neceſſary to converſation, as our not conforming to them renders us obnoxious to your reproach; which how Chriſtian, or reſembling it is of the righteouſneſs, peace and joy in which the heavenly kingdom ſtands, let the juſt principle in your own conſciences determine. Our converſation ſtands in temperance, and that ſtands in righteouſneſs, by which we have obtained that kingdom your latitude and exceſs have no ſhare or intereſt in. If none therefore can be true diſciples, but they that come to bear the daily croſs, and that none bear the croſs, but thoſe who follow the example of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, through his baptiſm, and afflictions and temptations; and that none are ſo baptized with him, but thoſe whoſe minds are retired from the vanities in which the generality of the world live, and become obedient to the holy light and divine grace, with which they have been enlightened from on high, and thereby are daily exerciſed to the crucifying of every contrary affection, and bringing of immortality to light; if none are true diſciples but ſuch, (as moſt undoubtedly they are not) then let the people of theſe days a little ſoberly reflect upon themſelves, and they will conclude, that none who live and delight in theſe vain cuſtoms, and this un-chriſt-like converſation, can be true Chriſtians, or diſciples of the crucified Jeſus: for otherwiſe, how would it be a croſs? or the chriſtian life matter of difficulty and reproach? No, the offence of the croſs would ſoon ceaſe, which is the power of God to them that believe; that every luſt and vanity may be ſubdued, and the creature brought into an holy ſubjection of mind to the heavenly will of its Creator. For therefore has it been ſaid, that Jeſus Chriſt was and is manifeſted, that by his holy, ſelf-denying life and doctrine, he might put a baffle upon the proud minds of men, and by the immortality he brought, and daily brings to light, he might ſtain the glory of their fading reſts and pleaſures; that having their minds weaned from them, and being crucified thereunto, they might ſeek another country, and obtain an everlaſting inheritance: ‘ for the things that are ſeen are temporal’ (and thoſe they were, and all true Chriſtians are, to be redeemed from reſting in) but the things that are ‘ not ſeen, are eternal;’ thoſe they were, and all are to be, brought to, and have their affections chiefly fixed upon.

1 Tim. vi. 8.

§. V. Wherefore a true diſciple of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt is to have his mind ſo converſant about heavenly things, that the things of this world may be uſed as if they were not: that having ſuch things as are ‘ neceſſary and convenient, he be therewith ‘ content,’ without the ſuperfluity of the world, whereby the pleaſure, that in times of ignorance was taken in the cuſtoms and faſhions of the world, may more abundantly be ſupplied in the hidden and heavenly life of Jeſus: for unleſs there be an abiding in Chriſt, it will be impoſſible to bring forth that much fruit which he requires at the hands of his followers, and wherein his Father is glorified. But as it is clear, that ſuch as live in the vanities, pleaſures, recreations, and luſts of the world, abide not in him, neither know him, (for they that know him, depart from iniquity) ſo is their abiding and delighting in thoſe bewitching follies, the very reaſon why they are ſo ignorant and inſenſible of him: ‘Him who continually ſtands knocking at the door of their hearts,’ in whom they ought to abide, and whoſe divine power they ſhould know to be the croſs on which every beloved luſt and alluring vanity ſhould be ſlain and crucified; that ſo they might feel the heavenly life to ſpring up in their hearts, and themſelves to be quickened to ſeek the things that are above; ‘that when Chriſt ſhall appear, they might appear ‘with him in glory, who is over all, God bleſſed for ever. Amen.’

1668.
Chap. XVI.
Rom. v. 6, 7, 8.
John xv. 8.
Rev. iii. 20.
Col. iii. 1, 2, 3, 4.
Rom. ix. 5.

CHAP. XVII.

§. The cuſtoms, faſhions, &c. which make up the attire and pleaſure of the age, are enemies to inward retirement. §. 2. Their end is to gratify luſt. §. 3. Had they been ſolid, Adam and Eve had not been happy, that never had them. §. 4. But the confidence and preſumption of Chriſtians (as they would be called) in the uſe of them, is abominable. §. 5. Their authors farther condemn them, who are uſually looſe and vain people. §. 6. Moſtly borrowed of the Gentiles, that knew not God. §. 7. An objection of their uſefulneſs conſidered and anſwered, and the objectors reproved. §. 8. The beſt Heathens abhorring what pretended Chriſtians plead for. §. 9. The uſe of theſe things encourages the authors and makers of them to continue in them. §. 10. The objection of the maintenance of families anſwered. None muſt do evil, that good ſhould follow: but better employs may be found more ſerviceable to the world. §. 11. Another objection anſwered: God no author of their inventions, and ſo not excuſable by his inſtitution. §. 12. People pleading for theſe vanities, ſhew what they are. An exhortation to be weighty and conſiderate. A great part of the way to true diſcipleſhip is, to abandon this ſchool and ſhop of Satan.

§. I. NEXT, thoſe cuſtoms and faſhions, which make up the common attire and converſation of the times, do eminently obſtruct the inward retirement of peoples minds, by which they may come to behold the glories of immortality: who inſtead of ‘fearing their Creator in the days of their youth, and ſeeking the kingdom of ‘God in the firſt place’ (expecting the addition of ſuch other things as may be neceſſary and convenient, according to the injunctions of God, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt) as ſoon as they can do any thing, they look after pride, vanity, and that converſation which is moſt delightful to the fleſh, which becomes their moſt delightful entertainment: all which do but evidently beget luſtful conceptions, and inflame to inordinate thoughts, wanton diſcourſes, laſcivious treats, if not at laſt to wicked actions. To ſuch it is tedious and offenſive to ſpeak of heaven, or another life: bid them reflect upon their actions, not grieve the Holy Spirit, conſider of an eternal doom, prepare for judgment; and the beſt return that is uſual, is reproachful jeſts, prophane repartees, if not direct blows. Their thoughts are otherwiſe employed: their mornings are too ſhort for them to waſh, to ſmooth, to paint, to patch, to braid, to curl, to gum, to powder, and otherwiſe to attire and adorn themſelves; whilſt their afternoons are as commonly beſpoke for viſits, and for plays; where their uſual entertainments are ſome ſtories fetched from the more approved romances; ſome ſtrange adventures, ſome paſſionate amours, unkind refuſals, grand impediments, importunate addreſſes, miſerable diſappointments, wonderful ſurprizes, unexpected encounters, caſtles ſurprized, impriſoned lovers reſcued, and meetings of ſuppoſed dead ones: bloody duels, languiſhing voices ecchoing from ſolitary groves, overheard mournful complaints, deep-fetched ſighs ſent from wild deſerts, intrigues managed with unheard of ſubtlety: and whilſt all things ſeem at the greateſt diſtance, then are people alive, enemies friends, deſpair turned to enjoyment, and all their impoſſibilities reconciled; things that never were, are not, nor ever ſhall or can be, they all come to paſs. And as if men and women were too ſlow to anſwer the looſe ſuggeſtions of corrupt nature; or were too intent on more divine ſpeculations and heavenly affairs, they have all that is poſſible for the moſt extravagant wits to invent, not only expreſs lies, but utter impoſſibilities to very nature, on purpoſe to excite their minds to thoſe idle paſſions, and intoxicate their giddy fancies with ſwelling nothings, but airy fictions; which not only conſume their time, effeminate their natures, debaſe their reaſon, and ſet them on work to reduce theſe things to practice, and make each adventure theirs by imitation; but if diſappointed, as who can otherwiſe expect from ſuch mere phantaſms, the preſent remedy is latitude to the greateſt vice. And yet theſe are ſome of their moſt innocent recreations, which are the very gins of Satan to inſnare people: contrived moſt agreeable to their weakneſs, and in a more inſenſible manner maſtering their affections, by entertainments moſt taking to their ſenſes. In ſuch occaſions it is that their hearts breed vanity, their eyes turn interpreters to their thoughts, and their looks do whiſper the ſecret inflammations of their intemperate minds; wander-

Ch. XVII.
Eccl. xii. 1.
Luke xii. 29, 30, 31.
Eccl. iv. 8.
2 Tim. ii. 16, 21, 22.
Eph. iv. 30.
Jer. xviii. 18, 19, 20.
ch. xx. 10.
Tit. ii. 3, 4, 5.
Eph. v. 3, 4.
1 Tim. iv. 2.
1 Tim. iv. 4.
Pſal. xii. 2.
Eccl. i. 11. 17.
ch. vi. 9.
Iſa. v. 12.
ch. xiv. 29.
ch. lix. 3, 4.
Prov. vii. 10, to 21.

1668.
Ch. XVII.

ing ſo long abroad, till their laſcivious actings bring night home, and load their minds and reputations with luſt and infamy.

1 John ii. 15, 16.

§. II. Here is the end of all their faſhions and recreations, 'to gratify the luſt of the 'eye, the luſt of the fleſh, and the pride of life:' clothes, that were given to cover ſhame, now want a covering for their ſhameful exceſs; and that which ſhould remember men of loſt innocency, they pride and glory in: but the hundredth part of theſe things coſt man the loſs of paradiſe, that now make up the agreeable recreation, ay, the accompliſhment of the times. For as it was Adam's fault to ſeek a ſatisfaction to himſelf, other than what God ordained; ſo it is the exerciſe, pleaſure and perfection of the age, to ſpend the greateſt portion of their time in vanities, which are ſo far from the end of their creation, namely, a divine life, that they are deſtructive of it. Eccl. xii. 1.

§. III. Were the pleaſures of the age true and ſolid, Adam and Eve had been miſerable in their innocency, who knew them not: but as it was once their happineſs, not to know them in any degree, ſo it is theirs, that know Chriſt indeed, to be by his eternal power redeemed and raiſed to the love of immortality: which is yet a myſtery to thoſe who live and have pleaſure in their curious trims, rich and changeable apparel, nicety of dreſs, invention and imitation of faſhions, coſtly attire, mincing gaits, wanton looks, romances, plays, treats, balls, feaſts, and the like converſation in requeſt: for as theſe had never been, if man had ſtaid at home with his Creator, and given the entire exerciſe of his mind to the noble ends of his creation; ſo certain it is, that the uſe of theſe vanities is not only a ſign that men and women are yet ignorant of their true reſt and pleaſure, but it greatly obſtructs and hinders the retirement of their minds, and their ſerious enquiry after thoſe things that are eternal. O, that there ſhould be ſo much noiſe, clutter, invention, traffick, curioſity, diligence, pains and vaſt expence of time and eſtate, to pleaſe and gratify poor vain mortality! and that the ſoul, the very image of Divinity itſelf, ſhould have ſo little of their conſideration! What, O what more pregnant inſtances and evident tokens can be given, that it is the body, the ſenſes, the caſe, a little fleſh and bone covered with ſkin, the toys, fopperies, and very vanities of this mortal life and periſhing world, that pleaſe, that take, that gain them; on which they dote; and think they never have too much time, love or money, to beſtow upon them.

Eph. ii. 1 to 5.
Col. ii. 13.
1 Pet. i. 14, 15,16,17,18.
Tit. ii. 11,12.
Jam. v. 5.
Mat. vii. 17, 18, 19.
Rom. viii. 8.
Mat. xvi. 26.
1 Cor. vi. 13.
Job xxxv. 15.
Iſa. xl. 6.
1 Pet. i. 24.

§. IV. Thus are their minds employed, and ſo vain are they in their imaginations, and dark in their underſtandings, that they not only believe them innocent, but perſuade themſelves they are good Chriſtians all this while; and to rebuke them is worſe than hereſy. Thus are they ſtrangers to the hidden life; and by theſe things are they diverted from all ſerious examination of themſelves; and a little by-rote-babble, with a forced zeal, of half an hour's talk, in other mens words, which they have nothing to do with, is made ſufficient; being no more their ſtates, or at leaſt their intention, as their works ſhew, than it was the young man's in the goſpel, that ſaid, 'he would go, and did not.' But alas! why? Oh, there are other gueſts! What are they? Pharamond, Cleopatra, Caſſandra, Clelia; a play, a ball, a ſpring-garden; the park, the gallant, the exchange, in a word, the World. Theſe ſtay, theſe call, theſe are importunate, and theſe they attend, and theſe are their moſt familiar aſſociates. Thus are their hearts captivated from the divine exerciſe; nay, from ſuch external affairs as immediately concern ſome benefit to themſelves, or needy neighbours; pleaſing themſelves with the received ideas of thoſe toys and fopperies into their looſe and airy minds: and if in all things they cannot practiſe them, becauſe they want the means of it, yet, as much as may be, at leaſt to dote upon them, be taken with them, and willingly ſuffer their thoughts to be hurried after them. All which greatly indiſpoſes the minds, and diſtracts the ſouls of people from the divine life and principle of the holy Jeſus: but, as it hath been often ſaid, more eſpecially the minds of the younger ſort, to whom the like divertiſements (where their inclinations being preſented with what is very ſuitable to them, they become excited to more vanity, than ever they thought upon before) are incomparably dearer than all that can be ſaid of God's fear, a retired life, eternal rewards, and joys unſpeakable and full of glory: ſo vain, ſo blind, and ſo very inſenſible are men and women, of what truly makes a diſciple of Chriſt! O! that they would ponder on theſe things, and watch againſt, and out of all theſe vanities, for the coming of the Lord, leſt being unprepared, and taken up with other gueſts, they enter not into his everlaſting reſt.

Luke viii. 14.
Pro. i. 25, 30.
ch. x. 17.
ch. xii. 1.
ch. xv. 15.
Iſa. lviii. 1, 2, to 10.
Jer. xvi. 19, 20, 21.
2 Tim. iii. 4.
Mat. vi. 7.
Iſa. lix. 4.
Jer. ii. 5.
Eccl. xi. 10.
Rom. xiii. 11, 12.
Mat. xv. 7, to 14.

§. V. That which farther manifeſts the unlawfulneſs of theſe numerous faſhions and recreations is, that they are either the inventions of vain, idle, and wanton minds, to gratify their own ſenſualities, and raiſe the like wicked curioſity in others to imitate the ſame; by which nothing but luſt and folly are promoted: or the contrivances of indigent and impoveriſhed wits, who make it the next way for their maintenance: in both which reſpects, and upon both which conſiderations, they ought to be deteſted. For the firſt licenſes expreſs impiety; and the latter countenances a wretched way of livelihood, and conſequently diverts from more lawful, more ſerviceable, and more neceſſary employments. That ſuch perſons are both the inventors and actors of all theſe follies, cannot be difficult to demonſtrate: for were it poſſible, that any one could bring us father

Adam's girdle, and mother Eve's apron, what laughing, what fleering, what mocking of their homely faſhion would there be? ſurely their taylor would find but little cuſtom, although we read, it was God himſelf 'that made them coats of ſkins.' The like may be aſked of all the other vanities, concerning the holy men and women through all the generations of holy writ. How many pieces of ribband, and what feathers, lace-bands, and the like, did Adam and Eve wear in paradiſe, or out of it? What rich embroideries, ſilks, points, &c. had Abel, Enoch, Noah, and good old Abraham? Did Eve, Sarah, Suſannah, Elizabeth, and the virgin Mary uſe to curl, powder, patch, paint, wear falſe locks of ſtrange colours, rich points, trimmings, laced gowns, embroidered petticoats, ſhoes with ſlip-ſlaps laced with ſilk or ſilver lace, and ruffled like pigeons feet, with ſeveral yards, if not pieces of ribbands? How many plays did Jeſus Chriſt and his apoſtles recreate themſelves at? What poets, romances, comedies, and the like, did the apoſtles and ſaints make, or uſe to paſs away their time withal? I know they bid all 'redeem their time, to avoid fooliſh talking, vain jeſting, prophane babblings and fabulous ſtories; as what tend to ungodlineſs: and rather to watch, to work out their ſalvation with fear and trembling, to flee fooliſh and youthful luſts, and to follow righteouſneſs, peace, goodneſs, love, charity; and to mind the things that are above, as they would have honour, glory, immortality and eternal life.'

Gen. iii. 21.
Eph. v. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. 15, 16.
2 Tim. ii. 16, 22.
Mat. xxv. 13.
Phil. ii. 12, 13.
Col. iii. 1, 2, 3.
Rom. ii. 6, 7.

§. VI. But if I were aſked, Whence came they then? I could quickly anſwer, From the Gentiles, that knew not God; (for ſome amongſt them deteſted them, as will be ſhown) they were the pleaſures of an effeminate Sardanapalus, a fantaſtick Miracles, a comical Ariſtophanes, a prodigal Charaxus, a luxurious Ariſtippus; and the practices of ſuch women as the infamous Clytemneſtra, the painted Jezebel, the laſcivious Campaſpe, the immodeſt Poſthumia, the coſtly Corinthian Lais, the moſt impudent Flora, the wanton Ægyptian Cleopatra, and moſt inſatiable Meſſalina: perſons whoſe memories have ſtunk through all ages, and that carry with them a perpetual rot: theſe, and not the holy ſelf-denying men and women in ancient times, were devoted to the like recreations and vain delights. Nay, the more ſober of the very Heathens themſelves, and that upon a principle of great virtue, as is by all confeſſed, deteſted the like folly and wanton practices. There is none of them to be found in Plato, or in Seneca's works: Pythagoras, Socrates, Phocion, Zeno, &c. did not accuſtom themſelves to theſe entertainments. The virtuous Penelope, the chaſte Lucretia, the grave Cornelia, and modeſt Pontia, with many others, could find themſelves employment enough amongſt their children, ſervants and neighbours: they, though nobles, next their devotion, delighted moſt in ſpinning, weaving, gardening, needle-work, and ſuch like good houſewifery, and commendable entertainment: who, though called Heathens, expreſſed much more Chriſtianity in all their actions, than do the wanton, fooliſh people of this age, who notwithſtanding will be called Chriſtians. But above all, you playmongers, whence think you came your ſo paſſionately beloved comedies? than which, as there is not any one diverſion, that is more pernicious, ſo not one more in eſteem, and fondly frequented: Why I will tell you. Their great-grand-father was an Heathen, and that not of the beſt ſort: his name was Epicharmus. It is true, he is called a philoſopher, or a lover of wiſdom; but he was only ſo by name, and no more one in reality than the comedians of theſe times are true Chriſtians. It is reported of him by Suidas, a Greek hiſtorian, that he was the firſt man who invented comedies; and by the help of one Phormus, he made alſo fifty fables. But would you know his country, and the reaſon of his invention? His country was Syracuſe, the chief city in Sicily, famous for the infamy of many tyrants; to pleaſe and gratify the luſts of ſome of whom, he ſet his wits to work. And do not you think this an ill original? and is it leſs in any one to imitate or juſtify the ſame, ſince the more ſober Heathens have themſelves condemned them? nay, is it not abominable, when ſuch as call themſelves Chriſtians do both imitate and juſtify the like inventions? Nor had the melancholy tragedies a better parentage, namely, one Theſpis, an Athenian poet; to whom they alſo do aſcribe the original of that impudent cuſtom of painting faces, and the counterfeit or reſpreſentation of other perſons by change of habit, humours, &c. all which are now ſo much in uſe and reputation with the great ones of the times. To theſe let me add that poetical amoroſo, whom an inordinate paſſion of love firſt tranſported to thoſe poetical raptures of admiration (indeed ſordid effeminacy, if not idolatry); they call him Alcman, or Alcina, a Lydian: he, being exceedingly in love with a young woman of his own country, is ſaid to have been the firſt perſon that gave the world a ſight of that kind of folly, namely, love-ſtories and verſes; which have been ſo diligently imitated by almoſt all nations ever ſince in their romances.

Object. 2.

§. VII. I know that ſome will ſay, But we have many comedies and tragedies, ſonnets, catches, &c. that are on purpoſe to reprehend vice, from whence we learn many commendable things. Though this be ſhameful, yet many have been wont, for want of ſhame or underſtanding, or both, to return me this for anſwer. Now I readily ſhall confeſs, that it was the next remedy amongſt the Heathens, againſt the common vices, to the more grave and moral lectures of their philoſophers, of which number I ſhall inſtance two: Euripides, whom Suidas calls a learned tragical poet, and Eupolis, whom the ſame hiſtorian calls a comical poet. The firſt was a man ſo chaſte, and therefore ſo unlike thoſe of our days, that he was called Μισογύνης, or one that hated women, that is wanton ones, for otherwiſe he was twice married: the other he characters as a moſt ſevere reprehender of faults. From which I gather, that their deſign was not to feed the idle, lazy fancies of people, nor merely to get money; but ſince by the means of looſe wits, the people had been debauched, their work was to reclaim them, rendering vice ridiculous, and turning wit againſt wickedneſs. And this appears the rather, from the deſcription given, as alſo that Euripides was ſuppoſed to have been torn in pieces by wanton women; which doubtleſs was for declaiming againſt their impudence: and the other being ſlain in the battle betwixt the Athenians and Lacedemonians, was ſo regretted, that a law was made, that never after ſuch poets ſhould be allowed to bear arms: doubtleſs it was becauſe in loſing him, they loſt a reprover of vice. So that the end of the approved comedians and tragedians of thoſe times was but to reform the people, by making ſin odious: and that not ſo much by a rational and argumentative way, uſual with their philoſophers, as by ſharp jeers, ſevere reflections, and rendering their vicious actions ſhameful, ridiculous and deteſtable; ſo that for reputation ſake they might not longer be guilty of them: which to me is but a little ſofter than a whip, or a Bridewell. Now if you that plead for them, will be contented to be accounted Heathens, and thoſe of the more diſſolute and wicked ſort too, that will ſooner be jeered than argued out of your ſins, we ſhall acknowledge to you, that ſuch comedies and tragedies as theſe may be ſerviceable: but then for ſhame, abuſe not the name of Jeſus Chriſt ſo impudently, as to call yourſelves Chriſtians, whoſe luſts are ſo ſtrong, that you are forced to uſe the low ſhifts of Heathens to repel them: to leave their evils not for the love of virtue, but out of fear, ſhame, or reputation. Is this your love to Jeſus? your reverence to the ſcriptures, that through faith are able to make the ‘ man of ‘ God perfect? Is all your prattle about ordinances, prayers, ſacraments, chriſtianity, and the like come to this; that at laſt you muſt betake yourſelves to ſuch inſtructors, as were by the ſober Heathens permitted to reclaim the moſt vicious of the people that were amongſt them? and ſuch remedies too, as below which there is nothing but corporal puniſhment?

§. VIII. This is ſo far from Chriſtianity, that many of the nobler Heathens, men and women, were better taught and better diſpoſed; they found out more heavenly contemplations, and ſubjects of an eternal nature to meditate upon. Nay, ſo far did they outſtrip the Chriſtians of theſe times, that they not only were exemplary by their grave and ſober converſation, but, for the public benefit, the Athenians inſtituted the Gynæcoſmi, or Twenty Men, who ſhould make it their buſineſs to obſerve the peoples apparel and behaviour; that if any were found immodeſt, and to demean themſelves looſely, they had full authority to puniſh them. But the caſe is altered, it is puniſhable to reprove ſuch: yes, it is matter of the greateſt contumely and reproach. Nay, ſo impudent are ſome grown in their impieties, that they ſport themſelves with ſuch religious perſons; and not only manifeſt a great neglect of piety, and a ſevere life, by their own looſeneſs, but their extreme contempt of it, by rendering it ridiculous through comical and abuſive jeſts on public ſtages. Which, how dangerous it is, and apt to make religion little worth in the peoples eyes, beſide the demonſtration of this age, let us remember, that Ariſtophanes had not a readier way to bring the reputation of Socrates in queſtion with the people, who greatly reverenced him for his grave and virtuous life and doctrine, than by his abuſive repreſentations of him in a play: which made the airy, wanton, unſtable croud rather part with Socrates in earneſt, than Socrates in jeſt. Nor can a better reaſon be given, why the poor Quakers are made ſo much the ſcorn of men, than becauſe of their ſevere reprehenſions of ſin and vanity, and their ſelf-denying converſation amidſt ſo great intemperance in all worldly ſatisfactions: yet can ſuch libertines all this while ſtrut and ſwell for Chriſtians, and ſtout it out againſt precept and example; but we muſt be whimſical, conceited, moroſe, melancholy, or elſe hereticks, deceivers, and what not? O blindneſs! phariſaical hypocriſy! as if ſuch were fit to be judges of religion, or that it were poſſible for them to have a ſight and ſenſe of true religion, or really to be religious, whilſt darkened in their underſtandings by the god of the pleaſures of this world, and their minds ſo wrapped up in external enjoyments, and the variety of worldly delights: no; in the name of the everlaſting God, you mock him, and deceive your ſouls; for the wrath of the Almighty is againſt you all, whilſt in that ſpirit and condition: in vain are all your babbles and ſet performances, God laughs you to ſcorn; his anger is kindling becauſe of theſe things. Wherefore be ye warned to temperance, and repent.

§. IX. Beſides, this ſort of people are not only wicked, looſe and vain, who both invent and act theſe things; but by your great delight in ſuch vain inventions, you encourage them therein, and hinder them from more honeſt and more ſerviceable employments. For what is the reaſon that moſt commodities are held at ſuch exceſſive rates, but becauſe labour is ſo very dear? And why is it ſo, but becauſe ſo many hands are otherwiſe beſtowed, even about the very vanity of all vanities? Nay, how common is it with theſe mercenary procurers to people's folly, that when their purſes begin to grow low, they ſhall preſent them with a new (and pretendedly more convenient) faſhion; and that perhaps, before the former coſtly habits ſhall have done half their ſervice: which either muſt be given away, or new vampt in the cut moſt alamode. O prodigal, yet frequent folly!

Object. 3.

§. X. I know I am coming to encounter the moſt plauſible objection they are uſed to urge, when driven to a pinch, viz. ‘But how ſhall thoſe many families ſubſiſt, whoſe ‘livelihood depends upon ſuch faſhions and recreations as you ſo earneſtly decry?’ I anſwer; It is a bad argument to plead for the commiſſion of the leaſt evil, that never ſo great a good may come of it: if you and they have made wickedneſs your pleaſure and your profit, be ye content that it ſhould be your grief and puniſhment, till the one can learn to be without ſuch vanity, and the others have found out more honeſt employments. 'Tis the vanity of the few great ones that makes ſo much toil for the many ſmall; and the great exceſs of the one occaſions the great labour of the other. Would men learn to be contented with few things, ſuch as are neceſſary and convenient, (the ancient chriſtian life) all things might be at a cheaper rate, and men might live for little. If the landlords had leſs luſts to ſatisfy, the tenants might have leſs rent to pay, and turn from poor to rich, whereby they might be able to find more honeſt and domeſtic employments for children, than becoming ſharpers, and living by their wits, which is but a better word for their ſins. And if the report of the more intelligent in huſbandry be credible, lands are generally improveable ten in twenty: and were there more hands about more lawful and ſerviceable manufactures, they would be cheaper, and greater vent might be made of them, by which a benefit would redound to the world in general: nay, the burden lies the heavier upon the laborious country, that ſo many hands and ſhoulders (as have the luſt-caterers of the cities) ſhould be wanting to the plough and uſeful huſbandry. If men never think themſelves rich enough, they may never miſs of trouble and employment; but thoſe who can take the primitive ſtate and God's creation for their model, may learn with a little to be contented; as knowing that deſires after wealth do not only prevent or deſtroy true faith, but, when got, increaſe ſnares and trouble. It is no evil to repent of evil; but that cannot be, whilſt men maintain what they ſhould repent of: it is a bad argument to avoid temperance, or juſtify the contrary, becauſe otherwiſe the actors and inventors of exceſs would want a livelihood; ſince to feed them that way is to nurſe the cauſe, inſtead of ſtarving it. Let ſuch of thoſe vanity-huckſters as have got ſufficient be contented to retreat, and ſpend it more honeſtly than they have got it; and ſuch as really are poor, be rather helped by charity to better callings: this were more prudent, nay, Chriſtian, than to conſume money upon ſuch fooliſh toys and fopperies. Publick work-houſes would be effectual remedies to all theſe lazy and luſtful diſtempers, with more profit, and a better conſcience. Therefore it is that we cannot, we dare not ſquare our converſation by the world's: no, but by our plainneſs and moderation to teſtify againſt ſuch extravagant vanities; and by our grave and ſteady life to manifeſt our diſlike, on God's behalf, to ſuch intemperate and wanton curioſity; yea, to deny ourſelves what otherwiſe perhaps we lawfully could uſe with a juſt indifferency, if not ſatisfaction, becauſe of that abuſe that is amongſt the generality.

Object. 4.

§. XI. I know, that ſome are ready farther to object; ‘Hath God given us theſe en‘joyments on purpoſe to damn us if we uſe them?’ Anſw. But to ſuch miſerable, poor, ſilly ſouls, who would rather charge the moſt high and holy God with the invention or creation of their dirty vanities, than want a plea to juſtify their own practice, not knowing how for ſhame, or fear, or love, to throw them off; I anſwer, that what God made for man's uſe was good; and what the bleſſed Lord Jeſus Chriſt allowed, or enjoined, or gave us in his moſt heavenly example, is to be obſerved, believed and practiſed. But in the whole catalogue the ſcriptures give of both, I never found the attires, recreations, and way of living, ſo much in requeſt with the generality of the Chriſtians of theſe times: no certainly. God created man an holy, wiſe, ſober, grave, and reaſonable creature, fit to govern himſelf and the world; but Divinity was then the great object of his reaſon and pleaſure; all external enjoyments of God's giving being for neceſſity, convenience, and lawful delight, with this proviſo too, that the Almighty was to be ſeen, and ſenſibly enjoyed and reverenced, in every one of them. But how very wide the Chriſtians of theſe times are from this primitive inſtitution is not difficult to determine, although they make ſuch loud pretenſions to that moſt holy Jeſus, who not only gave the world a certain evidence of an happy reſtoration, by his own coming, but promiſed his aſſiſtance to all that would follow him in the ſelf-denial and way of his holy croſs; and therefore hath ſo ſeverely enjoined no leſs on all, as they would be everlaſtingly ſaved. But whether the minds of men and women are not as profoundly involved in all exceſs and vanity, as thoſe who know him not any farther than by hear-ſay; and whether being thus baniſhed the preſence of the Lord, by their greedy ſeeking the things that are below, and thereby having loſt the taſte of divine pleaſure, they have not feigned to themſelves an imaginary pleaſure, to quiet or ſmother conſcience, and paſs their time without that anguiſh and trouble, which are the conſequences of ſin, that ſo they might be at eaſe and ſecurity while in the world; let their own conſciences declare. Adam's temptation is repreſented by the fruit

Luke viii. 14.
ch. xii. 28, 29, to 31.

John viii. 12.
ch. xv. 6, 7, 8.
ch. xvii. 20.

of a tree; thereby intimating the great influence external objects, as they exceed in beauty, carry with them upon our ſenſes: ſo that unleſs the mind keep upon its conſtant watch, ſo prevalent are viſible things, that hard it is for one to eſcape being enſnared in them; and he ſhall need to be only ſometimes entrapped, to caſt ſo thick a veil of darkneſs over the mind, that not only it ſhall with pleaſure continue in its fetters to luſt and vanity, but proudly cenſure ſuch as refuſe to wear them, ſtrongly pleading for them, as ſerviceable and convenient. That ſtrange paſſion do periſhing objects raiſe in thoſe minds, where way is made, and entertainment given to them. But Chriſt Jeſus is manifeſted in us, and hath given unto us a taſte and underſtanding of him that is true; and to all, ſuch a proportion of his Good Spirit, as is ſufficient, would they obey it, to redeem their minds from that captivity they have been in to luſt and vanity, and intirely ranſom them from the dominion of all viſible objects, and whatſoever may gratify the deſires of the eye, the luſt of the fleſh, and the pride of life, that they might be regenerated in their minds, changed in their affections, and have their whole hearts ſet on things that are above, where moth nor ruſt can never paſs or enter to harm or deſtroy.

Rom. ii. 8.
Gen. iii. 6.
Mark xiii. 33, 34, 35, 36, 37.
1 John v. 20.
1 Theſſ. v. 23

§. XII. But it is a manifeſt ſign, of what mould and make thoſe perſons are, who practiſe and plead for ſuch Egyptian ſhameful rags, as pleaſures. It is to be hoped that they never knew, or to be feared they have forgot, the humble, plain, meek, holy, ſelf-denying and exemplary life, which the Eternal Spirit ſanctifies all obedient hearts into; yea, it is indubitable, that either ſuch always have been ignorant, or elſe that they have loſt ſight, of that good land, that heavenly country and bleſſed inheritance, they once had ſome glimmering proſpect of. O that they would but withdraw a while, ſit down, weigh and conſider with themſelves, where they are, and whoſe work and will they are doing! that they would once believe, the devil hath not a ſtratagem more pernicious to their immortal ſouls, than this of exerciſing their minds in the fooliſh faſhions and wanton recreations of the times! Great and groſs impieties beget a deteſtation in the opinion of ſober education and reputation; and therefore ſince the devil rightly ſees ſuch things have no ſucceſs with many, it is his next and fataleſt deſign to find ſome other entertainments, that carry leſs of infection in their looks, though more of ſecurity, becauſe leſs of ſcandal and more of pleaſure in their enjoyment, on purpoſe to buſy and arreſt people from a diligent ſearch and enquiry after thoſe matters which neceſſarily concern their eternal peace: that being ignorant of the heavenly life, they may not be induced to preſs after it; but, being only formally religious, according to the traditions and precepts of others, proceed to their common pleaſures, and find no check therefrom (their religion and converſation for the moſt part agreeing well together) whereby an improvement in the knowledge of God, a going on from grace to grace, a growing to the meaſure of the ſtature of Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, is not known: but as it was in the beginning at ſeven, ſo it is at ſeventy; nay, not ſo innocent, unleſs by reaſon of the old ſaying, Old men are twice children. Oh! the myſtery of godlineſs, the heavenly life, the true Chriſtian, are another thing! Wherefore we conclude, that as the deſign of the devil (where he cannot involve and draw into groſs ſin) is to buſy, delight and allure the minds of men and women by more ſeeming innocent entertainments, on purpoſe that he may more eaſily ſecure them from minding their duty and progreſs and obedience to the only true God, which is eternal life; and thereby take up their minds from heavenly and eternal things: ſo thoſe who would be delivered from theſe ſnares ſhould mind the holy, juſt, grave and ſelf-denying teachings of God's Grace and Spirit in themſelves, that they may reject and for ever abandon the like vanity and evil; and, by a reformed converſation, condemn the world of its intemperance: ſo will the true diſcipleſhip be obtained; for otherwiſe many enormous conſequences, and pernicious effects will follow. 'Tis to encourage ſuch impious perſons to continue and proceed in the like trades of feeding the people's luſts, and thereby ſuch make themſelves partakers of their plagues, who, by continual freſh deſires to the like curioſities, and that way of ſpending time and eſtate, induce them to ſpend more time in ſtudying how to 'abuſe time;' leſt, through their pinching and ſmall allowance, thoſe prodigals ſhould call their Father's houſe to mind; for whatſoever any think, more pleaſant baits, alluring objects, grateful entertainments, cunning emiſſaries, acceptable ſermons, inſinuating lectures, taking orators, the crafty devil has not ever had, by which to entice and enſnare the minds of people, and totally to divert them from heavenly reflections, and divine meditations, than the attire, ſports, plays and paſtimes of this godleſs age, the ſchool and ſhop of Satan, hitherto ſo reaſonably condemned.

Gal. v. 22, 23, 24, 25.
Eph. v. 8, 9, 10, 11, 15, 16.
Eph. vi. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18.
Eph. i. 16, to 23.
ch. iv. 12, 13.
John xvii. 3.
Rom. i. 11.
Tit. ii. 11, 12, 13, 14.

CHAP. XVIII.

§. 1. But if theſe cuſtoms, &c. were but indifferent, yet being abuſed, they deſerve to be rejected. §. 2. The abuſe is acknowledged by thoſe that uſe them, therefore ſhould leave them. §. 3. Such as pretend to ſeriouſneſs, ſhould exemplarily withdraw from ſuch latitudes: a wiſe parent weans his child of what it doats too much upon; and we ſhould watch over ourſelves and neighbours. §. 4. God, in the caſe of the brazen ſerpent, &c. gives us an example to put away the uſe of abuſed things. §. 5. If theſe things were ſome- ſometimes convenient, yet when their uſe is prejudicial in example, they ſhould be diſuſed. §. 6. Such as yet proceed to love their unlawful pleaſures more than Chriſt and his croſs, the miſchief they have brought to perſons and eſtates, bodies and ſouls. §. 7. Ingenuous people know this to be true: an appeal to God's Witneſs in the guilty: their ſtate that of Babylon. §. 8. But temperance in food, and plainneſs in apparel, and ſober converſation, conduce moſt to good: ſo the apoſtle teaches in his epiſtles. §. 9. Temperance enriches a land: 'tis a political good, as well as a religious one in all governments. §. 10. When people have done their duty to God, it will be time enough to think of pleaſing themſelves. §. 11. An addreſs to the magiſtrates, and all people, how to convert their time and money to better purpoſes.

Ch. XVIII.

§. I. BUT ſhould theſe things be as indifferent, as they are proved pernicioully unlawful (for I never heard any advance their plea beyond the bounds of mere indifferency) yet ſo great is their abuſe, ſo univerſal the ſad effects thereof, like to an infection, that they therefore ought to be rejected of all, eſpecially thoſe, whoſe ſobriety hath preſerved them on this ſide of that exceſs, or whoſe judgments (though themſelves be guilty) ſuggeſt the folly of ſuch intemperance. For what is an indifferent thing, but that which may be done, or left undone? Granting, I ſay, this were the caſe, yet doth both reaſon and religion teach, that when they are uſed with ſuch an exceſs of appetite, as to leave them would be a croſs to their deſires, they have exceeded the bounds of mere indifferency, and are thereby rendered no leſs than neceſſary. Which being a violation of the very nature of the things themſelves, a perfect abuſe enters; and conſequently they are no longer to be conſidered in the rank of things ſimply indifferent, but unlawful.

§. II. Now that the whole exchange of things againſt which I have ſo earneſtly contended, are generally abuſed by the exceſs of almoſt all ages, ſexes and qualities of people, will be confeſſed by many, who yet decline not to conform themſelves to them; and to whom, as I have underſtood, it only ſeems lawful, becauſe (ſay they) the abuſe of others ſhould be no argument why we ſhould not uſe them. But to ſuch I anſwer, that they have quite forgot, or will not remember, they have acknowledged theſe things to be but of an indifferent nature: if ſo, (and vanity never urged more) I ſay, there can be nothing more clear, than ſince they acknowledge their great abuſe, that they are wholly to be forſaken: for ſince they may as well be let alone as done at any time, ſurely they ſhould then of duty be let alone, when the uſe of them is an abetting the general exceſs, and a mere exciting others to continue in their abuſe, becauſe they find perſons reputed ſober to imitate them, or otherwiſe give them an example: Precepts are not half ſo forcible as examples.

Phil. iii. 17.

§. III. Every one that pretends to ſeriouſneſs ought to inſpect himſelf, as having been too forward to help on the exceſs, and can never make too much haſte out of thoſe inconveniencies, that by his former example he encouraged any to; that by a New one he may put a ſeaſonable check upon the intemperance of others. A wiſe parent ever withdraws thoſe objects, however innocent in themſelves, which are too prevalent upon the weak ſenſes of his children, on purpoſe that they might be weaned. And it is as frequent with men to bend a crooked ſtick as much the contrary way, that they might make it ſtraight at laſt. Thoſe that have more ſobriety than others ſhould not forget their ſtewardſhips, but exerciſe that gift of God to the ſecurity of their neighbours. It was murdering Cain that rudely aſked the Lord, 'Was he his brother's keeper?' for every man is neceſſarily obliged thereto; and therefore ſhould be ſo wiſe, as to deny himſelf the uſe of ſuch indifferent enjoyments, as cannot be uſed by him, without too manifeſt an encouragement to his neighbour's folly.

Rom. xiv. to the end.
Gen. iv. 9.

§. IV. God hath ſufficiently excited men to what is ſaid; for in the caſe of the brazen ſerpent, which was an heavenly inſtitution and type of Chriſt, he with great diſpleaſure enjoined it ſhould be broke to pieces, becauſe they were too fond and doating upon it. Yes, the very groves themſelves, however pleaſant for ſituation, beautiful for their walks and trees, muſt be cut down; and why? only becauſe they had been abuſed to idolatrous uſes. And what is an idol, but that which the mind puts an over-eſtimate or value upon? None can benefit themſelves ſo much by an indifferent thing, as others by not uſing that abuſed liberty.

2 Kings xviii. 3, 4.

§. V. If thoſe things were convenient in themſelves, which is a ſtep nearer neceſſity than mere indifferency, yet when by circumſtances they become prejudicial, ſuch conveniency itſelf ought to be given up; much more what is but indifferent ſhould be denied. People ought not to weigh their private ſatisfactions more than a public good; nor pleaſe themſelves in too free an uſe of indifferent things, at the coſt of being ſo really prejudicial to the public, as they certainly are, whoſe uſe of them (if no worſe) becomes exemplary to others, and begets an impatiency in their minds to have the like. Wherefore it is both reaſonable and incumbent on all, to make only ſuch things neceſſary, as tend to life and godlineſs, and to employ their freedom with moſt advantage to their neighbours. So that here is a twofold obligation; the one, not to be exemplary in the uſe of ſuch things; which, though they may uſe them, yet not without giving too much countenance

Pſal. x. 3, 4.
2 Pet. i. 3.
Eph. v. 7.

to

Rom. xiv. 1. to the end.

to the abuſe and exceſſive vanity of their neighbours. The other obligation is, that they ought ſo far to condeſcend to ſuch religious people who are offended at theſe faſhions, and that kind of converſation, as to reject them.

Lam. iv. 5. Prov. xxi. 17. Job xxi. 13, 14. Pſal. lv. 23. Pſal. xxxvii. 10. Eccl. viii. 12. Pſal. xxxvii. 1, 2. Prov. ii. 22.

§. VI. Now thoſe, who notwithſtanding what I have urged will yet proceed; what is it, but that they have ſo involved themſelves and their affections in them, that it is hardly poſſible to reform them; and that, for all their many proteſtations againſt their fondneſs to ſuch fopperies, they really love them more than Chriſt and his croſs? Such cannot ſeek the good of others, who do ſo little reſpect their own. For, after a ſerious conſideration, what vanity, pride, idleneſs, expence of time and eſtates, have been, and yet are? how many perſons debauched from their firſt ſobriety, and women from their natural ſweetneſs and innocency, to looſe, airy, wanton, and many times more enormous practices? how many plentiful eſtates have been over-run by numerous debts, chaſtity enſnared by accurſed luſtful intrigues? youthful health overtaken by the haſty ſeizure of unnatural diſtempers, and the remaining days of ſuch ſpent upon a rack of their vices procuring, and ſo made ſlaves to the unmerciful but neceſſary effects of their own inordinate pleaſures? in which agony they vow the greateſt temperance; but are no ſooner out of it, than in their vice again.

Jer. xvi. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. Iſa. iii. 13, to 16. Jer. l. 8. ch. xv. 6, 7. Amos vi. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. Rev. xviii. 7, 8. ver. 12. ver. 13. ver. 8. ver. 14. Luke xii. 33, 34.

§. VII. That theſe things are the caſe, and almoſt innumerable more, I am perſuaded no ingenuous perſon of any experience will deny: how then, upon a ſerious reflection, any that pretend conſcience, or the fear of God Almighty, can longer continue in the garb, livery, and converſation of thoſe whoſe whole life tends to little elſe than what I have repeated, much leſs join with them in their abominable exceſs, I leave to the Juſt Principle in themſelves to judge. No ſurely! this is not to obey the voice of God, who in all ages did loudly cry to all, ‘Come out (of what?) of the ways, faſhions, converſe and ſpirit of Babylon;’ What is that? the great city of all theſe vain, fooliſh, wanton, ſuperfluous, and wicked practices, againſt which the ſcriptures denounce moſt dreadful judgments; aſcribing all the intemperance of men and women to the cup of wickedneſs ſhe hath given them to drink; whoſe are the things indifferent, if they muſt be ſo. And for witneſs, hear what the Revelations ſay in her deſcription: ‘How much ſhe hath glorified herſelf, and lived deliciouſly, ſo much torment and ſorrow give her. And the kings of the earth, who have lived deliciouſly with her, ſhall bewail and lament her; and the merchants of the earth ſhall weep over her; for no man buyeth their merchandize any more: the merchandize of gold and ſilver, and precious ſtones, and of pearls and fine linnen, and purple, and ſilk, and ſcarlet, and all manner of veſſels of ivory, and all manner of veſſels of moſt precious wood; and cinnamon, and odours, and ointments, and frankincenſe, and wine, and oil, and fine flour, and beaſts, and ſlaves, and ſouls of men.’ Behold the character and judgment of luxury; and though I know it hath a farther ſignification than what is literal, yet there is enough to ſhew the pomp, plenty, fulneſs, idleneſs, eaſe, wantonneſs, vanity, luſt, and exceſs of luxury that reign in her. But at the terrible day who will go to her exchange any more? who to her plays? who will follow her faſhions then? and who ſhall traffick in her delicate inventions? Not one; for ſhe ſhall be judged. No plea ſhall excuſe, or reſcue her from the wrath of the Judge; for ſtrong is the Lord who will perform it. If yet theſe reaſonable pleas will not prevail, however I ſhall caution ſuch, in the repetition of part of Babylon's miſerable doom: Mind, my friends, more heavenly things; haſten to obey that Righteous Principle, which would exerciſe and delight you in that which is eternal; or elſe with Babylon, the mother of luſt and vanity, the fruits which your ſouls luſt after ſhall depart from you, and all things which are dainty and goodly ſhall depart from you, and you ſhall find them no more! O Dives! no more! Lay your treaſures therefore up in heaven, O ye inhabitants of the earth, where nothing can break through to harm them; but where time ſhall ſhortly be ſwallowed up of eternity!

Col. iv. 5, 6. 1 Theſſ. iv. 11, 12. 1 Pet. iii. 1, 2, 3. 4. Eph. iv. 29, & v. 3, 4, 5, 6. 1 Tim. iv. 12. Phil. iii. 16, to 20. 1 Pet. ii. 12. Prov. xxxi. 23, to 31. 2 Chr. xiii. 7. Prov. xxiv. 23. James ii. 2, to 9. Luke xii. 22, 30. 1 Tim. iv. 2 Pet. iii. 11. Pſal. xxvi. 6.

§. VIII. But my arguments againſt theſe things end not here; for the contrary moſt of all conduces to good, namely, ‘temperance in food, plainneſs in apparel; with a meek, ſhame-faced and quiet ſpirit, and that converſation which doth only expreſs the ſame in all godly honeſty:’ as the apoſtle ſaith, ‘Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the uſe of edifying, that it may adminiſter grace to the hearers; neither filthineſs, nor fooliſh talking, nor jeſting, but rather giving of thanks: for let no man deceive you with vain words, becauſe of theſe things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of diſobedience.’ And if men and women were but thus adorned, after this truly chriſtian manner, impudence would ſoon receive a check, and luſt, pride, vanity, and wantonneſs, find a rebuke. They would not be able to attempt ſuch univerſal chaſtity, or encounter ſuch godly auſterity: virtue would be in credit, and vice afraid and aſhamed, and exceſs not dare to ſhew its face. There would be an end of gluttony, and gaudineſs of apparel, flattering titles, and a luxurious life; and then primitive innocency and plainneſs would come back again, and that plain-hearted downright harmleſs life would be reſtored, of not much caring what we ſhould eat, drink, or put on, as Chriſt tells us the Gentiles did, and as we know this age daily does, under all its talk of religion: but as the antients, who with moderate care for neceſſaries and conveniencies of life, devoted themſelves to the concernments of a celeſtial kingdom, more minded their improvement in righteouſneſs, than their increaſe in riches; for they laid their treaſure up in heaven, and endured tribulation for an inheritance that cannot be taken away.

Mat. xxv. 21.

§. IX. But the temperance I plead for, is not only religiouſly, but politically good: it is the intereſt of good government to curb and rebuke exceſſes: it prevents many miſchiefs; luxury brings effeminacy, lazineſs, poverty and miſery; but temperance preſerves the land. It keeps out foreign vanities, and improves our own commodities: now we are their debtors, then they would be debtors to us for our native manufactures. By this means, ſuch perſons, who by their exceſs, not charity, have deeply engaged their eſtates, may in a ſhort ſpace be enabled to clear them from thoſe incumbrances, which otherwiſe (like moths) ſoon eat out plentiful revenues. It helps perſons of mean ſubſtance to improve their ſmall ſtocks, that they may not expend their dear earnings and hard-got wages upon ſuperfluous apparel, fooliſh may-games, plays, dancing, ſhews, taverns, ale-houſes, and the like folly and intemperance; with which this land is more infeſted, and by which it is rendred more ridiculous, than any kingdom in the world: for none I know of is ſo infeſted with cheating mountebanks, ſavage morrice-dancers, pick-pockets, and prophane players and ſtagers; to the ſlight of religion, the ſhame of government, and the great idleneſs, expence and debauchery of the people: for which the Spirit of the Lord is grieved, and the judgments of the Almighty are at the door, and the ſentence ready to be pronounced, ‘ Let him that is unjuſt, be unjuſt ſtill.’ Wherefore it is, that we cannot but loudly call upon the generality of the times, and teſtify, both by our life and doctrine, againſt the like vanities and abuſes, if poſſibly any may be weaned from their folly, and chuſe the good old path of temperance, wiſdom, gravity, and holineſs, the only way to inherit the bleſſings of peace and plenty here, and eternal happineſs hereafter.

Prov. x. 4.
Eccl. x. 16, 17, 18.
Rev. xxii. 11.
Prov. xxi. 4, 29.

§. X. Laſtly, ſuppoſing we had none of theſe foregoing reaſons juſtly to reprove the practice of the land in theſe particulars; however, let it be ſufficient for us to ſay, that when people have firſt learned to fear, worſhip, and obey their Creator, to pay their numerous vicious debts, to alleviate and abate their oppreſſed tenants; but above all outward regards, when the pale faces are more commiſerated, the pinched bellies relieved, and naked backs cloathed; when the famiſhed poor, the diſtreſſed widow, and helpleſs orphan (God's works, and your fellow-creatures) are provided for! then I ſay, (if then) it will be time enough for you to plead the indifferency of your pleaſures. But that the ſweat and tedious labour of the huſbandmen, early and late, cold and hot, wet and dry, ſhould be converted into the pleaſure, eaſe and paſtime of a ſmall number of men; that the cart, the plough, the threſh, ſhould be in that continual ſeverity laid upon nineteen parts of the land, to feed the inordinate luſts and delicious appetites of the twentieth, is ſo far from the appointment of the great Governor of the world, and God of the ſpirits of all fleſh, that to imagine ſuch horrible injuſtice as the effects of his determinations, and not the intemperance of men, were wretched and blaſphemous. As on the other ſide, it would be to deſerve no pity, no help, no relief from God Almighty, for people to continue that expence in vanity and pleaſure, whilſt the great neceſſities of ſuch objects go unanſwered: eſpecially, ſince God hath made the ſons of men but ſtewards to each others exigencies and relief. Yea, ſo ſtrict is it enjoined, that on the omiſſion of theſe things, we find this dreadful ſentence partly to be grounded, ‘ Depart from me, ye curſed, into ‘ everlaſting fire,’ &c. As on the contrary, to viſit the ſick, ſee the impriſoned, relieve the needy, &c. are ſuch excellent properties in Chriſt's account, that thereupon he will pronounce ſuch bleſſed, ſaying, ‘ Come ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit the kingdom ‘ prepared for you,’ &c. So that the great are not (with the Leviathan in the deep) to prey upon the ſmall, much leſs to make a ſport of the lives and labours of the leſſer ones, to gratify their inordinate ſenſes.

Eccl. xii. 1.
Pſal. xxxvii. 21.
Pſal. x. 2.
Pſal. iv. 2.
Pſal. lxxix. 12.
Pſal. lxxxii. 3, 4.
Prov. xxii. 7.
Iſa. iii. 14, 15.
Ezek. xxii. 29.
Amos v. 11, 12.
ch. viii. 4. 7, 8.
Iſa. i. 16, 17, 18.
Jer. vii. 6.
Rom. xii. 20.
2 Cor. ix. 7.
Pſal. xl. 4.
Acts x. 34.
Rom. ii. 11.
Eph. vi. 9.
Col. iii. 25.
1 Pet. i. 17.
Jam. v. 4, 5.
Pſal. xli. 1.
Mat. xxv. 34, 35, 36.
Jam. ii. 15, 16.
Pſal. cxii. 9.

§. XI. I therefore humbly offer an addreſs to the ſerious conſideration of the civil magiſtrate, That if the money which is expended in every pariſh in ſuch vain faſhions, as wearing of laces, jewels, embroideries, unneceſſary ribbons, trimming, coſtly furniture and attendance, together with what is commonly conſumed in taverns, feaſts, gaming, &c. could be collected into a public ſtock, or ſomething in lieu of this extravagant and fruitleſs expence, there might be reparation to the broken tenants, work-houſes for the able, and alms-houſes for the aged and impotent. Then ſhould we have no beggars in the land, the cry of the widow and the orphan would ceaſe, and charitable reliefs might eaſily be afforded towards the redemption of poor captives, and refreſhment of ſuch diſtreſſed proteſtants as labour under the miſeries of perſecution in other countries: nay, the exchequer's needs, on juſt emergencies, might be ſupplied by ſuch a bank: this ſacrifice and ſervice would pleaſe the juſt and merciful God: it would be a noble example of gravity and temperance to foreign ſtates, and an unſpeakable benefit to ourſelves at home.

Prov. xiv. 21.
Mat. xix. 21.

Alas! why ſhould men need perſuaſions to what their own felicity ſo neceſſarily leads them to? had theſe vitioſos of the times but a ſenſe of heathen Cato's generoſity, they would rather deny their carnal appetites, than leave ſuch noble enterpriſes unattempted.

But that they ſhould eat, drink, play, game and ſport away their health, eſtates, and above all, their irrevocable precious time, which ſhould be dedicated to the Lord, as a neceſſary introduction to a bleſſed eternity, and than which (did they but know it) no worldly ſolace could come in competition; I ſay, that they ſhould be continually employed about theſe poor, low things, is to have the Heathens judge them in God's day, as well as Chriſtian precepts and examples condemn them. And their final doom will prove the more aſtoniſhing, in that this vanity and exceſs are acted under a profeſſion of the ſelf-denying religion of Jeſus, whoſe life and doctrine are a perpetual reproach to the moſt of Chriſtians. For he (bleſſed man) was humble, but they are proud; he forgiving, they revengeful; he meek, they fierce; he plain, they gaudy; he abſtemious, they luxurious; he chaſte, they laſcivious; he a pilgrim on earth, they citizens of the world: in fine, he was meanly born, poorly attended, and obſcurely brought up: he lived deſpiſed, and died hated of the men of his own nation. O you pretended followers of this crucified Jeſus! 'examine yourſelves, try yourſelves; know you not your ownſelves, if he dwell not (if he rule not) in you, that you are reprobates? be ye not deceived, for God will not be mocked (at laſt with forced repentances); ſuch as you ſow, ſuch (ſuch you muſt) reap in God's day.' I beſeech you hear me, and remember you were invited and intreated to the ſalvation of God. I ſay, as you ſow you reap: if you are enemies to the croſs of Chriſt, (and you are ſo, if you will not bear it, but do as you liſt, and not as you ought) if you are uncircumciſed in heart and ear (and you are ſo, if you will not hear and open to him that knocks at the door within), and if you reſiſt and quench the Spirit in yourſelves, that ſtrives with you to bring you to God (and that you certainly do, who rebel againſt its motions, reproofs and inſtructions) then 'you ſow to the fleſh, to fulfil the luſts thereof, and of the fleſh will you reap the fruits of corruption, woe, anguiſh and tribulation, from God the judge of quick and dead, by Jeſus Chriſt.' But if you will daily bear the holy croſs of Chriſt, and ſow to the Spirit; if you will liſten to the light and grace that comes by Jeſus, and which he has given to all people for ſalvation, and ſquare your thoughts, words and deeds thereby (which leads and teaches the lovers of it, to deny all ungodlineſs, and the world's luſts, and to live ſoberly, righteouſly and godly in this preſent evil world) then may you with confidence look for the 'bleſſed hope, and joyful coming, and glorious appearance of the great God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.' Let it be ſo, O you Chriſtians, and eſcape the wrath to come! why will you die? let the time paſt ſuffice: remember, that No Croſs, No Crown. 'Redeem then the time, for the days are evil, and yours but very few. Therefore gird up the loins of your minds, be ſober, fear, watch, pray and endure to the end;' calling to mind, for your encouragement and conſolation; that all ſuch, as 'through patience and well-doing wait for immortality, ſhall reap glory, honour and eternal life, in the kingdom of the Father; whoſe is the kingdom, the power and the glory for ever.' Amen.

2 Cor. xiii. 5.
Gal. vi. 7, 8.
Rom. ii. 8.
Tit. iii. 11, 12, 13.
Eph. v. 16.
Rom. ii. 7. 9.

The Second PART.

Containing an account of the living and dying Sayings of men eminent for their Greatneſs, Learning or Virtue; and that of divers periods of time, and nations of the world. All concurring in this one teſtimony, "That a life of ſtrict virtue, viz. To do well, and bear Ill, is the "way to laſting happineſs." Collected in favour of the truth delivered in the Firſt Part.

By WILLIAM PENN.

The PREFACE.

NO CROSS, NO CROWN ſhould have ended here; but that the power examples and authorities have put upon the minds of people, above the moſt reaſonable and preſſing arguments, inclined me to preſent my readers with ſome of thoſe many inſtances that might be given, in favour of the virtuous life recommended in our diſcourſe. I choſe to caſt them into three ſorts of teſtimonies (not after the threefold ſubject of the book, but) ſuitable to the times, qualities, and circumſtances of the perſons that gave them forth; whoſe divers excellencies and ſtations have tranſmitted their names with reputation to our own times. The firſt teſtimony comes from thoſe called Heathens, the ſecond from Profeſſed Chriſtians, and the laſt from Retired, Aged, and Dying Men; being their laſt and ſerious reflections, to which no oſtentation or worldly intereſts could induce them. Where it will be eaſy for the conſiderate reader to obſerve how much the pride, avarice, and luxury of the world, ſtood reprehended in the judgments of perſons of great credit amongſt men; and what was that life and conduct, that in their moſt retired meditations, when their ſight was cleareſt, and judgment moſt free and diſabuſed, they thought would give peace here, and lay foundations of eternal bleſſedneſs.

1668.

CHAP. XIX.

The teſtimonies of ſeveral great, learned, and virtuous Perſonages among the Gentiles, urged againſt the exceſſes of the age, in favour of the ſelf-denial, temperance, and piety herein recommended.

1. Among the Greeks, viz. §. 1. Of Cyrus. §. 2. Artaxerxes. §. 3. Agathocles. §. 4. Philip. §. 5. Alexander. §. 6. Ptolomy. §. 7. Xenophanes. §. 8. Antigonus. §. 9. Themiſtocles. §. 10. Ariſtides. §. 11. Pericles. §. 12. Phocion. §. 13. Clitomachus. §. 14. Epaminondas. §. 15. Demoſthenes. §. 16. Aguſicles. §. 17. Ageſilaus. §. 18. Agis. §. 19. Alcamenes. §. 20. Alexandridas. §. 21. Anaxilas. §. 22. Ariſton. §. 23. Archidamus. §. 24. Cleomenes. §. 25. Derſyllidas. §. 26. Hippodamus. §. 27. Leonidas. §. 28. Lyſander. §. 29. Pauſanias. §. 30. Theopompus, &c. §. 31. The manner of life and government of the Lacedæmonians in general. §. 32. Lycurgus their lawgiver. (II) Among the Romans, viz. §. 33. Of Cato. §. 34. Scipio Africanus. §. 35. Auguſtus. §. 36. Tiberius. §. 37. Veſpaſian. §. 38. Trajan. §. 39. Adrian. §. 40. Marcus Aurelius Antoninus. §. 41. Pertinax. §. 42. Peſcennius. §. 43. Alexander Severus. §. 44. Aurelianus. §. 45. Diocleſian. §. 46. Julian. §. 47. Theodoſius. (III.) The lives and doctrines of ſome of the Heathen philoſophers among the Greeks and Romans, viz. §. 48. Thales. §. 49. Pythagoras. §. 50. Solon. §. 51. Chilon. §. 52. Periander. §. 53. Bias. §. 54. Cleobulus. §. 55. Pittacus. §. 56. Hippias. §. 57. The Gymnoſophiſtæ. §. 58. The Bamburacii. §. 59. The Gynæcoſmi. §. 60. Anacharſis. §. 61. Anaxagoras. §. 62. Heraclitus. §. 63. Democritus. §. 64. Socrates. §. 65. Plato. §. 66. Antiſthenes. §. 67. Xenocrates. §. 68. Bion. §. 69. Demonax. §. 70. Diogenes. §. 71. Crates. §. 72. Ariſtotle. §. 73. Mandanis. §. 74. Zeno. §. 75. Quintillian. §. 76. Seneca. §. 77. Epictetus. (IV.) Of virtuous Heathen Women, viz. §. 78. Penelope. §. 79. Theoxena. §. 80. Pandora and Protagenia. §. 81. Hipparchia. §. 82. Lucretia. §. 83. Cornelia. §. 84. Pontia. §. Arria. §. 86. Pompeja Plautina. §. 87. Plotina. §. 88. Pompeja Paulina. §. 89. A reproof to voluptuous women of the times.

Ch. XIX.

§. I. CYRUS (than whom a greater monarch we hardly find in ſtory) is more famous for his virtue, than his power; and indeed it was that which gave him power. God calls him his ſhepherd: now let us ſee the principles of his conduct and life. So temperate was he in his youth, that when Aſtyages urged him to drink wine, he anſwered, I am afraid leſt there ſhould be poiſon in it; having ſeen thee reel and ſottiſh after having drank thereof. And ſo careful was he to keep the Perſians from corruption of manners, that he would not ſuffer them to leave their rude and mountainous country, for one more pleaſant and fruitful, leſt through plenty and eaſe, luxury at laſt might debaſe their ſpirits. And ſo very chaſte was he, that having taken a lady of quality, a moſt beautiful woman, his priſoner, he refuſed to ſee her, ſaying, I have no mind to be a captive to my captive. It ſeems, he claimed no ſuch propriety; but ſhunned the occaſion of evil. The comptroller of his houſhold aſking him one day what he would pleaſe to have for his dinner? Bread, ſaid he; for I intend to encamp nigh the water: a ſhort and eaſy bill of fare: but this ſhews the power he had over his appetite as well as his ſoldiers; and that he was fit to command others, that could command himſelf; according to another ſaying of his, No man (ſaith he) is worthy to command, who is not better than thoſe who are to obey: and when he came to die, he gave this reaſon of his belief of immortality, I cannot, ſaid he, perſuade myſelf to think, that the ſoul of man, after having ſuſtained itſelf in a mortal body, ſhould periſh, when delivered out of it, for want of it: a ſaying of perhaps as great weight, as may be advanced againſt atheiſm from more enlightened times.

§. II. ARTAXERXES Mnemon, being upon an extraordinary occaſion reduced to eat barley bread, and dried figs, and drink water; What pleaſure (ſaith he) have I loſt till now through my delicacies and exceſs!

§. III. AGATHOCLES becoming king of Sicily, from being the ſon of a potter, always, to humble his mind to his original, would be daily ſerved in earthen veſſels upon his table: an example of humility and plainneſs.

§. IV. PHILIP king of Macedon, upon three ſorts of good news arriving in one day, feared too much ſucceſs might tranſport him immoderately; and therefore prayed for ſome diſappointments to ſeaſon his proſperity, and caution his mind under the enjoyment of it. He refuſed to oppreſs the Greeks with his garriſons, ſaying, I had rather retain them by kindneſs, than fear; and to be always beloved, than for a while terrible. One of his minions perſuading him to decline hearing of a cauſe, wherein a particular friend was intereſted; I had much rather, ſays he, thy friend ſhould loſe his cauſe, than I my reputation. Seeing his ſon Alexander endeavour to gain the hearts of the Macedonians by gifts and rewards, Canſt thou believe, ſays he, that a man that thou haſt corrupted to thy intereſts will ever be true to them? When his court would have had him quarrel and correct the Peloponnenſes for their ingratitude to him, he ſaid, By no means; for if they deſpiſe and abuſe me, after being kind to them, what will they do if I do them harm? A great example of patience in a king, and wittily ſaid. Like to this was his reply to the ambaſſadors of Athens, whom aſking after audience, If he could do them any ſervice, and one of them ſurlily anſwering, The beſt thou canſt do us is, to hang thyſelf; he was nothing diſturbed, though his court murmured; but calmly ſaid to the ambaſſador, Thoſe who ſuffer injuries, are better people than thoſe that do them. To conclude with him, being one day fallen along the ground, and ſeeing himſelf in that poſture, he cried out, What a ſmall ſpot of earth do we take up! and yet the whole world cannot content us.

§. V. ALEXANDER was very temperate and virtuous in his youth: a certain governor having written to him, that a merchant of the place had ſeveral fine boys to ſell, he returned him this anſwer with great indignation, What haſt thou ſeen in any act of my life, that ſhould put thee upon ſuch a meſſage as this? and avoided the woman his courtiers flung in his way to debauch him. Nay, he would not ſee the wife of Darius, famed for the moſt beautiful princeſs of the age; which with his other virtues made Darius (the laſt Perſian king) to ſay, If God has determined to take my empire from me, I wiſh it into the hands of Alexander, my virtuous enemy. He hated covetouſneſs; for though he left great conqueſts, he left no riches; which made him thus to anſwer one that aſked him dying, Where he had hid his treaſures; Among my friends, ſays he. He was wont to ſay, He owed more to his maſter for his education, than to his father for his birth; by how much it was leſs to live, than to live well.

§. VI. PTOLOMY, ſon of Lagus, being reproached for his mean original, and his friends angry that he did not reſent it; We ought, ſays he, to bear reproaches patiently.

§. VII. XENOPHANES being jeered for refuſing to play at a forbidden game, anſwered, I do not fear my money, but my reputation: they that make laws, muſt keep them. A commendable ſaying.

§. VIII. ANTIGONUS being taken ſick, he ſaid, It was a warning from God to inſtruct him of his mortality. A poet flattering him with the title of the Son of God; he anſwered, My ſervant knows the contrary. Another ſycophant telling him, that the will of kings is the rule of juſtice: No, ſaith he, rather juſtice is the rule of the will of kings. And being preſſed by his minions to put a garriſon into Athens, to hold the Greeks in ſubjection, he anſwered, He had not a ſtronger garriſon than the affections of his people.

§. IX. THEMISTOCLES, after all the honour of his life, ſits down with this concluſion, That the way to the grave is more deſirable than the way to worldly honours. His daughter being courted by one of little wit and great wealth, and another of little wealth and great goodneſs; he choſe the poor man for his ſon-in-law; For, ſaith he, I will rather have a man without money, than money without a man; reckoning, that not money, but worth, makes the man. Being told by Symmachus, that he would teach him the art of memory; he gravely anſwered, He had rather learn the art of forgetfulneſs; adding, He could remember enough, but many things he could not forget, which were neceſſary to be forgotten; as the honours, glories, pleaſures and conqueſts he had ſpent his days in, too apt to tranſport to vain glory.

§. X. ARISTIDES, a wiſe and juſt Greek, of greateſt honour and truſt with the Athenians; he was a great enemy to cabals in government: the reaſon he renders is, Becauſe, ſaith he, I would not be obliged to authorize injuſtice. He ſo much hated covetouſneſs, though he was thrice choſen treaſurer of Athens, that he lived and died poor, and that of choice: for being therefore reproached by a rich uſurer, he anſwered, Thy riches hurt thee, more than my poverty hurts me. Being once baniſhed by a contrary faction in the ſtate, he prayed to God, That the affairs of his country might go ſo well, as never to need his return; which however cauſed him preſently to be recalled. Whereupon he told them, That he was not troubled for his exile with reſpect to himſelf, but the honour of his country. Themiſtocles, their general, had a project to propoſe to render Athens miſtreſs of Greece, but it required ſecrecy: the people obliged him to communicate it to Ariſtides, whoſe judgment they would follow. Ariſtides having privately heard it from Themiſtocles, publickly anſwered to the people, True, there was nothing more advantageous, nor nothing more unjuſt: which quaſhed the project.

§. XI. PERICLES, as he mounted the tribunal, prayed to God, That not a word might fall from him that might ſcandalize the people, wrong the public affairs, or hurt his own. One of his friends praying him to ſpeak falſly in his favour: We are friends, ſaith he, but not beyond the altar; meaning not againſt religion and truth. Sophocles, being his companion, upon ſight of a beautiful woman, ſaid to Pericles, Ah, what a lovely creature is that! to whom Pericles replied, It becometh a magiſtrate not only to have his hands clean, but his tongue and eyes alſo.

§. XII. PHOCION, a famous Athenian, was honeſt and poor, yea, he contemned riches: for a certain governor making rich preſents, he returned them; ſaying, I refuſed Alexander's. And when ſeveral perſuaded him to accept of ſuch bounty, or elſe his children would want, he anſwered, If my ſon be virtuous, I ſhall leave him enough; and if he be vicious, more would be too little. He rebuked the exceſs of the Athenians, and that openly, ſaying, He that eateth more than he ought, maketh more diſeaſes than he can cure. To condemn or flatter him, was to him alike. Demoſthenes telling him, Whenever the people were enraged, they would kill him; he anſwered, And thee alſo, when they are come to their wits. He ſaid, An orator was like a cypreſs tree, fair and great, but fruitleſs. Antipater, preſſing him to ſubmit to his ſenſe, he anſwered, Thou canſt not have me for a friend and flatterer too. Seeing a man in office to ſpeak much, and do little, he aſked, How can that man do buſineſs, that is already drunk with talking? After all the great ſervices of his life, he was unjuſtly condemned to die; and going to the place of execution, lamented of the people, one of his enemies ſpit in his face; he took it without any diſorder of mind, only ſaying, Take him away. Before execution, his friends aſked him, Whether he had nothing to ſay to his ſon? Yes, ſaid he, let him not hate my enemies, nor revenge my death: I ſee it is better to ſleep upon the earth with peace, than with trouble upon the ſofteſt bed: that he ought to do that which is his duty, and what is more is vanity: that he muſt not carry two faces: that he promiſe little, but keep his promiſes: the world does the contrary.

§. XIII. CLITOMACHUS had ſo great a love to virtue, and practiſed it with ſuch exactneſs, that if at any time in company he heard wanton or obſcene diſcourſe, he was wont to quit the place.

§. XIV. EPAMINONDAS being invited to a ſacrificial feaſt, ſo ſoon as he had entred he withdrew, becauſe of the ſumptuous furniture and attire of the place and people; ſaying, I was called at Leuctra to a ſacrifice, but I find it is a debauch. The day after the great battle which he obtained upon his enemies he ſeemed ſad and ſolitary, which was not his ordinary temper; and being aſked why? anſwered, I would moderate the joy of yeſterday's triumphs. A Theſſalian general, and his collegue in a certain enterprize, knowing his poverty, ſent him two thouſand crowns to defray his part of the charges; but he ſeemed angry, and anſwered, This looks like corrupting me; contenting himſelf with leſs than five pounds, which he borrowed of one of his friends for that ſervice. The ſame moderation made him refuſe the preſents of the Perſian emperor, ſaying, They were needleſs, if he only deſired of him what was juſt; if more, he was not rich enough to corrupt him. Seeing a rich man refuſe to lend one of his friends money that was in affliction; he ſaid, Art not thou aſhamed to refuſe to help a good man in neceſſity? After he had freed Greece from trouble, and made the Thebans his countrymen triumph over the Lacedæmonians, (till then invincible) that ungrateful people arraigned him and his friends, under pretence of acting ſomething without authority; he, as general, took the blame upon himſelf, juſtified the action both from neceſſity and ſucceſs, arraigning his judges for ingratitude, whilſt himſelf was at the bar; which cauſed them to withdraw with fallen countenances, and hearts ſmitten with guilt and fear. To conclude, he was a man of great truth and patience, as well as wiſdom and courage; for he was never obſerved to lye, in earneſt or in jeſt. And notwithſtanding the ill and croſs humours of the Thebans, aggravated by his incomparable hazards and ſervices for their freedom and renown, it is reported of him, that he ever bore them patiently; often ſaying, That he ought no more to be revenged of his country, than of his father. And being wounded to death in the battle of Mantine, he adviſed his countrymen to make peace, none being fit to command: which proved true. He would not ſuffer them to pull the ſword out of his body, till he knew he had gained the victory; and then he ended his days, with this expreſſion in his mouth, I die contentedly, for it is in defence of my country; and I am ſure I ſhall live in the eternal memory of good men. This, for a Gentile and a general, hath matter of praiſe and example in it.

§. XV. DEMOSTHENES, the great orator of Athens, had theſe ſentences: That wiſe men ſpeak little; and that therefore nature hath given men two ears and one tongue, to hear more than they ſpeak. To one that ſpoke much he ſaid, How cometh it, that he who taught thee to ſpeak, did not teach thee to hold thy tongue? He ſaid of a covetous man, That he knew not how to live all his life-time, and that he left it for another to live after he was dead. That it was an eaſy thing to deceive one's ſelf, becauſe it was eaſy to perſuade one's ſelf to what one deſired. He ſaid, That calumnies were eaſily received, but time would always diſcover them. That there was nothing more uneaſy to good men, than not to have the liberty of ſpeaking freely: and that if one knew what one had to ſuffer from the people, one would never meddle to govern them. In fine, That man's happineſs was to be like God; and to reſemble him, we muſt love truth and juſtice.

§. XVI. AGASICLES, king of the Lacedæmonians (or Spartans, which are one) was of the opinion, That it was better to govern without force: And, ſays he, the means to do it, is to govern the people as a father governs his children.

§. XVII. AGESILAUS, king of the ſame people, would ſay, That he had rather be maſter of himſelf, than of the greateſt city of his enemies: and to preſerve his own liberty, than to uſurp the liberty of another man. A prince, ſays he, ought to diſtinguiſh himſelf from his ſubjects by his virtue, and not by his ſtate or delicacy of life. Wherefore he wore plain, ſimple cloathing; his table was as moderate, and his bed as hard, as that of any ordinary ſubject. And when he was told, that one time or other he would be obliged to change his faſhion; No, ſaith he, I am not given to change, even in a change: and this I do, ſaith he, to remove from young men any pretence of luxury; that they may ſee their prince practiſe what he counſels them to do. He added, That the foundation of the Lacedæmonian laws was, to deſpiſe luxury, and to reward with liberty: Nor, ſaith he, ſhould good men put a value upon that which mean and baſe ſouls make their delight. Being flattered by ſome with divine honour, he aſked them, If they could not make gods too? If they could, why did they not begin with themſelves?--- The ſame auſtere conduct of life made him refuſe to have his ſtatue erected in the cities of Aſia: nor would he ſuffer his picture to be taken; and his reaſon is good; For, ſaith he, the faireſt portraiture of men is their own actions.---Whatſoever was to be ſuddenly done in the government, he was ſure to ſet his hand firſt to the work, like a common perſon. He would ſay, It did not become men to make proviſion to be rich, but to be good. Being aſked the means to true happineſs, he anſwered, To do nothing that ſhould make a man fear to die: another time, To ſpeak well, and do well. Being called home by the Ephori, (or ſupreme magiſtrates, the way of the Spartan conſtitution) he returned; ſaying, It is not leſs the duty of a prince to obey laws, than to command men. He conferred places of truſt and honour upon his enemies, that he might conſtrain their hatred into love. A lawyer aſking him for a letter to make a perſon judge, that was of his own friends; My friends, ſays he, have no need of a recommendation to do juſtice.---- A comedian of note wondering that Ageſilaus ſaid nothing to him, aſked, if he knew him? Yes, ſaith he, I know thee; art not thou the buffoon Callipedes?---One calling the king of Perſia the great king, he anſwered, He is not greater than I, unleſs he hath more virtue than I.---One of his friends catching him playing with his children, he prevented him thus; Say nothing, till thou art a father too.---He had great care of the education of youth; often ſaying, We muſt teach children what they ſhall do when they are men. The Egyptians deſpiſing him becauſe he had but a ſmall train and a mean equipage; Oh, ſaith he, I will have them to know, royalty conſiſts not in vain pomp, but in virtue.

§. XVIII. AGIS, another king of Lacedæmonia, impriſoned for endeavouring to reſtore their declining diſcipline, being aſked, whether he repented not of his deſign? anſwered, No; for, ſaith he, good actions never need repentance. His father and mother deſiring of him to grant ſomething he thought unjuſt, he anſwered, I obeyed you when I was young; I muſt now obey the laws, and do that which is reaſonable.---As he was leading to the place of execution, one of his people wept; to whom he ſaid, Weep not for me; for the authors of this unjuſt death are more in fault than I.

§. XIX. ALCAMENES, king of the ſame people, being aſked, which was the way to get and preſerve honour? anſwered; To deſpiſe wealth. Another wondering why he refuſed the preſents of the Meſſenians, he anſwered, I make conſcience to keep the laws that forbid it. To a miſer accuſing him of being ſo reſerved in his diſcourſe, he ſaid, I had rather conform to reaſon, than thy covetouſneſs; or, I had rather be covetous of my words, than money.

§. XX. ALEXANDRIDAS hearing an exile complain of his baniſhment, ſaith he, Complain of the cauſe of it (to wit his deſerts); for there is nothing hurtful but vice. Being aſked, why they were ſo long in making the proceſs of criminals in Lacedæmonia? Becauſe, ſaith he, when they are once dead, they are paſt repentance. This ſhews their belief of immortality and eternal bleſſedneſs; and that even poor criminals, through repentance, may obtain it.

§. XXI. ANAXILAS would ſay, That the greateſt advantage kings had over other men, was their power of excelling them in good deeds.

§. XXII. ARISTON, hearing one admire this expreſſion, We ought to do good to our friends, and evil to our enemies; anſwered, By no means, we ought to do good to all; to keep our friends, and to gain our enemies. A doctrine the moſt difficult to fleſh and blood, of all the precepts of Chriſt's ſermon upon the mount: nay, not allowed to be his doctrine; but both ‘An eye for an eye;’ defended, againſt his expreſs command, and oftentimes an eye put out, an eſtate ſequeſtered, and life taken away, under a ſpecious zeal for religion too; as if ſin could be chriſtened, and impiety entitled to the doctrine of Chriſt. Oh, will not ſuch Heathens riſe up in judgment againſt our worldly Chriſtians in the great day of God!

§. XXIII. Archidamus, alſo king of Sparta, being aſked, who was maſter of Lacedæmonia? The laws, ſaith he, and after them the magiſtrates.---One praiſing a muſician in his preſence, Ah! ſaith he, but when will you praiſe a good man?---Another ſaying, That man is an excellent muſician: That is all one, ſaith he, as if thou wouldſt ſay, There is a good cook: counting both trades of voluptuouſneſs.---Another promiſing him ſome excellent wine; I care not, ſaith he, for it will only put my mouth out of taſte to my ordinary liquor; which it ſeems was water.---Two men choſe him an arbitrator; to accept it, he made them promiſe to do what he would have them: Then, ſaid he, ſtir not from this place till you have agreed the matter between yourſelves; which was done. ---Dennis, king of Sicily, ſending his daughters rich apparel, he forbad them to wear it, ſaying, You will ſeem to me but the more homely.---This great man certainly was not of the mind to breed up his children at the exchanges, dancing ſchools and play-houſes.

§. XXIV. Cleomenes, king of the ſame people, would ſay, That kings ought to be pleaſant; but not to cheapneſs and contempt. He was ſo juſt a man in power, that he drove away Demaratus, his fellow-king, (for they always ha dtwo) for offering to corrupt him in a cauſe before them, Leſt, ſaith he, he ſhould attempt others leſs able to reſiſt him, and ſo ruin the ſtate.

§. XXV. Dersyllidas perceiving that Pyrrhus would force a prince upon his countrymen the Lacedæmonians, whom they lately ejected, ſtoutly oppoſed him, ſaying, If thou art God, we fear thee not, becauſe we have done no evil; and if thou art but a man, we are men too.

§. XXVI. Hippodamus, ſeeing a young man aſhamed, that was caught in bad company, he reproved him ſharply, ſaying, For time to come keep ſuch company as thou needeſt not bluſh at.

§. XXVII. Leonidas, brother to Cleomenes, and a brave man, being offered by Xerxes to be made an emperor of Greece, anſwered, I had rather die for my own country, than have an unjuſt command over other mens. Adding, Xerxes deceived himſelf, to think it a virtue to invade the right of other men.

§. XXVIII. Lysander, being aſked by a perſon, what was the beſt frame of government? That, ſaith he, where every man hath according to his deſerts. Though one of the greateſt captains that Sparta bred, he had learned by his wiſdom to bear perſonal affronts: Say what thou wilt, ſaith he, (to one that ſpoke abuſively to him) Empty thyſelf, I ſhall bear it. His daughters were contracted in marriage to ſome perſons of quality; but he dying poor, they refuſed to marry them; upon which the Ephori condemned each of them in a great ſum of money, becauſe they preferred money before faith and engagement.

§. XXIX. Pausanias, ſon of Cleombrotus, and collegue of Lyſander, beholding among the Perſian ſpoils they took, the coſtlineſs of their furniture, ſaid, It had been much better if they had been worth leſs, and their maſters more. And after the victory of Platee, having a dinner dreſt according to the Perſian manner, and beholding the magnificence and furniture of the treat; What, ſaith he, do theſe people mean, that live in ſuch wealth and luxury, to attack our meanneſs and poverty?

§. XXX. Theopompus ſaith, The way to preſerve a kingdom is, to embrace the counſel of one's friends, and not to ſuffer the meaner ſort to be oppreſſed. One making the glory of Sparta to conſiſt in commanding well, he anſwered, No, it is in knowing how to obey well. He was of opinion, That great honours hurt a ſtate; adding, That time would aboliſh great and augment moderate honours among men; meaning that men ſhould have the reputation they deſerve, without flattery and exceſs.

A rhetorician bragging himſelf of his art, was reproved by a Lacedæmonian, Doſt thou call that an art, ſaith he, which hath not truth for its object? Alſo a Lacedæmonian being preſented with an harp after dinner by a muſical perſon, I do not, ſaith he, know how to play the fool. Another being aſked, What he thought of a poet of the times, anſwered, Good for nothing but to corrupt youth. Nor was this only the wiſdom and virtue of ſome particular perſons, which may be thought to have given light to the dark body of their courts; but their government was wiſe and juſt, and the people generally obeyed it; making virtue to be true honour, and that honour dearer to them than life.

§. XXXI. Lacedæmonian cuſtoms, according to Plutarch, were theſe: ‘They were very temperate in their eating and drinking, their moſt delicate diſh being a pottage made for the nouriſhment of ancient people. They taught their children to write and read, to obey the magiſtrates, to endure labour, and to be bold in danger: the teachers of other ſciences were not ſo much as admitted in Lacedæmonia. They had but one garment, and that new but once a year. They rarely uſed baths or oil, the cuſtom of thoſe parts of the world. Their youth lay in troops upon mats; the boys and girls apart. They accuſtomed their youth to travel by night without light, to uſe them not to be afraid. The old governed the young; and thoſe of them ‘who obeyed not the aged, were puniſhed. It was a ſhame not to bear reproof among the youth; and among the aged, matter of puniſhment not to give it. They made ordinary cheer, on purpoſe to keep out luxury; holding, that mean fare kept the ſpirit free, and the body fit for action. The muſic they uſed was ſimple, without art of changings; their ſongs compoſed of virtuous deeds of good men, and their harmony mixed with ſome religious extaſies, that ſeemed to carry their minds above the fear of death. They permitted not their youth to travel, leſt they ſhould corrupt their manners; and for the ſame reaſon, they permitted not ſtrangers to dwell amongſt them, that conformed not to their way of living. In this they were ſo ſtrict, that ſuch of their youth that were not educated in their cuſtoms, enjoyed not the privileges of natives. They would ſuffer neither comedies nor tragedies to be acted in their country. They condemned a ſoldier but for painting his buckler of ſeveral colours: and publicly puniſhed a young man, for having learnt but the way to a town given to luxury. They alſo baniſhed an orator for bragging that he could ſpeak a whole day upon any ſubject; for they did not like much ſpeaking, much leſs for a bad cauſe. They buried their dead without any ceremony or ſuperſtition; for they only uſed a red cloth upon the body, broidered with olive leaves: this burial had all degrees. Mourning they forbad, and epitaphs too. When they prayed to God, they ſtretched forth their arms; which with them was a ſign that they muſt do good works, as well as make good prayers. They aſked of God but two things, patience in labour, and happineſs in well-doing.’

This account is moſtly the ſame with Xenophon’s: adding, ‘that they eat moderately, and in common; the youth mixed with the aged, to awe them, and give them good example. That in walking, they would neither ſpeak, nor turn their eyes aſide, any more than if they were ſtatues of marble. The men were bred baſhful, as well as the women, not ſpeaking at meals, unleſs they were aſked a queſtion. When they were fifteen years of age, inſtead of leaving them to their own conduct, as in other places, they had moſt care of their converſation, that they might preſerve them from the miſchiefs that age is incident to. And thoſe that would not comply with theſe rules, were not counted always honeſt people. And in this their government was excellent; That they thought there was no greater puniſhment for a bad man, than to be known and uſed as ſuch, at all times, and in all places: for they were not to come into the company of perſons of reputation; they were to give place to all others; to ſtand when they ſat; to be accountable to every honeſt man that met them, of their converſation; that they muſt keep their poor kindred; that they uſed not the ſame freedoms that honeſt people might uſe: by which means they kept virtue in credit, and vice in contempt. They uſed all things neceſſary for life, without ſuperfluity, or want; deſpiſing riches, and ſumptuous apparel and living: judging, that the beſt ornament of the body is health; and of the mind, virtue. And ſince (ſaith Xenophon) it is virtue and temperance that render us commendable, and that it is only the Lacedæmonians that reverence it publicly, and have made it the foundation of their ſtate; their government, of right, merits preference to any other in the world. But that, ſaith he, which is ſtrange, is, that all admire it, but none imitate it.’ Nor is this account and judgment fantaſtical.

§. XXXII. Lycurgus, their famous founder and lawgiver, inſtilled theſe principles, and by his power with them made them laws to rule them. Let us hear what he did: Lycurgus, willing to reclaim his citizens from a luxurious to a virtuous life, and ſhew them how much good conduct and honeſt induſtry might meliorate the ſtate of mankind, applied himſelf to introduce a new model of government, perſuading them to believe, that though they were deſcended of noble and virtuous anceſtors, if they were not exerciſed in a courſe of virtue, they would, like the dog in the kitchen, rather leap at the meat, than run at the game. In fine, they agreed to obey him. The firſt thing then that he did, to try his power with them, was, to divide the land into equal portions, ſo that the whole Laconick country ſeemed but the lots of brethren. This grieved the rich; but the poor, which were the moſt, rejoiced. He rendered wealth uſeleſs, by community; and forbad the uſe of gold and ſilver: he made money of iron, too baſe and heavy to make a thief: he retrenched their laws of building, ſuffering no more ornament than could be made with a hatchet and a ſaw: and their furniture was like their houſes. This courſe diſbanded many trades; no merchant, no cooks, no lawyer, no flatterer, no divine, no aſtrologer, was to be found in Lacædemonia. Injuſtice was baniſhed their ſociety, having cut up the root of it, which is avarice, by introducing a community, and making gold and ſilver uſeleſs. To prevent the luxury of tables as well as of apparel, he ordained public places of eating, where all ſhould publicly be ſerved; thoſe that refuſed to come thither were reputed voluptuous, and reproved, if not corrected. He would have virgins labour, as well as young men, that their bodies being uſed to exerciſe might be the ſtronger and healthier, when married, to bring forth children. He forbad that they ſhould have any portions, to the end that none might make ſuit to them for their wealth, but perſon and worth; by which means the poor went off as well as the rich: and that their virtue might prefer them, they were denied to uſe any ornaments. He would not let the young people marry, till they arrived at the flower of their age, to the end, that their children might be ſtrong and vigorous. Chaſtity was ſo general, and ſo much in requeſt, that no law was made againſt adultery; believing, that where luxury, and the arts leading to it, were ſo ſeverely forbid, it was needleſs. He forbad coſtly offerings in the temple, that they might offer often; for that God regardeth the heart, not the offering. Theſe, and ſome more, were the laws he inſtituted; and whilſt the Spartans kept them, it is certain they were the firſt ſtate of Greece, which laſted about five hundred years. It is remarkable that he would never ſuffer the laws to be written, to avoid barratry; and that the judges might not be tied religiouſly to the letter of the law, but left to the circumſtances of fact; in which no inconvenience was obſerved to follow.

II. The Romans alſo yield us inſtances to our point in hand.

§. XXXIII. Cato, that ſage Roman, ſeeing a luxurious man loaden with fleſh, Of what ſervice, ſaith he, can that man be, either to himſelf, or the common-wealth? One day beholding the ſtatues of ſeveral perſons erecting, that he thought little worthy of remembrance, that he might deſpiſe the pride of it; I had rather, ſaid he, they ſhould aſk, why they ſet not up a ſtatue to Cato, than why they do. He was a man of ſeverity of life, both example and judge. His competitors in the government, hoping to be preferred, took the contrary humour, and mightily flattered the people: this good man deſpiſed their arts, and with an unuſual fervency cried out, That the diſtempers of the commonwealth did not require flatterers to deceive them, but phyſicians to cure them: which ſtruck ſo great an awe upon the people, that he was firſt choſen of them all. The fine dames of Rome became governors to their huſbands; he lamented the change, ſaying, It is ſtrange that thoſe who command the world ſhould yet be ſubject to women. He thought thoſe judges, that would not impartially puniſh malefactors, greater criminals than the malefactors themſelves: a good leſſon for judges of the world. He would ſay, That it was better to loſe a gift than a correction; for, ſays he, the one corrupts us, but the other inſtructs us. That we ought not to ſeparate honour from virtue; for then there would be few any more virtuous. He would ſay, No man is fit to command another, that cannot command himſelf. Great men ſhould be temperate in their power, that they may keep it. For men to be too long in offices in a government, is to have too little regard to others, or the dignity of the ſtate. They that do nothing will learn to do evil. That thoſe who have raiſed themſelves by their vices ſhould gain to themſelves credit by virtue. He repented him, that ever he paſſed one day without doing good. And that there is no witneſs any man ought to fear, but that of his own conſcience. Nor did his practice fall much ſhort of his principles.

§. XXXIV. Scipio Africanus, though a great general, loaded with honours and triumphs, preferred retirement to them all; being uſed to ſay, That he was never leſs alone than when he was alone: implying, that the moſt buſy men in the world are the moſt deſtitute of themſelves; and that external ſolitarineſs gives the beſt company within. After he had taken Carthage, his ſoldiers brought him a moſt beautiful priſoner; he anſwered, 'I am your general;' refuſing to debaſe himſelf, or diſhonour her.

§. XXXV. Augustus, eating at the table of one of his friends, where a poor ſlave breaking a cryſtal veſſel fell upon his knees, begging him, that his maſter might not fling him to the lampreys, as he had uſed to do, for food, with ſuch of them as offended him; Auguſtus, hating his friend's cruelty, broke all his friend's cryſtal veſſels, both reproving his luxury and his ſeverity. He never recommended any of his own children, but he always added, If they deſerve it. He reproved his daughter for her exceſs in apparel, and both rebuked and impriſoned her for her immodeſt latitudes. The people of Rome complaining that wine was dear, he ſent them to the fountains, telling them, They were cheap.

§. XXXVI. Tiberius would not ſuffer himſelf to be called Lord, nor yet His Sacred Majeſty: For, ſays he, they are divine titles, and belong not to man. The commiſſioners of his treaſury adviſing him to increaſe his taxes upon the people, he anſwered, No, it was fit to ſhear, but not to flay the ſheep.

§. XXXVII. Vespasian was a great and an extraordinary man, who maintained ſomething of the Roman virtue in his time. One day ſeeing a young man finely dreſſed, and richly perfumed, he was diſpleaſed with him, ſaying, I had rather ſmell the poor man's garlick, than thy perfume; and took his place and government from him. A certain perſon being brought before him, that had conſpired againſt him, he reproved him, and ſaid, That it was God who gave and took away empires. Another time, conferring favour upon his enemy, and being aſked why he did ſo? he anſwered, That he ſhould remember the right way.

§. XXXVIII. Trajan would ſay, That it became an Emperor to act towards his people, as he would have his people act towards him. The governor of Rome having delivered the ſword into his hand, and created him emperor, Here, ſaith he, take it again: if I reign well, uſe it for me; if ill, uſe it againſt me. An expreſſion which ſhews great humility and goodneſs, making power ſubſervient to virtue.

§. XXXIX. Adrian, alſo emperor, had ſeveral ſayings worthy of notice: one was, That a good prince did not think the eſtates of his ſubjects belonged to him. He would ſay, That kings ſhould not always act the king: that is, ſhould be juſt, and mix ſweetneſs with greatneſs, and be converſible by good men. That the treaſures of princes are like the ſpleen, that never ſwells but it makes other parts ſhrink: teaching princes thereby to ſpare their ſubjects. Meeting one that was his enemy before he was emperor, he cried out to him, Now thou haſt no more to fear: intimating, that having power to revenge himſelf, he would rather uſe it to do him good.

§. XL. Marcus Aurelius Antoninus, a good man (the Chriſtians of his time felt it) commended his ſon for weeping at his tutor's death; anſwering thoſe that would have rendered it unſuitable to his condition, Let him alone, ſays he, it is fit he ſhould ſhew himſelf a man, before he be a prince. He refuſed to divorce his wife, at the inſtigation of his courtiers, though reputed naught; anſwering, I muſt divorce the empire too; for ſhe brought it: refuſing them, and defending his tenderneſs. He did nothing in the government without conſulting his friends; and would ſay, It is more juſt that one ſhould follow the advice of many, than many the mind of one. He was more philoſopher than emperor; for his dominions were greater within than without: and having commanded his own paſſions by a circumſpect conformity to virtuous principles, he was fit to rule thoſe of other men. Take ſome of his excellent ſayings, as followeth.----Of my grandfather Verus I have learned to be gentle and meek, and to refrain from all anger and paſſion. From the fame and memory of him that begot me, ſhame-facedneſs and man-like behaviour. I obſerved his meekneſs, his conſtancy without wavering, in thoſe things, which after a due examination and deliberation he had determined; how free from all vanity he carried himſelf in matter of honour and dignity! his laboriouſneſs and aſſiduity! his readineſs to hear any man that had ought to ſay tending to any common good! how he did abſtain from all unchaſte love of youth! his moderate condeſcending to other men's occaſions as an ordinary man. Of my mother, to be religious and bountiful, and to forbear not only to do, but to intend, any evil: to content myſelf with a ſpare diet, and to fly all ſuch exceſs as is incident to great wealth. Of my grandfather, both to frequent public ſchools and auditories, and to get me good and able teachers at home; and that I ought not to think much, if upon ſuch occaſions I were at exceſſive charge. I gave over the ſtudy of rhetorick and poetry, and of elegant neat language. I did not uſe to walk about the houſe in my ſenator's robe, nor to do any ſuch things. I learned to write letters without any affectation and curioſity; and to be eaſy, and ready to be reconciled, and well pleaſed again with them that had offended me, as ſoon as any of them would be content to ſeek unto me again. To obſerve carefully the ſeveral diſpoſitions of my friends, and not to be offended with ideots, nor unreaſonably to ſet upon thoſe that are carried away with the vulgar opinions, with the theorems and tenets of philoſophers. To love the truth and juſtice, and to be kind and loving to all them of my houſe and family, I learned from my brother Severus: and it was he that put me in the firſt conceit and deſire of an equal common-wealth, adminiſtered by juſtice and equality; and of a kingdom, wherein ſhould be regarded nothing more than the good and welfare (or liberty) of the ſubjects. As for God, and ſuch ſuggeſtions, helps and inſpirations, as might be expected, nothing did hinder but that I might have begun long before to live according to nature. Or that even now, that I was not yet partaker, and in preſent poſſeſſion of that life, that I myſelf (in that I did not obſerve thoſe inward motions and ſuggeſtions; yea, and almoſt plain and apparent inſtructions and admonitions of God) was the only cauſe of it. I that underſtand the nature of that which is good, that it is to be deſired; and of that which is bad, that it is odious and ſhameful: who know moreover, that this tranſgreſſor, whoſoever he be, is my kinſman, not by the ſame blood and ſeed, but by participation of the ſame Reaſon, and of the ſame Divine Particle, or Principle: how can I either be hurt by any of theſe, ſince it is not in their power to make me incur any thing that is reproachful, or be angry and ill-affected towards him, who, by nature, is ſo near unto me? for we are all born to be fellow-workers, as the feet, the hands, and the eye-lids; as the rows of upper and under teeth: for ſuch therefore to be in oppoſition, is againſt nature. He ſaith, It is high time for thee to underſtand the true nature, both of the world, whereof thou art a part, and of that Lord and Governor of the world, from whom, as a channel from the ſpring, thou thyſelf didſt flow. And that there is but a certain limit of time appointed unto thee, which if thou ſhalt not make uſe of, to calm and allay the many diſtempers of thy ſoul, it will paſs away, and thou with it, and never after return. Do, ſoul, do abuſe and contemn thyſelf yet a while! and the time for thee to repent thyſelf will be at an end! Every man's happineſs depends upon himſelf; but behold, thy life is almoſt at an end, whilſt, not regarding thyſelf as thou oughteſt, thou doſt make thy happineſs to conſiſt in the ſouls and conceits of other men. Thou muſt alſo take heed of another kind of wandering; for they are idle in their actions who toil and labour in their life, and have no certain ſcope to which to direct all their motions and deſires. As for life and death, honour and diſhonour, labour and pleaſure, riches and poverty, all theſe things happen unto men indeed, both good and bad equally, but as things which of themſelves are neither good nor bad, becauſe of themſelves neither ſhameful nor praiſe-worthy. Conſider the nature of all worldly viſible things; of thoſe eſpecially, which either enſnare by pleaſure, or for their irkſomeneſs are dreadful, or for their outward luſtre and ſhew are in great eſteem and requeſt; how vile and contemptible, how baſe and corruptible, how deſtitute of all true life and being they are. There is nothing more wretched than that ſoul, which, in a kind of circuit, compaſſeth all things; ſearching even the very depths of all the earth, and, by all ſigns and conjectures, prying into the very thoughts of other men's ſouls; and yet of this is not ſenſible, that it is ſufficient for a man to apply himſelf wholly, and confine all his thoughts and cares to the guidance of that Spirit which is within him, and truly and really ſerve him. For even the leaſt things ought not to be done without relation unto the end: and the end of the reaſonable creature is, To follow and obey him who is the reaſon, as it were, and the law, of this great city and moſt ancient commonwealth. Philoſophy doth conſiſt in this; For a man to preſerve that ſpirit which is within him from all manner of contumelies and injuries, and above all pains and pleaſures; never to do any thing either raſhly, or feignedly, or hypocritically: he that is ſuch, is He ſurely; indeed a very prieſt and miniſter of God; well acquainted, and in good correſpondence, with Him eſpecially that is ſeated and placed within himſelf: to whom alſo he keeps and preſerveth himſelf; neither ſpotted by pleaſure, nor daunted by pain; free from any manner of wrong or contumely. Let thy God that is in thee, to rule over thee, find by thee that he hath to do with a man, an aged man, a ſociable man, a Roman, a prince, and that hath ordered his life as one that expecteth, as it were, nothing but the ſound of the trumpet, ſounding a retreat to depart out of this life with all readineſs. Never eſteem of any thing as profitable, which ſhall ever conſtrain thee either to break thy faith or to loſe thy modeſty; to hate any man, to ſuſpect, to curſe, to diſſemble, to luſt after any thing that requireth the ſecret of walls or veils. But he that preferreth before all things his rational part and ſpirit, and the ſacred myſteries of virtue which iſſue from it, he ſhall never want either ſolitude or company; and, which is chiefeſt of all, he ſhall live without either deſire or fear. If thou ſhalt intend that which is preſent, following the rule of right and reaſon, carefully, ſolidly, meekly; and ſhalt not intermix any other buſineſs; but ſhalt ſtudy this, to preſerve thy ſpirit unpolluted and pure; and, as one that were even now ready to give up the ghoſt, ſhalt cleave unto him, without either hope or fear of any thing, in all things that thou ſhalt either do or ſpeak; contenting thyſelf with heroical truth, thou ſhalt live happily; and from this there is no man that can hinder thee. Without relation to God, thou ſhalt never perform aright any thing human; nor, on the other ſide, any thing divine. At what time ſoever thou wilt, it is in thy power to retire into thyſelf, and to be at reſt; for a man cannot retire any whither to be more at reſt, and freer from all buſineſs, than into his own ſoul. Afford then thyſelf this retiring continually, and thereby refreſh and renew thyſelf. Death hangeth over thee whilſt yet thou liveſt; and, whilſt thou mayeſt, be good. How much time and leiſure doth he gain who is not curious to know what his neighbour hath ſaid, or hath done, or hath attempted, but only what he doth himſelf, that it may be juſt and holy. Neither muſt he uſe himſelf to cut off actions only, but thoughts and imaginations alſo that are not neceſſary; for ſo will unneceſſary conſequent actions the better be prevented and cut off. He is poor that ſtands in need of another, and hath not in himſelf all things needful for his life. Conſider well, whether magnanimity rather, and true liberty and true ſimplicity, and equanimity, and holineſs, whether theſe be not moſt reaſonable and natural. Honour that which is chiefeſt and moſt powerful in the world, and that is It which makes uſe of all things, and governs all things: ſo alſo in thyſelf, honour that which is chiefeſt and moſt powerful, and is of one kind and nature with that; for it is the very ſame, which being in thee, turneth all other things to its own uſe, and by whom alſo thy life is governed. What is it that thou doſt ſtay for? an extinction or a tranſlation? for either of them, with a propitious and contented mind. But till that time come, what will content thee? what elſe, but to worſhip and praiſe God, and to do good unto men? As he lay a-dying, and his friends about him, he ſpake thus; Think more of death than of me, and that you and all men muſt die, as well as I. Adding, I recommend my ſon to you, and to God, if he be worthy.

§. XLI. PERTINAX, alſo emperor, being adviſed to ſave himſelf from the fury of the mutineers, anſwered, No, what have I done that I ſhould do ſo? ſhewing, that innocence is bold, and ſhould never give ground where it can ſhow itſelf, be heard, and have fair play.

§. XLII. PESCENNIUS ſeeing the corruption that reigned among officers of juſtice, adviſed, That judges ſhould have firſt ſalaries, that they might do their duty without any bribes or perquiſites. He ſaid, He would not offend the living, that he might be praiſed when he was dead.

§. XLIII. ALEXANDER SEVERUS, having taſted both of a private life, and the ſtate of an emperor, had this cenſure, Emperors, ſays he, are ill managers of the public revenue, to feed ſo many unuſeful mouths. Wherefore he retrenched his family from pompous pous to ſerviceable. He would not employ perſons of quality in his domeſtick ſervice, thinking it too mean for them, and too coſtly for him: adding, That perſonal ſervice was the work of the loweſt order of the people. He would never ſuffer offices of juſtice to be ſold; For, ſaith he, it is not ſtrange that men ſhould ſell what they buy; meaning juſtice. He was impartial in correction: My friends, ſays he, are dear to me, but the common-wealth is dearer. Yet he would ſay, That ſweetening power to the people made it laſting. That we ought to gain our enemies, as we keep our friends; that is, by kindneſs. He ſaid, That we ought to deſire happineſs, and to bear afflictions: that thoſe things which are deſirable may be pleaſant; but the troubles we avoid may have moſt profit in the end. He did not like pomp in religion; for it is not gold that recommends the ſacrifice, but the piety of him that offers it. An houſe being in conteſt betwixt ſome Chriſtians and keepers of taverns, the one to perform religion, the other to ſell drink therein, he decided the matter thus; That it were much better that it were any way employed to worſhip God, than to make a tavern of it. Behold! by this we may ſee the wiſdom and virtue that ſhined among Heathens.

§. XLIV. AURELIANUS, the emperor, having threatened a certain town that had rebelled againſt him, That he would not leave a dog alive therein; and finding the fear he raiſed brought them eaſily to their duty, bid his ſoldiers go kill all their dogs; and pardoned the people.

§. XLV. DIOCLESIAN would ſay, That there was nothing more difficult than to reign well; and the reaſon he gave was, That thoſe who had the ears of princes do ſo continually lay ambuſhes to ſurprize them to their intereſts, that they can hardly make one right ſtep.

§. XLVI. JULIAN coming to the empire, drove from the palace troops of eunuchs, cooks, barbers, &c. His reaſon was this, That having no women, he needed no eunuchs; and loving ſimple plain meat, he needed no cooks: and he ſaid, One barber would ſerve a great many. A good example for the luxurious Chriſtians of our times.

§. XLVII. THEODOSIUS the younger was ſo merciful in his nature, that inſtead of putting people to death, he wiſhed it were in his power to call the dead to life again.

Theſe were the ſentiments of the ancient grandees of the world, to wit, emperors, kings, princes, captains, ſtateſmen, &c. not unworthy of the thoughts of perſons of the ſame figure and quality now in being: and for that end they are here collected, that ſuch may with more eaſe and brevity behold the true ſtatues of the ancients, not loſt, or leſſened by the decays of time.

III. I will now proceed to report the virtuous doctrines and ſayings of men of more retirement; ſuch as philoſophers and writers, of both Greeks and Romans, who in their reſpective times were maſters in the civility, knowledge and virtue that were among the Gentiles, being moſt of them many ages before the coming of Chriſt.

§. XLVIII. THALES, an ancient Greek philoſopher, being aſked by a perſon that had committed adultery, if he might ſwear? anſwered, By no means; for perjury is not leſs ſinful than adultery; and ſo thou wouldeſt commit two ſins to cover one. Being aſked, What was the beſt condition of a government? he anſwered, That the people be neither rich nor poor; for he placed external happineſs in moderation. He would ſay, That the hardeſt thing in the world was, to know a man's ſelf; but the beſt, to avoid thoſe things which we reprove in others: an excellent and cloſe ſaying. That we ought to chuſe well, and then to hold faſt. That the felicity of the body conſiſts in health, and that in temperance; and the felicity of the ſoul in wiſdom. He thought that God was without beginning or end; that he was the ſearcher of hearts; that he ſaw thoughts, as well as actions: for being aſked of one, if he could ſin, and hide it from God? he anſwered, No, how can I, when he that thinks evil, cannot?

§. XLIX. PYTHAGORAS, a famous and virtuous philoſopher of Italy, being aſked, when men might take the pleaſure of their paſſions? anſwered, When they have a mind to be worſe. He ſaid, The world was like a comedy, and the true philoſophers the ſpectators. He would ſay, That luxury led to debauchery, and debauchery to violence, and that to bitter repentance. That he who taketh too much care of his body makes the priſon of his ſoul more inſufferable. That thoſe who do reprove us are our beſt friends. That men ought to preſerve their bodies from diſeaſes by temperance; their ſouls from ignorance by meditation; their will from vice, by ſelf-denial; and their country from civil war, by juſtice. That it is better to be loved than feared. That virtue makes bold; But, ſaith he, there is nothing ſo fearful as an evil conſcience. He ſaid, That men ſhould believe of a Divinity, that it is, and that it overlooks them, and neglecteth them not; there is no being nor place without God. He told the ſenators of Crotonia (being two thouſand) praying his advice, That they received their country as a depoſitum or truſt from the people; wherefore they ſhould manage it accordingly, ſince they were to reſign their account, with their truſt, to their own children. That the way to do it, was to be equal to all the citizens, and to excel them in nothing more than juſtice. That every one of them ſhould ſo govern their family, that he might refer himſelf to his own houſe, as to a court of judicature, taking great care to preſerve natural affection. That they be examples of temperance in their own families, and to the city. That in courts of judicature none atteſt God by an Oath, but uſe themſelves ſo to ſpeak, as they may be believed without an oath. That the diſcourſe of that philoſopher is vain, by which no paſſion of man is healed: for, as there is no benefit of medicine, if it expel not diſeaſes out of bodies; ſo neither of philoſophy, if it expel not evil out of the ſoul. Of God, an heavenly life and ſtate, he ſaith thus, They mutually exhorted one another, that they ſhould not tear aſunder 'God which is in them.' Their ſtudy and friendſhip, by words and actions, had reference to ſome divine temperament; and to union with God, and to unity with the Mind, and the Divine Soul. That all which they determine to be done aims and tends to the acknowledgment of the Deity. This is the principle; and the whole life of man conſiſts in this, 'That he follow God;' and this is the ground of philoſophy. He ſaith,

Hope all things; for to none belongs deſpair:
All things to God eaſy and perfect are.

The work of the Mind is life. The work of God is immortality, eternal life. The Mind in man is termed God, by participation: the rational ſoul, if directed by the Mind, it inclines the will to virtue, and is termed the good Dæmon, Genius, or Spirit. If by phantaſy and ill affections, it draws the will to vices, the evil Dæmon: whence Pythagoras deſired of God, to keep us from evil, and to ſhew every one the Dæmon, or good Spirit, he ought to uſe. The rational man is more noble than other creatures, as more divine; not content ſolely with one operation (as all other things drawn along by nature, which always acts after the ſame manner) but endued with various gifts, which he uſeth according to his free will; in reſpect of which liberty,

----Men are of heavenly race,
Taught by Diviner Nature what t'imbrace.

By Diviner Nature, is meant the intellectual ſoul; as to intellect, man approaches nigh to God; as to inferior ſenſes, he recedeth from God. By chorus, the infinite joy of the bleſſed ſpirits, their immutable delight, ſtiled by Homer, ἄσβεστος γέλως (inextinguiſhable laughter). For what greater pleaſure, than to behold the ſerene aſpect of God, and next him the ideas and forms of all things, more purely and tranſparently, than ſecondarily, in created beings. The Pythagoreans had this diſtich, among thoſe commonly called the Golden Verſes:

Rid of this body, if the heavens free
You reach, henceforth immortal you ſhall be.

Or thus:

Who after death, arrive at th' heavenly plain,
Are ſtraight like Gods, and never die again.

§. L. Solon, eſteemed, as Thales, one of the Seven Sages of Greece, a noble philoſopher, and a law-giver to the Athenians, was ſo humble, that he refuſed to be prince of that people, and voluntarily baniſhed himſelf, when Piſiſtratus uſurped the government there; reſolving, never to out-live the laws and freedom of his country. He would ſay, That to make a government laſt, the magiſtrates muſt obey the laws, and the people the magiſtrates. It was his judgment, that riches brought luxury, and luxury brought tyranny. Being aſked by Cræſus, king of Lydia, when ſeated in his throne, richly clothed, and magnificently attended, if he had ever ſeen any thing more glorious? He anſwered, Cocks, peacocks, and pheaſants; by how much their beauty is natural. Theſe undervaluing expreſſions of wiſe Solon meeting ſo pat upon the pride and luxury of Cræſus, they parted: the one deſirous of toys and vanities; the other an example and inſtructor of true nobility and virtue, that contemned the king's effeminacy. Another time Cræſus aſked him, who was the happieſt man in the world? expecting he ſhould have ſaid, Cræſus, becauſe the moſt famous for wealth in thoſe parts; he anſwered, Tellus; who, though poor, yet was an honeſt and good man, and contented with what he had: that after he had ſerved the commonwealth faithfully, and ſeen his children and grand-children virtuouſly educated, died for his country in a good old age, and was carried by his children to his grave. This much diſpleaſed Cræſus, but he diſſembled it. Whilſt Solon recommended the happineſs of Tellus, Cræſus, moved, demanded whom he aſſigned the next place to, (making no queſtion but himſelf ſhould be named) Cleobis, ſaith he, and Bito; brethren that loved well, had a competency, were of great health and ſtrength, moſt tender and obedient to their mother, religious of life; who, after ſacrificing in the temple, fell aſleep, and waked no more. Hereat Cræſus growing angry, Strange! ſaith he; doth our happineſs ſeem ſo deſpicable, that thou wilt not rank us equal with private perſons? Solon anſwered, Doſt thou enquire of us about human affairs? knoweſt thou not, that Divine Providence is ſevere, and often full of alteration? Do not we, in proceſs of time, ſee many things we would not? Aye, and ſuffer many things we would not? Count man's life at ſeventy years, which makes * twenty ſix thouſand two hundred and fifty and odd days, there is ſcarcely one day like Plutarch.

Herod.

Plutarch.
Laert.

---

* According to the Athenian account.

Herodot. Halicar.
Stob. Sent. 3.
Clem. Alex. Strom. 1.

like another: ſo that every one, O Cræſus, is attended with croſſes. Thou appeareſt to me very rich, and king over many people; but the queſtion thou aſkeſt, I cannot reſolve, till I hear thou haſt ended thy days happily: for he that hath much wealth is not happier than he that gets his bread from day to day; unleſs Providence continue thoſe good things, and that he dieth well. In every thing, O king, we muſt have regard to the end; for man, to whom God diſpenſeth worldly good things, he at laſt utterly deſerts. Solon, after his diſcourſe, not flattering Cræſus, was diſmiſſed, and accounted unwiſe, that he neglected the preſent good, out of regard to the future. Æſop, that wrote the Fables, being then at Sardis, ſent for thither by Cræſus, and much in favour with him, was grieved to ſee Solon ſo unthankfully diſmiſſed; and ſaid to him, Solon, We muſt either tell kings nothing at all, or what may pleaſe them: No, ſaith Solon, either nothing at all, or what is beſt for them. However it was not long ere Cræſus was of another mind; for, being taken priſoner by Cyrus, the founder of the Perſian monarchy, and by his command fetteredan d put on a pile of wood to be burned, Cræſus ſighed deeply, and cried, O Solon, Solon! Cyrus bid the interpreter aſk, on whom he called? He was ſilent; but at laſt, preſſing him anſwered, Upon him, whom I deſire, above all wealth, to have ſpoken with all tyrants. This not underſtood, upon farther importunity he told them, Solon, an Athenian; who long ſince, ſays he, came to me, and ſeeing my wealth, deſpiſed it; beſides, what he told me is come to paſs: nor did his counſel belong to me alone, but to all mankind, eſpecially thoſe that think themſelves happy. Whilſt Cræſus ſaid thus, the fire began to kindle, and the out-parts to be ſeized by the flame: Cyrus, informed of the interpreters what Cræſus ſaid, began to be troubled; and knowing himſelf to be a man, and that to uſe another, not inferior to himſelf in wealth, ſo ſeverely, might one day be retaliated, inſtantly commanded the fire to be quenched, and Cræſus and his friends to be brought off; whom, ever after, as long as he lived, Cyrus had in great eſteem. Thus Solon gained due praiſe, that of two kings; his advice ſaved one, and inſtructed the other. And as it was in Solon's time that Tragical plays were firſt invented, ſo was he moſt ſevere againſt them; foreſeeing the inconveniencies that followed, upon the people's been affected with that novelty of pleaſure. It is reported of him, that he went himſelf to the play, and after it was ended, he went to Theſpis, the great actor, and aſked him, If he were not aſhamed to tell ſo many lyes in the face of ſo great an auditory? Theſpis anſwered, as it is now uſual, There is no harm nor ſhame to act ſuch things in jeſt. Solon, ſtriking his ſtaff hard upon the ground, replied, But in a ſhort time, we who approve of this kind of jeſt ſhall uſe it in earneſt in our common affairs and contracts. In fine, he abſolutely forbad him to teach or act plays; conceiving them deceitful and unprofitable; diverting youth and tradeſmen from more neceſſary and virtuous employments. He defined them happy, who are competently furniſhed with their outward callings, that live temperately and honeſtly. He would ſay, That cities are the common-ſhore of wickedneſs. He affirmed that to be the beſt family, which got not unjuſtly, kept not unfaithfully, ſpent not with repentance. Obſerve (ſaith he) honeſty in thy converſation, 'more ſtrictly than an Oath.' Seal words with ſilence; ſilence with opportunity. Never lye, but ſpeak the truth. Fly pleaſure, for it brings ſorrow. Adviſe not the people what is moſt pleaſant, but what is beſt. Make not friends in haſte, nor haſtily part with them. Learn to obey, and thou wilt know how to command. Be arrogant to none; be mild to thoſe that are about thee. Converſe not with wicked perſons. Meditate on ſerious things. Reverence thy parents. Cheriſh thy friend. Conform to Reaſon; and in all things take counſel of God. In fine, his two ſhort ſentences were theſe, Of nothing Too much; and, Know Thyſelf.

§. LI. CHILON, another of the Wiſe Men of Greece, would ſay, That it was the perfection of a man to foreſee and prevent miſchiefs. That herein good people differ from bad ones, their hopes were firm and aſſured. That God was the great touch-ſtone, or rule of mankind. That mens tongues ought not to out-run their judgment. That we ought not to flatter great men, leſt we exalt them above their merit and ſtation; nor to ſpeak hardly of the helpleſs. They that would govern a ſtate well, muſt govern their families well. He would ſay, That a man ought ſo to behave himſelf, that he fall neither into hatred nor diſgrace. That that common-wealth is happieſt, where the people mind the law more than the lawyers. Men ſhould not forget the favours they receive, nor remember thoſe they do. Three things he ſaid were difficult, yet neceſſary to be obſerved, To keep ſecrets, forgive injuries, and uſe time well. Speak not ill, (ſays he) of thy neighbour. Go ſlowly to the feaſts of thy friends, but ſwiftly to their troubles. Speak well of the dead. Shun buſy-bodies. Prefer loſs before covetous gain. Deſpiſe not the miſerable. If powerful, behave thyſelf mildly, that thou mayeſt be loved, rather than feared. Order thy houſe well: bridle thy anger: graſp not at much: make not haſte, neither dote upon any thing below. A prince (ſaith he) muſt not take up his time about tranſitory and mortal things; eternal and immortal are fitteſt for him. To conclude: he was ſo juſt in all his actions, that Laertius tells us, he profeſſed in his old age, that he had never done any thing contrary to the conſcience of an upright man; only, that of one thing he was doubtful, having given ſentence againſt his friend, according to law, he adviſed his friend to appeal from him (his judge), ſo to preſerve both his friend and the law. Thus true and tender was conſcience in Heathen Chilon.

§. LII. PERIANDER (a prince and philoſopher too) would ſay, That pleaſures are mortal, but virtues immortal. In ſucceſs, be moderate; in diſappointments, patient and prudent. Be alike to thy friends, in proſperity and in adverſity. Peace is good; raſhneſs, dangerous; gain, ſordid. Betray not ſecrets. Puniſh the guilty. Reſtrain men from ſin. They that would rule ſafely muſt be guarded by love, not arms. To conclude, ſaith he, live worthy of praiſe, ſo wilt thou die bleſſed.

Baart. Suid. Protag. Stob. 28.

§. LIII. BIAS, one of the Seven Wiſe Men, being in a ſtorm with wicked men, who cried mightily to God; Hold your tongues, ſaith he, it were better he knew not you were here: a ſaying that hath great doctrine in it; the devotion of the wicked doth them no good: it anſwers to that paſſage in ſcripture, 'The prayers of the wicked are an abomination to the Lord.' An ungodly man aſking him, What godlineſs was? he was ſilent; but the other murmuring, ſaith he, What is that to thee? that is not thy concern. He was ſo tender in his nature, that he ſeldom judged any criminal to death, but he wept; adding, One part goeth to God, and that other part I muſt give the law. That man is unhappy, ſaith he, that cannot bear affliction. It is a diſeaſe of the mind, to deſire that which cannot, or is not fit to be had. It is an ill thing not to be mindful of other men's miſeries. To one who aſked, What is hard? he anſwered, To bear chearfully a change for the worſe. Thoſe, ſays he, who buſy themſelves in vain knowledge, reſemble owls that ſee by night, and are blind by day; for they are ſharp-ſighted in vanity, but dark at the approach of true light and knowledge. He adds, Undertake deliberately; but then go through. Speak not haſtily, leſt thou ſin. Be neither ſilly nor ſubtil. Hear much; ſpeak little and ſeaſonably. Make profeſſion of God every where; and impute the good thou doſt, not to thyſelf, but to the power of God. His country being invaded, and the people flying with the beſt of their goods, aſked, Why he carried none of his? I, ſaith he, carry my goods within me. Valerius Maximus adds, In his breaſt; not to be ſeen by the eye, but to be prized by the ſoul; not to be demoliſhed by mortal hands; preſent with them that ſtay, and not forſaking thoſe that fly.

Laert. Stob.

Prov. xv. 8.

§. LIV. CLEOBULUS, a prince and philoſopher of Lyndus. He would ſay, That it was man's duty to be always employed upon ſomething that was good. Again, Be never vain nor ungrateful. Beſtow your daughters virgins in years, but matrons in diſcretion. Do good to thy friend, to keep him; to thy enemy, to gain him. When any man goeth forth, let him conſider what he hath to do; when he returneth, examine what he hath done. Know, that to reverence thy father is thy duty. Hear willingly, but truſt not haſtily. Obtain by perſuaſion, not by violence. Being rich, be not exalted; poor, be not dejected. Forego enmity: inſtruct thy children: pray to God, and perſevere in godlineſs.

Laert. Plut. Sympoſ. Sap. Sep. Stob. Ser.

§. LV. PITTACUS being aſked, What was beſt? he anſwered, To do the preſent thing well. He would ſay, What thou doſt take ill in thy neighbour, do not thyſelf. Reproach not the unhappy; for the hand of God is upon them. Be true to thy truſt. Bear with thy neighbour; love thy neighbour. Reproach not thy friend, tho' he recede from thee a little. He would ſay, That common-wealth is beſt ordered, where the wicked have no command; and that family, which hath neither ornament nor neceſſity. To conclude: he adviſed to acquire honeſty; love diſcipline; obſerve temperance; gain prudence; mind diligence; and keep truth, faith, and piety. He had a brother, who dying without iſſue left him his eſtate; ſo that when Cræſus offered him wealth, he anſwered, I have more by half than I deſire. He alſo affirmed That family the beſt, who got not unjuſtly, kept not unfaithfully, ſpent not with repentance: and, That happineſs conſiſts in a virtuous and honeſt life, in being content with a competency of outward things, and in uſing them temperately. And to conclude, he earneſtly enjoined all to flee corporal pleaſure; for, ſays he, it certainly brings ſorrow: but to obſerve an honeſt life more ſtrictly than an oath; and meditate on ſerious things.

Plutarch. Stob. 28.

§. LVI. HIPPIAS, a philoſopher: It is recorded of him, that he would have every one provide his own neceſſaries; and, that he might do what he taught, he was his own tradeſman. He was ſingular in all ſuch arts and employments, inſomuch that he made the very buſkins he wore. A better life than an Alexander's.

Cic. lib. de Orat.

§. LVII. The Gymnoſophiſtæ were a ſect of philoſophers in Ægypt, that ſo deſpiſed gaudy apparel, and the reſt of the world's intemperance, that they went almoſt naked; living poorly, and with great meanneſs; by which they were enabled againſt all cold, and overcame that luſt by innocence, which people, that are called Chriſtians, tho' covered, are overcome withal.

Plin. 7. 2. Cic. Tuſc. Queſt. 5.

§. LVIII. The Bambycatii were a certain great people, that inhabited about the river Tygris in Aſia; who obſerving the great influence gold, ſilver, and precious jewels had upon their minds, agreed to bury all in the earth, to prevent the corruption of their manners. They uſed inferior metals, and lived with very ordinary accommodation; wearing moſtly but one very grave and plain robe to cover nakedneſs. It were well, if Chriſtians would mortify their unſatiable appetites after wealth and vanity any way, for Heathens judge their exceſs.

Plin.

§. LXIX.

1668. Ch. XIX. Vid. Suid.

§. LIX. The Athenians had two diſtinct numbers of men, called the Gynaecoſmi and Gynaeconomi. Theſe were appointed by the magiſtrates to overlook the actions of the people: the firſt was to ſee that they apparelled and behaved themſelves gravely; eſpecially that women were of modeſt behaviour: and the other was to be preſent at their treats and feſtivals, to ſee that there was no exceſs, nor diſorderly carriage: and in caſe any were found criminal, they had full power to puniſh them. When, alas! when ſhall this care and wiſdom be ſeen among the Chriſtians of theſe times, that ſo intemperance might be prevented? But it is too evident they love the power and the profits, but deſpiſe the virtue, of government; making it an end, inſtead of a means to that happy end, viz. The well-ordering the manners and converſation of the people, and equally diſtributing rewards and puniſhments.

Cic. Tuſ. Queſt. 5. Clem. Alex. Stro.

§. LX. Anacharsis, a Scythian, was a great philoſopher; Cræſus offered him large ſums of money, but he refuſed them. Hanno did the like; to whom he anſwered, My apparel is a Scythian rug; my ſhoes, the hardneſs of my feet; my bed, the earth; my ſauce, hunger: you may come to me as one that is contented; but thoſe gifts which you ſo much eſteem, beſtow either on your citizens, or in ſacrifice to the immortal Gods.

Plut. contra. Uſur. Lyſand. Cic. Tuſ. Queſt. 5.

§. LXI. Anaxagoras, a nobleman, but true philoſopher, left his great patrimony to ſeek out wiſdom: and being reproved by his friends for the little care he had of his eſtate, anſwered, It is enough that You care for it. One aſked him, Why he had no more love for his country than to leave it? Wrong me not, ſaith he, my greateſt care is my country, pointing his finger towards heaven. Returning home, and taking a view of his great poſſeſſions, If I had not diſregarded them (ſaith he) I had periſhed. He was a great clearer and improver of the doctrine of One Eternal God, denying divinity to ſun, moon and ſtars; ſaying, God was infinite, not confined to place; the Eternal Wiſdom and Efficient Cauſe of all things; the Divine Mind and Underſtanding; who, when matter was confuſed, came and reduced it to order, which is the world we ſee. He ſuffered much from ſome magiſtrates for his opinion; yet, dying, was admired by them: his epitaph in Engliſh thus:

> Here lies, who through the trueſt paths did paſs
> To th' world cæleſtial, Anaxagoras.

§. LXII. Heraclitus was invited by king Darius, for his great virtue and learning, to this effect; Come, as ſoon as thou canſt, to my preſence and royal palace; for the Greeks, for the moſt part, are not obſequious to wiſe men, but deſpiſe the good things which they deliver. With me thou ſhalt have the firſt place, and daily honour and titles: thy way of living ſhall be as noble as thy inſtructions. But Heraclitus refuſing his offer, returned this anſwer; Heraclitus to Darius the king, health. Moſt men refrain from juſtice and truth, and purſue inſatiableneſs and vain-glory, by reaſon of their folly; but I, having forgot all evil, and ſhunning the ſociety of inbred envy and pride, will never come to the kingdom of Perſia, being contented with a little, according to my own mind. He alſo ſlighted the Athenians. He had great and clear apprehenſions of the nature and power of God, maintaining his divinity againſt the idolatry in faſhion. This definition he gives of God; He is not made with hands. The whole world, adorned with his creatures, is his manſion. Where is God? Shut up in temples? Impious men! who place their God in the dark. It is a reproach to a man, to tell him he is a ſtone; yet the God you profeſs is born of a rock. You ignorant people! you know not God: his works bear witneſs of him. Of himſelf he ſaith, O ye men, will ye not learn why I never laugh? it is not that I hate men, but their wickedneſs. If you would not have me weep, live in peace: you carry ſwords in your tongues; you plunder wealth, raviſh women, poiſon friends, betray the truſt people repoſe in you: ſhall I laugh, when I ſee men do theſe things? their garments, beards, and heads, adorned with unneceſſary care; a mother deſerted by a wicked ſon; or young men conſuming their patrimony; a citizen's wife taken from him; a virgin raviſhed; a concubine kept as a wife; others filling their bellies at feaſts, more with poiſon than with dainties? Virtue would ſtrike me blind, if I ſhould laugh at your wars. By muſic, pipes, and ſtripes, you are excited to things contrary to all harmony. Iron, a metal more proper for ploughs and tillages, is fitted for ſlaughter and death: men, raiſing armies of men, covet to kill one another; and puniſh men that quit the field for not ſtaying to murder men. They honour, as valiants, ſuch as are drunk with blood; but lions, horſes, eagles, and other creatures, uſe not ſwords, bucklers, and inſtruments of war: their limbs are their weapons, ſome their horns, ſome their bills, ſome their wings; to one is given ſwiftneſs; to another, bigneſs; to a third, ſwimming. No irrational creature uſeth a ſword, but keeps itſelf within the laws of its creation; except Man, that doth not ſo; which brings the heavier blame, becauſe he hath the greateſt underſtanding. You muſt leave your wars, and your wickedneſs, which you ratify by a law, if you would have me leave my ſeverity. I have overcome pleaſure, I have overcome riches, I have overcome ambition, I have maſtered flattery: fear hath nothing to object againſt me, drunkenneſs hath nothing to charge upon me, anger is afraid of me: I have won the garland, in fighting againſt theſe enemies.----This, and much more, did he write in his epiſtles to Hermodorus, of his complaints againſt the great degeneracy of the Epheſians. And in an epiſtle to Aphidamus, mus, he writes, I am fallen ſick, Aphidamus, of a dropſy. Whatſoever is of us, if it get the dominion, it becomes a diſeaſe. Exceſs of heat is a fever; exceſs of cold, a palſy; exceſs of wind, a colick: my diſeaſe cometh from exceſs of moiſture. The ſoul is ſomething divine, which keeps all theſe in a due proportion. I know the nature of the world; I know that of man; I know diſeaſes; I know health: I will cure myſelf, ‘I ‘will imitate God,’ who makes equal the inequalities of the world. But if my body be overpreſſed, it muſt deſcend to the place ordained; however, my ſoul ſhall not deſcend; but, being a thing immortal, ſhall aſcend on high, where an heavenly manſion ſhall receive me.----A moſt weighty and pathetical diſcourſe: they that know any thing of God, may ſavour ſomething divine in it. Oh! that the degenerate Chriſtians of theſe times would but take a view of the virtue, temperance, zeal, piety and faith of this Heathen, who, notwithſtanding that he lived five hundred years before the coming of Chriſt in the fleſh, had theſe excellent ſentences! Yet again; he taught that God puniſheth not by taking away riches; he rather alloweth them to the wicked, to diſcover them; for poverty may be a veil. Speaking of God, How can that light which never ſets be ever hidden or obſcured? Juſtice, ſaith he, ſhall ſeize one day upon defrauders and witneſſes of falſe things. Unleſs a man hopes to the end, for that which is to be hoped for, he ſhall not find that which is unſearchable; which Clemens, an ancient father, applied to Iſa. vi. ‘Unleſs you believe, you ſhall not underſtand.’ Heraclitus derided the ſacrifices of creatures: Do you think, ſaith he, to pacify God, and cleanſe yourſelves, by polluting yourſelves with blood? as if a man ſhould go into the dirt to cleanſe himſelf. Which ſhewed a ſight of a more ſpiritual worſhip, than that of the ſacrifices of beaſts. He lived ſolitary in the mountains; had a ſight of his end: and as he was prepared for it, ſo he rejoiced in it. Theſe certainly were the men, ‘who having not a ‘law without them, became a law unto themſelves, ſhewing forth the work of the law ‘written in their hearts.’ And who, for that reaſon, ſhall judge the circumciſion, and receive the reward of ‘Well done,’ by him who is judge of quick and dead.

Rom. ii. 14.

§. LXIII. Democritus would ſay, That he had lived to an extraordinary age, by keeping himſelf from luxury and exceſs. That a little eſtate went a great way with men that were neither covetous nor prodigal. That luxury furniſhed great tables with variety; and temperance furniſheth little ones. That riches do not conſiſt in the poſſeſſion, but right uſe, of wealth. He was a man of great retirement, avoiding public honours and employments: bewailed by the people of Abdera as mad, whilſt indeed he only ſmiled at the madneſs of the world.

§. LXIV. Socrates, the moſt religious and learned philoſopher of his time (and of whom it is reported Apollo gave this character, That he was the wiſeſt man on earth) was a man of a ſevere life, and inſtructed people gratis in juſt, grave and virtuous manners: for which being envied by Ariſtophanes, the vain comical wit of that age, as one ſpoiling the trade of plays, and exerciſing the generality of the people with more noble and virtuous things; he was repreſented by him in a play, in which he rendered Socrates ſo ridiculous, that the vulgar would rather part with Socrates in earneſt, than Socrates in jeſt; which made way for their impeaching him, as an enemy to their gods; for which they put him to death. But in a ſhort ſpace, his eighty judges, and the whole people, ſo deeply repented the loſs, that they ſlew many of his accuſers: ſome hanged themſelves; none would trade with them, nor anſwer them a queſtion. They erected ſeveral ſtatues to his praiſe; they forbad his name to be mentioned, that they might forget their injuſtice: they called home his baniſhed friends and ſcholars. And, by the moſt wiſe and learned men of that age, it is obſerved, that famous city was puniſhed with the moſt dreadful plagues that ever raged amongſt them; and all Greece, with it, never proſpered in any conſiderable undertaking; but from that time always decayed. Amongſt many of his ſober and religious maxims, upon which he was accuſtomed to diſcourſe with his diſciples, theſe are ſome:

Plat. Apolog.
Diog. Laert.
Helvie. Cic.
Tuſ Queſt. 1.
Xenoph. Brut.
Cic. Orat.
Liban. Apol.
Varro Hiſt.
Schol. Ariſt.

He taught every-where, That an upright man, and an happy man, are all one. They that do good, are employed; they that ſpend their time in recreations, are idle. To do good is the beſt courſe of life; he only is idle, who might be better employed. An horſe is not known by his furniture, but qualities; ſo men are to be eſteemed for virtue, not wealth. Being aſked, Who lived without trouble? he anſwered, Thoſe who are conſcious to themſelves of no evil thing. To one who demanded, What was nobility? he anſwered, A good temper and diſpoſition of ſoul and body. They who know what they ought to do, and do it not, are not wiſe and temperate, but fools and ſtupid. To one that complained, he had not been benefited by his travels; Not without reaſon (ſays Socrates) thou didſt travel with thy Self: intimating, he knew not the eternal Mind of God to direct and inform him. Being demanded, What wiſdom was? ſaid, A virtuous compoſure of the ſoul. And being aſked, who were wiſe? anſwered, Thoſe that ſin not. Seeing a young man rich, but ignorant of heavenly things, and purſuing earthly pleaſures; Behold (ſays he) a golden ſlave. Soft ways of living beget neither a good conſtitution of body nor mind. Fine and rich cloaths are only for comedians. Being de-

Clem. Alex.
Strom. 7.417.
Xen. me. 3.
p. 720. Xen.
me. 3. p. 778.
779, 780.
Stob. Ech.
Storm. 1. 11.
Stob. 4. 6.
Stob. 2. 18.
Xenoph.
Mem. 3.
Senec. Epiſt.
1. 103.
Stob. 28.
Stob. 32.
Xen. Mem. 1.
Ælian. 9.
Stob. 37.
Stob. 37.
Stob. 87.

Xen. Mem. 3. 4. Ælian. Var. Hiſt. 9. Stob. 37. Xenoph. Mem. 4. 802. Plat. Phæd.

manded from what things men and women ought to refrain? he anſwered, Pleaſure. Being aſked, What continence and temperance were? he ſaid, Government of corporal deſires and pleaſures. The wicked live to eat, &c. but the good eat to live. Temperate perſons become the moſt excellent; eat that which neither hurts the body nor mind, and which is eaſy to be gotten. One ſaying, It was a great matter to abſtain from what one deſires; But (ſays he) it is better not to deſire at all. [This is deep religion, even very hard to profeſſed Chriſtians.] "It is the property of God, to need nothing; and they that need, and are contented with, leaſt, come neareſt to God. The only and beſt way to worſhip God is, to mind and obey whatſoever he commands. That the ſouls of men and women partake of the Divine Nature. That God is ſeen of the virtuous mind. That by waiting upon him, they are united unto him, in an inacceſſible place of purity and happineſs. Which God, he aſſerted always to be near him."

Xen. Mem. 1. p. 710.

Xen. Mem. 4. Plato de Legib.

Many more are the excellent ſayings of this great man, who was not leſs famous for his ſayings, than his example, with the greateſt nations; yet died he a ſacrifice to the ſottiſh fury of the vain world. The hiſtory of his life reports, that his father was told, He ſhould have the Guide of his life WITHIN him, which ſhould be more to him than five hundred maſters; which proved true: inſtructing his ſcholars herein, charging them not to neglect theſe divine affairs, which chiefly concern man, to mind or enquire after ſuch things as are without in the viſible world. He taught the uſe of outward things only as they were neceſſary to life and commerce; forbidding ſuperfluities and curioſities. He was martyred for his doctrine, after having lived ſeventy years the moſt admired, followed, and viſited, of all men in his time, by kings and commonwealths; and than whom, antiquity mentions none with more reverence and honour. Well were it for poor England, if her conceited Chriſtians were true Socrates's; whoſe ſtrict, juſt and ſelf-denying life doth not beſpeak him more famous, than it will Chriſtians infamous at the revelation of the righteous judgment; where Heathens virtue ſhall aggravate Chriſtians intemperance; and their humility, the others exceſſive pride: and juſtly too, ſince a Greater than Socrates is come, whoſe name they profeſs, but they will not obey his law.

Plato de Rep.

Diog. Laert.

Laert. in vit. Xen. Crat. Stob. Ælian.

Alchinous.

§. LXV. PLATO, that famous philoſopher and ſcholar to Socrates, was ſo grave, and devoted to divine things, nay, ſo diſcreetly politick, that in his Commonwealth he would not ſo much as harbour poetical fancies (much leſs open ſtages) as being too effeminate, and apt to withdraw the minds of youth from more noble, more manly, as well as more heavenly exerciſes. Plato ſeeing a young man play at dice, reproved him ſharply; the other anſwered, What! for ſo ſmall a matter? Cuſtom (ſaith Plato) is no ſmall thing: let idle hours be ſpent more uſefully. Let youth (ſaid he) take delight in good things; for pleaſures are the baits of evil. Obſerve; the momentary ſweetneſs of a delicious life is followed with eternal ſorrow; the ſhort pain of the contrary with eternal pleaſure. Being commanded to put on a purple garment by the king of Sicily, he refuſed, ſaying, He was a man, and ſcorned ſuch effeminacies. Inviting Timothy, the Athenian general, to ſupper, he treated him with herbs, water, and ſuch ſpare diet as he was accuſtomed to eat. Timothy's friends next day laughing, aſked, how he was entertained? he anſwered, Never better in his life; for he ſlept all night after his ſupper: thereby commending his temperance. He addicted himſelf to religious contemplations; and is ſaid to have lived a virtuous and ſingle life, always eyeing and obeying the MIND, which he ſometimes called GOD, the Father of all things; affirming, Who lived ſo, ſhould become like him, and ſo be related to, and joined with, the Divinity itſelf. This ſame Plato, upon his dying-bed, ſent for his friends about him, and told them, The whole world was out of the way, in that they underſtood not, nor regarded, the Mind, (that is, God, or the Word, or Begotten of God) aſſuring them, Thoſe men died moſt comfortably, that lived moſt conformable to Right Reaſon, and ſought and adored the Firſt Cauſe, meaning God.

Laert. vit. Socr. Ælian.

Laert.

§. LXVI. ANTISTHENES, an Athenian philoſopher, had taught in the ſtudy of eloquence ſeveral years; but upon hearing Socrates treat of the ſeriouſneſs of religion, of the divine life, eternal rewards, &c. 'bad all his ſcholars ſeek them a new maſter; for he had 'found one for himſelf.' Wherefore ſelling his eſtate, he diſtributed it to the poor, and betook himſelf wholly to the conſideration of heavenly things; going chearfully ſix miles every day, to hear Socrates.---But where are the like preachers and converts amongſt the people called Chriſtians! Obſerve the daily pains of Socrates; ſurely he did not ſtudy a week to read a written ſermon: we are aſſured of the contrary; for it was frequent with him to preach to the people at any time of the day, in the very ſtreets, as occaſion ſerved, and his Good Genius moved him. Neither was he an hireling, or covetous; for he did it gratis: ſurely then he had not fat benefices, tithes, glebes, &c. And let the ſelf-denial and diligence of Antiſthenes be conſidered, who, of a philoſopher and maſter, became a ſcholar, and that a daily one: ſurely, it was then matter of reproach, as it is now; ſhewing thereby both want of knowledge, (tho' called a philoſopher) and his great deſire to obtain it of one that could teach him. None of theſe uſed to go to plays, balls, treats, &c. They found more ſerious employments for their minds, and were examples of temperance to the world. I will repeat ſome of his grave ſentences, as reported by Laertius and others;

others, namely, That thoſe only are noble who are virtuous. That virtue was ſelf-ſufficient to happineſs. That it conſiſteth in actions, not requiring many words, nor much learning, and is ſelf-ſufficient to wiſdom: for that all other things have reference thereunto. That men ſhould not govern by force, nor by laws, unleſs good, but by juſtice. To a friend, complaining he had loſt his notes, Thou ſhouldeſt have writ them upon thy mind (ſaith he) and not in a book. Thoſe who would never die, muſt live juſtly and piouſly. Being aſked, What learning was beſt? That, ſaith he, which unlearneth evil. To one that praiſed a life full of pleaſures and delicacies; Let the ſons of my enemies, ſaith he, live delicately: counting it the greateſt miſery. We ought, ſays he, to aim at ſuch pleaſures as follow honeſt labour; and not thoſe which go before it. When at any time he ſaw a woman richly dreſſed, he would, in a way of reproach, bid her huſband bring out his horſe and arms: meaning, if he were prepared to juſtify the injuries ſuch wantonneſs uſeth to produce, he might the better allow thoſe dangerous freedoms: otherwiſe, ſaith he, pluck off her rich and gaudy attire. He is ſaid to exclaim bitterly againſt pleaſures; often ſaying, I had rather be mad, than addicted to pleaſure, and ſpend my days in decking and feeding my carcaſe. Thoſe, ſays he, who have once learned the way to temperance and virtue, let them not offer to entangle themſelves again with fruitleſs ſtories, and vain learning; nor be addicted to corporal delicacies, which will dull the mind, and will divert and hinder them from the purſuit of thoſe more noble and heavenly virtues. Upon the death of his beloved maſter, Socrates, he inſtituted a ſect called Cynicks; out of whom came the great ſect of the Stoicks: both which had theſe common principles, which they daily, with great and unwearied diligence, did maintain, and inſtruct people in the knowledge of, viz. No man is wiſe or happy, but the good and virtuous man. That not much learning, nor ſtudy of many things, was neceſſary. That a wiſe man is never drunk nor mad: that he never ſinneth. That a wiſe man is void of paſſion: that he is ſincere, religious, grave: that he only is divine. That ſuch only are prieſts and prophets, who have God in themſelves. And that his law is imprinted in their minds, and the minds of all men. That ſuch an one ONLY can pray; is innocent, meek, temperate, ingenuous, noble; a good magiſtrate, father, ſon, maſter, ſervant, and worthy of praiſe. On the contrary, that wicked men can be one of theſe. "That the ſame belongs to men and women."

Stob. ibid. 117. Diog. Laert.
Agel. lib. 9. c. 5.
Laert. vir. mem.
Laert. Plut. de rep. Stoi. Stob. Cic. de nat. Deo. lib. ii. Lect. de Ira Dei, cap. 10.

Their diet was ſlender, their food only what would ſatisfy nature. Their garments exceeding mean. Their habitations ſolitary and homely. They affirmed, thoſe who lived with feweſt things, and were contented, moſt nearly approached God, who wants nothing. They voluntarily deſpiſed riches, glory and nobility, as fooliſh ſhews, and vain fictions, that had no true and ſolid worth or happineſs in them. They made all things to be good and evil, and flatly denied the idle ſtories of fortune and chance.

Plut. Pl. Ph. 16. Cic. Tuſc. Queſt. 4. Diog. Laert. vit. Mem. Stob.

Certainly theſe were they, who having no external law, 'became a law unto themſelves;' and did not abuſe the knowledge they had of the inviſible God; but to their capacities inſtructed men in the knowledge of that righteous, ſerious, ſolid and heavenly Principle, which leads to true and everlaſting happineſs all thoſe that embrace it.

§. LXVII. XENOCRATES refuſed Alexander's preſent, yet treated his ambaſſadors after his temperate and ſpare manner; ſaying, You ſee I have no need of your maſter's bounty, that am ſo well pleaſed with this. He would ſay, That one ought not to carry one's eyes or one's hands into another man's houſe; that is, be a buſy-body. That one ought to be moſt circumſpect of one's actions before children, leſt by example one's faults ſhould out-live one's ſelf. He ſaid, Pride was the greateſt obſtruction to true knowledge. His chaſtity and integrity were remarkable, and reverenced in Athens: Phryne, the famous Athenian courtezan, could not place a temptation upon him; nor Philip, king of Macedon, a bribe; though the reſt ſent in the embaſſy were corrupted. And being once brought for a witneſs, the judges roſe up, and cried out, Tender no oath to Xenocrates, for he will ſpeak the truth! A reſpect they did not allow to one another. Holding his peace at ſome detracting diſcourſe, they aſked him, why he ſpoke not? Becauſe, ſaith he, I have ſometimes repented of ſpeaking, but never of holding my peace.

Laert. Val. Max. 4. 3. 2. 16. Cic. pro Fal. Val. Max. 7. 2.

§. LXVIII. BION would ſay, That great men walk in ſlippery places. That it is a great miſchief not to bear affliction. That ungodlineſs is an enemy to aſſurance. He ſaid to a covetous man, That he did not poſſeſs his wealth, but his wealth poſſeſſed him; abſtaining from uſing it, as if it were another man's. In fine, That men ought to purſue a courſe of virtue, without regard to the praiſe or reproach of men.

§. LXIX. DEMONAX, ſeeing the great care that men had of their bodies, more than of their minds; They deck the houſe, ſaith he, but ſlight the maſter. He would ſay, That many are inquiſitive after the make of the world, but are little concerned about their own, which were a ſcience much more worthy of their pains. To a city that would eſtabliſh the gladiators, or prize-fighters, he ſaid, That they ought firſt to overthrow the Altar of Mercy: intimating the cruelty of ſuch practices. One aſking him, why he turned philoſopher? Becauſe, ſaith he, I am MAN. He would ſay of the prieſts of Greece, If they could better inſtruct the people, they could not give them too much; but if not, the people ple could not give them too little. He lamented the unprofitableneſs of good laws, by being in bad mens hands.

§. LXX. Diogenes was angry with criticks, that were nice of words, and not of their own actions; with muſicians, that tune their inſtruments, but could not govern their paſſions; with aſtrologers, that have their eyes in the ſky, and look not to their own goings; with orators, that ſtudy to ſpeak well, but not to do well; with covetous men, that take care to get, but never uſe their eſtates; with thoſe philoſophers, that deſpiſe greatneſs, and yet court great men; and with thoſe that ſacrifice for health, and yet ſurfeit themſelves with eating their ſacrifices. One time, diſcourſing of the nature, pleaſure and reward of virtue, and the people not regarding what he ſaid, he fell a ſinging; at which every one preſſed to hear: whereupon he cried out, in abhorrence of their ſtupidity, 'O God, how 'much more is the world in love with folly, than with wiſdom!' Seeing a man ſprinkling himſelf with water, after having done ſome ill thing; Unhappy man! ſaith he, doſt thou not know that the errors of life are not to be waſhed away with water? To one who ſaid, Life is an ill thing; he anſwered, Life is not an ill thing; but an ill life is an ill thing. He was very temperate, for his bed and his table he found every-where. One ſeeing him waſh herbs, ſaid, If thou hadſt followed Dionyſius, king of Sicily, thou wouldeſt not have needed to have waſhed herbs: he anſwered, If thou hadſt waſhed herbs, thou neededſt not to have followed Dionyſius. He lighted a candle at noon, ſaying, I look for a Man; implying, that the world was darkened by vice, and men effeminated. To a luxurious perſon, that had waſted his means, ſupping upon olives; If, ſaith he, thou hadſt uſed to dine ſo, thou wouldeſt not have needed to ſup ſo. To a young man dreſſing himſelf neatly, If this, ſaith he, be for the ſake of men, thou art unhappy; if for women, thou art unjuſt. Another time, ſeeing an effeminate young man; Art not thou aſhamed, ſaith he, to uſe thyſelf worſe than nature hath made thee? ſhe hath made thee a man, but thou wilt force thyſelf to be a woman. To one that courted a bad woman; O wretch! ſaid he, what meaneſt thou, to aſk for that which is better loſt than found? To one that ſmelled of ſweet unguents, Have a care, ſaith he, this perfume make not thy life ſtink. He compared covetous men to ſuch as have the dropſy: Thoſe are full of money, yet deſire more; theſe of water, yet thirſt for more. Being aſked, What beaſts were the worſt? In the field, ſaith he, bears and lions; in the city, uſurers and flatterers. At a feaſt, one giving him a great cup of wine, he threw it away; for which being blamed, If I had drank it, ſaith he, not only the wine would have been loſt, but I alſo. One aſking him, how he might order himſelf beſt? he ſaid, By reproving thoſe things in thyſelf, which thou blameſt in others. Another demanding, what was hardeſt? he anſwered, To know ourſelves, to whom we are partial. An aſtrologer diſcourſing to the people of the wandering ſtars; No, ſaith he, it is not the ſtars, but theſe (pointing to the people that heard him). Being aſked, what men were moſt noble, They ſaith he, who contemn wealth, honour and pleaſure, and endure the contraries, to wit, poverty, ſcorn, pain and death. To a wicked man, reproaching him for his poverty; I never knew, ſaith he, any man puniſhed for his poverty, but many for their wickedneſs. To one bewailing himſelf that he ſhould not die in his own country; Be of comfort, ſaith he, for the way to heaven is alike in every place. One day he went backwards; whereat the people laughing, Are ye not aſhamed, ſaith he, to do that all your life-time, which you deride in me?

Laert. §. LXXI. Crates, a Theban, famous for his ſelf-denial and virtue; deſcended from the houſe of Alexander, of great eſtate, at leaſt two hundred talents; which, having moſtly diſtributed among the poor citizens, he became a conſtant profeſſor of the Cynick philoſophy. He exceedingly inveighed againſt common women. Seeing at Delphos a golden image, that Phryne, the courtezan, had ſet up, by the gains of her trade, cried out, This is a trophy of the Greeks intemperance. Seeing a young man highly fed, and fat; Unhappy youth, ſaith he, do not fortify thy priſon. To another, followed by a great many paraſites; Young man, ſaith he, I am ſorry to ſee thee ſo much alone. Walking one day upon the exchange, where he beheld people mighty buſy after their divers callings; Theſe people, ſaith he, think themſelves happy; but I am happy that have nothing to do with them: for I place my happineſs in poverty, not in riches. Oh! men do not know how much a wallet, a meaſure of lupins, with ſecurity, is worth. Of his wife, Hipparchia, a woman of wealth and extraction, but nobler for her love to true philoſophy, and how they came together, there will be occaſion to make mention in its place.

Stob. Strom. 45. §. LXXII. Ariſtotle, a ſcholar to Plato, and the oracle of philoſophy to theſe very times, tho' not ſo divinely contemplative as his maſter, neverthleſs follows him in this; That luxury ſhould by good diſcipline be exiled human ſocieties. Ariſtotle ſeeing a youth finely dreſt, ſaid, Art thou not aſhamed, when nature hath made thee a man, to make thyſelf a woman? And to another, gazing on his fine cloak; Why doſt thou boaſt of a ſheep's fleece? He ſaid, It was the duty of a good man to live ſo under laws, as he ſhould do if there were none.

Stob. 161. ibid. 46.

§. LXXIII.

1668. Ch. XIX.

§. LXXIII. Mandanis, a great and famous philoſopher of the Gymnoſophiſts, whom Alexander the Great required to come to the feaſt of Jupiter's ſon (meaning himſelf), declaring, That if he came, he ſhould be rewarded; if not, he ſhould be put to death. The philoſopher contemned his meſſage, as vain and ſordid: he firſt told them, That he denied him to be Jupiter's ſon (a mere fiction). Next, That as for his gifts, he eſteemed them nothing worth; his own country could furniſh him with neceſſaries; beyond which he coveted nothing. And laſtly, As for the death he threatned, he did not fear it; but of the two, he wiſhed it rather; in that, ſaith he, it is a change to a more bleſſed and happy ſtate. Stob. 161. ibid. 46.

§. LXXIV. Zeno, the great Stoick, and author of that philoſophy, had many things admirable in him; who not only ſaid, but practiſed. He was a man of that integrity, and ſo reverenced for it by the Athenians, that they depoſited the keys of the city in his hands, as the only perſon fit to be intruſted with their liberties: yet by birth a ſtranger, being of Pſittacon in Cyprus. Antigonus, king of Macedonia, had a great reſpect for him, and deſired his company, as the following letter expreſſeth: Stob. 161. Laert.

'King Antigonus to Zeno the philoſopher, health: I think that I exceed thee in fortune and glory; but in learning and diſcipline, and that perfect felicity which thou haſt attained, I am exceeded by thee; wherefore I thought it expedient to write to thee, that thou wilt come to me, aſſuring myſelf thou wilt not deny it. Uſe all means therefore to come to us; and know, thou art not to inſtruct me only, but all the Macedonians: for he who teacheth the king of Macedonia, and guideth him to virtue, it is evident, that he doth likewiſe inſtruct all his ſubjects in virtue: for ſuch as is the prince, ſuch for the moſt part are thoſe who live under his government.'

Zeno anſwered thus: 'To king Antigonus, Zeno wiſheth health: I much eſteem thy earneſt deſire of learning, in that thou aimeſt at philoſophy; not popular, which perverteth manners; but that true diſcipline which conferreth profit; avoiding that generally commended pleaſure, which effeminates the ſouls of men. It is manifeſt that thou art inclined to generous things, not only by nature, but by choice; with indifferent exerciſe and aſſiſtance thou mayeſt eaſily attain to virtue. But I am very infirm of body, being fourſcore years of age, and ſo not well able to come; yet I will ſend thee ſome of my chief diſciples, who, in thoſe things concerning the ſoul, are nothing inferior to me; and whoſe inſtructions, if thou wilt follow them, will conduct thee to perfect bleſſedneſs.'----Thus Zeno refuſed Antigonus, but ſent Perſaus his countryman, and Philonides, a Theban. He would ſay, That nothing was more unſeemly than pride, eſpecially in youth, which was a time of learning. He therefore recommended to young men modeſty in three things; in their walking, in their behaviour, and in their apparel: often repeating thoſe verſes of Euripides, in honour of Capaneus:

He was not puſt up with his ſtore;
Nor thought himſelf above the poor.

Seeing a man very finely dreſſed, ſtepping lightly over a kennel; That man, ſaith he, doth not care for the dirt, becauſe he could not ſee his face in it. He alſo taught, The people ſhould not affect delicacy of diet, no not in their ſickneſs. To one that ſmelt with unguents; Who is it, ſaith he, that ſmells ſo effeminately? Seeing a friend of his taken too much up with the buſineſs of his land; Unleſs thou loſe thy land, ſaith he, thy land will loſe thee. Being demanded, Whether a man that doth wrong, may conceal it from God? No, ſaith he, nor yet he who thinks it. Which teſtifies to the omnipreſence of God. Being aſked, Who was his beſt friend? he anſwered, My other ſelf; intimating the Divine part that was in him. He would ſay, The end of man was not to live, eat and drink; but to uſe this life ſo, as to obtain an happy life hereafter. He was ſo humble, that he converſed with mean and ragged perſons; whence Timon thus:

And for companions gets of ſervants ſtore,
Of all men the moſt empty, and moſt poor.

He was patient, and frugal in his houſhold expences. Laertius ſaith, he had but one ſervant: Seneca avers, he had none. He was mean in his clothes: in his diet by Philemon thus deſcribed:

He water drinks, then broth and herbs doth eat;
Teaching his ſcholars almoſt without meat.

His chaſtity was ſo eminent, that it became a proverb; As chaſte as Zeno. When the news of his death came to Antigonus, he broke forth into theſe words, What an object have I loſt? And being aſked, Why he admired him ſo much? Becauſe, ſaith he, tho' I beſtowed many great things upon him, he was never therewith exalted nor dejected. The Athenians, after his death, by a public decree, erected a ſtatue to his memorial; it runs thus: 'Whereas Zeno, the ſon of Mnaſeas, a Scythian, has profeſſed philoſophy about fifty-eight years in this city, and in all things performed the office of a good man, encouraging thoſe young men, who applied themſelves to him, to the love of virtue and temperance, leading himſelf a life ſuitable to the doctrine which he profeſſed; a pattern to the beſt to imitate; the people have thought fit to do honour to Zeno, and to crown him with a crown of gold, according to law, in reward of his virtue and temperance, and 1668. ‘ to build a tomb for him, publicly in the Ceramick,’ &c. Theſe two were his epitaphs, one by Antipater:

Ch. XIX.

Here Zeno lies, who tall Olympus ſcal’d;
Not heaping Pelion on Oſſa’s head:
Nor by Herculean labours ſo prevail’d;
But found out virtue’s paths, which thither led.

The other by Xenodotus, the Stoick, thus:

Zeno, thy years to hoary age were ſpent,
Not with vain riches, but with ſelf-content.

§. LXXV. Seneca, a great and excellent philoſopher (who, with Epictetus, ſhall conclude the teſtimonies of the men of their character) hath ſo much to our purpoſe, that his works are but a kind of continued evidence for us: he ſaith, Nature was not ſo much an enemy, as to give an eaſy paſſage of life to all other creatures, and that man alone ſhould not live without ſo many arts: ſhe hath commanded us none of theſe things. We have made all things difficult to us, by diſdaining things that are eaſy: houſes, clothes, meats, and nouriſhment of bodies, and thoſe things which are now the care of life, were eaſy to come by, freely gotten, and prepared with a light labour: for the meaſure of theſe things was neceſſity, not voluptuouſneſs: but we have made them pernicious and admirable; they muſt be ſought with art and ſkill. Nature ſufficeth to that which ſhe requireth.

Appetite hath revolted from nature, which continually inciteth itſelf, and increaſeth with the ages, helping vice by wit. Firſt, it began to deſire ſuperfluous, then contrary things: laſt of all, it ſold the mind to the body, and commanded it to ſerve the luſts thereof. All theſe arts, wherewith the city is continually ſet at work, and maketh ſuch a ſtir, do center in the affairs of the body, to which all things were once performed as to a Servant, but now are provided as for a Lord. Hence the ſhops of engravers, perfumers, &c. hence of thoſe that teach effeminate motions of the body, and vain and wanton ſongs: for natural behaviour is deſpiſed, which completed deſires with neceſſary help: now it is clowniſhneſs and ill-breeding, to be contented with as much as is requiſite. What ſhall I ſpeak of rich marbles curiouſly wrought, wherewith temples and houſes do ſhine? what of ſtately galleries, and rich furniture? Theſe are but the devices of moſt vile ſlaves, the inventions of men, not of wiſe men: for wiſdom ſits deeper; it is the miſtreſs of the mind. Wilt thou know what things ſhe hath found out, what ſhe hath made? Not unſeemly motions of the body, nor variable ſinging by trumpet or flute; nor yet weapons, wars, or fortifications: ſhe endeavoureth profitable things; ſhe favours peace, and calls all mankind to an agreement: ſhe leadeth to a bleſſed eſtate: ſhe openeth the way to it, and ſhews what is evil from what is good, and chaſeth vanity out of the mind: ſhe giveth ſolid greatneſs, but debaſeth that which is puffed up, and would be ſeen of men: ſhe bringeth forth the ‘ Image of God to be ſeen in the ſouls of men:’ and ſo from corporeal, ſhe tranſlateth into incorporeal things. Thus in the 90th epiſtle to Lucilius.----To Gallio he writeth thus: “ All men, brother Gallio, are deſirous to live happy; yet blind to the means of that bleſſedneſs, as long as we wander hither and thither, and follow not our Guide, but the diſſonant clamour of thoſe that call on us to undertake different ways. Our ſhort life is wearied and worn away amongſt errors, altho’ we labour to get us a good mind. There is nothing therefore to be more avoided, than following the multitude without examination, and believing any thing without judging. Let us enquire what is beſt to be done, not what is moſt uſually done; and what planted us in the poſſeſſion of eternal felicity; not what is ordinarily allowed of by the multitude, which is the worſt interpreter of truth. I call the Multitude as well thoſe that are cloathed in White, as thoſe in other colours: for I examine not the colours of the garments, wherewith their bodies are cloathed: I truſt not mine eyes to inform me what a man is; ‘ I have a better and truer Light, whereby I can diſtinguiſh truth from ‘ falſhhood.’ Let the ſoul find out the Good of the ſoul. If once ſhe may have leiſure to withdraw into herſelf, oh! how will ſhe confeſs, I wiſh all I have done were undone; and all I have ſaid, when I recollect it, I am aſhamed of it, when I now hear the like in others. Theſe things below, whereat we gaze, and whereat we ſtay, and which one man with admiration ſhews unto another, do outwardly ſhine, but are inwardly empty. Let us ſeek out ſomewhat that is good, not in appearance, but ſolid, united and beſt, in that which leaſt appears: let us diſcover this. Neither is it far from us; we ſhall find it, if we ſeek it. For it is wiſdom, not to wander from that Immortal Nature, but to form ourſelves according to his law and example. Bleſſed is the man who judgeth rightly: bleſſed is he who is contented with his preſent condition: and bleſſed is he who giveth ear to that Immortal Principle, in the government of his life.”---An whole volume of theſe excellent things hath he written. No wonder a man of his doctrine and life, eſcaped not the cruelty of brutiſh Nero, under whom he ſuffered death; as alſo did the apoſtle Paul, with whom, it is ſaid, Seneca had converſed. When Nero’s meſſenger brought him the news that he was to die; with a compoſed and undaunted countenance he received the errand, and preſently called for pen, ink and paper, to write his laſt will and teſtament; which the captain refuſing, he turned towards his friends, and took his leave thus: ‘Since, my loving friends, I cannot bequeath you any other thing in acknowledgement of what I owe you, I leave you at leaſt the richeſt and beſt portion I have, that is, The Image of my Manners and Life; which doing, you will obtain true happineſs.’ His friends ſhewing great trouble for the loſs of him, Where, ſaith he, are thoſe memorable precepts of philoſophy; and what is become of thoſe proviſions, which for ſo many years together we have laid up againſt the brunts and afflictions of providence? Was Nero's cruelty unknown to us? What could we expect better at his hands, that killed his brother, and murdered his mother, but that he would alſo put his tutor and governor to death? Then turning to his wife, Pompeja Paulina, a Roman lady, young and noble, beſeeched her, for the love ſhe bore him and his philoſophy, to ſuffer patiently his affliction; For (ſaith he) my hour is come, wherein I muſt ſhew, not only by diſcourſe, but by death, the fruit I have reaped by my meditations. I embrace it without grief; wherefore do not diſhonour it with thy tears. Aſſuage thy ſorrow, and comfort thyſelf in the knowledge thou haſt had of me, and of my actions; and lead the reſt of thy life with that honeſt induſtry thou haſt addicted thyſelf unto. And dedicating his life to God, he expired.

LXXVI. EPICTETUS, contemporary with Seneca, and an excellent man, thought no man worthy of the profeſſion of philoſophy, that was not purified from the errors of his nature. His morals were very excellent, which he compriſed under theſe two words, Suſtaining and Abſtaining; or Bearing and Forbearing: To avoid evil, and patiently to ſuffer afflictions: which do certainly comprize the Chriſtian doctrine and life, and are the perfection of the beſt philoſophy that was at any time taught by Egyptians, Greeks or Romans, when it ſignified virtue, ſelf-denial, and a life of religious ſolitude and contemplation.

How little the Chriſtians of the times are true philoſophers, and how much more theſe philoſophers were Chriſtians than they, let the Righteous Principle in every conſcience judge. But is it not then intolerable, that they ſhould be eſteemed Chriſtians, who are yet to learn to be good Heathens; that prate of Grace and Nature, and know neither; who will preſume to determine what is become of Heathens, and know not where they are themſelves, nor mind what may become of them; that can run readily over a tedious liſt of famous perſonages, and calumniate ſuch as will not, with them, celebrate their memories with extravagant and ſuperfluous praiſes, whilſt they make it laudable to act the contrary; and none ſo ready a way to become vile, as not to be vicious? A ſtrange paradox, but too true: ſo blind, ſo ſtupified, ſo beſotted are the fooliſh ſenſualiſts of the world, under their great pretences to religion, faith and worſhip. Ah! did they but know the peace, the joy, the unſpeakable raviſhments of ſoul, that inſeparably attend the innocent, harmleſs, ſtill and retired life of Jeſus; did they but weigh within themſelves the authors of their vain delights and paſtimes, the nature and diſpoſition, they are ſo grateful to, the dangerous conſequence of exerciſing the mind and its affections below, and arreſting and taking them up from their due attendance and obedience to the moſt holy crying voice in their conſciences, Repent, Return, ‘All is vanity ‘and vexation of ſpirit;’ were but theſe things reflected upon; were the inceſſant wooings of Jeſus, and his importunate knocks and intreaties, by his Light and Grace, at the door of their hearts, but kindly anſwered, and He admitted to take up his abode there; and laſtly, were ſuch reſolved to give up to the inſtructions and holy guidance of his Eternal Spirit, in all the humble, heavenly and righteous converſation it requires, and of which he is become our captain and example; then, oh! then, both root and branch of vanity, the nature that invented, and that which delights herſelf therein, with all the follies themſelves, would be conſumed and vaniſh. But they, alas! cheat themſelves, by miſconſtrued ſcriptures, and daub with the untempered mortar of miſapplied promiſes. They will be ſaints, whilſt they are ſinners; and in Chriſt, whilſt in the ſpirit of the world, walking after the fleſh, and not after the Spirit, by which the true children of God are led. My friends, mind the Juſt Witneſs and Holy Principle in yourſelves, that you may experimentally know more of the divine life; in which (and not in a multitude of vain repetitions) true and ſolid felicity eternally conſiſts.

IV. Nor is this reputation, wiſdom and virtue, only to be attributed to Men: there were Women alſo, in the Greek and Roman ages, that honoured their ſex by great examples of meekneſs, prudence and chaſtity: and which I do the rather mention, that the honour ſtory yields to their virtuous conduct may raiſe an allowable emulation in thoſe of their own ſex, at leaſt, to equal the noble character given them by antiquity. I will begin with §. LXXVII. PENELOPE, wife to Ulyſſes, a woman eminent for her beauty and quality, but more for her ſingular chaſtity. Her huſband was abſent from her twenty years; partly in ſervice of his country, and partly in exile; and being believed to be dead, ſhe was earneſtly ſought by divers lovers, and preſſed by her parents to change her condition; but all the importunities of the one, or perſuaſions of the other, not prevailing, her lovers ſeemed to uſe a kind of violence, that where they could not intice, they would compel: to which ſhe yielded, upon this condition; That they would not preſs her to marry, till ſhe had ended the work ſhe had in hand: which they granting, ſhe undid by night what ſhe wrought by day; and with that honeſt device ſhe delayed their deſire, till her worthy huſband returned, whom ſhe received, though in beggars clothes, with an heart full of love and truth. A conſtancy that reproaches too many of the women of the times, who, without the excuſe of ſuch an abſence, can violate their huſbands beds. Her work ſhews the induſtry and employment, even of the women of great quality in thoſe times; whilſt thoſe of the preſent age deſpiſe ſuch honeſt labour, as mean and mechanical.

§. LXXVIII. Theoxena, a woman of great virtue, being in a place encompaſſed by the armies of the king of Macedonia, finding ſhe could not eſcape their hands, rather than fall under the power of his ſoldiers to be defiled, choſe to die: and therefore flying into the ſea, delivered her life up in the waters; thereby chuſing death, rather than ſave her life with the hazard of her virtue.

§. LXXIX. Pandora and Protogenia, two virtuous daughters of an Athenian king, ſeeing their country like to be over-run by its enemies, freely offered their lives in ſacrifice, to appeaſe the fury of their enemies, for the preſervation of their country.

§. LXXX. Hipparchia, a fair Macedonian virgin, noble of blood (as they term it) but more truly noble of mind, I cannot omit to mention; who entertained ſo earneſt an affection for Crates, the Cynical philoſopher, as well for his ſevere life as excellent diſcourſe, that by no means could her relations nor ſuitors, by all their wealth, nobility and beauty, diſſuade her from being his companion: upon which ſtrange reſolution, they all betook themſelves to Crates, beſeeching him to ſhew himſelf a true philoſopher, in perſuading her to deſiſt: which he ſtrongly endeavoured by many arguments; but not prevailing, went his way, and brought all the little furniture of his houſe, and ſhewed her: This (ſaith he) is thy huſband; that, the furniture of thy houſe: conſider on it, for thou canſt not be mine, unleſs thou followeſt the ſame courſe of life: (for, being rich above twenty talents, which is more than fifty thouſand pounds, he neglected all, to follow a retired life:) all which had ſo contrary an effect, that ſhe immediately went to him, before them all, and ſaid, I ſeek not the pomp and effeminacy of this world, but knowledge and virtue, Crates; and chuſe a life of temperance, before a life of delicacies: for true ſatisfaction, thou knoweſt, is in the mind; and that pleaſure is only worth ſeeking, that laſts for ever. Thus was it, ſhe became the conſtant companion both of his love and life, his friendſhip and his virtues; travelling with him from place to place, and performing the public exerciſes of inſtruction with Crates, wherever they came. She was a moſt violent enemy to all impiety, but eſpecially to wanton men and women, and thoſe, whoſe garb and converſation ſhewed them devoted to vain pleaſures and paſtimes: effeminacy rendering the like perſons not only unprofitable, but pernicious to the whole world. Which ſhe as well made good by the example of her exceeding induſtry, temperance and ſeverity, as thoſe are wont to do by their intemperance and folly: for ruin of health, eſtates, virtue, and loſs of eternal happineſs, have ever attended, and ever will attend, ſuch earthly minds.

§. LXXXI. Lucretia, a moſt chaſte Roman dame, whoſe name and virtue is known by that tragedy that follows them. For Sextus, the ſon of Tarquin the Proud, king of Rome, hearing it was her cuſtom to work late in her chamber, did there attempt her, with his ſword in his hand, vowing he would run her through; and put one of his ſervants in the poſture of lying with her, on purpoſe to defame her, if ſhe would not yield to his luſts. Having forced his wicked end, ſhe ſends for her father, then governor of Rome, her huſband and her friends, to whom having revealed the matter, and with tears lamented her irreparable calamity, ſhe ſlew herſelf in their preſence; that it might not be ſaid Lucretia out-lived her chaſtity, even when ſhe could not defend it. I praiſe the virtue, not the act. But God ſoon avenged this, with other impieties, upon that wicked family; for the people hearing what Sextus had done, whoſe flagitious life they equally hated with his father's tyranny, and their ſenſe of both, aggravated by the reverence they conceived for the chaſte and exemplary life of Lucretia, betook themſelves to their arms; and headed by her father, her huſband, Brutus and Valerius, they drove out that Tarquin family: in which action the hand of Brutus avenged the blood of Lucretia upon infamous Sextus, whom he ſlew in the battle.

§. LXXXII. Cornelia, alſo a noble Roman matron, and ſiſter to Scipio, was eſteemed the moſt famous and honourable perſonage of her time, not more for the greatneſs of her birth, than her exceeding temperance. And hiſtory particularly mentions this, as one great inſtance of her virtue, for which ſhe was ſo much admired, to wit, That ſhe never was accuſtomed to wear rich apparel, but ſuch apparel as was very plain and grave; rather making her children (whom her inſtructions and example had made virtuous) her greateſt ornaments: a good pattern for the vain and wanton dames of the age.

§. LXXXIII. Pontia was another Roman dame, renowned for her ſingular modeſty: for tho' Octavius attempted her with all imaginable allurements and perſuaſions, ſhe choſe rather to die by his cruelty, than be polluted by his luſt. So he took her life, that could not violate her chaſtity.

§. LXXXIV. Arria, wife to Cecinna Pætus, is not leſs famous in ſtory for the magnanimity ſhe ſhewed, in being the companion of her huſband's diſgraces, who thruſt herſelf into priſon with him, that ſhe might be his ſervant; and ſhewed him firſt by death to be revenged of the tyrant.

§. LXXXV. Pompeia Plautina, wiſe to Julianus the emperor, commended for her compaſſion of the poor, uſed the power her virtue had given her with her huſband, to put him upon all the juſt and tender things that became his charge, and to diſſuade him from whatſoever ſeemed harſh to the people: particularly, ſhe diverted him from a great tax his flatterers adviſed him to lay upon the people.

§. LXXXVI. Plotina, the wife of Trajan, a woman (ſaith a certain author) adorned with piety, chaſtity, and all the virtues that a woman is capable of. There are two inſtances; one of her piety, the other of her chaſtity. The firſt is this; When her huſband was proclaimed emperor, ſhe mounted the Capitol after the choice; where, in a religious manner, ſhe ſaid, 'Oh that I may live under all this honour, with the ſame virtue and content 'that I enjoyed before I had it!' The ſecond is this: Her huſband being once exiled, ſhe cauſed her hair to be cut ſhort, as the men wore it, that with leſs notice and danger ſhe might be the companion of his baniſhment.

§. LXXXVII. Pompeia Paulina, a Roman lady of youth and beauty, deſcended of the moſt noble families of Rome, fell in love with Seneca, for the excellency of his doctrine, and the gravity and purity of his manners. They married, and lived great examples together to both their ſexes. So great was her value for her huſband, and ſo little did ſhe care to live when he was to die, that ſhe choſe to be the companion of his death as ſhe had been of his life: and her veins were cut as well as his, whilſt ſhe was the auditor of his excellent diſcourſes: but Nero hearing of it, and fearing leſt Paulina's death might bring him great reproach, becauſe of her noble alliance in Rome, ſent with all haſte to have her wounds cloſed, and if it were poſſible to ſave her life: which, tho' as one half dead, was done, and ſhe againſt her will lived; but always with a pale hue, and wan complexion of face, to tell how much of her life was gone with Seneca her deareſt friend, philoſopher and huſband.

§. LXXXVIII. Thus may the voluptuous women of the times read their reproof in the character of a brave Heathen; and learn, that ſolid happineſs conſiſts in a neglect of wealth and greatneſs, and a contempt of all corporal pleaſures, as more befitting beaſts than immortal ſpirits: and which are loved by none but ſuch, as not knowing the excellency of heavenly things, are both inventing and delighting, like brutes, in that which periſheth; giving the preference to poor mortality, and ſpending their lives to gratify the luſts of a little dirty fleſh and blood, 'that ſhall never enter into the kingdom of heaven:' by all which their minds become darkened, and ſo inſenſible of more celeſtial glories, that they do not only refuſe to enquire after them, but infamouſly ſcoff and deſpiſe thoſe that do, as a fooliſh and mad people: to that ſtrange degree of darkneſs and impudence this age has got. But if the exceeding temperance, chaſtity, virtue, induſtry and contentedneſs of very Heathens, with the plain and neceſſary enjoyments God has been pleaſed to vouchſafe the ſons and daughters of men, as ſufficient to their wants and conveniency, (that they may be the more at leiſure to anſwer the great end of their being born) will not ſuffice, but that they will exceed the bounds, precepts and examples both of Heathens and Chriſtians; anguiſh and tribulation will overtake them, when they ſhall have an eternity to think upon, with gnaſhing teeth, what to all eternity they can never remedy: theſe diſmal wages are decreed for them who ſo far affront God, heaven and eternal felicity, as to neglect their ſalvation from ſin here, and wrath to come, for the enjoyment of a few fading pleaſures. For ſuch to think, notwithſtanding their lives of ſenſe and pleaſure wherein their minds become ſlaves to their bodies, that they ſhall be everlaſtingly happy, is an addition to their evils; ſince it is a great abuſe to the holy God, that men and women ſhould believe Him an eternal companion of their carnal and ſenſual minds: for, 'as the tree falls ſo it lies; and as death leaves men judgment finds them:' and there is no repentance in the grave. Therefore I beſeech you, to whom this comes, to retire: withdraw a while; let not the body ſee all, taſte all, enjoy all; but let the ſoul ſee too, taſte and enjoy thoſe heavenly comforts and refreſhments, proper to that eternal world of which ſhe is an inhabitant, and where ſhe muſt ever abide in a ſtate of peace or plagues, when this viſible one ſhall be diſſolved.

CHAP. XX.

§. 1. The doctrine of Chriſt from Matt. v. about denial of ſelf. §. 2. John Baptiſt's example. §. 3. The teſtimonies of the apoſtle Peter, &c. §. 4. Paul's godly exhortation againſt pride, covetouſneſs and luxury. §. 5. The primitive chriſtians nonconformity to the world. §. 6. Clemens Romanus againſt the vanity of the Gentiles. §. 7. Machiavel of the zeal of the Primitive Chriſtians. §. 8. Tertullian, Chryſoſtom, &c. on Matt. xii. 36. §. 9. Gregory Nazianzene. §. 10. Jerom. §. 11. Hilary. §. 12. Ambroſe. §. 13. Auguſtine. §. 14. Council of Carthage. §. 15. Cardan. §. 16. Gratian. §. 17. Petrus Bellonius. §. 18. Waldeneſes. §. 19. What they underſtood by Daily Bread in the Lord's Prayer. §. 20. Their judgment concerning Taverns. §. 21. Dancing, Muſick, &c. §. 22. An epiſtle of Bartholomew Tertian to the Waldenſian churches, &c. §. 23. Their extreme ſuffering and faithfulneſs. Their degeneracy reproved that call them their anceſtors. §. 24. Paulinus, biſhop of Nola, relieving ſlaves and priſoners. §. 25. Acacius, biſhop of Amida, his charity to enemies.

Chap. XX.

The doctrine and practice of the bleſſed Lord Jeſus and his apoſtles, the primitive Chriſtians, and thoſe of more modern times, in favour of this diſcourſe.

HAVING abundantly ſhewn, how much the doctrine and converſation of the virtuous Gentiles condemn the pride, avarice and luxury of the profeſſed Chriſtians of the times; I ſhall, in the next place, to diſcharge my engagement, and farther fortify this diſcourſe, preſent my reader with the judgment and practice of the moſt Chriſtian times; as alſo of eminent writers, both ancient and modern. I ſhall begin with the Bleſſed Author of that religion.

Matt. v.

§. I. Jesus Christ, in whoſe mouth there was found no guile, (ſent from God, with a teſtimony of love to mankind, and who laid down his life for their ſalvation; whom God hath raiſed by his mighty power to be Lord of all) is of right to be firſt heard in this matter; 'for never man ſpake like him,' to our point; ſhort, clear and cloſe; and all oppoſite to the way of this wicked world. 'Bleſſed (ſays he) are the poor in ſpirit, 'for theirs is the kingdom of God:' he doth not ſay, Bleſſed are the proud, the rich, the high-minded: here is humility and the fear of the Lord bleſt. 'Bleſſed are they 'that mourn, for they ſhall be comforted:' he doth not ſay, Bleſſed are the feaſters, dancers and revellers of the world, whoſe life is ſwallowed up of pleaſure and jollitry: no, as he was a man of ſorrows, ſo he bleſſed the godly-ſorrowful. 'Bleſſed are the 'meek, for they ſhall inherit the earth:' he doth not ſay, Bleſſed are the ambitious, the angry, and thoſe that are puffed up: he makes not the earth a bleſſing to them: and tho' they get it by conqueſt and rapine, it will at laſt fall into the hands of the meek, to inherit. Again, 'Bleſſed are they which do hunger and thirſt after righte-'ouſneſs:' but no bleſſing to the hunger and thirſt of the luxurious man. 'Bleſſed are 'the merciful, for they ſhall obtain mercy:' he draws men to tenderneſs and forgiveneſs, by reward. Haſt thou one in thy power that hath wronged thee? be not rigorous, exact not the utmoſt farthing; be merciful, and pity the afflicted, for ſuch are bleſſed. Yet farther, 'Bleſſed are the pure in heart, for they ſhall ſee God:' he doth not ſay, Bleſſed are the proud, the covetous, the unclean, the voluptuous, the malicious: no, ſuch ſhall never ſee God. Again, 'Bleſſed are the peace-makers, for they 'ſhall be called the children of God: he doth not ſay, Bleſſed are the contentious, backbiters, tale-bearers, brawlers, fighters, makers of war; neither ſhall they be called the children of God, whatever they may call themſelves. Laſtly, 'Bleſſed are you, when men ſhall 'revile you, and perſecute you, and ſay all manner of evil againſt you falſly, for my ſake; 'rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven:' he bleſſeth the troubles of his people, and tranſlates earthly ſufferings into heavenly rewards. He doth not ſay, Bleſſed are you when the world ſpeaks well of you, and fawns upon you: ſo that his bleſſings croſs the world's; for the World bleſſeth thoſe as happy, that have the world's favour: He bleſſeth thoſe as happy, that have the world's frowns. This ſolveth the great objection, "Why are you ſo fooliſh to expoſe yourſelves to the law, to incur the diſpleaſure of magiſtrates, and ſuffer the loſs of your eſtates and liberties? Cannot a man ſerve God in his heart, and do as others do? Are you wiſer than your fore-fathers? call to mind your anceſtors. Will you queſtion their ſalvation by your novelties, and forget the future good of your wife and children, as well as ſacrifice the preſent comforts of your life, to hold up the credit of a party?" a language I have more than once heard: I ſay, this doctrine of Chriſt is an anſwer and antidote againſt the power of this objection. He teacheth us to embrace truth under all thoſe ſcandals. The Jews had more to ſay of this kind than any, whoſe way had a more extraordinary inſtitution; but Chriſt minds not either inſtitution or ſucceſſion. He was a New Man, and came to conſecrate a New Way, and that in the will of God; and the power that accompanied his miniſtry, and that of his followers, abundantly proved the divine authority of his miſſion, who thereby warns his to expect and to bear contradiction, reviling and perſecution: for if they did it to the Green tree, much more were they to expect that they would do it to the Dry: if to the Lord, then to the ſervant.

Why then ſhould Chriſtians fear that reproach and tribulation, that are the companions of his religion, ſince they work to his ſincere followers a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory? But indeed they have great cauſe to fear and be aſhamed, who are the authors of ſuch reproach and ſuffering, ſo contrary to the meek and merciful ſpirit of Chriſt: for if they are bleſſed who are reviled and perſecuted for his ſake; the revilers and perſecutors muſt be curſed. But this is not all: he bade his diſciples follow him, learn of him, for he was meek and lowly:’ he taught them to bear injuries, and not ſmite again; to exceed in kindneſs; to go two miles, when aſked to go one; to part with cloak and coat too; to give to them that aſk, and to lend to them that borrow; to forgive, aye, and love enemies too; commanding them, ſaying, ‘Bleſs them Mat. v. that curſe you; do good to them that hate you; and pray for them which deſpitefully uſe you, and perſecute you:’ urging them with a moſt ſenſible demonſtration, ‘That, ſaith he, ‘you may be the children of your Father, which is in heaven: for he maketh the ſun to riſe upon the good and the evil, and his rain to deſcend upon the juſt and the unjuſt.’ He alſo taught his diſciples, to believe and rely upon God's Providence, from the care that he had over the leaſt of his creatures:’ ‘Therefore,’ ſaith he, ‘I ſay unto you, Mat. vi. take no thought for your life, what you ſhall eat, and what you ſhall drink, nor yet for your body, what you ſhall put on: is not the life more than meat, and the body, than raiment? Behold the fowls of the air; for they ſow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them; are you not much better than they? Which of you by taking thought, can add one cubit unto his ſtature? And why take you thought for raiment? Conſider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they ſpin: and yet I ſay unto, that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of theſe. Wherefore, if God ſo clotheth the graſs of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is caſt into the oven, ſhall he not much more clothe you? O ye of little faith! Therefore take no thought, ſaying, What ſhall we eat, or what ſhall we drink, or wherewithal ſhall we be cloathed? (for after all thoſe things do the Gentiles ſeek) for your heavenly father knoweth that you have need of all theſe things. But ſeek you firſt the kingdom of God, and his righteouſneſs, and all theſe things ſhall be added unto you. Take therefore no thought for to-morrow, for to-morrow ſhall take thought for the things of itſelf; ſufficient is the day for the evil thereof.’ Oh! how plain, how ſweet, how full, yet how brief, are his bleſſed ſentences! they thereby ſhew from whence they came, and that Divinity itſelf ſpoke them. What are laboured, what are forced and ſcattered in the beſt of other writers, and not all neither, are here comprized after a natural, eaſy and conſpicuous manner. He ſets nature above art, and truſt above care. This is he that himſelf came poor into the world, and ſo lived in it: he lay in a manger, converſed with mechanicks; faſted much, retired often: and when he feaſted, it was with barley loaves and fiſh, dreſſed doubtleſs in an eaſy and homely manner. He was ſolitary in his life, in his death ignominious: ‘The foxes had holes, the birds of the air had neſts, but the Son of Man had not a place whereon to lay his head.’ He that made all things as God, had nothing as Man. Which hath this bleſſed inſtruction in it, that the meaneſt and pooreſt ſhould not be dejected, nor yet the richeſt and higheſt be exalted. In fine, having taught this doctrine, and lived as he ſpoke, he died to confirm it; and, offered up himſelf a propitiation for the ‘ſins of the whole world,’ when no other ſacrifice could be found, that could atone for man with God: who riſing above the power of death and the grave, hath led captivity captive, and is become the Firſt-born from the dead, and Lord of the living; and his Living people praiſe him, who is worthy for ever.

§. II. JOHN the Baptiſt, who was the fore-runner of Chriſt's appearance in fleſh, did by his own abſtinence ſufficiently declare what ſort of perſon it was he came to prepare and beſpeak people to receive. For, tho' ſanctified in his mother's womb, and declared by Chriſt to be the greateſt of all prophets, yet his cloathing was but a coarſe garment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle, and his food only locuſts and wild honey: a life very natural and of great ſimplicity. This was all the pomp and retinue, which the greateſt ambaſſador that ever came to the world was attended with, about the beſt of meſſages, to wit, ‘Repent, for the kingdom of God is at hand.’ And, ‘There is One coming Mark i. 7. 8. after me, whoſe ſhoes-latchet I am not worthy to unlooſe, who ſhall baptize you with fire, and with the Holy Ghoſt; and is the Lamb of God that taketh away the ſin of the world.’ Did the fore-runner of the coming of God (for Emmanuel is God with men) appear without the ſtate, grandeur and luxury of the world? and ſhall thoſe who pretend to receive the meſſage, and that for glad-tidings too, and confeſs the Emmanuel, Chriſt Jeſus, to be the Lord, live in the vanity and exceſs of the world, and care more for their fine clothes, delicate diſhes, rich furniture, ſtately attendance, and pleaſant diverſion, than for the holy croſs of Chriſt, and the bleſſed narrow way that leadeth to ſalvation? Be aſhamed and repent!

§. III. PETER, ANDREW, PHILIP, and the reſt of the holy apoſtles, were by calling, as well as doctrine, not a luxurious people; for they were made up of poor fiſhermen and mechanicks: for Chriſt called not his diſciples out of higher ranks of men; nor had they ability, any more than will, to uſe the exceſſes herein reproved. You may conceive what their lives were, by what their Maſter's doctrine was; for they were the true ſcholars of his heavenly diſcipline. Peter thus ſpeaks, and exhorteth the Chriſtians of his time, ‘Let not your adorning be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and the 1 Pet. iii. 3. 4. wearing of gold, and of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet ſpirit,

' which is in the ſight of God of great price; for after this manner in the old time, the ' holy women, who alſo truſted in God, adorned themſelves. Wherefore gird up the 1 Pet. i. 13, ' loins of your minds, be ſober, and hope to the end, as obedient children; not faſhioning 14, 15. ' yourſelves according to your former luſts, in your ignorance, but as he which hath ' called you is holy, ſo be you holy in all manner of converſation; and giving all diligence, 2 Pet. i. 5, 12. ' add to your faith, virtue; to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance;
' and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godlineſs; and to godlineſs,
' brotherly kindneſs; and to brotherly kindneſs, charity: for if theſe things be in you
' and abound, they make you that you ſhall be neither barren nor unfruitful: for ſo an ' entrance ſhall be miniſtered unto you abundantly, into the everlaſting kingdom of our 1 Pet. iii. 9. ' Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt: not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing; but ' contrary-wiſe, bleſſing; knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye ſhould inherit a
ch. ii. 21, 22, ' bleſſing: for even hereunto were ye called, becauſe Chriſt alſo ſuffered for us, leaving 23, ' us an example, that we ſhould follow his ſteps, who did no ſin, neither was guile found
' in his mouth; who, when he was reviled, he reviled not again; when he ſuffered,
' he threatened not, but committed himſelf to him that judgeth righteouſly.'

§. IV. Paul, who was alſo an apoſtle, though, as he ſaith, ' born out of due time:'
Phil. iii. 8. a man of great knowledge and learning, but ' I count it,' ſaith he, ' all loſs for the excellency
' of the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus my Lord, for whom I have ſuffered the loſs
' of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Chriſt. Brethren, be followers
' of me, and mark them which walk ſo, as ye have us for an example: for many ' walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you, even weeping, that they are
' the enemies of the croſs of Chriſt, whoſe end is deſtruction; for their god is their
' belly, they glory in their ſhame, and they mind earthly things. For our converſation
' is in heaven; from whence we look alſo for our Saviour, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. In 1 Tim. ii. 9, ' like manner alſo, I will that women adorn themſelves in modeſt apparel, with ſhamefacedneſs
10. ' and ſobriety; not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or coſtly array; but ' with good works, as becometh women profeſſing godlineſs. Be followers of God, as Ephſ. v. ' dear children; and walk in love, as Chriſt alſo hath loved us: but fornication, and all
' uncleanneſs, and covetouſneſs, let it not be once named amongſt you, as becometh ſaints;
' neither filthineſs, nor fooliſh talking, nor jeſting, which are not convenient; but rather ' giving of thanks: for this ye know, that no whoremonger, unclean perſon, nor ' covetous man, who is an idolater, hath an inheritance in the kingdom of Chriſt and of ' God. See then that you walk circumſpectly, not as fools, but as wiſe, redeeming the ' time, becauſe the days are evil. Wherefore be ye not unwiſe, but underſtanding what
' the will of the Lord is; and be not drunk with wine, wherein is exceſs, but be filled ' with the Spirit, ſpeaking to yourſelves in hymns and ſpiritual ſongs, ſinging, and making
' melody in your hearts to the Lord. Rejoice in the Lord always; and I ſay again,
' rejoice. Let your moderation be known to all men, for the Lord is at hand. Be careful ' for nothing; for we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry ' nothing out: and, having food and raiment, let us be therewith content; for godlineſs
' with contentment is great gain: but they that will be rich, fall into temptation, and a
' ſnare, and into many fooliſh and hurtful luſts, which drown men in perdition and deſtruction:
' for the love of money is the root of all evil; which whilſt ſome coveted after,
' they have erred from the faith, and pierced themſelves through with many ſorrows.
' But thou, O man of God, flee theſe things, and follow after righteouſneſs, godlineſs,
' faith, love, patience, meekneſs. Fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal ' life, whereunto thou art alſo called, and haſt profeſſed a good profeſſion before many ' witneſſes. I give thee charge in the ſight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before
' Chriſt Jeſus, who before Pontius Pilate witneſſed a good confeſſion, that thou keep
' this commandment without ſpot, unrebukeable, until the appearing of our Lord Jeſus
' Chriſt. Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded,
' nor truſt in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to ' enjoy; that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to diſtribute, willing ' to communicate, laying up in ſtore for themſelves a good foundation againſt the time
' to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life. O Timothy, keep that which is ' committed to thy truſt, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppoſitions of ſcience,
' falſly ſo called, which ſome profeſſing, have erred concerning the faith. Grace
' be with thee, Amen.' This was the bleſſed doctrine theſe meſſengers of eternal life declared; and, which is more, they lived as they ſpoke. You find an account of their 1 Cor. iv. reception in the world, and the way of their living, in his firſt epiſtle to the Corinthians;
' For I think,' ſaith he, ' that God hath ſet forth us (the apoſtles) laſt as it were, men appointed ' to death; for we are made a ſpectacle to the world, to angels, and to men. We ' are fools for Chriſt's ſake; we are weak, we are deſpiſed: even unto this preſent hour
' we both hunger and thirſt, and have no certain dwelling-place; and labour, working ' with our hands: being reviled, we bleſs; being perſecuted, we ſuffer it; being defamed,
' we entreat. We are made as the filth of the world, and are as the off-ſcouring
' of all things unto this day.' This was the entertainment thoſe faithful followers of

Jeſus

1 Cor. xi.

Jeſus received at the hands of an ungrateful world: but he who tells us of this, alſo tells us it is no unuſual thing; 'For,' ſaith he, 'ſuch as will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, muſt ſuffer perſecution.' Beſides, he knew it had been the portion of the righteous in preceding ages, as in his excellent account of the faith, trials and victory of the holy ancients, in his epiſtle to the Hebrews, he does largely expreſs, where he tells us, how great a ſojourner Abraham was, even in the land of promiſe, a ſtranger in his own country, (for God had given it unto him and his poſterity) 'Dwelling,' ſaith he, 'in tents, with Iſaac and Jacob.' And why not better ſettled? Was it for want of underſtanding, or ability, or materials? No, he gives a better reaſon; 'For,' ſaith he, 'Abraham looked for a city which had foundations, whoſe builder and maker is God.' And ſpeaking of Moſes, he tells us, 'That by faith, when he was come to years of diſcretion, he refuſed to be called the ſon of Pharaoh's daughter, chuſing rather to ſuffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon, eſteeming the reproach of Chriſt greater riches than the treaſures of Egypt; for he had reſpect unto the recompence of reward, nor feared he the wrath of the king, for he endured, ſeeing him who is inviſible.' He adds, 'And others had trials of cruel mockings and ſcourgings; yea, moreover, of bonds and impriſonments: they were ſtoned, they were ſawed aſunder, were tempted, were ſlain with a ſword; they wandered about in ſheepſkins and goat-ſkins, being deſtitute, afflicted, tormented, of whom the world was not worthy. They wandered in deſerts, and in mountains, and in dens, and caves of the earth; and theſe all have obtained a good report.' Methinks this ſhould a little abate the intemperance of profeſſed Chriſtians. I do not bid them be thus miſerable, but I would not have them make themſelves ſo hereafter; for this afflicted life hath joys tranſcending the utmoſt pleaſure that ſin can give, and in the end it will be found that it were better to be a poor pilgrim, than a citizen of the world. Nor was this only the life and inſtruction of apoſtolical teachers; the ſame plainneſs and ſimplicity of life was alſo followed by the firſt Chriſtians.

Animad. in Min. Fel. p. 25.

§. V. The Primitive Chriſtians, Ouzelius, in his Animadverſions on Minutius Felix, ſaith, were reproached by the Gentiles, for their ill-breeding, rude and unpoliſhed language, unfaſhionable behaviour, as a people that knew not how to carry themſelves in their addreſſes and ſalutations, calling them ruſticks and clowns, which the Chriſtians eaſily bore, valuing their profeſſion the more for its nonconformity to the world: wherefore it was uſual with them, by of irony and contempt, to call the Gentiles, the well-bred, the eloquent and the learned. This he proves by ample teſtimonies out of Arnobius, Lactantius, Iſiodorus, Peluſiota, Theodoret, and others. Which may inſtruct us, that the Chriſtians behaviour was not regulated by the cuſtoms of the country they lived in, as is uſually objected againſt our ſingularity: no, they refuſed the embelliſhment of art, and would not wear the furniture of her invention; but as they were ſingular in their religion, ſo in the way of their converſation among men.

Conſtit. Clem. Rom. l. 1. c. 2.
Phil. iv. 3.

§. VI. Clemens Romanus (if author of the Conſtitutions that go under his name) hath this among the reſt: 'Abſtain from the vain books of the Gentiles. What have you to do with vain and unprofitable diſcourſes, which only ſerve to ſeduce weak perſons?' This Clement is remembered by Paul in one of his epiſtles; who in this exactly follows his advice to Timothy, about vain queſtions, doubtful diſputes, and oppoſition of ſcience. Let us ſee how this moderation and purity of manners continued.

Mach. Diſ. l. 2. c. 5.

§. VII. Machiavel (no mean author) in his Diſputations aſſures us, That the firſt promoters of Chriſtianity were ſo diligent in rooting out the vanities and ſuperſtitions of the Gentiles, that they commanded all ſuch poets and hiſtorians, which commended any thing of the Gentile converſation, or worſhip, to be burned. But that zeal is evidently extinguiſhed, and thoſe follies revived among the profeſſors of the religion of Jeſus.

Tert. lib. de Patien.
Chryſoſt.
Mat. xii. 36.

§. VIII. Tertullian, Chrysostom, Theophylact, Gregory Nazianzene, upon theſe words of Chriſt, 'But I ſay unto you, that every idle word that men ſhall ſpeak, they ſhall give an account thereof in the day of judgment,' thus reflect upon vain diſcourſe; 'The words mean (ſaith Tertullian) of all vain and ſuperfluous ſpeech, more talk than is neceſſary:' Says Chroſoſtom, 'Of ſuch words as are not convenient, nor profitable, but move immodeſty.' Says Theophylact, 'Of all lies, calumnies, all inordinate and ridiculous ſpeeches.' Says Gregory, 'Such words men ſhall account for, which want that profit ever redounding from modeſt diſcourſes, and that are ſeldom uttered from any preceding neceſſity or cauſe; things frivolous, fables, old wives tales.' All which ſufficiently reprehend the plays, poetry, and romances of the times, of great folly, vanity and ſin.

§. IX. Gregory, and this a father of the church, a very extraordinary man, was ſo zealous for the ſimplicity and purity of the mind, language and lives of the Chriſtians of his time, that he ſuppreſſed ſeveral Greek authors, as Menander, Diphilus, Apollodorus, Philemon, Alexis, Sappho, and others, which were the recreations of the vain Gentiles: Thus Cardan. Hear his judgment of fine clothes (none of the leaſt part of the luxury and vanity of the age) 'There be ſome,' ſaith he, 'of opinion, that the wearing of precious and ſumptuous apparel is no ſin; which, if it were no fault, the Divine Word would ‘ never have ſo punctually expreſſed, nor hiſtorically related, how the rich man, that was ‘ tormented in hell, was cloathed in purple and ſilk: whence we may note, that, touching ‘ the matter or ſubject of attire, human curioſity availeth highly. The firſt ſubſtance of our ‘ garments was very mean, to wit, ſkins with wool; whence it is we read, God made Adam ‘ and his wife coats of ſkins; that is, ſkins of dead beaſts. Afterwards (to ſee the growing ‘ pride and vanity of men and women) they came to pure wool, becauſe lighter; after that, ‘ to flax; then to dung and ordure of worms, to wit, ſilk; laſtly, to gold and ſilver, and ‘ precious ſtones; which exceſs of apparel highly diſpleaſed God: for inſtance whereof, ‘ (which the very Pagans themſelves obſerved) we read, that the very firſt among the Ro‘mans that ever wore purple was ſtruck with a thunder-bolt, and ſo died ſuddenly, for a ‘ terror to all ſucceeding times, that none ſhould attempt to live proudly in precious attire.’ This was the ſenſe of Gregory Nazianzene, that ancient Chriſtian writer, who wore commonly a poor coat, like to a frock; ſo did Juſtin Martyr, Jerom, and Auſtin, as their beſt robe.

§. X. JEROM (a famous man, alſo ſtiled a father of the church) above all others ſeems poſitive in this matter, in an epiſtle he wrote to a noble virgin, called Demetias, in which he exhorted her, That after ſhe had ended her devotion, ſhe ſhould take in hand wool and weaving, after the commendable example of Dorcas; that by ſuch changing and variety of works, the day might ſeem leſs tedious, and the attempts of Satan leſs grievous; concluding his religious exhortation with this poſitive ſentence: (ſaith he) ‘I ‘ ſpeak generally; No raiment or habit whatſoever ſhall ſeem precious in Chriſt's ſight, but ‘ that which thou makeſt thyſelf; either for thy own particular uſe, or example of other ‘ virgins, or to give unto thy grandmother or mother; no, tho' otherwiſe thou didſt diſtri‘bute thy goods to the poor.’ Let but this ſtrictneſs be conſidered, and compared with the apparel and converſation of the age: for, however Phariſee-like they otherwiſe ſaint him, and call him an Holy Father, ſure it is, they reject his counſel.

Acts ix. 36, 39.

§. XI. HILARY, biſhop of Poictiers, a father of the church, and famous for his writings againſt the Arrians, having travelled into Syria, was informed, that Abra, his only daughter, whom he left with her mother, was by the greateſt lords of the country ſolicited in marriage; being a young woman, well-bred, fair and rich, and in the prime of her age. He wrote to her, earneſtly preſſing her, By no means to fix her affections upon the pleaſure, greatneſs, or advantage that might be preſented to her; for in his voyage he had found a greater and worthier match, an huſband of far more power and magnificence, who would endow her with robes and jewels of an ineſtimable value. This he did to take off her deſires from the world, that he might wed her unto God: and it was his fervent and frequent prayer, which in ſome ſenſe was anſwered; for ſhe lived religiouſly, and died a virgin: Which ſhewed great nobility of mind, that taught his daughter to tread upon the mountains of worldly glory; and it was not leſs honourable in her, that ſo readily yielded to the excellent counſel of her pious father.

§. XII. AMBROSE, another father, who was lieutenant of the province and city of Milan, and upon his diſcreet appeaſing of the multitude, diſordered upon ſome difference amongſt them about electing a biſhop, was by their uniform conſent choſen himſelf: although this perſon, of all others, might have been thought to plead for the accuſtomed recreations, eſpecially not having been long a Chriſtian (for he was a Catechumeniſt, or one but lately inſtructed) at the time of his being elected; yet doth he in ſo many words determine the matter thus: ‘Plays ought not to be known by Chriſtians:’ then not made, heard, and defended by Chriſtians; or they muſt be none that do ſo.

Auguſt. de civit. Dei. l. 2. c. 7.

§. XIII. AUGUSTINE, more famous for his many books, and knowledge in church affairs, whoſe ſentences are oracles with ſome, gives this as his opinion of plays, and the like recreations, ‘That they were more pernicious and abominable, than thoſe idolatrous ‘ ſacrifices, which were offered in honour of the Pagan gods.’ Doubtleſs he thought the one not ſo offenſive to reaſon, and the impreſſions Divinity hath made on every underſtanding, as the other were very pleaſant to the ſenſes, and therefore apt to ſteal away the mind from better things. For it was his maxim ‘That every thing a man doth, is either ‘ an hindrance or furtherance to good.’ This would be eſteemed intolerable doctrine in a poor Quaker; yet will the poor Quakers rejoice, if it be eſteemed and followed, as good doctrine in Auguſtine.

De ira Dei, l. 2. c. 7.

§. XIV. The Council of Carthage, tho' times began to look ſomewhat miſtier, and the purity and ſpirituality of religion to be much declined by the profeſſors of Chriſtianity; yet there was ſo much zeal left againſt the worſt part of Heatheniſm, that I find an expreſs Canon againſt the reading of vain books, and comedies of the Gentiles, leſt the minds of the people ſhould be defiled by them. But this age either hath no ſuch canon, or executeth it not, to the ſhame of their profeſſion.

Cardan. de Sapient. l. 2.

§. XV. CARDAN more particularly relateth, how even Gregory the Great was ſo zealous of preſerving purity of manners among Chriſtians (who lived almoſt two hundred years after the Carthaginian council) that he cauſed many Latin authors to be burned, as vain and laſcivious; as Cæcilianus, Affranius, Nævius, Licinus, Zennius, Attilius, Victor, Livy's Dialogues: Nor did Plautus, Martial, and Terence (ſo much in requeſt, both in the ſchools and academies of the land) eſcape their honeſt zeal, although the multitude of copies ſo far fruſtrated their good intentions, as that they are multiplied of late.

§. XVI. Gratian alſo had ſuch like paſſages as theſe, 'We ſee that the prieſts of the 'Lord, neglecting the goſpel and the prophets, read comedies or play-books, and ſing 'love-verſes, and read Virgil (a book in which are yet ſome good expreſſions).' Strange! that theſe things ſhould have been ſo ſeverely cenſured of old, and that perſons whoſe names are had in ſo much reverence, ſhould repute theſe their cenſures the conſtruction of Chriſt's precepts, and the natural conſequences of the Chriſtian doctrine; and yet that they ſhould be ſo far neglected of this age, as not to be judged worthy an imitation. But pray let us hear what doctrine the Waldenſes teach in this affair.

Jac. Laurentio de lib. Gentil. p. 40, 41.

§. XVII. Petrus Bellonius, that great and inquiſitive traveller, when he came to Mount Athos, where there live in ſeveral monaſteries ſix thouſand Coloeri, or religious perſons (ſo called), he did not ſo much as find there (no, nor in all Greece) one man acquainted with the converſation of thoſe parts; for tho' they had ſeveral manuſcripts of divinity in their libraries, yet not one poet or hiſtorian; for the rulers of that church were ſuch enemies to that ſort of learning, that they anathematized all ſuch prieſts and religious perſons, as ſhould read or tranſcribe any books but what treated of religion: and perſuaded all others, that it was not lawful for a Chriſtian to ſtudy poeſy, &c. though nothing is more grateful in theſe days. Zeno was of the ſame opinion againſt poetry.

Pet. Bell. obſer. l. 1. c. 35. ibid. c. 40.

cap. 39.

§. XVIII. Waldenses, were a people ſo called, from one Peter Waldo, a citizen of Lyons, in France, in the year 1160, that inhabited Piedmont, elſewhere called Albigenſes, from the country of Albia; Lollards in England, from one Reynard Lollard, who ſome time after came into theſe parts, and preached boldly againſt the idolatries, ſuperſtitions, and vain converſation of the inhabitants of this iſland. They had many other names, as Arnoldiſts, Eſperoniſts, Henricians, Siccars, Inſabaches, Patarenians, Turlupins, Lyoniſts, Fraticelli, Huſſites, Bohemians (ſtill the ſame); but finally, by their enemies, Damnable Hereticks, tho' by the Proteſtants, The true Church of Chriſt. And, to omit many teſtimonies, I will only inſtance in biſhop Uſher, who in his diſcourſe of the ſucceſſion of the chriſtian church, defends them not only as true reformers, but makes the ſucceſſion of the proteſtant church to be mainly evincible from their antiquity. I ſhall forbear all the circumſtances and principles they held, or in which he ſtrongly defends them againſt the cruelty and ignorance of their adverſaries, particularly Rainerius, Rubis Capetaneis, &c. only what they held concerning our preſent ſubject of Apparel and Recreations, I cannot be ſo injurious to the truth, their ſelf-denial, the good of others, at whoſe reformation I aim, and my own diſcourſe, as to omit it. And therefore I ſhall proceed to alledge their faith and practice in theſe matters, however eſteemed but of a trifling importance, by the looſe, wanton, and carnal-minded of this generation, whoſe feeling is loſt by the enjoyment of their inordinate deſires, and that think it an high ſtate of Chriſtianity to be no better than the beaſts that periſh, namely, in not being exceſſive in Newgate and mere kennel-enormities. That theſe ancient reformers had another ſenſe of theſe things, and that they made the converſation of the goſpel of a Crucified Jeſus to intend and require another ſort of life, than what is uſed by almoſt all thoſe who account themſelves members of his church, I ſhall ſhew out of their own doctrines, as found in their moſt authentic hiſtories.

XII. Cap. Hiſt. de orig. Walden. Vignia Hiſt. Bibl. p. 130. Dubran. Hiſt. Bohem. 14. Thuan. in Hiſt. ſui temp. p. 458. Mat. Paris. Hiſt. of Engl. An. 1174. Bellar. tom. 2 lib. 1. cap. 26. co. 86. Ecchius, com. loc. c. 28. Alp. l. 6. Con. Hieret. p. 99.

§. XIX. To be brief: in their Expoſition upon the Lord's Prayer, that part of it which ſpeaks thus, 'Give us this day our daily bread;' where, next to that ſpiritual bread, (which they make it the duty of all to ſeek more than life) they come poſitively to deny the praying for more than is requiſite for outward neceſſities, or that it is lawful to uſe more; condemning all ſuperfluity and exceſs, out of faſhion, pride, or wantonneſs, not only of bread, but all outward things, which they judge to be thereby comprehended; uſing Ezekiel's words, 'That fulneſs of bread, and abundance of idleneſs, was the cauſe 'of the wickedneſs and the abominations of Sodom, for which God by fire deſtroyed 'them off the earth.' Whereupon they conclude, with an antient father of the primitive church, after this manner, "That coſtly apparel, ſuperfluity in diet, (as three diſhes, when one will ſerve) play, idleneſs and ſleep, fatten the body, nouriſh luxury, weaken the ſpirit, and lead the ſoul unto death: But (ſay they) a ſpare diet, labour, ſhort ſleep, plain and mean garments, help to purify the ſoul, tame the body, mortify the luſts of the fleſh, and comfort the ſpirit." So ſevere were they, that in that chapter Of the inſtructions of their children, they would not ſuffer them to converſe with thoſe of ſtrange places or principles, whoſe converſation was gaming, plays, and the like wanton recreations; but eſpecially concerning young women. "A man (ſay they) muſt have a great care of his daughter: haſt thou daughters? keep them within to wholſome things; ſee they wander not; for Dinah, Jacob's daughter, was corrupted, by being ſeen of ſtrangers." They affirm no better to be the general event of ſuch converſation.

Jo. Paul. Per. Hiſt. Wald. in cat. l. 1. c. 3. p. 37, 31. Dona nos le noſtre pan quotidian. en. choi. Memor. Morrel. Vign. Mem. f. 7. Ezek. xvi. 45. Theſaur. fed. Ap. Wald.

ibid. l. 2. c. 3. Liſilli ſign. naiſſon ali patrons carnals. de non eſſerendus. &c.

1668.

Chap. XX.

To which I ſhall add their judgment and practice concerning taverns, public houſes for treats and pleaſures, with which the land ſwarms in our days.

ib. l. 2. c. 3.
La taverna de maiſons de pleiſirs es fortuna de pecca Eſchola del Diavola, &c.

§. XX. "A tavern is the fountain of ſin, the ſchool of the Devil; it works wonders fitting the place: it is the cuſtom of God to ſhew his power in his church, and to work miracles; that is to ſay, to give ſight to the ſpiritually blind, to make the lame to leap, the dumb to ſing, the deaf to hear: but the Devil doth quite the contrary to all theſe in taverns, and the like places of pleaſure. For when the drunkard goes to the tavern, he goes upright; but when he comes forth, he cannot go at all; he has loſt his ſight, ſpeech, and hearing too. The lectures that are read in this ſchool of the Devil (ſay theſe poor Waldenſes, and firſt reformers) are gluttonies, oaths, perjuries, lyings, blaſphemies, flatteries, and divers other wicked villainies and pernicious effects, by which the heart is withdrawn farther and farther from God. And, as the book of Eccleſiaſticus ſaith, 'The taverner ſhall not be freed from ſin."

But above other recreations, do but ſeriouſly obſerve, of what danger and ill conſequence theſe firſt reformers thought Dancing, Muſic, and the like paſtimes to be, which are the greateſt divertiſements of the times, viz.

La Bales la profeſ. del Diavol. & qui intra en la Bal. &c.
Sp. Alm. fol. 50, 51, 52, 53, 54.
Job xiv. 16.
Pſ. xxxvii. 23.
Prov. xvi. 9.
Jer. x. 23.
Mark vi. 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28.
Exod. xxxii. 4, 5, 6, 7.

§. XXI. "Dancing is the Devil's proceſſion, and he that enters into a dance, entereth into his proceſſion; the Devil is the guide, the middle, and the end of the dance; as many paces as a man maketh in dancing, ſo many paces doth he make to go to hell. A man ſinneth in dancing divers ways, for all his ſteps are numbered; in his touch, in his ornaments, in his hearing, ſight, ſpeech, and other vanities. And therefore we will prove, firſt by the ſcripture, and afterwards by divers other reaſons, how wicked a thing it is to dance. The firſt teſtimony that we will produce, is that which we read in the goſpel, where it is ſaid, it pleaſed Herod ſo well, that it coſt John Baptiſt his life. The ſecond is in Exodus, when Moſes coming near to the congregation, ſaw the calf, he caſt the tables from him, and broke them at the foot of the mountain; and afterwards it coſt three thouſand of their lives. Beſides, the ornaments which women wear in their dances are as crowns for many victories, which the Devil hath got againſt the children of God; for the Devil hath not only one ſword in the dance, but as many as there are beautiful and well-adorned perſons in the dance; for the words of a woman are a glittering ſword. And therefore that place is much to be feared, wherein the enemy hath ſo many ſwords, ſince that only one ſword of his may be juſtly feared." Again, "The Devil in this place ſtrikes with a ſharpened ſword; for the women (who make it acceptable) come not willingly to the dance, if they be not painted and adorned; which (painting and ornament) is as a whetſtone, on which the Devil ſharpeneth his ſword.—They that deck and adorn their daughters, are like thoſe that put dry wood to the fire, to the end it may burn the better: for ſuch women kindle the fire of luxury in the hearts of men. As Sampſon's foxes fired the Philiſtines corn; ſo theſe women, they have fire in their faces, and in their geſtures and actions, their glances and wanton words, by which they conſume the goods of men." They proceed, "The Devil in the dance uſeth the ſtrongeth armour that he hath; for his moſt powerful arms are women: which is made plain unto us, in that the Devil made choice of the woman to deceive the firſt man: ſo did Balaam, that the children of Iſrael might be rejected of God. By a woman he made Sampſon, David and Abſalom to ſin. The Devil tempteth men by women three manner of ways; that is, by the touch, by the eye, by the ear; by theſe three means he tempteth fooliſh men to dancing, by touching their hands, beholding their beauty, hearing their ſongs and muſic."--Again, "They that dance break that promiſe and agreement they made with God in baptiſm, when their godfathers promiſe for them, That they ſhall renounce the Devil and all his pomp: for dancing is the pomp of the Devil; and he that danceth, maintaineth his pomp, and ſingeth his maſs. For the woman that ſingeth in the dance, is the prioreſs (or chiefeſt) of the Devil, and thoſe that anſwer are the clerks, and the beholders are the pariſhioners, and the muſic are the bells, and the fiddlers the miniſters of the Devil. For, as when hogs are ſtrayed, if the hog-herd call one, all aſſemble themſelves together; ſo the Devil cauſeth one woman to ſing in the dance, or to play on ſome inſtrument, and preſently gather all the dancers together." Again, "In a dance, a man breaks the Ten Commandments of God: as firſt, 'Thou ſhalt have no other Gods but 'me,' &c. for in dancing a man ſerves that perſon whom he moſt deſires to ſerve (after whom goes his heart): and therefore Jerom ſaith, 'Every man's God is that he ſerves and loves beſt (and that he loves beſt, which his thoughts wander and gad moſt after.)' He ſins againſt the Second commandment, when he makes an idol of that he loves. Againſt the Third; in that oaths, and frivolouſly uſing God's name, are frequently amongſt dancers. Againſt the Fourth; for that by dancing the ſabbath-day is prophaned. Againſt the Fifth; for in the dance parents are many times diſhonoured, ſince thereby many bargains are made without their counſel. Againſt the Sixth; a man kills in dancing; for every one that ſets about to pleaſe another, he kills the ſoul as oft as he perſuades unto luſt. Againſt the Seventh; for the party that danceth, be it male or female, committeth adultery with the party they luſt after; 'for he that looketh on a woman to luſt after 'her, hath already committed adultery with her in his heart.' Againſt the Eighth: a man ſins in dancing, when he withdraweth the heart of another from God. Againſt the Ninth, when in dancing he ſpeaks falſly againſt the truth, (and for ſome little honour, or ſecret laſcivious end, denies what is true, or affirms what is falſe.) Againſt the Tenth, when women affect the ornaments of others, and men covet the wives, daughters, and ervants of their neighbours (which undeniably attends all ſuch plays and ſports.)" Again, "A man may prove how great an evil dancing is, by the multitude of ſins that accom-any thoſe that dance, for they dance without meaſure or number: and therefore, ſaith uguſtine, the miſerable dancer knows not, that as many paces as he makes in dan-ing, ſo many leaps he makes to hell. They ſin in their ornaments after a five-fold man-er: Firſt, by being proud thereof. Secondly, by inflaming the hearts of thoſe that be-old them. Thirdly, when they make thoſe aſhamed, that have not the like ornaments, iving them to covet the like. Fourthly, by making women importunate in demand-g the like ornaments of their huſbands: and, Fifthly, when they cannot obtain them of heir huſbands, they ſeek to get them elſewhere by ſin. They ſin by ſinging and playing on ſtruments; for their ſongs bewitch the hearts of thoſe that hear them with temporal de-ght, forgetting God; uttering nothing in their ſongs but lies and vanities; and the very otion of the body, which is uſed in dancing, gives teſtimony enough of evil.--Thus you e, that dancing is the Devil's proceſſion, and he that enters into a dance enters into the evil's proceſſion. Of dancing, the devil is the guide, the middle and the end; and he at entereth a good and wiſe man into the dance (if it can be that ſuch a one is either ood or wiſe) cometh forth a corrupt and a wicked man: Sarah, that holy woman, was one of theſe." Behold the apprehenſions of thoſe good old reformers, touching thoſe ings that are ſo much in practice and reputation in theſe times, with ſuch as profeſs eir religion; thus far verbatim. But I cannot leave off here till I have yet added the onclusion of their Catechiſm and Direction, with ſome paſſages out of one of their paſtors etters, fit to the preſent occaſion.

Jerom. in dec. int. oper.

Auguſt. de Civit. Dei.

Ibid. l. ii. Concl. p. 68. Encaren qual manier. fidel. debian regir. liler. corps. Non ſervali deſirier mort. &c.

They conclude with this direction; namely, How to rule their bodies, and live in this orld as becomes the children of God. Not to ſerve the mortal deſires of the fleſh. To ep their members, that they be not arms of iniquity (and vanity.) To rule their out-rd ſenſes. To ſubject the body to the ſoul. To mortify their members. To fly eneſs. To obſerve a ſobriety and meaſure in eating and drinking, in their words and es of this life. To do works of mercy. To live a moral (or juſt) life by faith. To ht againſt the deſires. To mortify the works of the fleſh. To give themſelves to the rciſe of religion. To confer together touching the will of God. To examine dili-tly the conſcience. To purge, and amend, and pacify the ſpirit.

To which I ſhall add the epiſtle of one of their paſtors, as I find it recorded amongſt er matters relating to theſe poor afflicted people.

XXII. An Epiſtle of paſtor Bartholomew Tertian, written to the Waldenſian churches of the valley of Pragela, thus tranſlated.

JESUS BE WITH YOU.

Hiſt. Wald. l. 4. c. 11. p. 55, 56, 57.

"TO all our faithful and well-beloved brethren in Chriſt Jeſus, health and ſal-tion be with you all, Amen. Theſe are to put you in remembrance, and to admoniſh u my brethren (hereby acquitting myſelf of that duty which I owe unto you all, in the half of God, principally touching the care of your ſouls ſalvation, according to that ht of the truth which the moſt high God hath beſtowed on us) that it would pleaſe ry one of you to maintain, increaſe and nouriſh, to the uttermoſt of your power, thout diminution, thoſe good beginnings and examples, which have been left unto us our fore-fathers, whereof we are no ways worthy. For it would little profit us have been renewed by the fatherly viſitation, and the light which hath been given us God, if we give ourſelves to worldly, carnal converſations, which are diabolical, aban-ning the principle which is of God, and the ſalvation of our ſouls, for this ſhort and mporal life. For the Lord ſaith, 'What doth it profit a man to gain the whole world, and to loſe his own ſoul?' For it would be better for us never to have known e way of righteouſneſs, than having known it to do the contrary. Let me therefore treat you, by the love of God, that you decreaſe not, or look back; but rather increaſe e charity, fear and obedience, which is due unto God, and to yourſelves, amongſt urſelves; and ſtand faſt in all theſe good principles, which you have heard and under-ood of God by our means: and that you would remove from amongſt you all vain nverſation and evil ſurmiſes, troubling the peace, the love, the concord, and whatſo-er would indiſpoſe or deaden your minds to the ſervice of God, your own ſalvation, d the adminiſtration of the truth, if you deſire that God ſhould be merciful to you in ur goods temporal and ſpiritual: For you can do nothing without him; and if you ſire to be heirs of his glory, do that which he commandeth: 'If you would enter into life, keep my commandments.'

Mat. xix. 17.

Likewiſe be careful, that there be not nouriſhed among you, any ſports, gluttony, horedom, dancings, nor any lewdneſs, or riot, nor queſtions, nor deceits, nor uſury, r diſcords, nor ſupport or entertain any perſons of a wicked converſation, or that give any ſcandal or ill example amongſt you; but let charity and fidelity reign amongſt you, and all good example; doing one to another as every one deſires ſhould be done unto him; for otherwiſe it is impoſſible that any ſhould be ſaved, or can have the grace of God, or be good men in this world, or have glory in another. And therefore, if you hope and deſire to poſſeſs eternal life, to live in eſteem and credit, and to proſper in this world, in your goods temporal and ſpiritual, purge yourſelves from all diſorderly ways, to the end that God may be always with you, who forſakes not thoſe that truſt in him. But know this for certain, that God heareth not, nor dwelleth with ſinners, nor in the ſoul that is given unto wickedneſs, nor in the man that is ſubject to ſin. And therefore let every one cleanſe the ways of his heart, and fly the danger, if he would not periſh therein. I have no other thing at this preſent, but that you would put in practice theſe things; and the God of peace be with you all, and go along with us, and be preſent among us in our ſincere, humble and fervent prayers; and that he will be pleaſed to ſave all thoſe his faithful, that truſt in Chriſt Jeſus.

Intirely yours, ready to do you ſervice in all things poſſible, according unto the will of God, Bartholomew Tertian."

Bern. de Gir. lord de Hail. Hiſt. de la. Fr. l. 10. veſemb. Orat. in Wald. Beza Hiſt. hom. dig. virer. de ver. & falſa Rel. l 4. c. 13. p. 249. Cat. Teſt. ve. 334. Vigin. Bib. Hiſt. p. 1. Vieaux Mem. fol. 6, 7. Mat. Par. in Hen. 3. An. 1220. Sigonius de Reg. Ital. l. 7.

§. XXIII. Behold the life and doctrine, inſtruction and practice of the ancient Waldenſes! how harmleſs, how plain, how laborious, how exceeding ſerious, and heavenly in their converſations! Theſe were the men, women, aye, and children too, who, for above five hundred years, have valiantly, but paſſively, maintained a cruel war, at the expence of their own innocent blood, againſt the unheard-of cruelties and ſeverities of ſeveral princes, nuncios and biſhops; but above all, of certain cruel inquiſitors; of whom their hiſtorians report, that they held it was a greater evil to conceal an heretick, than to be guilty of perjury; and for a clergyman to marry a wife, than to keep a whore. In ſhort, to diſſent, tho', never ſo conſcientiouſly, was worſe than open immorality. It was againſt the like adverſaries theſe poor Waldenſes fought, by ſufferings throughout the nations, by priſons, confiſcations, baniſhments, wandering from hill to valley, from den to cave, being mocked, whipped, racked, thrown from rocks and towers, driven on mountains, and in one night thouſands periſhing by exceſſive froſts and ſnows, ſmothered in caves, ſtarved, impriſoned, ripped up, hanged, diſmembered, rifled, plundered, ſtrangled, broiled, roaſted, burned; and whatſoever could be invented to ruin men, women and children. Theſe Waldenſes you proteſtants pretend to be your anceſtors; from them you ſay you have your religion; and often, like the Jews of the prophets, are you building their praiſes in your diſcourſes: but oh! look back, I beſeech you, how unlike are you to theſe afflicted pilgrims! What reſemblance is there of their life in yours? Did they help to purchaſe and preſerve you a liberty and religion (can you think) at the loſs of all that was dear to them, that you might paſs away your days and years in pride, wantonneſs and vanity? What proportion bears your exceſs with their temperance? your gaudineſs with their plainneſs? your luxury and fleſh-pleaſing converſations, with their ſimplicity and ſelf-denial? But are you not got into that ſpirit and nature they condemned in their day? into that carnality and worldly-mindneſs they reproved in their perſecutors? nay, into a ſtrain of perſecution too, whilſt you ſeem to hide all under a cloak of reformation? How can you hope to confute their perſecutors, whoſe worſt part perhaps was their cruelty, that turn perſecutors yourſelves? What have you, beſides their good words, that is like them? And do you think that words will fend off the blows of eternal vengeance? that a little by-rote-babble (tho' of never ſo good expreſſions in themſelves) ſhall ſerve your turn at the great day? No, from God I tell you, that whilſt you live in the wantonneſs, pride, and luxury of the world, pleaſing and fulfilling the luſt of the eye, the luſt of the fleſh, and the pride of life, God deteſts you all, and laughs you and your worſhip to ſcorn. Never tell me, I am too raſh, it is the Devil that ſays ſo: he has got two ſcriptures by the end in theſe days; one, 'That there is none that doeth good'; and why? that he may perſuade all, it is impoſſible to overcome him; which is the reaſon ſo many are overcome: although glory is promiſed to none but conquerors. The ſecond, 'That we 'muſt not judge, leſt we be judged;' that is, whilſt we are guilty of the ſame things that are equivalent, leſt we are judged. But away with Satan and his hypocriſy too: I know what I ſay, and from whom I ſpeak: once more I tell you all, whether you will hear or forbear, that unleſs you forſake your pride, luxury, avarice, and whole variety of vanities, and diligently mind the eternal Light of God in your hearts, to obey it, wrath will be your portion for ever. Truſt not your ſouls upon miſapplied ſcriptures; 'He 'that is a child of God, muſt be holy, for God is holy, and none are his ſons and 'daughters, but thoſe who are adopted by the eternal Spirit and led thereby.' It was an holy, plain, humble, divine life, theſe poor ſuffering Chriſtians both profeſſed and practiſed, refuſing to converſe with ſuch as lived in the ſuperfluities and exceſs of the world; for which, if you will believe their very adverſaries, they were perſecuted: for ſays Rainerius, (a great writer againſt them) "They uſe to teach, firſt, what the diſciples of Chriſt ought to be, and that none are his diſciples but they that imitate his life: and that the popes, cardinals, &c. becauſe they live in luxury, pride, avarice, &c. are not the Sernay c. 47. Chef. l. 3. c. 7.

1 John ii. 14, 15, 16, 17.

The Devil a ſcripturian ſometimes.

1 Pet. i. 12, 13, 14. Rom. viii. 1. to 16.

Rain. cap. de ſtud. pervert. alios & modo, dicendi. l. 98.

Barron. Ecc. Annal. tom. 12. an. 1176. p. 835. Kranz. in Metrop. l. 8. ſect. 18. & in Sax. l. 8. cap. 16.

the ſucceſſors of Chriſt; but themſelves only, in that they walk up to his commandments; thus (ſays he) they win upon the people." But if ſo, that none are Chriſtians but thoſe that imitate Chriſt, what will become of thoſe who call themſelves Chriſtians, and yet live at eaſe in the fleſh; not regarding the work of the holy croſs of Chriſt in their hearts, that crucifies them that bear it to the world, and the world to them? This was the true ground of their ſufferings, and their loud cries againſt the impieties of the greateſt; not ſparing any ranks, from the throne to the dunghil, as knowing their God was no reſpecter of perſons. And now, if you would follow them indeed, if you would be proteſtants in ſubſtance, and learn your enemies a way worth their changing, (for elſe better words go but a little way) if you would obtain the heavenly inheritance, and you would be eternally bleſſed, be ye perſuaded to forſake all the pride and the pomp of this vain worlds. O mind the concerns of an everlaſting reſt! Let the juſt and ſerious principle of God within you be the conſtant guide and companion of your minds; and let your whole hearts be exerciſed thereby; that you may experience an intire reformation and change of affections, through the power of that Divine Leaven, which leavens the whole lump, viz. body, ſoul and ſpirit, where it is received: to which and its work in man, our bleſſed Lord likened the kingdom of God, which he came to ſet up in the ſoul: that ſo having the joys and glory of another world in your view, you may give your beſt diligence to make your calling and election, to the poſſeſſion of them, ſure and certain; leſt ſelling that noble inheritance for a poor meſs of periſhing pottage, you never enter into his eternal reſt. And tho' this teſtimony may ſeem tedious, yet could it by no means be omitted.-----To authorize our laſt reaſon, of converting ſuperfluities into the relief of diſtreſſed perſons, (altho' one would think it is ſo equal and ſober, that it needs no other authority than its own, yet) I ſhall produce two teſtimonies, ſo remarkable, that as they ever were eſteemed truly good, ſo they cannot be approved by any that refuſe to do the ſame, without condemning themſelves of great iniquity. O you are called with an high and holy call; as high as heaven, and as holy as God; for it is he that calls us to holineſs, through Chriſt, who ſent his Son to bleſs us, in turning us from the evil of our ways; and unleſs we are ſo turned, we can have no claim to the bleſſing that comes by Chriſt to men.

c. vi. 8, 9.

Mat. xiii. 33.

Ecc. Hiſt. p. 5. 393.

§. XXIV. It is reported of PAULINUS, biſhop of Nola in Italy; that inſtead of converting the demains of his dioceſe to particular enrichments, he employed it all in the redemption of poor ſlaves and priſoners; believing it unworthy of the chriſtian faith, to ſee God's creation labour under the want of what he had to ſpare. All agree this was well done, but few agree to do the ſame.

Socrat. Scholaſt. l. 7. c. 21.

§. XXV. But more particularly of ACACIUS, biſhop of Amida, given us by Socrates Scholaſticus, in this manner; "When the Roman ſoldiers purpoſed in no wiſe to reſtore again unto the king of Perſia ſuch captives as they had taken at the winning Azazena, being about ſeven thouſand in number (to the great grief of the king of Perſia) and all of them ready to ſtarve for food; Acacius lamented their condition, and calling his clergy together, ſaid thus unto them, Our God hath no need of Diſhes or of Cups, for he neither eateth nor drinketh; theſe are not his neceſſaries: Wherefore ſeeing the church hath many precious Jewels, both of Gold and Silver, beſtowed of the free will and liberality of the faithful, it is requiſite that the captive ſoldiers ſhould be therewith redeemed, and delivered out of priſon and bondage; and they, periſhing with famine, ſhould therewith be refreſhed and relieved. Thus he prevailed to have them all converted into money; ſome for their immediate refreſhment, ſome for their redemption, and the reſt for coſtage or proviſion, to defray the charges of their voyage. Which noble act had ſuch an univerſal influence, that it more famed the Chriſtian religion amongſt the Infidels, than all their diſputes and battles: Inſomuch that the king of Perſia, and an Heathen, ſaid, The Romans endeavour to win their adverſaries both by wars and favours: And greatly deſired to behold that man, whoſe religion taught ſo much charity to enemies; which, it is reported, Theodoſius the emperor commanded Acacius to gratify him in." And if the apoſtle Paul's expreſſion hath any force, 'That he is worſe than an infidel, who provides not for his family;' how greatly doth this example aggravate your ſhame, that can behold ſuch pity and compaſſion expreſſed to ſtrangers, nay enemies, and thoſe Infidels too, and be ſo negligent of your own family, (for England, aye, Chriſtendom, in a ſenſe, if not the World, is no more) as not only to ſee their great neceſſities unanſwered, but that wherewith they ſhould be ſatisfied, converted to gratify the luſt of the eye, the luſt of the fleſh, and the pride of life. But however ſuch can pleaſe themſelves, in the deceitful daubing of their mercenary prieſts, and dream they are members of Jeſus Chriſt, it is certain that things were otherwiſe in the beginning; for then all was ſold and put into a common purſe, to ſupply indigencies: Not mattering earthly inheritances, farther than as they might in ſome ſenſe be ſubſervient to the great end for which they were given, namely, the good of the creation. Thus had the pureſt Chriſtians their minds and thoughts taken up with the better things, and raiſed with the aſſurance of a more excellent life and inheritance in the heavens, that will never paſs away. And for any to

1 Tim. v. 1.

Acts iv. 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37.

flatter

1668. Chap. XX.

flatter themſelves with being Chriſtians, whilſt ſo much exerciſed in the vanities, recreations and cuſtoms of the world, as at this very day we ſee they are, is to mock the great God, and abuſe their immortal ſouls. The Chriſtian life is quite another thing.

And leſt that any ſhould object, “Many do great and ſeemingly good actions to raiſe their reputation only; and others only decry pleaſure, becauſe they have not wherewithal, or know not how, to take it;” I ſhall preſent them with ſerious ſayings of Aged and Dying men, and thoſe of the greateſt note and rank; whoſe experience could not be wanting to give the trueſt account how much their Honours, Riches, Pleaſures and Recreations conduced to their ſatisfaction, upon a juſt reckoning, as well before their extreme moments, as upon their dying beds, when Death, that hard paſſage into eternity, looked them in the face.

CHAP. XXI.

Serious Dying, as well as Living, TESTIMONIES.

§ 1. Solomon. §. 2. Chilon. §. 3. Ignatius. §. 4. Juſtin Martyr. §. 5. Chryſoſtom. §. 6. Charles V. §. 7. Michael de Montaigne. §. 8. Cardinal Woolſey. §. 9. Sir Philip Sidney. §. 10. Secretary Walſingham. §. 11. Sir John Maſon. §. 12. Sir Walter Rawleigh. §. 13. H. Wotton. §. 14. Sir Chriſtopher Hatton. §. 15. Lord chancellor Bacon. §. 16. The great duke of Momerancy. §. 17. Henry Prince of Wales. §. 18. Philip III. king of Spain. §. 19. Count Gondamor. §. 20. Cardinal Richlieu. §. 21. Cardinal Mazarine. §. 22. Chancellor Oxciſtern. §. 23. Dr. Dun. §. 24. Jo. Selden. §. 25. H. Grotius. §. 26. P. Salmaſius. §. 27. Fran. Junius. §. 28. A. Rivetus. §. 29. The late earl of Marlborough. §. 30. Sir Henry Vane. §. 31. Abraham Cowley. §. 32. Late earl of Rocheſter. §. 33. One of the family of Howard. §. 34. Princeſs Elizabeth of the Rhine. §. 35. Commiſſioner Whitlock. §. 36. A ſiſter of the family of Penn. §. 37. My own father. §. 38. Anthony Lowther of Maſk. §. 39. Seigneur du Renti.

III. The ſerious Apprehenſions and Expreſſions of ſeveral Aged and Dying Men of Fame and Learning.

Ch. XXI.

Eccl. ii. 1. to 11.

§. I. SOLOMON, than whom none is believed to have more delighted himſelf in the enjoyments of the world, at leaſt better to have underſtood them; hear what he ſays, after all his experience; ‘I ſaid in my heart, Go to now; I will prove thee ‘with Mirth; therefore enjoy Pleaſure: And behold, this alſo is Vanity. I ſaid of ‘Laughter, It is mad; and of Mirth, What doth it? I made me great Works, builded ‘Houſes, planted Vineyards, made Gardens and Orchards, planted trees in them of all ‘kind of fruit: I got me Servants and Maidens; alſo great poſſeſſions; I gathered me ‘Silver and Gold, and the peculiar treaſures of Kings and Provinces; alſo Men and ‘Women Singers, and the delights of the ſons of men; as Muſical Inſtruments, and ‘that of all ſorts: So I was great, and increaſed more than all that were before me in ‘Jeruſalem; and whatſoever mine eyes deſired, I kept not from them; I with-held not ‘mine heart from any joy. Then I looked on all the works which my hands had ‘wrought, and behold, All was Vanity and Vexation of Spirit.’ The reaſon he gives in the 18th and 19th verſes is, that the time of enjoying them was very ſhort, and it was uncertain who ſhould be benefitted by them when he was gone. Wherefore he concludes all with this; ‘Fear God, and keep his commandments, for this is the whole du‘ty of man: For God ſhall bring every work into judgment, whether it be good, or whe‘ther it be evil.’ O that men would lay this to heart!

Severus, Apop. p. 175.

§. II. CHILON (one of the ſeven wiſe men of Greece, already mentioned upon another occaſion,) affords us a dying teſtimony of great example: It is related thus by Agellius: When his life drew towards an end, ready to be ſeized by death, he ſpoke thus to his friends about him: ‘My words and actions, in this long term of years, have been (almoſt ‘all) ſuch as I need not repent of; which, perhaps, you alſo know. Truly, even at this ‘time I am certain, “I never committed any thing, the remembrance of which begets “any trouble in me,” unleſs this one thing only; which, whether it were done amiſs, ‘or not, I am uncertain. I ſat with two others, as judge, upon the life of my Friend; ‘the law was ſuch, as the perſon muſt of neceſſity be condemned; ſo that either my ‘Friend muſt loſe his life, or ſome deceit be uſed towards the Law. Revolving many ‘things in my mind, for relief of a condition ſo deſperate, I conceived that which I put ‘in practice to be of all other the moſt eaſy to be borne: Silently I condemned him, and ‘perſuaded thoſe others, who judged, to abſolve him. Thus I preſerved, in ſo great a ‘buſineſs, the duty both of a Judge and Friend. But from that act I received this trou‘ble; that I fear it is not free from perfidiouſneſs and guilt, in the ſame buſineſs, at the ‘ſame time, and in a public affair, to perſuade others contrary to what was in my own ‘judgment beſt.’ O tender conſcience! Yet an Heathen's! Where dwells the Chriſtian that excelleth? Hard to be found among the great Rabbies of Chriſtendom.

§. III. IGNATIUS, who lived within the firſt hundred years after Chriſt, and was torn in pieces of wild beaſts at Rome, for his true faith in Jeſus, left this, amongſt other things, behind him: 'There is nothing better, than the Peace of a Good Conſcience:' Intimating, there might be a peace to Wicked conſciences, that are paſt feeling any thing to be evil, but ſwallowed up of the wickedneſs of the world. And in his epiſtle to the churches at Epheſus, Magneſia, Trallis and Rome, upon his martyrdom, ſaith, 'Now I begin to be a diſciple; I weigh neither viſible nor inviſible things, ſo that I may gain Chriſt.' O heavenly-minded man! A bleſſed martyr of Jeſus indeed.

Ignatius Epiſt. ad Epheſ. Mag. Trall. Rom. Euſ. l. 3. c. 32.

§. IV. JUSTIN MARTYR, a philoſopher, (who received Chriſtianity five and twenty years after the death of Ignatius) plainly tells us, in his relation of his converſion to the Chriſtian faith, 'That the power of godlineſs in a plain ſimple Chriſtian had that influence and operation on his ſoul, that he could not but betake himſelf to a ſerious and ſtrict life:' And yet, before, he was a Cynick; a ſtrict ſect. And this gave him joy at his martyrdom, having ſpent his days as a ſerious teacher, and a good example. And Euſebius relates, 'That tho' he was alſo a follower of Plato's doctrine; yet, when he ſaw the Chriſtians piety and courage, he concluded, no people ſo temperate, leſs voluptuous, and more ſet on divine things:' Which firſt induced him to be a Chriſtian.

Euſeb. Ecc. Hiſt. l. 4. c. 8.

§. V. CHRYSOSTOM, another father, ſo called, lays this down for neceſſary doctrine, 'To ſacrifice the whole ſoul and body to the Lord, is the higheſt ſervice we can pay unto him. God promiſeth mercy unto penitent ſinners; but he doth not promiſe them they ſhall have ſo much time as to-morrow for their repentance.'

§. VI. CHARLES V. emperor of Germany, king of Spain, and lord of the Netherlands, after three and twenty pitched fields, ſix triumphs, four kingdoms conquered, and eight principalities added to his dominions (a greater inſtance than whom can ſcarce be given) reſigned up all his pomp to other hands, and betook himſelf to his retirement; leaving this teſtimony behind him, concerning the life he ſpent in the honours and pleaſures of the world, and in that little time of his retreat from them all: 'That the ſincere ſtudy, profeſſion and practice of the Chriſtian religion, had in it ſuch joys and ſweetneſs, as COURTS were Strangers to.'

§. VII. MICHAEL DE MONTAIGNE (a lord of France, famous with men of letters for his book of Eſſays) giveth theſe inſtructions to others, and this character of himſelf, viz. 'Amidſt our banquets, feaſts and pleaſures, let us ever have this reſtraint or object of Death before us; that is, the remembrance of our condition: And let not pleaſure ſo much miſlead or tranſport us, that we altogether neglect or forget how many ways our joys, or our feaſtings, be ſubject unto Death, and by how many holdfaſts ſhe threatneth us and you. So did the Egyptians, who in the midſt of their banquetings, and in the full of their greateſt cheer, cauſed the Anatomy of a Dead Man to be brought before them, as a memorandum and warning to their gueſts. I am now, by means of the mercy of God, in ſuch a taking, that without regret, or grieving at any worldly matter, I am prepared to diſlodge, whenſoever he ſhall pleaſe to call me. I am every where free: My farewel is ſoon taken of all my friends, except of myſelf. No man did ever prepare himſelf to quit the world more ſimply and fully, or more generally lay aſide all thoughts of it, than I am fully aſſured I ſhall do. All the glory I pretend in my life, is, that I have lived Quietly: Quietly, not according to Metrodorus, Arceſilaus. or Ariſtippus; but according to Myſelf. Since philoſophy could never find any way for tranquility, that might be generally good; "Let every man in his own particular ſeek for it." Let us not propoſe ſo fleeting and ſo wavering an end unto ourſelves, as the World's Glory: Let us conſtantly follow Reaſon: And let the Vulgar Approbation follow us that way, if it pleaſe. I care not ſo much what I am with others, as I reſpect what I am IN MYSELF: I will be rich in myſelf, and not by borrowing. Strangers ſee but external appearances and events: Every man can ſet a good face upon the matter, when within he is full of care, grief and infirmities: They ſee not my heart, when they look upon my outward countenance.--We are nought but Ceremony; Ceremony doth tranſport us, and we leave the Subſtance of things: We hold faſt by the boughs, and leave the trunk or body, the Subſtance of things, behind us.'

§. VIII. CARDINAL WOOLSEY, the moſt abſolute and wealthy miniſter of ſtate this kingdom ever had, that in his time ſeemed to govern Europe as well as England, when come to the period of his life, left the world with this cloſe reflection upon himſelf; 'Had I been as diligent to ſerve my God, as I was to pleaſe my king, he would not have left me now in my gray hairs.' A diſmal reflection for all worldly-minded men; but thoſe more eſpecially who have the power and means of doing more good than ordinary in the world, and do it not; which ſeems to have been the caſe and reflection of this great man.

§. IX. Sir PHILIP SIDNEY (a ſubject indeed of England; but, they ſay, choſen king of Poland; whom queen Elizabeth called HER PHILIP; the prince of Orange, HIS MASTER; whoſe friendſhip the lord Brooks was ſo proud of, that he would have it part of his epitaph, "Here lies ſir Philip Sidney's friend:" Whoſe death was lamented in verſe by the then kings of France and Scotland, and the two univerſities of England) repented ſo much at his death of that witty vanity of his life, his Arcadia, that to prevent the unlawful kindling of heats in others, he would have committed it to the flames himſelf; and left this farewel amongſt his friends, ‘Love my memory; cheriſh my friends; ‘their faith to me may aſſure you that they are honeſt: But above all, govern your will ‘and affections by the Will and Word of your Creator. In me behold the End of this ‘World, and all its Vanities.’ And indeed he was not much out in ſaying ſo, ſince in him was to be ſeen the end of all natural parts, acquired learning, and civil accompliſhments. His farewel ſeems ſpoken without terror, with a clear ſenſe, and an equal judgment.

§. X. Secretary WALSINGHAM, an extraordinary man in queen Elizabeth's time, towards the concluſion of his days, in a letter to his fellow-ſecretary, Burleigh, then lord treaſurer of England, writes thus; ‘We have lived enough to our Country, our Fortunes, our Sovereign: It is high time we begin to live to Ourſelves, and to our God.’ Which giving occaſion for ſome court-droll to viſit, and try to divert him; ‘Ah! (ſaith he) ‘while we Laugh, all things are ſerious round about us; God is ſerious, when he preſerveth us; and hath patience towards us; Chriſt is ſerious, when he dieth for us; the Holy ‘Ghoſt is ſerious, when he ſtriveth with us; the whole creation is ſerious, in ſerving ‘God and us; they are ſerious in hell and in heaven: And ſhall a man that hath one ‘foot in his grave, Jeſt and Laugh?’ O that our ſtateſmen would weigh the conviction, advice and concluſion of this great man; and the greateſt man, perhaps, that has borne that character in our nation. For true it is, that none can be ſerious too ſoon, becauſe none can be good too ſoon. Away then with all fooliſh talking and jeſting, and let people mind more profitable things!

§. XI. JOHN MASON, knight, who had been privy-counſellor to four princes, and ſpent much time in the preferments and pleaſure of the world, retired with theſe pathetical and regretful ſayings: ‘After ſo many years experience, SERIOUSNESS is the ‘greateſt Wiſdom; TEMPERANCE the beſt Phyſic; a GOOD CONSCIENCE is the beſt ‘Eſtate. And were I to live again, I would change the court for a cloiſter, my privy-‘counſellor's buſtles for an hermit's retirement, and the whole life I lived in the palace, ‘for one hour's enjoyment of God in the chapel. All things elſe forſake me, beſides my ‘God, my Duty, and my Prayers.’

§. XII. Sir WALTER RALEIGH is an eminent inſtance, being as extraordinary a man as our nation hath produced: In his perſon, well deſcended; of health, ſtrength, and a maſculine beauty: In underſtanding, quick; in judgment, ſound; learned and wiſe, valiant and ſkilful: An Hiſtorian, a Philoſopher, a General, a Stateſman. After a long life, full of experience, he drops theſe excellent ſayings a little before his death, to his ſon, to his wife, and to the world, viz. ‘Exceed not in the humour of Rags and ‘Bravery; for theſe will ſoon wear out of faſhion: And no man is eſteemed for Gay Gar-‘ments, but by Fools and Women. On the other ſide, ſeek not Riches baſely, nor at-‘tain them by evil means: Deſtroy no man for his Wealth, nor take any thing from the ‘Poor; for the cry thereof will pierce the heavens: And it is moſt deteſtable before ‘God, and moſt diſhonourable before worthy men, to wreſt any thing from the needy ‘and labouring ſoul: God will never proſper thee, if thou offendeſt therein; but uſe ‘thy poor neighbours and tenants well.’ [A moſt worthy ſaying! But he adds] ‘Have ‘compaſſion on the Poor and Afflicted, and God will bleſs thee for it: Make not the ‘hungry ſoul ſorrowful; for if he curſe thee in the bitterneſs of his ſoul, his prayer ‘ſhall be heard of him that made him. Now, for the world (dear child) I know ‘it too well, to perſuade thee to dive into the practices of it: Rather ſtand upon thy ‘own guard againſt all thoſe that tempt thee to it, or may practiſe upon thee; whe-‘ther in thy Conſcience, thy Reputation, or thy Eſtate: Reſolve, that no man is Wiſe ‘or Safe, but he that is Honeſt. Serve God; Let him be the author of all thy actions: ‘Commend all thy endeavours to him, that muſt either wither or proſper them: Pleaſe ‘him with prayer; leſt if he frown, he confound all thy fortune and labour, like the ‘drops of rain upon the ſandy ground. Let my experienced advice, and fatherly in-‘ſtruction, ſink deep into thy heart: So God direct thee in all thy ways, and fill thy ‘heart with his grace.’

Sir WALTER RALEIGH's Letter to his WIFE, after his Condemnation.

‘YOU ſhall receive, my dear wife, my laſt words, in theſe my laſt lines. My ‘Love I ſend to you, That you may keep when I am dead; and my Counſel, that ‘you may remember it when I am no more. I would not, with my will, preſent ‘you Sorrows, dear Beſs; let them go to the grave with me, and be buried in the ‘duſt: and ſeeing that it is not the will of God that I ſhall ſee you any more, bear my ‘deſtruction patiently; and with an heart like yourſelf. Firſt, I ſend you all the thanks ‘which my heart can conceive, or my words expreſs, for your many travails and cares ‘for me; which, tho' they have not taken effect, as you wiſhed, yet my debt to you is ‘not the leſs; but pay it I never ſhall in this world. Secondly, I beſeech you, for the ‘love you bear me living, that you do not hide yourſelf many days; but by your travails ‘ ſeek to help my miſerable fortunes, and the right of your poor child; your mourning ‘ cannot avail me, who am but duſt. Thirdly, you ſhall underſtand, that my lands were ‘ conveyed (bona fide) to my child; the writings were drawn at Midſummer was a twelve-‘ month, as divers can witneſs; and I truſt, my blood will quench their malice, who de-‘ ſired my ſlaughter, that they will not ſeek to kill you and yours with extreme poverty. ‘ To what friend to direct you, I know not; for all mine have left me in the true time of ‘ trial. Moſt ſorry am I, that being ſurprized by death, I can leave you no better eſtate; God ‘ hath prevented all my determinations, that great God which worketh all in all. If you can ‘ live free from want, care for no more; for the reſt is but a vanity. Love God, and begin ‘ betimes; in him ſhall you find true, everlaſting, and endleſs comfort: When you have ‘ travelled, and wearied yourſelf with all ſorts of worldly cogitations, you ſhall ſit down ‘ by ſorrow in the end. Teach your ſon alſo to Serve and Fear God, whilſt he is young, ‘ that the fear of God may grow up in him; then will God be an Huſband to you, and a ‘ Father to him; an Huſband and a Father, that can never be taken from you. Dear ‘ Wife, I beſeech you, for my ſoul’s ſake, Pay all Poor Men. When I am dead, no doubt ‘ but you will be much ſought unto; for the world thinks I was very rich: have a care ‘ of the fair pretences of men; for no greater miſery can befal you in this life, than to ‘ become a prey unto the world, and after to be deſpiſed. As for me, I am no more ‘ yours, nor you mine: Death hath cut us aſunder; and God hath divided me from the ‘ world, and you from me. Remember your poor child, for his father’s ſake, who loved ‘ you in his happieſt eſtate. I ſued for my life, but (God knows) it was for you and ‘ yours that I deſired it: For know it, my dear wife, your child is the child of a True ‘ Man, who in his own reſpect deſpiſeth death, and his miſhapen and ugly forms. I ‘ cannot write much; God knows how hardly I ſteal this time, when all are aſleep: ‘ And it is alſo time for me to ſeparate my thoughts from the world. Beg my ‘ dead body, which living was denied you; and either lay it in Sherburne, or in Exeter ‘ church, by my father and mother. I can ſay no more; Time and Death call me ‘ away. The everlaſting God, powerful, infinite, and inſcrutable, God Almighty, who ‘ is Goodneſs itſelf, the TRUE LIGHT and LIFE, keep you and yours, and have mercy ‘ upon Me, and forgive my perſecutors, and falſe accuſers; and ſend us to meet in his ‘ glorious kingdom. My dear wife, farewel; bleſs my boy, pray for me; and let my ‘ True God hold you both in his arms.

‘ Yours that was, but not now my own, WALTER RALEIGH.’

Behold wiſdom, reſolution, nature and grace! how ſtrong in argument, wiſe in counſel, firm, affectionate and devout. O that your heroes and politicians would make him their example in his death, as well as magnify the great actions of his life. I doubt not, had he been to live over his days again, with his experience, he had made leſs noiſe, and yet done more good to the world and himſelf. It is a ſad thing to conſider, that men hardly come to know themſelves, or the world, till they are ready to leave it.

§. XIII. HENRY WOTTON, knight, thought it ‘The greateſt happineſs in this life, ‘ to be at leiſure to be, and to do, good;’ as in his latter end he was wont to ſay, when he reflected on paſt times, tho’ a man eſteemed ſober and learned, ‘How much time have ‘ I to repent of, and how little to do it in!’

§. XIV. Sir CHRISTOPHER HATTON, a little before his death adviſed his relations to be ſerious in the ſearch after ‘the will of God in the Holy Word:’ For (ſaid he) it is deſervedly accounted a piece of excellent knowledge to underſtand the law of the land, and the cuſtoms of a man’s country; how much more to know the ſtatutes of heaven, and the laws of eternity, thoſe immutable and eternal laws of juſtice and righteouſneſs! To know the will and pleaſure of the Great Monarch and Univerſal King of the world! ‘ I have ſeen an end of all perfection; but thy commandments, O God, are exceeding ‘ broad.’----Whatever other knowledge a man may be endued withal, could he by a vaſt and imperious mind, and an heart as large as the ſand upon the ſea ſhore, command all the knowledge of art and nature, of words and things; could he attain a maſtery in all languages, and ſound the depth of all arts and ſciences; could he diſcourſe the intereſt of all ſtates, the intrigues of all courts, the reaſon of all civil laws and conſtitutions, and give an account of all hiſtories; ‘and yet not know the Author of his being, and the pre-‘ ſerver of his life, his ſovereign, and his judge; his ſureſt refuge in trouble; his beſt ‘ friend, or worſt enemy; the ſupport of his life, and the hope of his death; his future ‘ happineſs, and his portion for ever; he doth but ſapienter deſcendere in infernum, ‘ with a great deal of wiſdom go down to hell.’

§. XV. FRANCIS BACON, lord high chancellor of England, ſome time before his death confeſſed, ‘That to be religious, was to live ſtrictly and ſeverely: For if the opi-‘ nion of another world be falſe, yet the ſweeteſt life in this world is piety, virtue, and ‘ honeſty: If it be true, there be none ſo wretched and miſerable, as looſe, carnal, ‘ prophane perſons.’

§. XVI. The great duke of MOMERANCY, collegue to the Duke of Orleans, (brother to the French king Lewis the thirteenth) in the war by them agitated againſt the miniſtry of cardinal Richlieu, being taken and convicted at Lyons, a little before his beheading, heading, looking upon himſelf, then very richly attired; ‘Ah! (ſays he) this becomes ‘not a ſervant of the crucified Jeſus! What do I with theſe vanities about me? He ‘was poor, deſpiſed and naked, when he went to the croſs to die for my ſins:’ And immediately he ſtripped himſelf of all his finery, and put a more grave and modeſt garment on him. A ſerious reflection, at a time when he beſt knew what was beſt.

§. XVII. Henry, Prince of Wales, eldeſt ſon to king James the Firſt, of whom others ſay many excellent things, hear what account he gives of himſelf at laſt: A perſon whom he loved, and that had been the companion of his diverſions, being with him in his ſickneſs, and aſking him, How he did? Was, amongſt many other ſober expreſſions, anſwered thus, ‘Ah Tom! I in vain wiſh for that time I loſt with thee, and others, in ‘vain recreations.’ So vain were recreations, and ſo precious was time to a Prince, and no ordinary one neither, upon a dying-bed. But why wiſhed he, with others, for more time, but that it might be better employed? Thus hath the Juſt Principle and Holy Spirit of God in men, throughout all generations, convinced them of their vanity and folly upon their dying-beds, who before were too much taken up to mind either a dying-bed, or a vaſt eternity; but when their days were almoſt numbered, when mortality haſtened on them, when the revelation of the righteous judgment was at the door, and that all their worldly recreations and enjoyments muſt be parted with, and that eye for ever ſhut, and fleſh turned to worms meat, that took delight therein; then, oh then it was, the Holy Witneſs had room to plead with conſcience: Then nothing but an holy, ſtrict, and ſevere life, was valuable; then ‘All the world for a little time,’ who before had given all their time for a little of a vain world. But if ſo ſhort a repreſentation of the inconſiſtency of the vanities of the world with the Chriſtian life, could make ſo deep an impreſſion, oh! to what a noble ſtature, and large proportion, had they been grown in all pious and heavenly knowledge, and how much greater had their rewards been, if they contentedly had foregone thoſe periſhing entertainments of the world betimes, and given the exerciſe of their minds to the tuition and guidance of that Univerſal Grace and Holy Spirit of God, which had ſo long ſhined in darkneſs, uncomprehended of it, and was at laſt but juſt perceived to give a ſight of what they had been doing all their days.

§. XVIII. Philip III. king of Spain, ſeriouſly reflecting upon the life he had led in the world, cried out upon his death-bed, ‘Ah, how happy were I, had I ſpent theſe ‘twenty-three years that I have held my kingdom, in a retirement.’ Crying out to his confeſſor, ‘My concern is for my ſoul, not my body: I lay all that God has ‘given me, my dominion, power, and my life, at the feet of Jeſus Chriſt my Saviour.’ Would kings would live, as well as die ſo!

§. XIX. Count Gondamor, ambaſſador in England for that very king, and held the ableſt man of his time, who took great freedom as to his religion in his politicks, ſerving his ends by thoſe ways that would beſt accompliſh them. When towards his latter end, he grew very thoughtful of his paſt life; and after all his negotiations and ſucceſſes in buſineſs, ſaid to one of his friends, ‘I fear nothing in the world more than ſin.’ Often profeſſing, ‘He had rather endure hell than ſin.’ So clear and ſtrong were his convictions, and ſo exceeding ſinful did ſin appear to him, upon a ſerious conſideration of his ways.

§. XX. Cardinal Richlieu, after having been firſt miniſter of ſtate of Europe, as well as of France, confeſſed to old Peter du Moulin, the famous Proteſtant of that country, ‘That being forced upon many irregularities by that which they call REASON OF ‘STATE, he could not tell how to ſatisfy his conſcience for ſeveral things; and ‘therefore had many temptations to doubt and diſbelieve a God, another world, and the ‘immortality of the ſoul, and thereby to relieve his mind from any diſquiet, but in ‘vain: So ſtrong, he ſaid, was the notion of God on his ſoul, ſo clear the impreſſion of ‘him upon the frame of the world, ſo unanimous the conſent of mankind, ſo powerful ‘the convictions of his own conſcience, that he could not but “Taſte the power of the “world to come,” and ſo live as one that muſt die, and ſo die as one that muſt live for ‘ever.’ And being aſked one day, Why he was ſo ſad? anſwered, ‘Monſieur, Monſieur, ‘the ſoul is a ſerious thing; it muſt be either ſad here for a moment, or be ſad for ever.’

§. XXI. Cardinal Mazarine, reputed the cunningeſt ſtateſman of his time, and who gave great proofs of it in the ſucceſſes of the French crown under his miniſtry: his aim was the Grandeur of the world, to which he made all other conſiderations ſubmit: But, poor man! he was of another mind a little before his death: For being awakened by the ſmart laſhes of conſcience, which repreſented his ſoul's condition very diſmal, with aſtoniſhment and tears he cried out, ‘O my poor ſoul, what will become of thee! ‘Whither wilt thou go?’ And ſpoke one day thus to the queen mother of France, ‘Madam, your favours have undone me: Were I to live again, I would be a Capuchin, rather than a Courtier.’

§. XXII. Count Oxcistern, chancellor of Sweedland, a perſon of the firſt quality, ſtation and ability in his own country; and whoſe ſhare and ſucceſs, not only in the chief miniſtry of affairs in that kingdom, but in the greateſt negotiations of Europe, during his time, made him no leſs conſiderable abroad. After all his knowledge and honour, being viſited in his retreat from public buſineſs by commiſſioner Whitlock, ambaſſador to queen Chriſtina, in the concluſion of their diſcourſe, he ſaid to the ambaſſador, ‘ I have ſeen much, and enjoyed much of this world; but I never knew how to ‘ Live till now. I thank my good God that has given me time to know Him, and to ‘ know Myſelf. All the comfort I have, and all the comfort I take, and which is more ‘ than the whole world can give, is Feeling the Good Spirit of God in my heart, and ‘ reading in this good book, (holding up the bible) that came from it.’ And farther addreſſed himſelf thus to the ambaſſador: ‘ You are now in the prime of your age and ‘ vigour, and in great favour and buſineſs; but this will all leave you, and you will ‘ one day better underſtand and reliſh what I ſay to you; and then you will find that ‘ there is more wiſdom, truth, comfort and pleaſure in retiring and turning your heart ‘ from the world, to the good Spirit of God, and in reading the bible, than in all the ‘ courts and favours of princes.’ This I had, as near as I am able to remember, from the ambaſſador's own mouth more than once. A very edifying hiſtory, when we conſider from whom it came; one of the greateſt and wiſeſt men of his age; while his underſtanding was as ſound and vigorous, as his experience and knowledge were great.

§. XXIII. Dr. DONNE, a great poet, taking his farewel of his friends, on his dying-bed, left this ſaying behind him, for them to meaſure their fancies and their actions by: ‘ I repent of all my life, but that part of it I ſpent in communion with God, and ‘ doing good.’

§. XXIV. SELDEN, one of the greateſt ſcholars and antiquaries of his time; one who had taken a diligent ſurvey of what knowledge was conſiderable amongſt the Jews, Heathens and Chriſtians; at laſt profeſſeth this, toward the end of his days, in his conference with biſhop Uſher, ‘ That notwithſtanding he had been ſo laborious in his enquiries, and ‘ curious in his collections, and had poſſeſſed himſelf of a treaſure of books and manu‘ ſcripts upon all ancient ſubjects; yet he could reſt his ſoul on none, ſave the ſcriptures:’ And above all, that paſſage lay moſt remarkable upon his ſpirit, Titus ii. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. ‘ For the grace of God, that bringeth ſalvation, hath appeared unto all men; teaching ‘ us, that denying ungodlineſs, and worldly luſts, we ſhould live ſoberly, righteouſly, ‘ and godly in this preſent world; looking for that bleſſed hope, and glorious appearing ‘ of the great God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; who gave himſelf for us, that he might ‘ redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good ‘ works: Theſe things ſpeak and exhort, and rebuke with all authority.’ And indeed it is one of the moſt comprehenſive paſſages in ſcripture; for it compriſes the End, Means, and Recompence of Chriſtianity.

§. XXV. HUGO GROTIUS, than whom theſe latter ages think they have not had a man of more univerſal knowledge (a light, ſay the Stateſmen; a light, ſay the Churchmen too) witneſs his “ Annals,” and his book, “ De Jure Belli & Pacis”; alſo his “ Chriſtian Religion, and Elaborate Commentaries.” He winds up his life and choice in this remarkable ſaying, which ſhould abate the edge of other men's inordinate deſires after what they falſly call learning; namely, ‘ I would give all my learning and honour for ‘ the plain integrity of JEAN URICK,’ who was a religious poor man that ſpent eight hours of his time in prayer, eight in labour, and but eight in meals, ſleep, and other neceſſaries. And to one that admired his great induſtry, he returned this by way of complaint: ‘ Ah! ‘ I have conſumed my life in laboriouſly doing nothing.’ And to another, that enquired of his wiſdom and learning what courſe to take? He ſolemnly anſwered, ‘ Be Serious.’ Such was the ſenſe he had, how much a ſerious life excelled, and was of force, towards a dying hour.

§. XXVI. To whom I join SALMASIUS, that famous French ſcholar, and the other's contemporary; who (after his many volumes of learning, by which he had acquired great veneration among men of books) confeſſed ſo far to have miſtaken True Learning, and that in which ſolid happineſs conſiſts, that he exclaimed thus againſt himſelf; ‘ Oh! I have loſt a world of Time! Time, that moſt precious thing in the world! ‘ Wheteof, had I but one year more, it ſhould be ſpent in David's Pſalms and Paul's ‘ Epiſtles. Oh, ſirs! (ſaid he to thoſe about him) Mind the World leſs, and God ‘ more. The fear of the Lord, that is wiſdom; and to depart from evil, that is under‘ ſtanding.’

Prov. ix. 10.
and xvi. 17.

§. XXVII. FRANCIS JUNIUS, an ingenious perſon, who hath writ his own life; as he was reading “ Tully de Legibus,” fell into a perſuaſion, “ Nibil curare Deum, nec “ ſui nec alieni;” till in a tumult in Lyons the Lord wonderfully delivered him from imminent death; ſo that he was forced to acknowledge a Divine Providence therein. And his father hearing the dangerous ways that his ſon was miſled into, ſent for him home, where he carefully and piouſly inſtructed him, and cauſed him to read over the New Teſtament; of which he himſelf writeth thus: ‘ When I opened the New Teſta‘ ment, I firſt lighted upon John's firſt chapter, “ In the beginning was the Word, &c.” ‘ I read part of the chapter, and was ſuddenly convinced, that the Divinity of the Argu‘ ment, and the majeſty and authority of the writing, did exceedingly excel all the elo-

‘quence of Human Writings: My body trembled, my mind was aſtoniſhed, and was ſo affected all that day, that I knew not where and what I was. Thou waſt mindful of me, O my God, according to the multitude of thy mercies, and calledſt home thy loſt ſheep into the fold.’ And as Juſtin Martyr of old, ſo he of late profeſſed, ‘That the power of godlineſs, in a plain ſimple Chriſtian, wrought ſo upon him, that he could not but take up a ſtrict and a ſerious life.’

§. XXVIII. A. RIVETUS, a man of learning, and much reverenced in the Dutch nation, after a long life of ſtudy, in ſearch of divine knowledge, upon his death-bed, being diſcourſed by his friend of heavenly things, brake forth in this manner; ‘God has learned me more of himſelf in ten days Sickneſs, than I could get by all my Labour and Studies.’ So near a way, ſo ſhort a cut it is, to the knowledge of God, when people come into the Right Way, which is, To turn in their minds and hearts to the voice of God, and learn of him, who is a Spirit, to be taught of him, and led by him: ‘For in righteouſneſs ſuch ſhall be eſtabliſhed, and great ſhall be their peace.’

§. XXIX. A Letter from JAMES earl of MARLBOROUGH, a little before his death, in the battle at ſea, on the coaſt of Holland, &c.

‘I Believe the goodneſs of your nature, and the friendſhip you have always borne me, will receive with kindneſs the laſt office of your friend. I am in health enough of body, and (through the mercy of God in Jeſus Chriſt) well diſpoſed in mind. This I premiſe, that you may be ſatisfied that what I write proceeds not from any fantaſtick terror of mind, but from a ſober reſolution of what concerns myſelf, and earneſt deſire to do you more good after my death, than mine example (God of his mercy pardon the badneſs of it) in my life-time may do you harm. I will not ſpeak ought of the vanity of this world; your own age and experience will ſave that labour: but there is a certain thing that goeth up and down the world, called RELIGION, dreſſed and pretended phantaſtically, and to purpoſes bad enough; which yet, by ſuch evil dealing loſeth not its being. The Great Good God hath not left it without a Witneſs, more or leſs, ſooner or later, in every man's boſom, to direct us in the purſuit of it; and for the avoiding of thoſe inextricable diſquiſitions and entanglements our own frail reaſons would perplex us withal. God in his infinite mercy hath given us his Holy Word; in which, as there are many things hard to be underſtood, ſo there is enough plain and eaſy to quiet our minds, and direct us concerning our future being. I confeſs to God and you, I have been a great neglecter, and (I fear) deſpiſer of it: (God of his infinite mercy pardon me the dreadful fault.) But when I retired myſelf from the noiſe and deceitful vanity of the world, I found no true comfort in any other reſolution, than what I had from thence. I commend, from the bottom of my heart, the ſame to your (I hope) happy uſe. Dear Hugh, let us be more generous, than to believe we die as the beaſts that periſh; but with a chriſtian, manly, brave reſolution, look to what is eternal. I will not trouble you farther. The Only Great God and Holy God, Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt, direct you to an happy end of your life, and ſend us a joyful reſurrection! ‘So prays your true friend,

‘MARLBOROUGH.’

§. XXX. The late Sir HENRY VANE muſt be too freſh in memory to need a character; but it is certain his parts were of the firſt rate, and ſuperior to the generality of men; yet he would often ſay, ‘He owed them to religion.’ In his youth he was much addicted to company, and promiſed little to buſineſs; but in reading of a book called “The ſigns of a godly man,” and being convicted in himſelf that they were juſt, but that he had no ſhare in any one of them; he fell into that extreme Anguiſh and Horror, that for ſome Days and Nights he took little food or reſt; which at once diſſolved his old friendſhips, and made thoſe impreſſions and reſolutions to religion, that neither Univerſity, Courts, Princes, nor Parents, nor any Loſſes or Diſappointments, that threatened his New Courſe of Liſe, could weaken or alter. And tho' this laid him under ſome diſadvantages for a time, his great integrity and abilities quickly broke through that obſcurity; ſo that thoſe of very differing ſentiments did not only admire, but very often deſired him to accept the moſt eminent negotiations of his country; which he ſerved according to his own principles, with great ſucceſs, and a remarkable ſelf-denial. This great man's maxim was, ‘Religion was the Beſt Maſter, and the Beſt Friend; for it made men wiſe, and would never leave them that never left it;’ which he found true in himſelf: For as it made him wiſer than thoſe that had been his teachers, ſo it made him firmer than any hero, having ſomething more than nature to ſupport him (which was the judgment as well of foreigners as others, that had the curioſity to ſee him die); making good ſome meditations of his own, viz. ‘The Day of Death is the judge of all our other Days; the very trial and touchſtone of the actions of our life. 'Tis the end that crowns the work, and a Good Death honoureth a man's whole life. The fading corruption and loſs of this life, is the paſſage into a better. Death is no leſs eſſential to us, than to live or to be born. In flying Death, thou flyeſt thy ſelf; thy eſſence is equally parted into theſe two, Life and Death. It is no ſmall reproach to a Chriſtian, whoſe faith is in immortality, and the bleſſedneſs of another life, to fear Death much, which is the neceſſary paſſage thereunto.'

§. XXXI. ABRAHAM COWLEY (whom to name, is enough with the men of wit of our time and nation) ſpeaks not leſs in favour of the Temperance and Solitude ſo much laboured in the preceding diſcourſe: Yet that his judgment may have the more force with the reader, it may be fit that I ſhould ſay, That he was a man of a ſweet and ſingular wit, great learning, and an even judgment; that had known what cities, univerſities and courts could afford; and that not only at home, but in divers nations abroad. Wearied with the world, he broke through all the entanglements of it; and, which was hardeſt, great friendſhip, and a perpetual praiſe; and retired to a ſolitary cottage near Barn-Elms, where his garden was his pleaſure, and he his own gardener: Whence he giveth us this following doctrine of retirement, which may ſerve for an account how well he was pleaſed in his change. 'The firſt work (ſaith he) that a man muſt do to make himſelf capable of the good of ſolitude, is the very eradication of all luſts; for how is it poſſible for a man to enjoy himſelf, while his affections are tied to things without himſelf. The firſt miniſter of ſtate hath not ſo much buſineſs in publick, as a wiſe man hath in private: If the one have little leiſure to be alone, the other hath leſs leiſure to be in company; the one hath but part of the affairs of one nation, the other all the works of God and nature under his conſideration. There is no ſaying ſhocks me ſo much, as that which I hear very often, "That a man doth not know how to paſs his time." It would have been but ill ſpoken of Methuſalem, in the nine hundred ſixty-ninth year of his life. But that is not to deceive the world, but to deceive ourſelves, as Quintilian ſaith, Vitam fallere, To draw on ſtill, and amuſe and deceive our life, till it be advanced inſenſibly to the fatal period, and fall into that pit which nature hath prepared for it. The meaning of all this is no more, than that moſt vulgar ſaying, "Bene qui latuit, bene vixit;" He hath lived well, who hath lain well hidden. Which, if it be a truth, the world is ſufficiently deceived: For my part, I think it is; and that the pleaſanteſt condition of life is in Incognito. What a brave privilege is it, to be free from all contentions, from all envying, or being envied, from receiving and from paying all kind of ceremonies! We are here among the vaſt and noble ſcenes of nature; we are there among the pitiful ſhifts of policy: We walk here in the light, and open ways of the divine bounty; we grope there in the dark and confuſed labyrinths of human malice: Our ſenſes are here feaſted with the clear and genuine taſte of their objects; which are all ſophiſticated there; and, for the moſt part, overwhelmed with their contraries. Here pleaſure looks, methinks, like a beautiful, conſtant and modeſt wife; 'tis there an impudent, fickle, and painted harlot. Here, is harmleſs and cheap plenty: There, guilty and expenceful luxury. The antiquity of this art is certainly not to be conteſted by any other. The three firſt men in the world were a Gardener, a Ploughman, and a Graſier: And if any man object, That the ſecond of theſe was a Murderer; I deſire he would conſider, that as ſoon as he was ſo, He quitted our Profeſſion, and turned Builder. 'Tis for this reaſon, I ſuppoſe, that the ſon of Syrach forbids us to hate huſbandry; becauſe (ſaith he) the Moſt High hath created it. We were all born to this art, and taught by nature to nouriſh our bodies by the ſame earth out of which they were made, and to which they muſt return, and pay at laſt for their ſuſtenance. Behold the Original and Primitive Nobility of all thoſe Great Perſons, who are too proud now not only to Till the ground, but almoſt to tread upon it. We may talk what we pleaſe of lilies and lions rampant, and ſpread eagles in fields d'or, or d'argent; but if heraldry were guided by Reaſon, a PLOUGH in a FIELD ARABLE would be the moſt noble and ancient arms.'

Bleſt be the man (and bleſt is he) whome'er,
(Plac'd far out of the roads of Hope or Fear)
A little Field, a little Garden, feeds;
The Field gives all that Frugal nature needs:
The wealthy Garden lib'rally beſtows
All ſhe can aſk, when ſhe Luxurious grows.
The ſpecious inconveniencies that wait
Upon a life of buſineſs and of ſtate,
He ſees (nor doth the ſight diſturb his reſt)
By Fools deſir'd, by Wicked men poſſeſt.
------- Ah wretched, and too Solitary, he Who loves not his own Company:
He'll feel the weight of't many a day,
Unleſs he call in ſin or vanity
To help to bear't away.

Out of Martial, he gives us this following epigram, which he makes his by Tranſlation and Choice, to tell his own Solitude by: I place it here as his.

Would you be free? 'Tis your chief wiſh you ſay:
Come on; I'll ſhew thee, friend, the certain way;

If to no feaſts abroad thou lov'ſt to go,
Whilſt bounteous God doth bread at home beſtow;
If thou the goodneſs of thy clothes doſt prize
By thy own Uſe, and not by others Eyes;
If only ſafe from Weathers, thou canſt dwell
In a ſmall Houſe, but a convenient Shell;
If thou without a Sigh or Golden Wiſh
Canſt look upon thy Beechen Bowl, or Diſh;
If in thy mind ſuch Power and Greatneſs be,
The Perſian King's a Slave, compar'd with thee.
Whilſt this hard truth I teach, methinks I ſee
The monſter, London, laugh at me;
I ſhould at thee too, fooliſh city,
If it were fit to laugh at Miſery;
But thy eſtate I pity.
Let but thy wicked men from out thee go,
And all the fools that crowd thee ſo;
Even thou, who doſt thy millions boaſt,
A Village leſs than Iſlington wilt grow;
A Solitude almoſt.

I ſhall conclude him with this prayer of his own.

For the few hours of life allotted me,
Give me (great God) but Bread and Liberty;
I'll beg no more; if more thou'rt pleas'd to give,
I'll thankfully that Overplus receive.
If beyond This no more be freely ſent,
I'll thank for This, and go away content.

Here ends the wit, the praiſe, the learning, the city, the court, with Abraham Cowley, that once knew and had them all.

§. XXXII. The late Earl of ROCHESTER was inferior to nobody in wit, and hardly any body ever uſed it worſe, if we believe him againſt himſelf, in his Dying Reflections: An account of which I have had from ſome that viſited him in his ſickneſs, beſides that larger one made public by the preſent biſhop of Saliſbury. It was then that he came to think there was a God, for he felt his laſhes on his conſcience; and that there was ſuch a thing as Virtue, and a Reward for it. Chriſtianity was no longer a worldly or abſurd deſign: But Chriſt a Saviour, and a moſt Merciful One; and his doctrines plain, juſt and reaſonable, and the true way to felicity here and hereafter: Admiring and adoring that mercy to him, which he had treated with ſo much infidelity and obſtinate contempt: Wiſhing only for more life to confute his paſt one, and in ſome meaſure to repair the injuries he had done to Religion by it: Begging forgiveneſs for CHRIST's ſake, tho' he thought himſelf the moſt unworthy of it for his Own. Thus died that Witty Lord ROCHESTER; and this retreat he made from the world he had ſo great a name in. May the looſe wits of the times, as he deſired, take WARNING by him, and not leave their Repentance to a Dying-Bed.

§. XXXIII. A noble young man of the family of HOWARD, having too much yielded to the temptations of youth, when upon his ſick-bed (which proved his Dying-bed) fell under the power and agony of great convictions, mightily bewailing himſelf in the remembrance of his former extravagancies; crying ſtrongly to God to forgive him, abhorring his former courſe, and promiſing amendment, if God renewed life to him. However, he was willing to die, having taſted of the love and forgiveneſs of God; warning his acquaintance and kindred that came to ſee him, to fear God, and forſake the pleaſures and vanity of this world: And ſo willingly yielded his ſoul from the troubles of time, and frailties of mortality.

§. XXXIV. The late princeſs ELIZABETH of the Rhine, of right claimeth a memorial in this diſcourſe; her virtue giving greater luſtre to her name than her quality, which yet was of the greateſt in the German empire. She choſe a ſingle life, as freeſt of care, and beſt ſuited to the ſtudy and meditation ſhe was always inclined to; and the chiefeſt diverſion ſhe took, next the air, was in ſome ſuch plain and houſewifely entertainment, as knitting, &c. She had a ſmall territory, which ſhe governed ſo well, that ſhe ſhewed herſelf fit for a greater. She would conſtantly, every Laſt-day in the week, ſit in judgment, and hear and determine cauſes herſelf; where her patience, juſtice and mercy, were admirable; frequently remitting her forfeitures, where the party was poor, or otherwiſe meritorious. And, which was excellent, tho' unuſual, ſhe would temper her diſcourſes with Religion, and ſtrangely draw concerned parties to ſubmiſſion and agreement; exerciſing not ſo much the rigor of her power, as the power of her perſuaſion. Her meekneſs and humility appeared to me extraordinary. She never conſidered the quality, but the merit of the people ſhe entertained. Did ſhe hear of 'a retired man, 'hid from the world, and ſeeking after the knowledge of a better,' ſhe was ſure to ſet him down in the catalogue of her charity, if he wanted it: I have caſually ſeen, I believe, Fifty Tokens ſealed and ſuperſcribed to the ſeveral poor ſubjects of her bounty, whoſe diſtances would not ſuffer them to know one another, tho' they knew her, whom yet ſome of them had never ſeen. Thus, tho' ſhe kept 'no ſumptuous table in her own 'Court, ſhe ſpread the tables of the Poor in their ſolitary Cells; breaking bread to virtuous pilgrims, according to their want, and her ability. Abſtemious in herſelf, and 'in apparel void of all vain ornaments.'

I muſt needs ſay, her mind had a noble proſpect: Her eye was to a better and more laſting inheritance than can be found below; which made her often to deſpiſe the Greatneſs of courts, and learning of the ſchools, of which ſhe was an extraordinary judge. Being once at Hamburgh, a religious perſon, whom ſhe went to ſee for religion's ſake, telling her, 'It was too great an honour for him, that he ſhould have a viſitant of her 'quality come under his roof, that was allied to ſo many great kings and princes of this 'world:' She humbly anſwered, 'If they were godly, as well as great, it would be an 'honour indeed; but if you knew what that greatneſs was, as well as I, you would va'lue leſs that honour.' Being in ſome agony of ſpirit, after a religious meeting we had in her own chamber, ſhe ſaid, 'It is an hard thing to be faithful to what one knows: Oh, 'the way is ſtrait! I am afraid I am not weighty enough in my ſpirit to walk in it.' After another meeting, ſhe uttered theſe words; 'I have records in my library, that the Goſ'pel was firſt brought out of England hither into Germany by the Engliſh, and now it 'is come again.' She once withdrew, on purpoſe to give her ſervants the liberty of diſcourſing us, that they might the more freely put what queſtions of conſcience they deſired to be ſatisfied in; for they were religious: Suffering both them, and the pooreſt of her town, to ſit by her in her own bed-chamber, where we had two meetings. I cannot forget her Laſt Words, when I took my leave of her: "Let me deſire you to remember "me, tho' I live at this diſtance, and that you ſhould never ſee me more. I thank you "for this good time; and know and be aſſured, tho' my condition ſubjects me to divers "temptations, yet my ſoul hath ſtrong deſires after the beſt things." She lived her ſingle life till about ſixty years of age, and then departed at her own houſe in Herwerden, which was about * two years ſince; as much lamented, as ſhe had lived beloved of the people: To whoſe Real Worth, I do, with Religious Gratitude for her kind reception, dedicate this memorial.

* She died in 1680. And this paſſage was inſerted in a ſecond edition of this treatiſe, an. 1682.

§. XXXV. Bulstrode Whitlock has left his own character in his "Memorials "of Engliſh affairs;" a book that ſhows both his employments and greater abilities. He was almoſt ever a commiſſioner and companion with thoſe great men, that the lords and commons of England, at ſeveral times, appointed to treat with king Charles I. for a peace. He was commiſſioner of the great ſeal, ambaſſador to the crown of Sweedland, and ſometimes preſident of the council: A ſcholar, a lawyer, a ſtateſman; in ſhort, he was one of the moſt accompliſhed men of the age. Being with him ſometimes at his own houſe in Berkſhire, where he gave me that account I have related of chancellor Oxciſtern, amongſt many ſerious things he ſpoke, this was very obſervable. 'I ever have thought,' ſaid he, 'there has been One True Religion in the World; and that is, the work of the 'Spirit of God in the hearts and ſouls of men. There have been indeed divers forms and 'ſhapes of things, through the many diſpenſations of God to men, anſwerable to his own 'wiſe ends, in reference to the low and uncertain ſtate of man in the world; but the 'Old World had the Spirit of God, for it ſtrove with them; and the New World has 'had the Spirit of God, both Jew and Gentile; and it ſtrives with all; and they that 'have been led by it, have been the good people in every diſpenſation of God to the 'world. And I myſelf muſt ſay, I have felt it from a child to convince me of my evil 'and vanity; and it has often given me a true meaſure of this poor world, and ſome taſte 'of divine things; and it is my grief I did not more early apply my ſoul to it. For I 'can ſay, ſince my retirement from the greatneſs and hurries of the world, I have felt 'ſomething of the work and comfort of it, and that it is both ready and able to inſtruct, 'and lead, and preſerve thoſe that will humbly and ſincerely hearken to it. So that my 'religion is the Good Spirit of God in my Heart; I mean, what that has wrought in 'me and for me.' And after a meeting at his houſe, to which he gave an entire liberty for all that pleaſed to come, he was ſo deeply affected with the teſtimony of the Light, Spirit and Grace of Chriſt in Man, as the Goſpel Diſpenſation, that after the meeting cloſed in prayer, he roſe up, and pulled off his hat, and ſaid, 'This is the Everlaſting 'Goſpel I have heard this day; and I humbly bleſs the name of God, that he has let 'me live to ſee this day, in which the Ancient Goſpel is again preached to them that 'dwell upon the earth.'

§. XXXVI. A ſiſter of the family of Penn, of Penn in Buckinghamſhire, a young woman delighting in the finery and pleaſures of the world, was ſeized with a violent illneſs, that proved mortal to her. In the time of her ſickneſs ſhe fell into great diſtreſs of ſoul, bitterly bewailing the want of that inward peace which makes a death-bed eaſy to the righteous. After ſeveral days languiſhing, a little conſolation appeared after this manner. She was ſome hours in a kind of a Trance; ſhe apprehended ſhe was brought into a place where Chriſt was; to whom could ſhe but deliver her petition, ſhe hoped to be relieved. But her endeavours increaſed her pain; for as ſhe preſſed to deliver it, 'He turned his back upon her,' and would not ſo much as look towards her. But that which added to her ſorrow, was, 'That ſhe beheld others admitted.' However, ſhe gave not over importuning him: And when almoſt ready to faint, and her hope to ſink, 'he turned one ſide of his face towards her, and reached forth his hand, and received her requeſt: At which her troubled ſoul found immediate conſolation.' Turning to thoſe about her, ſhe repeats what had befallen her; adding, 'Bring me my new clothes; take off the lace and finery.' And charged her relations, 'Not to deck and adorn themſelves after the manner of the world; for that the Lord Jeſus, whom ſhe had ſeen, appeared to her in the likeneſs of a PLAIN COUNTRY MAN, without any trimming or ornament whatever; and that his ſervants ought to be like him.'

§. XXXVII. My own FATHER, after thirty years employment, with good ſucceſs, in divers places of eminent truſt and honour in his own country; upon a ſerious reflection not long before his death, ſpoke to me in this manner, 'Son William, I am weary of the world; I would not live over my days again, if I could command them with a wiſh; for the ſnares of life are greater than the fears of death. This troubles me, that I have offended a gracious God, that has followed me to this day. O have a care of ſin! That is the ſting both of life and death. Three things I commend to you: Firſt, "Let nothing in this world tempt you to wrong your CONSCIENCE;" I charge you, do nothing againſt your conſcience; ſo will you keep peace at home, which will be a feaſt to you in a day of trouble. Secondly, Whatever you deſign to do, "lay it juſtly, and time it ſeaſonably;" for that gives ſecurity and diſpatch. Laſtly, "Be not troubled at diſappointments;" for if they may be recovered, do it; if they cannot, trouble is vain. If you could not have helped it, be content; there is often peace and profit in ſubmitting to Providence: For afflictions make wiſe. If you could have helped it, let not your trouble exceed inſtruction for another time: Theſe rules will carry you with firmneſs and comfort through this inconſtant world.' At another time he inveighed againſt the profaneneſs and impiety of the age; often crying out, with an earneſtneſs of ſpirit, 'Wo to thee O England! God will judge thee, O England! Plagues are at thy door, O England!' He much bewailed, That divers men in power, and many of the nobility and gentry of the kingdom, were grown ſo diſſolute and profane; often ſaying, 'God has forſaken us; we are infatuated; we will ſhut our eyes; we will not ſee our true intereſts and happineſs; we ſhall be deſtroyed!' Apprehending the conſequences of the growing looſeneſs of the age to be our ruin; and that the methods moſt fit to ſerve the kingdom with true credit at home and abroad, were too much neglected; the trouble of which did not a little help to feed his diſtemper, which drew him daily near to his end: And as he believed it, ſo leſs concerned or diſordered I never ſaw him at any time; of which I took good notice. Wearied to live, as well as near to die, he took his leave of us; and of me, with this expreſſion, and a moſt compoſed countenance: 'Son William, if you and your Friends keep to your plain Way of Preaching, and keep to your plain Way of Living, you will make an end of the prieſts to the end of the world. Bury me by my mother: Live all in love: Shun all manner of evil: And I pray God to bleſs you all; and he will bleſs you.'

§. XXXVIII. ANTHONY LOUTHER of Maſk; a perſon of good ſenſe, of a ſweet temper, a juſt mind, and of a ſober education; when of age to be under his own government, was drawn by the men of pleaſure of the town into the uſual freedoms of it, and was as much a judge as any body of the ſatisfaction that way of living could yield; but ſome time before his ſickneſs, with a free and ſtrong judgment, he would frequently upbraid himſelf, and contemn the world, for thoſe unſeaſonable as well as unchriſtian liberties, that ſo much abound in it; which apprehenſion increaſed by the inſtruction of a long and ſharp ſickneſs: He would often deſpiſe their folly, and abhor their guilt; breathing, with ſome impatience, after the knowledge of the beſt things, and the beſt company; loſing as little time as he could, that he might redeem the time he had loſt; teſtifying often, with a lively reliſh, to the truth of religion, from the ſenſe he had of it in his own breaſt: Frequently profeſſing, 'he knew no joy comparable to that of being aſſured of the Love and Mercy of God.' Which as he often implored with ſtrong convictions, and a deep humility and reverence, ſo he had frequently taſtes thereof before his laſt period; preſſing his relations and friends, in a moſt ſerious and affectionate manner, to 'love God and one another More, and this vile world Leſs.' And of this he was ſo full, it was almoſt ever the concluſion of his moſt inward diſcourſes with his family; tho' he ſometimes ſaid, 'he could have been willing to have lived, if God had pleaſed; to ſee his younger childred nearer a ſettlement in the world; yet he felt no deſire to live longer in the world, but on the terms of 'living better in it:' For that he did not only think virtue the ſafeſt, but the Happieſt way of living: Commending and Commanding it to his children upon his laſt bleſſing.

I ſhall conclude this chapter of Retired, Aged and Dying Perſons, with ſome collections I have made out of the life of a perſon of great piety and quality of the French nation.

§. XXXIX. Du Renty, a young nobleman of France, of admirable parts, as well as great birth, touched with a ſenſe of the vanity of the world, and the ſweetneſs of a retired and religious life, notwithſtanding the honours and employments that waited for him, abandons the pride and pomp of the world, to enjoy a life of more communion with God: Do but hear him: 'I avow (ſaith he) that I have no guſt in any thing, where I find not Jeſus Chriſt. And for a ſoul that ſpeaks not of him, or in which we cannot taſte any effect of Grace flowing from his Spirit (which is the Principle of Operations, both inward and outward, that are ſolidly Chriſtian) ſpeak not to me at all of ſuch an one. Could I (as I may ſay) behold both miracles and wonders there, and yet not Jeſus Chriſt, nor hear any talk of Him, I count all but amuſement of ſpirit, loſs of time, and a very dangerous precipice. Let us encourage ourſelves to lead this life unknown and wholly hid from men, but moſt known to, and intimate with God; diveſting ourſelves, and chaſing out of our minds all thoſe many ſuperfluities, and thoſe many amuſements, which bring with them ſo great a damage, that they take up our minds, inſtead of God. So that when I conſider that which thwarts and cuts into ſo many pieces this holy, this ſweet and amiable Union, which we ſhould have continually with God, it appears, that it is only a monſieur, a madame, a complement and chatting, indeed a mere foolery; which, notwithſtanding, doth raviſh and wreſt from us the time that is ſo precious, and the fellowſhip that is ſo holy and ſo deſirable. Let us quit this, I pray you, and learn to court it with our own Maſter. Let us well underſtand our part, our own world (as we here phraſe it); not that world, I mean, which we do renounce, but that wherein the children of God do their duties to their Father. There is nothing in this world ſo ſeparate from the world, as God; and the greater the ſaints are, the greater is their retirement Into Him. This our Saviour taught us, whilſt he lived on earth, being in all his viſible employments united to God, and retired into the boſom of his Father. Since the time that I gave up my liberty to God, as I told you, I was given to underſtand, to what a ſtate of Annihilation the ſoul muſt be brought, to render it capable of Union with him: I ſaw my ſoul reduced into a ſmall point, contracted and ſhrunk up to Nothing: And at the ſame time I beheld myſelf, as if encompaſſed with whatſoever the world loves and poſſeſſeth; and, as it were, a hand removing all this far from me, throwing it into the ocean of annihilation. In the firſt place, I ſaw removed all Exterior Things, Kingdoms, Great Offices, Stately Buildings, Rich Houſhold-ſtuff, Gold and Silver, Recreations, Pleaſures; all which are great Incumbrances to the ſoul's paſſing on to God; of which therefore his pleaſure is, that ſhe be ſtripped, that ſhe may arrive at the point of nakedneſs and death, which will bring her into poſſeſſion of ſolid riches, and real life. Aſſure yourſelf, there is no ſecurity in any eſtate, but this of Dying and Annihilation; which is, to be "baptized into Chriſt's death," that we live the life of mortification. Our beſt way is therefore, to diveſt ourſelves of All, that the Holy Child Jeſus may govern all. All that can be imagined in this lower world, is of ſmall concernment, tho' it were the loſing of all our goods, and the death of all the men in it; this poor ant-hill is not worthy of a ſerious thought. Had we but a little Faith, and a little Love, how happy ſhould we eſteem ourſelves, in giving away all, to attend no more, ſave on God alone; and to ſay, Deus meus, & omnia! My God, and my All!---Being (ſaith he) in a chapel richly wainſcotted, and adorned with very excellent ſculpture, and with imagery, I beheld it with ſome attention, having had ſome ſkill in theſe things, and ſaw the bundle of flowers-de-luces, and of flowers in form of borders, and of very curious workmanſhip; it was on a ſudden put into my mind, "The Original of what thou ſeeſt, would not detain thee at all in ſeeing it." And I perceived, that indeed all theſe, and thoſe flowers themſelves (not in Pictures) would not have taken me up; and all the ornaments which architecture and art invent, are but things moſt mean and low, running in a manner only upon Flowers, Fruits, Branches, Harpies and Chimera's; part whereof are, in their very being, but things common and low, and part of them merely imaginary; and yet man (who croucheth to every thing) renders himſelf amorous and a ſlave of them; no otherwiſe than as if a Good workman ſhould ſtand to copy out, and counterfeit, ſome trifles and fopperies. I conſidered by this ſight how poor man was to be cheated, amuſed and diverted from his Sovereign Good. And ſince that time, I could make no more ſtand to conſider any of theſe things: And if I did it, I ſhould reproach myſelf for it; as no ſooner ſeeing them in churches, or elſewhere, but this is preſently put upon my ſpirit, "The Original is Nothing, the Copy and the Image is yet leſs: Each thing is Vain, except the Employment of ourſelves about God alone." An abſolute Abnegation will be neceſſary to all things, to follow in Simplicity, without Reſerve or Reflection, what our Saviour ſhall work in us, or appoint for us, let it be this or that. This way was ſhewed me, in which I ought to walk towards him; and hence it is, that all things to me ordinarily are without any guſt and delight. I aſſure you, it is a great ſhame to a Chriſtian to paſs his days in this world more at eaſe than Jeſus Chriſt here paſſed his. Ah! Had we but a little faith, what repoſe could we take out of the Croſs!'

I will conclude his ſayings with his dying bleſſing to his ſurviving children.

'I pray God bleſs you; and may it pleaſe him to bleſs you, and to preſerve you by his Grace from the evil of the world, that you may have no part therein: and above all, my children, that you may live in the fear and love of God, and yield due obedience to your mother.'

Expreſſions of that weight and moment to the immortal good of men, that they abundantly prove, to all ſenſible readers, that the author was a man of an enlightened mind, and of a ſoul mortified to the world, and quickened to ſome taſtes of a ſupernatural life. Let his youth, let his quality, adorned with ſo much zeal and piety, ſo much ſelf-denial and conſtancy, become exemplary to thoſe of worldly quality, who may be the readers of this book. Some, perhaps, will hear that truth from the ſeveral authors I have reported, whoſe names, death and time have recovered from the envy of men, that would hardly endure it from me, if at all from the living. Be it as it will, I ſhall abundantly rejoice, if God ſhall pleaſe to make any part of this diſcourſe effectual to perſuade any into the love of holineſs, 'without which,' certain it is, 'no man ſhall ſee the Lord: But the pure in heart ſhall behold him for ever.'

To conclude; I cannot paſs this reflection upon what is obſerved of the ſayings of Dying Men, and which to me ſeems to have great inſtruction in it; viz. All men agree, when they come to die, it is beſt to be Religious; to live an Holy, Humble, Strict and ſelf-denying Life; Retired, Solitary, Temperate and Diſincumbered of the World. Then loving God ABOVE ALL, and our neighbours as ourſelves, forgiving our enemies, and praying for them, are ſolid things, and the eſſential part of religion, as the true ground of man's happineſs. Then all ſin is 'exceeding ſinful,' and yields no more pleaſure: But every inordinate deſire is burthenſome, and ſeverely reproved. Then the world, with all the lawful comforts in it, weighs light againſt that ſenſe and judgment, which ſuch men have between the temporal and the eternal. And ſince it is thus with dying men, what inſtruction is it to the living, whoſe pretence for the moſt part is a perpetual contradiction? O! that men would learn to "Number their days, that they might apply their hearts to wiſdom;" of which "the fear of the Lord is the true and only beginning." And "Bleſſed are they that fear always, for their feet ſhall be preſerved from the ſnare of death."

CHAP. XXII.

§. I. Of the Way of Living amongſt the firſt Chriſtians. §. 2. An Exhortation to all profeſſing Chriſtianity, to embrace the foregoing Reaſons and Examples. §. 3. Plain dealing with ſuch as reject them. §. 4. Their Recompences. §. 5. The Author is better perſuaded and aſſured of ſome: An Exhortation to them. §. 6. Encouragement to the Children of Light to perſevere, from a conſideration of the Excellency of their Reward; the End and Triumph of the Chriſtian Conqueror. The whole concluded with a brief Supplication to Almighty God.

The CONCLUSION.

§. I. HAVING finiſhed ſo many Teſtimonies, as my time would give me leave, in favour of this ſubject, No CROSS, No CROWN; No Temperance, No Happineſs; No Virtue, No Reward; No Mortification, No Glorification: I ſhall conclude with a ſhort deſcription of the life and worſhip of the Chriſtians, within the firſt century, or hundred years after Chriſt: What ſimplicity, what ſpirituality, what holy love and communion did in that bleſſed age abound among them! It is delivered originally by Philo Judæus, and cited by Euſebius Pamphilius, in his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory; 'That thoſe Chriſtians renounced their ſubſtance, and ſevered themſelves from all the cares of this life; and forſaking the cities, they lived ſolitary in fields and gardens. They accounted their company, who followed the contrary life of cares and buſtles, as unprofitable and hurtful to them; to the end that with earneſt and fervent deſires, they might imitate them which led this prophetical and heavenly life. In many places, ſays he, this people liveth (for it behoveth as well the Grecians as the Barbarians, to be partakers of this abſolute goodneſs); but in Egypt, in every province they abound; and eſpecially about Alexandria. From all parts the better ſort withdrew themſelves into the ſoil and place of theſe Worſhippers, (as they were called) as a moſt commodious place, adjoining to the Lake of Mary, in a valley very fit both for its ſecurity, and the temperance of the air. They are farther reported to have meeting-houſes, where the moſt part of the day was employed in Worſhipping God: That they were great Allegorizers of the ſcriptures, making them all figurative: That the external ſhew of words (or the letter) reſembleth the ſuperficies of the body; and the hidden ſenſe or underſtanding of the words ſeem in place of the ſoul; which they contemplate by their beholding names, as it were in a glaſs:' That is, their religion conſiſted not chiefly in reading the letter, diſputing about it, accepting things in Literal Conſtructions, but Philo Judæus of the worſhip of Egypt and Alexand. Euſeb. Pam. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 2. c. 17.

but in the Things declared of, the ſubſtance itſelf; bringing things nearer to the mind, ſoul and ſpirit, and preſſing into a more hidden and heavenly ſenſe; making religion to conſiſt in the Temperance and Sanctity of the Mind, and not in the Formal Bodily Worſhip, ſo much now-a-days in repute, fitter to pleaſe Comedians than Chriſtians. Such was the practice of thoſe times: But now the caſe is altered; people will be Chriſtians, and have their worldly-mindedneſs too: But tho' God's kingdom ſuffer violence by ſuch, yet ſhall they never enter: The Life of Chriſtand his followers hath in all ages been, another thing; and there is but One Way, One Guide, One Reſt; all which are pure and holy.

§. II. But if any (notwithſtanding our many ſober reaſons, and numerous teſtimonies from ſcripture, or the example or experience of religious, worldly and profane, living and dying men, at home and abroad, of the greateſt note, fame and learning, in the whole world) ſhall yet remain lovers and imitators of the folly and the vanity condemned; if the cries and groans, ſighs and tears, and complaints and mournful wiſhes of ſo many reputed great, nay ſome ſober men.----"O that I had more time!---O that I might live "a year longer, I would live a ſtricter life!---O that I were a poor Jean Urick!---All is "vanity in this world:---O my poor ſoul, whither wilt thou go?---O that I had the "time ſpent in vain recreations!---A ſerious life is above all;" and ſuch-like; if, I ſay, this by no means can prevail, but if yet they ſhall proceed to folly, and follow the vain world, what greater evidence can they give of their heady reſolution to go on impiouſly; to deſpiſe God; to diſobey his precepts; to deny Chriſt; to ſcorn; not to bear his croſs; to forſake the examples of his ſervants; to give the lie to the dying ſerious ſayings and conſent of all ages; to harden themſelves againſt the checks of conſcience; to befool and ſport away their precious time, and poor immortal ſouls to woe and miſery? In ſhort, it is plainly to diſcover you neither have Reaſon to juſtify yourſelves, nor yet enough of Modeſty to bluſh at your own folly; but, as thoſe that have loſt the ſenſe of one and the other, go on to "eat and drink, and riſe up to play." In vain therefore is it for you to pretend to fear the God of heaven, whoſe minds ſerve the god of the pleaſure of this world: In vain it is to ſay, you believe in Chriſt, who receive not his ſelf-denying doctrine: And to no better purpoſe will all you do, avail. If he that had loved "God and his neighbour, and kept the commandments from his youth," was excluded from being a diſciple, "becauſe he ſold not all, and followed Jeſus;" with what confidence can you call yourſelves Chriſtians, who have neither kept the commandments, nor yet forſaken any thing to be ſo? And if it was a bar betwixt him and the eternal life he ſought, that (notwithſtanding all his other virtues) love to Money, and his external poſſeſſions, "could not be parted with;" what ſhall be your end, who cannot deny yourſelves many Leſs things, but are daily multiplying your inventions, to pleaſe your fleſhly appetites? Certainly, much more impoſſible is it to forſake the Greater. Chriſt tried his love, in bidding him forſake All, becauſe he knew, for all his brags, that his mind was rivetted therein; not that if he had enjoyed his poſſeſſions with Chriſtian Indifferency, they might not have been continued: But what then is their doom, whoſe hearts are ſo fixed in the vanities of the world, that they will rather make them Chriſtian, than not to be Chriſtians in the uſe of them? But ſuch a Chriſtian this Young Man might have been, who had more to ſay for himſelf than the ſtricteſt Phariſee living dare pretend to; yet "he went away ſorrowful from Jeſus." Should I aſk you, if Nicodemus did well to come by night, and be aſhamed of the great Meſſiah of the world? And if he was not Ignorant when Chriſt ſpake to him of the New Birth? I know you would anſwer me, 'He did very ill, and was very ignorant.' But ſtay a while, the beam is in your own eyes; you are ready doubtleſs to condemn Him and the Young Man for not doing what you not only refuſe to do yourſelves, but laugh at Others for doing. Nay, had ſuch paſſages not been writ, and were it not for the reverence ſome pretend for the Scriptures, they would both be as ſtupid as Nicodemus in their anſwers to ſuch heavenly matters, and ready to call it Canting to ſpeak ſo; as it is frequent for you, when we ſpeak to the ſame effect, tho' not the ſame words: Juſt as the Jews, at what time they called God their Father, they deſpiſed his Son; and when he ſpake of ſublime and heavenly myſteries, ſome cried, "He has a devil;" others, "He is mad:" And moſt of them, "Theſe are hard ſayings, who can bear them?"

Ex. xxxii. 6.
Amos vi. 3. to 6. Eph. iv. 17. 24.
2 Tim. ii. 19.
Mat. xix. 16, to 22.
John iii. 1, to 5.

§. III. And to you all, that ſport yourſelves after the manners of the World, let me ſay, that you are thoſe, "who profeſs you know God, but in works deny him;" living in thoſe pleaſures which ſlay the Juſt in yourſelves. For tho' you talk of Believing, it is no more than taking it for granted that there is a God, a Chriſt, Scriptures, &c. without farther concerning yourſelves to prove the verity thereof, to yourſelves or others, by a ſtrict and holy converſation: Which ſlight way of Believing is but a light and careleſs way of ridding yourſelves of farther examination; and rather throwing them off with an inconſiderate granting of them to be ſo, than giving yourſelves the trouble of making better inquiry (leaving that to your prieſts, oft-times more ignorant, and not leſs vain and idle, than yourſelves) which is ſo far from a Goſpel Faith, that it is the leaſt reſpect you can ſhew to God, Scriptures, &c. and next to which kind of Believing is nothing, under a Denial of All.

Titus i. 16.

But if you have hitherto laid aſide all temptations to Reaſon and Shame, at leaſt be intreated to reſume them now in a matter of this importance, and whereon no leſs concernment reſts, than your temporal and eternal happineſs. ‘Oh! retire, retire; obſerve the ‘reproofs of inſtruction in your own minds: That which begets ſadneſs in the midſt
‘of mirth, which cannot ſolace itſelf, nor be contented below immortality; which calls ‘often to an account at nights, mornings, and other ſeaſons; which lets you ſee the vanity,
‘the folly, the end and miſery of theſe things; this is the Juſt Principle and Holy ‘Spirit of the Almighty within you: Hear him, obey him, converſe with them who are ‘led by him; and let the glories of another world be eyed, and the heavenly recompence
‘of reward kept in ſight.’ Admit not the thoughts of former follies to revive;
Tit. ii. 11, but be ſteady and continually exerciſed by his Grace, ‘to deny ungodlineſs and worldly 12, 13, 14. ‘luſts, and to live ſoberly, righteouſly and godly in this preſent world.’ For this is the true and heavenly nature of Chriſtianity, ‘To be ſo awakened and guided by the Spirit ‘and Grace of God, as to leave the ſins and vanities of the world, and to have the affections ‘regenerated, the mind reformed, and the whole man baptized into purity and ‘faithfulneſs towards God and man, as to act with reverence, juſtice and mercy. To ‘care for very few things; to be content with what you have; to uſe all as if you uſed ‘them not; and to be ſo diſintangled from the luſts, pleaſures, profits and honours of the ‘world, as to have the mind raiſed to things above, the heart and affections fixed there:
‘That in all things you may glorify God, and be as lights ſet on a hill, whoſe ſhining
‘examples may be conducing to the happineſs of others, who beholding ſuch good ‘works, may be converted, and glorify God the Father of lights, in whom you all would ‘be eternally bleſſed.’

§. IV. But if the impenitence of any is ſo great, their purſuit of folly as earneſt, and, notwithſtanding what has been thus ſeriouſly offered to reclaim them, they are reſolved to take their courſe, and not to be at leiſure for more divine things, I have this farther
Rom. ii. 4, to leave with them from the Almighty, who firſt called me to this work; ‘That tribulation,
5, 6, 9. ‘anguiſh, and ſorrow ſhall make their dying beds; indignation and wrath ſhall
‘wind up their days; and trouble and vexation of mind and ſpirit ſhall be the miſerable ‘fruits which they ſhall reap, as the reward of all their wretched folly and rebellion!’
Gal. vi. 4, Be not deceived, God will not be mocked: It is ſo irreverſibly decreed; ‘Whatſoever is 5, 6, 7, 8. ‘ſown here, ſhall be reaped hereafter.’ And juſt is the Almighty, to make good his determinations upon ſuch, who inſtead of employing the time given them, to ‘work out ‘their ſalvation with fear and trembling,’ have ſpent it in the pleaſures of the fleſh, Rev. iii. 20. which periſheth; as if their heaven were here. Nor can it ſeem unreaſonable, ſince he and xxi. 27. hath thus long waited with REMISSION of Sins, and ETERNAL LIFE in his hand, to and xxii. 13, diſtribute to them that REPENT; that if ſuch will not, to recompence ſo great obſtinacy, 14, 15. and love of this periſhing world, with everlaſting tribulation.

§. V. But I am otherwiſe perſuaded of many; yes, I am aſſured the mercies of the everlaſting God have been ſo extended to many, that this will prove an effectual call to bring them out of the ways and cuſtoms of this corrupted and corrupting world; and a means for eſtabliſhing ſuch, who hitherto have been unfaithful to what they have been already convinced of. And you, my friends, whoſe minds have received the Alarm, ‘whoſe hearts have truly heard the voice of one crying in the Wilderneſs, where you ‘have been ſtraying from the Lord, Repent, Repent!’ to you, in the name of the Great and Living God, I ſpeak, I cry, ‘Come away, come away; ah! what do you ‘do there? Why are you yet behind? That is not your reſt: it is polluted with the ſins
‘and vanities of a periſhing world: Gird up your loins; eye your Light (One in All)
John i. 9. ‘Chriſt Jeſus, the ſame yeſterday, to-day, and for-ever; who hath enlightened every ‘one: Follow him; he will lead you to the city of God, that has foundations, into ‘which the wicked cannot enter.’

§. VI. Mind not the difficulties of your march; great and good things were never enterprized and accompliſhed without difficulty; which does but render their enjoyment more pleaſant and glorious in the end. Let the holy men and women of old be your examples; remember good old Abraham, the excellency of whoſe faith is ſet out by his
Gen. xii. 1, obedience to the voice of God, in forſaking his father's houſe, kindred, country, &c.
2. And Moſes, that might in probability have been made a king, by faith in God, leaves
Heb. xi. 24, Egypt's glory, and Pharaoh's favours, and chuſes rather to ſojourn and pilgrimage with to 27. the deſpiſed, afflicted, tormented Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, than to enjoy the pleaſures
Iſa. liv. 3. of that great court for a ſeaſon; eſteeming Chriſt's reproaches greater riches than Egypt's
Heb. xii. 1, treaſures. But, above all, how great was the reproach, how many the ſufferings, how
2. bitter the mockings, which Jeſus ſuffered at the hands of his enemies? Yet with what patience, meekneſs, forgiveneſs and conſtancy, did he in all his actions demean himſelf towards his bloody perſecutors, “deſpiſing the ſhame, enduring the croſs, for the 1 Pet. ii. 21, “joy that was ſet before him? And hath left us this glorious example, that we ſhould 22, 23. “follow his ſteps;” which hath in almoſt every age been imitated by ſome. The apoſtles ſealed their teſtimonies with their blood, and multitudes after the example of their conſtancy; eſteeming it the greateſt honour, as it was always attended with the ſignalleſt demon-

ſtrations of the Divine Preſence. How memorable was that of Origen? 'If my father were weeping upon his knees before me, and my mother hanging about my neck behind me, and all my brethren, ſiſters and kinſfolk lamenting on every ſide, to retain me in the life and practice of the world, I would fling my mother to the ground, run over my father, deſpiſe all my kindred, and tread them under my feet, that I might run to Chriſt.' Yet it is not unknown, how dutiful and tender he was in thoſe relations. Not much unlike to this, was that noble and known inſtance of latter times, in Galeacius Caracciolus, marquis of Vico, who abandoned his friends, eſtate and country, reſolutely ſaying with Moſes, 'That he would rather ſuffer afflictions with the firſt reformers and proteſtants, than enjoy his former plenty, favours and pleaſures with his old religion.' Nor is it poſſible for any now to quit the world, and live a ſerious godly life in Chriſt, without the like ſuffering and perſecution. There are among us alſo ſome, who have ſuffered the diſpleaſure of their moſt dear and intimate relations and friends; and all thoſe troubles, diſgraces and reproaches, which are accuſtomed to attend ſuch, as decline the 'honours, pleaſures, ambition and preferments of the world, and that chuſe to live an humble, ſerious, and ſelf-denying life before the Lord:' But they are very unequal to the joy and recompence that follow. For tho' there be no affliction that is not grievous for the preſent, yet what ſays the man of God? "It works a far more exceeding weight of glory in the end." This has been both the faith and experience of thoſe that in all ages have truſted in God, 'who have not fainted by the way; but, enduring, have obtained an eternal diadem.'

2 Tim. iii. 12.
1 Pet. iv. 1. to 5.

Wherefore, ſince we are compaſſed about with ſo "great a cloud of witneſſes, let us lay aſide every weight and burden, and the ſin and vanities that do ſo eaſily beſet us; and with a conſtant, holy patience run our race, having our eyes fixed upon Jeſus, the author and finiſher of our faith, not minding what is behind;" ſo ſhall we be delivered from every ſnare. No temptations ſhall gain us, no frowns ſhall ſcare us from Chriſt's Croſs, and our bleſſed ſelf-denial: And honour, glory, immortality, and a crown of eternal life, ſhall recompence all our ſufferings in the end.

Heb. xi. 1.
Rom. v. 1, to 4.
Phil. iii. 13.
Rom. ii. 7.

"O Lord God! Thou loveſt holineſs, and purity is thy delight in the earth. Wherefore, I pray thee, make an end of ſin, and finiſh tranſgreſſion, and bring in thy everlaſting righteouſneſs to the ſouls of men, that thy poor creation may be delivered from the bondage it groans under, and the earth enjoy her ſabbath again: That thy great name may be lifted up in all nations, and thy ſalvation renowned to the ends of the world. For thine is the kingdom, the power and the glory for ever. Amen."

A LETTER of LOVE
TO THE
YOUNG-CONVINCED
OF
That Bleſſed Everlaſting Way of TRUTH and RIGHTEOUSNESS
Now teſtified unto by the PEOPLE of the LORD called QUAKERS,

Of what Sex, Age, and Rank ſoever, in the Nations of ENGLAND, IRELAND, and SCOTLAND, with the ISLES ABROAD, but more particularly to thoſe of that Great City of LONDON,

Spiritual Refreſhments, Holy Courage, and Perfect Victory from GOD the Father, and the Lord JESUS CHRIST. Amen.

My Dearly Beloved Friends and Brethren,

WHO have been called by the Eternal Spirit unto an holy calling, out of all the pleaſures, vanities, cuſtoms, profits and cares of this periſhing polluted world, unto the pure knowledge of the inviſible God, and "JESUS in you, the hope of glory," which, to as many as believe and obey, is life eternal; and who, for that little beginning of your heavenly journey, have met with reproach, loſs, ſuffering, and bitter trials; as one among you, and a traveller with you, and therefore deeply ſenſible of your heavy exerciſe, and bowed-down ſpirits, I am conſtrained by the Eternal Unction, which we have received from on high, to viſit you in tender bowels of love unfeigned; beſeeching you all, in God's moſt holy fear and counſel, to ſtand faſt, and "make your " calling and election ſure:" which is not (my deareſt friends) to thoſe external and ſhadowy ſervices, that could never perfect as concerning the conſcience, in which the worſhip of the Jews formerly, and of the nations now, moſtly do conſiſt, (carnal and beggarly elements indeed) but to that Law in the heart, and Spirit manifeſted in the inward parts, which is the ſubſtance of all.

Here God is the teacher of his people, and daily doth repleniſh his with the immediate virtue of his own Life. For God eternal is broken forth, and by the mighty power of his Spiritual Appearance is come to ſtain the beauty of all the inventions of ſuperſtitious men, and thereby to ſummon all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people to judgment for their unrighteouſneſs; that he alone may reign king in the heart, where the devil has hitherto had dominion; that true religion may conſiſt in fearing him, and working righteouſneſs, by the powerful operation of the Spirit of Jeſus in them; which, my dearly beloved friends, with all ſingleneſs of heart, let us wait to be ſenſible of; that through the glorious riſing of the pure power of the everlaſting God, which is felt by all the children of the light, we may be enabled "to work out our great ſalvation with fear and " trembling." For great and weighty is the work of the Almighty in this his day of appearance, even to adopt us ſons and daughters of the Moſt High, by a participation of his Divine Nature; "that as we have borne the image of the earthly, in pride, vanity, wantonneſs, avarice, and all manner of impieties," and that whilſt ſome of us were under great profeſſions, and the continual feaſting on viſible and elementary things; ſo that now we may daily experience, through obedience to that pure Light and Truth in the inward parts, which leads to all meekneſs, patience and purity, the quickening of the new man, and ſenſibly witneſs a bearing of the heavenly image; that ſo we may come to feel the "peace that paſſeth the world's underſtanding," and our poor, toſſed, tried, and troubled ſpirits in good meaſure fixt and anchored in the immoveable and holy ſtate, over all the glories and pollutions of the world; that ſo nothing may ever prevail upon us to return into our former ways and luſts, committed in our ignorance: For the overflowing ſcourge of the Almighty will be upon the back of the backſlider, and his ſwift wrath will overtake the heart that faints by the way; yea, better were it that ſuch had never been viſited with the glorious day-ſpring from on high, nor been convinced by the powerful perſuaſions of the Holy Spirit, concerning the pure eternal way of TRUTH, than afterwards to turn from it, and ſo trample the blood of that moſt excellent covenant under foot: Yea, it will be the moſt dreadful of all aggravations to their eternal woe and miſery.

And therefore, my dear friends, let us not be diſcomforted under all our ſharp and heavy exerciſes, whether from within or without. For this I am fully perſuaded of, that the ſame Pure Principle of Light and Truth that hath appeared to give a certain diſcerning of our ſtates and conditions, and wrought a convincement upon our underſtandings, is able to give us that ſuccour and ſupport, if our minds be but ſeriouſly ſtayed thereon, "as ſhall ſanctify us throughout, in body, ſoul, and ſpirit; and ſo preſerve us "clean, to God over all."

And, my dear brethren, let us not enter into any murmurings againſt the Lord, but be ſingly given up to know his will and work done in us, that we periſh not, as thoſe of old. And in the tender love of Jeſus Chriſt, I earneſtly intreat you, let us no more look back upon our ancient paſtimes and delights (but with holy reſolution preſs on, preſs on); for they will ſteal away our precious ſouls, beget new deſire, raiſe the old life, and finally enſnare and pollute our minds again; and what will be the end of ſuch rebellion but woes and tribulations from the hand of the juſt God, world without end? Neither let us enter into many Reaſonings with Oppoſers; for that is the life God's power is revealed to ſlay with the two-edged ſword: For it is the Still, the Quiet, and the Righteous Life, which muſt be exalted over all. And this I ſay in a ſound underſtanding, through the mercies of the Lord, That deadneſs, darkneſs, and anguiſh of ſpirit will be the end of ſuch diſputing and pragmatical Chriſtians, whoſe religion conſiſts much more in Words than Works, Confeſſing than Forſaking, and in their own Will-performances and External Obſervations, than in the Reformation and Converſion of their ſouls to God. And finally, we ourſelves, who have known ſomething more of the Lord, may alſo reduce our good conditions to an utter loſs, by ſeeking to comprehend dubious matters in our Underſtandings, and diſputing about them with every oppoſer, whom the Devil, in a way of temptation, ſhall preſent to us; which does no way advance our growth and increaſe in the noble principle of Truth.

And I beſeech you, my dear friends, let not the fear of any external thing overcome the holy reſolutions we have made to follow the Lamb Chriſt Jeſus, through all the tribulations, trials and temptations, he and his followers ever met withal. O let us be valiant in God's cauſe on earth, who have but a ſhort time and a few days to live.

And let the conſtancy of the world to the momentary faſhions, pleaſures, and pollutions of it, the more ardently ſtir us up to expreſs ours for the honour of our God againſt them all; who will reward us for whatſoever we bear, ſuffer, or part withal, on his account.

And therefore, I beſeech you, let neither father nor mother, ſiſter nor brother, wife nor child, houſe nor land, liberties, nor life itſelf, deter us from our holy conſtancy; but, as the faithful ancients did of old, through deſerts, wilderneſſes, and ſolitary places, goat-ſkins, and ſheep-ſkins, endure all torments, and bitter mockings, in this earthly pilgrimage, for the inheritance which is everlaſting.

So, my dear friends, let us do, as we have them for our example. However, let us be careful to ſhew all due reſpect to our relations, not to be exalted, nor any ways unruly, leſt there be juſt cauſe taken againſt us, and the bleſſed Truth ſhould ſuffer: But in the Still, Retired, Holy, and Patient Life, this Pure Eternal Principle of Light and Truth (as ſeriouſly and diligently waited on) certainly brings into, let us all dwell and abide; ſo ſhall we feel the powerful operation of God's Holy Spirit, to the more compleat redeeming of our exerciſed ſouls from under the dominion of ſin, and to the giving all of us a clearer underſtanding, and ſounder judgment, of thoſe things that are to be parted from, (as the pleaſures, cares, and cuſtoms of the world, that ſtand in the fallen nature, and only nouriſh the ſame, but crucify the ſelf-denying Lord of glory) and of the things of God, and his ſpiritual kingdom, which are to be adhered to; that in his pure wiſdom, which is from above, we may be all kept and preſerved over all the ſnares and temptations of the adverſary, both on the right hand and on the left.

And as one that is a Traveller in his way, I even beſeech, caution, and admoniſh you all, in the holy awe of God, that you never forbear meeting and aſſembling of yourſelves with the holy remnant amongſt whom we firſt received our bleſſed convincement. Oh! for ever let us honour the Lord's Truth, and thoſe who do ſincerely profeſs the ſame! But more eſpecially ſuch as were in Chriſt before us; for this is well-pleaſing unto the Lord.

1669. And let us beware of lightneſs, jeſting, or a careleſs mind, which grieves the Holy Spirit, “ that ſtands ready to ſeal us unto the day of our perfect redemption ;” but let us be grave, weighty and temperate, keeping low in body, as well as in mind, that in all things we may be examples, and a ſweet ſavour for the God who hath loved and called us.

And, my dear friends, let us keep in the ſimplicity of the Croſs of Jeſus, even in plainneſs of ſpeech, and out of the world's flattering and deceitful reſpects ; for we are as well to be a croſs in our garbs, gaits, dealings, and ſalutations, as religion and worſhip, to this vain adulterated and apoſtatized generation. So in the pure meaſure of Truth that hath been manifeſted to every particular, and has convinced us of the unrighteouſneſs of the world, and the vanity and emptineſs of all its profeſſions of God, Chriſt, and religion, oh ! let us ſtand and abide ! that we may feel it to be our refuge, and ſtrong tower, when the enemy ſhall approach, either by inward exerciſe, or outward bonds and ſufferings, which in all likelihood will ſuddenly overtake us, for the trial of our moſt precious faith ; ſo ſhall we ſenſibly experience that heavenly blood of cleanſing to ſtream therefrom, which only can give remiſſion, cleanſe from all ſin, and finally purge the conſcience from dead works, to ſerve the living, everlaſting, holy God Almighty, Lord of Hoſts, King of Nations, and King of Saints. ‘ And whatſoever things are true, whatſoever things are honeſt, ‘ whatſoever things are juſt, whatſoever things are pure, whatſoever things are lovely, ‘ and whatſoever things are of good report ; if there be any virtue, if there be any praiſe, ‘ O let us mind theſe things ! And the God of peace, that has by his eternal quickening ‘ power raiſed Jeſus in thouſands from the dead, bleſs, accompany, and preſerve us over ‘ all trials and tribulations, unto his eternal habitations of reſt and glory.’

Carberry, in the county of Cork, the 19th of the 12th month, 1669.

Your brother and fellow traveller in the kingdom and patience of Jeſus our Lord,

W. P.

THE

THE PEOPLE'S Ancient and Juſt LIBERTIES ASSERTED,
In the TRIAL of
WILLIAM PENN and WILLIAM MEAD,

At the SESSIONS held at the OLD BAILEY, in LONDON, the Firſt, Third, Fourth and Fifth of SEPTEMBER 1670.

AGAINST THE
MOST ARBITRARY PROCEDURE
OF THAT COURT.

To the Engliſh READER.

1670. IF ever it were time to ſpeak, or write, it is now; ſo many ſtrange occurrences requiring both.

How much thou art concerned in this enſuing trial, (where not only the Priſoners, but the Fundamental Laws of England, have been moſt arbitrarily arraigned) read, and thou mayeſt plainly judge.

Liberty of Conſcience is counted a pretence for Rebellion; and Religious Aſſemblies, Routs and Riots; and the Defenders of both are by them reputed factious and diſaffected.

Magna Charta is Magna Far-- with the Recorder of London; and to demand Right, an Affront to the Court.

Will and Power are their Great Charter; but to call for England's, is a Crime, incurring the penalty of their Bale-Dock and Naſty Hole; nay, the menace of a Gag, and Iron Shackles too.

The Jury (though proper Judges of Law and Fact) they would have over-ruled in both: As if their Verdict ſignified no more, than to echo back the illegal charge of the bench. And becauſe their Courage and Honeſty did more than hold pace with the Threat and Abuſe of thoſe who ſat as judges (after two days and two nights reſtraint for a verdict) in the end they were fined and impriſoned for giving it.

Oh! what monſtrous and illegal proceedings are theſe? Who reaſonably can call his coat his own, when property is made ſubſervient to the will and intereſt of his judges? Or, who can truly eſteem himſelf a Free Man, when all pleas for liberty are eſteemed Sedition, and the laws that give and maintain them, ſo many inſignificant pieces of formality.

And what do they leſs than plainly tell us ſo, who at will and pleaſure break open our locks, rob our houſes, raze our foundations, impriſon our perſons, and finally deny us juſtice to our relief? As if they then acted moſt like Chriſtian Men, when they were moſt Barbarous, in ruining ſuch as are really ſo; and that no ſacrifice could be ſo acceptable to God, as the Deſtruction of thoſe that moſt Fear him.

In ſhort, that the conſcientious ſhould only be obnoxious, and the juſt demand of our Religious Liberty the reaſon why we ſhould be denied our Civil Freedom (as if to be a Chriſtian and an Engliſhman were inconſiſtent); and that ſo much ſolicitude and deep contrivance ſhould be employed only to enſnare and ruin ſo many ten thouſand conſcientious families (ſo eminently induſtrious, ſerviceable, and exemplary; whilſt murders can ſo eaſily obtain pardon, Rapes be remitted, public Uncleanneſs paſs unpuniſhed, and all manner of Levity, Prodigality, Exceſs, Prophaneneſs and Atheiſm, univerſally connived at, if not in ſome reſpect manifeſtly encouraged) cannot but be deteſtably abhorrent to every ſerious and honeſt mind.

Yet that this lamentable ſtate is true, and the preſent project in hand, let London's Recorder, and Canterbury's Chaplain, be heard.

The firſt, in his public panegyrick upon the Spaniſh Inquiſition, 'highly admiring the Prudence of the Romiſh Church in the erection of it, as an excellent way to prevent ſchiſm.' Which unhappy expreſſion at once paſſeth ſentence, both againſt our fundamental laws, and proteſtant reformation.

The ſecond, in his printed mercenary Diſcourſe againſt Toleration, aſſerting for a main principle, 'That it would be leſs injurious to the Government to diſpenſe with prophane and looſe perſons, than to allow a Toleration to Religious Diſſenters.'---It were to overdo the buſineſs to ſay any more, where there is ſo much ſaid already.

And therefore to conclude, we cannot chuſe but admoniſh all, as well Perſecutors to relinquiſh their heady, partial, and inhumane perſecutions (as what will certainly iſſue in diſgrace here, and inevitable condign puniſhment hereafter); as thoſe who yet dare expreſs their moderation (however out of faſhion, or made the brand of fanaticiſm) not to be huffed, or menaced out of that excellent temper, to make their parts and perſons ſubſervient to the baſe humours and ſiniſter deſigns of the biggeſt mortal upon earth; but reverence and obey the eternal Juſt God, before whoſe great tribunal all muſt render their accounts, and where he will recompenſe to every perſon according to his works.

THE TRIAL.

1670.

AS there can be no obſervation, where there is no action; ſo it is impoſſible there ſhall be a judicious intelligence, without due obſervation.

And ſince there can be nothing more reaſonable than a right information, eſpecially of Public Acts; and well knowing how induſtrious ſome will be to miſrepreſent this Trial, to the diſadvantage of the Cauſe and Priſoners; it was thought requiſite, in defence of both, and for the ſatisfaction of the people, to make it more publick. Nor can there be any buſineſs wherein the people of England are more concerned, than in that which relates to their Civil and Religious Liberties, queſtioned in the perſons before named at the Old-Bailey, the firſt, third, fourth and fifth of Sept. 1670.

There being preſent on the bench, as Juſtices,

Sam. Starling, Mayor.
John Howell, Recorder.
Tho. Bludworth, Alderm.
William Peak, Alderm.
Richard Ford, Alderm.
John Robinſon, Alderm.
Joſeph Shelden, Alderm.
Rich. Brown,
John Smith,
James Edwards, } Sheriffs.

The citizens of London that were ſummoned for Jurors, appearing, were impanelled; viz.

Cle. Call over the jury.

Cry. Oyes, Thomas Veer, Ed. Buſhel, John Hammond, Charles Milſon, Gregory Walklet, John Brightman, Will. Plumſtead, Henry Henley, James Damaſk, Henry Michel, Will. Lever, John Baily.

The form of the OATH.

'You ſhall well and truly try, and true deliverance make betwixt our ſovereign lord 'the king, and the priſoners at the bar, according to your evidence. So help 'you God.'

The INDICTMENT.

'That William Penn, gent. and William Mead, late of London, linnen-draper, with 'divers other perſons to the jurors unknown, to the number of three hundred, the '15th day of Auguſt, in the 22d year of the king, about eleven of the clock in the 'forenoon of the ſame day, with force and arms, &c. in the pariſh of St. Bennet 'Grace-Church, in Bridge-Ward, London, in the ſtreet called Grace-Church-'Street, unlawfully and tumultuouſly did aſſemble and congregate themſelves toge'ther, to the diſturbance of the peace of the ſaid lord the king: And the afore'ſaid William Penn and William Mead, together with other perſons to the jurors 'aforeſaid unknown, then and there ſo aſſembled and congregated together; the 'aforeſaid William Penn, by agreement between him and William Mead before 'made, and by abetment of the aforeſaid William Mead, then and there, in 'the open ſtreet, did take upon himſelf to preach and ſpeak, and then and there 'did preach and ſpeak, unto the aforeſaid William Mead, and other perſons 'there in the ſtreet aforeſaid, being aſſembled and congregated together; by reaſon 'whereof a great concourſe and tumult of people in the ſtreet aforeſaid, then and 'there, a long time did remain and continue, in contempt of the ſaid lord the king, 'and of his law; to the great diſturbance of his peace, to the great terror and diſ'turbance of many of his liege people and ſubjects, to the ill example of all others in 'the like caſe offenders, and againſt the peace of the ſaid lord the king, his crown 'and dignity.'

What ſay you William Penn, and William Mead? Are you guilty, as you ſtand indicted, in manner and form as aforeſaid, or not guilty?

Penn. It is impoſſible that we ſhould be able to remember the indictment verbatim, and therefore we deſire a copy of it, as is cuſtomary on the like occaſions.

Rec. You muſt firſt plead to the indictment, before you can have a copy of it.

Penn. I am unacquainted with the formality of the law, and therefore before I ſhall anſwer directly, I requeſt two things of the court. Firſt, That no advantage may be taken 1670. againſt me, nor I deprived of any benefit, which I might otherwiſe have received. Secondly, That you will promiſe me a fair hearing, and liberty of making my defence.

Court. No advantage ſhall be taken againſt you: you ſhall have have liberty; you ſhall be heard.

Penn. Then I plead Not Guilty in Manner and Form.

Cle. What ſayeſt thou, William Mead? Art thou guilty in Manner and Form, as thou ſtandeſt indicted, or Not Guilty?

Mead. I ſhall deſire the ſame liberty as is promiſed to William Penn.

Court. You ſhall have it.

Mead. Then I plead Not Guilty, in Manner and Form.

The court adjourned until the afternoon.

Cry. Oyes! &c.

Cle. Bring William Penn and William Mead to the bar.

Obſer. The ſaid priſoners were brought, but were ſet aſide, and other buſineſs proſecuted. Where we cannot chuſe but obſerve, that it was the conſtant and unkind practice of the court, to the priſoners, to make them wait upon the trials of Felons and Murderers, thereby deſigning, in all probability, both to affront and tire them. After five hours attendance, the court broke up, and adjourned to the third inſtant.

The third of September 1670, the court ſat.

Cry. Oyes, &c.

Mayor. Sirrah, Who bid you put off their hats? Put on their hats again.

Obſer. Whereupon one of the officers putting the priſoners hats upon their heads (purſuant to the order of the court) brought them to the bar.

Record. Do you know where you are?

Penn. Yes.

Rec. Do you know it is the king's court?

Penn. I know it to be a court, and I ſuppoſe it to be the king's court.

Rec. Do you know there is reſpect due to the court?

Penn. Yes.

Rec. Why do you not pay it then?

Penn. I do ſo.

Rec. Why do you not put off your hat then?

Penn. Becauſe I do not believe that to be any reſpect.

Rec. Well, the court ſets forty marks a-piece upon your heads, as a fine, for your contempt of the court.

Penn. I deſire it may be obſerved, that we came into the court with our hats off (that is, taken off) and if they have been put on ſince, it was by order from the bench; and therefore not we, but the bench, ſhould be fined.

Mead. I have a queſtion to aſk the Recorder: Am I fined alſo?

Rec. Yes.

Mead. I deſire the jury, and all people, to take notice of this injuſtice of the Recorder, who ſpake not to me to pull off my hat, and yet hath he put a fine upon my head. O fear the Lord, and dread his power, and yield to the guidance of his Holy Spirit; for he is not far from every one of you.

The jury ſworn again.

Obſer. J. Robinſon, lieutenant of the Tower, diſingenuouſly objected againſt Edward Buſhel, as if he had not kiſſed the book, and therefore would have him ſworn again; though indeed it was on purpoſe to have made uſe of his tenderneſs of conſcience, in avoiding reiterated oaths, to have put him by his being a juryman, apprehending him to be a perſon not fit to anſwer their arbitrary ends.

The clerk read the indictment as aforeſaid.

Cle. Call James Cook into the court, give him his oath.

Cle. James Cook, lay your hand upon the book; "The evidence you ſhall give to the "court, betwixt our ſovereign the king, and the priſoners at the bar, ſhall be the truth, "and the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. So help you God, &c."

Cook. I was ſent for from the Exchange, to go and diſperſe a meeting in Gracious-ſtreet, where I ſaw Mr. Penn ſpeaking to the people, but I could not hear what he ſaid, becauſe of the noiſe. I endeavoured to make way to take him, but I could not get to him for the croud of people. Upon which Captain Mead came to me, about the kennel of the ſtreet, and deſired me to let him go on; for when he had done, he would bring Mr. Penn to me.

Court. What number do you think might be there?

Cook. About three or four hundred people.

Court. Call Richard Read, give him his oath.

Read being ſworn, was aſked, What do you know concerning the priſoners at the bar?

Read.

1670.

Read. My lord, I went to Gracious-ſtreet, where I found a great croud of people, and I heard Mr. Penn preach to them; and I ſaw Captain Mead ſpeaking to Lieutenant Cook, but what he ſaid I could not tell.

Mead. What did William Penn ſay?

Read. There was ſuch a great noiſe that I could not tell what he ſaid.

Mead. Jury, obſerve this evidence; he ſaith, He heard him preach; and yet ſaith, He doth not know what he ſaid.

Jury, take notice, he ſwears now a clean contrary thing to what he ſwore before the mayor, when we were committed: For now he ſwears that he ſaw me in Gracious-ſtreet, and yet ſwore before the mayor, when I was committed, that he did not ſee me there. I appeal to the mayor himſelf if this be not true? (But no anſwer was given.)

Court. What number do you think might be there?

Read. About four or five hundred.

Penn. I deſire to know of him what day it was?

Read. The 14th day of Auguſt.

Penn. Did he ſpeak to me, or let me know he was there? For I am very ſure I never ſaw him.

Cle. Crier, call---- ---- ----into the court.

Court. Give him his oath.

----My lord, I ſaw a great number of people, and Mr. Penn I ſuppoſe was ſpeaking. I ſaw him make a motion with his hands, and heard ſome noiſe, but could not underſtand what he ſaid. But for Captain Mead, I did not ſee him there.

Rec. What ſay you, Mr. Mead? Were you there?

Mead. It is a maxim in your own law, Nemo tenetur accuſare ſeipſum; which if it be not true Latin, I am ſure that it is true Engliſh, “That no man is bound to accuſe “himſelf.” And why doſt thou offer to enſnare me with ſuch a queſtion? Doth not this ſhew thy malice? Is this like unto a judge, that ought to be council for the priſoner at the bar?

Rec. Sir, hold your tongue; I did not go about to enſnare you.

Penn. I deſire we may come more cloſe to the point, and that ſilence be commanded in the court.

Cry. Oyes! All manner of perſons keep ſilence, upon pain of Impriſonment.---Silence in the court.

Penn. We confeſs ourſelves to be ſo far from recanting, or declining to vindicate the aſſembling of ourſelves, to preach, pray, or worſhip the Eternal, Holy, Juſt God, that we declare to all the world, that we do believe it to be our indiſpenſible duty to meet inceſſantly upon ſo good an account; nor ſhall all the powers upon earth be able to divert us from reverencing and adoring our God, who made us.

Brown. You are not here for worſhipping God, but for breaking the law. You do yourſelves a great deal of wrong in going on in that diſcourſe.

Penn. I affirm I have broken no law, nor am I guilty of the indictment that is laid to my charge. And to the end the bench, the jury, and myſelf, with thoſe that hear us, may have a more direct underſtanding of this procedure, I deſire you would let me know by what law it is you proſecute me, and upon what law you ground my indictment.

Rec. Upon the Common Law.

Penn. Where is that Common Law?

Rec. You muſt not think that I am able to run up ſo many years, and over ſo many adjudged caſes, which we call Common Law, to anſwer your curioſity.

Penn. This anſwer I am ſure is very ſhort of my queſtion; for if it be Common, it ſhould not be ſo hard to produce.

Rec. Sir, will you plead to your indictment?

Penn. Shall I plead to an indictment that hath no foundation in law? If it contain that law you ſay I have broken, why ſhould you decline to produce that law, ſince it will be impoſſible for the jury to determine, or agree to bring in their verdict, who have not the law produced, by which they ſhould meaſure the truth of this indictment, and the Guilt, or contrary, of my fact.

Rec. You are ſaucy fellow. Speak to the indictment.

Penn. I ſay it is my place to ſpeak to matter of Law. I am arraigned a priſoner; my Liberty, which is next to life itſelf, is now concerned. You are many mouths and ears againſt me; and if I muſt not be allowed to make the beſt of my caſe, it is hard. I ſay again, unleſs you ſhew me, and the people, the law you ground your indictment upon, I ſhall take it for granted your proceedings are merely arbitrary.

Obſer. At this time ſeveral upon the bench urged hard upon the priſoner to bear him down.

Rec. The queſtion is, Whether you are Guilty of this indictment?

Penn. The queſtion is not whether I am guilty of this indictment, but whether this indictment be Legal. It is too general and imperfect an anſwer, to ſay it is the Common Law, unleſs we knew both where, and what it is. For where there is no law, there is no

1670. no tranſgreſſion; and that law which is not in being, is ſo far from being common, that it is no law at all.

Rec. You are an impertinent fellow. Will you teach the court what Law is? It is lex non ſcripta; that which many have ſtudied thirty or forty years to know; and would you have me tell you in a moment?

Penn. Certainly, if the Common Law be ſo hard to be underſtood, it is far from being very common. But if the Lord Cook, in his "Inſtitutes," be of any conſideration, he tells us, 'That Common Law is Common Right; and that Common Right is the Great 'Charter Privileges, confirmed 9 Hen. 3. 29. 25 Edw. 1. 1. 2 Edw. 3. 8.' Cook Inſt. 2. p. 56.

Rec. Sir, you are a troubleſome fellow, and it is not for the honour of the court to ſuffer you to go on.

Penn. I have aſked but one queſtion, and you have not anſwered me; though the rights and privileges of every Engliſhman be concerned in it.

Rec. If I ſhould ſuffer you to aſk queſtions till to-morrow morning, you would be never the wiſer.

Penn. That is according as the Anſwers are.

Rec. Sir, we muſt not ſtand to hear you talk all night.

Penn. I deſign no affront to the court, but to be heard in my juſt plea. And I muſt plainly tell you, that if you will deny me the Oyer of that law, which you ſuggeſt I have broken, you do at once deny me an acknowledged right, and evidence to the whole world your reſolution to ſacrifice the privileges of Engliſhmen to your ſiniſter and arbitrary deſigns.

Rec. Take him away. My lord, if you take not ſome courſe with this peſtilent fellow, to ſtop his mouth, we ſhall not be able to do any thing to-night.

Mayor. Take him away, take him away; turn him into the Bale-Dock.

Penn. Theſe are but ſo many vain exclamations. Is this Juſtice, or true Judgment? Muſt I therefore be taken away becauſe I plead for the fundamental Laws of England? However, this I leave upon your conſciences, who are of the Jury, (and my ſole Judges) that if theſe Ancient Fundamental Laws, which relate to LIBERTY and PROPERTY, (and are not limited to particular Perſuaſions in matters of religion) muſt not be indiſpenſably maintained and obſerved, "Who can ſay he hath right to the Coat upon his "back?" Certainly our liberties are openly to be invaded; our wives to be raviſhed; our children ſlaved; our families ruined; and our eſtates led away in triumph, by every ſturdy beggar, and malicious informer, as their trophies, but our (pretended) Forfeits for Conſcience Sake. The Lord of heaven and earth will be Judge between us in this matter.

Rec. Be ſilent there.

Penn. I am not to be ſilent in a caſe wherein I am ſo much concerned; and not only myſelf, but many ten thouſand families beſides.

Obſer. They having rudely haled him into the Bale-Dock, William Mead they left in court, who ſpake as followeth.

Mead. You men of the jury, here I do now ſtand to anſwer to an indictment againſt me, which is a bundle of ſtuff, full of lies and falſhoods; for therein I am accuſed that I met vi & armis, illicitè & tumultuoſè. Time was, when I had freedom to uſe a carnal weapon, and then I thought I feared no man; but now I fear the Living GOD, and dare not make uſe thereof, nor hurt any man; nor do I know I demeaned myſelf as a tumultuous perſon. I ſay, I am a peaceable man; therefore it is a very proper queſtion what William Penn demanded in this caſe, 'an Oyer of the Law,' on which our indictment is grounded.'

Rec. I have made anſwer to that already.

Mead. [Turning his face to the Jury, ſaid,] You men of the Jury, who are my Judges, if the Recorder will not tell you what makes a Riot, a Rout, or an Unlawful Aſſembly, Cook, he that once they called the Lord Cook, tells us what makes a Riot, a Rout, and an Unlawful Aſſembly.---'A Riot is when Three, or more, are met together to beat a man, or to enter forcibly into another man's land, to cut down his 'graſs, his wood, or break down his pales.'

Obſer. Here the Recorder interrupted him, and ſaid, 'I thank you, ſir, that you will 'tell me what the law is;' (ſcornfully pulling off his hat.)

Mead. Thou mayeſt put on thy hat; I have never a fee for thee now.

Brown. He talks at random; one while an Independent, another while ſome other religion, and now a Quaker, and next a Papiſt.

Mead. Turpe eſt doctori cum culpa redarguit ipſum.

Mayor. You deſerve to have your tongue cut out.

Rec. If you diſcourſe in this manner, I ſhall take occaſion againſt you.

Mead. Thou didſt promiſe me I ſhould have fair liberty to be heard, Why may I not have the privilege of an Engliſhman? I am an Engliſhman; and you might be aſhamed of this dealing.

Rec. I look upon you to be an enemy to the laws of England, which ought to be obſerved and kept; nor are you worthy of ſuch privileges as others have.

Mead. The Lord is judge between me and thee in this matter.

Obſer. Upon which they took him away into the Bale-dock; and the Recorder proceeded to give the Jury their charge, as followeth.

Rec. You have heard what the indictment is; it is for preaching to the people, and drawing a tumultuous company after them; and Mr. Penn was ſpeaking. If they ſhould not be diſturbed, you ſee they will go on. There are three or four witneſſes that have proved this, that he did preach there, that Mr. Mead did allow of it. After this, you have heard by ſubſtantial witneſſes what is ſaid againſt them. Now we are upon the matter of fact, which you are to keep to and obſerve, as what hath been fully ſworn, at your peril.

Obſer. The priſoners were put out of the court, into the Bale-dock, and the charge given to the jury in their abſence. At which W. P. with a very raiſed voice, (it being a conſiderable diſtance from the bench) ſpake.

Penn. I appeal to the Jury, who are my judges, and this great aſſembly, whether the proceedings of the court are not moſt arbitrary, and void of all law, in offering to give the jury their charge in the abſence of the priſoners. I ſay, it is directly oppoſite to, and deſtructive of, the undoubted right of every Engliſh priſoner, as Cook, in the 2 inſt. 29. on the chapter of Magna Charta, ſpeaks.

Obſer. The recorder being thus unexpectedly laſhed for his extra-judicial procedure, ſaid, with an enraged ſmile, Rec. Why ye are preſent, you do hear: Do you not?

Penn. No thanks to the court, that commanded me into the Bale-dock. And you of the jury take notice, that I have not been heard, neither can you legally depart the court, before I have been fully heard; having at leaſt ten or twelve material points to offer, in order to invalidate their indictment.

Rec. Pull that fellow down; pull him down.

Mead. Are theſe according to the rights and privileges of Engliſhmen, that we ſhould not be heard, but turned into the Bale-dock, for making our defence, and the jury to have their charge given them in our abſence? I ſay, theſe are barbarous and unjuſt proceedings.

Rec. Take them away into the Hole. To hear them talk all night, as they would, that I think doth not become the honour of the court; and I think you (i. e. the jury) yourſelves would be tired out, and not have patience to hear them.

Obſer. The jury were commanded up to agree upon their verdict, the priſoners remaining in the ſtinking hole. After an hour and half's time, Eight came down agreed, but Four remained above; the court ſent an officer for them, and they accordingly came down. The Bench uſed many unworthy threats to the Four that diſſented; and the Recorder, addreſſing himſelf to Buſhel, ſaid, Sir, you are the cauſe of this diſturbance, and manifeſtly ſhew yourſelf an abettor of faction; I ſhall ſet a mark upon you, ſir.

J. Robinſon. Mr. Buſhel, I have known you near this fourteen years; you have thruſt yourſelf upon this jury, becauſe you think there is ſome ſervice for you. I tell you, you deſerve to be indicted more than any man that hath been brought to the bar this day.

Buſhel. No, Sir John, there were Threeſcore before me; and I would willingly have got off, but could not.

Bludw. I ſaid, when I ſaw Mr. Buſhel, What I ſee, is come to paſs: For I knew he would never yield. Mr. Buſhel, we know what you are.

Mayor. Sirrah, you are an impudent fellow; I will put a mark upon you.

Obſer. They uſed much menacing language, and behaved themſelves very imperiouſly to the jury, as perſons not more void of juſtice, than ſober education. After this barbarous uſage, they ſent them to conſider of bringing in their verdict; and after ſome conſiderable time they returned to the court. Silence was called for, and the jury called by their names.

Cle. Are you agreed upon your verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cle. Who ſhall ſpeak for you?

Jury. Our foreman.

Cle. Look upon the priſoners at the bar: How ſay you? Is William Penn Guilty of the matter whereof he ſtands indicted in manner and form, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty of ſpeaking in Gracious Street.

Court. Is that all?

1670. Foreman. That is all I have in commiſſion.

Rec. You had as good ſay nothing.

Mayor. Was it not an Unlawful aſſembly? You mean he was ſpeaking to a Tumult of people there?

Foreman. My lord, this was all I had in commiſſion.

Obſer. Here ſome of the jury ſeemed to buckle to the queſtions of the court; upon which Buſhel, Hammond, and ſome others, oppoſed themſelves, and ſaid, 'They 'allowed of no ſuch word, as an Unlawful aſſembly, in their Verdict.' At which the Recorder, Mayor, Robinſon, and Bludworth, took great occaſion to vilify them with moſt opprobrious language; and this verdict not ſerving their turns, the Recorder expreſſed himſelf thus:

Rec. The law of England will not allow you to depart, till you have given in your verdict.

Jury. We have given in our verdict, and we can give in no other.

Rec. Gentlemen, you have not given in your verdict, and you had as good ſay nothing. Therefore go and conſider it once more, that we may make an end of this troubleſome buſineſs.

Jury. We deſire we may have pen, ink, and paper.

Obſer. The court adjourns for half an hour; which being expired, the court returns, and the jury not long after.

The priſoners were brought to the bar, and the jurors names called over.

Cle. Are you agreed of your verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cle. Who ſhall ſpeak for you.

Jury. Our foreman.

Cle. What ſay you? Look upon the priſoners: Is William Penn guilty in manner and form, as he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Here is our Verdict [holding forth a piece of paper to the Clerk of the Peace, which follows]:

WE the jurors, hereafter named, do find William Penn to be guilty of Speaking or Preaching to an aſſembly, met together in Gracious-Street, the 14th of Auguſt laſt 1670; and that William Mead is Not guilty of the ſaid indictment.

Foreman,	Thomas Veer,	Henry Michel,	John Baily,
	Edward Buſhel,	John Brightman,	William Lever,
	John Hammond,	Charles Milſon,	James Damaſk,
	Henry Henly,	Gregory Walklet,	William Plumſtead.

Obſer. This both Mayor and Recorder reſented at ſo high a rate, that they exceeded the bounds of all reaſon and civility.

Mayor. What! will you be led by ſuch a ſilly fellow as Buſhel! an impudent canting fellow? I warrant you, you ſhall come no more upon juries in haſte: You are a foreman, indeed! (addreſſing himſelf to the foreman) I thought you had underſtood your place better.

Rec. Gentlemen, you ſhall not be diſmiſſed, till we have a verdict that the court will accept; and you ſhall be locked up, without meat, drink, fire and tobacco. You ſhall not think thus to abuſe the court; we will have a verdict, by the help of God, or you ſhall ſtarve for it.

Penn. My jury, who are my judges, ought not to be thus menaced. Their verdict ſhould be free, and not compelled. The bench ought to wait upon them, but not foreſtall them. I do deſire that juſtice may be done me, and that the arbitrary reſolves of the bench may not be made the meaſure of my jury's verdict.

Rec. Stop that prating fellow's mouth, or put him out of the court.

Mayor. You have heard that he preached; that he gathered a company of tumultuous people; and that they do not only diſobey the martial power, but the civil alſo.

Penn. It is a great miſtake; we did not make the tumult, but they that interrupted us. The jury cannot be ſo ignorant, as to think that we met there with a deſign to diſturb the civil peace; ſince, 1ſt, we were by force of arms kept out of our lawful houſe, and met as near it in the ſtreet as the ſoldiers would give us leave: And, 2dly, becauſe it was no new thing, nor with the circumſtances expreſſed in the indictment, but what was uſual and cuſtomary with us. It is very well known, that we are a peaceable people, and cannot offer violence to any man.

Obſer. The court being ready to break up, and willing to huddle the priſoners to their jail, and the jury to their chamber, Penn ſpake as follows:

Penn. The agreement of twelve men is a Verdict in Law; and ſuch a one being given by the jury, "I require the Clerk of the Peace to record it, as he will anſwer it at his peril." And if the jury bring in another verdict contrary to this, I affirm they are perjured men in law. [And looking upon the jury, ſaid] "You are Engliſhmen; mind "your privilege, give not away your right."

Buſhel, &c. Nor will we ever do it.

Obſer. One of the jury-men pleaded indiſpoſition of body, and therefore deſired to be diſmiſſed.

Mayor. You are as ſtrong as any of them. Starve then, and hold your principles.

Rec. Gentlemen, you muſt be content with your hard fate; let your patience overcome it; for the court is reſolved to have a verdict, and that before you can be diſmiſſed.

Jury. We are agreed, we are agreed, we are agreed.

Obſer. The court ſwore ſeveral perſons to keep the jury all night, without meat, drink, fire, or any other accommodation. They had not ſo much as a chamber-pot, though deſired.

Cry. Oyes, &c.

Obſer. The court adjourned till ſeven of the clock next morning (being the fourth inſtant, vulgarly called Sunday); at which time the priſoners were brought to the bar, the court ſat, and the jury called in, to bring in their verdict.

Cry. Oyes, &c.---Silence in the court, upon pain of impriſonment.
The jury's names called over.

Cle. Are you agreed upon your verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cle. Who ſhall ſpeak for you?

Jury. Our foreman.

Cle. What ſay you? Look upon the priſoners at the bar: Is William Penn guilty of the matter whereof he ſtands indicted, in manner and form as aforeſaid, or Not guilty?

Foreman. William Penn is guilty of ſpeaking in Gracious-Street.

Mayor. To an Unlawful Aſſembly?

Buſhel. No, my Lord, we give no other verdict than what we gave laſt night: We have no other verdict to give.

Mayor. You are a factious fellow; I'll take a courſe with you.

Bludw. I knew Mr. Buſhel would not yield.

Buſhel. Sir Thomas, I have done according to my conſcience.

Mayor. That conſcience of yours would cut my throat.

Buſhel. No, my lord, it never ſhall.

Mayor. But I will cut yours as ſoon as I can.

Rec. He has inſpired the jury; he has the ſpirit of divination; methinks I feel him. I will have a poſitive verdict, or you ſhall ſtarve for it.

Penn. I deſire to aſk the Recorder one queſtion: Do you allow of the verdict given of William Mead?

Rec. It cannot be a verdict, becauſe you are indicted for a Conſpiracy; and one being found not guilty, and not the other, it could not be a verdict.

Penn. If Not guilty be not a Verdict, then you make of the jury, and Magna Charta, but a mere noſe of wax.

Mead. How! Is Not guilty no Verdict?

Rec. No, it is no verdict.

Penn. I affirm, That the Conſent of a Jury is a Verdict in Law. And if William Mead be Not guilty, it conſequently follows, that I am clear; ſince you have indicted us of a Conſpiracy, and I could not poſſibly conſpire Alone.

Obſer. There were many paſſages that could not be taken, which paſſed between the jury and the court. The jury went up again, having received a freſh charge from the bench, if poſſible to extort an unjuſt verdict.

Cry. Oyes, &c.----Silence in the court.

Court. Call over the jury.----[Which was done.]

Cle. What ſay you? Is Willam Penn guilty of the matter whereof he ſtands indicted in manner and form aforeſaid, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty of ſpeaking in Gracious-Street.

Rec. What is this to the purpoſe? I ſay I will have a verdict. [And ſpeaking to E. Buſhel, ſaid] You are a factious fellow; I will ſet a mark upon you. And whilſt I have any thing to do in the city, I will have an eye upon you.

Mayor. Have you no more wit, than to be led by ſuch a pitiful fellow? I will cut his noſe.

Penn. It is intolerable that my jury ſhould be thus menaced! Is this according to the Fundamental Law? Are not they my proper judges by the Great Charter of England? What hope is there of ever having juſtice done, when juries are threatened, and their verdicts rejected? I am concerned to ſpeak, and grieved to ſee ſuch arbitrary proceedings. Did not the Lieutenant of the Tower render one of them worſe than a Felon? And do you not plainly ſeem to condemn ſuch for factious fellows, who anſwer not your ends? Unhappy are thoſe juries, who are threatened to be fined, and ſtarved, and ruined, if they give not in their verdicts contrary to their conſciences.

Rec. My Lord, you muſt take a courſe with that ſame fellow.

1670. Mayor. Stop his mouth. Jailer, bring fetters, and ſtake him to the ground.

Penn. Do your pleaſure; I matter not your fetters.

Rec. Till now I never underſtood the reaſon of the policy and prudence of the Spaniards in ſuffering the Inquiſition among them. And certainly it will never be well with us, till ſomething like the Spaniſh Inquiſition be in England.

Obſer. The jury being required to go together, to find another verdict, and ſtedfaſtly refuſing it (ſaying, they could give no other verdict than what was already given) the Recorder in great Paſſion was running off the bench, with theſe words in his mouth, 'I proteſt I will ſit here no longer to hear theſe things.' At which the Mayor calling, Stay, ſtay, he returned, and directed himſelf unto the jury, and ſpake as followeth:

Rec. Gentlemen, we ſhall not be at this paſs always with you. You will find the next ſeſſions of parliament there will be a law made, that thoſe that will not conform, ſhall not have the protection of the law. Mr. Lee, draw up another verdict, that they may bring it in ſpecial.

Lee. I cannot tell how to do it.

Jury. We ought not to be returned; having all agreed, and ſet our hands to the verdict.

Rec. Your verdict is nothing; you play upon the court. I ſay, you ſhall go together, and bring in another verdict, or you ſhall ſtarve; and I will have you carted about the city, as in Edward the third's time.

Foreman. We have given in our verdict, and all agreed to it. And if we give in another, it will be a force upon us to ſave our lives.

Mayor. Take them up.

Officer. My Lord they will not go up.

Obſer. The Mayor ſpoke to the Sheriff, and he came off his ſeat, and ſaid:

Sher. Come gentlemen, you muſt go up; you ſee I am commanded to make you go.

Obſer. Upon which the jury went up; and ſeveral were ſworn to keep them without any accommodation, as aforeſaid, till they brought in their verdict.

Cry. Oyes, &c. The court adjourns till to-morrow morning, at ſeven of the clock.

Obſer. The priſoners were remanded to Newgate, where they remained till next morning, and then were brought into the court; which being ſat, they proceeded as followeth:

Cry. Oyes, &c.---Silence in the Court, upon pain of impriſonment.

Clerk. Set William Penn and William Mead to the bar. Gentlemen of the jury, anſwer to your names; Thomas Veer, Edward Buſhel, John Hammond, Henry Henley, Henry Michel, John Brightman, Charles Milſon, Gregory Walklet, John Bailey, William Lever, James Damaſk, William Plumſtead; are you all agreed of your verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Clerk. Who ſhall ſpeak for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Clerk. Look upon the priſoners. What ſay you? Is William Penn guilty of the matter whereof he ſtands indicted, in Manner and Form, &c. or not guilty?

Foreman. You have there read in writing already our verdict, and our hands ſubſcribed.

Obſer. The clerk had the paper, but was ſtopped by the Recorder from reading of it; and he commanded to aſk for a poſitive verdict.

Foreman. If you will not accept of it; I deſire to have it back again.

Court. That paper was no verdict; and there ſhall be no advantage taken againſt you by it.

Clerk. How ſay you? Is William Penn guilty, &c. or not guilty?

Foreman. Not guilty.

Clerk. How ſay you? Is William Mead guilty, &c. or not guilty?

Foreman. Not guilty.

Clerk. Then hearken to your verdict. You ſay that William Penn is Not guilty in Manner and Form, as he ſtands indicted: You ſay that William Mead is Not guilty in Manner and Form, as he ſtands indicted; and ſo you ſay all.

Jury. Yes, we do ſo.

Obſer. The bench being unſatisfied with the verdict, commanded that every perſon ſhould diſtinctly anſwer to their names, and give in their verdict; which they unanimouſly did, in ſaying, Not Guilty, to the great ſatisfaction of the aſſembly.

Rec. I am ſorry, gentlemen, you have followed your own judgments and opinions, rather than the good and wholeſome advice which was given you. God keep my life out of your hands: But for this the court fines you forty marks a man, and impriſonment till paid. [At which Penn ſtepped up towards the bench, and ſaid]

Penn. I demand my liberty, being freed by the jury.

Mayor. No! you are in for your fines.

Penn. Fines! for what?

Mayor. For contempt of the court.

Penn. I aſk, If it be according to the Fundamental Laws of England, that any Engliſhman ſhould be fined, or amerced, but by the judgment of his Peers or Jury? Since it expreſly contradicts the Fourteenth and Twenty-ninth chapter of the Great Charter of England, which ſays, "No Freeman ought to be amerced, but by the oath of good and "lawful men of the Vicinage."

Rec. Take him away, take him away, take him out of the court.

Penn. I can never urge the Fundamental Laws of England, but you cry, Take him away, take him away. But 'tis no wonder, ſince the Spaniſh Inquiſition hath ſo great a place in the Recorder's heart. God Almighty, who is juſt, will judge you all for theſe things.

Obſer. They haled the priſoners to the Bale-dock, and from thence ſent them to Newgate, for non-payment of the fines; and ſo were their jury.

AN APPENDIX, BY WAY OF DEFENCE for the PRISONERS;
OR,
What might have been offered againſt the INDICTMENT, and illegal Proceedings of the COURT thereon, had they not violently over-ruled and ſtopped them.

UPON a ſober diſquiſition into ſeveral parts of the Indictment, we find it ſo wretchedly defective, as if it were nothing elſe but a mere compoſition of error, rather calculated to the malicious deſigns of the judges, than to the leaſt verity of fact committed by the priſoners.

To prove this, what we ſay will be a main help to diſcover the arbitrary proceedings of the bench, in their frequent menaces to the jury: As if it were not ſo much their buſineſs to try, as to condemn the priſoners; and that not ſo much for any fact they had committed, as what the court would have ſuggeſted to the jury to have been their fact.

Sect. 1. It is the conſtant common law of England, 'That no man ſhould be taken, 'impriſoned, amerced, diſſeized of his freehold, of his liberties, or free cuſtoms, but by 'the judgment of his Peers, which are vulgarly called a Jury, from Jurare, becauſe they 'are ſworn to do right.'

Sect. 2. The only aſſiſtance that is given the jury, in order to a verdict, is:

Firſt, The evidence given of the fact committed by the perſon indicted.----Secondly, The knowledge of that law, act, or ſtatute, the indictment is grounded upon, and which the priſoners are ſaid to have tranſgreſſed.

Sect. 3. We ſhall neglect to mention here how much they were deprived of that juſt advantage which the antient, equal laws of England do allow; deſigning it for a concluſion of the whole, and ſhall only ſpeak here to matter of fact and law.

Sect. 4. The evidence you have read in the trial; the utmoſt import of which is no more than this, 'That William Penn was ſpeaking in Gracious-ſtreet, to an aſſembly 'of people, but they knew not what he ſaid.' Which is ſo great a contradiction, as he that runs may read it; for no man can ſay another man preaches, and yet underſtand not what he ſaith. He may conjecture it, but that is a lame evidence in law. It might as well have been ſworn, That he was ſpeaking of Law, Phyſick, Trade, or any other matter of civil government. Beſides, there is no law againſt preaching what is truth, whether it be in the Street, or in any other place. Nor is it poſſible that any man can truly ſwear, That he preached Sedition, Hereſy, &c. unleſs he ſo heard him, that he could tell what he ſaid.

Sect. 5. The evidence farther ſaith, That W. Mead was there. 'But till being in 'Gracious-ſtreet be a fault, and hearing a man ſpeak the witneſs knows not what, be 'contrary to law,' the whole evidence is uſeleſs, and impertinent. But what they want of that, they endeavour to ſupply with Indictment; whoſe parts we proceed to conſider.

Exceptions againſt the Indictment.

Sect. 6. It ſaith, That the priſoners [were met upon the 15th Day of Auguſt 1670.] whereas their own evidence affirms it to be upon the 14th Day of Auguſt, 1670.

Sect. 7. [That they met with force and arms.] Which is ſo great a lie, that the court had no better cover for it, than to tell the jury it was only a piece of form; urging, that the man tried for clipping of money this preſent ſeſſions, had the ſame words uſed in his indictment.

But that this anſwer is too ſcanty, as well as it was too weak to prevail with the jury, we deſire it may be conſidered, that the ſame words may be uſed more of courſe, and out of form, at one time, than at another. And though we grant they can have little force with any jury in a clipper's caſe, for mere clipping; yet they are words that give ſo juſt a ground of jealouſy, nay, that carry ſo clear an evidence of illegality, where they are truly proved and affirmed of any meeting, as that they are the proper roots from whence do ſpring thoſe branches which render an indictment terrible, and an aſſembly truly the terror of the people.

Sect. 8. [Unlawful, and tumultuouſly to diſturb the peace.] Which is as true as what is ſaid before (that is, as falſe.) This will evidently appear to all that conſider how lawful it is to aſſemble, with no other deſign than to worſhip God. And their calling a lawful aſſembly an unlawful one, no more makes it ſo, than to ſay light is darkneſs, black is white, concludes ſo impudent a falſity true.

In ſhort, becauſe to worſhip God can never be a crime, no meeting, or aſſembly, deſigning to worſhip God, can be unlawful. Such as go about to prove an unlawful aſſembly, muſt prove theſe aſſemblers intent Not to worſhip God: But that no man can do, becauſe no man can know another man's intentions; and therefore it is impoſſible that any ſhould prove ſuch an aſſembly unlawful. That is properly an unlawful aſſembly, according to the definition of the law, when ſeveral perſons are met together with deſign to uſe violence, and to do miſchief: But that Diſſenters meet with no ſuch intention, is manifeſt to the whole world; therefore their aſſemblies are not unlawful. He that hath only right to be worſhipped, who is GOD, hath only right to inſtitute How he will be worſhipped: And ſuch as worſhip him in that way they apprehend him to have inſtituted, are ſo far from being unlawful aſſemblers, that therein they do but expreſs their duty they owe to God.

[Tumultuouſly] Imports as much as diſorderly, or an aſſembly full of noiſe, buſtle, and confuſion, uſing force and violence, to the injury of perſons, houſes, or grounds. But whether Religious Diſſenters, in their peaceable meetings, therein deſiring and ſeeking nothing more than to expreſs that duty they owe to God Almighty, be guilty of a tumultuous action, or meeting, in the ſenſe expreſſed (and which is the very definition of the law) will be the Queſtion. Certainly, ſuch as call theſe meetings tumultuous, as to break the peace, offer the greateſt violence to common words that can be well imagined; for they may as rightly ſay, ſuch perſons meet adulterouſly, thieviſhly, &c. as to affirm they meet tumultuouſly, becauſe they are as truly applicable. In ſhort, ſuch particulars as are required to prove ſuch meetings in law, are wholly wanting.

Sect. 9. [To the diſturbance of the peace.]

If the diſturbance of the peace be but matter of form with the reſt, as is uſually pleaded; leave out this matter of form, and then ſee what great matter will be left.

Certainly ſuch aſſemblies as are not to the breach and diſturbance of the peace, are far from being unlawful, or tumultuary. But if the peace be broken by them, how comes it the evidence was ſo ſhort? We cannot believe it was in favour of the priſoners. This may ſhew to all the reaſonable world, how forward ſome are to brand innocency with hateful names, to bring a ſuſpicion where there was none deſerved.

Sect. 10. [That the ſaid Penn and Mead met by agreement beforehand made.]

But if perſons that never ſaw each other, nor converſed together, neither had correſpondence by any other hand, cannot be ſaid to be agreed to any action before it be done; then the priſoners were far from an agreement; for they had never ſeen, converſed, nor correſponded, directly, nor indirectly, before the officers came to diſturb the aſſembly. We well know how far they would have ſtretched the word Agreement, or Conſpiracy; but God, who brings to nought all the counſels of the wicked, prevented their cruel deſigns.

Sect. 11. [That William Mead did abet the ſaid William Penn in preaching.]

No man can be ſaid to abet another, whilſt they are both unknown to each other; eſpecially in this caſe, where abetting follows Agreeing, and agreeing ſuppoſes Foreknowledge. Nay, the word Abet in law, ſignifies to command, procure, or counſel a perſon; which W. Mead could not be ſaid to do, in reference to W. Penn, they being ſo great ſtrangers one to another, and at ſo great a diſtance: For the evidence proves that he was with Lieutenant Cook; and Lieutenant Cook ſwears, he could not make his way to W. Penn for the croud.

Sect. 12. [That W. Penn's preaching and ſpeaking cauſed a great concourſe and tumult of people to remain and continue a long time in the ſtreet.]

But this is ſo improbable to believe, that the very nature of a tumult admits of no ſuch thing as preaching; but implies a diſorderly multitude, where all may be ſaid to ſpeak, rather than any to hear.

Sect. 1. [In contempt of the king and his laws.]

They are ſo far from contemning the king and his laws, that they are obliged and conſtrained by their own principles, to obey every ordinance of man for the Lord's ſake, “ but not againſt the Lord for Man's ſake,” which is the queſtion in hand. Beſides, their continuance there was not in contempt, but by the permiſſion of the chief officer preſent, that came there by the king's authority. Nor is it for the honour of the king, that ſuch perſons ſhould be ſaid to act in contempt of his laws, as only meet to honour God and His laws.

Sect. 2. [And to the great diſturbance of the king's peace.]

It is far from diſturbing or breaking the king's peace, for men peaceably to meet to worſhip God: For it is then properly broken and invaded, when force and violence are uſed, to the hurt and prejudice of perſons and eſtates; or when any thing is done that tends to the ſtirring up of ſedition, and begetting in people a diſlike of the civil government. But that ſuch things are not practiſed by us in our aſſemblies, either to offer violence to mens perſons and eſtates, or to ſtir up people to ſedition, or diſlike to the civil government, is obvious to all that viſit our aſſemblies.

Sect. 3. [To the great terror and diſturbance of the king's liege people and ſubjects, and to the evil example of all others in the like caſe offending, againſt the king's peace, his crown and dignity.]

Were theſe black criminations as true as they are wretchedly falſe, we ſhould give as juſt an occaſion to loſe our liberties, as our cruel adverſaries are ready to take any to deprive us unjuſtly of them. Oh! How notorious is it to all ſober people, that our manner of life is far from terrifying any: And how abſurd to think, that naked men (in the generality of their converſation known to be harmleſs and quiet) ſhould prove a terror or diſturbance to the people! Certainly, if any ſuch thing ſhould be in the time of our meetings, it is brought with the cruelty and barbarous actions of your own ſoldiers: They never learned by our example to beat, hale before magiſtrates, fine and impriſon for matters relating to God's worſhip: Neither can they ſay, we are their precedents for all thoſe adulterous, prodigal, laſcivious, drunken, ſwearing, and profane acts, they daily commit, and eſteem rather occaſion of brag and boaſt, than ſorrow and repentance: No, they need not go ſo far; they have too many (God Almighty knows) of their own ſuperiors for their example.

Sect. 4. But we can never paſs over with ſilence, nor enough obſerve, the deteſtable juggle of ſuch indictments; which we require all Engliſh and Conſcientious Men to mind, as they value themſelves on the like occaſions. How little a grain of fact was proved, yet how ſpacious an indictment was made: Had it related to the evidence, the bulk had been excuſable; but when it only ſwelled with malicious ſcaring phraſes, to ſuggeſt to the people that they were the mereſt villains, the moſt dangerous perſons, and deſigning mutually the ſubverſion of the law, and breach of the peace, to the terrifying of the people, &c. who can chooſe but tell them of their Romance Indictment, that is ſo forged, as it truly merits another againſt itſelf? This they childiſhly call Form. But had an Italian, or other ſtranger, been in court, he would have judged it matter of Fact, as thinking it unworthy of a King's Court, to accuſe men in terms not legally, truly, or probably, due to the fact they really had committed; as well as that no court would practiſe it, but that which loved to deprive men of their liberties and lives, rather than to ſave them, Nolens, Volens.

Sect. 5. Had their cruelty and juggle ended itſelf here, they would have ſpared us the pains of any farther obſervation. But that which we have to add on the priſoners behalf, renders their actions ſo abominable in the ſight of juſtice, that all honeſt and ingenuous hearts muſt needs abhor their baſe ſnares.

They tell the jury, “That being but judges of FACT only, they were to bring the priſoners in Guilty (that is, of the fact) at their peril; and it was the part of the Bench to judge what was Law.” So that if the jury had brought them in Guilty, without farther additional explanation (though intentionally they meant only of the Fact proved by Evidence) yet the bench would have extended it to Every Part of the indictment; and by this impious deluſion have perjured a well-meaning jury, and have had their barbarous ends upon the innocent priſoners. But the jury better underſtanding themſelves, brought in William Penn guilty of the fact proved, namely, “That he was ſpeaking to ſome people met in Gracechurch Street, but not to an Unlawful aſſembly, ſo circumſtantiated:” The mention of which ſtabbed their deſign of moulding the general anſwer of Guilty to their own ends, to the heart. Nor indeed could they do otherwiſe; for as well the jury, as priſoners, were denied to have any law produced, by which they might meaſure the truth of the indictment, and guilt of the fact. But becauſe the Recorder 1670. would not or could not (perhaps it is ſo long ſince he read law, that he may have forgotten it) we ſhall perform his part, in ſhewing what is that “ Common Law of the Land,” which, in general, he ſaid they were indicted for the breach of, and which indeed, if rightly underſtood, is the undoubted birth-right of every Engliſhman; yes, the Inheritance of Inheritances; Major hæreditas venit, unicuique noſtrum à jure, & legibus, quam à parentibus. Cook Inſtit. 2. 56.

Sect. 6. All the various kinds or models of government that are in the world, ſtand either upon Will and Power, or Condition and Contract; the firſt rule by Men; the ſecond, by Laws. It is our happineſs to be born under ſuch a conſtitution, as is moſt abhorrent in itſelf of all Arbitrary Government; and which is, and ever has been, moſt choice and careful of her laws, by which all Right is preſerved.

Sect. 7. All Laws are either Fundamental, and ſo Immutable; or Superficial, and ſo Alterable. By the firſt, we underſtand ſuch laws as enjoin men to be juſt, honeſt, virtuous; to do no wrong, to kill, rob, deceive, prejudice none; but to do as one would be done unto; to cheriſh good, and to terrify wicked men; in ſhort, UNIVERSAL REASON; ‘which are not ſubject to any revolution, becauſe no emergency, time, or occaſion, can ever juſtify a ſuſpenſion of their execution, much leſs their utter abrogation.’

Sect. 8. By Superficial laws, we underſtand ſuch acts, laws, or ſtatutes as are ſuited to Preſent Occurrences; and which may as well be abrogated for the Good of the kingdom, as they were firſt made for it. For inſtance, thoſe ſtatutes that relate to Victuals, Clothes, and Places of Trade, &c. which have ever ſtood whilſt the Reaſon of them was in force; but when that benefit, which once redounded, fell by croſs occurrences, they ended; according to that old maxim, Ceſſante ratione legis, ceſſat lex. But this cannot be ſaid of Fundamental laws, ‘ till houſes ſtand without their Foundations, and Engliſhmen ‘ wholly ceaſe to be;’ which brings cloſe upon the point.

Sect. 9. There is not any country that has more conſtantly expreſſed her care and deep ſolicitude for the preſervation of her Fundamental laws, than the ENGLISH NATION: And though at particular times ſome evil perſons have endeavoured an utter abolition of thoſe excellent fundamentals, which we have before defined and defended from any juſt reaſon of revolution, yet God Almighty, who is always concerned to avenge the cauſe of Juſtice, and thoſe excellent good laws by which it is upheld, has by his Providence befooled their contrivances, and baffled their attempts, by bringing their deſigns to nought, and their perſons frequently to condign puniſhment and diſgrace: Their age no antiquary living can aſſure us; unleſs they ſay, “ As old as REASON itſelf:” But our own authors are not lacking to inform us, that the Liberties, Properties, and Privileges of the Engliſh Nation, are very ancient.

Sect. 10. For HERN, in his Mirror of juſtice (written in Edward the Firſt's time) Fol. 1. tells us, ‘ That after God had abated the nobility of the Britains, he did deliver the realm to men more humble and ſimple, of the counties adjoining, to wit, the Saxons, which came from the parts of Almaign to conquer this land, of which men there were forty ſoveraigns, which did rule as companions; and thoſe princes did call this realm England, which before was named the Greater Britain. Thoſe, after great wars, tribulation and pains, by long time ſuffered, did chooſe a king to reign over them, to govern the people of God, and to maintain and defend their perſons and their goods in quiet, by the rules of right; and at the beginning they did cauſe him to ſwear to maintain the Holy Chriſtian Faith, and to guide his people by right, with all his power, without reſpect of perſons, and to obſerve the laws. And after, when the kingdom was turned into an heritage, king Alfred, that governed this kingdom about an hundred and ſeventy-one years before the Conqueſt, did cauſe the great men of the kingdom to aſſemble at London, and there did ordain for a perpetual uſage, that twice in the year, or oftner, if need ſhould be, in time of peace, they ſhould aſſemble at London in parliament, for the government of God's people, that men might live in quiet, and receive right by certain uſages and holy judgments.

‘ In which parliament (ſaid our author) the rights and prerogatives of the kings and ſubjects are diſtinguiſhed and ſet apart:’ And particularly by him expreſſed, too tedious here to inſert; amongſt which ordinances we find, ‘ That no man ſhould be impriſoned, but for a capital offence. And if a man ſhould detain another in priſon by colour of right (where there was none) till the party impriſoned died, he that kept him in priſon ſhould be held guilty of murder, as you may read p. 33, and 36. He is declared guilty of homicide, by whom a man ſhall die in priſon, whether it be the judges, that ſhall too long delay to do a man right, or by cruelty of jailers, or ſuffering him to die by famine; or when a man is adjudged to do penance, and ſhall be ſurcharged by his jailer with irons, or other pain, whereof he is deprived of his life. And p. 149. That by the ancient law of England, it was felony to detain a man in priſon, after ſufficient bail offered, where the party was appealed of treaſon, murder, robbery, or burglary. Page 35. none ought to be put in common priſons, but only ſuch as were attainted, or principally appealed, or indicted, of falſe or wrongful impriſonment; ſo tender have 1670.

‘ the

'the ancient laws and conſtitutions of this realm been, of the liberty of their ſubjects 'perſons, that no man ought to be impriſoned but for a capital offence, as treaſon, mur- 'der, robbery, or burglary.'

Sect. 11. Nor is LAMBARD ſhort, in his excellent tranſlation of the Saxon laws, from king Ina's time, 712, to Hen. 3. 1100, in deſcribing to us the great obligation, and ſtrong condition the people were wont to put upon their kings, 'To obſerve the an- 'cient fundamental laws, and free cuſtoms of this land,' which were handed down from one age to another. And in the 17th chap. of king Edward the Confeſſor's Laws, the mention there made of a king's duty, is very remarkable, that if he brake his oath, or performed not his obligation, Nec nomen regis in eo conſtabit. The ſame Lambard far- ther tells us, 'that however any may affirm William of Normandy to be a conqueror, 'he was received by the people as Edward's ſucceſſor, and, by ſolemn oath taken, to 'maintain unto them the ſame laws that his kinſman Edward the Confeſſor did.' This doctrine remained in the general unqueſtioned to the reign of king John; who imperi- ouſly thought that Voluntas regis, and not ſalus populi, was ſuprema lex; or the King's Will was the Supreme Law, and not the People's Preſervation; till the incenſed barons of that time betook themſelves to a vigorous defence of their ancient rights and liberties, and learned him to keep thoſe laws, by a due reſtraint and timely compulſion; which his former invaſion of them evidenced to the world he would never have done willingly.

Sect. 12. The propoſals and articles of agreement, with the pledges given to the barons, on the behalf of the people, by the king, were confirmed in Henry the Third's time, his ſon and ſucceſſor; when the abuſed, ſlighted, and diſregarded law by his father, was thought fit to be reduced to record, that the people of England might not forever after be to ſeek for a written recorded law, to their defence and ſecurity: For Miſera ſervitus eſt ubi jus eſt vagum aut incognitum. And ſo we enter upon the Grand Charter of Liberty and Privilege, in the cauſe, reaſon, and end of it.

Sect. 13. We ſhall firſt rehearſe it, ſo far as we are concerned, (with the formalities of Grant and Curſe) and ſhall then ſay ſomething as to the cauſe, reaſon, and end of it.

A Rehearſal of the Material Parts of the GREAT CHARTER of ENGLAND.

HENRY, by the grace of God, king of England, &c. To all Archbiſhops, or Earls, Barons, Sheriffs, Provoſts, Officers, and to all Bailiffs, and our faithful ſubjects who ſhall ſee this preſent charter, greeting. KNOW ye, That we, unto the honour of Almighty God, and for the ſalvation of the ſouls of our progenitors, and our ſucceſſors, kings of England, to the advancement of holy church, and amendment of our realm, of our mere and free will, have given and granted to all Archbiſhops, &c. and to all Freemen of this our realm, thoſe liberties underwritten, to be holden and kept in this our realm of England for evermore.

We have granted and given to all Freemen of our realm, for us and our heirs, for evermore, thoſe liberties underwritten, to have and to hold to them, and to their heirs, of us and our heirs fore-named.

A Freeman ſhall not be amerced for a ſmall fault, but after the quantity of the fault: And for a great fault, after the Manner thereof; ſaving to him his Contenements or Freehold. And a Merchant likewiſe ſhall be amerced, ſaving to him his Merchandize: And none of the ſaid amercements ſhall be aſſeſſed, but by the oath of good and honeſt men of the Vicinage.

No Freeman ſhall be taken, or impriſoned, nor be diſſeized of his freehold, or liberties, or free cuſtoms, or be out-lawed or exiled, or any other ways deſtroyed; nor we ſhall not paſs upon him, nor condemn him, but by lawful judgment of his Peers, or by the Law of the Land: We ſhall ſell to no man, we ſhall deny nor defer to no man, either juſtice or right.

And all theſe cuſtoms and liberties aforeſaid, which we have granted to be holden within this our realm, as much as appertaineth to us, and our heirs, we ſhall obſerve; and all men of this our realm, as well ſpiritual as temporal, as much as in them is, ſhall obſerve the ſame againſt all perſons in like wiſe. And for this our gift and grant of thoſe liberties, and for other contained in our Charter of liberties of our Foreſt, the archbiſhops, biſhops, abbots, priors, earls, barons, knights, freeholders, and others our ſubjects, have given unto us the fifteenth part of their moveables: And we have granted unto them, on the other part, that neither we, nor our heirs, ſhall procure or do any thing whereby the liberties in this charter contained ſhall be infringed or broken: And if any thing be procured by any perſon contrary to the premiſes, it ſhall be held of no force or effect. Theſe being witneſſes, Boniface archbiſhop of Canterbury, &c. We ratifying and approving thoſe gifts and grants aforeſaid, confirm and make ſtrong all the ſame, for us and our heirs perpetually, and by the tenor of theſe preſents do renew the ſame willingly; and granting for us and our heirs, that this Charter, in all and ſingular his articles, for evermore ſhall be ſtedfaſtly, firmly, and inviolably obſerved. And if any article in the ſame Charter contained, yet hitherto peradventure hath not been obſerved, 1670. nor kept, we will, and by our authority royal command, henceforth firmly they be obſerved. Witneſs, &c.

The Sentence of the CURSE given by the Biſhops, with the King's Conſent, againſt the Breakers of the Great Charter.

IN the year of our Lord 1253, the third day of May, in the Great Hall of the king at Weſtminſter, in the preſence, and by the conſent, of the lord Henry, by the grace of God king of England, and the lord Richard, earl of Cornwall, his brother; Roger Bigot, earl of Norfolk, marſhal of England; Humphry, earl of Hereford; Henry, earl of Oxford; John, earl Warren; and other eſtates of the realm of England: We Boniface, by the mercy of God, archbiſhop of Canterbury, primate of England; F. of London; H. of Ely; S. of Worceſter; E. of Lincoln; W. of Norwich; P. of Hereford; W. of Saliſbury; W. of Durham; R. of Exeter; M. of Carliſle; W. of Bath; E. of Rocheſter; T. of St. Davids, biſhops, apparrelled in pontificals, with taper burning, againſt the breakers of the church's liberties, and of the liberties and other cuſtoms of this realm of England; and namely, thoſe that are contained in the Charter of the Common Liberties of England, and Charter of the Foreſt, have denounced ſentence of excommunication in this form: By the authority of Almighty God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, &c. of the bleſſed apoſtles Peter and Paul, and of all apoſtles, and of all martyrs, of bleſſed Edward, king of England, and of all the ſaints of heaven, we excommunicate and accurſe, and from the benefit of our holy mother the church we ſequeſter, all thoſe that hereafter willingly and maliciouſly deprive or ſpoil the church of her right; and all thoſe that by any craft, or willingneſs, do violate, break, or diminiſh, or change the church's liberties, and free cuſtoms contained in the charter of the Common Liberties, and of the Foreſt, granted by our lord the king to archbiſhops, biſhops, and other prelates of England, and likewiſe to the earls, barons, knights, and other freeholders of the realm; and all that ſecretly and openly, by deed, word or counſel, do make ſtatutes, or obſerve them being made, and that bring in cuſtoms, or keep them when they be brought in, againſt the ſaid liberties, or any of them; and all thoſe that ſhall preſume to judge againſt them; and all and every ſuch perſon, before-mentioned, that wittingly ſhall commit any thing of the premiſes, let them well know that they incur the aforeſaid ſentence, ipſo facto.

A Confirmation of the Charters and Liberties of England, and of the Foreſt, made the twenty-fifth year of Edward the firſt.

EDWARD, by the grace of God, king of England, lord of Ireland, duke of Guyan, To all thoſe that theſe preſent letters ſhall hear or ſee, greeting. KNOW ye, That we, to the honour of God, and to the profit of our realm, have granted, for us and our heirs, that the Charter of Liberties, and the Charter of the Foreſt, which were made by common aſſent of all the realm in the time of king Henry our father, ſhall be kept in every point, without breach: And we will that the ſame Charter ſhall be ſent under our ſeal, as well to our juſtices of the foreſt, as to others, and to all ſheriffs of ſhires, and to all our other officers, and to all our cities throughout the realm, together with our writs, in the which it ſhall be contained, that they cauſe the aforeſaid Charters to be publiſhed, and to declare to the people that we have confirmed them in all points; and that our juſtices, ſheriffs, mayors, and other miniſters, which under us have the laws of our land to guide, ſhall allow the ſame charters pleaded before them in judgment, in all their points; that is to wit, the Great Charter, as the Common Law, and the Charter of our Foreſt, for the Wealth of our realm.

And we will, that if any judgment be given from henceforth contrary to the points of the Charter aforeſaid, by the juſtices, or by any other of our miniſters that hold plea before them, againſt the points of the Charter, it ſhall be undone, and holden for nought.

And we will that the ſame Charter ſhall be ſent under our ſeal to cathedral churches throughout our realm, there to remain; and ſhall be read before the people two times by the year.

And that all archbiſhops and biſhops ſhall pronounce the ſentence of excommunication againſt all thoſe, that by word, deed, or counſel, do contrary to the aforeſaid Charters, or that in any point do break or undo them: And that the ſaid curſes be twice a year denounced and publiſhed by the prelates aforeſaid: And if the ſame prelates, or any of them, be remiſs in the denunciation of the ſaid ſentences, the archbiſhops of Canterbury and York for the time being ſhall compel and diſtrain them to the execution of their duties in form aforeſaid.

The Sentence of the CLERGY, againſt the Breakers of the Articles above-mentioned.

IN the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, Amen. Whereas our ſovereign lord the king, to the honour of God, and of holy church, and for the common profit of the realm, hath granted, for him and his heirs for ever, theſe articles above-written. Robert, archbiſhop of Canterbury, primate of all England, admoniſhed all his province once, twice, and thrice, becauſe that ſhortneſs will not ſuffer ſo much delay, as to give knowledge to all the people of England of theſe preſents in writing: We therefore enjoin all perſons, of what eſtate ſoever they be, that they, and every of them, as much as in them is, ſhall uphold and maintain theſe articles, granted by our ſovereign lord the king, in all points: And all thoſe that in any point do reſiſt or break, or in any manner hereafter procure, counſel, or in any wiſe aſſent to reſiſt or break thoſe ordinances, or go about it, by word or deed, openly or privily, by any manner of pretence or colour; we, the aforeſaid archbiſhops, by our authority in this writing expreſſed, do excommunicate and accurſe, and from the body of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and from all the company of heaven, and from all the ſacraments of holy church, do ſequeſter and exclude.

We may here ſee, that in the obſcureſt times of ſottiſh popery, they were not left without a ſenſe of juſtice, and the neceſſity of Liberty and Property, to be inviolably enjoyed; which brings us to the Cauſe of it.

Firſt, The Cauſe of this famous charter was, as we have already ſaid, the incroachments that were made by ſeveral miniſters of precedent kings, that almoſt became cuſtomary, and which had near extinguiſhed the free cuſtoms due to Engliſhmen. How great care it coſt our anceſtors, it unbecomes us to ignore, or by our ſilence to neglect: It was that Yoke and Muzzle which failed not to diſable many raging bears from entering the pleaſant vineyard of Engliſh Freedoms, that otherwiſe would not have left a fruitful vine in being. Anon we may give the reader an account of ſome, with their wages as well as works.

Secondly, The Reaſon of it is ſo great, that it ſeems to be its own. It is the very Image and Expreſſion of Juſtice, Liberty and Property; points of ſuch eminent importance, as without which no government can be ſaid to be reaſonable, but arbitrary and tyrannical. It allows every man that liberty God and nature have given him, and the ſecure poſſeſſion of his property, from the inroad or invaſion of his neighbour, or any elſe of that conſtitution. It juſtifies no man in a fault; only it provides equal and juſt ways to have the offender tried, conſidering the malice of many perſecutors, and the great value of liberty and life.

Thirdly, The End of it was the moſt noble of any earthly projection; to wit, 'The 'refixing of thoſe ſhaken laws,' held for many hundred years by conſtant claim, that they living might be re-inſtated in their primitive liberty, and their poſterity ſecured in the poſſeſſion of ſo great happineſs.

Amongſt thoſe many rich advantages that accrue to the free people of England from this Great Charter, and thoſe many Confirmatory ſtatutes of the ſame, we ſhall preſent the reader with the ſight of ſome few, that may moſt properly fall under the conſideration and enquiry of theſe preſent times, as found in our common law books.

Firſt, [That every Engliſhman is born free.]

Secondly, [That no ſuch freeman ſhall be taken, attached, aſſeſſed, or impriſoned, by any petition or ſuggeſtion to the king or his council, unleſs by the indictment and preſentment of good and lawful men, where ſuch right as needs be done.] 5 Ed. 3. ch. 9. 25 Ed. 3. ch. 4. 17 Ri. 2. ch. 6. Rot. Parl. 42 Ed. 3. Cook, 2 Inſt. 43.

Thirdly, [That no ſuch freeman ſhall be diſſeized of his freehold, or liberties, or free cuſtoms, &c.] Hereby is intended, ſaith Cook, that Lands, Tenements, Goods and Chattels, ſhall not be ſeized into the king's hands, contrary to this Great Charter, &c. 43 Aſſ. pag. 12. 43 Ed. 3. Cook, 2 Inſt. 32. Neither ſhall any ſuch freeman be put from his livelihood without anſwer, Cook, 2 Inſt. 47.

Fourthly, [That no freeman ſhall be out-lawed] unleſs he ſhroud and hide himſelf voluntarily from the juſtice of the law, 2 & 3 Phil. & Mar. Dier. 114, 145.

Fifthly, [No freeman ſhall be exiled.] Cook ſaid, there are but two grounds upon which any man may be exiled; one by Act of Parliament (ſuppoſing it not contrary to the Great Charter)---the other, in caſe of Abjuration, for Felony by the Common Law, &c. Cook, Inſt. 2, 47.

Sixthly, [No freeman ſhall be deſtroyed; that is, he ſhall not be fore-judged of life, limb, diſherited, or put to torture, or death.] Every oppreſſion againſt law, by colour of any uſurped authority, is a kind of deſtruction; and it is the worſt oppreſſion that is done by colour of juſtice. Cook, Inſt. 2. 48.

Seventhly, [That no freeman ſhall be thus taken, or impriſoned, diſſeized, out-lawed, 1670. exiled, or be deſtroyed of his liberties, freeholds, and free cuſtoms, but BY THE LAWFUL JUDGMENT OF HIS PEERS, vulgarly called Jury. So that the judgment of any fact or perſon is, by this fundamental law, referred to the breaſts and conſciences of the jury. It is rendered in latin, PER LEGALE JUDICIUM; that is, Lawful Judgment; From whence it is to be obſerved, that the judgment muſt have law in it, and be according to law; which cannot be, where they are not judges how far the fact is legal, or the contrary; Judicium quaſi juris dictum [the voice of law and right.] And therefore is their verdict not to be rejected, becauſe it is ſuppoſed to be the truth, according to their conſciences: For verdict, from verè dictum veritatis, [or a true ſaying or judgment] 9 Hen. 3. 26. Cook's Inſt. 1. 32. Inſt. 4. 207. Cook ſays, That by the word LEGALE, three things are implied.

1ſt. That this was by Law, before the ſtatute; and therefore this ſtatute but declaratory of the ancient law.

2d. That their verdict muſt be legally given: Wherein is to be obſerved, 1ſt, The jury ought to hear no evidence but in the hearing and preſence of the priſoner. 2d. That they cannot ſend to aſk any queſtion in law of the judges, but in the preſence of the Priſoner: For, De facto jus oritur.

3d. The evidence produced by the king's council being given, the judges cannot collect the evidence, nor urge it by way of charge to the jury, nor yet confer with the jury about the evidence, but in the preſence of the priſoner, Cook's Inſt. 2. 49.

Eighthly, [or by the law of the Land.] It is a ſynonimous expreſſion, importing no more than 'by the trial of Peers, or a jury:' For it is ſometimes rendered not (or) disjunctively, but (and) which is connectively. However, it can never ſignify any thing contrary to the old way of trying by Peers; for then it would be connected to a contradiction.

Beſides, Cook well obſerves, That in the 4th chap. of the 25th Ed. 3. Per legem terræ, imports no more than a Trial by due Proceſs, and Writ Original at Common Law; which cannot be without a Jury: Therefore Per judicium parum, & per Legem terræ, ſignify the ſame privilege unto the people, Cook, Inſt. 2. p. 50.

Thus have we preſented you with ſome of thoſe maxims of law, dearer to our anceſtors than life, 'Becauſe they are the Defence of the Lives and Liberties of the people of 'England.' It is from this 29th chap. of the Great Charter (great, not for its bulk, but the privileges in it) as from a ſpacious root, that ſo many fruitful branches of the law of England ſpring, if Cook may be credited. But how ſacred ſoever they have been eſteemed, and ſtill are by noble and juſt minds, yet ſo degenerate are ſome in their proceedings, that, conſcious to themſelves of their baſeneſs, they will not dare ſtand the touch of this Great Charter, and thoſe juſt laws grounded upon it: Of which number, we may truly rank the Mayor and Recorder of London, with the reſt of their Wiſe Companions, in their late ſeſſions at the Old Baily, upon the occaſion of the priſoners.

Firſt, The priſoners were taken, and impriſoned, without preſentment of good and lawful men of the vicinage, or the neighbourhood, but after a Military and Tumultuous Manner, contrary to the Grand Charter.

Secondly, They refuſed to produce the Law upon which they proceeded; leaving thereby the priſoners, jury, and the whole aſſembly in the dark.

Thirdly, They refuſed the priſoners to plead, and directly withſtood that great privilege, mentioned in the firſt chap. 25 Ed. 1. 'where all Juſtices, mayors, ſheriffs, and 'other miniſters, that have the laws of the land to guide them, are required to allow 'the ſaid Charter to be pleaded in all its points, and in all caſes that ſhall come before 'them in judgment:' For no ſooner did William Penn, or his fellow-priſoner, urge upon them the Great Charter, and other good laws, but the Recorder cried, 'Take 'him away; take him away, and put him into the Bale-dock, or hole:' From which refuſal the Recorder can never deliver himſelf, unleſs it be by avowing, The laws are not his guide, and therefore he does not ſuffer them to be pleaded before him in judgment.

Fourthly, They gave the jury their charge in the Priſoners Abſence, endeavouring highly to incenſe the Jury againſt them.

Fifthly, The verdict being given (which is in law DICTUM VERITATIS, the voice of truth herſelf) being not ſuitable to their humours, they did five times reject it, with many abuſive, imperious, and menacing expreſſions to the jury, ſuch as no precedent can afford us; as if they were not the only conſtituted judges by the fundamental laws of the land, but mere cyphers, only to ſignify ſomething behind their figures.

Sixthly, Though the priſoners were cleared by their jury, yet were they detained for the non-payment of their fines, laid upon them for not pulling off their hats; in which the law is notoriouſly broken:

1ſt. In that no man ſhall be amerced, but according to the offence; and they have fined each forty marks.

2d. They were not amerced by any Jury, but at the will of an incenſed Bench.

Beſides, there is no law againſt the hat; and where there is no law, there can be no tranſgreſſion, and conſequently no legal amercement, or fine, 9 Hen. 3. chap. 14. But how the priſoners were trepanned into it, is moſt ridiculous on the ſide of the contrivers; who, finding their hats off, would have them put on again by their officers, to fool the priſoners with a trial of putting them off again: Which childiſh conceit not being gratified, they fined them forty marks a piece.

Seventhly, Inſtead of accepting their verdict as good in law, and for the true deciſion of the matter, according to their Great Charter, (that conſtitutes them proper judges, and which bears them out, with many other good laws, in what they agreed to as a verdict) the court did moſt illegally and tyrannically fine and impriſon them, as in the trial was expreſſed; and that notwithſtanding the late juſt reſentment of the Houſe of commons in judge Keeling's caſe, where they reſolved, That the precedents and practice of fining and impriſoning of juries for their verdicts, were illegal. And here we muſt needs obſerve two things:

Firſt, That the fundamental laws of England cannot be more ſlighted, and contradicted in any thing (next Engliſhmens being quite deſtroyed) than in not ſuffering them to have that equal medium, or juſt way of trial, that the ſame law has provided, which is by a Jury.

Secondly, That the late proceeding of the court at the Old Baily, is an evident demonſtration, that juries are now but mere formality, and that the partial charge of the bench muſt be the verdict of the jury: For if ever a rape were attempted on the conſcience of any jury, it was there. And indeed, the ignorance of jurors of their authority by law, is the only reaſon of their unhappy cringing to the court, and being ſcared into an anti-conſcience verdict by their lawleſs threats.

But we have lived to an age ſo deboiſt from all humanity and reaſon, as well as faith and religion, that ſome ſtick not to turn butchers to their own privileges, and conſpirators againſt their own liberties. For however Magna Charta had once the reputation of a ſacred, unalterable law, and few were hardened enough to incur and bear the long curſe that attends the violators of it, yet it is frequently objected now, that the benefits there deſigned are but temporary, and therefore liable to alteration, as other ſtatutes are. What game ſuch perſons play at, may be lively read in the attempts of Dionyſius, Phalaris, &c. which would have Will and Power be the people's law.

But that the privileges due to Engliſhmen by the Great Charter of England, have their foundation in reaſon and law; and that thoſe new Caſſandrian ways to introduce Will and Power, deſerve to be deteſted by all perſons profeſſing ſenſe and honeſty, and the leaſt allegiance to our Engliſh government, we ſhall make appear from a ſober conſideration of the nature of thoſe privileges contained in that charter.

1. The ground of alteration of any law in government, where there is no invaſion, ſhould ariſe from the Univerſal Diſcommodity of its Continuance: But there can be no diſprofit in the continuance of Liberty and Property; therefore there can be no juſt ground of alteration.

2. No one Engliſhman is born a ſlave to another, neither has the one a right to inherit the ſweat and benefit of the other's labour, without conſent; therefore the liberty and property of an Engliſhman cannot reaſonably be at the will and beck of another, let his quality and rank be ever ſo great.

3. There can be nothing more unreaſonable than that which is partial: But to take away the LIBERTY and PROPERTY of any (which are natural rights) without breaking the Law of Nature (and not of Will and Power) is manifeſtly partial, and therefore unreaſonable.

4. If it be juſt and reaſonable "for men to do as they would be done by;" then no ſort of men ſhould invade the liberties and properties of other men; becauſe they would not be ſerved ſo themſelves.

5. Where liberty and property are deſtroyed, there muſt always be a ſtate of force and war: Which however pleaſing it may be unto the Invaders, it will ſeem intolerable by the Invaded; who will no longer remain ſubject, in all human probability, than while they want as much power to free themſelves, as their adverſaries had to inſlave them. The troubles, hazards, ill conſequences, and illegality of ſuch attempts, as they have been declined by the moſt prudent in all ages, ſo have they proved moſt uneaſy to the moſt ſavage of all nations; who firſt or laſt have by a mighty torrent freed themſelves, to the due puniſhment and great infamy of their oppreſſors: Such being the advantage, ſuch the diſadvantage, which neceſſarily do attend the fixation, and removal, of Liberty and Property.

We ſhall proceed to make it appear, that Magna Charta, as recited by us, imports nothing leſs than their preſervation.

'No Freeman ſhall be taken, or impriſoned, or be diſſeiſed of his freeholds, or liber-'ties, or free cuſtoms, or be outlawed, or exiled, or any other ways deſtroyed;

1670. ‘ nor will we upon him paſs, nor condemn him, but by the lawful judgment of his Peers,’ &c.

‘ A Freeman ſhall be amerced for a ſmall fault, but after the Manner of the fault; and for a Great fault, after the greatneſs thereof: And none of the ſaid amercement ſhall be aſſeſſed, but by the oath of good and lawful men of the Vicinage.’

Firſt, It aſſerts Engliſhmen to be free: That is Liberty.

Secondly, That they have freeholds: That is Property.

Thirdly, That amercement, or penalties, ſhould be proportioned to the faults committed: ‘ Which is Equity.’

Fourthly, That they ſhall loſe neither, but when they are adjudged to have forfeited them in the judgment of their honeſt neighbours, according to the law of the land; ‘ Which is Lawful Judgment.’

It is eaſy to diſcern to what paſs the enemies of the Great Charter would bring the people of England.

Firſt, They are now Freemen: ‘ But they would have them Slaves.’

Secondly, They have now right unto their Wives, Children, and Eſtates, as their undoubted Property: ‘ But ſuch would rob and ſpoil them of all.’

Thirdly, Now no man is to be amerced, or puniſhed, but ſuitable to the fault: ‘ Whilſt they would make it ſuitable to their revengeful minds, and unlimited wills.’

Fourthly, Whereas the power of judgment lies in the breaſts and conſciences of twelve honeſt Neighbours; ‘ They would have it at the diſcretion of Mercenary Judges.’ To which we cannot chooſe but add, that ſuch diſcourſes manifeſtly ſtrike at this preſent Conſtitution of Government; for it being founded upon the Great Charter (which is the ancient Common Law of the land) as upon its beſt foundation, none can deſign the concealing the Charter, but they muſt neceſſarily intend the extirpation of the Engliſh Government; for where the cauſe is taken away, the effect muſt conſequently ceaſe. And as the reſtoration of our ancient Engliſh laws by the Great Charter, was the ſovereign balſam which cured our former breaches, ſo doubtleſs will the continuation of it prove an excellent prevention to any future diſturbances.

But ſome are ready to object, ‘ That the Great Charter conſiſting as well of Religious as Civil rights, the former having received an alteration, there is the ſame reaſon why the latter may have the like.’

To which we anſwer, That the reaſon of alteration cannot be the ſame; therefore the conſequence is falſe. The one being matter of Opinion, about faith and religious worſhip, which is as various as the unconſtant apprehenſions of men; but the other is matter of ſo immutable Right and Juſtice, that all generations (however differing in their religious opinions) have concentered and agreed to the certainty, equity, and indiſpenſable neceſſity of preſerving theſe fundamental laws: So that Magna Charta hath not riſen and fallen with the differing religious opinions that have been in this land, but hath ever remained as the ſtable right of every individual Engliſhman, purely as an Engliſhman. Otherwiſe, if the civil privileges of the people had fallen with the pretended religious privileges of the Popiſh Tyranny, at the firſt Reformation (as muſt needs be ſuggeſted by this objection) our caſe had ended here, that we had obtained a ſpiritual freedom, at the coſt of a civil bondage: Which certainly was far from the intention of the firſt reformers; and, probably, an unſeen conſequence by the objectors to their idle opinion.

In ſhort, there is no time in which any man may plead the neceſſity of ſuch an action as is unjuſt in its own nature; which he muſt unavoidably be guilty of, that doth deface or cancel that law by which the juſtice of Liberty and Property is confirmed and maintained to the people. And conſequently, no perſon may legally attempt the ſubverſion, or extenuation, of the force of the Great Charter. We ſhall proceed to prove them inſtances out of both.

Firſt, ‘ Any judgment given contrary to the ſaid Charter, is to be undone and holden for nought.’ 25 Edw. 1 chap. 2.

Secondly, ‘ Any, by word, deed, or counſel, that go contrary to the ſaid Charter, are to be excommunicated by the biſhops: And the archbiſhops of Canterbury and York are bound to compel the other biſhops to denounce ſentence accordingly, in caſe of their remiſsneſs, or neglect:’ Which certainly hath relation to the State, rather than to the Church; ſince there was never any neceſſity of compelling the biſhops to denounce ſentence in their own caſe, though frequently in the people's. 25 Edw. 1. chap. 4.

Thirdly, ‘ That the Great Charter, and Charter of the Foreſt, be holden and kept in all points: And if any ſtatute be made to the contrary, that it ſhall be holden for nought.’ 43. Edw. 3. 1. Upon which Cook, that famous Engliſh lawyer, ſaid, ‘ That albeit judgments in the king's courts are of high regard in law, and Judicia are accounted as Juris dicta; yet it is provided by the act of parliament, That if any judgment be given contrary to any of the points of the Great Charter, it ſhall be holden for nought,’

He farther ſaith, upon the ſtatute of 25 Edw. 1. chap. 1. ‘ That this Great Charter, ter, and the Charter of Foreſt, are properly the Common Law of the Land, or the Law common to all the people thereof.'

Fourthly, Another ſtatute runs thus; If any force come to diſturb the execution of the Common Law, ye ſhall cauſe their bodies to be arreſted, and put in priſon: Ye ſhall deny no man right by the king's letters, nor counſel the king any thing that may turn to his damage or diſheriſon.' 18 Edw. 3. chap. 7. 'Neither to deny right by any command under the great or little ſeal.' This is the judges charge and oath, 2 Edw. 3. chap. 8. 14 Edw. 3. 14. 11 Rich. 2. chap. 10.

Fifthly, Such care hath been taken for the preſervation of this Great Charter, that in the 25th of Edw. 1. it was enacted, 'That commiſſioners ſhould iſſue forth, that there ſhould be choſen in every Shire-court, by the commonalty of the ſame ſhire, three ſubſtantial men, knights, or other lawful, wiſe, and well-diſpoſed perſons, to be juſtices, which ſhall be aſſigned by the king's letters patents, under the great ſeal, to hear and determine (without any other writ but only their commiſſion) ſuch plaints as ſhall be made upon all thoſe that commit, or offend againſt any point contained in the aforeſaid Charters,' 21 Edw. 1. chap. 1.

Sixthly, The neceſſity of preſerving theſe Charters, hath appeared in nothing more than in the care they have taken to confirm them; which, as Cook obſerves, 'have been by thirty-two parliaments confirmed, eſtabliſhed, and commanded to be put in execution, with the condign puniſhment they had inflicted upon the offenders.' Cook's proem to the Second book of his Inſtitutes.

Seventhly, That in the notable Petition of Right, many of theſe great privileges, and free cuſtoms, contained in the aforeſaid Charters, and other good laws, are recited and confirmed. 3 Car. 1.

Eighthly, The late king, in his declaration at New-market, 1641, acknowledged 'the Law to be the rule of his power:' By which he doubtleſs intended Fundamental Laws; ſince it may be the great advantage of countries, ſometimes to ſuſpend the execution of Temporary Laws.

Having ſo manifeſtly evidenced that venerable eſteem our anceſtors had of that Golden Rule the GREAT CHARTER, with their deep ſolicitude to preſerve it from the defacing of uſurpation and faction; we ſhall proceed to give an account of their juſt reſentment, and earneſt proſecution againſt ſome of thoſe, who in any age have adventured to undermine that ancient foundation, by introducing an arbitrary way of government.

Firſt, as judicious Lambard reports, in his Saxon tranſlation, 'That the kings in thoſe days, were by their coronation oaths obliged to keep the ancient Fundamental Laws and Cuſtoms of this Land (of which this Great Charter is but declaratory): So did king Alfred (reputed the moſt famous Compiler of laws amongſt them) give this diſcovery of his indignation againſt his own judges, for acting contrary to thoſe Fundamental Laws, that he commanded the execution of forty of them.' Which may be a ſeaſonable caveat to the judges of our times.

Secondly, Hubert de Burgo, once chief juſtice of England, having adviſed Edward the firſt, in the eleventh year of his reign (in his council holden at Oxford) 'to cancel this Great Charter, and that of the Foreſt,' was juſtly ſentenced according to law, by his peers, in open parliament, when the ſtatute called CONFIRMATIONIS CHARTARUM, was made: In the firſt chapter thereof, Magna Charta is peculiarly called the Common Law. 25 Edw. 1. chap. 2.

Thirdly, The Spencers (both father and ſon) for their arbitrary domination, and raſh and evil counſel to Edward the ſecond, (by which he was ſeduced to break the Great Charter) were baniſhed for their pains, as Cook relates.

Fourthly, The ſame fate attended Treſillian and Belknap, for their illegal proceedings.

Fifthly, The breach of this Great Charter was the ground of that exemplary juſtice done upon Empſon and Dudley, whoſe caſe is very memorable in this point: For though they gratified Henry the ſeventh in what they did, and had an act of parliament for their warrant, made the eleventh of his reign, yet met with their due reward from the hands of juſtice; that act being againſt equity and common reaſon, and ſo no juſtifiable ground, or apology, for thoſe frequent abuſes, and the oppreſſions of the people, they were found guilty of. Hear what the lord Cook farther ſaith concerning the matter, 'There was an act of parliament, made in the eleventh year of king Henry the ſeventh, which had a fair flattering preamble, pretending to avoid divers miſchiefs, which were, 1ſt, The high diſpleaſure of Almighty God. 2dly, The great let of the common law. And 3dly, The great let of the wealth of this land. And the purvieu of that act tended in the execution contrary, Ex diametro, viz. To the high diſpleaſure of Almighty God, and the great let, nay, the utter ſubverſion, of the Common Law, and the great let of the wealth of this land, as hereafter ſhall appear: The ſubſtance of which act follows in theſe words:

"That from henceforth, as well Juſtices of Aſſize, as Juſtices of the Peace, in every county, upon information for the King, before them made, without any find“ing or preſentment by twelve men, ſhall have full power and authority, by their diſcretion, to hear and determine all offences, as riots, unlawful aſſemblies, &c. committed and done againſt any act or ſtatute made, and not repealed,” &c. [A caſe that very much reſembles this of our own times.]

‘By pretext of this law, Empſon and Dudley did commit upon the ſubjects unſufferable preſſure and oppreſſion; and therefore this ſtatute was juſtly, ſoon after the deceaſe of Henry the ſeventh, repealed at the next parliament after his deceaſe, by the ſtatute of the 1 Hen. 8. chap. 6.

‘A good caveat to parliaments, to leave all cauſes to be meaſured by the golden and ſtraight metewand of the law, and not by the uncertain and crooked cord of diſcretion.’

‘It is almoſt incredible to foreſee, when any maxim or fundamental law of this realm is altered (as elſewhere hath been obſerved) what dangerous inconveniences do follow; which moſt expreſly appeareth by this moſt unjuſt and ſtrange act of the eleventh of Henry the ſeventh: For hereby not only Empſon and Dudley themſelves, but ſuch juſtices of the peace (corrupt men) as they cauſed to be authorized, committed moſt grievous and heavy oppreſſions and exactions, grinding the faces of the poor ſubjects by penal laws (be they never ſo abſolute, or unfit for the time) by information only, without any preſentment, or trial by jury, being the ancient birth-right of the ſubject; but to hear and determine the ſame by their diſcretions, inflicting ſuch penalty, as the ſtatute not repealed impoſed. Theſe, and other like oppreſſions and exactions by, or by the means of, Empſon and Dudley, and their inſtruments, brought infinite treaſure to the King's coffers; whereof the King himſelf, at the end, with great grief and compunction, repented, as in another place we have obſerved.

‘This ſtatute of the 11th of Henry the ſeventh we have recited, and ſhewed the juſt inconveniences thereof; to the end that the like ſhould never hereafter be attempted in any court of parliament; and that others might avoid the fearful end of thoſe two time-ſervers, Empſon and Dudley, Qui eorum veſtigiis inſiſtant, eorum exitus perhorreſcant.

‘See the ſtatute of 8 Edw. 4. chap. 2. A ſtatute of liveries, an information, &c. by the diſcretion of the judges, to ſtand as an original, &c. this act is deſervedly repealed, Vide 12 R. 2, chap. 13. Puniſhment by diſcretion, &c. vide 5th of H. 4. chap. 6. 8. See the commiſſion of ſewers; diſcretion ought to be thus deſcribed, Diſcretio eſt diſcernere per legem quid ſit juſtum.’ From whence three things ſeem moſt remarkable:

Firſt, The great equity and juſtice of the Great Charter, with the high value our anceſtors have moſt deſervedly ſet upon it.

Secondly, The dreadful malediction, or curſe, they have denounced upon the breakers of it, with thoſe exemplary puniſhments they have not ſpared to inflict upon ſuch notorious offenders.

Thirdly, So heinous a thing was it eſteemed of old, to endeavour an enervation, or ſubverſion, of theſe ancient rights and privileges, that acts of parliament themſelves (otherwiſe the moſt ſacred with the people) have not been of force enough to ſecure or defend ſuch perſons from condign puniſhment, who, in purſuance of them, have acted inconſiſtent with our Great Charter. Therefore it is, that the great lawyer, the Lord Cook, doth more than once aggravate the example of Empſon and Dudley (with perſons of the ſame rank) into a juſt caution, as well to Parliaments as Judges, Juſtices, and inferior Magiſtrates, to decline making or executing any act, that may in the leaſt ſeem to infringe upon or confine this ſo often avowed and confirmed Great Charter of the Liberties of England; ſince parliaments are ſaid to err, when they croſs it; the obeyers of their acts puniſhed, as time-ſerving tranſgreſſors; and that Kings themſelves (tho' enriched by thoſe courſes) have met with great compunction and repentance, and left among their dying words their recantations.

Therefore moſt notable and true it was, with which we ſhall conclude this preſent ſubject, what the King pleaſed to obſerve in a ſpeech to the parliament, about 1662. (viz.) “The good old rules of Law are our beſt ſecurity.”

The manner of the court's behaviour towards the priſoners and the jury, with their many extravagant expreſſions, muſt not altogether ſlip our obſervation.

1. Their carriage to the jury out-does all precedents; they entertained them more like a pack of felons, than a jury of honeſt men, as being fitter to be tried themſelves, than to acquit others. In ſhort, no jury, for many ages, received ſo many inſtances of diſpleaſure and affront, becauſe they preferred not the humour of the court before the quiet of their own conſciences, even to be eſteemed as perjured; though they had really been ſo, had they not done what they did.

2. Their treatment of the priſoners was not more unchriſtian than inhuman. Hiſtory can ſcarce tell us of one Heathen Roman, that ever was ſo ignoble to his captive. What! ‘To accuſe, and not hear them; to threaten to bore their tongues, gag and ſtop their mouths, fetter their legs, merely for defending themſelves, and that by the ancient ‘ fundamental laws of England too? O barbarous! Had they been Turks and Infidels, that carriage would have ill become a Chriſtian court; ſuch actions proving much ſtronger diſſuaſives, than arguments to convince them how much the Chriſtian religion inclines men to juſtice and moderation, above their dark idolatry. It is truly lamentable, that ſuch occaſion ſhould be given for intelligence to foreign parts, where England hath had the reputation of a Chriſtian country, by their ill treating of its ſober and religious inhabitants, for their conſcientious meetings to worſhip God. But, above all, Diſſenters had little reaſon to have expected this boariſh fierceneſs from the Mayor of London, when they conſider his eager proſecution of the King's party, under Cromwell's government, as thinking he could never give too great a teſtimony of his loyalty to that new inſtrument: Which makes the old ſaying true, “ That One Renegade is worſe than Three Turks.”

Alderman Bludworth, being conſcious to himſelf of his partial kindneſs to the Popiſh Friers, hopes to make an amends, by his zealous proſecution of the poor Diſſenters: For at the ſame ſeſſions he moved to have an evidence (of no ſmall quality) againſt Harriſon, the Mendicant Frier, ſent to Bridewell and whipped, he was earneſt to have the jury fined and impriſoned, becauſe they brought not the priſoners in guilty, when no crime was proved againſt them, but peaceably worſhipping their God. Whence it may be eaſy to obſerve, That Popiſh Friers, and prelatical perſecutors, are mere confederates.

But what others have only adventured to ſtammer at, the Recorder of London has been ſo ingenuous as to ſpeak moſt plainly; or elſe, what mean thoſe two fatal expreſſions, which are become the talk and terror of both city and country?

Firſt, In aſſuring the jury, ‘ That there would be a law next ſeſſions of parliament, that no man ſhould have the protection of the law, but ſuch as conformed to the Church. Which, ſhould it be true, as we hope it is falſe, (and a diſhonourable prophecy of that great aſſembly) the Papiſts may live to ſee their Marian days out-done by Profeſſed Proteſtants.

But ſurely no Engliſhman can be ſo ſottiſh, as to conceive that this right to Liberty and Property came in with his profeſſion of the Proteſtant Religion! Or that his Natural and Human rights are dependent on certain Religious Apprehenſions: And conſequently he muſt eſteem it a cruelty in the abſtract, that perſons ſhould be denied the benefit of thoſe laws which relate to civil concerns, who by their deportment in civil affairs have no ways tranſgreſſed them, but merely upon an opinion of Faith, and matter of Conſcience.

It is well known that Liberty and Property, Trade and Commerce, were in the world long before the points in difference betwixt Proteſtants and Diſſenters, as the common privileges of mankind; and therefore not to be meaſured out by a conformity to this or the other religious perſuaſion, but purely as Engliſhmen.

Secondly, But we ſhould rather chooſe to eſteem this an expreſſion of heat in the Recorder, than that we could believe a London's Recorder ſhould ſay an Engliſh Parliament ſhould impoſe ſo much ſlavery on the preſent age, and entail it upon their own poſterity (who, for aught they know, may be reckoned among the Diſſenters of the next age) did he not encourage us to believe it was both his Deſire and his Judgment, from that deliberate elogy he made on the Spaniſh Inquiſition, expreſſing himſelf much to this purpoſe, viz. ‘ Till now, I never underſtood the reaſon of the policy and prudence of the ‘ Spaniards, in ſuffering the Inquiſition amongſt them: And certainly it will never be ‘ well with us, till ſomething like unto the Spaniſh Inquiſition be in England.’ The groſs malignity of which ſaying is almoſt inexpreſſible. What does this but juſtify that helliſh deſign of the Papiſts, to have prevented the firſt Reformation? If this be good doctrine, then Hoggeſtrant, the Grand Inquiſitor, was a more venerable perſon than Luther the Reformer. It was an expreſſion that had better become Cajetan, the Pope's Legate, than Howel, a Proteſtant City's Recorder. This is ſo far from helping to convert the Spaniard, that it is the way to harden him in his idolatry; when his abominable Cruelty ſhall be eſteemed Prudence, and his moſt barbarous and exquiſite torturing of TRUTH, an excellent way to prevent faction.

If the Recorder has ſpoke for no more than himſelf, it is well; but certainly, he little deſerves to be thought a Proteſtant, and a Lawyer, that puts both Reformation and Law into the Inquiſition. And doubtleſs the ſupreme governors of the land are highly obliged, in honour and conſcience, (in diſcharge of their truſt to God and the people) to take theſe things into their ſerious conſideration, as what is expected from them, by thoſe who earneſtly wiſh theirs and the kingdom's ſafety and proſperity.

POSTSCRIPT.

The Copy of Judge Keeling's Caſe, taken out of the Parliament Journal.

Die Mercurii, 11° Decembris, 1667.

1670. THE houſe reſumed the hearing of the reſt of the report, touching the matter of reſtraint upon juries; and that upon the examination of divers witneſſes, in ſeveral clauſes of reſtraints put upon juries, by the lord chief juſtice Keeling: Whereupon the committee made their reſolutions, which are as followeth.

Firſt, That the proceedings of the lord chief juſtice, in the caſes now reported, are innovations, in the trial of men for their lives and liberties; and that he hath uſed an arbitrary and illegal power, which is of dangerous conſequence to the lives and liberties of the people of England, and tends to the introducing of an arbitrary government.

Secondly, That in the place of judicature, the lord chief juſtice hath undervalued, vilified, and condemned Magna Charta, the great preſerver of our lives, freedom, and property.

Thirdly, That he be brought to trial, in order to condign puniſhment, in ſuch manner as the houſe ſhall judge moſt fit and requiſite.

Die Veneris, 13° Decembris, 1667.

Reſolved, &c. That the precedents and practice of fining or impriſoning jurors for verdicts, is illegal.

Now whether the juſtices of this court, in their proceedings (both towards the priſoners and jury) have acted according to law, and to their oaths and duty, to do juſtice without partiality, whereby right might be preſerved, the peace of the land ſecured, and our ancient laws eſtabliſhed; or whether ſuch actions tend not to deprive us of our lives and liberties, to rob us of (our birth-right) the fundamental laws of England; and finally, to bring in an arbitrary and illegal power, to uſurp the benches of all our courts of juſtice, we leave the Engliſh reader to judge.

Certainly, there can be no higher affront offered to king and parliament, than the bringing their reputations into ſuſpicion with their people, by the irregular actions of ſubordinate judges: And no age can parallel the carriage of this Recorder, Mayor, &c. Nor can we think ſo ignobly of the parliament, as that they ſhould do leſs than call theſe perſons to account, who failed not to do it to one leſs guilty, and of more repute; to wit, Judge Keeling: For if his behaviour gave juſt ground of jealouſy, that he intended an innovation, and the introducing an arbitrary government, this Recorder's much more. Did chief Juſtice Keeling ſay, "Magna Charta was magna farta?" So did this Recorder too: And did Juſtice Keeling fine and impriſon juries, contrary to all law? So did this Recorder alſo. In ſhort, there is no difference, unleſs it be that the one was queſtioned, and the other deſerves it. But we deſire in this they may be ſaid to differ, that though the former eſcaped puniſhment, the latter may not; who having a precedent before, did notwithſtanding notoriouſly tranſgreſs.

To conclude: The law ſuppoſes the King cannot err, becauſe it is willing to ſuppoſe he always acts by Law (and Voluntas legis, eſt voluntas regis; or, The King's will is regulated by the Law); but it ſays no ſuch thing of the Judges. And ſince they are obliged by oath to diſregard the King's letters (though under the broad and privy ſeal) if they any wiſe oppugn or contradict the law of the land; and conſidering that every ſingle action of an inferior miniſter has an ugly reference to the ſupreme magiſtrate, where not rebuked; we cannot but conclude, that both judges are anſwerable for their irregularities, eſpecially where they had not a limitation of a king's letter, or command; and that the ſupreme magiſtrate is obliged, as in honour and ſafety to himſelf, Alfred-like, to bring ſuch to condign puniſhment; leſt every ſeſſions produce the like tragical ſcenes of uſurpation over the conſciences of juries, to the vilifying and contemning of juſtice, and great detriment and prejudice of the good and honeſt men of this famous and free city.

FIAT JUSTITIA.

THE GREAT CASE

OF

LIBERTY OF CONSCIENCE

Once more briefly debated and defended,

BY THE AUTHORITY OF

REASON, SCRIPTURE, and ANTIQUITY:

Which may ſerve the Place of a General Reply to ſuch late DISCOURSES as have Oppoſed a TOLERATION.

The Author W. P.

Whatſoever ye would that Men ſhould do to you, do ye even ſo to them. MAT. vii. 12.
Render unto Cæſar, the things that are Cæſar's; and to God, the things that are God's. MARK xii. 17.

TO THE SUPREME AUTHORITY OF ENGLAND.

1670. TOLERATION, for theſe ten years paſt, has not been more the cry of ſome, than perſecution has been the practice of others, though not on grounds equally rational.

The preſent cauſe of this addreſs, is to ſolicit a converſion of that power to our relief, which hitherto has been employed to our depreſſion; that after this large experience of our innocency, and long ſince expired apprenticeſhip of cruel ſufferings, you will be pleaſed to cancel all our bonds, and give us a poſſeſſion of thoſe freedoms, to which we are intituled by Engliſh birth-right.

This has been often promiſed to us, and we as earneſtly have expected the performance; but to this time we labour under the unſpeakable preſſure of naſty priſons, and daily confiſcation of our goods, to the apparent ruin of intire families.

We would not attribute the whole of this ſeverity to malice, ſince not a little ſhare may juſtly be aſcribed to miſ-intelligence.

For it is the infelicity of governors to ſee and hear by the eyes and ears of other men; which is equally unhappy for the people.

And we are bold to ſay, that ſuppoſitions, and mere conjectures, have been the beſt meaſures that moſt have taken of us, and of our principles; for whilſt there have been none more inoffenſive, we have been marked for capital offenders.

It is hard that we ſhould always lie under this undeſerved imputation; and, which is worſe, be perſecuted as ſuch, without the liberty of a juſt defence.

In ſhort, if you are apprehenſive that our principles are inconſiſtent with the civil government, grant us a free conference about the points in queſtion, and let us know what are thoſe laws, eſſential to preſervation, that our opinions carry an oppoſition to? And if upon a due enquiry we are found ſo heterodox as repreſented, it will be then but time enough to inflict theſe heavy penalties upon us.

And as this medium ſeems the faireſt, and moſt reaſonable; ſo can you never do yourſelves greater juſtice, either in the vindication of your proceedings againſt us, if we be criminal; or if innocent, in diſengaging your ſervice of ſuch as have been authors of ſo much miſ-information.

But could we once obtain the favour of ſuch debate, we doubt not to evince a clear conſiſtency of our life and doctrine with the Engliſh government; and that an indulging of diſſenters in the ſenſe defended, is not only moſt Chriſtian and rational, but prudent alſo; and the contrary (how plauſible ſoever inſinuated) the moſt injurious to the peace, and deſtructive of that diſcrete ballance, which the beſt and wiſeſt ſtates have ever carefully obſerved.

But if this fair and equal offer find not a place with you, on which to reſt it's foot; much leſs that it ſhould bring us back the olive-branch of TOLERATION; we heartily embrace and bleſs the providence of God; and, in his ſtrength, reſolve by patience to outweary Perſecution, and by our conſtant ſufferings ſeek to obtain a victory, more glorious than any our adverſaries can atchieve by all their cruelties.

VINCIT QUI PATITUR.

From a priſoner for conſcience ſake,

W. P.

Newgate, the 7th of the 12th month, called February, 1670.

THE

THE

PREFACE.

WERE ſome as chriſtian as they boaſt themſelves to be, it would ſave us all the labour we beſtow in rendering Perſecution ſo unchriſtian as it moſt truly is. 1670. Nay were they thoſe men of reaſon they character themſelves, and what the civil law ſtiles good citizens, it had been needleſs for us to tell them, that neither can any external coercive power convince the underſtanding of the pooreſt idiot, nor fines and priſons be judged fit and adequate penalties for faults purely intellectual; as well as that they are deſtructive of all civil government.

But we need not run ſo far as beyond the ſeas, to fetch the ſenſe of the Codes, Inſtitutes, and Digeſts, out of the Corpus Civile, to adjudge ſuch practices incongruous with the good of civil ſociety; ſince our own good, old, admirable laws of England have made ſuch excellent proviſion for its inhabitants, that if they were but thought as fit to be executed by this preſent age, as they were rightly judged neceſſary to be made by our careful anceſtors, we know how great a ſtroke they would give ſuch as venture to lead away our property in triumph (as our juſt forfeiture) for only worſhipping our God in a differing way from that which is more generally profeſſed and eſtabliſhed.

And indeed it is moſt truly lamentable, that above others (who have been found in ſo unnatural and antichriſtian an employment) thoſe that by their own frequent practices and voluminous apologies, have defended a ſeparation from the Papacy, ſhould now become ſuch earneſt perſecutors for it; not conſidering, that the enaction of ſuch laws as reſtrain perſons from the free exerciſe of their conſciences in matters of religion, is but a knotting whip-cord to laſh their own poſterity; whom they can never promiſe to be conformed to a National Religion. Nay, ſince mankind is ſubject to ſuch mutability, they cannot enſure themſelves from being taken by ſome perſuaſions that are eſteemed heterodox, and conſequently catch themſelves in ſnares of their own providing. And for men thus liable to change, and no ways certain of their own belief to be the moſt infallible, as by their multiplied conceſſions may appear, to enact any religion, or prohibit perſons from the free exerciſe of theirs, ſounds harſh in the ears of all modeſt and unbiaſſed men. We are bold to ſay, our Proteſtant anceſtors thought of nothing leſs, than to be ſucceeded by perſons vain-glorious of their Reformation, and yet adverſaries to Liberty of Conſcience: For to people in their wits it ſeems a paradox.

Not that we are ſo ignorant, as to think it is within the reach of human power to fetter conſcience, or to reſtrain its liberty, ſtrictly taken: but that plain Engliſh, of Liberty of Conſcience, we would be underſtood to mean, is this; namely, ‘The free and uninterrupted exerciſe of our conſciences, in that way of worſhip we are moſt clearly perſuaded God requires us to ſerve him in, without endangering our undoubted birthright of Engliſh freedoms:’ Which being matter of FAITH, we ſin if we omit; and they cannot do leſs, that ſhall endeavour it.

To tell us we are obſtinate, and enemies to government, are but thoſe groundleſs phraſes the firſt reformers were not a little peſtered with: But as they ſaid, ſo ſay we, The being called this, or that, does not conclude us ſo: And hitherto we have not been detected of that fact, which only juſtifies ſuch criminations.

But however free we can approve ourſelves of actions prejudicial to the civil government; it is moſt certain we have not ſuffered a little, as criminals, and therefore have been far from being free from ſufferings; indeed, in ſome reſpect, horrid plunders: Widows have loſt their cows, orphans their beds, and labourers their tools. A tragedy ſo ſad, that methinks it ſhould oblige them to do in England as they did at Athens: When they had ſacrificed their divine Socrates to the ſottiſh fury of their lewd and comical multitude, they ſo regretted their haſty murder, that not only the memorial of Socrates was moſt venerable with them, but his enemies they eſteemed ſo much theirs, that none would trade or hold the leaſt commerce with them; for which ſome turned their own executioners, and without any other warrant than their own guilt, hanged themſelves. How near a-kin the wretched mercenary informers of our age are to thoſe, the great reſemblance that is betwixt their actions manifeſtly ſhews.

And we are bold to ſay, the grand fomenters of perſecution are no better friends to the Engliſh ſtate, than were Anytus and Ariſtophanes of old to that of Athens; the 1670. caſe being ſo nearly the ſame, as they did not more bitterly envy the reputation of Socrates amongſt the Athenians for his grave and religious lectures (thereby giving the youth a diverſion from frequenting their plays) than ſome now emulate the true diſſenter, for his pious life, and great induſtry.

And as that famous common-wealth was noted to decline, and the moſt obſerving perſons of it dated its decay from that illegal and ingrateful carriage towards Socrates (witneſs their dreadful plagues, with other multiplied diſaſters) ſo it is not leſs worthy obſervation, that heaven hath not been wholly wanting to ſcourge this land, for, as well their cruelty to the conſcientious, as their other multiplied provocations.

And when we ſeriouſly conſider the dreadful judgments that now impend the nation (by reaſon of the robbery, violence, unwonted oppreſſion, that almoſt every-where have not only been committed upon the poor, the widow, and the fatherleſs; but moſt tenaciouſly juſtified, and the actors manifeſtly encouraged) in mere pity, and concern for the everlaſting welfare of ſuch as have not quite ſinned away their viſitation (for ſome have) we once more bring to public view our reaſons againſt perſecution, backed with the plaineſt inſtances both of Scripture and Antiquity; if but one may be perſuaded to deſiſt from making any farther progreſs in ſuch an Anti-proteſtant, and truly Anti-chriſtian path, as that of perſecuting honeſt and virtuous Engliſhmen, for only worſhipping the God that made them in the way they judge moſt acceptable with him.

But if thoſe who ought to think themſelves obliged to weigh theſe affairs with the greateſt deliberation, will obſtinately cloſe their eyes to theſe laſt remonſtrances, and ſlightly over-look the pinching caſe of ſo many thouſand families, that are by theſe ſeverities expoſed for prey to the unſatiable appetites of a villainous crew of broken informers, daubing themſelves with that deluding apprehenſion of pleaſing God, or at leaſt of profiting the country; (whilſt they greatly diſpleaſe the one, and evidently ruin the other) as certain as ever the Lord God Almighty deſtroyed Sodom, and layed waſte Gomorrah, by the conſuming flames of his juſt indignation, will he haſten to make deſolate this wanton land, and not leave an hiding-place for the oppreſſor.

Let no man therefore think himſelf too big to be admoniſhed, nor put too ſlight a value upon the Lives, Liberties, and Properties of ſo many thouſand free-born Engliſh families, embarked in that one concern of Liberty of Conſcience. It will become him better to reflect upon his own mortality, and not forget his breath is in his noſtrils, and that every action of his life the everlaſting God will bring to judgment, and him for them.

CHAP. I.

That Impoſition, Reſtraint, and Perſecution for Conſcience ſake, highly invade the Divine Prerogative, and diveſt the Almighty of a Right, due to none beſides Himſelf, and that in Five eminent Particulars.

THE great caſe of Liberty of Conſcience, ſo often debated and defended (however diſſatisfactorily to ſuch as have ſo little conſcience as to perſecute for it) is once more brought to public view, by a late Act againſt Diſſenters, and Bill, or an additional one, that we all hoped the wiſdom of our rulers had long ſince laid aſide, as what was fitter to be paſſed into an act of perpetual oblivion. The kingdoms are alarmed at this procedure, and thouſands greatly at a ſtand, wondering what ſhould be the meaning of ſuch haſty reſolutions, that ſeem as fatal as they were unexpected. Some aſk what wrong they have done? Others, what peace they have broken? And all, what plots they have formed to prejudice the preſent government, or occaſions given to hatch new jealouſies of them and their proceedings? being not conſcious to themſelves of guilt in any ſuch reſpect.

For mine own part, I publickly confeſs myſelf to be a very hearty Diſſenter from the eſtabliſhed worſhip of theſe nations, as believing Proteſtants to have much degenerated from their firſt principles, and as owning the poor deſpiſed Quakers, in life and doctrine, to have eſpouſed the cauſe of God, and to be the undoubted followers of Jeſus Chriſt, in his moſt holy ſtrait and narrow way that leads to the eternal reſt. In all which I know no treaſon, nor any principle that would urge me to a thought injurious to the civil peace. If any be defective in this particular, it is equal both individuals and whole ſocieties ſhould anſwer for their own defaults; but we are clear.

However, all conclude that union very ominous and unhappy, which makes the firſt diſcovery of itſelf "by a John Baptiſt's head in a charger." They mean that feaſt which ſome are deſigned to make upon the liberties and properties of free-born Engliſhmen: Since to have the entail of thoſe undoubted hereditary rights cut off, for matters purely relative of another world, is a ſevere beheading in the law: Which muſt be obvious to all, but ſuch as meaſure the juſtice of things only by that proportion they bear with their own intereſt. A ſort of men that ſeek themſelves, though at the apparent loſs of whole ſocieties; like to that barbarous fancy of old, which had rather that Rome ſhould burn, than it be without the ſatisfaction of a bon-fire. And ſad it is, when men have ſo far ſtupefied their underſtandings with the ſtrong doſes of their private intereſt, as to become inſenſible of the public's. Certainly ſuch an over-fondneſs for ſelf, or that ſtrong inclination to raiſe themſelves in the ruin of what does not ſo much oppoſe them, as that they will believe ſo, becauſe they would be perſecuting, is a malignant enemy to that tranquility, which all diſſenting parties ſeem to believe would be the conſequence of a Toleration.

In ſhort we ſay, there can be but two ends in perſecution; the one to ſatisfy (which none can ever do) the inſatiable appetites of a decimating clergy (whoſe beſt arguments are fines and impriſonments); and the other, as thinking therein they do God good ſervice: But it is ſo hateful a thing upon any account, that we ſhall make it appear, by this enſuing diſcourſe, to be a declared enemy to God, Religion, and the Good of human Society.

The whole will be ſmall, ſince it is but an epitome of no larger a tract than fourteen ſheets; yet divides itſelf into the ſame particulars, every of which we ſhall defend againſt Impoſition, Reſtraint, and Perſecution, though not with that ſcope of reaſon (nor conſequently Pleaſure to the readers) being by other contingent diſappointments limited to a narrow ſtint.

The terms explained, and the queſtion ſtated.

Firſt, By Liberty of Conſcience, we underſtand not only a mere Liberty of the Mind, in believing or diſbelieving this or that principle or doctrine; but 'the exerciſe of ourſelves in a viſible way of worſhip, upon our believing it to be indiſpenſibly required at our hands, that if we neglect it for fear or favour of any mortal man, we ſin, and incur divine wrath.' Yet we would be ſo underſtood to extend and juſtify the lawfulneſs of our ſo meeting to worſhip God, as not to contrive, or abet any contrivance deſtructive of the government and laws of the land, tending to matters of an external nature, directly or indirectly; but ſo far only as it may refer to religious matters, and a life to come, and conſequently wholly independent of the ſecular affairs of this, wherein we are ſuppoſed to tranſgreſs.

Secondly, By Impoſition, Reſtraint, and Perſecution, we do not only mean the ſtrict requiring of us to believe this to be true, or that to be falſe; and upon refuſal, to incur the penalties enacted in ſuch caſes; but by thoſe terms we mean thus much, 'any coercive lett or hindrance to us, from meeting together to perform thoſe religious exerciſes which are according to our faith and perſuaſion.'

The queſtion ſtated.

For proof of the aforeſaid terms thus given, we ſingly ſtate the queſtion thus;

Whether Impoſition, Reſtraint, and Perſecution, upon perſons for exerciſing ſuch a liberty of conſcience as is before expreſſed, and ſo circumſtantiated, be not to impeach the honour of God, the meekneſs of the chriſtian religion, the authority of Scripture, the privilege of nature, the principles of common reaſon, the well-being of government, and apprehenſions of the greateſt perſonages of former and latter ages?

Firſt, Then we ſay, that Impoſition, Reſtraint, and Perſecution, for matters relating to conſcience, directly invade the divine prerogative, and diveſt the Almighty of a due, proper to none beſides himſelf. And this we prove by theſe five particulars:

Firſt, if we do allow the honour of our creation due to God only, and that no other beſides himſelf has endowed us with thoſe excellent gifts of Underſtanding, Reaſon, Judgment, and Faith, and conſequently that he only is the object, as well as the author, both of our Faith, Worſhip, and Service; then whoſoever ſhall interpoſe their authority to enact faith and worſhip in a way that ſeems not to us congruous with what he has diſcovered to us to be faith and worſhip (whoſe alone property it is to do it) or to reſtrain us from what we are perſuaded is our indiſpenſible duty, they evidently uſurp this authority, and invade his incommunicable right of government over conſcience: 'For the Inſpiration of the Almighty gives underſtanding: And Faith is the gift of God,' ſays the divine writ.

Secondly, Such magiſterial determinations carry an evident claim to that Infallibility, which Proteſtants have been hitherto ſo jealous of owning, that, to avoid the Papiſts, they have denied it to all but God himſelf.

Either they have forſook their old plea; or if not, we deſire to know when, and where, they were inveſted with that divine excellency; and whether Impoſition, Reſtraint, and Perſecution, Were ever deemed by God the fruits of his Spirit. However, that itſelf was not ſufficient; for unleſs it appear as well to us that they have it, as to them who have it, we cannot believe it upon any convincing evidence, but by Tradition only; an anti-proteſtant way of believing.

Thirdly, It enthrones Man as king over conſcience, the alone juſt claim and privilege of his Creator; whoſe thoughts are not as mens thoughts, but has reſerved to himſelf that empire from all the Cæſars on earth: For if men, in reference to ſouls and bodies, things appertaining to this and the other world, ſhall be ſubject to their fellow-creatures, what follows, but that Cæſar (however he got it) has all, God's ſhare, and his own too? And being Lord of both, both are Cæſar's, and not God's.

Fourthly, It defeats God's work of Grace, and the inviſible operation of his eternal Spirit, (which can alone beget faith, and is only to be obeyed, in and about religion and worſhip) and attributes mens conformity to outward force and corporal puniſhments. A faith ſubject to as many revolutions as the powers that enact it.

Fifthly and laſtly, Such perſons aſſume the judgment of the great tribunal unto themſelves; for to whomſoever men are impoſedly or reſtrictively ſubject and accountable in matters of faith, worſhip and conſcience; in them alone muſt the power of judgment reſide: But it is equally true that God ſhall judge all by Jeſus Chriſt; and that no man is ſo accountable to his fellow-creatures, as to be impoſed upon, reſtrained, or perſecuted for any matter of conſcience whatever.

Thus, and in any more particulars, are men accuſtomed to intrench upon Divine Property, to gratify particular intereſts in the world; and (at beſt) through a miſguided apprehenſion to imagine 'they do God good ſervice,' that where they cannot give faith, they will uſe force; which kind of ſacrifice is nothing leſs unreaſonable than the other is abominable: God will not give his honour to another; and to him only, that ſearches the heart and tries the reins, it is our duty to aſcribe the gifts of Underſtanding and Faith, without which none can pleaſe God.

CHAP. II.

They overturn the Chriſtian Religion; 1. In the Nature of it, which is Meekneſs; 2. In the Practice of it, which is Suffering; 3. In the Promotion of it, ſince all farther diſcoveries are prohibited; 4. In the Rewards of it, which are Eternal.

THE next great evil which attends external force in matters of faith and worſhip, is no leſs than the overthrow of the whole chriſtian religion; and this we will briefly evidence in theſe four particulars 1. That there can be nothing more remote from the nature, 2. The practice, 3. The promotion, 4. The rewards of it.

Firſt, It is the privilege of the chriſtian faith above the dark ſuggeſtions of ancient and modern ſuperſtitious traditions, to carry with it a moſt ſelf-evidencing verity, which ever was ſufficient to proſelite believers, without the weak auxiliaries of external power. The Son of God, and great example of the world, was ſo far from calling his Father's omnipotency in legions of angels to his defence, that he at once repealed all acts of force, and defined to us the nature of his religion in this one great ſaying of his, MY KINGDOM IS NOT OF THIS WORLD. It was ſpiritual, not carnal; accompanied with weapons as heavenly as its own nature, and deſigned for the good and ſalvation of the ſoul, and not the injury and deſtruction of the body: no goals, fines, exiles, &c. but 'ſound Reaſon, 'clear Truth, and ſtrict Life.' In ſhort, the chriſtian religion intreats all, but compels none.

Secondly, That Reſtraint and Perſecution overturn the Practice of it. I need go no farther than the allowed Martyrologies of ſeveral ages, of which the Scriptures claim a ſhare; begin with Abel, go down to Moſes, ſo to the Prophets, and then to the meek example of Jeſus Chriſt himſelf; how patiently devoted was he to undergo the contradictions of men! and ſo far from perſecuting any, that he would not ſo much as revile his perſecutors, but prayed for them: Thus lived his apoſtles, and the true Chriſtians of the firſt three hundred years. Nor are the famous ſtories of our firſt Reformers ſilent in the matter; witneſs the chriſtian practices of the Waldenſes, Lollards, Huſſites, Lutherans, and our noble martyrs; who, as became the true followers of Jeſus Chriſt, enacted and confirmed their religion with their own blood, and not with the blood of their oppoſers.

Thirdly, Reſtraint and Perſecution obſtruct the promotion of the Chriſtian Religion: For if ſuch as reſtrain, confeſs themſelves 'miſerable ſinners, and altogether imperfect,' it either follows, that they never deſire to be better, or that they ſhould encourage ſuch as may be capable of farther informing and reforming them: They condemn the Papiſts for incoffening the ſcriptures and their worſhip in an unknown tongue, and yet are guilty themſelves of the ſame kind of fact.

Fourthly, They prevent many of eternal rewards: For where any are religious for fear, and that of men, it is ſlaviſh, and the recompence of ſuch religion is condemnation, not peace: Beſides, it is Man that is ſerved; who having no power but what is temporary, his reward muſt needs be ſo too: He that impoſes a duty, or reſtrains from one, muſt reward; but becauſe no man can reward for ſuch duties, no man can or ought to impoſe them, or reſtrain from them. So that we conclude Impoſition, Reſtraint and Perſecution, are deſtructive of the Chriſtian religion, in the Nature, Practice, Promotion and Rewards of it, which are eternal.

CHAP.

CHAP. III.

They oppoſe the plaineſt Teſtimonies of Divine Writ that can be, which condemn all Force upon Conſcience.

WE farther ſay, that Impoſition, Reſtraint and Perſecution are repugnant to the plain teſtimonies and precepts of the Scriptures.

1. 'The inſpiration of the Almighty gives underſtanding.' Job xxxii. 8.

If no man can believe before he underſtands, and no man underſtand before he is inſpired of God; then are the impoſitions of men excluded as unreaſonable, and their perſecutions for non-obedience as inhuman.

2. 'Wo unto them that take counſel, but not of me.' Iſa. xxx. 1.

3. 'Wo unto them that make a man an offender for a word, and lay a ſnare for him that reproves in the gate, and turn aſide the juſt for a thing of nought.' Iſa. xxix. 15, 21.

4. 'Let the wheat and the tares grow together, until the time of the harveſt, or end of the world.' Matt. xiii. 27, 28, 29.

5. 'And Jeſus called them unto him, and ſaid, Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exerciſe dominion over them, and they that are great exerciſe authority upon them; but it ſhall not be ſo amongſt you.' Matt. xx. 25, 26.

6. 'And Jeſus ſaid unto them, Render unto Cæſar the things that are Cæſar's, and unto God the things that are God's. Luke, xx. 25.

7. 'When his diſciples ſaw this, (that there were non-conformiſts then, as well as now) they ſaid, Wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven and conſume them, as Elias did? But he turned and rebuked them, and ſaid, Ye know not what ſpirit ye are of; for the Son of man is not come to deſtroy mens lives, but to ſave them.' Luke ix. 54, 55, 56.

8. 'Howbeit, when the Spirit of truth is come, he ſhall lead you into all truth.' John xvi. 8. 13.

9. 'But now the anointing which ye have received of him, abides in you; and you need not that any man teach you,' (much leſs impoſe upon any, or reſtrain them from what any are perſuaded it leads to) 'but as the ſame anointing teaches you of all things, and is truth, and is no lye.' 1 John ii. 27.

10. 'Dearly beloved, avenge not yourſelves; but rather give place unto wrath' (much leſs ſhould any be wrathful that are called Chriſtians, where no occaſion is given). 'Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; and if he thirſt, give him drink; recompence no man evil for evil.' Rom. xii. 19, 20, 21.

11. 'For though we walk in the fleſh,' (that is, in the body, or viſible world) 'we do not war after the fleſh; for the weapons of our warfare are not carnal. 2 Cor. x. 3. (but fines and impriſonments are; and ſuch uſe not the apoſtle's weapons that employ thoſe). 'For a biſhop, 1 Tim. iii. 3. (ſaith Paul) muſt be of good behaviour, apt to teach, no ſtriker; but be gentle unto all men, patient, in meekneſs inſtructing, (not perſecuting) thoſe that oppoſe themſelves, if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth.' 2 Tim. ii. 24, 25.

12. Laſtly, We ſhall ſubjoin one paſſage more, and then no more of this particular; 'Whatſoever ye would that men ſhould do to you, do ye even ſo to them.' Mat. vii. 12. Luke vi. 31.

Now upon the whole, we ſeriouſly aſk, Whether any ſhould be impoſed upon, or reſtrained, in matters of Faith and Worſhip? Whether ſuch practices become the Goſpel, or are ſuitable to Chriſt's meek precepts and ſuffering doctrine? And laſtly, Whether thoſe, who are herein guilty, do to us as they would be done unto by others?

What if any were once ſevere to you; many are unconcerned in that, who are yet liable to the laſh, as if they were not. But if you once thought the impoſition of a Directory unreaſonable, and a reſtraint from your way of worſhip unchriſtian, can you believe that Liberty of Conſcience is changed, becauſe the Parties, in point of power, are? Or that the ſame reaſons do not yet remain in vindication of an indulgence for others, that were once employed by you for yourſelves? Surely ſuch conjectures would argue groſs weakneſs.

To conclude: Whether perſecutors at any time read the Scriptures, we know not; but certain we are, ſuch practiſe as little of them as may be, who with ſo much delight reject them, and think it no ſmall acceſſion to the diſcovery of their loyalty, to lead us and our properties in triumph after them.

CHAP. IV.

They are Enemies to the Privilege of Nature; 1. As rendering ſome more, and others leſs, than Men; 2. As ſubverting the Univerſal Good that is God's Gift to Men; 3. As deſtroying all natural Affection. Next, they are enemies to the noble Principle of Reaſon, as appears in Seven great inſtances.

1670. WE farther ſay, that Impoſition, Reſtraint, and Perſecution, are alſo deſtructive of the great Privilege of Nature and Principle of Reaſon. Of Nature, in three inſtances:

Firſt, If God Almighty 'has made of one blood all nations,' as himſelf has declared, and that he has given them both ſenſes corporeal and intellectual, to diſcern things and their differences, ſo as to aſſert or deny from evidences and reaſons proper to each; then where any one enacts the belief or diſbelief of any thing upon the reſt, or reſtrains any from the exerciſe of their faith, to them indiſpenſible, ſuch an one exalts himſelf beyond his bounds, enſlaves his fellow-creatures, invades their right of liberty, and ſo perverts the whole order of nature.

Secondly, Mankind is hereby robbed of the uſe and benefit of that Inſtinct of a Deity, which is ſo natural to him, that he can be no more without it, and be, than he can be without the moſt eſſential part of himſelf. For to what ſerves that Divine Principle in the Univerſality of Mankind, if men be reſtricted by the preſcriptions of ſome individuals? But if the excellent nature of it 'inclines men to GOD, not man; if the power of 'accuſing and excuſing be committed to it; if the troubled thoughts and ſad reflections 'of forlorn and dying men make their tendency that way only,' (as being hopeleſs of all other relief and ſuccour from any external power or command), What ſhall we ſay, but that ſuch as invalidate the authority of this Heavenly Inſtinct, (as Impoſition and Reſtraint evidently do) deſtroy Nature, or that privilege which men are born with, and to.

Thirdly, All natural affection is deſtroyed: For thoſe who have ſo little tenderneſs, as to perſecute men that cannot for conſcience-ſake yield them compliance, manifeſtly act injuriouſly to their fellow-creatures, and conſequently are enemies to Nature; for Nature being One in All, ſuch as ruin thoſe who are equally intituled with themſelves to nature, ruin it in them, as in Liberty, Property, &c. And ſo bring the ſtate of Nature to the ſtate of War; as the great Leviathan of the times, as ignorantly as boldly, does aſſert.

But, ſecondly, We alſo prove them deſtructive of the noble principle of Reaſon, and that in theſe ſeven particulars:

1. In that thoſe who impoſe, or reſtrain, are uncertain of the truth and juſtifiableneſs of their actions. In either of theſe, their own diſcourſes and confeſſions are pregnant inſtances, where they tell us, that they do not pretend to be infallible, only they humbly conceive it is thus, or it is not. Since then they are uncertain and fallible, how can they impoſe upon, or reſtrain others, whom they are ſo far from aſſuring, that they are not able to do ſo much for themſelves? What is this, but to impoſe an uncertain faith, upon certain penalties?

2. As he that acts doubtfully is damned, ſo faith in all acts of religion is neceſſary: Now in order to believe, we muſt firſt will; to will, we muſt judge; to judge any thing, we muſt firſt underſtand: If then we cannot be ſaid to Underſtand any thing againſt our underſtanding; no more can we judge, will, or believe againſt our underſtanding: And if the doubter be damned, what muſt he be that conforms directly againſt his judgment and belief, and they likewiſe that require it from him? In ſhort, that man cannot be ſaid to have any religion, that takes it by another man's choice, not his own.

3. Where men are limited in matters of religion, there the rewards which are entailed on the free acts of men are quite overthrown; and ſuch as ſuperſede that Grand Charter of Liberty of Conſcience, fruſtrate all hopes of recompence, by rendering the actions of men unavoidable. But thoſe think, perhaps, they do not deſtroy all freedom, becauſe they uſe ſo much of their own.

4. They ſubvert all True Religion; for where men believe, not becauſe it is True, but becauſe they are required to do ſo, there they will unbelieve, not becauſe it is Falſe, but ſo commanded by their Superiors, whoſe authority their intereſt and ſecurity oblige them rather to obey, than diſpute.

5. They delude, or rather compel people out of their eternal rewards; for where men are commanded to act in reference to religion, and can neither be ſecured of their religion, nor yet ſaved harmleſs from puniſhment, that ſo acting and believing diſprivileges them for ever of that recompence which is provided for the faithful.

6. Men have their liberty and choice in external matters; they are not compelled to marry this perſon, to converſe with that, to buy here, to eat there, nor to ſleep yonder; yet if men had power to impoſe or reſtrain in any thing, one would think it ſhould be in ſuch exterior matters: But that this liberty ſhould be unqueſtioned, and that of the mind deſtroyed, iſſues here, ‘ That it does not unbrute us, but unman us: For take away Underſtanding, Reaſon, Judgment, and Faith, and, like Nebuchadnezzar, let us go graze with the beaſts of the field.’

Seventhly and laſtly, That which moſt of all blackens the buſineſs, is PERSECUTION: For though it is very unreaſonable to require Faith where men cannot chuſe but doubt, yet, after all, to puniſh them for diſobedience, is cruelty in the abſtract: For we demand, ‘ Shall men ſuffer for not doing what they cannot do?’ Muſt they be perſecuted here if they do not go againſt their conſciences, and puniſhed hereafter if they do? But neither is this all; for that part that is yet moſt unreaſonable, and that gives the cleareſt ſight of perſecution, is ſtill behind, namely, ‘ The monſtrous arguments they have to convince an heretick with:’ Not thoſe of old, as ſpiritual as the chriſtian religion, which were, ‘ to admoniſh, warn, and finally to reject;’ but ſuch as were employed by the perſecuting Jews and heathens againſt the Great Example of the world, and ſuch as followed him, and by the inhuman Papiſts againſt our firſt Reformers, as ‘ clubs, ſtaves, ſtocks, pillories, priſons, dungeons, exiles, &c. in a word, ruin to whole families; as if it were not ſo much their deſign to convince the ſoul, as to deſtroy the body.’

To conclude: There ought to be an adequation and reſemblance betwixt all ends, and the means to them; but in this caſe there can be none imaginable: The end, is the conformity of our judgments and underſtandings to the acts of ſuch as require it; the means are fines and impriſonments, and bloody knocks to boot.

Now, what proportion or aſſimilation theſe bear, let the ſober judge: The underſtanding can never be convinced, nor properly ſubmit, but by ſuch arguments as are rational, perſuaſive, and ſuitable to its own nature; ſomething that can reſolve its doubts, anſwer its objections, enervate its propoſitions. But to imagine thoſe barbarous Newgate inſtruments of clubs, fines, priſons, &c. with that whole troop of external and dumb materials of force, ſhould be fit arguments to convince the underſtanding, ſcatter its ſcruples, and finally convert it to their religion, is altogether irrational, cruel, and impoſſible. Force may make an hypocrite; ‘ it is Faith, grounded upon knowledge, and ‘ conſent, that makes a chriſtian.’ And to conclude, as we can never betray the honour of our conformity (only due to truth) by a baſe and timorous hypocriſy to any external violence under heaven; ſo muſt we needs ſay, Unreaſonable are thoſe Impoſers, who ſecure not the impoſed or reſtrained from what may occur to them, upon their account; and moſt inhuman are thoſe Perſecutors that puniſh men for not obeying them, though to their utter ruin.

CHAP. V.

They carry a Contradiction to Government: 1. In the Nature of it, which is Juſtice. 2. In the Execution of it, which is Prudence. 3. In the End of it, which is Fidelity. Seven common, but grand Objections, fairly ſtated, and briefly anſwered.

WE next urge, That Force, in matters relating to Conſcience, carries a plain contradiction to Government, in the Nature, Execution, and End of it.

By Government we underſtand, An external order of juſtice, or the right and prudent diſciplining of any ſociety by juſt laws, either in the relaxation or execution of them.

Firſt, It carries a contradiction to government in the Nature of it, which is Juſtice, and that in three reſpects.

1. It is the firſt leſſon that great Synteresis, ſo much renowned by philoſophers and civilians, learns mankind, ‘ To do as they would be done to;’ ſince he that gives what he would not take, or takes what he would not give, only ſhews care for himſelf, but neither kindneſs nor juſtice for another.

2. The juſt nature of government lies in a fair and equal retribution: But what can be more unequal, than that men ſhould be rated more than their proportion to anſwer the neceſſities of government, and yet that they ſhould not only receive no protection from it, but by it be diſſeized of their dear liberty and properties? We ſay, to be compelled to pay that power that exerts itſelf to ruin thoſe that pay it, or that any ſhould be required to enrich thoſe that ruin them, is hard and unequal, and therefore contrary to the juſt nature of government. If we muſt be contributaries to the maintenance of it, we are entitled to a protection from it.

3. It is the juſtice of government to proportion penalties to the crime committed. Now granting our diſſent to be a fault, yet the infliction of a corporal or external puniſhment, for a mere mental error (and that not voluntary) is unreaſonable and inadequate, as well as againſt particular directions of the Scriptures, Tit. iii. 9, 10, 11. For as corporal penalties cannot convince the Underſtanding; ſo neither can they be commenſurate puniſhments for faults purely intellectual: And for the government of this world to intermeddle with what belongs to the government of another, and which can have no ill aſpect or influence upon it, ſhews more of invaſion than right and juſtice.

1670. Secondly, It carries a contradiction to government in the Execution of it, which Prudence, and that in theſe inſtances:

1. The ſtate of the caſe is this, That there is no republick ſo great, no empire ſo vaſt, but the laws of them are reſolvable into theſe two ſeries or heads; ‘ Of Laws Fundamental, ‘ which are indiſpenſible and immutable; and Laws Superficial, which are temporary ‘ and alterable:’ And as it is juſtice and prudence to be punctual in the execution of the former, ſo, by circumſtances, it may be neither to execute the latter, they being ſuited to the preſent conveniency and emergency of ſtate; as the prohibiting of cattle out of Ireland was judged of advantage to the farmers of England, yet a murrain would make it the good of the whole that the law ſhould be broke, or at leaſt the execution of it ſuſpended. That the law of reſtraint in point of conſcience is of this number, we may farther manifeſt, and the imprudence of thinking otherwiſe: For firſt, if the ſaying were as true as it is falſe, “ No Biſhop, no King,” (which admits of various readings; as, “ No decimating Clergy, or no Perſecution, no King,”) we ſhould be as ſilent as ſome would have us; but the confidence of their aſſertion, and the impolicy of ſuch as believe it, makes us to ſay, That a greater injury cannot be done to the preſent government. For if ſuch laws and eſtabliſhments are fundamental, they are as immutable as mankind itſelf; but that they are as alterable as the conjectures and opinions of governors have been, is evident; ſince the ſame fundamental indiſpenſible laws and policy of theſe kingdoms have ſtill remained, through all variety of oppoſite ruling opinions and judgments, and disjoined from them all. Therefore to admit of ſuch a fixation to temporary laws, muſt needs be highly imprudent, and deſtructive of the eſſential parts of the government of theſe countries.

2. That ſince there has been a time of connivance, and that with no ill ſucceſs to public affairs, it cannot be prudence to diſcontinue it, unleſs it was imprudence before to give it; and ſuch little deſerve it that think ſo.

3. Diſſenters not being conſcious to themſelves of any juſt forfeiture of that favour, are as well grieved in their reſentments of this alteration, as the contrary did oblige them to very grateful acknowledgments.

4. This muſt be done to gratify all, or the greateſt part, or but ſome few only: it is a demonſtration; all are not pleaſed with it that the greateſt number is not, the empty public auditories will ſpeak: In ſhort, how ſhould either be, when ſix parties are ſacrificed to the ſeventh: That this cannot be prudence, common maxims and obſervations prove.

5. It ſtrikes fatally at Proteſtant ſincerity: For will the Papiſts ſay, Did Proteſtants exclaim againſt us for perſecutors, and are they now the men themſelves? Was it an inſtance of weakneſs in our religion, and is it become a demonſtration of ſtrength in theirs? Have they tranſmuted it from antichriſtian in us, to chriſtian in themſelves? Let perſecutors anſwer.

6. It is not only an example, but an incentive to the Romaniſts to perſecute the Reformed Religion abroad: For when they ſee their actions (once void of all excuſe) now defended by the example of Proteſtants, that once accuſed them, (but now themſelves) doubtleſs they will revive their cruelty.

7. It overturns the very ground of the Proteſtants retreat from Rome: For if men muſt be reſtrained, upon pretended prudential conſiderations, from the exerciſe of their conſcience in England; why not the ſame in France, Holland, Germany, Conſtantinople, &c. where matters of ſtate may equally be pleaded? This makes religion, ſtate-policy; and faith and worſhip, ſubſervient to the humours and intereſts of ſuperiors: Such doctrine would have prevented our anceſtors retreat; and we wiſh it be not the beginning of a back-march; for ſome think it ſhrewdly to be ſuſpected, where religion is ſuited to the government, and conſcience to its conveniency.

8. Vice is encouraged: For if Licentious perſons ſee men of virtue moleſted for aſſembling with a religious purpoſe to reverence and worſhip God, and that are otherwiſe moſt ſerviceable to the commonwealth, they may and will infer, it is better for them to be as they are; ſince not to be Demure, as they call it, is half-way to that kind of accompliſhment which procures preferment.

9. For ſuch perſons as are ſo poor-ſpirited as to truckle under ſuch reſtraints, What conqueſt is there over them, that before were conſcientious men, and now hypocrites? Who ſo forward to be avenged of them, that brought this guilt upon them, as they themſelves? And how can the impoſers be ſecure of their friendſhip, whom they have taught to change with the times?

10. Such laws are ſo far from benefiting the country, that the execution of them will be the aſſured ruin of it, in the revenues, and conſequently in the power of it: For where there is a decay of families, there will be of trade; ſo of wealth, and in the end of ſtrength and power: And if both kinds of relief fail, Men, the prop of Republicks; Money, the ſtay of Monarchies; this, as requiring Mercenaries; that, as needing Freemen; farewel the intereſt of England! 'Tis true, the prieſts get (though that is but for a time) but the King and People loſe, as the event will ſhew.

11. It ever was the prudence of wiſe magiſtrates to oblige their people; but what comes ſhorter of it than perſecution? What dearer to them than the liberty of their conſcience? What cannot they better ſpare than it? Their peace conſiſts in the enjoyment of it: And he that by compliance has loſt it, carries his penalty with him, and is his own priſon. Surely ſuch practices muſt render the government uneaſy, and beget a great diſreſpect to the governors, in the hearts of the people.

12. But that which concludes our prudential part ſhall be this, That after all their pains and good-will to ſtretch men to their meaſure, they never will be able to accompliſh their end: And if he be an unwiſe man, that provides means where he deſigns no end, how near is he of kin to him that propoſes an end unobtainable. Experience has told us, 1. How invective it has made the impoſed-on. 2. What diſtractions have enſued ſuch attempts. 3. What reproach has followed to the Chriſtian religion, when the profeſſors of it have uſed a coercive power upon conſcience. And laſtly, That Force never yet made either a Good Chriſtian, or a Good Subject.

Thirdly and Laſtly, Since the proceedings we argue againſt are proved ſo deſtructive to the juſtice and prudence of government, we ought the leſs to wonder that they ſhould hold the ſame malignity againſt the end of it, which is Felicity, ſince the wonder would be to find it otherwiſe; and this is evident from theſe three conſiderations:

1. Peace (the end of war and government, and its great happineſs too) has been, is, and yet will be, broken by the frequent tumultuary diſturbances that enſue the diſquieting our meetings, and the eſtreating fines upon our goods and eſtates. And what theſe things may iſſue in, concerneth the civil magiſtrate to conſider.

2. Plenty (another great end of government) will be converted into poverty, by the deſtruction of ſo many thouſand families as refuſe compliance and conformity, and that not only to the ſufferers, but influentially to all the reſt; a demonſtration of which we have in all thoſe places where the late Act has been any thing conſiderably put in execution. Beſides, how great provocation ſuch incharity and cruel uſage as ſtripping widows, fatherleſs, and poor, of their very neceſſaries for human life, merely upon an account of faith or worſhip, muſt needs be to the juſt and righteous Lord of heaven and earth, Scriptures, and plenty of other hiſtories, plainly ſhew us.

3. Unity (not the leaſt, but greateſt end of government) is loſt: For by ſeeking an unity of opinion, by the ways intended, the unity requiſite to uphold us as a Civil Society, will be quite deſtroyed. And ſuch as relinquiſh that, to get the other, beſides that they are unwiſe, will infallibly loſe both in the end.

In ſhort, We ſay that it is unreaſonable we ſhould not be entertained as men, becauſe ſome think we are not as good chriſtians as they pretend to wiſh us; or that we ſhould be deprived of our liberties and properties, who never broke the laws that gave them to us: What can be harder, than to take that from us by a law, which the great indulgence and ſolicitude of our anceſtors took ſo much pains to intail upon us by law; An. 18 Ed. 3. ſtat. 3. alſo ſtat. 20. Ed. 3. cap. 1. Again, Petition of Right, An. 3. Car. and more fully in Magna Charta; Farther, peruſe 37 Ed. 5. chap 8. 28. 42 Ed. 3. cap. 7.

And we are perſuaded, that no temporary ſubſequential law whatever to our fundamental rights, (as this of Force on Conſcience is) can invalidate ſo eſſential a part of the government, as Engliſh liberty and property: Nor that it is in the power of any on earth to deprive us of them, till we have firſt done it ourſelves, by ſuch enormous facts as thoſe very laws prohibit, and make our forfeiture of that benefit we ſhould otherwiſe receive by them: For theſe being ſuch cardinal and fundamental points of Engliſh law-doctrine, individually, and by the collective body of the people, agreed to, and on which, as the moſt ſolid baſis, our Secondary Legiſlative Power, as well as Executive, is built; it ſeems moſt rational that the ſuperſtructure cannot quarrel or invalidate its own foundation, without manifeſtly endangering its own ſecurity: The effect is ever leſs noble than the cauſe; the gift than the giver; and the ſuperſtructure than the foundation.

The ſingle queſtion to be reſolved in the caſe, briefly will be this, Whether any viſible authority (being founded in its primitive inſtitution upon thoſe Fundamental Laws, that inviolably preſerve the people in all their juſt rights and privileges) may invalidate all, or any, of the ſaid laws, without an implicit ſhaking of its own foundation, and a clear overthrow of its own conſtitution of government, and ſo reduce them to their Statu quo prius, or firſt principles? The reſolution is every man's, at his own pleaſure. Read Hen. 3. 9, 14, 29. 25 Ed. 3. Cook's inſtit. 2. 19, 50, 51.

Thoſe who intend us no ſhare or intereſt in the laws of England, as they relate to civil matters, unleſs we correſpond with them in points of faith and worſhip, muſt do two things, Firſt, it will lie heavy on their parts to prove, That the ancient compact and original of our laws carries that proviſo with it; elſe we are manifeſtly diſſeized of our free-cuſtoms.

Secondly, They are to prove the reaſonableneſs of ſuch proceedings to our underſtandings, that we may not be concluded by a law we know not how to underſtand: For if I take the matter rightly (as I think I do) we muſt not buy or ſell, unleſs of this or that perſuaſion in Religion; not conſidering Civil Society was in the world before the 1670. Proteſtant Profeſſion; men, as ſuch, and in affairs peculiarly relative to them in an external and civil capacity, have ſubſiſted many ages under great variety of religious apprehenſions, and therefore not ſo dependent on them as to receive any variation or revolution with them. What ſhall we ſay then? but that ſome will not that we ſhould live, breathe, and commerce as men, becauſe we are not ſuch modelled chriſtians as they coercively would have us; they might with as much juſtice and reputation to themſelves forbid us to look or ſee unleſs our eyes were grey, black, brown, blue, or ſome one colour beſt ſuiting theirs: For not to be able to give us faith, or ſave our conſciences harmleſs, and yet to perſecute us for refuſing conformity, is intolerable hard meaſure.

In ſhort, That coercive way of bringing all men to their height of perſuaſion, muſt either ariſe from exorbitant Zeal and Superſtition, or from a conſciouſneſs of Error and Defect, which is unwilling any thing more ſincere and reformed ſhould take place; being of that Cardinal's mind, who therefore would not hearken to a Reformation, at the ſitting of the Council of Trent, becauſe he would not ſo far approve the Reformers judgment (for having once condeſcended to their apprehenſions, he thought it would for ever inſlave them to their ſenſe); though otherwiſe he ſaw, as much as any man, the grand neceſſity of a Reformation, both of the Roman doctrine and converſation.

Some grand Objections in the Way muſt be conſidered.

Objection 1. 'But you are a people that meet with deſigns to diſaffect the people, and 'to ruin the government.'

Anſwer. A ſurmiſe is no certainty; neither is a may-be, or conjecture, any proof: That from the firſt we have behaved ourſelves inoffenſively, is a demonſtration; that our meetings are open, where all may hear our matter, and have liberty to object or diſcuſs any point, is notorious. Ignorant calumnies are ſandy foundations to build ſo high a charge upon: Let us fairly be heard in public conference, how far we can juſtify our principles from being deſervedly ſuſpected of ſedition or diſloyalty, and not over-run us with mere ſuppoſitions. We declare our readineſs to obey the ordinance of man, which is only relative to human or civil matters, and not points of Faith, or practice in Worſhip: But if accuſations muſt ſtand for proofs, we ſhall take it for granted that we muſt ſtand for criminals; but our ſatisfaction will be, that we ſhall not deſerve it, otherwiſe than as prejudice ſeeks to traduce us.

Object. 2. 'But you ſtrike at the doctrine, at leaſt the diſcipline, of the church; and 'conſequently are hereticks.'

Anſw. This ſtory is as old as the Reformation: If we muſt be objected againſt out of pure reputation, let it be in ſome other matter than what the Papiſts objected againſt the firſt Proteſtants; otherwiſe you do but hit yourſelves in aiming at us? To ſay you were in the right, but we are in the wrong, is but a mere begging of the queſtion; for doubtleſs the Papiſts ſaid the ſame to you, and all that you can ſay to us. Your beſt plea was, Conſcience, upon principles the moſt evident and rational to you: Do not we the like? What if you think our reaſons thick, and our ground of ſeparation miſtaken? Did not the Papiſts harbour the ſame thoughts of you? You perſuaded as few of them, as we of you: Were you therefore in the wrong? No more are we. It was not what they thought of you, or enacted againſt you, that concluded you: And why ſhould your apprehenſions conclude us? If you have the way of giving faith beyond what they had, and have the faculty of perſuaſion, evidence as much: But if you are as deſtitute of both, as they were to you; why ſhould fines and priſons, once uſed by them againſt you, and by you exclaimed againſt, as unchriſtian ways of reclaiming hereticks (ſuppoſing yourſelves to be ſuch) be employed by you as rational, chriſtian, and convincing upon us? To ſay we deſerve them more, is to ſuppoſe yourſelves in the right, and us in the wrong, which proves nothing. Beſides, the queſtion is not barely this, whether Hereticks or no Hereticks? But whether an heretick ſhould be perſecuted into a diſclaiming of his error? Your old arguments run thus, as I well remember.

1. Error is a Miſtake in the Underſtanding.
2. This is for want of a better Illumination.
3. This Error can never be diſlodged, but by Reaſon and Perſuaſion, as what are moſt ſuitable to the Intellect of man.
4. Fines, goals, exiles, gibbets, &c. are no convincing arguments to the moſt erring Underſtanding in the world, being ſlaviſh and brutiſh.
5. This way of Force makes, inſtead of an honeſt diſſenter, but an hypocritical conformiſt; than whom nothing is more deteſtable to God and man.

This being the Proteſtants plea, we are not to be diſliked by Proteſtants, for following their own avowed maxims and axioms of conſcience in defence of its own liberty.

In ſhort, either allow ſeparation upon the ſingle principle of ‘ My conſcience owns this, ‘ or diſowns that ;’ or never dwell in that building which knew no better foundation (indeed good enough) ; but, accuſing your forefathers of ſchiſm and hereſy, return to the Romiſh church. What ſhort of this can any ſay to an Anti-liberty-of-Conſcience Proteſtant ?

Object. 3. ‘ But at this rate ye may pretend to cut our throats, and do all manner of ‘ ſavage acts.’

Anſw. Though the objection be frequent, yet it is as foully ridiculous. We are pleading only for ſuch a liberty of conſcience as preſerves the nation in peace, trade, and commerce ; and would not exempt any man, or party of men, from not keeping thoſe excellent laws, that tend to ſober, juſt, and induſtrious living. It is a Jeſuitical moral, ‘ To kill a man before he is born :’ Firſt, to ſuſpect him of an evil deſign ; and then kill him, to prevent it.

Object. 4. ‘ But do not you ſee what has been the end of this ſeparation ? Wars, and ‘ revolutions, and danger to government ; witneſs our late troubles.’

Anſw. We ſee none of all this ; but are able to make it appear, that the true cauſe of all that perplexed diſturbance, which was amongſt the Homoouſians and Arians of old, and among us of latter years (as well as what has modernly attended our neighbouring countries) took its firſt riſe from a narrowneſs of ſpirit, in not tolerating others to live the free men God made them, in external matters upon the earth, merely upon ſome difference in religion.

And were there once but an hearty Toleration eſtabliſhed, it would be a demonſtration of the truth of this aſſertion. On this ground empire ſtands ſafe ; on the other, it ſeems more uncertain.

But theſe are only the popular devices of ſome to traduce honeſt men, and their principles ; whoſe lazy life, and intolerable advice, become queſtioned, by a toleration of people better inclined.

Object. 5. ‘ But what need you take this pains to prove liberty of Conſcience reaſonable and neceſſary, when none queſtions it ? All that is required is, That you meet but ‘ four more than your own families ; and can you not be contented with that ? Your diſobedience to a law ſo favourable, brings ſuffering upon you.’

Anſ. Here is no need of anſwering the former part of the objection : It is too apparent throughout the land, that Liberty of Conſcience, as we have ſtated it, has been ſeverely proſecuted, and therefore not ſo frankly enjoined. The latter part I anſwer thus, If the words Lawful or Unlawful may bear their ſignification from the nature of the things they ſtand for, then we conceive that a meeting of Four thouſand is no more unlawful than a meeting of Four ; for Number, ſingly conſidered, criminates no aſſembly : But the reaſon of their aſſembling ; the poſture in which ; and the matter tranſacted, with the conſequences thereof.

Now if thoſe things are taken for granted to be things diſpenſible (as appears by the allowance of four beſides every family) certainly the number can never render it unlawful : So that the queſtion will be this, Whether if Four, met to worſhip God, be an allowable meeting, Four thouſand, met with the ſame deſign, be not an allowable meeting ?

It is ſo plain a caſe, that the matter in queſtion reſolves it.

Object. 6. ‘ But the Law forbids it.’

Anſw. If the ENACTING any thing can make it Lawful, we have done : But if an Act ſo made by the papiſts againſt proteſtants, was never eſteemed ſo by a true Proteſtant ; and if the nature of the matter will not bear it ; and laſtly, that we are as much commanded by God to meet Four thouſand, as Four ; we muſt deſire to be excuſed, if we forbear not the aſſembling of ourſelves together, as the manner of ſome is.

Object. 7. ‘ But the reaſon of the prohibition of the number is’ (for you ſee they allow all that can be ſaid to Four thouſand to be ſaid to the Family and Four) ‘ that ‘ Tumults may ariſe, and Plots may be made, and the like inconveniencies happen to ‘ the government.’

Anſ. Great aſſemblies are ſo far from being injurious, that they are the moſt inoffenſive : For, firſt, They are open, expoſed to the view of all, which of all things Plotters are the ſhyeſt of. But how fair an opportunity it were for men ſo principled to do it in thoſe allowed meetings of but four beſides the family, is eaſy to gueſs, when we conſider, That Few make the beſt and cloſeſt council ; and next, That ſuch an aſſembly is the moſt private and clandeſtine, and ſo fitted for miſchief and ſurprize.

Secondly,

1670. Secondly, Such aſſemblies are not only public and large, but they are frequented, as well by thoſe that are not of their way, as by their own. From whence it follows, that we have the greateſt reaſon to be cautious and wiſe in our behaviour, ſince the more there be at our meeings, the more witneſſes are againſt us, if we ſhould ſay or act any thing that may be prejudicial to the government.

Laſtly, For theſe ſeveral years none could ever obſerve ſuch an ill uſe made of that freedom, or ſuch wicked deſigns to follow ſuch aſſemblies; and therefore it is high incharity to proceed ſo ſeverely upon meer ſuppoſitions.

To this we ſhall add ſeveral authorities and teſtimonies for farther confirmation of our ſenſe of the matter, and to let impoſers ſee, that we are not the only perſons who have impleaded Perſecution, and juſtified Liberty of Conſcience, as chriſtian and rational.

CHAP. VI.

They reflect upon the Senſe and Practice of the Wiſeſt, Greateſt, and Beſt States and Perſons of Ancient and Modern Times; as of the Jews, Romans, Egyptians, Germans, French, Hollanders, nay Turks and Perſians too: And Cato, Livy, Tacitus, Juſtin Martyr, Tertullian, Jovianus, Chaucer, Dominicus Soto, Malvetzey, Grotius, Raleigh, Doctor and Student, French and Dutch Proteſtants in England, Dr. Hammond, Dr. Taylor, a nameleſs but great Perſon, Lactantius, Hilary, Jerom, Chryſoſtom, Poliſh and Bohemian kings, King James, and King Charles the Firſt.

A brief Collection of the Senſe and Practice of the Greateſt, Wiſeſt, and Learnedeſt Common-wealths, Kingdoms, and particular Perſons of their times, concerning Force upon Conſcience.

1. THOUGH the Jews, above all people had the moſt to ſay for impoſition and reſtraint within their own dominions, having their religion inſtituted by ſo many ſignal proofs of divine original, it being delivered to them by the Hand of God Himſelf, yet ſuch was their indulgence to Diſſenters, that if they held the common received Noachical principles tending to the acknowledgment of ONE GOD and a Juſt Life, they had the free exerciſe of their diſtinct modes or ways of worſhip, which were numerous. Of this their own Rabbies are witneſſes, and Grotius out of them.

2. The Romans themſelves, as ſtrict as they were, not only had thirty thouſand gods (if Varro may be credited) but almoſt every family of any note had its diſtinct Sacra, or peculiar way of worſhip.

3. It was the ſenſe of that grave, exemplary common-wealth's-man, Cato, in Salluſt, That among other things which ruin any government, Want of Freedom of Speech, or men's being obliged to humour Times, is a great one: Which we find made good by the Florentine Republick, as Guiccardine relates.

4. Livy tells us, 'It was a wonder that Hannibal's army, conſiſting of divers nations, divers humours, differing habits, contrary religions, various languages, ſhould live Thirteen years from their own country under his command without ſo much as once mutinying, either againſt their general or among themſelves.' But what Livy relates for a wonder, that ingenious marquis Virgilio Malvetzey gives the reaſon of; namely, 'That the difference of their Opinion, Tongues, and Cuſtoms, was the reaſon of their Preſervation and Conqueſt: For,' ſaid he, 'It was impoſſible ſo many contrary ſpirits ſhould combine; and if any ſhould have done it, it was in the general's power to make the greater party by his equal hand; they owing him more of reverence, than they did of affection to one another. This,' ſays he, 'ſome impute to Hannibal; but how great ſoever he was, I give it to the variety of humours in the army. For,' adds he, 'Rome's army was ever leſs given to mutinying when joined with the Provincial Auxiliaries, than when entirely Roman.' Thus much, and more, in his publick diſcourſes upon Cornelius Tacitus.

5. The ſame beſt ſtatiſt of his time, C. Tacitus, tells us in the caſe of Cremtius, That it had been the intereſt of Tiberius not to have puniſhed him; inaſmuch as curioſity is begotten by reſtriction of liberty to write or ſpeak, which never miſſed of proſelites.

6. Juſtin Martyr I will forbear to quote in leſs than his 'Two Whole Apologies,' dedicated to Adrian and Antoninus Pius, as I take it.

7. Tertullian ad Scapulam, that learned and judicious apologiſt, plainly tells us, 'That it is not the property of Religion to compel or perſecute for Religion:' She ſhould be accepted for herſelf, not for force; that being a poor and beggarly one that has no better arguments to convince; and a manifeſt evidence of her ſuperſtition and falſehood.

8. Of this we take the nine months reign of the emperor Jovianus to be an excellent demonſtration; whoſe great wiſdom, and admirable prudence in granting Toleration, expreſly ſaying, 'He would have none moleſted for the exerciſe of their religion,' calmed the impetuous ſtorms of diſſention betwixt the Homoouſians and Arrians; and reduced the whole empire, before agitated with all kind of commotions during the reigns of Conſtantine, Conſtantius, and Julian, to a wonderful ſerenity and peace, as Socrates Scholaſticus affirms.

9. That little kingdom of Ægypt had no leſs than forty thouſand perſons retired to their private and ſeparate ways of worſhip, as Euſebius, out of Philo Judæus and Joſephus, relates.

10. And here let me bring in honeſt Chaucer, whoſe matter (and not his Poetry) heartily affects me: It was in a time when prieſts were as rich and lofty as they are now, and cauſes of evil alike.

(a) THE Time was once, and may return again,
(for oft may happen that hath been beforn)
when Shepherds had none Inheritance, ne of Land, nor Fee in Sufferance,
But what might ariſe of the bare Sheep,
(were it more or leſs) which they did keep,
Well ywis was it with Shepherds tho':
nought having, nought fear'd they to forgo,
For PAN (God) himſelf was their Inheritance,
and little them ſerv'd for their Maintenance,
The Shepherd's God ſo well them guided,
that of nought were they unprovided;

(b) Butter enough, Honey, Milk, and Whay,
and their Flock Fleeces them to array.
But Tract of Time and long Proſperity,
(that Nurſe of Vice, this of Inſolency)
Lulled the Shepherds in ſuch Security, that not content with Loyal Obeyſance,
Some gan to gap for greedy Governance, and match themſelves with mighty Potentates.

(c) Lovers of Lordſhips and Troublers of States;
then gan Shepherds Swains to look aloft,
And leave to live hard, and learn to lig ſoft, though under colour of Shepherds ſame while There crept in Wolves full of Fraud and Guile, that often devour'd their own Sheep,
And often the Shepherd that did them keep.

(d) This was the firſt Source of the Shepherds Sorrow.
that nor will be quit, with bale nor borrow.

11. Who knows not that our firſt Reformers were great champions for Liberty of Conſcience? As Wickliff in his Remonſtrance to the parliament; the Albigenſes to Lewis the 11th and 12th of France: Luther to the ſeveral diets under Frederick and Charles the Fifth; Calvin to Francis the Firſt; and many of our Engliſh martyrs, as the poor "Plowman's Famous Complaint," in "Foxe's martyrology," &c.

12. The preſent affairs of Germany plainly tell us, that Toleration is the preſervation of their ſtates; the contrary having formerly almoſt quite waſted them.

13. The ſame in France: Who can be ſo ignorant of their ſtory, as not to know that the timely Indulgence of Henry the Fourth, and the diſcreet Toleration of Richlieu and Mazarin, ſaved that kingdom from being ruined, both by the Spaniards and one another?

14. Holland, than which what place is there ſo improved in wealth, trade and power, chiefly owes it to her Indulgence in matters of Faith and Worſhip.

15. Among the very Mahometans of Turkey and Perſia, what variety of opinions, yet what unity and concord is there? We mean in matters of a civil importance.

16. It

(a) The primitive ſtate of things, obſerved by a poet, more than 300 years old; by which the clergy may read their own apoſtacy and character.

(b) Time and proſperity corrupted them, and then they grew ſtateſmen.

(c) 'Twas now they began to perſecute; they hated any that were more devout than themſelves: Devotion was counted diſaffection; religious aſſemblies, conventicles; primitive-ſpirited chriſtians, upſtart hereticks: Thus the tragedy began, Cain ſlaying Abel about religion.

(d) He truly maketh their avarice the cauſe of their degeneration; for it is the root of all evil.

1670.

16. It was the opinion of that great maſter of the "ſentences," Dominicus à Soto, ‘That every man had a natural right to inſtruct others in things that are good: And he may teach the Goſpel-truths alſo, but cannot compel any to believe them; he may explain them: And to this, (ſays he) every man has a right,’ as in his 4 Sent. diſt. 5, art. 13. pag. 115. 7.

17. ‘Strifes about religion,’ ſaid judicious and learned Grotius, ‘are the moſt pernicious and deſtructive, where proviſion is not made for Diſſenters; The contrary moſt happy; as in Muſcovy.’ He farther ſays, upon the occaſion of Campanella, ‘That not a rigid, but eaſy government, ſuits beſt with the northern people.’ He often pleads the relaxation of temporary laws to be reaſonable and neceſſary; as in the caſe of the Curatii and Horatii, and Fabius Vitulanus; and others ſtinted to Time and Place, as the Jewiſh laws, &c. Polit. Maxims, p. 12, 18, 78, 98.

18. The famous Raleigh tells us, ‘That the way for magiſtrates to govern well, and gain the eſteem of their people, is to govern by piety, juſtice, wiſdom, and a gentle and moderate carriage towards them: And that diſturbance attends thoſe ſtates, where men are raiſed, or depreſſed by parties.’ See his Obſervations and Maxims of ſtate.

19. If I miſtake not, the French and Dutch Proteſtants enjoy their ſeparate ways of worſhip in London, if not in other parts of theſe lands, without moleſtation: We do the like in remote countries, "but not in our own."

20. This muſt needs be the meaning of the learned Doctor to his inquiſitive Student, in their judicious dialogue about the Fundamental Laws of the kingdoms, when he ſays, ‘That ſuch laws as have not their foundation in nature, juſtice and reaſon, are void, ipſo facto.’ And whether perſecution or reſtraint upon conſcience be congruous with either, let the impartial judge. Lib. 1. chap. 6.

21. Doctor Hammond himſelf, and the grand patron of the Engliſh Church, was ſo far from urging the legality of reſtriction in matters relating to Conſcience, that he writ, argued, and left upon his dying-bed, his ſenſe to the contrary; as the Author of his Life might have been pleaſed to obſerve, but that intereſt ſtood in the way; the doctor exhorting his party, ‘not to ſeek to diſplace thoſe then in the Univerſity, or to perſecute them for any matter of Religious Difference.’

22. That a perſon, of no leſs ability, in the Iriſh Proteſtant church, did the ſame, I mean Dr. Jer. Taylor, his whole diſcourſe of "Liberty of Prophecy," is a moſt pregnant demonſtration.

23. It was the ſaying of a perſon once, too great to be named now, ‘That Liberty of Conſcience is every man's natural right; and he who is deprived of it, is a Slave in the midſt of the greateſt Liberty: And ſince every man ſhould do as he would be done to, ſuch only do not deſerve to have it, that will not give it.

24. Lactantius reflects upon perſecutors thus, ‘If you will with blood, with evil, and with torments defend your worſhip, it ſhall not thereby be defended, but polluted.’ Lib. 5. cap. 20.

25. Hillary againſt Auxentius ſaith, ‘The Chriſtian church does not perſecute, but is perſecuted.’

26. Jerom, thus; ‘Hereſy muſt be cut off, with the ſword of the Spirit,’ Proœm, lib. 4.

27. Chryſoſtom ſaith, ‘That it is not the manner of the children of God to perſecute about their religion, but an evident token of antichriſt.’ Relig. Uriſ. pag. 192.

28. Stephen, king of Poland, declared his mind in the point controverted, thus; ‘I am king of Men, not of Conſcience; a commander of Bodies, not of Souls.’

29. The king of Bohemia was of opinion, ‘That men's conſciences ought in no ſort tobe violated, urged, or conſtrained.’

30. And laſtly, let me add (as what is, or ſhould be now, of more force) the ſenſe of king James and Charles the firſt, men famed for their great natural abilities and acquired learning, That no man ought to be puniſhed for his Religion, nor diſturbed for his Conſcience; in that it is the duty of every man to give what he would receive. ‘It is a ſure rule in divinity, ſaid king James, that God never loves to plant his church by Violence and Bloodſhed.’ And in his Expoſition on Revel. 20. he ſaith, ‘That Perſecution is the note of a falſe church.’ And in the laſt king's advice to the preſent king, he ſays, ‘Take heed of abetting any factions: Your partial adhering to any one ſide, gains you not ſo great advantages in ſome men's hearts, (who are prone to be of their King's religion) as it loſeth you in others, who think themſelves and their profeſſion firſt deſpiſed, then perſecuted by you.’

Again, ‘Beware of exaſperating any factions, by the croſſneſs and aſperity of ſome men's paſſions, humours, or private opinions employed by you, grounded only upon their difference in leſſer matters, which are but the ſkirts and ſuburbs of religion; wherein a charitable connivance, and chriſtian toleration, often diſſipates their ſtrength, whom rougher oppoſition fortifies; and puts the deſpiſed and oppreſſed party into ſuch combinations as may moſt enable them to get a full revenge on thoſe they count their ‘ perſecutors; who are commonly aſſiſted by that vulgar commiſeration which attends all

‘ that are ſaid to ſuffer under the notion of Religion.

‘ Always keep up ſolid piety, and thoſe fundamental truths which mend both hearts
‘ and lives of men, with impartial favour and juſtice. Your prerogative is beſt ſhown and ‘ exerciſed in Remitting, rather than exacting the Rigour of laws; there being nothing
‘ worſe than Legal Tyranny.’

Now upon the whole, we aſk, what can be more equal, what more reaſonable, than Liberty of Conſcience; ſo correſpondent with the reverence due to God, and reſpect to the nature, practice, promotion, and rewards of the Chriſtian religion, the ſenſe of Divine Writ, the great privilege of Nature, and noble principle of Reaſon, the juſtice, prudence, and felicity of Government; and laſtly, to the judgment and authority of a whole cloud of famous witneſſes, whoſe harmony in opinion as much detects the unreaſonableneſs and incharity of perſecutors, as their ſavage cruelties imply an high contempt of ſolid determinations: Of which number I cannot forbear the mention of two, whoſe actions are ſo near of kin to one another, and both to inhumanity, as the ſame thing can be to itſelf.

The firſt is a great Lord of Buckinghamſhire, but ſo hearty a perſecutor of the poor Quakers, that rather than they ſhould peaceably enjoy the liberty of worſhipping God, (and to ſupply the county-defect of informers) he has encouraged a pair of ſuch wretches, that it had been a diſgrace for the meaneſt farmer to converſe with; one having been priſoner in Ailſbury, for Theft, and ſaid to have been burnt in the hand; and the other of a complexion not much leſs ſcandalous and immoral.

To give an undeniable teſtimony of their Merit, once for all, I ſhall briefly relate a moſt notorious piece of Perjury. They, ſuſpecting a religious aſſembly to be at a certain place in the ſame county, came; and finding one in reality, repaired to one they call Sir Thomas Clayton, and a juſtice; where they depoſed, ‘ That not only a meeting was ‘ at ſuch an houſe, but one Tho. Zachery and his wife were there;’ who at the ſame time, as at the trial upon indictment for perjury at Ailſbury was proved by ſufficient witneſſes from London, were then at that city; yet fined not only for being there, but for the Speaker alſo, though none ſpoke that day.

Upon the proſecution of theſe men, as perjured men, and by the law diſprivileged of all employ, and never to be credited more in evidence, ſeveral delays were made, much time ſpent, and not a little pains beſtowed, all in hopes of an exemplary ſucceſs, which proved ſo, but the wrong way; for the very laſt ſeſſions, when the matter ſhould have received an abſolute deciſion, and the attendants have been diſmiſſed (eſpecially on the ſcore of the witneſſes, that came from London the ſecond time, upon no other account) a letter was reported to have been writ from the aforeſaid lord, in favour of thoſe informers, to this purpoſe, ‘ That ſince Sir Tho. Clayton was not preſent, the buſineſs could not well be ‘ determined; but if the court would undertake the ending of it, he beſought them ‘ to be favourable to thoſe HONEST MEN.’ If this be true, as ſaid, it is a moſt aggravated ſhame to nobility! What! to protect them from the laſh of the law, who went about to deſtroy Truth, the Life of it! It is a diſhonour to the government, a ſcandal to the country, and a manifeſt injury to an inoffenſive and uſeful inhabitant.

The other is as well known by his Cruelty as by his Name, and he ſcarce deſerves another; however, he is underſtood by that of the Reading Knight-errant, and always in Armour for the Devil; a man whoſe life ſeems to be whole BONNER revived. Hogeſtrant, the Popiſh Inquiſitor, could not hate Martin Luther more, than he does a poor Diſſenter; and wants but as much power, as he has will, to hang more than he has impriſoned. The Laws made againſt Papiſts, he inflicts upon the Quakers; and makes it crime enough for a Premunire, to have an eſtate to loſe.

The ſingle queſtion is not, ‘ Were you at ſuch a meeting?’ (which the act intends) but, ‘ Will you ſwear?’ (which it intends not). And women eſcape him as little for this, as thoſe of his own tribe do for ſome things elſe. But what of all things moſt aggravates the man's impiety, is the making a deviliſh ſnare of a chriſtian duty; ſince ſuch as have come to viſit the impriſoned, have been impriſoned themſelves for their Charity. So that with him it ſeems a current maxim, that thoſe muſt not come to ſee priſoners, and not be ſuch themſelves, who will not take the oath of allegiance to do it.

To relate the whole tragedy, would render him as bad, as the diſcourſe big; and the latter not leſs voluminous, than the former odious. But three things I ſhall obſerve:

Firſt, That he has crouded ſeventy-two perſons (of thoſe called Quakers) men and women, immodeſtly into jail, not ſuffering them to enjoy common conveniences. And for his diverſion, and the puniſhment of little children, he pours cold water down their necks.

Secondly, His impriſonments are almoſt perpetual. Firſt, he premunires them, without any juſt cauſe of ſuſpicion; then impriſons them; and laſtly plunders them, and that by a law enacted againſt Romaniſts: Which, if all be true that is ſaid, is more his concern than theirs, if, without offence, it may be ſuppoſed he has any religion at all.

Thirdly, Some have been there about eight years; and ſhould be eighteen more, were he as ſure to live (being more than ſeventy) and enjoy his power, as doubtleſs he hopes to die before thoſe good laws overtake him that would make an example of ſuch an oppreſſor. In ſhort, wives, widows, poor and fatherleſs, are all fiſh for his net; and whether over or under age, he caſts none away, but ſeems to make it his privilege to correct law, by out-doing it. When we have ſaid all we can (and we can never ſay too much, if enough) he is ſtill his own beſt Character.

Such are the paſſions, follies, and prejudices, men devoted to a ſpirit of impoſition and perſecution are attended with.

Non enim poſſumus quæ vidimus, & audivimus, non loqui.

In ſhort, what religious, what wiſe, what prudent, what good-natured perſon, would be a perſecutor? Certainly it is an office only fit for thoſe, who being void of all Reaſon, to evidence the verity of their own religion, fancy it to be true, from that ſtrong propenſity and greedy inclination they find in themſelves to perſecute the contrary. A weakneſs of ſo ill a conſequence to all civil ſocieties, that the admiſſion of it ever was, and ever will prove their utter ruin, as well as their great infelicity, who purſue it.

And though we could not more effectually expreſs our revenge, than by leaving ſuch perſons to the ſcope of their own humours; yet being taught to love and pray for our perſecutors, we heartily wiſh their better information, that (if it be poſſible) they may act more ſuitably to the good pleaſure of the eternal juſt God, and beneficially to theſe nations.

To conclude; Liberty of Conſcience, as thus ſtated and defended, we aſk, as our undoubted Right by the Law of God, of Nature, and of our own Country. It has been often promiſed; we have long waited for it; we have writ much, and ſuffered in its defence, and have made many true complaints, but found little or no redreſs.

However, we take the righteous holy God to record, againſt all objections that are ignorantly or deſignedly raiſed againſt us, That 1ſt. We hold no principle deſtructive of the Engliſh Government.

2d. That we plead for no ſuch Diſſenter (if ſuch a one there be.)

3d. That we deſire the temporal and eternal happineſs of all perſons (in ſubmiſſion to the divine will of God); heartily forgiving our cruel perſecutors.

4thly, and laſtly, We ſhall engage, by God's aſſiſtance, to lead peaceable, juſt and induſtrious lives amongſt men, to the good and example of all. But if, after all we have ſaid, this ſhort diſcourſe ſhould not be credited, nor anſwered in any of its ſober reaſons and requeſts, but ſufferings ſhould be the preſent lot of our inheritance from this generation; be it known to them all, That meet we muſt, and meet we cannot but encourage all to do (whatever we ſuſtain) in God's Name and authority, who is Lord of Hoſts and King of Kings; at the revelation of whoſe righteous judgments, and glorious tribunal, mortal men ſhall render an account of the deeds done in the body. And whatever the apprehenſions of ſuch may be concerning this diſcourſe, it was writ in love, and from a true ſenſe of the preſent ſtate of things, and Time and the Event will vindicate it from untruth. In the mean while, it is matter of great ſatisfaction to the author, that he has ſo plainly cleared his Conſcience, in pleading for the "Liberty of Other Men's," and publicly borne his honeſt teſtimony for God, not out of ſeaſon to his POOR COUNTRY.

POSTSCRIPT.

A few brief Obſervations upon the late Act, and the uſual Terms of Acts of this Nature.

THAT which we have to ſay, relates either to the Terms of the Act, or the Application of them to us. As to the Terms of the Act, they are theſe; "Seditious Conventicles, Seditious Sectaries, and Meetings under Colour or Pretence of Religion." P. 1.

1. SEDITIOUS, from SEDITION, imports as much as "Turbulent, Contentious, Factious, which ſows Strife and Debate, and hazards the Civil Peace of the Government."

2. CONVENTICLE, "is a diminutive private Aſſembly, deſigning and contriving Evil to particular Perſons, or the Government in general." See LAMB. p. 173. In Tertullian's ſenſe, it is "an aſſembly of immodeſt and unclean perſons;" at leaſt it was ſo taken in thoſe days, and objected againſt the Chriſtians as their practice, whom he defends. TER. APOL.

3. SECTARIES, "muſt be ſuch as diſjoin or diſ-member themſelves from the Body of Truth, and confeſs to a ſtrange and untrue Opinion. If any ſubject of this Realm, be" ing Sixteen Years of Age, or upwards, ſhall be preſent at any Aſſembly, or Conventicle, on pretence of Religion, &c." Which can ſignify no more than thus much, "That true it is, ſome may meet and aſſemble to worſhip God, and upon a religious account, that are Diſſenters; ſuch we cenſure not; but thoſe who, under Colour or Pretence of any Exerciſe of Religion, conſpire, &c. they are to be ſuſpected and proſecuted."----This being the true explanation of the Terms of the Act, we proceed to ſhew how unreaſonably they are applied to us.

1. Words are but ſo many intelligible marks and characters, ſet and employed to inform us of each other's conceptions, and therein of the nature of thoſe things they ſtand for. Now becauſe we take the Act to mean what it ſpeaks, and that the law concludes no man guilty upon conjectures, but from the detection of ſome fault; we affirm ourſelves altogether unconcerned in that word Seditious, becauſe it was never our practice, in words or actions, 'to diſturb the Government, or ſuggeſt principles that might hatch Conſpiracies, or feed the vulgar with diſaffection to their Rulers;' but before the King's coming in, at his coming in, and ever ſince, notwithſtanding our frequent ſuffering, 'we have made it our buſineſs to heal Animoſities, preach Forgiveneſs and Charity amongſt men,' and that they would, by an hearty repentance, turn to God, rather than hunt after revenge upon one another: Therefore we aſſert, we have not done one thing that may be proved Seditious, in the ſenſe above-mentioned.

2. That we are ſtrangers to Conventicles is moſt evident; for where the parts that render it ſuch are wanting, there can be no Conventicle: But that they are in our aſſemblies, appears; Firſt, 'Becauſe our meetings are not ſmall. 2. Neither are they private or clandeſtine; but in the view of all people. Nor are they riotous, licentious, or otherwiſe immodeſt, or immoral; but on purpoſe to diſſuade perſons from ſuch impieties.' So that we are clear in the interpretation of the law, 13 H. 5. cap. 8. 19, and 19 H. 7. cap. 13, and in the ſenſe of the famous father Tertullian.

3. Sectaries, is a word, that whoſoever has but confidence enough to conceit himſelf in the right, by conſequence wants none to ſuppoſe the contrary in the wrong, and ſo to call him a Sectary. But this is but a mere begging of the queſtion; for to ſay thoſe are Sectaries, does not conclude them ſuch; nor does the Act ſpeak ſo plainly of Diſſenters. But granting it did, yet they muſt be Seditious ones, or elſe all will be in vain. Where we may obſerve, that purely to be a Sectary is not what the Act ſtrikes at, but to be a Seditious one: For a man may differ in judgment about matters of faith, from the national religion, and yet correſpond with the government in matters civil. So that the Act upon the whole aims not at Sectaries ſimply, but they muſt be ſuch as are enemies to the civil conſtitution to be rendred Seditious ones, from which we have ſufficiently cleared ourſelves.

4. "That we meet under colour and pretence, and not really, to worſhip God," we deny, and none can prove. It were high incharity to affirm poſitively, 'this or that people meet only under a Colour of Religion.' Yet unleſs the Act had ſo expreſſed itſelf, we conceive their authority lame and imperfect that perſecute us by it. It will help but little to ſay, The King, Lords and Commons, by the following words, "In other manner than according to the Liturgy of the Church of England," meant, that ſuch meet under a pretence that did not conform to that worſhip; ſince the precedent words ſay, "under colour or pretence of any exerciſe of religion in other manner," &c. So that they are only ſtruck at, who are not ſincere diſſenters; but that are ſuch, with deſign to carry on another end.

Obj. But may ſome ſay, 'It is granted, you have very evidently evaded the force of the Act, ſo far as relates to theſe recited expreſſions. But what if a Bill be ready, for an Explanatory and Supplementory Act to the former, wherein this ſcope for argument will not be found; becauſe your meetings will be abſolutely adjudged ſeditious, riotous, and unlawful.'

To which we anſwer, That as the granting of the firſt, which none reaſonably can deny, is a manifeſt impeachment of ſuch as have violently proſecuted people for being preſent at religious aſſemblies (almoſt to their utter undoing) ſo ſhall we as eaſily anſwer the ſecond, which amounts to the force of an objection, and briefly thus:

Firſt, It is not more impoſſible for Mankind to preſerve their Society without Speech, than it is abſolutely requiſite that the Speech be regular and certain. For, if what we call a man, a lion, a whale, to-day, we ſhould call a woman, a dog, a ſprat to-morrow; there would be ſuch uncertainty and confuſion, as it would be altogether impoſſible to preſerve ſpeech or language intelligible.

Secondly, It is not in the power of all the men in the world to reconcile an abſolute contradiction, to convert the nature of light into that of darkneſs, nor to enact a thing to be that which it is not: But that thoſe endeavour to do, who think of making our religious meetings Routs and Riots. For, 1. They offer violence to our common propriety of 1670. language; it being the firſt time that ever a religious and peaceable aſſembly would be enacted a Rout or Riot. Nature, Reaſon, the Law of the Land, and common Practice and Obſervation, give a clear contrary definition of a Rout and Riot. 2. They endeavour to reconcile contradictions; for they would have a thing that, which by nature it cannot be: For that which is Peaceable cannot be Riotous; and what is Religious can never be Seditious. For any to ſay, 'our meetings are not religious,' is not only a poor evaſion, but great incharity: For that is properly a religious aſſembly, where perſons are congregated with a real purpoſe of worſhipping God, by prayer, or otherwiſe, let the perſons met be eſteemed doctrinally orthodox, or not. Can any be ſo ignorant, or ſo malicious, as to believe we do not aſſemble to worſhip God, to the beſt of our underſtanding? If they think otherwiſe, they muſt, and do, aſſume unto themſelves a power beyond the arrogancy of the POPE himſelf, that never yet adventured to tell man his thoughts, nor the purpoſes and intents of his heart; which he, or they, muſt do, that definitively judge our aſſemblies (void of ſword or ſtaff, drum or muſket, tumult or violence, and circumſtantiated with all the tokens of Chriſtian devotion) a Rout or a Riot. And truly, If proteſtants deny the legality of thoſe Acts or Edicts, which were contrived and executed in order to their ſuppreſſion, by the reſpective kings and parliaments that owned the Romiſh faith and authority, where they either did or do live, let them not think it ſtrange, if we on the ſame terms (namely, Scruple of Conſcience) refuſe compliance with their laws of Reſtraint. And as the firſt Reformers were no whit daunted at the black characters the Romaniſts faſtened on them, neither thought their Aſſemblies, in a way of profeſſed ſeparation, the more unlawful for their repreſenting them ſuch; no more are we ſurprized or ſcared at the ugly phraſes daily caſt upon us by a ſort of men, that either do not know us, or would not that others ſhould: For we are not ſo eaſily to be braved, menaced, or perſecuted out of our Senſe, Reaſon, and Privilege.

They ſay, 'LOSERS have leave to ſpeak;' at leaſt we take it; none being greater loſers, than ſuch as, for diſſenting from national inſtitutions in point of Faith or Worſhip, are deprived of their common Rights and Freedoms, and hindered as much as may be from reverencing the God that made them, in that way which to them ſeems moſt acceptable to him.

To conclude; we ſay, (and by it let our intentions in our whole diſcourſe be meaſured) that we have not defended any Diſſenters, whoſe quarrel or diſſent is rather Civil and Political, than Religious and Conſcientious: For we really think ſuch unworthy of protection from the Engliſh Government, who ſeek the Ruin of it; and that ſuch as are contributors to the Preſervation of it, (though Diſſenters in point of Faith or Worſhip) are unqueſtionably intituled to a Protection from IT.

A SEASONABLE CAVEAT AGAINST POPERY:
Or, A PAMPHLET, intituled,
An EXPLANATION of the ROMAN CATHOLICK BELIEF, Briefly Examined.

By WILLIAM PENN.

But in vain do they worſhip me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men, Matt. xv. 9.
Now as Jannes and Jambres withſtood Moſes, ſo do theſe alſo reſiſt the truth; men of corrupt minds, reprobates concerning the faith. 2 Tim. iii. 8.

TO The ENGLISH PROTESTANT Reader.

WE hope it may not be too late to militate for Truth againſt the dark ſuggeſtions of Papal Superſtition.---Nor can we think that it ſhould be eſteemed Heterodox, for a diſſenting Proteſtant (whilſt almoſt gaſping for his Own liberty) to vindicate that of Reformation, from the quainteſt ſtratagems, and moſt unwearied endeavours, of Romiſh emiſſaries, to put both it and us into their inquiſition. 1670.

We know they have ſo far maſtered their ancient fierceneſs, and maſked their ſanguine looks with thoſe more modeſt and familiar; that though we need not more Reaſon than before, we need more Skill and Caution, or elſe we may too fatally experience the force of that vulgar proverb; "Laugh in thy face, and cut thy throat."

They are grown ſo complaiſant, as none ſeem more exaſperated at perſecution than themſelves, (whilſt the very Fathers of it) decrying the fierceneſs of ſome countries (whoſe Incendiaries they were, and ſtill are) and imputing all the blood of poor Proteſtants to ſome unwarrantable civil ſcore, (therein abuſing the Civil Magiſtrate with the execution of their own conſpiracies): Nay, for all their venerable eſteem of the Pope's infallibility, they have not ſtuck to cenſure his roaring bulls (though procured by their own means) and all that might expreſs their new tenderneſs; that many, unacquainted with their practices, are ready to believe them what they ſay themſelves to be; 'whoſe 'moral is to have two ſtrings to their bow, to be ambo-dexter, and furniſhed with 'Meanings to ſuit the compaſs of all Occaſions.'

In ſhort, I premiſe three things:

Firſt, That I cordially believe a great number of Romaniſts may be abuſed Zealots, through the idle voluminous Traditions of their Church; whom I rather pity, than dare to wrong.

Secondly, That I deſign nothing leſs than incenſing of the Civil Magiſtrate againſt them (were ſuch a thing poſſible): For I profeſs myſelf 'a Friend to an Univerſal To'leration of Faith and Worſhip.'

Thirdly, That the pamphlet anſwered, being but one ſheet, I confine my examination to a narrow compaſs: And the rather, becauſe a more conſiderable diſcourſe is under my preſent enquiry; which, if Providence ſo order it, may ſpeedily be made publick.

However, let this go for Preface to that larger Tract; in which the Romaniſts may ſee both their ignorance in the marks of a True Church, and their little ſhare or intereſt in thoſe they attribute to her as ſuch.

Penn, Buckinghamſhire,
the 23d of the 11th
Month, 1670.

W. P.

A SEA-

A

SEASONABLE CAVEAT

AGAINST

POPERY.

1670. THOUGH to argue againſt a tribe of men, that eſteem all REASON Carnal, and SCRIPTURES imperfect, might rightly be judged a mere beating of the air, and a taſk only to be enterprized by ſuch as are deſirous of no ſucceſs; yet to prevent thoſe who may be deceived, and if poſſible to reclaim ſuch as are; and laſtly, to clear mine own conſcience, (moſt of all in mine eye) I ſhall deſcend to conſider the unſound, as well as untrue, Confeſſions of the Romaniſts in the Pamphlet under examination.

I. Of the SCRIPTURES.

Papiſt. 'WE believe the Holy Scriptures to be of Divine Inſpiration, and Infallible Authority; and whatſoever is therein contained to be the Word of God.' Page 1.

Anſw. Certainly theſe men muſt either think we are wholly ignorant of their principles, or we muſt needs conclude they have forſaken them. It is ſo manifeſt that they have robbed the Scriptures of their authority, that the POPE has all; and they have then only any, when he is pleaſed to ſtamp his probatum eſt upon them. That this is true, how frequent do we find the Romaniſts in their reflections upon the Proteſtants on this occaſion, 'That they had not known the Scriptures to be ſuch; nay, they might have been as an idle tale to them; had they not been received, believed, and delivered down, as divine writ, by their Church!' As if the ground of believing this to be true, and that to be falſe, had been as much that of true Faith, as we know it, by ſad experience, to be the cauſe of that ſtupid ſuperſtition, and brutiſh zeal, which reign amongſt the abuſed Romaniſts. Beſides, if the Scriptures be infallible, as they confeſs, why are thoſe doctrines and practices retained in the Romiſh church, which moſt expreſly oppoſe the ſenſe of ſcripture, upon the ſingle edicts of the Pope; as that of 'prohibiting Prieſts to marry, and fleſh to be eaten upon certain days?' Of which the truly catholick apoſtle gives this definitive judgment, they are "the doctrine of devils." Nor are their practices, in lieu thereof, leſs diabolical; ſince their Faſts are moſt uſually kept with 'exceſſive treats of Wine and Sweetmeats,;' and their Prieſts are notoriouſly allowed to frequent Stews, or to keep as many ſtrumpets as their purſe or luſt ſhall pleaſe; though it be a moſt Cardinal offence, by marrying, to have One Honeſt Woman. But thoſe who travel Italy are not unacquainted with the Pope's gain, or taxes on ſuch places, for which they have his Broad-Seal, or open Licence.

Perhaps ſome will ſay, 'Theſe are but minute matters,' (however good old Paul might zealouſly ſtile them Doctrines of Devils) and therefore we will inſtance in ſomething more important. What think the Papiſts of their IMAGES? 'Tis true, that they ſay they do not adore them Now; but we know what eſteem their firſt erectors put upon them, and the high value the Romiſh church places upon the inventors: And 'tis as impoſſible we ſhould give our eyes the lie, when we behold them macerating their Breaſts and Knees before thoſe unſenſible Stocks and Stones, as Romaniſts are wont to think us moſt abſurd in crediting our ſenſes; as if that proverb were of no moment, 'Seeing is Believing, or rather Convincing.'

Alas, their Popes, Cardinals, Friars, Nunneries, Holy-days, with other points more doctrinal yet to be examined; Whence came they? What Scripture ever authorized ſuch practices in the Chriſtian Church? Paul told the churches, "He had not been wanting to declare the whole Counſel of God unto them;" and yet were they wholly ignorant of theſe things, and that for above Three hundred years after.

Therefore we infer, that ſince there is that manifeſt jar betwixt this piece of their Profeſſion, and their preſent Practice, as well as Doctrine, they have either relinquiſhed their former faith, or play the wretched impoſtors with the People. I wiſh the firſt, but fear the laſt.

Papiſt. ‘But ſince in the Scripture there are ſome things hard to be underſtood, which ‘the unſtable wreſt to their own deſtruction; we therefore profeſs, for the end of controverſies, to ſubmit our judgments to that of the Church in a Free General Council.’

Anſw. A poor ſhift to invalidate Scriptures, and entitle their own Traditions to the honour of a rule, and as what moſt aptly ſhould decide all controverſies.

Peter's words, applied to render this pretence more plauſible, are miſerably miſapplied. The apoſtle only ſays, that Paul had writ to them concerning “the long-ſuffering of God, that it was ſalvation;” (the preſent ſubject handled by Peter) and that in thoſe epiſtles Paul had “ſome things hard to be underſtood.” But what were thoſe things? Not thoſe in controverſy betwixt us and the Papiſts, nothing being more notorious. And who were they that wreſted them, but the Unlearned and Unſtable, not in the Wiſdom of this World! (that being Science, falſly ſo called!) but wicked and ungodly men; as the profuſe Atheiſt of the times, in his frequent Abuſe of the Scripture, by his ſcurrilous Miſinterpretation of it. For as the wiſe man ſaid, “To fear God, is Wiſdom (or true Learning) and “to depart from iniquity, that is a good Underſtanding;” and as Jeſus Chriſt ſaid, “They that do my Will, ſhall know of my “Doctrine.” How then can the Papiſts infer from hence, that the Scriptures are imperfect, in the more fundamental points of faith and worſhip? Can it be the Word of God, and yet wanting Sufficiency?

A Free General Council is a monſter, in the Romiſh church! How dare they talk ſuch language here in England, who know the ſeverity of the Jeſuits and Popiſh faction againſt it beyond the ſeas? What meant thoſe ill reſentments againſt White and Serjeant of England, and Welch of Ireland, in Rome, if this latitudinarian or new kind of popery had not diſguſted? Nor can I take it for an inſtance of their return; but as the next beſt ſtep to the exorbitancy of popiſh infallibility.

What ſhould a Council be called for? That principles ſhould be received or diſowned? Then muſt a General Council give Faith, and Underſtanding; or elſe men muſt be concluded to believe againſt their belief, by Plurality of Votes: A thing ridiculous, with half-witted people. If God's Grace, and the Scripture Record, be not ſufficient; Reaſon and Experience tell us that General Councils are much more inſufficient. Beſides, this were to uſher in all kind of impiety: For whatever intereſt in the General Council (as that of Trent) concludes as requiſite to be received or done, that muſt indiſpenſibly be obeyed: So that the Moral or Doctrinal Good or Evil of an Act, or Principle (in and from a man's own Judgment) ſhall not be obliging; but he muſt be bound againſt his own Senſe, Reaſon and Faith.

The Senſe of Antiquity, and their own Authors.

Their pretence of uſing Tradition for a neceſſary ſupply to the Defects of the Scriptures, is a mere juggle; ſince they only evade the clearneſs of the one, to ſhroud their defective doctrines under the abuſed antiquity of the other. For it is well known, that by their “Expurgatory Indices,” they have endeavoured to purge the works of the firſt Fathers of ſuch matters as might make to the overthrow of their ſuperſtitious doctrines. This is evident out of Junius, in the caſe of Bertram, elder than Theophylact, Oecumenius, &c. Bellarmine himſelf ſticks not to allow it, but ſhifts it off to an Arrian.

This may be farther ſeen, in the collection Binius made of the Fathers, pag. 28. 2 edit. an. 1611. In ſhort, whole ſentences are put out, and whole ſentences put in. Much might be ſaid of this, but in my other diſcourſe I ſhall enlarge.

And what they mean by a Free General Council, we may read in the Council of Trent, whoſe ſimony and cheats out-do all precedents.---Beſides, theſe men little dream of one Turrecrementa, that in ſo many words tells us, “The Pope is the Foundation, “Rule and Principle of Faith” (which is God's gift:) “For to him it belongs,” ſays that Doctor, “to be the Meaſure, Rule and Science of things that are to be believed, “and of things which are neceſſary to be believed unto life eternal.” Turrecrem. lib. 2. cap. 107. This is the Sting. Conſider the Pope's Intereſt; and what that is, ſuch will be his Impoſitions: Horrible Slavery, and moſt unpardonable Idolatry! For as he can make a new Creed, or ſymbol of Faith, ſo he can multiply new Articles one upon another, ſays, Aug. Triumphus extravag. de Urb. Qu. 59. Art 2. Salmeron prolog. in com. in Epiſt. ad Rom. part 3. pag. 176.

II. Of the Bleſſed Trinity: Of Prayer to Saints and Angels.

Papiſt. ‘We humbly believe the ſacred myſtery of the Bleſſed Trinity, One ‘Eternal Almighty and Incomprehenſible God, whom only we adore ‘and worſhip, as alone having ſovereign dominion over all things; to whom we acknowledge, as due from men and angels, all glory, and ſervice, and obedience; ab-

1670. ‘ horring from our hearts (as a moſt deteſtable ſacrilege) to give our Creator's honour to ‘ any creature whatſoever.’

Anſw. Theſe fine words look newly ſtamped out of the Jeſuits mint. Were they as plain, as they are filled with equivocation, the Romaniſt would deceive us all in our opinion of him, concerning the point in controverſy. Obſerve his cunning.

His words of the Trinity are modeſt, neither highly ATHANASIAN nor yet SOCINIAN, as ſome phraſe it, but calculated to both Meridians. Yet how men can own God, and deny the expreſs rules of his Spirit, as moſt preciſely mentioned in the Scriptures of Truth, is to me a Paradox. But how much the Progenitors of the Romaniſts have been injurious to the Chriſtian faith, by their multiplied obſcure phraſes about the TRINITY, is not unknown to ſome.

He thinks to clear himſelf of Imagery, but plainly catches himſelf in his own reſervations. What honour does he give to God? ‘ That which is due to him, as having ‘ ſovereign dominion over all things.’ He does not ſay that none is due to Saints or Angels. ‘ They abhor to give their Creator's honour to any creature;’ but do they deny to give any divine honour to Images, or the repreſentations of Saints and Angels? Of this they are ſilent, but we know they do it.

Papiſt. ‘ And therefore we ſolemnly proteſt, that by the prayers we addreſs to Angels ‘ and Saints, we intend no other than humbly to ſollicit their aſſiſtance before the Throne ‘ of Grace: Not that we hope any thing from them as original authors, but from God ‘ through Jeſus Chriſt, our only Mediator and Redeemer.’

Anſw. It were endleſs to bring the contradictions of their own authors, to the ſenſe theſe words ſeem to import; and yet they are ſo laid as to admit of various conſtructions; an art they are greatly maſters of.

Firſt, What ground have they to believe that ſuch ſollicitations have ſuch effects? The Scriptures are ſilent in the caſe; nor was it the practice of ſeveral ages after that of the apoſtles. So that it is neither warrantable by the Scripture, nor the moſt unſpotted Tradition.

Nor do we ſay, that the Papiſts ever held thoſe Images to have any virtue ſimply from within themſelves, but that GOD was the Original Author: Yet their own words imply, they may be mediate authors of benefit to us.

And what is it but to contradict themſelves, to ſay, ‘ They own but One Mediator ‘ Chriſt Jeſus;’ and yet to allow a Mediating power to Saints and Angels, at the Throne of Grace? If people will be phraſed out of their Religion, they may. But ſuch deſerve to be Papiſts, who have ſo mean an opinion of their own Underſtandings, as to embrace theſe croſſing confeſſions for ſincere articles of faith.

The Senſe of ANTIQUITY.

Images of old were not admitted to be in churches (ſo called); Simon Magus being their moſt notorious founder, and by whoſe example they were firſt reverenced. The Gnoſticks, and Carpocratians, are charged with this Popiſh veneration, as hereticks, in Theodoret, lib. 1. Auguſt. Hæret. Fabul.----Iræneus de Hæreſ. lib. 1. cap. 23. “ It is forbidden to us to uſe that deceitful art,” ſaid Clemens Alexandrinus, more than 1300 years ago, lib. 6. Strom. The Pictures of what was worſhipped were prohibited to be painted on the walls, or that there ſhould be any Images in churches (ſo called.) Thus in the council of Eliberis, Placuit Picturas in Eccleſiâ eſſe non debere; ne quod colitur, aut adoratur, in parietibus depingatur, Con. 36. So Auguſt. de Morib. Eccleſ. lib. 1. cap. 24.

III. Of Juſtification of MERITS.

Papiſt. ‘ WE firmly believe that no Force of Nature, nor Dignity of our beſt ‘ Works, can merit Juſtification; but we are juſtified freely by Grace, ‘ through the Redemption that is in Chriſt Jeſus.’

Anſw. The Roman Catholick is ſo far from firmly believing what he ſays, that upon his own avowed principles he believes nothing firmly. Can any ſober Perſon think, that to be juſtified for the Sake of Works, is to be juſtified by Grace? If ſo, contradictions are moſt reconcileable, and darkneſs may not unaptly be termed Light. This is the very caſe that Paul of old ſtrenuouſly argued againſt the Meritorians of his time, “ If of Grace, “ then not of Works; if of Works, then not of Grace.”

It is to mock the world to ſay, ‘ That Romaniſts expect to be juſtified by Grace,’ who have for ages impleaded that doctrine, as dangerous and heretical. Bellarmine, in his diſcourſe of this point, is moſt plain, and more modern authors follow his ſteps. But they ſay, Papiſt. 'All other Merits (according to our ſenſe of that word) ſignify no more than actions done by the aſſiſtance of God's Grace, to which he has promiſed a Reward.--- Thus we believe the Merit or Rewardableneſs of holy living (both which ſignify the ſame with us) ariſes not from the Self-value even of our beſt actions, as they are ours, but from the Grace and Bounty of God.'

Anſw. Methinks theſe men are run to a narrow ſtrait, who venture to reconcile Merits and Grace: They cannot wholly be divorced from Merits, and yet would they fain eſpouſe Grace; and by ſeeking to wed both, they do not a little manifeſt their own palliated deſigns: For either they muſt confeſs themſelves, and all their anceſtors, moſt ignorant perſons, that they could never find any diſtinction betwixt Merit and Grace before; or elſe they would retain the Force of their Meritorious Opinions, under their more General Conceſſion of God's Grace: A way of evading, they are not a little ſkilled at.

Nor is there leſs difference betwixt merit and rewardableneſs, as they phraſe it, than betwixt the Middle and the End. Grace and Merit, as ſtated by Calviniſts and Papiſts, are taken for "Faith without Works," and "Works without Faith;" like the two poles: Doctrines the moſt oppoſite. Now rewardableneſs is neither; but ſomething in the Middle; and indeed the moſt true: For Grace is a free gift, requiring nothing: Merit is a Work proportioned to the wages: Rewardableneſs is a Work without which God will not beſtow his Favour, and yet not the meritorious Cauſe; for that there is no proportion betwixt the Work, that is Finite and Temporary; and the Reward, which is infinite and eternal: In which ſenſe both the creature obeys the commands of God, and does not merit, but obtain only, and God rewards the creature, and yet ſo as that he gives too. But the Papiſts are very far from this medium; and their ſhuffling this doctrine of Merit betwixt Grace and Rewardableneſs, only ſhews how unwilling they are to venture it in the plain field, and not that any thing of reſemblance is betwixt it and them, they being of three diſtinct natures and ſignifications.

Beſides, it is wretched to think by what ways the abuſed Romaniſts fancy to merit Juſtification; not by keeping the Moral Law (as we ſhall ſhew anon); not by fulfilling the Evangelical Precepts; but by their vain repetitions 'of their Ave Maria's, Beads, Faſts, Feaſts, Holy-days; Adoration of Images, Frequenting of Maſſes, Praying to the Dead; Invoking the Virgin Mary for her Interceſſion; ſigning themſelves with the Croſs; Abſtaining from Fleſh, and Prieſts from Marriage; by perpetrating ſome notorious fact for the Good of their Church, whether by Killing a Prince, or Blowing up a State.' Theſe, and the like practices (ſtrange and exotic to the Primitive and Chriſtian Faith and Worſhip) are the grand motives to Juſtification; and ſometimes they have gone ſo high, as to deſerve a canonizing at Rome itſelf. Thus briefly have I given an account of their Merits of Juſtification.

IV. Of the HOLY EUCHARIST.

Papiſt. 'IN the Holy Euchariſt, or moſt venerable ſacrament of the Body and Blood of our Lord; we acknowledge that there are, as in all other ſacraments, Two things: The Viſible Sign, which is the Forms of Bread and Wine, to which no Catholic may, or doth, direct his worſhip. There is alſo Inviſible Grace ſignified, the Body of our Lord; whom, being preſent, we worſhip with all poſſible reverence for ſo great a bleſſing, warranted herein by our Bleſſed Lord himſelf in Two of the Goſpels.'

Anſw. Above all other inſtances, this is the moſt pregnant for defence of our aſſertion; namely, That either theſe men have relinquiſhed their old doctrine, or elſe they go about to put the trick upon us. We hear no word at all of tranſubſtantiation herein, the moſt ſacred of their myſterious abſurdities, but what we are at great pains to obſerve and collect. Perhaps they are aſhamed of it, and willing it ſhould paſs under ſome more general phraſe, and leſs offenſive. However, by that expreſſion of the 'Body of our Lord, whom being preſent we adore,' we gueſs their meaning; but how incoherent with their own words, as well as Reaſon, may eaſily appear.

Firſt, They acknowledge that it is a ſacrament, or ſign. If ſo, it is impoſſible that it ſhould be, at the ſame time, both the ſign, and the thing ſignified: For if the very Body of Chriſt be preſent CORPORALLY, (as they uſe to aſſert) it cannot be ſacramentally ſo, but Really and Corporally there; which is deſtructive of the nature of a ſacrament, which is but the repreſentative, or image, of ſomething myſtical, thereby reſembled and ſignified.

Secondly, If this doctrine were true, their LORD would be made by their prieſt: For till he ſays the words, there is no Real Preſence: And ſo the creature (and ſometimes a ſad one too) makes his CREATOR! Which is nothing ſhort of wretched blaſphemy.

1670. Thirdly, The Lord they adore and reverence, they Eat; and He that made heaven and earth, is comprehended of the creature.

Fourthly, I know but of One goſpel, perhaps they know of Two, becauſe they ſeem to own principles ſo contrary to the True one; but let that other be accurſt! If they would have us underſtand by their expreſſion, two of the Evangeliſts, then it is not unlikely but we may ken their meaning; and what they refer to muſt be Chriſt's benediction of the bread and wine, and the giving them both to his diſciples, ſaying, "Take, this is my "body;" and "take, this is my blood." But what then? Can any think that Chriſt gave his Body with his body? That it was the giver and the gift? That it was the Body bleſſing, and the Body bleſt? Did the ſame body hold the ſame body in its own fingers? And was it eaten by the diſciples, and yet without them? And was it no bigger than a ſmall piece of Bread, and yet of the proportion of a Man? And was it inſenſible, and broken with their mouths, and yet whole and ſenſible out of them; and all at the ſame inſtant of time?

Laſtly, Could every one of the Twelve eat the Very Whole Body, and yet that Very Body be viſible with them? And all this while one and the ſame body? But methinks I hear ecchoing from ſome Popiſh Zealot, no ſmall Anathema, for offering to affront ſo Sacred a Myſtery with ſo many Carnal Cavils, and Vain Interrogatories!

To whom I ſhall anſwer once for all, in this point, That I ſtand amazed, how any man of ſenſe can be a Papiſt; when the only Demonſtration of his religion, muſt be his not Underſtanding it.

Many fond abſurdities unmentioned (for brevity) might have been obſerved: For 'Reason never triumphed more over any opinion, than this ſenſeleſs one of Tranſub'ſtantiation;' which may be one very good argument why ſo much Perſecution has ever attended the Diſbelief of it.

The Senſe of Antiquity, and their own Authors.

Antiquity knows it not. For Eight hundred years after Chriſt it was never heard of; and when ſtarted, with great diſguſts entertained.

The Council of Lateran was the firſt that undertook to impoſe it: And the Decrees, as to this point, were wholly abortive; for they are not to be found as conciliary. This was above Twelve hundred years after Chriſt.

Tertullian againſt Marcion, lib. 4. cap. 40. Juſt. Mart. againſt Tryphon the Jew. Greg. Nazianz. Orat. 2. in Paſh. and Pope Gelaſius himſelf, renounced and diſclaimed it, attributing only to it, 'The nature of a bear Figure, as retaining the Subſtance and Nature of Bread and Wine.' And many of their doctors, Scotus, Bellarmine, Biel, &c. aſſure us of its novelty.

But how far are ſuch from the ſpirituality of the myſtery and knowledge of the True Heavenly Bread and Wine that deſcended from above, (the Anti-type) who ignorantly affirm the certainty of ſuch a Tranſubſtantiation, as renders that very Viſible Elementary Bread and Wine, at the ſame Time, the very Inviſible, Spiritual, and Glorified Body of Chriſt? By which they make him a Glorified, crucified, Viſible, inviſible, Spiritual, elementary Chriſt, all at the ſame Time! But more of this in my larger tract.

V. Of COMMUNION in One kind.

Papiſt. 'We humbly confeſs, That from the Beginning of Chriſtianity, the Holy 'Communion was adminiſtered frequently in Both, and ſometimes in 'Each Kind, according to ſeveral Circumſtances.'

Anſw. We may know him to be a Papiſt, by his frequent Confeſſions: And methinks it ſhould not only prevent people from being ſeduced by them, but reduce thoſe of their own way to an utter abhorrence of ſo much allowed apoſtacy.

How many times has he confeſſed this, that, and the other thing, not to be of Primitive practice and inſtitution? If the Ancient Chriſtians did commune in both kinds, upon what better reaſons or motives was it ſo ſeverely prohibited by Romaniſts? Is the Blood of leſs virtue than the Body? Even that which the Scripture frequently commemorates after this manner, "The Blood of Cleanſing; and ſaved by faith in his Blood." But they proceed farther, and ſay,

Papiſt. 'Hence the Holy Church, following the piety of Chriſtians, who inſenſi'bly became accuſtomed to receive it almoſt univerſally in One kind, upon great motives 'did afterwards ordain to have it in One, as now adminiſtered; though the receiving of 'it ſo is not matter of Faith.'

Anſw. Three things are very obſervable from this part of their confeſſion.

1. 'That becauſe it was ſometimes received in One kind according to Circumſtances,

‘ it inſenſibly became received by Holy Church but in one kind.’ More Nonſenſe and Falſhood could not well be in ſo many words. [Nonſenſe], For what conſequence can the latter words be to the former? If in each kind, then not any one more than the other: Or why not Blood, and not Bread; as well as Bread, and not Blood? But among the Papiſts, the people only partake of the Wafer. [Falſhood], For they neither have, nor can they give one inſtance of that ſlippery or heedleſs way of receiving it, as in each kind; but whenever it was taken, for Three hundred years together, it was in both kinds.

And what were thoſe Circumſtances, that we can hear of none of them? Horrible cheats, and idle impoſtures, to delude the unlearned and unſtable! Nor is it leſs impudence for them to ſay, ‘ That the church received it in but One kind upon any ſuch ‘ ſcore.’ The concluſion can never be right, where the premiſes are falſe.

2. ‘ That upon great motives, it was afterwards ordained to be received but in One ‘ kind:’ Which great motives they keep to themſelves. Either they muſt think us ſuch fools as to credit them hand over head, and ſo needed not to mention them; or elſe, they doubting their great motive to be down-right Diſſuaſives with all ſober and intelligent people, choſe rather to be ſilent, than more particular.

3. ‘ That the ſo receiving it is no matter of Faith,’ Which is ſo notorious an untruth, as their own Annals expreſly tell us, that Boniface the 8th, and John the 22d, (if I miſtake not; for I was, when I met the Pamphlet, deſtitute of ſuch books) highly contradicted one another: One threatening the Prieſts to turn them out, if they did not adminiſter it in both kinds; and the other, to Excommunicate them, if not Burn them, in caſe they did. Which as it ſhews the eagerneſs of the Popes, ſo there is a choice piece of infallibility to be obſerved: ‘ Two infallible Popes accuſing each other of groſs Falli‘bility.’

Papiſt. ‘ Neither do we believe religious communicants are hereby bereaved of any be‘ nefit in obeying the Church's order; ſince our belief inſtructs us, that our Bleſſed ‘ Lord is equally preſent in One kind, as in Both.’

Anſw. To ſay that Religious communicants are not bereaved of any benefit by receiving it in One kind, would imply, that Irreligious communicants, the receivers of both Kinds, have the advantage. If ſo, methinks it is natural to believe, That religious communicants, in both kinds, have the moſt benefit. But what church is it that gives thoſe orders? ‘ A Free General Council of Chriſtians, where men may ſpeak with‘ out being in danger of their lives?’ No, but a Cabal of perſons, picked, with a probatum eſt ſtamped upon them, out of the Pope's Cloſet, or Conclave of Cardinals, before they be admitted into the aſſembly of judges; as moſt of the Council of Trent notoriouſly were (often cited by the author of this pamphlet). So that in plain terms, ‘ The Church is what the Pope and his Cardinals will have it:’ To whoſe intereſt moſt Councils have ſacrificed their privileges, and thereby brought univerſal bondage upon whole kingdoms and ſtates.

That belief which inſtructs them, ‘ That Chriſt is equally preſent, and therefore no ‘ need of receiving in both kinds,’ muſt needs be built upon the ſandy foundation of Papal Tradition; not that of Scripture, Reaſon, or Antiquity. For if that very Specifical and Numerical Virtue which is in the Bread, be in the Wine, then Chriſt is implicitly charged, by the Romaniſts, of an unneceſſary matter. But if there be ſome virtue ſignified by the Wine, more than by the bread, ‘ It is horrid ſacrilege to rob the ſign, ‘ much more the thing ſignified. It is a ſupper; and at ſupper there ſhould be to drink, ‘ as well as to eat.’ There can be no body without blood; and the drinking of his ‘ blood, ſhews a ſhedding of his blood for the world and a participation of it.’

Beſides, the ſign is incompleat; and the end of that ſacrament or ſign not fully anſwered, but plainly maimed; and what God hath put together, they have put aſunder. So that the falſeneſs and unſcriptural practice of theſe men are very manifeſt.

The Senſe of Antiquity, and their own Authors.

Of their diſmembring this ſign or figure, their own Council of Conſtance is very plain, ‘ That whereas ſome preſume to affirm, that Chriſtian people ought to receive the ſa‘ crament of the Euchariſt under both kinds of Bread and Wine,’ &c.

(Hence the council decrees againſt this error): ‘ And that though Chriſt did ſo ad‘ miniſter it, and although in the primitive church it was received,’ (confeſſions very large of the author, and example) ‘ we command, under excommunication, that no ‘ prieſt communicate to the people under both kinds of bread and wine.’ C. C. Seſſ. 13. So ſays Aquin. Com. in 6 John, Lect. 7.

And ſaid Pope Geläſius, ‘ Let them receive in both kinds, or neither.’ Thus Popes againſt Councils, and Doctor againſt Doctor: Yet will the fooliſh Romaniſts (to ſay no more) vaunt of the Unity and Infallibility of both.

1670.

VI. Of the SACRIFICE of the ALTAR.

Papiſt. 'THE holy Sacrifice indeed of the Altar, we clearly believe ought to be 'celebrated in both kinds as now it is, according to the divine inſtitution, 'as being done in commemoration of the Lord's bleſſed Paſſion on the Croſs, wherein 'the Body and Blood were ſeparated.'

Anſw. Whether it be fair for the Papiſts to ſacrifice at the Altar in both kinds, and refer to Chriſt's words, Luke xxi. 9. as a divine inſtitution, and yet deny both kinds to the people, as no matter of faith, or of eminent regard; let the ſober judge. Is the paſſage of divine inſtitution for the Sacrifice, and not for the Sacrament? But it plainly manifeſts the exorbitant power they aſcribe to their church above the ſcriptures; ſince with them an order of her's may, and ought, to break what themſelves call a divine inſtitution.

Papiſt. 'Whatſoever, therefore, propitiatory power our holy religion attributes to this 'Commemorative ſacrifice; it is by virtue of the Sacrifice of the Croſs, as being by this 'applied to us: So that we ſtill humbly acknowledge the ground of our ſalvation to be 'derived from our Lord's bleſſed Paſſion.'

Anſw. Their affront to God, and juggle with men, in this very matter, are moſt deteſtable! For notwithſtanding the ſcriptures expreſly tell us, that we have an High Prieſt that "needs not ſacrifice once a year," but "who hath offered One ſacrifice; and that, "by the will of God we are ſanctified through the offering of the body of Jeſus Chriſt "ONCE for all; and that by ONE offering he perfected them that are ſanctified," Heb. x. 10, 11, 14; yet do they daily ſacrifice him afreſh, as if his firſt were inſufficient, or their daily ſins required a new one. But what man, endued with the leaſt ſhare of common ſenſe, can be ſo ſtupid as to imagine, 'that Chriſt is ſacrificed by every 'Popiſh Prieſt, when he offers up a bloodleſs fleſhleſs wafer? What greater irreverence can be ſhown to the bitter paſſion of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt? Making ſuch a may-game of his moſt dreadful agony and cruel death, as the Jews did with a crucified child!

This is ſo much worſe than the Aaronical prieſt-hood, as that was before Chriſt, and ſo typical of his coming, and of divine authority; and this after his coming: Whoſe own words and the apoſtle's (whom theſe men pretend to ſaint, and own) bear record, "That "ONCE for all, and by ONE offering of himſelf," &c. And conſequently void of all commiſſion, as well as precedent.

The cheat they put upon men is plainly this, That whilſt with fine words they ſeem originally to ground their ſalvation upon Chriſt's ſacrifice of the croſs, they craftily attribute to their daily ſacrifice of him, 'no ſmall ſhare of Merit, as ſo many mediate and 'ſecondary Cauſes;' which muſt needs be obvious to every unbiaſſed reader. Their curious Epithets ſeem only to ſerve the place of ſo many covers for the malignity of their Sophiſtical Doctrines.

VII. Of PRAYER in Latin.

Papiſt. 'WE freely acknowledge that it is no ways commanded by the Church, 'that the people ſhould pray in a language they underſtand not.'

Anſw. I perceive the man is ſtill upon his free acknowledgments. Certainly if what he ſo often confeſſes not to have been the practice of the Primitive Church, and to be unwarrantable from her example, were but abſtracted, there would remain a very abrupt and narrow faith for the Romaniſts to explain.

But he is too equivocal upon the word church. If by it he would have us underſtand, the ancient Chriſtian church, it is true, that no prayers were made in an unknown tongue; for the ſcriptures, of divine authority with her, expreſly condemn it, as irregular, and unprofitable.

"Let ſuch keep ſilent," ſaid the apoſtle Paul, 1 Cor. xiv. 28. and Peter never contradicted him. But if by the church, he underſtands the Roman, he is either careleſs of his own reputation (that whilſt he makes the Moral Law the ninth head of his confeſſion, commits ſo great an error aginſt it, as to obtrude a lie) or elſe he truſts to our ignorance of her preſent practice; for that ſhe is guilty in this particular, and the point defended too, I recommend the reader to the following authorities.

Papiſt. 'Nay there is given them all poſſible encouragement to increaſe their devotions, 'by ordaining and publiſhing moſt excellent prayers in vulgar languages for their uſe. 'There is an expreſs command of our Holy Mother the Church, in the Council of 'Trent, that paſtors, in the time of divine ſervice, ſhould expound to the people's 'capacities,' &c.

Anſw. I ſhall return my anſwer, in theſe four particulars.

Firſt, That all poſſible encouragement is not given where more may: But that more may, view SPAIN, FRANCE, and ITALY, where Prayers are in Latin, unknown to many Millions of Souls. And let us remark it, for a more infallible truth than any the Pope's Chair can afford us, That the great depth of the policy and ſecurity of that religion, lies in the Ignorance and Stupidity of the people.

Secondly, No thanks to the Romaniſts, that the people have any where ſo much privilege, at any time to underſtand what they ſay: For this is only owing to the light of Reformation; for that having given a diſcovery of the groſs darkneſs of Popiſh practices, they were neceſſitated to move ſomewhat from their ancient cuſtoms; which is no better than a lame excuſe made by a thief caught in the fact. Had there been no Luther in Germany, nor Zwinglius in Switzerland, we could not expect, nor ever believe, that the Council of Trent would have allowed of that liberty; when to cloud the people, and to lock up their Underſtandings in the Pope's Arcanum, is the Dianian project of his Conclave.

Thirdly, It is worth our obſervation, that thoſe very books of devotion are never doctrinal, I mean explanatory of their Principles (thoſe they hide); but filled with elegant phraſes, and rare cuts of imagery, ſuited to the affectionate paſſions, and voluntary humilities, of a ſort of people, whoſe Judgment goes always in the rear of their Affections, and that make their religion of ſhews and compliments.

Fourthly, But I deny that they have the nature of prayer in them; and therefore the people are almoſt as much to ſeek in their own language, as a ſtrange one. "Prayer is "the gift of God:" No man can be ſaid to pray, who has not, firſt, A deep ſenſe of his own wants: Second, Of the reaſonableneſs of the thing prayed for: Third, Enough of faith to obtain: Fourth, A due reverence of that God to whom he makes his ſupplication; "For the prayers of the wicked are an abomination to the Lord," ſays the Divine Writ (or are no prayers at all, in a religious ſenſe). But if theſe books of devotion were prayers, then might the wicked as well pray as the righteous; for the prayer is equally expoſed to the uſe of both. It is not Words that make the prayer; wherefore ſaid the apoſtle, "I will pray with the Spirit," (there is the moſt eſſential part of prayer; but this he might do with none but himſelf;) "and I will pray with Underſtanding al-"ſo" (by this he meant, not in an Unknown tongue): It was the ſubject of his diſcourſe in his fourteenth chapter in his firſt epiſtle to the Corinthians. But the church of Rome has otherwiſe learnt, than had that good apoſtle.

In ſhort, We need the leſs wonder at the unparallelled villainy which reigns throughout the Papacy, when we conſider how cardinal a practice it is, for the people not to underſtand how to be better. Their late proſelytes forgot, or elſe never heard, how criminal it was to have an Engliſh Teſtament about One hundred and fifty years ſince. But rather than not, the Papiſts will turn Half-Proteſtants, to fetch back Proteſtants to be whole Papiſts again. But ſuch might deſerve to be begged, had they but as much of Religion as ſometimes fools uſe to have of Eſtate. What ſhall I ſay? They are fit to believe any thing, whoſe debaucheries have hardened them againſt any belief: When ſin has baniſhed all fear of God, intereſt ſteps in its place; and that religion which moſt promotes it, muſt with ſuch be the beſt; wherein the Papiſt has only the advantage of all others upon earth.

The Report of Antiquity, and their own Practice.

However in Proteſtant countries they are willing to bring their devotion into vulgar languages; yet that it is matter of neceſſity, and not of choice, view Italy, France, Spain, &c. where they retain their Latin Service, as beneficial to the people; which is a language that generally they underſtand not.

Origen was againſt it, lib. 8. cont. Celſ. So Chryſoſt. Hom. 1. in 8 Johan. Auguſt de doct. Chriſti, cap. 5. Ambroſe upon 1 Cor. xiv. Thus alſo their own doctors; Aquin. in 1 Cor. xiv. Caſſander, Liturg. cap. 18. So that they err from Scripture, Fathers, and their own Doctors.

VIII. Of PRAYER for the DEAD.

Papiſt. 'OUR Faith teaches us to exerciſe Chriſtian charity, by humbling ourſelves 'before the Divine Throne of God's mercy, to beg forgiveneſs of the 'debts and treſpaſſes of thoſe middle ſort of Chriſtians (as St. Auſtin and the Council of 'Florence call them) who had not brought forth ſufficient fruits of repentance, dying 'in the communion of the faithful: Which indigent condition of theirs, relievable by 'the churches, or the prayers of the faithful ſurviving, ſpeaks what the ancients call 'Purgatory.'

1670. Anſw. How much the Romiſh faith teaches the holders of it to exerciſe Chriſtian charity, the MARTYROLOGIES of theſe thouſand years may teſtify. But they would have you know, they do not intend ſuch perſons as were active in thoſe bloody maſſacres: for the ſingle merit of their horrid murders is ſupererogatory, or more than ſufficient to deliver them from the fiery furnace of a cleanſing purgatory. They took a ſhorter cut to heaven; for inſtead of travelling the main continent, they (blown with the freſh gale of their own cruelty) ſailed through the main ſea of Proteſtant Blood.

But what authorities have theſe men for their aſſertion? Firſt, St. Auſtin; and ſecondly, the council of Florence. To theſe I will ſpeak in the cloſe of this head. Are theſe all? No, for ſays he,

Papiſt. 'We are warranted herein by the practice under the Law, recorded in the 'Maccabees; which being in no ſort reprehended by our Lord, or his apoſtles, amongſt 'the reſt of the Jews unlawful practices, was and is juſtly preſumed to have been allowed by him, as many of the Fathers underſtood him, in the Mount; and by them, as 'is hinted by St. Paul: Whereupon it hath been continued ever ſince, as even Graveſtones, and all other Chriſtian monuments, do witneſs.'

Anſw. I muſt confeſs I do not wonder that ſo little Reaſon ſhould induce a Romaniſt to believe; than which, nothing ſcares him more. But I cannot otherwiſe than admire, that any Proteſtant ſhould make ſuch poor inſtances a ground of his return to Popery.

Firſt, His ſtory of the Maccabees is not cited; nor does he very plainly refer us.

Secondly, He knows the Proteſtants deny it the credit due to other Scriptures; and the Papiſts cannot but be conſcious to themſelves of inſufficiency to prove its Canon.

Thirdly, It is prepoſterouſly ſilly to ſay, that becauſe Chriſt did not particularly condemn 'the practice of praying for the dead,' (ſuggeſted to have been uſed by the Maccabees) therefore it was a laudable cuſtom: Since I may with equal reaſon argue, that becauſe Chriſt never mentioned the Maccabees, nor did particularly own the canon of their writings, 'therefore there was no ſuch people; and their writings (if any) of no authority.'

Fourthly, The Fathers ſenſe (if theirs) of theſe ſcriptures, Mat. v. 29. 1 Cor. xv. 29. muſt needs be Non-ſenſe in the abſtract, with all but Papiſts, who notoriouſly deny themſelves the uſe of Senſe: Altho' I am of opinion, the Fathers are much abuſed by the author of this confeſſion, or elſe we ſhould have had their names in Capitals. However, we will compare theſe paſſages with this opinion.

Firſt, "If thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out, and caſt it from thee; for it is "profitable for thee, that one of thy members ſhould periſh, and not that thy whole "body ſhould be caſt into hell fire." Mat. v. 29. Ergo what? That there is a purgatory after this life,' ſays the Romaniſt. O! ſtupendous folly and weakneſs! Is there any thing plainer, than that Chriſt preached a preſent practical doctrine? as that which ſtood every man upon in this world; viz. The denial of his luſts, and circumciſion of his corruptions. In ſhort, ſince Chriſt was in the world when he ſpake it; ſince it was to people in the world, and a work then to be ſet about; it is moſt evident the paſſage has no relation to a ſtate after this life (I mean for Purgation). Nay, the ſtrongeſt argument that is well conceiveable for the contrary, may eaſily be deduced from hence: For if ſuch as pluck not out their right eyes here, (that is, purge not themſelves of their iniquities, by unfeigned repentance) ſhall be caſt into hell fire; then there is no middle ſtate called Purgatory. But that ſuch perſons as pluck not out their right eyes (that is, mortify not their members of corruption) here, are to be caſt into hell fire, the text proves: Therefore there is no middle ſtate. The contrary, of Heaven, may be affirmed; for contrariorum eadem eſt ratio.

Secondly, "Elſe, what ſhall they do that are baptized for the dead? If the dead riſe "not at all; why are they then baptized for the dead?" 1 Cor. xv. 29.

This ſcripture is as much to his purpoſe as the former; and were I not uſed ſo frequently to meet with the like incoherences, it would amaze me to read ſuch disjoined matter, and unnatural conſequences; things in their own nature ſo remote and oppoſite. What relation has the reſurrection to the ſoul's entering purgatory, or that popiſh middle ſtate? Who are they that are baptized? And who thoſe for whom they were baptized? And how have either any relation to prayers for the dead, and ſouls in purgatory? But the Romaniſt thinks, however, that God is not offended at this charitable practice: Hear what he ſays.

Papiſt. 'Neither can we diſcern how poſſibly this may be conceived offenſive to God; 'whoſe juſtice herein, we hope, we do humbly appeaſe, by an exerciſe of brotherly 'compaſſion.'

Anſw. It is no wonder at all that blind men do not ſee; and ſuch as error has hoodwinked for generations, we cannot think ſhould diſcern truth, till they dare truſt their eyes, ears, and underſtandings, to anſwer the end for which God gave them.

There can be nothing conceived more offenſive to God, as well as unreaſonable with men, than that a Mortal Creature (indebted himſelf more than ever he can diſcharge) ſhould be able to appeaſe the diſpleaſed juſtice of an infinite God! The arrogancy of this ſaying only fits the ſize and meaſure of a meritorious Papiſt. But the man, fearing this retort, would anticipate its force by an half confeſſion and ſolution thus:

Papiſt. 'There is no law of God which aſſures us, in rigour of juſtice, of God's acceptance of the acts of another man for my ſins: Yet this hinders not but that they may 'prevail, by way of ſuffrage and impetration, for our pardon.'

Anſw. If he could have given but one place of ſcripture, it would have helped the matter: but we take leave to ſay, we will not be wiſe (in this caſe) above what is written, and quod non lego, non credo. I ſhall return this ſhort anſwer to this evaſion. It is a poor ſhift from the force of the objection; for not only in the ſtricteſt, but largeſt ſenſe too, GOD ONLY, out of his free gift and mercy in Chriſt Jeſus, is Author of our Remiſſion and Forgiveneſs. Since there can ſcarcely be a more abſurd poſition, than that a man unable to relieve himſelf, ſhould be the occaſion of relief to others in the ſame condition, whether by appeaſing divine juſtice, or by ſuffrage only; a word incongruous, and inapplicable in this place.

Beſides, what Need is there for praying for ſouls in Purgatory? That they ſhould be ſaved? That is held for granted before they go thither. Is it that they ſhould be delivered thence? That is the Conſequence of the opinion. Or would they, that God ſhould forbear his hand, and mitigate his rigour? (Which ſeems the moſt natural conſequence of their opinion). If ſo, they are the greateſt enemies: For their holding that the end of the chaſtiſements of Purgatory is to prepare them for Heaven; by how much the leſs they are chaſtiſed by thoſe fiery afflictions, by ſo much the leſs they are purged, and conſequently the more unfit for heaven. So that ſince heaven is ſooneſt attainable, as their ſouls come to be the ſooneſt and moſt effectually purged, they in charity ought to pray, that God would mend his fire, add fuel to his flames, and double his fiery tortures, that they may be the ſooner purged and more refined for heaven.

Thus, while the Romaniſts are arguing for Purgatory, they confute themſelves by not underſtanding it.

I ſhall conclude my ſenſe of this point, with the authority of Scripture, Reaſon, and Antiquity.

Firſt, "Then ſhall the duſt return to the earth, as it was, and the ſpirit unto God "who gave it." Eccleſ. xii. 7. Gen. iii. 9. (then not to Purgatory.)

Secondly, "For there is no work nor device, nor knowledge, nor wiſdom in the "grave, whither thou goeſt." Eccleſ. ix. 10. (then none in Purgatory.)

Thirdly, "And they ſtoned Stephen, calling upon God, and ſaying, Lord Jeſus re- "ceive my ſpirit." Acts vii. 59. (no Purgatory ſtill, but a certain immutable ſtate.)

That it is againſt all Reaſon, I offer theſe conſiderations.

1ſt. No man can merit for another: Nor is it poſſible a poor indebted man ſhould pay another's debt (it may be greater than his own) and not be able to pay his own.

2d. The Repentance ought to be where the Sin is. But the Sin is here; therefore ſhould the Repentance be here alſo.

3d. Where there is a ceſſation from Sinning, there is a ceſſation from Repentance. But there is a ceſſation from ſinning; therefore is there a ceſſation from Repentance.

4th. Whatever attends the ſoul, after ſeparation from this mortal life, is Immortal and Eternal: This none can deny. But Purgatory is a ſtate that attends the ſoul after this mortal life; and therefore, ſay I, it is an Immortal and Eternal ſtate. And if it be, it is either for ſomething, or nothing. If for nothing, God makes things in vain: If for the ſouls of men and women; then they are never to be ranſomed thence. But ſince the Romaniſts hold a Redemption from thence, their confeſſion of the Temporarineſs of that ſtate proves it a mere fiction: For when the ſoul is withdrawn from this viſible mortal life, which ſtands in Time, it is centered in an inviſible and immortal ſtate, beyond the wings and reach of time.

In ſhort, this world is the ſtage on which all men do act for eternity; and every venture of theirs brings its true weight of eternal life or death. Death is the conſumation of all; and when we ceaſe to work, we enter upon reward. But if Purgatory were in being, the greateſt work were to be done there: Which, becauſe it is abſurd to affirm, we conclude that after death we ceaſe from all our labours, and enter upon our recompence of everlaſting happineſs or miſery.

I ſhall ſubjoin ſome authorities from antiquity.

The Senſe of Antiquity, and their own Authors.

The doctrine of Praying for the dead, we know, was too old a practice; yet not ſo old as the apoſtle. But how? As for ſouls in a third place (for that theſe Romaniſts mean by their Purgatory, however modeſt they ſeem by their half-expreſſions)? Nothing leſs! however the ſuperſtition of the Papiſts has driven them into ſo foul an apprehenſion:

1670. henſion: But the ancients, believing there would be a General Day of Judgment, prayed that God would ſhew Such mercy in that day. Gregory the firſt is ſaid to be its father. Certain we are, that Superſtition was both its mother and its nurſe: For that this fond purgatorian opinion is altogether new, read both their own authors and the Fathers. Polyd. cap. 1. De inven. rerum. Alphonſ. a Caſtro, lib. 8. verb. indul. lib. 12. lib. Purgat. So Sextus Senenſis, Medina, Caſſander, and Bellarmine himſelf.

That the Fathers diſowned it, in the ſenſe aſſerted by the Romaniſts, and particularly their great ſaint Auſtin, let them peruſe theſe places, Juſt. Martyr. reſp. ad queſt. 75. Cyprian. ad Demetrian. ſect. 16, 22. and in ſerm. de lapſis. Greg. Nazian. orat. 15. in plag. grandinis. Auguſt. Enchirid. cap. 68, 69. Again, de Dogmat. Eccleſ. 6. cap. 79. But, above all, that the Romaniſts ſhould pray for thoſe, to whom they pray to intercede for them, is moſt abſurd! yet this is frequent. But for this time enough.

IX. Of the Moral Law: Of Obedience to Civil Magistrates.

Papiſt. 'WE farther do firmly believe, and highly reverence the Moral Law, being ſo ſolemnly delivered to Moſes upon the Mount, ſo expreſly confirmed by our Saviour in the Goſpel, and containing in itſelf ſo perfect an abridgment of our whole duty both to God and man.'

Anſw. We may take his belief to be as hearty, as his confeſſions are ſincere. I know not what to ſay more truly, than that his whole diſcourſe is an Irony; we are to meaſure it by contraries, eſpecially when the fruits give the tree the lie.

How far the Roman Catholicks reverence the Moral Law, is beſt ſeen by conſidering how many laws they have made to deſtroy it.

1. That of images. For though God did expreſly injoin Moſes, 'That the Iſraelites ſhould not make to themſelves the likeneſs of any thing in heaven or in earth,' (whence the primitive Chriſtians abhorred Painture) or, when they had ſo done, that 'they ſhould not bow down unto it;' yet how many Edicts are there in being, that require them to be ſet up in their churches, as laymens calendars, to whom daily homage is performed? They are the ſplendid enſigns of the Popiſh Pageantry Religion.

2. In not only diſpenſing with Diſobedience in Children, but in exciting them to it, if they apprehend ſome ſervice to their church, be it to make a Frier, &c.

3. In thoſe frequent Bulls for Maſſacres, that can no more be denied than light at noon-day; by which people have been ſtirred up, upon the promiſe of forgiveneſs of ſins, redemption from purgatory, and eternal ſalvation, or dreadful denunciation of eternal damnation, to enterprize that work of murdering many hundred thouſands of men, women, and children, without any legal preſentment, trial or conviction. But the conſideration of theſe things is too much out of faſhion in England; ſince many embrace them upon their preſent diſguiſes, and not in their true ſanguinary appearances.

4. The breach of the Moral Law is ſignally manifeſt in their diſpenſations of public Stews, eſpecially at Rome; where the Pope's revenue is not a little greatened by thoſe ungodly licences. And it is too fatally known, that by ſuch immoral courſes, they have crept into the moſt cabinet counſels of princes; and not only rendered themſelves maſters of their ſecrets, but inſinuated their projects by the force of effeminate temptations; which, if denied, might eaſily be proved in the caſe of Henry the fourth of France, and others.

5. That religion hath proved the greateſt thief in nature: Its Popes Cardinals, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Deans, Chapters, and whole Orders of Friers, have near engroſſed the greateſt ſhare of the wealth of Europe, I mean of thoſe countries where yet they are regent. Before Conſtantine, how mean and meek were Chriſtian miniſters! But in his time, and a few ages after, to what a ſtrange degree of exorbitant pride and avarice did the clergy mount, when it could dare entitle Peter's Chair to the whole world! Kingdoms and empires muſt be given and taken with a "WE WILL, or WEGRANT," &c.--- View thoſe countries; and the univerſal Poverty of them impute to thoſe ſwarms of locuſts and caterpillars, who both corrupt and beggar them. This is a theft, though leſs ſharking, yet more criminal.

6. They notoriouſly break the Moral Law, in that great command, "Thou ſhalt not "bear falſe-witneſs againſt thy neighbour;" which comprehends all Truth-ſpeaking. For as no witneſs is bound to anſwer, farther than by interrogatories he is provoked; ſo is it utterly impoſſible that ever Truth ſhould be told, or men ſin in Lying (whilſt one of the greateſt ſins) if the Romiſh maxims were but once practiſed: Some of which I ſhall touch upon in the ſequel of this chapter.

As to that part of their confeſſion which may relate to their keeping of promiſe, and paying ſubjection to the civil magiſtrates of what religion ſoever, and much more to thoſe under whom they live; I purpoſely over-looked it, becauſe it is well known, that they have been ſo far from yielding obedience to the magiſtrates of any religion, that they have not ſtuck to aſſaſſinate thoſe of their own, to whoſe power they owed their civil and religious protection. And truly, if ſuch double cords of duty cannot tie the hands of men from murdering their natural and religious princes (as Henry the third and fourth of France, both kings of their country, and therein of their religion; becauſe a little refractory to the ſiniſter deſigns of an inſolent clergyman or two) I think it needleſs to give their plainer Engliſh of Obedience, who ſo excellently render it in the Paraphraſe of their Life.

I ſpeak not this to incenſe the powers againſt them: For it is my real belief, that neither are All of them ſuch, nor would I take the burden off my own ſhoulder, to lay it on theirs (being a profeſſed abettor of an Univeſal Toleration): But this being matter of Fact, as they cannot deny it, ſo ſhould I gladly hear of their confeſſion of theſe impieties; and that they diſown the like practices, not by fine gloſſes, but an amendment of life, and reformation of doctrine; which would really entitle them to that verity they do but hitherto fictitiouſly attribute to themſelves.

The Senſe and Opinion of their own Authors.

Firſt, Vaſquez teacheth, ‘That not only an Image of God, but any Creature in the ‘world, reaſonable or unreaſonable, may without danger be worſhipped with God, as ‘His Image. That we ought to adore the Relicks of Saints, tho' under the form of ‘Worms.’ De Adorat. lib. 3. diſp. 1. cap. 2.

Secondly, They teach, ‘That children may diſobey their parents, in being Nuns or ‘Friers: And this Girls may do at Twelve, and Boys at Fourteen years of age.’ But the Council of Trent enlarged the Parent's authority to Sixteen. This wretched doctrine was taught and decreed by Pope Clement the third. Tho. Aquin. and after him his ſcholars, taught the ſame. cap. cum virum de regular. Aquin. 2. 2. qu. 88. art. 9, lib. 1. cap. 101. alſo in caſe the parents were hereticks.

Thirdly, ‘If a nobleman be ſet upon (ſays cardinal Tollet) and may eſcape by going ‘away, he is not obliged to do it; but may kill him that intends to ſtrike him with a ‘ſtick.’ Inſtruct. Sacerd. lib. 5. cap. 6. num. 15.

Fourthly, ‘If a man be beaſtly drunk, and then commits fornication, it is no ſin. Lib. 14. cap. 13. n. 4. Alſo, ‘That a man may lie with women, to ſatisfy his carnal ‘deſire, or for his health-ſake.’ Lib. 5. cap. 10, 13. ‘A man may bed with his intended wife; nay, it is good to do ſo if the marriage be deferred;’ ſays Emanuel Sa. Aphor. tit. debitum conjugale 6.

Fifthly, They inſtruct how to be an honeſt thief. ‘It is lawful to deceive or rob a ‘brother, when to do ſo is neceſſary to preſerve a good name. For no man is bound ‘to reſtore ſtolen goods.’ Thus Navar. cardinal Cajetan, and Tolet; who farther add, ‘That this is a doctrine taught by many, and which may be followed with a ſafe conſcience,’ Tolet. Inſtruct. Sacerd. lib. 5. cap. 2. Manual. cap. 18. n. 7.

Sixthly, How juſt they may be to their promiſes, how ſubject to the ſupreme magiſtracy, and of how eminent ſervice to human ſocieties, may beſt appear out of theſe following maxims.

‘If a man ſwear he will take A. C. to wife, he may ſecretly mean, if hereafter ſhe ‘pleaſe me.’ Inſtruct. Sacerd. lib. 4. cap. 21, 22.

‘If a man ſwear he will give a thief twenty crowns, he may ſecretly ſay, if I pleaſe ‘to do it; and then he is not bound.’ Of this rare invention Vaſquez vaunts not a little, as being gathered out of Auguſt. and Aquin. In. 3. tom. 4. qu. 93. art. 5. dub. 13.

‘There are two diſtinct tribunals (ſays Becanus) and the Eccleſiaſtical is the Superior: ‘And therefore, if a ſecular prince gives his ſubjects a ſafe conduct, he cannot extend it to ‘the ſuperior Tribunal; nor, by any ſecurity given, hinder the Biſhop, or the Pope, to exerciſe their juriſdiction.’ Theol. Schola. That this is ſo, let us call to mind, that the Pope, and other of his eccleſiaſticks, did prevail at Conſtance, ‘for the burning of their ‘priſoners, J. Huſs, &c. to whom ſafe conduct was given.’

In ſhort, ‘If a man have taken an oath of a thing lawful and honeſt, and in his ‘power; yet, if it hinders him from doing a greater good, the Pope can diſpenſe with it.’ Thus Canus, biſhop of the Canaries, Relict. de pœnitent.

‘The Pope's denunciation againſt an excommunicated prince, diſengages his ſubjects ‘from their obedience.’ This was once our caſe, as in Henry the eighth's time, Concer. Eccl. in Angl. fol. 336.

Nay, ‘even before the ſentence be denounced, though the ſubjects are not bound to ‘it, yet lawfully they may deny obedience to an heretical prince.’ Thus Greg. de Valentia, tom. 3. diſp. 1. qu. 12. punct. 2.

To conclude, the ingenuity of Panormitan and Moſconius out-does all:

The firſt affirming, ‘That the Pope hath power to diſpenſe in all the Laws of God.’ Cap. propoſui de conceſſ. prebende, n. 20.

The ſecond, with as much zeal aſſerting, ‘That the Pope can diſpenſe above Law, ‘and againſt Law; for the Pope's Tribunal and God's is but One: And therefore every 'reaſonable creature is ſubject to the Pope's Empire;' as may be ſeen in his diſcourſe of the "Majeſty of the church militant," and in lib. 1. de ſummo Pontif.

X. Of Eccleſiaſtical Hierarchy.

Papiſt. 'WE firmly believe, that according to Divine Ordination in the Catholick 'Church, there is an Hierarchy, conſiſting of Biſhops, Prieſts, and Mi-'niſters. He gave ſome Apoſtles, and ſome Prophets, and others Evangeliſts, and 'others Paſtors and Doctors, to the conſummation of the ſaints, unto the work of the 'Miniſtry, unto the edifying of the Body of Chriſt, until we all meet in the unity of 'faith, and the knowledge of the Son of God, &c.'

It is a great truth, that Biſhops, Paſtors, Teachers, &c. were given by Chriſt Jeſus, for the work of the Miniſtry; but what then? Can Romaniſts make uſe of this to juſtify their moſt injurious and tyrannical Hierarchy? Do the Scriptures of Truth tell us, that ever God gave lordly, proud, and voluptuous Popes, Cardinals, Primates, Archbiſhops, Deans, Chapters, Friers, Nuns, &c. for the edifying of the Church, and Body of Chriſt? The primitive biſhops were to be "Blameleſs;" not living in all manner of Uncleanneſs: "Gentle, no ſtrikers, no brawlers, nor perſecutors of their brethren," as are the Popes of Rome: "Apt to teach;" not by roaring bulls to excommunicate: "To eat and drink ſuch things as were ſet before them;" not racking and grinding the faces of the poor, the widows, and the fatherleſs, and extorting their labours, to greaten their revenues, to live in idleneſs, pomp and luſt: "The huſband but of one wife;" not condemners of marrying of one honeſt woman, and diſpenſers with as many whores as luſt may require; cardinal and eminent points and practices amongſt the Romaniſts.

In ſhort, the Romiſh Hierarchy is ſo far from being ſuited within the order of the Goſpel, by them quoted in their Confeſſion; that the whole deſign of their lordly Popes, Cardinals, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Jeſuits, and other Friers of many ſorts, (eſteemed of the Religious Tribe) is but to over-ballance the Civil Power, and render themſelves maſters of the ſwords and purſes of Princes and Commonwealths, to maintain them in idleneſs, plenty, and pleaſure; and to blind the Underſtandings of them they abuſe, that they may abuſe them as the Philiſtines did Sampſon, when they had put out his Eyes, to anſwer their own wicked ends with the greater ſecurity.

To conclude, 'If we would not receive a Thief, until he has repented;' let the Papiſt firſt recant his voluminous errors; not known in Scripture, nor ever heard of for Three hundred years together after Chriſt.

But above all, 'let us have good teſtimony of his hearty ſorrow, for that Sea of Blood 'ſhed in England, France, Holland, Ireland, Spain, Italy, Savoy, Switzerland, and 'Germany, of many hundred thouſands of poor Proteſtants, that for pure conſcience 'could not conform to their moſt exorbitant practices, as well as new doctrines, impoſed 'upon them:' Such inhuman and barbarous inventions and cruelties, as no age could ever parallel; and are the only demonſtrations of their wicked wits, that lived in that; and that not only upon the parties themſelves, but their poor, little innocent babes: For that ENGLISH PROTESTANTS ſhould ſo far neglect theſe weighty conſiderations, as to be gulled and cheated out of the religion purchaſed them by their Martyred Anceſtors; and perſuaded to embrace that old, bloody, apoſtatized church again, with all her ſlaviſh, as well as ridiculous ſuperſtition, is a crime ſo offenſive to God, and intolerable to Men, as the time haſtens, 'That the very ſtones in the ſtreets will riſe up in judgment againſt 'them.'

Thus while ſome Proteſtants (and thoſe chiefly concerned in theſe affairs) are moſtly buſied in perſecuting Diſſenters; I hope it will not be ill reſented, that one of them has, in the mean time, undertook (though with much brevity) an Enervation of the Romaniſts Faith, at leaſt a detection of their Craft, their horrid Couſenage, and preſent way of Inſinuation amongſt the people.

But we muſt once more declare, it is not to our purpoſe to bring them under Perſecution; but to preſent the people with ſuch an information, as may prevent them from ever having power to perſecute others.

A Queſtionary POSTSCRIPT.

1670.

I Here ſubjoin theſe few following Queries; which if the Romaniſts will frankly anſwer, and with that grave ſincerity that becomes ſo weighty an affair; we may eaſily know whereabouts they are.

I. Whether we ought to believe and accept any principle, as fundamentally True and Orthodox, that is not laid down, and avouched to be ſuch, by evident Scripture, and the moſt pure and primitive Tradition?

If they ſay, we ought, let them tell us out of what Scripture we may read it: But if we ought not-----Then,

II. Whether the doctrine of Papal Infallibility; of Tranſubſtantiation; of the Sacrifice of the Maſs; of Images; of Auricular Confeſſions; of Indulgences; of Prayers for the Dead; of Purgatory; of Prayers in Latin; of their whole Eccleſiaſtical Government, and pretended Religious Orders; be allowed or recommended, as matter of Chriſtian Faith, and Diſcipline, by Scripture and Antiquity?

If they are not to be found there, why ſhould any be ſo abſurd as to receive them? If they are taken thence, let them aſſign us the places, both in Scripture and primitive Antiquity; for the firſt Three hundred years after Chriſt (and in ſome particulars much more) are wholly ſilent in the matter, any farther than to furniſh us with pregnant inſtances againſt thoſe idle dotages, and groſs ſuperſtitions. But,

III. Whether in caſe they could not be conformed to, they would allow a TOLERATION, were they powerful?

IV. Whether in caſe they ſhould ſay YES, we ought to believe them; Since it is one of their moſt ſacred Maxims, "Not to keep Faith with Hereticks;" as was ſeen in the caſe of thoſe of the Alpine Valleys, J. Huſs, &c. and in that they have in all ages brought ſo great a deluge of blood upon the European world.

V. Whether it be the intereſt of the Engliſh nation to ſubject herſelf to a yoke? Conſidering the incomparable bloody Maſſacres of that ſort of men in ſeveral reigns, with the ſpiritual Tyranny ſhe would bring upon herſelf, which muſt end in the draining of her people to enrich the Papacy, who make it a fundamental maxim, "That the Enriching of the Church, (or rather the Impoveriſhing of the People) "is the Securing of it:" For Seculars (the Laity) being impoveriſhed, as of old, the Church-Party will have the Treaſury, and conſequently the triumphing Power, in their hands; which brings to the ancient arrogancy of Popes, viz. "Setting their feet upon the necks of Princes."

VI. And laſtly, whether the deſign of Popery be not an utter deſtruction of all True and Solid Religion, and the introduction of Formality and Superſtition, to the inſecuring of Civil Authority, and putting the People's Judgment into the Prieſts Inquiſition? Since the moſt ignorant and careleſs, or the moſt vitious and prophane, are generally found to be their Proſelytes; their religion (by reaſon of its latitude in point of INDULGENCE) being an open ſanctuary for refuge to all looſe and debauched livers.

THE PROPOSED COMPREHENSION.
SOBERLY, and NOT UNSEASONABLY, CONSIDERED.

1672. ALthough the benefits wherewith Almighty God has univerſally bleſſed the whole creation, are a ſufficient check to the narrowneſs of their ſpirits, who would unreaſonably confine all comforts of life within the ſtrait compaſs of their own party (as if to recede from their apprehenſions, whereof themſelves deny any infallible aſſurance, were reaſon good enough to deprive other Diſſenters of Nature's Inheritance, and, which is more peculiar, England's Freedom's); yet ſince it fares ſo meanly with thoſe excellent examples, that many vainly think themſelves then beſt to anſwer the end of their being born into the world, when by a ſeverity, which leaſt of all reſembles the GOD of LOVE, they rigorouſly proſecute the extirpation of their brethren; let it not ſeem unreaſonable, or ill-timed, that we offer to your more ſerious thoughts the great Partiality and Injuſtice that ſeem to be the companions of a Comprehenſion, ſince you only can be concerned at this time to prevent it, by a more large and generous freedom.

Firſt, then, Liberty of Conſcience (by which we commonly underſtand the Free Exerciſe of any Diſſenting Perſuaſion) is but what has been generally pleaded for, even by the warmeſt ſticklers for a Comprehenſion, and without which it would be utterly impoſſible they ſhould be comprehended. The queſtion then will be this, ‘What ground can there be, why Some, and not All, ſhould be tolerated?’ It muſt either reſpect Conſcience or Government: If it be upon matter of mere Religion, what reaſon is there that one party ſhould be tolerated, and another reſtrained; ſince all thoſe reaſons, that may be urged by that party which is comprehended, are every whit as proper to the party excluded? For if the former ſay, ‘They are Orthodox;’ ſo ſay the latter too. If the one urge, ‘It is impoſſible they ſhould believe without a Conviction; that the Underſtanding cannot be forced; that Mildneſs gains moſt; that the True Religion never perſecuted; that Severity is moſt unworthy of her; that Sound Reaſon is the only weapon which can diſarm the Underſtanding; that Coercion doth rather obdurate than ſoften; and that they therefore chuſe to be ſincere Diſſenters, rather than hypocritical Conformiſts;’ the other party ſays the ſame. In fine, There can be nothing ſaid for Liberty of Conſcience, upon pure conſcientious grounds, by any one party in England, that every one may not be intereſted in; unleſs any will undertake to judge that of Five ſorts of Diſſenters, Two are really ſuch on Conviction, and Three upon mere Deſign. But if ſuch ſentence would be looked upon as moſt arrogant and unjuſt, how can it be reaſonable, that thoſe whom ſome endeavour to exclude ſhould be thus prejudged; and ſuch as are comprehended, be therefore ſo only from a ſtrong opinion of their reality? We may conclude then, that ſince Liberty of Conſcience is what in itſelf Comprehenders plead, and that it is evident, to affirm this, or that, or the other party Orthodox, is but a mere begging of the queſtion, what may be urged for one is forceable for any other; Conſcience (not moveable but upon conviction) being what all pretend themſelves alike concerned in.

But they ſay, ‘That ſuch as are like to be comprehended, are perſons not eſſentially differing; that it were pity to exclude them whoſe difference is rather in minute matters, than any thing ſubſtantial; whereas you err in Fundamentals.’ But how paradoxical ſoever ſuch may pleaſe to think it, that we ſhould therefore plead the juſtice of taking thoſe in, ſome unkindly would have left out, we know not; however, we believe it moſt reaſonable to do ſo: For certainly the Reaſon for Liberty or Toleration ſhould hold proportion with the weighty Cauſe of Diſſent, and the ſtreſs Conſcience puts upon it. Where matters are trivial, they are more blameable that make them a ground for Diſſent, than thoſe who perhaps (were that all the difference) would never eſteem them worth contending for; much leſs that they ſhould rend from that church they otherwiſe confeſs to be a True one. So that whoever are condemnable, certainly thoſe who have been authors and promoters of ſeparation upon mere toys and niceties, are not moſt of all others to be juſtified. Had they conſcientiouſly offered ſome Fundamental Diſcontent, and pleaded the impoſſibility of reconciling ſome doctrines with their Reaſon or Conſcience, yet promiſing quiet living, and all due ſubjection to Government, they might have been thus far more excuſable, that people would have had reaſon to have ſaid, Certainly ſmall matters could not have induced theſe men to this diſgraceful ſeparation, nor any thing of this life have tempted them to this ſo great and troubleſome alteration: 'But to take pet at a Ceremony, then rend from the Church, ſet up a new 'Name and Model, gather People, raiſe animoſity, and only make fit for Blows,' by a furious zeal kindled in their heads againſt a few Ineptiæ, mere trifles; and, being utterly vanquiſhed from theſe proceedings, to become moſt earneſt ſolicitors for a Comprehenſion; though at the ſame time of hot purſuit after this privilege, to ſeek nothing more than to prevent others of enjoying the ſame favour, under the pretence of more Fundamental Difference; certainly this ſhews, that had ſuch perſons power, they would as well diſallow of a Comprehenſion to thoſe who are the aſſertors of thoſe ceremonies they recede from, as that for mere ceremonies they did at firſt zealouſly diſſent, and ever ſince remain more unjuſtifiably fierce for ſuch Separation. And truly, if there were no more in it than this, it would be enough for us to ſay, That ſome in England never rent themſelves from the Church at all, much leſs for little matters: that they never endeavoured her Exile, but ſhe found them upon her return, which they oppoſed not; nor yet ſince have any ways ſought to inſtall themſelves in her dignities, or enrich themſelves by her preferments. We appeal then to all ſober men, if what is generally called the Epiſcopal party of England, can with good conſcience and true honour, diſinherit thoſe of their native rights, peace and protection, and leave them as orphans to the wide world, indeed a naked prey to the devourer, who from firſt to laſt have never been concerned, either to endeavour their ruin, or any ways withſtand their return; whilſt it may be ſome of thoſe, who have been the moſt vigorous in both, and that for circumſtantial, and not eſſential differences, may be reputed more deſerving of a Comprehenſion, than we are of a Toleration.

But it will be yet ſaid, 'You are inconſiſtent with Government; They are not: 'Therefore you are excluded, not out of partiality, but neceſſity.' What Government beſides their own they are conſiſtent with, we leave on the ſide of ſtory to tell, which can better ſpeak their mind than we are either able or willing to do. But this give us leave to ſay in general, if any apprehend us to be ſuch as merit not the care of our ſuperiors, becauſe ſuppoſed to be deſtructive of the Government, let us be called forth by name, and hear our charge; and if we are not able to anſwer the Unbyaſſed Reaſon of mankind, in reference to our conſiſtency with the Peace, Quiet, Trade, and Tribute of theſe Kingdoms, then, and not before, deny us all protection. But that men ſhould be concluded before heard, and ſo ſentenced for what they really are not, is like beheading them before they are born. We do aver, and can make it appear, that there is no one party more quiet, ſubject, induſtrious, and, in the bottom of their very ſouls, greater lovers of the good Old Engliſh Government and Proſperity of theſe Kingdoms among the Comprehended, than, for aught we yet ſee, may be found among thoſe who are like to be unkindly excluded. However, if ſuch we were in any one point, Cure rather than Kill us; and ſeek the publick good ſome cheaper way than by our Deſtruction. Is there no expedient to prevent ruin? Let REASON qualify Zeal, and CONSCIENCE Opinion.

To conclude, If the publick may be ſecured, and conſcience freely exerciſed by All, for the ſame reaſons it may by Some. And ſince Liberty of Conſcience is Liberty of Conſcience, and the Reaſons for it equivalent, we ſee not in the whole world why any ſhould be deprived of That, which others for no better reaſons are like to enjoy.

Let it not then be unworthy of ſuch to remember, that God affords his refreſhing "Sun to All;" the dunghill is no more excepted than the moſt delightful plain; and his "Rain falls alike both upon the Juſt and Unjuſt:" He ſtrips not mankind of what ſuits their creaturely preſervation: Chriſtians themſelves have no more peculiar privilege in the natural benefits of heaven, than Turks or Indians. Would it not then be ſtrange, that Infidels themſelves, much leſs any ſort of Chriſtians, ſhould be deprived of natural privileges for mere Opinion, by thoſe who pretend to be the Beſt Servants of that GOD, who ſhews them quite another example, by the Univerſality of his Goodneſs as Creator; and Believers in that CHRIST, who himſelf preached the Perfection of Love, both to Friends and Enemies, and laid down his life to confirm it when he had done. If men ſhould love their Enemies, doubtleſs they ought at leaſt to forbear their Friends: And though ſome differences 1672. rences in judgment about Religion be a ſufficient Reaſon to excommunicate a man the Air Eccleſiaſtical, yet nothing certainly of that ſort ought to diſprivilege men of their Air Natural and Civil to breathe freely in: And let that Good our ſuperiors have obſerved to be the Fruit of our Toleration, not be weakened or blaſted by an untimely Comprehenſion of ſome, to the Excluſion of the reſt; ſince the Reaſon holds the ſame for the leſs formidable Separatiſts, that may not be however any whit leſs conſcientious.

We will omit to mention, how much more ſuitable it were to State-matters, that all parties ſhould be kept upon an equal poize; a thing moſt true in itſelf, and moſt ſecure to the Publick Magiſtrate; and will conclude at this time, That though we no ways deſign a Miſ-repreſenting of any, much leſs their Exception, and leaſt of all their Perſecution; yet a Comprehenſion, either reſpecting the Perſons and their Qualifications, or their Separation, and the grounds and reaſons of it, we ſeriouſly believe, can never be conſiſtent with that Conſcience, Honour, Wiſdom, and Safety, that ought to be the mark thoſe who are concerned in it ſhould take their aim by. But if a Comprehenſion ſhould at laſt be compaſſed, it is not doubted by many wiſe men, but it will be found as impracticable as other Acts more ſeemingly ſevere have been, and at laſt will neceſſitate to that well-ordered Univerſal Toleration of all, who both profeſs and practice Peace, Obedience, Induſtry, and Good Life; which will beſt pleaſe Almighty God, and rejoice the hearts of all good men.

From Real Friends,

To KING and COUNTRY.

THE

THE

CHRISTIAN-QUAKER,

AND HIS

DIVINE TESTIMONY

STATED and VINDICATED,

FROM

SCRIPTURE, REASON, and AUTHORITY.

By WILLIAM PENN.

Veritas fatigari poteſt, vinci non poteſt. Ether. & Beat. lib. I.

THE

PREFACE.

To the NOBLE BEREANS of this AGE.

1673. WHEN our Dear Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the bleſſed Author of the Chriſtian Religion, firſt ſent forth his diſciples, to proclaim the happy approach of the heavenly kingdom, among ſeveral other things that he gave them in charge, it pleaſed him to make this one of their inſtructions; “Into whatſoever city or town ye ſhall enter, enquire who in it is worthy;” fore-ſeeing the ill uſe unworthy perſons would make of that meſſage, and with what unwearineſs the implacable Phariſee and ſubtil Scribe would endeavour to pervert the right way of the Lord, and thereby prejudice the ſimple againſt the reception of that excellent teſtimony.

This being the caſe of the people called Quakers, who above every tribe men are moſt maliciouſly repreſented, bitterly envied, and furiouſly oppugned by many of the Scribes and Phariſees of our time, for as impious wretches as thoſe of that reputed our bleſſed Saviour and his conſtant followers; it becometh us, in a condition ſo deſperate, to provide ourſelves with ſome worthy readers, men that dare truſt their Reaſon above Reports, and be impartial in an age as biaſſed as this we live in; whoſe determinations ſhall not wait upon the ſentence of ignorance nor intereſt, but a ſincere and punctual examination of the matter.

And ſince there are none recorded in Sacred Writ, on whom the Holy Ghoſt conferred ſo honourable a character, but the Bereans of that age (for that they both ſearched after Truth impartially, and when they found it, embraced it readily, for which they were entituled Noble); therefore it is that to you, the off-ſpring of that worthy ſtock, and Noble Bereans of our age, I, in behalf of the ſo much calumniated abettors of the cauſe of Truth, choſe to dedicate this defence of our holy profeſſion from the injurious practices of a ſort of men, who, not unlike to the Jews of Theſſalonica, that, envying the proſperity of the goſpel among your anceſtors, made it their buſineſs to ſtir up the multitude againſt the zealous promoters of it. And no matter what it be, provided they can but obtain their end of fixing an odium upon the Quakers: They do not only boldly condemn what they eſteem Worſt in us (how deſervedly we will not now ſay) but ſlily inſinuate what is Beſt to be criminal.

The Sobriety of our Lives, they call a Cheat for Cuſtom; and our Inceſſant Preachings and Holy Living, a Decoy to advance our Party: If we ſay Nothing to them when they interrogate us, it is Sullenneſs or Inability; if we ſay Something to them, it is Impertinency, or Equivocation. We muſt not believe as we do believe, but as they would have us believe, which they are ſure to make obnoxious enough, that they may the more ſecurely inveigh againſt us. Nor muſt our writings mean what we ſay we mean by them, but what they will have them to mean, leſt they ſhould want proofs for their charges. It was our very caſe that put David upon that complaint, “Every day they wreſt my words: All their thoughts are againſt me for evil.” But to David's God we commit our ſlandered cauſe, and to you the Bereans of our age.

Degenerate not from the example of your Progenitors; if you do, you are no longer True Bereans, and to ſuch we inſcribe this work: If you do not, we may aſſure ourſelves of the juſtice of a fair enquiry and an equal judgment.

The God and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt augment your Deſire after Truth, give you clearer Diſcerning of the Truth, and enable you both more readily to receive, and with greater reſolution to maintain the Truth. I am

A Chriſtian Quaker, and

Your Chriſtian Friend,

WILLIAM PENN.

THE

THE CHRISTIAN-QUAKER, &c.

CHAP. I.

The Introduction. Three queſtions propoſed, ſtating the matter to be treated upon. Firſt, What is Salvation? Anſ. To be ſaved from Sin, as well as from Wrath; and not from Wrath without Sin.

1673.
Chap. I.

BEING to write of the Light of Chriſt within, the great principle of God in man, the Root and Spring of Divine Life and knowledge in the Soul; that by which Salvation is effected for man, and which is the characteriſtic of the people called Quakers, their faith and teſtimony to the world; I chuſe to conſider it under theſe three following queſtions, as ſtated by none of the meaneſt of our adverſaries, being comprehenſive of the principle, its force, and friends; wherein I endeavour to ſolve thoſe objections, as they naturally ariſe, which either have been, or may be, advanced againſt what is aſſerted by us, in favour of this Divine Principle, and its effects upon mankind: Which I recommend to my readers ſerious conſideration; deſiring that patience and impartiality may keep them company in the peruſal thereof; it being writ for their advantage, as well as our vindication, that they may have a nearer and clearer proſpect of that way the bleſſed ever trod to glory.

1. What is that Salvation, which the Light leads to?
2. What is this Light, and how does this Light lead to it? And,
3. Who this He or They are, that obey this Light; and, in obeying attain Salvation?

I. By Salvation, we underſtand, as by Scripture is delivered to us, ‘Man's being ſaved from ſin here, and the wages of it,’ which is wrath to come. Whereby we are taught, utterly to renounce and reject the common acceptation of it, as the full and complete force of the word, viz. barely to be ſaved from puniſhment hereafter: In which ſecurity, through a vain expectation of Salvation, whilſt not really and actually ſaved from the power of ſin, through the inviſible power of Chriſt, thouſands die. In ſhort, We call Salvation, ‘Chriſt's making an end of ſin; deſtroying the works of the Devil; finiſhing of tranſgreſſion; binding the ſtrong man, and ſpoiling of his goods in the hearts and conſciences of men and women; and bringing in his everlaſting righteouſneſs into the Soul, whereby to cleanſe, waſh, regenerate, renew and refreſh the Soul;’ in one ſcripture-phraſe, ‘to ſave his people from their ſins.’

Theſe are the times of refreſhment, and this is the day of reſtitution; and thus is He King, to reign; Prophet, to give viſion; and High Prieſt, to anoint with the holy unction, that leadeth his people into all truth, whoſe lips alone preſerve knowledge; and therefore is it the unchangeable Goſpel-rule to believers: And thoſe who are thus freed, or ſaved here, from the power, nature, and defilement of ſin, are the alone perſons that are or ſhall be hereafter ſaved from eternal wrath and vengeance; the heavy recompence of ſin. All this we underſtand by that word Salvation; and in this center the Great and Glorious Prophecies and Performances of Chriſt.

CHAP. II.

The ſecond queſtion ſtated: Particularly what is meant by Light. It is a principle that diſcovers the ſtate of man, and leads to bleſſedneſs.

Chap. II.

THE ſecond queſtion runs thus: What is that Light which leadeth to Salvation, and, how doth it lead to Salvation?

By Light, I underſtand not the metaphorical uſe of the word; as when Chriſt ſaid to his 1673. Chap. II. diſciples' 'Ye are the Lights of the world;' or, as the apoſtle ſpeaks, 'Now are ye Light in the Lord;' nor yet the mere Spirit or Reaſon of man; but Chriſt, that glorious Sun of righteouſneſs, and heavenly Luminary of the intellectual or inviſible world; repreſented, of all outward reſemblances, moſt exactly by the great Sun of this ſenſible and viſible world: That as this natural Light ariſeth upon all, and gives light to all, about the affairs of this life; ſo that Divine Light ariſeth upon all, and gives light to all that will receive the manifeſtations of it, about the concerns of the other life. Such a Light I mean by 'that Light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world,' and that leadeth thoſe that obey it to eternal Salvation.

The ſcripture ſays no leſs, John i. 4, 9. 'In the Word of God, was Life, and that (very) Life was the Light of men, that enlighteneth every man that cometh into the world.'

But to demonſtrate it the moſt obviouſly that I can, to the loweſt capacities, I ſhall evidence the nature and virtue of this principle, Light, by the holy effects of it, which is the how, or the which way, it leadeth to Salvation. This is ſo neceſſary in order to explicate the other, that as the tree is known by its fruits, ſo is the true Saviour by his Salvation. If then I can make it appear, that the Light, as obeyed in all its diſcoveries and requirings, is ſufficient to Salvation; all muſt yield to the efficacy of the Light within.

I ſhall then, by the properties of this Light, prove it ſaving: In order to which, I ſhall begin with the firſt ſtep towards Salvation, viz. a ſight of the cauſe of damnation; and that this is given us by the Light within, the ſcripture is very plain, which is the great record of ſaving truth, and of that bleſſed teſtimony Chriſt has left to his flock.

CHAP. III.

That the Light within manifeſts Sin; yea, all Sin. That apoſtacy, or ſin in any, is no argument againſt the Light. That the ſervices of the Jews ſhew no imperfection in the Light, but in the people, whoſe minds were abroad. If inſufficiency againſt the Light ſhould be admitted, becauſe of the wickedneſs of men; the ſame may be objected againſt the ſcriptures; which overthrows our adverſary's aſſertion concerning their ſufficiency.

Chap. III. THE Light, with which Chriſt lighteth all men, manifeſts ſin, as theſe words import; 'For every one that doth evil, hateth the Light, neither cometh to the John iii. 20. Light, leſt his deeds ſhould be reproved:' Implying, that if they would have brought their deeds to the Light, the Light would have detected them, and tried them; which makes the Light the touchſtone, rule and judge of converſation and practice. To which Eph. v. 13. the apoſtle Paul bears expreſs teſtimony, in his epiſtle to the Epheſians, 'that whatſoever is reproved, is made manifeſt by the Light; for whatſoever makes manifeſt, is Light:' Where the univerſality of the apoſtle's aſſertion ſhews, that nothing that is reproved, as all ſin is, is or can be excluded from the ſearch or knowledge of this Light: Which takes in as well thoughts, as words and deeds. So that nothing being reproved, which the Light doth not firſt manifeſt, how obvious is it to every underſtanding, that the Light muſt needs have been, and be in all men, in order to ſuch manifeſtation and conviction, or man could not have known ſin.

It is as much as if the apoſtle had ſaid, '* Sin is that which damns all men; now it could not damn, if it were not reproveable; and it could never be reproveable, if the Light did not manifeſt and condemn it as ſuch.' So that our adverſaries affirming the Light not to be ſufficient to diſcern all ſin, is a flat repugnancy, and a downright giving of the lie to the apoſtle. For, ſays the apoſtle, 'all things that are reproved, are made manifeſt by the Light.' But, ſay they, all things that are reproved, are not made manifeſt by the Light. Sober reader, dwell here a while, and after a little pauſe tell me, who deals moſt unworthily with the apoſtle, and the holy ſcriptures of truth, they or the Quakers?

* That is the cauſe.

Obj. But it is objected, If there be that Light in all men, how comes it, that all men are not convicted of their diſobedience and duty, as the Heathens of old, and many Infidels at this day? Did the Light in Saul reprove him for perſecuting the church?

I anſwer, That this objection does no way impugn or leſſen the efficacy of the Light, although it greatly aggravates their evil that ſo rebelled againſt it. But that there were Heathens, who became a law unto themſelves, through the degree of Light they had, by which they did the things contained in the law, and were preferred far before the circumciſion that kept not the law; the apoſtle Paul himſelf is very expreſs in that known paſſage to the Romans, ch. ii. Nor are other hiſtories ſilent, but loud in their acknowledgment of very divine attainments, which, by this Light, ſeveral famous Gentiles arrived at; who, for their belief of One Eternal Being, his communication of Divine Light to men, the neceſſity of holy living, and of an immortality, with their ſtrict manners, are left with honour upon record by credible writers, and their praiſes not a little augmented by after-ages, even of thoſe called Chriſtians too. Such were, Pythagoras, Timæus, Solon, Bias, Chilon, Anaxagoras, Socrates, Plato, Plotin, Antiſthenes, Xenocrates, Zeno, Antipater, Seneca, Epictetus, Plutarch, Marcus Aurelius Antoninus, and others.

But what if Jews and Gentiles at any time did apoſtatize; and, particularly, what if Saul perſecuted the Church of God, putting diſobedience for duty, murder for ſervice, will it follow, that the Light was inſufficient? By no means, but rather that Saul was rebellious, ſtiff-necked, reſiſting the Holy Ghoſt; as did his fathers, ſo did he: And thus much the words themſelves ſhew; for it is ſaid by the text, 'he kickt againſt 'the pricks.' Then it ſeems there were pricks: And where were they, if not in his conſcience? And what were they, if not the convictions of the Light of Chriſt within him, which manifeſts evil, and reproves the deeds thereof? Otherwiſe called the Son of God, which to the Galatians, he ſaid, 'it had pleaſed God to reveal to him:' Gal. i. 16. Though Paul knew him not, nor his voice of a long time, his eye being darkened, and ear ſtopped by the god of this world, who had crept into the outward forms of religion, then, as now, and therein employed many emiſſaries to decry that pure, heavenly and inviſible life of truth and righteouſneſs, which was then, and is now begotten in the hearts of many, not only to confound the idolatries of the Gentiles, but to end the formality and outward ſervices of both Jews and carnal Chriſtians.

And I affirm on God's behalf, and with the reaſon of a man, that it is moſt abſurd for any to charge the rebellion of men to the inſufficiency of the Light: For if men are wicked, is it not againſt knowledge? And if it be, where is the fault? Elſe, if men are ſo, not becauſe they would not be better, but becauſe they neither ſee nor know, nor are able to do better, how heavy, how black, and how blaſphemous a character doth the conſequence of ſuch an opinion faſten upon the good and righteous God of heaven and earth; ſince it ſuppoſes him not to have given means ſufficient to do that which he requires of them, and for not doing of which they are to be ſentenced to eternal miſery? But I confeſs, how deep ſoever they may ſtick with impartial ſpirits, I almoſt deſpair of entering ſome of our adverſaries, whoſe ſouls are pinched up within the narrow compaſs of a moſt unmerciful kind of predeſtination; making the eternal God as partial as themſelves; like ſome ancients, that becauſe they could not reſemble God, they would make ſuch gods as might reſemble them.

I ſay, what elſe can be the tendency of this kind of doctrine, againſt the ſufficiency of the Light within, than that the gift of God is not perfect, or able, becauſe men do not obey it: and that the talent God has given to all, is therefore inſufficient for the end for which it was given, becauſe man hides it in a napkin?

Again, Let them tell me, would it be a good argument, that if the ſame corn ſhould be ſown in a fertile, and a barren ſoil, that growing in one, and not in the other, the fault ſhould be in the ſeed, and not rather in the ground?

Who knows not, how tradition and cuſtom have overlaid much of conviction, and benumbed the world, and that it is, through luſts and pleaſures, become blind and ſtupid as to the inviſible things of God. Alas! there had never been ſo much need of many exterior diſpenſations and appearances of God, in reference to religion, ſo much preferred by the profeſſors of this day, had not mens minds been departed from the inward Light and life of righteouſneſs: So that they being outward and abroad, God was pleaſed to meet them there in ſome external manifeſtations; yet ſo, as to turn them home again to their firſt love; to that Light and Life which was given of God, as the way and guide to eternal ſalvation.

Nor could any of thoſe things cleanſe, as concerning the conſcience; wherefore God ſtill, by his ſervants and prophets, admoniſhed and warned the people of old, 'to put 'away the evil of their doings, and ceaſe to do evil and learn to do well, and to waſh 'themſelves, and to cleanſe themſelves;' Iſa. i. for that all their exactneſs in outward ſervices was otherwiſe but as the 'cutting off a dog's neck:' A ſacrifice equally pleaſing. ch. lxvi. Wherefore the abrogation of all outward diſpenſations, and the reducing man to his firſt ſtate of inward Light and righteouſneſs, is called in ſcripture, 'the times of refreſhment, and 'the reſtitution of all things.'

In ſhort, though there have been external obſervations and ordinances in the world, by God's appointment, as figures and ſhadows of the good things to come, either to prevent the Jews from the outward ſplendid worſhip of the idolatrous Gentiles, that he might retain a peculiar ſovereignty over them, or to ſhew forth unto them a more hidden and inviſible glory; this remains ſure for ever, that Light within there was, and that the ancients ſaw their ſins by it, and that there could be no acceptance with God, but as they walked up to it, and were taught to put away the evil of their doings by it: Suitable to that notable paſſage, 'the path of the juſt is a ſhining light, that ſhines clearer and 'clearer unto the perfect day.' I would fain know what this day was, if not that of Salvation? Can there be any night or darkneſs in the day? Surely no. What if their Light was not ſo large, was it therefore not ſaving? Yes ſurely. But as, where much is given, much is required, ſo where little is given, but little is required. If the Light was not ſo glorioully manifeſted before the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt in the fleſh, leſs was then required than ſince; yet it follows not that there were Two Lights, or that the Light was not ſaving, before the viſible appearance of Chriſt, to as many as lived in an holy conformity to it.

And if it be agreed, that blindneſs in men can be no argument againſt the light of the Sun, neither is this Light inſufficient, becauſe the people of any nation remain blind through their vain cuſtoms and evil practices. Nay, ſhould any ſuch doctrine be admitted, what would become of our adverſaries opinion, ‘that the Light of mere Scripture ‘is ſufficient of itſelf to give men the knowledge of God?’ For if thoſe that have the Scriptures, do not know, believe and obey God, as they ought to do, will it not follow upon ſuch a principle, that the defect is not in Them, but in the Scriptures? Certainly, the conſequence will hold as well againſt the Scriptures, as againſt the Light within. If then ſuch muſt wrong the Scripture, who ſo diſpute, let them that think ſo endeavour to right the Light, and no longer maintain a poſition, that, being admitted, would overturn the authority of the Scripture, as well as that of the Light within.

CHAP. IV.

Another objection againſt the Light's Sufficiency to manifeſt what ought to be done, though it were able to diſcover what ſhould be avoided. It is anſwered, The Light not telling man all it knows, or man may know in time to come, is no argument to prove it knows not all things. Men know more than they do; let them firſt obey what they know, and then what is convenient will be farther revealed. It is proved from the reaſon of contraries; becauſe it ſhews what ought not to be done, from ſcripture at large, it does inſtruct what to do; and that there is virtue in it, to the ſalvation of all that believe and obey it. That there is no eſſential difference between the Seed, Light, Word, Spirit, Life, Truth, Power, Unction, Bread, Water, Fleſh and Blood: Only ſo denominated from the various manifeſtations, operations, and effects of one and the ſame divine principle in man.

Chap. IV. BUT there is a ſecond objection, viz. ‘that there ſeems to be a manifeſt inſufficiency in the Light, becauſe, though ſeveral things are revealed by it, yet ſeveral ‘neceſſary matters are not, nor cannot; ſo that, though it ſhould manifeſt all that is ‘reproveable, yet cannot it diſcover all that is neceſſary to be either believed or done.’

I anſwer, This is but a piece of the former objection already conſidered. I perceive the pinch lies here, That becauſe men do not what they ſhould, or do not know all that may be fit for them to know, therefore the Light is inſufficient. The firſt will be anſwered by what I have already ſaid, the reaſon being the ſame for the ſufficiency of the Light, againſt ſuch as charge it with defect, becauſe they do not what they ſhould, as againſt thoſe who ſo impeach it, becauſe they do thoſe things which they ſhould not.

As for not knowing by this Light all that is fit to be known, I deny it utterly: For things are neceſſary in reference to their proper times: That may be requiſite to-morrow which is not to-day. It is fit for children to learn to read, yet it is moſt neceſſary that they ſhould begin firſt to ſpell. If a ſchool-maſter ſhould be charged with inſufficiency, becauſe he tells not little children as ſoon as they come all that he knows, or all at once when he initiates them in the firſt principles of learning, he would think himſelf unreaſonably dealt with. What then muſt we conclude, but that the maſter may be very capable to teach, were his ſcholar ſo, and willing to learn? That if the ſcholar obſerves and obeys his maſter, he will increaſe in his learning: That the defect of the ſcholar ſhould not be laid upon his maſter: That to tell or amuſe him about things unſuitable to his preſent capacity, were the ready way to overcharge and wholly ſpoil him: And conſequently that the tutor not telling his pupil all that is fit to be known at once, implies no defect or ignorance of thoſe things in the tutor: Which, to apply ſcripturally, is in brief thus: ‘If you do my will, you ſhall know (more) of my doctrine: I ‘have yet many things to ſay, but you are not able to bear them now.’ John vii. 17. If to ſay, that the Light of the Goſpel is to be charged with inſufficiency, becauſe it diſcovered not to every believer all thoſe ineffable things revealed to the Apoſtle, be both falſe and antichriſtian, to what an extremity of zeal are they led againſt the bleſſed Light of the Son of God, as he is the Enlightner of mankind, who charge it with inſufficiency, becauſe it reveals not at once to every individual, in every age, all that he ſhall ever know, or that ſhall be known to others in future times.

The Light then is not inſufficient, though it does not tell me all at one time, which may be a duty to the end of the world, eſpecially in extraordinary caſes, whilſt it informs me, or any man, of daily duty. Yea, the Light is ſufficient in point of diſcovery, whilſt it ſhews people much more than they do, and yet what they ought to perform.

If ſuch will ſay, and can prove, that they are come to the upſhot of the Light's teachings, and that they have learnt whatever it is poſſible for the Light of Chriſt to teach them, and yet are able to make appear, that there is ſomething farther wanting, they will prove themſelves not only above men, but God alſo, who is the 'Fountain of all Light, that ſearcheth the heart, and trieth the reins of men by the inſhinings of his manifeſting Light, and which, as obeyed, lead to God, who is the Fulneſs of all Light and Life.' But indeed, this Light is the ſavour of death, the wages of ſin, to all that rebel againſt it; and the ſavour of life to thoſe only who are obedient to it: For ſuch ſhall not walk in darkneſs, but have the Light of life.

To conclude, If the Light be allowed to manifeſt all things that are reproveable, then, by the juſt reaſon of contraries, ſhould it be ſufficient to diſcover all things that are approveable, with reſpect to man's faith, ſalvation and duty. If the Light tells us, it is evil not to believe in God, it follows, that to believe in God is according to the convictions of the Light within. And if it reproves a man for not being, it conſequently teacheth him what he ought to be. If the Light condemns theft, does it not neceſſarily inſtruct to honeſty? If it reproves me for doing my own will, it implies, I ought to do his will to whom I owe all: And if it checks a man for ſin, it inſtructeth him thereby to holineſs, 'without which none ſhall ſee God.' In ſhort, if it manifeſt reproveable things to be ſuch, at the ſame time it condemns them, and teacheth things quite contrary: The unfruitful works of darkneſs are judged by the Light, that the holy fruits of the Light may appear: 'Ye were darkneſs, but now are ye light in the Lord;' and Eph. v. 8. 'The reproofs of inſtruction are the way of life.' Prov. vi. 23. He that comes out of the reproved darkneſs, walks in the approved Light; and who ſo anſwers the holy reproof, unto ſuch is 'ſealed up the inſtruction of the way of life.' And this brings me to the third property of the Light, with reſpect to men; and that is, It doth not only manifeſt and condemn ſin, and diſcover and incline to purity, but, as adhered to (or rather that principle which is this Light) it is able, in point of power and efficacy, to redeem from ſin, and lead to a ſtate of higheſt felicity. 'I am the Light of the world, (ſaid John viii. 12. Jeſus himſelf); he that follows me, ſhall not walk in darkneſs, but ſhall have the Light of life.' In which it is very evident, that the ſame Light, which manifeſts darkneſs, redeems from it, and brings to a ſtate of life: That is to ſay, Thoſe who confidently believe in Chriſt, as he manifeſts himſelf a Light in their conſciences, to condemn ſin in every man's fleſh (whom he hath therefore illuminated) and that obediently follow the holy requirings of it (relinquiſhing the pleaſures of ſin, which laſt but for a ſeaſon, and taking up the daily croſs to their own luſts and wills) ſhall moſt aſſuredly find this Divine Principle, (which, in reference to the dark ſtate of men, and the diſcerning and conviction it brings with it, is rightly denominated Light) to have alſo power and efficacy to ſave from that which it manifeſts and condemns men for, and to bring them unto that glory, of which it gives a true revelation and hope. For the ſame Word of God, who is called the 'True Light that enlighteneth all mankind, is alſo the Life, Power, Wiſdom and Righteouſneſs of the Father, in whom are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom, and unto whom all power, both in heaven and earth, is committed, who is heir of all things:' Who alſo ſaid, when in the world, 'While ye have the Light, walk in the Light,' (for their day of viſitation was almoſt over) or, as ſome tranſlations more truly have it, 'While you have a little Light in you, believe in the Light, that ye may be the children of the Light.' Again, 'I am come a Light into the world, that who- John xii. 36, 46. ſoever believes in me ſhould not abide in darkneſs.' So that a ſincere faith in and obedience to the Light of Chriſt, as it ſhines in the heart, whereby to give the living and experimental knowledge of the glory of God unto the creature, is the way to be redeemed from darkneſs, and to be made a child of Light; or that there is power and virtue ſufficient in the Light of Chriſt to ranſom the ſouls of ſuch as diligently adhere to it, from under the power of darkneſs. For as the true knowledge of God is life eternal, ſo what- John xvii. 3. ever may be known of God, is manifeſted within; which manifeſtation cannot well be with- Rom. i. 19. out this Light, whoſe peculiar property it is to diſcover, reveal, or manifeſt the mind and will of God to mankind, as ſaith the apoſtle; 'For whatſoever doth make mani- Epheſ. v. 13. feſt is Light. In him was Life, and that Life was the LIGHT of men:' But not there- John i. 4. fore the LIFE of men ſpiritually, and unitedly conſidered; that was the peculiar privilege of thoſe only who BELIEVED in it, and walked according to it.

There is a great difference, tho' not in the principle, yet in its appearance to man, between Life and Light. Such as truly believe in it, the Word-God, as he appears to illuminate the heart and conſcience, and obey it, do really come to know and enjoy a new nature, ſpirit and life: And in that ſenſe it may be ſaid, As the Life in the Word became the Light in man, ſo the Light by obedience became the Life in man. 'He John viii. 12. that follows me ſhall not walk in darkneſs, but have the light of life,' ſaid Jeſus. Not that they differ in kind, only in operation, with reſpect to man: For as it is the very Life of the Word (in the Word) it is the Light of men; and ſo much it is, let them reject the virtue of it, if they will: But it is no more than ſo in man, unleſs received and believed by him; and then it begets life, motion, heat, and every divine qualification in 1673. Chap. IV. the ſoul, ſuitable to the ſtate of the New Birth. And thus the Life of the Word, which is Light common, becomes the Life of every ſuch particular, by communicating to, or ingenerating Life in the ſoul; ſo that it is no more he that lives, but Chriſt (the Word-God, whom he hath now put on, and who is become his very Life, as well as Light) that liveth and dwelleth in him.

Let not men then in their dark imaginations, with their borrowed knowledge from the mere Letter of the Scriptures, contend againſt the ſufficiency of what they obey not, neither have tried, and ſo cannot judge of its power, virtue, and efficacy; which works out ſalvation for as many as are turned to it, and abide therein.

And indeed, ſo very expreſs are the Scriptures in defence of the ſufficiency and neceſſity of the Light to ſalvation, that it ſeems to have been the great deſign of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, in delegating his diſciples to preach his everlaſting Goſpel, viz. ‘That they might open the eyes of people, and turn them from darkneſs to the Light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they might receive remiſſion of ſins, and an inheritance among them that are ſanctified through faith that is in Me.’ Who is this ME? He that is both the Light of the world, and the Power of God unto ſalvation. Now certainly the eyes that were then blind were not the natural, but ſpiritual eyes of men, (and ſuch muſt alſo be the darkneſs and light alſo) blinded by the god of this world, who rules in the hearts of the children of diſobedience: No wonder then if the Light was not comprehended of the darkneſs, and that blind people did not ſee the Light; But it plainly proves, that Light there was, though not ſeen. Now the work of the powerful miniſtry of the apoſtles was, to open this blind or dark eye of man's mind, which the god of the world hath blinded, and then to turn them from that Darkneſs to the Light: The Darkneſs or Evil was within, ſo was the Light alſo; ſince the illumination was neceſſary, where the darkneſs was predominant: Conſequently, the way to be tranſlated from Satan's power unto God, and to have remiſſion of ſins, and an inheritance with them that are ſanctified, is, to be turned from the Darkneſs, or ſin in the heart, unto the marvellous Light, that had long ſhined there uncomprehended, to wit, the Goſpel, which is called both the Light and Power of God. Acts xxvi. 18.

The ſame apoſtle, in his epiſtle to the Romans, is more expreſs concerning the holy nature and efficacy of the Light to ſalvation, when he thus exhorts them: ‘The night is far ſpent, the day is at hand; let us therefore caſt off the works of darkneſs, and put on the armour of Light; let us walk honeſtly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenneſs; not in chambering and wantonneſs, not in ſtrife and envy; but put ye on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and make no proviſion for the fleſh, to fulfil the luſts thereof.’ From whence I ſhall briefly remark three things, greatly to our purpoſe, and the Truth's defence in this matter. Rom. xiii. 12, 13, 14.

1. That there is an abſolute oppoſition betwixt Light and Darkneſs: As Darkneſs can only vail the Light from the underſtandings of men, ſo Light only can diſcover and diſpel that Darkneſs. Or thus: That the Light manifeſts and condemns the works of Darkneſs: ‘For, what communion hath Light with Darkneſs?’ Their difference ſhows the divine efficacy of the Light. 2 Cor. vi. 14.

2. That in this Light there is Armour, which being put on, is able to defend againſt and conquer Darkneſs, and ſecure the ſoul from the evil of it: Otherwiſe, it would be very ſtrange, that the apoſtle ſhould exhort the people to put it on, to defend them againſt the worker and works of Darkneſs.

3. That putting on the Armour of the Light, and putting on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt (the Light of the world) are ſynonimous, or one and the ſame thing, and for one and the ſame end; as may be obſerved from the apoſtle's words, ‘Let us put on the Armour of Light, and walk honeſtly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenneſs, not in chambering and wantonneſs, not in ſtrife and envying. But put ye on the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and make no proviſion for the fleſh, to fulfil the luſts thereof.’ Rom xiii. 12, 13, 14.

I hope then, neither will it be diſallowed that Chriſt is that Light, with which men are enlightened, (but more of that anon) nor is that Light men are exhorted by us to obey, a naked and inſufficient, but a ſearching, expelling, powerful, and arming Light, againſt Darkneſs and all its unfruitful works, and conſequently ſaving.

Thus the beloved diſciple teſtifies very emphatically, in his firſt epiſtle, where he gives us a relation of the apoſtolical miſſion: ‘This then is the meſſage which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, That God is Light, and in him is no Darkneſs at all. If we ſay, we have fellowſhip with him, and walk in Darkneſs, we lie, and do not the truth. But if we walk in the Light, as he is in the Light, we have fellowſhip one with another, and the blood of Jeſus Chriſt his Son cleanſeth us from all ſin.’ 1 John i. 5, 6, 7.

Here is a brief ſtating of the whole great caſe of ſalvation.. (1.) What God is; LIGHT. (2.) Who they are that can have no fellowſhip with him; ‘ſuch as walk in Darkneſs, that is Sin.’ (3.) Who they are that have fellowſhip with him; ‘ſuch as walk in the Light, as he is in the Light.’ (4.) The reaſon, Why, is given; becauſe ſuch as walk in the Light, are therein ſure to feel the virtue of Chriſt's blood to cleanſe them from all unrighteouſneſs. Where obſerve, that the Light's leading us out of Darkneſs (that is, Unrighteouſneſs) is the ſame thing with the 'Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, cleanſing 'from all ſin.' Sin and Darkneſs, and to be cleanſed from the one, and to be tranſlated 'from the other, are in the text equivalent: Otherwiſe a man might be delivered from 'Darkneſs, and walk in the Light, and not be cleanſed from Sin, which is that darkneſs: A thing abſurd and impoſſible. In ſhort, they go together.

By this it is evident, that the Light being walked in, doth directly lead to God, and fellowſhip with him, who is the ſaving Light and Health of all nations; and conſequently, that the Light leads to ſalvation; for that is ſalvation.

Many are the denominations that are given in ſcripture to one and the ſame thing: Chriſt is called, the Word, the Light, the Way, the Truth, the Life, the quickening Spirit, the ſaving Health, the Saviour; Emmanuel, a Rock, a Door, a Vine, a Shepherd, &c. A ſtate of Sin is ſometimes called, Darkneſs, Death, Diſobedience, Barrenneſs, Rebellion, Stiff-neckedneſs, Eating of ſour grapes; and wicked men, Briars, Thorns, Thiſtles, Tares, dead Trees, Wolves, Goats, &c. On the contrary, a ſtate of Converſion is ſometimes expreſſed by ſuch words, as Purged, Refined, Waſhed, Cleanſed, Sanctified, Juſtified, Led by the Spirit, Baptized by One Spirit into One Body, made Circumciſion without Hands; Regenerated, Redeemed, Saved, Bought with a Price, &c. And perſons ſo qualified, the Children of God, Children of Light, Children of the Kingdom, Heirs of Glory, Lambs, Sheep, Wheat, &c. And that by which they became or continued thus, Light, Spirit, Grace, Word, Fire, Sword, Hammer, Power, Seed, Truth, Way, Life, Blood, Water, Bread, Unction that leadeth into all Truth. All which, reſpectively, is but one and the ſame in nature, notwithſtanding the great variety of epithets, or names given in ſcripture. So ſin, or a ſinful ſtate, is variouſly denominated, from the divers operations and diſcoveries of the nature of it in wicked men. The like may be ſaid of the ſeveral virtues in good and holy men, as of that One Divine Principle, which ſo qualifies and preſerves them. For as the primitive ſaints felt the operation of the one holy Principle, ſo they denominated it: To men in darkneſs they called it Light; to ſuch as believed and obeyed, it became a Leader: And thoſe who had witneſſed their ſins conquered, their luſts cut down, their hearts broken, and their ſouls waſhed, redeemed, and daily nouriſhed up in the Truth, they called this divine principle a Sword, a Fire, an Hammer, Water, Fleſh, Blood, and Bread, and Seed of Life. In ſhort, the ſame heavenly principle became Light, Wiſdom, Power, Counſel, Redemption, Sanctification, and Eternal Salvation unto thoſe who believed in it. So that the variety of expreſſions in the ſcriptures, muſt not be taken for ſo many diſtinct things in kind, no nor ſometimes in operation.

And indeed, notwithſtanding the light ſome would lodge in the bare Scriptures, excluſive of the Spirit, all the wiſe men of the world, met together, would be confounded to give a right account of the matter therein contained, if they were not living, experimental witneſſes of the work of the Holy Spirit therein expreſſed. For as he is not an evidence ſufficient by laws human, that was not an eye or ear-witneſs, neither are they the right evidences for God and Chriſt, who have not been eye and ear-witneſſes of the Light, Spirit, Grace, and Word of God in their hearts; and I can with boldneſs affirm, they have no more title to the glorious promiſes declared in ſcripture, than a man has to a large deed of gift, where he is not at all named or intended. It is time then for ſuch to look about them, leſt the midnight-cry overtake them, and their lamp be found without oil: For I muſt needs tell them, in the beloved diſciple's language, "He "that ſaith he is in the Light, and hateth his brother, is in the Darkneſs, even until "now." And in my own language, that I take it to be their ſtate, who ſhew ſo much envious diſpleaſure againſt an harmleſs ſuffering people, that never yet offended, much leſs juſtly provoked them. But would they bring their thoughts, words and deeds to this Light of JESUS, in their own conſciences, and let true judgment paſs upon evil thoughts, words and deeds, and patiently undergo the heavenly chaſtiſements thereof, for their diſobedience to it, and vilifying of it, they would come to witneſs a converſion from Darkneſs to Light, and continuing to walk therein, as that holy way in which the ranſomed of the Lord always did, do, and ſhall walk through all generations, and which leads to the enjoyment of eternal peace. And ſuch is the excellency of Chriſt, the True Light of the Soul, that as he was the Firſt, ſo ſhall he be the Laſt; yea, when all outward performances, writings, and worſhips, and the whole world ſhall be at an end, the uſe and excellency of this Light will remain for ever, as ſaith John the divine; "And they ſhall ſee his face; and his name ſhall be written in their foreheads; and there "ſhall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the ſun, for the "Lord God giveth them Light, and they ſhall reign for ever and ever. Amen." Rev. xxii. 4, 5.

CHAP. V.

An Objection againſt the Light's Antecedency to Chriſt's Coming. The Light Saving from Adam's Day, through the Holy Patriarchs and Prophets Time, down to Chriſt's, proved from Scripture.

Tit. ii.
John xiv. 6.
John i. 1, 2,
iii. 4. 9.
1 Cor. xv. 45, 47. & i. 24.
1 John ii. 27. and v. 6, 7, 8.
John vi. 51. 52, 53.

HAVING then plainly ſhown from the Scripture, (1.) That the Light is ſaving ſince the time of Chriſt; beginning with its firſt appearance in man, as manifeſting of ſin; (2.) Condemning of it; (3.) Redeeming thoſe from ſin, that obey it; and that the ſame principle which is called Light, is the Seed, Grace, Truth, Word, Spirit, Power, Unction, Water, Way, Life, Fleſh and Blood myſtical; and therefore not another Being than that which all that own plain ſcripture muſt confeſs doth ſave; I call it the "Light of Salvation, or that leads to Salvation."

But there remain yet ſeveral objections to be anſwered; which done, we ſhall immediately proceed to give judgment upon the queſtion, Who, or What, this Light is, with reſpect to all our adverſaries cavils.

Object. 'Though the Univerſality of a Saving Light, from the Scriptures, ſince 'Chriſt's life, death, reſurrection and aſcenſion, be proved and allowed; yet the pinch 'of the controverſy will be this, Where was this Light before? Had any this ſaving 'Light, (they had a Light) before the Coming of Chriſt in the Fleſh? as they muſt, if 'your doctrine of the Light be true.'

To which I ſhall give my anſwer, both from ſcripture, hiſtory and reaſon.

Gen. i. 27.

I. The firſt ſcripture I ſhall quote, is in the firſt of Geneſis: "So God created man "in his own image; in the image of God created he him."

From whence I draw this argument, That if man was made in God's image; then, becauſe God is Light, Adam muſt neceſſarily have had of the divine Light in him, and have been the Image of this Light, ſo long as he walked in it; becauſe no man walks in the Light, but he becomes the Child of Light. And as the apoſtle Paul expreſſeth it of ſuch as were converted to that Light they had once erred from, "Ye were darkneſs; but now are ye Light in the Lord." That is, through obedience to the Light of the Lord Jeſus, with which he hath lighted you, you are become 'Light in the Lord, and lights in your generation.' For any man then to ſay, Adam had not Light, were to ſuppoſe his innocent ſtate to be that of Darkneſs; and inſtead of being God's Image, who is, and ever was, and always will be, Light, he would have been wholly ignorant of him, in whoſe image he is ſaid to have been created.

Deut. xxx. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15.

II. This Moſes directed the children of Iſrael to, when he, in God's ſtead, recommended, and earneſtly preſſed the keeping of the Commandment and Word in the heart, as we read in Deuteronomy. "For this Commandment which I command thee "this day, is not hidden from thee, neither is it far off. It is not in heaven, that thou "ſhouldeſt ſay, Who ſhall go up for us to heaven, and bring it unto us, that we may "hear it, and do it? But the Word is very nigh unto thee, in thy Mouth, and in thy "Heart, that thou mayeſt do it. See, I have ſet before thee this day, Life and Good, "and Death and Evil."

From whence I cannot but obſerve theſe three things:

1. That the Commandment, and the Word, are ſo called by way of excellency and pre-eminence to all written commandments or words.

2. That this Commandment or Word is nigh, even in the heart of man itſelf: None need or ought to plead diſtance or ignorance, to excuſe their diſobedience.

3. That the ſetting of Life and Good, Death and Evil before them, was, and could only be, in and through the Shinings of the Light within; elſe how could they have ſeen good and evil ſet before them? And that it was in their Hearts the Lord ſet thoſe ſtates before them, the verſe immediately follows that wherein the Word is by Moſes argumentatively proved, as well as affirmed, to be in the Heart of man. Now, I hope, it ſhall not be charged upon me as a fault, and I know who will bear me out, if I ſay, Pſal. xix. 8.

cxix. 105.
cxix. 11.
cxix. 9.
Rom. x. 8.

This Commandment is that which David ſpoke of, when he ſaid, "The Commandment "of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes;" and this holy Word the ſame with that which he ſaid was a "Lamp unto his feet, and a Light unto his path, which he hid "in his Heart; and by hearkening to which the young man cleanſeth his way:" And not another Word than what Paul called the "Word of Faith," which he preached, by which the juſt live; conſequently a Saving Commandment, Word, and Light, it was and is, to ſuch as believe and obey it.

Sam. ix. 22, 29.

III. The next ſcripture I will urge ſhall be this: "For thou art my Lamp, O Lord; "for the Lord will lighten my darkneſs." Now if God was the Light and Lamp of that day, as certainly, then, they had a Light, and ſuch an one as was Saving too; unleſs we ſhould blaſphemouſly deny God to be Light, or Saving, who is moſt certainly both. And if it ſhould be ſaid, This was a metaphorical way of ſpeaking in the royal prophet; I anſwer be it ſo; it was to ſhew that they had ſomething to manifeſt to them the way God would have them to walk in, or a diſcovering power that attended them, by which to walk uprightly, and ſafely, to glory; and this is what we ſay.

IV. Wicked men were not without light to condemn them, as good men ever had light to preſerve them. "They are of thoſe that rebel againſt the Light; they know not Job. xxiv. 13. "the ways thereof, nor abide in the paths thereof," ſaid Job. In which paſſage it is very obvious, that wicked men have Light, otherwiſe it would have been utterly impoſſible for them to have rebelled againſt it: Nay, "againſt the Light," implies that "it is the ſame Light in nature with that which Righteous men are guided by; anſwerable to another emphatical paſſage in the ſame book of Job, "Is there any number of Job. xxv. 3. "his armies, and upon whom doth not his Light ariſe?" Certainly, this univerſality ſtrongly pleads on the behalf of our belief of the Light: And if people would but venture to let it come cloſe to their conſciences, I cannot be ſo uncharitable as to think they would not make ſome acknowledgment to its univerſality antecedent to the coming of Chriſt. I ſhall omit to ſay much of its efficaciouſneſs at that time (though one would think that light always ſhews us a good way from a bad one) referring it to another place: Only I ſhall obſerve how Job expreſſed himſelf, when he was in his deep troubles of ſpirit: "O that I were as in months paſt, in the days when God pre- Job. xxix. 3. "ſerved me, when his Candle ſhined upon my head, and when by his Light I walked "through darkneſs:" Where it is moſt apparent, that Job attributes his ſalvation from the darkneſs (which ſtands both for Sin and Affliction) unto the Light wherewith God had enlightened him. And certainly, it had been utterly impoſſible for divers weighty things, that are delivered in that book of Job, to have been known, and ſaid ſo lively, had they not been ſeen by the Light and Candle of the Lord: For in the whole book I find not one verſe cited out of any other ſcripture. It ſeems an original, and doubtleſs very early.

V. To this doctrine David was no ſtranger, who ſo very often commemorates the Light, and the divine excellencies of it: Some few places I ſhall mention of thoſe many that I might offer.

"The Lord is my Light and my Salvation, whom ſhall I fear? The Lord is the Pſal. xxvii. 1. "Strength of my life, of whom ſhall I be afraid?"

This weighty paſſage of the prophet is a lively teſtimony to the True Light; wherein David confeſſeth to what the beloved diſciple called his evangelical meſſage, viz. That God is Light. Next, that not only God is Light, but (which doubtleſs was moſt of all to his comfort) his Light; the Lord is my Light, and my ſalvation: As much as if he had ſaid, 'Becauſe the Lord is become my Light, I have known him to be my Salvation, 'or him by whom my ſalvation hath been wrought.'

In ſhort thus, That God is My Salvation, as he is My Light; or, becauſe I have obeyed Him, and made Him my Light, I have witneſſed his Salvation. O! that ſuch profeſſors of religion, in whom there is any moderation, would but be pleaſed to weigh what was David's Light, and what was his Salvation; who made it his Rule at that time of the world: Of which he farther ſpeaks:

"God is the Lord, who hath ſhewed us Light. Thy WORD is a Lamp unto my Pſal. cxviii. 27. cxix. 105, 102. "Feet, and a Light unto my paths. I have not departed from thy judgments, for thou "haſt taught me." This made him far wiſer than his teachers in the hidden life and myſtery of things, whereby David had long ſeen beyond all types and ſhadows of the good things to come, even to the very Subſtance itſelf, from whence came his excellent prophecies: Agreeing with that famous paſſage, "The path of the juſt is as the ſhining Prov. iv. 18. "Light, that ſhines more and more unto the perfect Day." This ſtrongly implies, that David, and not he alone, but the juſt of all ages, were attended with the Diſcoveries and Leadings of a Divine Light; which, through the obedience of faith, made juſt men, and always led them the way of ſalvation; unleſs the juſt way was not the Saving way: But if it was, certainly it is ſo ſtill; for it is the LORD HIMSELF that David calls a Lamp, as he here doth the Word, which Moſes ſaid was "nigh in the "heart, that men ſhould obey it and do it." This was the Word of Reconciliation in every generation, whoſe holy water waſhed their conſciences from ſin, that heard and obeyed it.

Again, that this Light was not confined to David, or ſuch good men, take theſe two paſſages:

"Thou giveſt thy mouth to evil, and thy tongue frameth deceit: Thou ſitteſt and Pſal. l. 19, 20, 21. "ſpeakeſt againſt thy brother, thou ſlandereſt thine own mother's ſon: Theſe things "haſt thou done, and I kept ſilence; thou thoughteſt that I was altogether ſuch an one "as thyſelf; but I will reprove thee, and ſet them in order before thine eyes," ſaid the Lord. Again, "His lightnings enlightened the world; the earth ſaw, and Pſal. lcix. 4. "trembled." In which two places it will appear, upon impartial conſideration, that God hath enlightened the world; and that by his Light, which diſcovers the works and workers of darkneſs, he doth reprove the inhabitants of the world, ſet their ſins in order before them, and cauſe ſuch guilty ones to tremble at his ſo appearing; which is expreſly confirmed in that notable paſſage of the prophet; "For lo! He that formeth "the mountains, and createth the wind, that makes the morning darkneſs, and treadeth Amos iv. 13. "upon the high places of the earth, and declares unto man what is his thought; the "Lord, the God of hoſts, is his name."

This the Pſalmiſt was well acquainted with himſelf, when he uttered theſe words, Pſal. cxxxix. 7. "Whither ſhall I go from thy Spirit, or whither ſhall I flee from thy Preſence?" Which plainly ſhews to us, that the Spirit of the Lord and his Preſence were every-where; and that the Light thereof diſcovered darkneſs to mankind: For the queſtion was not, Whether God by his Spirit was not every-where? For that all muſt grant, or he could not be God: But whether it was poſſible for David to withdraw himſelf into any place, where the Eternal Spirit and Preſence of God (who is Light itſelf) were not preſent with him, in ſome ſort or other, to his inſtruction; as the foregoing words in- Ib, ver. 1, 2, 3. timate? Again, "O Lord, thou haſt ſearched me, and known me:----Thou under-"ſtandeſt my thought afar off:----Thou art acquainted with all my ways." Which, tho' God knew them, it ſtands firm that David could not have known God or them, or that God had known them, but by the Light of the Spirit; of which he ſays in the ſeventh verſe following, which I have already cited, "Whither ſhall I go from thy "Spirit?"

In ſhort, It muſt needs be evident to all unprejudiced readers, David meant that he had the Light of God's Holy Spirit preſent with him, as a Reprover, Informer, or Comforter; ſince he makes it impoſſible for him to be any-where without it. Which may prove to us, that however he lived above a thouſand years before the apoſtle Paul, he very well knew the meaning of that doctrine he preached to the Athenians, "God is Acts xvii. 27. "not far away," or at a diſtance, "from every one of us." Which, truly known and experimentally witneſſed in the ſoul, and that not only as a Reprover, but, by an humble and holy reception of him into the heart, as a Comforter, Shepherd, Biſhop, King, and Lord, is the glory of the Evangelical Diſpenſation, where "God dwells in his holy 1 Cor. vi. 19, 20. "temple, and tabernacles with men." This is the bleſſed Emmanuel-ſtate, God with, and God in Men.

I might here ſubjoin the account we have of the great illumination of Daniel, and the Gentiles clear acknowledgment of the ſame, as it is given us in the ſcripture; which they could never have done with that ſeriouſneſs and conviction, but from ſome glimpſe of the ſame Divine Light; for it muſt be the ſame Light, that ſhews the ſame Truths; but that I ſhall paſs over, with ſeveral other paſſages of the leſſer prophets; and conclude my ſcripture-proof of the gift of the Light of God's Spirit antecedent to Chriſt's Acts vii. 48, 49, 50, 51. coming in the fleſh, with Stephen's teſtimony, "Howbeit, the Moſt High dwelleth not "in temples made with hands; as ſaith the prophet: Heaven is my throne, and earth is "my footſtool; what houſe will you build me, ſaith the Lord? Or what is the place of "my reſt? Hath not my Hand made all theſe things? Ye ſtiff-necked and uncircum-"ciſed in heart and ears, ye do always reſiſt the Holy Ghoſt; as your fathers did, "ſo do ye." By which it is plain that the rebellious Jews had the Spirit of God; it ſtrove with them, but they reſiſted it: And if the Rebellious had it, the obedient were not without it.

And leſt it ſhould be objected, that it was only the Spirit in Stephen then, and the holy prophets of old, that both they and their fore-fathers reſiſted, and not in themſelves; Neh. 9. 20. remember, reader, that weighty paſſage in Nehemiah, "Thou gaveſt alſo thy Good "Spirit to inſtruct them, and withheldeſt not thy Manna from their Mouth;" by which it is moſt evident, That they that had the manna to feed them, had the Spirit to inſtruct them: But All had their portion of the manna to feed them, therefore all had alſo their portion of the Spirit to inſtruct them. So that the Light of God's Spirit, or the Spirit of God, was given as well to the Rebellious as Obedient, that it might "condemn "for ſin, as well as lead into all righteouſneſs." And ſince we are to ſuppoſe God's Spirit, and the Light thereof, to be ſufficient to ſalvation, (for God's gifts are perfect in themſelves, and are given to accompliſh their ends perfectly) we may, without any offence, I hope, conclude, that during thoſe many ages before the coming of Chriſt in the fleſh, he did illuminate mankind with a ſufficient meaſure of his Divine Light and Spirit.

CHAP.

CHAP. VI.

Another objection, That though the Jews had it, it will not follow that the Gentiles were ſo illuminated. It is anſwered by ſeveral ſcriptures, that they were not exempted; but had a meaſure of Light, ſome divine ſeed ſown in their hearts, ſome talents given, and that it was ſufficient. A challenge to give an inſtance of one that by the Light within was reproved for not believing that Jeſus was the Chriſt, is anſwered. Such as belived in the Light, and walked up to it, did receive Chriſt when he came. The high pretenders were they who oppoſed the ſcripture, and crucified him. The Light from ſcripture concluded univerſal and ſaving.

1673. Chap. VI.

BUT here I expect this objection, having run our adverſaries unavoidably to it:

Object. 'Very well: Taking for granted what you have ſaid in reference to a Saving 'Light or Spirit univerſally beſtowed upon the Jews, that were a DISTINCT PEOPLE 'from the reſt of the world, under very many peculiar rights; yet cannot we think it 'good arguing to infer the gifts of God's Light and Spirit to the Gentiles, that make 'far the greateſt part thereof, from theſe Scriptures, that only ſeem to prove it the pri'vilege of the Jews.'

To which I anſwer, that I conceive I have urged thoſe ſcriptures already, which give a plain conviction of the truth of that general inference: But becauſe I am deſirous from my ſoul, in perfect love to theirs that ſhall read this diſcourſe, of removing what objections I am able to foreſee it may meet with, after it ſhall have paſſed my hand, I will yet endeavour to make appear, firſt from ſcripture; and next from the beſt account we have of the Doctrines and Lives of Heathens; and laſtly from reaſon, the thing; That God's love, in the illumination of his Spirit, was univerſal; or that mankind was, before Chriſt's coming in the fleſh, enlightened with ſuch a meaſure of the Light of his Spirit as was ſaving in itſelf, and ſo experienced of all ſuch as received and obeyed it, in the love of it. In order to this, I ſhall briefly inſiſt on a few ſcriptures, ſome of which have been already quoted, though not ſo directly to this matter.

I. "My Spirit ſhall not always ſtrive with man." Here obſerve, that no one nation Gen. vi. 3. was intereſted more than another, but man ſtands for the whole Adam, or mankind: From whence I conclude, that mankind was not deſtitute of the Spirit, or Light of the Almighty, though it might be known in no higher degree than that of a convincer or reprover of ſin: Yet it follows not, but that if man had yielded to the ſtrivings of it, he had been thereby redeemed from the ſpirit of iniquity, that was the ground of his grievous revolt and reſiſtance; which redemption I call ſalvation from ſin.

II. "They are of thoſe that rebel againſt the Light; they know not the ways thereof, Job xxiv. 13. "nor abide in the paths thereof." Here is no mention made of Jews more than Gentiles in this chapter, if at all in the whole book. For Job is here giving the character of wicked men in general, without reſpect to any particular nation. So that we may well infer, he did not underſtand that the Light whereof he ſpoke ſhould be limited in its illumination to any particular people. In ſhort, I argue thus; If ſuch as pluck the fatherleſs from the breaſt, and take a pledge of the poor, (as the context relates) are thoſe that Ver. 9. rebel againſt the Light, and walk not in its way; then, becauſe that vice was never limited to the Jews, but other nations wrought that wickedneſs as well as they, it will plainly follow, that the Light, againſt which ſuch offenders rebelled, was not limited to the Jews, but extended to the Gentiles alſo: Unleſs we ſhould ſay, that what was rebellion and wickedneſs in the Jews, was not ſo in the Gentiles. But becauſe Sin was, and is Sin, in its own nature, all the world over; Light was, and is Light, all the world over, whether men bring their deeds unto it, or not.

III. But again, let us hear the ſame book ſpeak: "Is there any number of his ar- Job xxv. 3. "mies? And upon whom doth not his Light ariſe?"

This queſtion carries in it a ſtrong affirmative of the univerſality of God's Light; as much as to ſay, 'Who is there among all the ſons and daughters of men, that can juſtly ſay, 'I am not enlightened by him?' If then none can, it muſt needs follow, that All are enlightened, as well Gentiles as Jews.

Neither is it our conſtruction only, but the judgment of men famed in the world for their exactneſs in the original text, or letter of the ſcripture. They interpret it to be the Light of the divine wiſdom; the fountain of light; yea, God himſelf: that rebelling againſt the Light, is againſt God Τὸ φῶς τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ, the Light of Iſrael: Alluding to the Pſalmiſt, "The Lord is my Light and my ſalvation." Nay, to the Light mentioned by the apoſtle Paul, "Ye, who were ſometimes darkneſs, are now light in the Lord." And that very Light, which is ſaid to have ſprung up to them that ſat in darkneſs, which is the Light of Truth; and by all allowed to be the evangelical, and ſpoke of Chriſt's manifeſtation: Alſo that the ways of Light, are Light, leading to the Light itſelf, which wicked men Munſter. Vatabl. Clar. Caſtel. Druſ. and Codurc. Crit. in 24, 25, ch. ver. 13. and 3 Job. p. 3284. to 3308. chap. xxv. 3.

turn from, and ſpurn at: That this is the Light, which there is none but it riſes upon, whereby to give them true ſight of themſelves. See the criticks, Munſterius, Vatablus, Clarius, Caſtellio on the 17th verſe; but eſpecially Druſius and Codurcus, who ſay, 'All men partake of that Light; and that it is ſufficient to maniſeſt and drive away the darkneſs of error; and that it is the Light of Life; nay Codurcus calls it, an evangelical principle; and ſeems to explain his mind by a quotation of the evangeliſt's words, John i. 9. "That was the true Light, that enlighteneth all mankind, coming into the world."

IV. Thus much thoſe two notable parables teach us of the Sower, and the Lord that gave his ſervants Talents. They who believe ſcripture, muſt acknowledge them to repreſent God's dealings with mankind, in reference to Gift, Duty, and Reward. Obſerve the firſt parable.

Mat. xiii. 1—10.

"The ſame day went Jeſus out of the houſe, and ſat by the ſea ſide: And great multitudes were gathered together unto him, ſo that he went into a ſhip, and ſat, and the whole multitude ſtood on the ſhore. And he ſpoke many things unto them in parables, ſaying, Behold, a ſower went forth to ſow; and when he ſowed, ſome ſeeds fell by the way-ſide, and the fowls came, and devoured them up; ſome fell upon ſtony places, where they had not much earth, and forthwith they ſprung up, becauſe they had no deepneſs of earth, and when the ſun was up, they were ſcorched, and becauſe they had not root, they withered away: And ſome fell among thorns, and the thorns ſprung up and choaked them; but other fell in good ground, and brought forth fruit; ſome an hundred-fold, ſome ſixty-fold, ſome thirty-fold. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear."

ver. 19. It is granted by all that I know of, that the ſeeds-man is Chriſt: The ſcripture ſaith, the Seed is the Word of the Kingdom, which muſt needs be the Spiritual Word nigh in the heart, ſuitable to the heavenly Kingdom, which Chriſt ſaid was within, otherwiſe called Light, that is ſaid to be "ſown for the righteous;" or the grace which "comes by Chriſt, that appears unto all men, and brings ſalvation to them that are taught by it;" or the Spirit, that quickens us: And laſtly, common ſenſe tells us, that the ſeveral grounds comprehend mankind; for they muſt either include the bad with the good, or the good only muſt be ſown: But the very ſcripture expreſly diſtinguiſheth betwixt the good and bad ground, yet affirms the one to have been ſown with the Seed as well as the other: Therefore God's gift is Univerſal, however men, by wicked works, may have rendered their hearts ſtony, thorny, or otherwiſe defective and uncapable of bringing forth fruit.

Mat. xxv. 14. to 34. The other parable is alſo weighty, and much to the purpoſe: "For the kingdom of Heaven is as a man travelling into a far country, who called his own ſervants, and delivered to them his goods; and unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his ability, and ſtraight-way took his journey. Then he that had received five talents, went and traded with the ſame, and made them other five talents; and likewiſe he that had received two, he alſo gained other two; but he that had received one, went and digged in the earth, and hid his lord's money. After a long time, the lord of thoſe ſervants cometh and reckoneth with them: And ſo he that had received five talents came and brought other five talents, ſaying, Lord, thou deliveredſt unto me five talents, behold, I have gained, beſides them, five talents more. His lord ſaid unto him, well done, thou good and faithful ſervant; thou haſt been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy lord. He alſo that had received two talents, came and ſaid, Lord, thou deliveredſt unto me two talents, behold, I have gained two other talents beſides them; his lord ſaid unto him, well done, good and faithful ſervant; thou haſt been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy lord. Then he who had received one talent, came and ſaid, Lord, I know thee, that thou art an hard man, reaping where thou haſt not ſown, and gathering where thou haſt not ſtrawed; and I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth: lo, there thou haſt that which is thine. His lord anſwered, and ſaid unto him, Thou wicked and ſlothful ſervant, thou kneweſt that I reap where I ſowed not, and gather where I have not ſtrawed, thou oughteſt therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I ſhould have received my own with uſury: Take therefore the talent from him, and give it unto him who has ten talents: For unto every one that hath ſhall be given, and he ſhall have abundance; but from him that has not, ſhall be taken away, even that which he hath: And caſt ye the unprofitable ſervant into utter darkneſs, there ſhall be weeping, and gnaſhing of teeth; when the ſon of man ſhall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then ſhall he ſit upon the throne of his glory, and before him ſhall be gathered all nations, and he ſhall ſeparate them one from another, as a ſhepherd divideth his ſheep from the goats, and he ſhall ſet the ſheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left."

Serious reader, I have the rather repeated the ſcripture at large, becauſe of that great ſtrength it carries with it, methinks to the conviction, at leaſt confuſion, of that narrow ſpirit, which confines the Infinite Goodneſs of God, and renders him, whilſt he is the Univerſal Creator, but a narrow benefactor; ſhutting up his gifts within the ſtrait compaſs of a Few; repreſenting him thereby as partial as ſome parents, who, they know not why, beſides their own unequal wills, do frequently beſtow their favours (indeed their whole affection) upon an elected darling, to the manifeſt, though cauſeleſs neglect of the reſt. But to ſpeak the truth of the matter, the over-fondneſs ſome carry to their opinion, joined with the envy raiſed towards thoſe who conform not to it, has ſo emptied them of all natural affection, that looking upon God in that condition, they dare think him as unnatural as themſelves. For my part, I have not a great while believed but that it rather riſes from an unwillingneſs in ſome that diſſenters from them ſhould be ſaved, (thereby endeavouring a compliance upon neceſſity) than that God had not been propitious unto all his creatures. For who ſees not, that can or will ſee, that God is this ſovereign Lord; that he made mankind to be his ſervants; that theſe three ſervants repreſent mankind; and to the end they might not be unprofitable, he gave them talents to improve againſt his return, that is, againſt the "day of recompence, for which they are "accountable;" that thoſe who improve their talents may be rewarded, and they who make no improvement of their talents, may be puniſhed with eternal ſeparation from the preſence of God, and all his holy angels.

I will conclude with theſe five obſervations:

1. That God, though it be his ſovereign prerogative to give what he will, has given a talent out of his celeſtial treaſury unto every man and woman.

2. That this talent is in itſelf ſufficient: But as the beſt corn, ſo this talent, put up into a napkin, muſt needs be unprofitable: Yet, that the fault is in the party neglecting or hiding of it, not in itſelf.

3. That thoſe who improve not their talent, are moſt apt to charge God with reaping where he ſows not; as do many profeſſors we have to do with, that make God to require an account of all, and yet deny, in order to rendering up this account with joy, that he has given to all a talent ſufficient thereunto.

4. That the eternal eſtate of men and women, as ſheep and goats, depends upon their improving, or not improving, of that heavenly talent wherewith God has indued them.

Laſtly, Neither is there any ſhelter for theſe men, under the inequality of the number of talents; for it is not how many talents are given, but what improvement is made of what is given: Wherefore greater is his reward, who makes one talent three, than his, who of ten advances but to fifteen; ſince the one makes but half, whilſt the other makes treble improvement.

Bleſſed therefore are you all, and will you aſſuredly be in the day of the Lord's recompence, who, diſregarding the vanities, pleaſures, cares, honours, and carnal religions of the world, diligently mind your own talent, and are, in the pure fear and holy counſel of the Lord, making your daily improvement of the ſame, "laying up treaſure" in the high and heavenly place, that is durable and everlaſting.

V. This reaſonable truth is yet farther manifeſt, from the weighty words of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; "For every one that doth evil hateth the Light, neither comes to the Light, lest his deeds ſhould be reproved." John iii. 20. To which I would add, as before, that of the apoſtle, "Whatſoever is reproved is made manifeſt by the Light." Eph. v. 13. Certainly then, unleſs men will be ſo unjuſt to God, as to think (contrary to ſcripture and reaſon) he ſhould let millions of men, and ſcores of generations live in ſin, without a light to ſhew it them, or a Law to limit them, it muſt be yielded, that they had Light and Law in their hearts and conſciences, by which they were convicted of ſin, and that ſuch as obeyed it, were helped and led to work righteouſneſs; ſince their refuſing to bring their deeds to the Light, was not an act of ignorance, but deſign; becauſe they knew their deeds would be condemned, and they for them; which loudly aſſerts, that they both had a Light, and knew they had it, though they rebelled againſt it. And if I ſhould grant, that whatever was reproveable was not made manifeſt unto them, yet this will no ways impeach the Capacity of the Light to do it. It is evident, that ſome things which the Gentiles did were reproved; therefore they had the Light: And if they had it not in all the Extent of its revelation, the Light was no more to be blamed, than that guide was, whoſe paſſengers never came to their journey's end, becauſe they never would begin, at leaſt proceed, by his direction. Had the Heathens been faithful to the Light that God had given them, and not been blinded by the vain idolatries and ſuperſtitious traditions of their fathers, they had more fully known and learned the mind and will of their Creator; which ſome of thoſe Gentiles notwithſtanding did, as will anon appear.

VI. Thus the apoſtle Paul teaches us to believe, in that remarkable paſſage of his in the firſt chapter to the Romans: "For I am not aſhamed of the Goſpel of Chriſt: For it is the Power of God unto ſalvation, to every one that believeth, to the Jew firſt, and alſo to the Greek. For therein is the righteouſneſs of God revealed, from faith to faith: As it is written, The juſt ſhall live by faith. For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven

Rom. i. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 2

"heaven againſt all ungodlineſs and unrighteouſneſs of men, who hold the Truth in "unrighteouſneſs. Becauſe that which may be known of God is manifeſt in them, for "God hath ſhewed it unto them. For the inviſible things of him from the creation of the "world are clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the things that are made, even his eternal "power and god head, ſo that they are without excuſe; becauſe that when they knew "God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful; but became vain in their "imaginations, and their fooliſh hearts were darkened. And even as they did not like to "retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do thoſe "things which are not convenient."

Theſe notable lines of that great apoſtle, give an apparent overthrow to all objections, againſt either the Univerſality or Sufficiency of the Light within: Which will farther appear, if the reader be but pleaſed to obſerve theſe few particulars. (1.) That in the Goſpel of Chriſt is the righteouſneſs of God revealed, and that from Faith to Faith. (2.) That this Faith the juſt have ever lived by; for he quotes a time paſt, "As it is written:" Which writing was above ſeven hundred years before he wrote that epiſtle. (3.) That many had degenerated from the righteouſneſs of God, to wit, the Gentiles, into ungodlineſs, againſt which the wrath of God was revealed from heaven. (4.) That they, however, once knew the Truth. (5.) That they came to the knowledge of this Truth from the "Manifeſtation of God (who is Light) within," ſince the apoſtle ſays, what "might be known of God was manifeſted in them, becauſe God had "ſhewed it unto them." (6.) That the cauſe of their after darkneſs, was their rebelling againſt that Manifeſtation or Light, not glorifying the God that ſhewed it to them, when they both ſaw it, and knew it was HE that ſhewed them: conſequently that God had given them light ſufficient, both to know and obey him. And ſince they liked not to retain God in their knowledge, the deficiency was theirs, and not the Light's. (7.) If therefore their fooliſh hearts were darkened, (that is, by diſobedience) it follows, that darkneſs came by Sin into their hearts; and that they had Light in their hearts, or a light within, to know their duty and ſquare their lives by. (8.) Laſtly, If the wrath was therefore revealed, becauſe they held the Truth in unrighteouſneſs; and when they knew God, by the manifeſtation of Light within, they glorified him not as God, but became vain in their imaginations, and their fooliſh hearts were darkened; then certainly, had they kept to that enlightening principle we call TRUTH, and the Manifeſtation of God within, and ſo preſerved their faith in God, as he had revealed himſelf to them, glorifying him as God, and delighting to retain him in their knowledge; not wrath, but mercy and peace, had been revealed from Heaven; as ſaith the Rom. xxvii. ſame apoſtle in his following chapter, "To them, who by patient continuanee in well-"doing, ſeek for glory, and honour, and immortality, Eternal Life."

In ſhort, This we may ſafely conclude, that the righteouſneſs revealed in the Goſpel of Chriſt (of which Paul was not aſhamed) from faith to faith, (by which faith, he teſtifies, the juſt ancients lived, or were accepted) is one in Nature, though not in Degree, with that Truth the Gentiles apoſtatized from, and therefore are ſaid to have lived without Faith, Righteouſneſs, or God in the world; for which the wrath was revealed. Whereas, had they lived up unto it, glorifying God as God, according to the Manifeſtation of himſelf in their hearts and conſciences, they would have had, not the revelation of wrath, but of the "Righteouſneſs of faith," by which the juſt in all ages have lived acceptably with God: For without faith no man can pleaſe God, in any age; as without holineſs (that flows from true faith) no man ſhall ever ſee the Lord.

VII. And laſtly, I do earneſtly intreat the unprejudiced reader to obſerve theſe two notable paſſages, which, with my conſideration of them, ſhall conclude the ſcripture-proofs I have urged for the univerſality of the Light, and Spirit of God, antecedent to Chriſt's appearance in the fleſh.

Acts x. 34, 35. Rom. ii. 13, 14, 15, 16, "Then Peter opened his mouth, and ſaid, Of a truth, I preceive that God is no reſpecter of perſons; but in every nation, he that feareth him, and worketh righteouſ"neſs, is accepted with him. For not the hearers of the law are juſt before God, but "the doers of the law ſhall be juſtified: For when the Gentiles which have not the "law, do by nature the things contained in the law, theſe having not the law, are a law "unto themſelves, which ſhew the work of the law written in their hearts; their con"ſciences alſo bearing witneſs, and their thoughts the mean while accuſing or elſe ex"cuſing one another, in the day when God ſhall judge the ſecrets of men by Jeſus Chriſt, "according to my goſpel."

Theſe ſcriptures are a ſevere check to all undervaluing apprehenſions of the bleſſed Light of God in man; and this appears in ſeveral particulars:

1. That God is no reſpecter of perſons in any nation: From whence I conclude, that 'All perſons and nations were and are lighted, as well Gentiles as Jews.'

2. That here are men (not of the circumciſion made with hands) who fear God, work righteouſneſs, and are doers of the law, not from the obligation of an outward law, for they had none, but the 'inward work of the law writ upon their hearts; which is a demonſtration that they had not only the Light as a reprover, but as a teacher and leader, whereby they came to fear God, and work righteouſneſs: Which is elſewhere ſaid to be the "concluſion of the matter, and whole duty of man." Since, then, no man that fears God, and works righteouſneſs, and keeps the pure law of God in the heart, (which the ſcriptures teſtify ſome Gentiles did) can be ſaid to do ſo, and yet be void of the True Light, that objection of the Heathen's ignorance of the True God, and that none by the Light within was ever reproved for not believing Jeſus to be Chriſt, vaniſheth of courſe. For ſuch as lived up moſt ſincerely to the Lord in their own conſciences, acknowledged, moſt readily, the glorious appearance of Light when in the fleſh.

Eccleſ. xii. 13, 14.

They were the great pretenders to ſcriptures that would not come to Chriſt; the traditional, literal, and ordinance-men, who alſo rejected and crucified him. On the other hand, had not Cornelius and the Centurion, with many others, been upright livers to the Light within, neither had Peter been ſo received by the one, nor Chriſt ſo followed by the other: But that meaſure of the Divine Light, which they had hitherto obeyed, as the "more ſure Word of Prophecy," led them naturally to the riſing of the "Day-" ſtar;" which, tho' a more glorious Manifeſtation, yet not of another Light, Life or Spirit; for there are not two Lights, Lifes, Natures or Spirits in God: He is one for ever in Himſelf, and his Light one in Kind, however variouſly he may have declared himſelf, or manifeſted it at ſundry times of the world: His Truth is one, his Way is one, and his Reſt one for ever.

But laſt of all, that which greatly rejoices good men is this, that the narrowneſs of ſome mens ſpirits in this world, will not be found able to exclude virtuous Gentiles from their reward in the other: But, maugre all the heat, petulancy, conceitedneſs, and fleſhly boaſting of carnal Chriſtians, "ſuch as fear God, and work righteouſneſs, and "are doers of the law written in the heart," we are aſſured ſhall be accepted and juſtified of God, in the day that he will judge the ſecrets of all men by Jeſus Chriſt, according to Paul's goſpel: And if any man bring another, let it be accurſed. Amen.

I have here, on purpoſe, overlooked many very pregnant inſtances, both in the Old and New Teſtament-writings, for brevity's ſake, in which the righteouſneſs of the Gentiles hath, in ſeveral caſes, more evidently appeared, than that of ſome of the Jews, and which undeniably teſtifies to the ſufficiency of the Light within, both to manifeſt that which was good from that which was evil, and alſo to give ability to ſuch as truly minded its illumination, whereby they were enabled to do the one, and to reject the other: Such were Abimelech, Cyrus, Darius, the Ruler that came to Chriſt, and many others, which I ſhall omit to mention more particularly; the chief bent of my mind being to demonſtrate the trruh of my aſſertion from their own writings.

Gen. xx. 4. and xxi. 22. 2Chron. xxxvi. 23. Ezra i, 2, 3, 4, 5. and vi. 3, 12. Dan. vi. 26, 27. Matt. ix. 18.

CHAP. VII.

That the Gentiles believed in One God. That he enlightened all men with a Saving Light. That men ought to live piouſly. That the ſoul is immortal. That there is an eternal recompence. The whole called Gentile-divinity. The firſt point proved by ſixteen teſtimonies.

Chap. VII.

HAVING proved briefly, tho' I hope fully and truly, from the ſcriptures, that the Gentiles in general were lighted with a Divine Light, I ſhall now make it my buſineſs to evidence the truth thereof, by moſt undeniable inſtances out of their own writings. And becauſe I am willing my defence both of the Light within, and thoſe of them who obeyed it, ſhould turn to the cleareſt and beſt account, I will endeavour to reſolve the whole into as plain a method, as the matter, and their way of delivering it, will allow me.

Firſt, then, from their own authorities I am taught to affirm, That the Gentiles believed in One Holy, Infinite and Eternal God.

Secondly, That they did therefore ſo believe, becauſe God had imprinted the knowledge of himſelf on their hearts; or, in our language, that he had lighted all mankind with a Divine Light, which, if obeyed, would lead to eternal happineſs.

Thirdly, That they held and practiſed high ſanctity of life.

Fourthly, That they affirmed the Immortality of the Soul, and Eternal Rewards of Felicity, or Miſery, according to man's obedience to, or rebellion againſt, the eternal God his Creator: Which excellent principles, true and clear, being the reſult of their diſcourſe on thoſe ſubjects, do worthily deſerve, in my eſteem, the ſtile of divinity; which is the denomination, I hope, I may, without offence, beſtow upon them in this diſcourſe.

That the Gentiles did acknowledge and believe there was but One Supreme Being, that made all things, who is Infinite, Almighty, Omnipreſent, Holy and Good for ever, I ſhall produce ſome of thoſe many authorities that aſſert the ſame, and by divers ſcriptures underneath, of the like tendency, tho' of higher authority, ſhow their agreeableneſs to divine revelation, in which I have the practice of very antient fathers of the church to juſtify me.

Clem. Alex. Strom. l. 5. I. Orpheus, one thouſand two hundred years before Chriſt, thus expreſſeth his belief of God: ‘His hand reaches to the end of the ſea, his right hand is every where, and the earth is under his feet. He is Only ONE, begot of himſelf, and of him alone are all things begot; and God is the FIRST and the LAST.’ (a)

Hereby not only telling us, there was a God, but attributing to him Almighty Power and Omnipreſence; which ſhows he meant no Statuary-Deity, but God that made the heavens and the earth.

Clem. Alex. Strom. l. 5. II. Heſiod, ‘Of all, which do not die, thou art King and Lord: None can contend with thee concerning thy Power. (b)

This emphatically proves God to have been but One, and Omnipotent, in their belief.

Clem. Alex. Strom. l. 5. III. Thales, a very ancient Greek philoſopher tells us, ‘That there is but One God; that he is glorious for ever and ever.’ And he openly confeſſeth, ‘That he is called Καρδιογνώστης, HE WHO KNOWS HEARTS.’ (c)

Thales being demanded what God was, ‘That,’ ſaith he, ‘which has NEITHER BEGINNING NOR END.’

Another aſking, If a man might DO ill, and conceal it from God? ‘How,’ ſaith he, ‘when a man that THINKS it cannot?’

‘Men ought to believe,’ ſaith Cicero, in his name, ‘that God ſees all things.’

Clem. Alex. Strom. l. 5. IV. Sibylla, ‘There is One God, who alone is Infinite, and without Beginning.’ (d)

Again, ‘Who can ſee with fleſhly eyes the Heavenly, True, and Immortal God, whoſe ſeat is in the higheſt heavens?’ (e)

This Sibyl is aged above two thouſand years. The Queſtion implies her faith that God was a Spirit, as Chriſt himſelf alſo teſtifies.

Jamblich. V. Pythagoras, a modeſt, but diligent and retired man, in his ſearch after heavenly things, ſaith, ‘That it is man's duty to believe of the Divinity that it is; and that it is in ſuch a manner, as to mankind, that it overlooks them, and neglects them not: For we have need of ſuch a government, as we ought not in any thing to contradict; ſuch is that which proceeds from the Divinity: For the Divinity is ſuch, that to it doth of right belong the dominion of all.’ Again, ‘God reſembleth Light and Truth.’ In another place, ‘God himſelf inhabits the Loweſt, and Higheſt, and the Middlemoſt; There is no being nor place without God.’ (f)

Juſt. Mart. ‘God is One: He is not, as ſome conceive, out of the world; but entire within himſelf, as in a complete circle, ſurveying all generations. He is the Salt of all Ages, the Agent of his own Powers and Works; the Principle of all things: One Heavenly Luminary or Light, and Father of all Things; Only Wiſe, Inviſible, yet Intelligible.’ (g)

Which very pathetical account of the Divine Being, ſo correſpondent with Scripture, yet he a ſtranger to it, (I mean the Words only, for the Matter, in this point, he weightily hits) deſerves very ſerious conſideration and acknowledgment from all, eſpecially thoſe who would not narrow God's mercies to their own time or party.

VI. To the ſame purpoſe ſpeaks Heraclitus, that ſenſibly-afflicted philoſopher for the world's impieties and idolatries; whoſe very ſorrowful, yet ſound and ſmart expreſſions, ſhow they came from a mind deeply touched. In one of his epiſtles to Hermodorus, his friend, he thus ſeemeth, after a while, to addreſs himſelf to Euticles, and the reſt of his enemies, that impeached him for being an enemy to their Stony Gods: ‘ Thus I ‘ ſhall be condemned of impiety by the impious. What thinkeſt thou? Shall I ſeem ‘ impious to them for diſſenting from their Gods? If blind men were to judge of ſight, ‘ they would ſay Blindneſs were Sight: But O ye ignorant men, teach, us firſt, what ‘ God is; that when ye declare us to be impious, you may be believed. Where is God? ‘ Shut up in temples? O pious men! who place God in the dark! You ignorant people! ‘ Know you not that God is not made with hands?’ (h)

(a) ‘He ſtretcheth out his hand over the ſea.’ Iſa. xxiii. 11.---‘For the Lord your God, he is God in heaven above and in the earth beneath,’ Joſh. ii. 11. ‘I am alpha and omega, the beginning and the end, the firſt and the laſt.’ Rev. xxii. 13.

(b) ‘God is not the God of the dead, but of the living.’ Mat. xxii. 32.---‘The Lord is king for ever,’ Pſal. x. 16. ‘A Great King above all gods.’ xcv. 3. ‘King of kings, and Lord of lords,’ 1 Tim vi. 15. ‘Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever.’ Pſal. xlv. 6.

(c) ‘Glorious in holineſs.’ Exod. xv. 4.---‘God had glory before the world began.’ See John xvii. 5.---‘I the Lord ſearch the heart, I try the reins.’ Jer. xvii. 10.---‘He declareth unto man his thoughts.’ Amos iv. 13.---‘God is from everlaſting to everlaſting God.’ Pſal. xc. 2.

(d) ‘Thou art God alone.’ Pſal. lxxxvi. 10. ‘Beſides me there is no God.’ Iſa. xliv. 6. ‘There is but One God.’ 1 Cor. viii. 5, 6.

(e) ‘No man has ſeen God at any time.’ 1 John iv. 12. ‘Heaven is my throne.’ Acts vii. 49. ‘The Lord's throne is in heaven.’ Pſal. xi. 4. ‘And hear thou in heaven thy dwelling-place.’ 1 Kings viii. 30.

(f.) ‘He that cometh to God, muſt believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him.’ Heb. xi. 6. ‘The eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth.’ 2 Chron. xvi. 9. ‘God is Lord of heaven and earth.’ Acts xvii. 24.---‘And the government ſhall be upon his ſhoulder.’ Iſa. ix. 6.---Again, ‘God is Light, and in him is no darkneſs at all.’ 1 John i. 5.---‘I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life.’ John xiv. 6.

(g.) ‘A God nigh at hand.’ See Acts xvii. 27. Jer. xxiii. 23.---‘One God, who is above all, through all, and in you all.’ Epheſ. iv. 6.---‘God is Light; and upon whom doth not his Light ariſe?’ 1 John i. 5. Job xxv. 3.---‘One God and Father of all.’ Eph. iv. 6. ‘Now to the King, Eternal, Immortal, Inviſible, the Only Wiſe God, be Glory, &c.’ 1 Tim. i. 17.

This is a moſt clear and ample teſtimony againſt their idols; mixed with a religious deriſion; yet qualified by a kind of lamentation. Surely Heraclitus believed in God, yea, and that he was LIGHT too, and ſuch an one as ſhould never ſet; by whom he elſewhere ſays, ‘ He had overcome the enemies of his ſoul.’ Clem. Alex. Strom. l. 2.

VII. Anaxagoras, eſteemed noble by birth, but more noble for his knowledge and virtue, who was maſter to Socrates, taught thus concerning God; ‘ That God is an Infi‑ ‘ nite Self-moving Mind: That this Divine Infinite Mind is the Efficient Cauſe of all ‘ things; every thing being made according to its ſpecies by the Divine Mind; who, when ‘ all things were confuſedly mingled together, came and redueed them to ORDER.’ (i) Lact. Falſ. Ref. 1. 5. Cic. de Nat. Deor. 1. Aug. de Civ. Dei. lib. 8.

Which doubtleſs is ſo true, that Anaxagoras had no ſmall ſhare of True Light, to give this account of both God and the Creation. And indeed, his memory was celebrated by the Greeks, for having very much improved their underſtanding concerning God and Immortality.

VIII. Socrates, That good Heathen, if, without offence to the profeſſors of Chriſtianity, I may ſay ſo, not only confeſſeth to ONE GOD, but, I am of opinion, they will think he gives good reaſon why he doth ſo. He lays down, ‘ That the Mind,’ a name which they frequently called God by, ‘ is the Diſpoſer and Cauſe of all things.’ Or, in other words of his, thus, ‘ God is ONE, Τὸ ὂν αὐτῷ ἕκαστον, ἕκαστον αὐτῷ, τὸ καλὸν αὐτῷ, τί ζώης εἶδος, ‘ Perfect in Himſelf, giving the being and well-being of every creature.’ (k) Plat. phæd.

And this he giveth his reaſons for: ‘ * That GOD, not chance, made the world, and ‘ all creatures, is demonſtrable from the reaſonable diſpoſition of their parts, as well for ‘ uſe as defence; from their care to preſerve themſelves, and continue their ſpecies: ‘ That he particularly regards man: In his Body, from the excellent upright form ‘ thereof, from the gift of ſpeech, from Τας τῶν ἀφροδισιῶν ἡδονὰς συνεχῶς παρέχειν. In his Soul, ‘ from the excellency thereof above others, both for divinations, and predicting dangers: ‘ That he regards particulars, from his care of the whole ſpecies: That he will reward ‘ ſuch as pleaſe him, and puniſh ſuch as diſpleaſe him, from his power to do it, and ‘ from the belief he hath imprinted in man that he will do it; profeſſed by the moſt ‘ wiſe and civilized cities and ages: That he at once ſeeth all things, from the inſtances ‘ of his Eye, which at once over-runs many miles; and of the Mind, which at once ‘ conſidereth things done in the moſt diſtant places. * That God knoweth all things, ‘ whether they be ſaid, done, or ſecretly deſired. That God takes care of all creatures, ‘ is demonſtrable from the benefits he gives them, of light, water and fire, ſeaſonable ‘ production of fruits of the earth: That he hath particular care of man, from the nou‑ ‘ riſhment of all plants and creatures for man's ſervice; from their ſubjection to man, ‘ though they exceed him never ſo much in ſtrength; from the variety of man's Senſe, ‘ accommodated to the variety of objects, for neceſſity, uſe and pleaſure; from Reaſon, ‘ whereby he diſcourſes, through reminiſcence, from ſenſible objects; from Speech, ‘ whereby he communicates all that he knows, gives laws and governs ſtates. * That ‘ God, notwithſtanding he is inviſible, hath a Being; from the inſtances of his miniſters, ‘ inviſible alſo, as thunder and wind; and from the ſoul of man, which hath ſomething ‘ with,

* Xen. memor. 1.
* Id. eod.
* Id. 4.

(h) ‘ The heaven of heavens cannot contain thee.’ 1 Kings viii. 27. 2 Chron. vi. 18.---‘ What houſe will ‘ ye build me?’ Acts vii. 49---‘ God dwells in the Light.’ 1 Tim. vi. 16.—‘ To whom will ye liken God?’ ‘ What likeneſs will ye compare unto him?’ Iſa. xl. 18.---‘ God is a Spirit,’ John iv. 24.

(i) ‘ But to us there is but One God, the Father, of whom are all things.’ 1 Cor. viii. 6.---‘ Where waſt ‘ thou when I laid the foundation of the earth?’ Job xxxviii. 4.---‘ And the earth was without form.’ Read the chapter, in which is declared, ‘ God's making and beautifying heavens and earth, and all living creatures ‘ therein.’ Gen. i. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and ſo to the end.---‘ Thou, Lord, madeſt the heavens, and the earth, and all that in them is.’ Acts iv. 24.

(k) Theſe notable arguments, urged for the proof of a Divine Super-intelligent Being, and his Creation and Providence, may well agree with thoſe pathetical expreſſions of Job, the Pſalmiſt, and ſeveral Prophets, Evangeliſts and Apoſtles, concerning God's creating the world, and upholding it to this day; his laying the foundations thereof; his providence over the lillies and the ſparrows; his bringing forth fruits in due ſeaſon; his lights by day, and by night; that the diſciples ſhould take no thought what they ſhould eat and drink, or put on; that there is a ſpirit in man, and the inſpiration of the Almighty gives underſtanding: And laſtly, ‘ Can any hide himſelf in ſecret places that I ſhall not ſee him, ſaith the Lord?’ Jer. xxiii. 24.---No; ‘ If I ‘ take the wings of the morning, and flee to the uttermoſt part of the earth, thou art there,’ Pſal. cxxxix. 9. ‘ And by me kings reign, and princes decree juſtice,’ ſaith God. Prov. viii. 15.---‘ And is every where.’ Joſh. ii. 11.---And orders all.’ Wiſd. xi. 20.---‘ There is but One God, and none elſe beſides him.’ Eph. iv. 6.--- ‘ In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth.’ Gen. i. 1, 2, 3.---‘ In him we live, move, and ‘ have our being.’ Acts xvii. 21.---Thus he ſees and hears all, and is every where. Pſal. xxxiv. 9, 10, 11.

‘ with, or partakes of the Divine Nature, in governing thoſe that cannot ſee it. Finally, ‘ that he is ſuch, and ſo great, as that he at once ſees all, hears all, is every where, and ‘ orders all.’

So that here we have Socrates's faith in God, and his reaſons for it; drawn from the outward creation, and the inward divine ſenſe, which he had from Divine Inſtinct, or Nature, in him; in which he lived, and for which he willingly died, as afterwards will be related.

IX. Timæus Locrus, in his “ Work of Nature,” thus argumentatively expreſſeth himſelf of God: ‘ One Principle of all is unbegotten. For if it was Begotten, then ‘ were it no more that Principle; but That of which it were begotten would be the ‘ Principle (l).’

* Clem. Alex. Strom. l. 5. 2 Kings xix. 19. Mark xii. 32. 1 Mim. ii. 5.

Suitable to this ſaith Clemens Alexandrinus; * namely, “ Hear, O Iſrael: The Lord, “ thy God, is One; and him only ſhalt thou ſerve.”

Thus did he endeavour to refute the Gentiles, and prove the ſcriptures out of their own writings. But again,

De Anim. Mund.

Timæus affirms, ‘ That God IS; and that he is a Spirit; and that he is the Au‘ thor of all Light.’ Which how ſober and true it is, let the ſcriptures here inſerted teſtify (m).

Clem. Alex. Strom. l. 5.

X. Antiſthenes, one of Socrates's ſchool, as it were by way of paraphraſe upon that ſaying, “ Whom have ye likened me unto? ſaith the Lord;” thus ſpeaks? ‘ He is ‘ like none; becauſe no man can know him from a LIKENESS, or IMAGE (n).”

By which we may perceive he did not believe Him to be an Image, ‘ who could not ‘ be known by an image,’ nor any thing that could be ſeen with carnal eyes: A ſtep beyond the Romaniſts, that teach, as they darkly fancy, by Images.

XI. Plato, the famous doctor of Gentile-Divinity, ſcholar to Socrates, whom the Greeks, for his heavenly contemplation and pious life, ſurnamed Divine, gives us his faith of God in theſe words; ‘ God is Firſt, Eternal, Ineffable, Perfect in himſelf; ‘ that is, Needing none; and ever Perfect, that is, abſolute in all times; and every way ‘ perfect, that is, Abſolute in every part, Divinity, Eſſence, Truth, Harmony, Good. ‘ Neither do we ſo name theſe to diſtinguiſh one from the other, but rather by them all ‘ to underſtand One. He is ſaid to be GOOD, becauſe he beſtows his benefits upon all, ‘ according to their ſeveral capacities, and ſo is the Cauſe of all Good: Fair, or BEAU‘ TIFUL, becauſe he is, in Eſſence, both More, Better and Equal: Truth, becauſe ‘ he is the Principle of all truth, as the Sun is of all Light (o).’

‘ Moreover; God, not having any Parts, can neither be locally moved, nor altered by ‘ qualities: For if he be altered, it muſt be done by Himſelf, or ſome other: If by ſome ‘ other, that other muſt be of greater Power than he: If by Himſelf, it muſt be either ‘ to better, or to worſe: Both which are abſurd.

From all theſe it follows, That God is incorporeal; and by all which it is as evident, how true, how reaſonable, and how firm a belief Plato had of One Eternal Being and Father of all.

Clem. Alex. Strom. l. 5. Exod. xv. 11. Pſal. cxxxvi. 4, 5, 6.

XII And Lyricus Menalppides, praying, ſaith, ‘ Hear me, O Father, thou Wonder ‘ of men, who always governeſt the Living Soul.’

This plainly preaches to us their belief of One Eternal God, and his excellent attributes.

Clem. Alex. Strom. l. 5.

XIII. Parmenides Magnus, as ſaith Plato in Sophiſta, writes concerning God on this wiſe; ‘ He is not begotten; neither is he liable to any death: Like a chain, whoſe links are whole and round, and always firm, and void of a beginning (p).’

What was this chain, but the Eternal God, by whom all things were made? “ The “ Firſt and the Laſt.”

XIV. Zeno, a grave and wiſe philoſopher, who inſtituted the way of the Stoicks, but not of Virtue: For both the Cynicks and Stoicks, moſtly teaching ſuch doctrine as tend to good life, may well be ſaid to have been the followers of Socrates, the excellent man of his time; only they a little differenced themſelves by ſome particular ſeverities,

---

(l) ‘ In the beginning was the Word; and the Word was with God, and the Word was God: All things ‘ were made by him,’ &c. John i. 1, 2, 3, 4.

(m) ‘ God is a ſpirit.’ John iv. 24.---‘ God ſaid, Let there be light, and there was light.’ Gen. i. 3.---- ‘ He is the father of lights.’ James i. 17.

(n) ‘ That thou mayeſt know, that there is none like me in all the earth,’ ſaith God, Exod. ix. 14. and viii. 10.----‘ Who in heaven can be compared unto the Lord? Who among the ſons of the mighty can be likened ‘ unto the Lord?’ Pſal. lxxxix. 6.

(o) ‘ I am Alpha and Omega, the firſt and the laſt.’ Rev. xxii. 13. ‘ The everlaſting God.’ Iſa. xl.--- ‘ The way of the Lord is perfect.’ Pſal. xviii, 30. ‘ He is a rock; his work is perfect; for all his ways are ‘ Judgment; a God of truth, and without iniquity, juſt and right is he.’ Deut. xxiii. 4.---‘ For I am the ‘ Lord.’ Iſa. xlv. 5.----‘ I change not.’ Mal. iii. 6.

(p) ‘ Thy throne is eſtabliſhed of old, thou art from everlaſting.’ Pſal. xciii. 2. ‘ In the Lord Jehovah ‘ is everlaſting ſtrength.’ Iſa. xxvi. 4.

rities, too affected, to which the mild, ſerious, and unaffected piety of Socrates gave them no encouragement; though none of them trod in a more ſelf-denying path, than hiſtory tells us he walked in. This Zeno, and his diſciples, were vigorous aſſertors of One Infinite and Eternal God, as by their doctrines may appear.

Laert.

Zeno tells us, ‘ That God is an Immortal Being; Rational, Perfect, or Intellectual in beatitude; void of all evil; provident over the world, and things in the world; not of human form, MAKER of ALL, as it were FATHER of ALL.’ Again; God, and the Power of God, is ſuch, as that it governs, but is not governed. It governeth all things; ſo that if there were any thing More Excellent, he could not poſſibly be God.’ (b)

This was Zeno's faith of God: And I cannot believe that the worſt of our antagoniſts has ſo far abandoned all reaſon, as to call it falſe, or idolatrous. That he taught it, as well as thought it, let us hear ſome of his followers.

Laert. de Irâ Dei, 6. 10.

XV. Chryſippus alſo avers, as his belief of a God, ‘ That the world was made by him;’ Conſequently he believed there was one: ‘ For if,’ ſaith he ‘ there be any thing which can procreate ſuch beings, as man endued with reaſon is unable to produce, that, doubtleſs, muſt needs be ſtronger, and greater, and wiſer than man: But man cannot make the celeſtial things; therefore that which made them, tranſcended man in art, counſel, prudence and power: And what can that be but God?’ (r)

Thus far Chryſippus, the Stoick, in reference to God. But again,

Plut. Antip. de Mund. l. 7.

XVI. Antipater, a famous, ſerious, and acute Stoick, in his Diſcourſe of God and the World, declares himſelf to us after this manner; ‘ We underſtand that which we call GOD, a Spirit full of Intelligence or Wiſdom; a Living Nature, or Divine Subſtance; Bleſſed and Incorruptible; doing good to mankind; PRESENT through the whole world; receiving ſeveral denominations from the diverſity of his appearances, and the various operations and effects of his divine power ſhewn therein.’ (ſ)

Which kind of evangelical definition may very well induce us to believe him to have been, at leaſt, of thoſe who knew God; but, we hope, not of thoſe, who, when they knew him, “ glorified him not as God.”

Indeed, what we have hitherto produced of them all, may worthily be accounted Divinity; and not the worſe for being Gentile, ſince GOD is alſo therein to be admired. So forcible, ſo true, and ſo conſpicuous are their aſſertions, and their reaſons for them, that they who will yet believe ‘ there was not a Meaſure of the Eternal Fulneſs of all Divine Light ſhining in the hearts of theſe Heathens, to give them ſome knowledge of the glory of the Only True and Inviſible God,’ muſt not think it ſtrange, if, upon their example of incredulity, after all their proteſtations for, and profeſſions of, the Chriſtian religion, any ſhould believe them to be arrant Phariſees, and that they are overcaſt with the darkeſt clouds of envy and uncharitableneſs. For my part, I am of the mind that many thouſands of Chriſtians, at leaſt ſo reputed, (I mean not of the Rabble neither) believe not God ſo clearly, nor are able to give better reaſons for what they do believe of him, than theſe exhibited in this firſt part of the Gentile-Divinity.

Thus much concerning God, with reſpect to Himſelf, his Creation, and Providence.

CHAP. VIII.

The ſecond Fundamental of Gentile-Divinity, viz. ‘ That God hath imprinted the knowledge of himſelf on the Minds of all Mankind;’ proved from twelve pregnant teſtimonies, as well of whole Societies, as particular perſons; and compared with Scripture.

Chap. VIII.

IT will be now requiſite that I give an account of their belief in God, with reſpect to that diſcovery he is pleaſed to give of himſelf unto mankind, how, and where; which amounts to what is laid down in my ſecond aſſertion, viz. ‘ That God imprint- ‘ eth

---

(q) ‘ Now to the King Eternal, Immortal, Inviſible, the Only Wiſe God, be honour and glory for ever.’ 1 Tim, i. 17.---‘ The rich and poor meet together; the Lord is the maker of them all.’ Prov. xxii. 2.---‘ Come now, let us reaſon together, ſaith the Lord.’ Iſa. i. 18. Be ye holy, for I the Lord your God am holy.’ Levit. xi. 44.---‘ One God and Father of all, of whom are all things.’ Eph. iv. 6. 1 Cor. vi. 8, 6.----‘ Who is a God like unto thee?’ Exod. xv. 11.----‘ The Almighty is Excellent in Power.’ Job xxxvii. 23.---‘ And his Kingdom rules over all.’ Pſal. 103, 19.

(r) ‘ Lord, thou art God, which haſt made heaven and earth, and all that in them is.’ Acts iv. 24. ‘ God that made the world.’ Pſal. xc. 2. ‘ All nations are unto God but as a drop of the bucket, and the duſt of the ballance.’ Iſa. xl. 15.

(ſ) ‘ God is a ſpirit.’ John iv. 24.----‘ In whom are hid all the treaſures of Wiſdom and Knowledge.’ Col. ii. 3. ‘ Of the incorruptible God.’ Rom. i. 23.----‘ The Lord is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works.’ Pſal. cxlv. 9.----‘ God is not far away from every one of us.’ Acts xvii, 27.

'eth the knowledge of himſelf in the Minds of mankind;' or, 'That God's way of 'manifeſting himſelf to mankind is, by enlightning the ſoul with his own Divine 'Light, which, being obeyed, leads to bleſſedneſs.'

That this was their doctrine, and the ground of their knowledge they had of God, be pleaſed to weigh theſe their following very plain, yet very weighty expreſſions.

Tim. de Anim. Mund. Jamblich. I. 'The Mind only,' ſaith Pythagoras, and his diſciples, 'ſeeth the eternal God, 'the Ruler and Father of all things.---What greater pleaſure than to behold the Serene 'Aſpect of God?---What things are agreeable to God, cannot be known, unleſs a 'man HEAR GOD HIMSELF. (a) They mutually exhorted one another, not to divide 'aſunder the * GOD THAT WAS IN THEM; for that it ought to be their care to pre'ſerve their union with God, and one with another.'---Again ſaith ‡ Timæus, one of the exacteſt of that ſchool, 'The moſt excellent thing the ſoul is awakened to is, her 'GUIDE OR GOOD GENIUS (that is, a Meaſure of the Divine Light and Spirit) but if 'ſhe be rebellious to it, it will prove her dæmon or tormentor. But having overcome 'theſe things,' ſaith Pythagoras, (to wit, evils) 'thou ſhalt know Σύστασιν, the Co-ha'bitation or Dwelling-together of the IMMORTAL GOD and Mortal Men, whoſe work 'is Life; the work of God is Immortality, Eternal Life.'

* Jambl.

‡ De Anim. Mund.

Thus far the Pythagoreans, and certainly far enough to prove the aſſertion; for next to hearing and ſeeing God himſelf, his dwelling and tabernacling with men, what is there of greater ſpiritual intimacy or union? O the folly and great uncharitableneſs of thoſe profeſſors of chriſtianity, that exclude both ſuch men, and ſuch knowledge, the kingdom of God, becauſe it is not delivered in abſolute ſcripture phraſe, whilſt it imports much of the very ſubject of them, as to Divine Viſion, Union with God, and Eternal Life! I wiſh they do not take Imagination for Knowledge, and Preſumption for Enjoyment. But to go on,

II. Hieron, that ancient philoſopher, intituled the Univerſal Light ſhining in the conſcience, which ever witneſſed, by its reproof, againſt evil; and, if obeyed, led man to immortality, 'A DOMESTICK GOD, or GOD WITHIN the hearts and ſouls of men.' (b) 'The eternal Mind is God, MANIFESTING HIMSELF in every PARTICULAR of 'us.' God is that which in mortal men gives them to know aright concerning God.

Certainly theſe Gentiles had a high veneration for that Light which manifeſted darkneſs, who made it their rule, their guide, their domeſtick God: They ſet him not at a diſtance without them; but believed in him as God the WORD, ſpeaking to them in their own CONSCIENCES. In which reſpect, the Minor Poets notably expreſſed themſelves.

III. Byas, Prince of his country Priene, being invaded by enemies, and ſeveral of the inhabitants put to flight, with their greateſt wealth; being aſked, why he alſo carried not his choiceſt goods with him? anſwered, 'I do carry my GOODS with me.' (c) 'He bore them,' ſaith Valerius Maximus, 'in his breaſt, not to be ſeen by the eye, but 'prized by the ſoul, incloſed in the narrow dwelling of the mind, not to be demoliſhed 'by mortal hands; which is always preſent with thoſe who ſtay, and never deſerteth or 'forſaketh thoſe that flee.'

Valer. Max. 7. 2.

Certainly then, they thought this Divine Principle the Greateſt Treaſure, the Sureſt Companion, the Beſt Comforter, and only Sanctuary of the Soul in the greateſt extremities, enduing it with piety and patience, and giving that contentment, which was able to wade through the deepeſt calamities.

IV. Sophocles is alſo of that number that bears teſtimony to Divine Illumination. 'God grant,' ſaith he, 'that I may always be ſo happy as to obſerve that venerable 'ſanctity in my words and deeds, which is commanded by theſe Noble Laws (ſpeaking 'of the laws written in men's conſciences) which were made in heaven: GOD is their 'Father, not mortal Nature; neither ſhall they ever be forgotten or abrogated; for 'there is in them a Great God, that never waxeth old.' (d)

Œdip. Tyr.

(a) 'The pure in heart ſhall ſee God.' Mat. v. 8.——'He dwelleth in immortality; no mortal eye can 'approach or behold him.' 1 Tim. vi. 16.——'One thing have I deſired of thee, O Lord, to behold the 'beauty of the Lord.' Pſal. xxvii. 4.——'The things of God knows no man, but the Spirit of God, 'but God hath revealed them to us, by his Spirit.' 1 Cor. ii. 10, 11. 'I will dwell in them.' 2 Cor. vi. 16. —'Is Chriſt divided?' 1 Cor. i. 13. 'And I heard a great voice, ſaying, The tabernacle of God is with men. 'He that overcometh, ſhall inherit all things: I will be his God, and he ſhall be my ſon.' Rev. xxi. iii. 7.

(b) 'In the beginning was the Word; and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.' John i. 1. ——'The Word is nigh thee, in thy heart and in thy mouth.' Rom. x. 8.——'I dwell in the high and holy 'place; with him alſo that is of a contrite and humble ſpirit.' Iſa. lvii. 15. 'Ye are the temples of God; 'and that the Spirit of God dwells in you?' 2 Cor. vi. 16. 'Whatever may be known of God is manifeſt'ed within; for God hath ſhewed it unto them.' Rom. i. 19.

(c) 'Lay up treaſure in heaven, where neither moth nor ruſt can corrupt, nor thief break through and ſteal.' Matt. vi. 20.——'This treaſure have we in earthern veſſels.' 2 Cor. iv. 7.——'Fear not, for the Lord thy 'God it is that doth go with thee; he will not fail thee, nor forſake thee.' Deut. xxxi. 6. 'In all their 'afflictions he was afflicted.' Iſa. lxiii. 9. 'The Lord is a preſent help in the time of trouble.' Pſalm xlvi. 1.

(d) 'Shall not the uncircumciſion that is by nature, if it fulfil the law, judge thee, who by the letter and 'circumciſion doſt tranſgreſs the law? For he is not a Jew that is one outward;' (implying ſuch as keep

' This is,' ſaith he again, ' with reſpect to mans conſcience, a Divine, a Sacred Good, ' God the Overſeer.'

Certainly in themſelves very ſeraphick ſayings, ſhewing a clear faith of God, and that way of inward diſcovery he is pleaſed to make of himſelf to mankind. For it was he that ſaid, ' Truly there is but One only God, who made the heavens and the earth.' Clem. Alex. Strom. l. 5.

V. It is frequently ſaid of Socrates, ' He had the Guide of his Life within him; ' which, it was told his father Sophroniſcus, ſhould be of more worth to him than five ' hundred maſters. He called it his good angel or ſpirit: That it ſuggeſted to his mind ' what was good and virtuous, and inclined and diſpoſed him to a ſtrict and pious life: ' That it furniſhed him with divine knowledge, and very often impulſed or moved ' him to preach (though in the Streets) to the people, ſometimes in a way of ſevere re' proof, at other times to information; and otherwiſe gently to diſſuade them from in' temperance, and vanity of life, particularly from ſeeing of Plays; and to exhort them ' to repentance, reformation, and ſelf-denial, in hopes of immortality.' (e) Plutarch. de Gent. Socr.

VI. Plato is not wanting to bring in his vote, for farther confirmation of our aſſertion on the behalf of the Gentiles: ' The LIGHT and SPIRIT of God,' ſaith he, ' are as Wings to the Soul, or as that which raiſeth up the ſoul into a ſenſible commu' nion with God above the world, which the mind of man is prone to ſlug or bemire it' ſelf withal.' (f) And adds Plotin, a famous Platoniſt, ' God is the very ROOT or ' LIFE of the Soul.' (g) Again, ' Man hath a Divine Principle in him, which maketh ' the true and good man.' And the Platoniſts in general held Three Principles to be in man; the firſt they called Νȣ̃ς, MIND, INTELLECT, SPIRIT, or Divine LIGHT. The ſecond, Ψυχὴ, the ſoul of man. The third they called Εἴδωλον ψυχῆς, the ſoul's image, which, ſay they, is her vital energy upon the body, and the feminine faculty of the ſoul. In Phæd. Ænead. 1. cap. 1.

By all which it is evident, though I could produce many more teſtimonies from their writings, that they believed and held Divine Illumination and Inſpiration; and that ſuch a principle reſided in man, even the Eternal Νȣ̃ς, or MIND; which is to ſay, in plain Engliſh, GOD HIMSELF; by which, alone the ſoul could become what God would have it be.

VII. Cleanthes, the Stoick, ' alloweth not mankind to be governed of right by the ' dictates of their own Nature, which barely renders them Men; but by that Di' vine, Infinite, and Eternal Nature, which is GOD univerſally diffuſed or ſown through ' the whole race of man, as the moſt ſure and infallible Guide and Rule. ' To live,' ſaith he ' according to this knowledge and direction, is truly to live according to ' Virtue; not doing any thing that is forbidden. The virtue and happineſs of a man ' depends upon the cloſe correſpondence of his mind with the Divine Will of HIM who ' governeth the univerſe.'

Again, ſaith the ſame Cleanthes, ' The knowledge of GOD is imprinted upon the ' Minds of men.' (h)

VIII. Menander, ſignifying God to be good, ſaith, ' Every man hath a Good Dæ' mon as ſoon as he is born, an Holy Inſtructor in governing of the life; as that I ' may confeſs him to be an Evil Dæmon, who hurts the life of a good man.' Then he ſubjoins, ' That a good God is in all; that God is perfectly good, and that he is ' Good in All.' Again, on another occaſion, he ſaith, ' God, who is always near, ſees ' this; for God is not a God afar off.' (i) Clem. Alex. Strom. L. 5.

IX. Philo, though a Jew born, yet a very ſerious and refined philoſopher, gives us his judgment in this particular, very poſitively and to purpoſe; ' How ſhould the ſoul ' of man,' ſaith he, ' know God, if he did not inſpire her, and take hold of her by his ' Divine Power?' (k) Leg. Alleg. L. 1.

Again, ' That the Divine Reaſon we have from God is an Infallible Law; not a ' mortal rule given by this or that mortal; no lifeleſs precepts written in papers, or ' upon the law is an inward Jew). Rom. ii. 27, 28. ' But the Word of God (nigh in the heart) ſhall abide for ' ever.' Iſa. xl. 8.

---

(e) ' There is a ſpirit in man; but the inſpiration of the Almighty giveth uuderſtanding.' Job xxxii. 8. ' For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the ſons of God.' Rom. viii. 14.

(f) ' God is light ' 1 John i. 5.——' In thy light ſhall we ſee light.' Pſal. xxxvi. 9.—' God is not far ' from every one of us; for in him we live, move, and have our being; for we are alſo his offspring, as cer' tain of your own poets have ſaid.' Acts xvii. 27, 28.——One of whom was Aratus, whom the apoſtle quotes as ſpeaking truth, and employs it againſt them, to prove a True God, and to introduce his goſpel; which if it ſhewed their apoſtacy, it alſo implies, that there had been Heathens rightly apprehending of God; elſe ſurely the apoſtle would never have cited the poet's ſaying for a confirmation of his own doctrine.

(g) ' Without me ye can do nothing. The Spirit of truth ſhall lead you into all truth.' John xvi. 13 ' For the Grace of God that bringeth ſalvation hath appeared unto all men, teaching us, that denying un' godlineſs and worldly luſts, we live ſoberly and righteouſly and godly in this preſent world.' Tit. ii. 11, 12. ' God hath ſhewn unto thee, O man, what is good.' Mich. vi. 8.

(h) ' Which ſhew the works of the law writ in their hearts. Rom. ii. 15.'

(i) ' A manifeſtation of the Spirit is given unto every one to profit withal.' 1 Cor. xii. 7.—One God, and ' Father of all, who is above all, and through all.——The Lord is Good unto all.' Pſal. cxlv. 9.

(k) ' The things of God knoweth no man, ſave the Spirit of God.' 1 Cor. ii. 11.——I will put my law ' in their minds, and write them in their inward parts; I will be their God, and they ſhall be my people,' Heb. viii. 10, 11.

'upon pillars, but immortal, being engraven by the Eternal Nature in the minds of 'men.'

This is an undeniable teſtimony to the law written in the heart, as a more excellent diſpenſation than that which is written in paper, or engraven on pillars. But farther,

X. Nor is Plutarch wanting to the proof of this aſſertion on behalf of the Gentile-Divinity; who thus delivers himſelf, ſpeaking of the Principle of God in the conſcience: 'It is a law,' ſaith he, 'not written in tables or books, but dwelling in the Mind 'always, as a living Rule, which never permits the ſoul to be deſtitute of an interior 'guide.' Again, 'To debaſe this ancient faith of mankind, and natural belief, which 'is planted in all reaſonable ſouls, is to overthrow the ſtrong and everlaſting foundation 'of virtue.' (l)

Plut. Dion. Pruſ.

He is doubtleſs very zealous and ſenſible, on the behalf of an Inward Divine Principle.

XI. But be pleaſed to hear what Epictetus ſays in this matter, who was admired for his great virtue and living, and whoſe memory is preſerved in great reſpect among many who would think themſelves much wronged if they ſhould not be accounted Chriſtians, 'When you have ſhut your gates,' ſaith he, 'and made it all dark within; that is to 'ſay, are retired to your own dwelling, as alone; do not ſay that you are alone, for you 'are not alone, but God is within: What need have you of outward light to diſcover 'what is done, or to light to good actions, who have God, or that Genius, or Divine 'Principle for your Light?' (m) as the following words do farther import.

Diſ. lib. 1. cap. 14.

But above all the Gentiles that have been mentioned, I mean in point of plain and poſitive expreſſions, (for I will prefer the life of none before that ſelf-denying martyr Socrates) let us hear with great attention what kind of lecture Seneca will read us upon the ſubject handled; truly ſomething very weighty.

Senec. Ep. 41.

XII. 'The multitude,' ſaith Seneca, 'is the worſt argument. Let us inquire what 'is beſt to be done, not what moſt uſually is done, and that may ſettle us in the poſſeſ'ſion of everlaſting happineſs; not what is allotted by the Vulgar, the worſt interpre'ter of Truth. I have,' ſaith he, 'a clearer and more certain Light, by which I may 'judge the truth from falſhood: That which appertains to the felicity of the ſoul; the 'Eternal MIND will direct to.' (n) That was the Light Within, doubtleſs, Seneca meant. Again, 'It is a fooliſh thing for thee to wiſh what by thee cannot be obtained. 'God is near thee, and he is in thee. The Holy Spirit ſits or reſides within us, the 'Obſerver of our good and evil actions: As he is dealt with by us, he deals with us.' But yet farther, 'We have this great gift,' ſaith Seneca, 'That VIRTUE (meaning the 'Principle, or GOD) hath ſent her LIGHT before into the MINDS of ALL; for even 'they that follow her not, ſee her.' Where obſerve, reader, how he confeſſeth to the Univerſality of the Light, yet lays the fault of rebellion againſt it, not upon the Light (as do our enemies) but upon ſuch as refuſe to follow it; implying their voluntary rejection of its heavenly diſcoveries. Again, 'Wondereſt thou that men go to God? 'God comes unto men: Nay, which is more near, he cometh INTO man; and he 'makes the heart of every good man his habitation.' Yet again hear him; 'Nothing 'is cloſed from God; he is within our ſouls, and he cometh into the midſt of our 'thoughts.' And laſtly, 'Every man,' ſaith he, 'has GOD, indued with that, which if 'he forſake it not, he ſhall ariſe LIKE God.' (o)

De Benef. c. 17.

Epiſt. 73.
Epiſt. 83.
Epiſt. 31.

How much more weighty, O ſober and impartial reader, are theſe inward doctrines of the virtuous Gentiles, than the vehement clamours, and uncharitable exclamations of empty Chriſtians againſt them? who ſeem as if they were afraid of nothing more than inherent holineſs, though of Chriſt's working: Reputing it a kind of undervaluing of his blood, to feel the inward benefit of it; accounting us the greateſt hereticks for aſſenting to the greateſt truth, to wit, The ſufficiency of his Univerſal Light in the hearts of men to Salvation; challenging us to prove it by ſcripture, or any credible hiſtory, and objecting the heathens ignorance and idolatry againſt the truth of its diſcoveries and efficacy of its power; which the very Gentiles defend us againſt, and confirm the univerſality and power of it.

CHAP.

(l) 'Becauſe whatever may be known of God is manifeſt within; for God hath ſhewed it unto them; 'But becauſe they liked not to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them up to vile affections.' Rom. i. 19, 26, 28.

(m) 'O Lord, thou haſt ſearched me, thou underſtandeſt my thoughts afar off; whither ſhall I go from 'thy Spirit.' Pſal. cxxxix. 1, 2, 7.

(n) 'We have a more ſure Word of Prophecy. 2 Pet. i. 19.—'The Lord hath ſhewed unto thee, O man, 'what is good, and what he doth require of thee.' Micah vi. 8.—In him we live, move, and have our be'ing.' Acts xvii. 28.—'Such as men ſow, ſuch ſhall they reap. Gal. vi. 7.—'That was the true Light, 'which enlighteneth all mankind.' John i. 9.

(o) 'Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men.' Rev. xxi. 3.—'He that declareth unto man his 'thoughts, the Lord, the God of Hoſts, is his name.' Amos iv. 13.—'While ye have the Light, walk in 'the Light, that ye may be the children of the Light. God is Light.' John xii. 36.— 1 John i. 5.

CHAP. IX.

That this was not only the Doctrine and Faith of the Gentiles, but the very Primitive Doctors or Fathers both ſo held, and ſo expreſſed themſelves. Eight Teſtimonies produced for Proof thereof.

BUT as I have hitherto ſhewn, both that the Gentiles believed in One God, and had a very clear apprehenſion of the Light or Divine Principle placed in man, from which all heavenly knowledge is derived; and that this Divine Light, or Spirit, or Principle, was by them aſſerted to be the moſt certain Guide, and infallible Rule of Faith and Practice; and farther, that the ſcriptures produced do abundantly verify their doctrines; ſo to the end the angry men I have mentioned ſhould not count it a prophaning of holy writ, or think I am the only man that ever had that favourable apprehenſion of theſe Gentile-doctrines, I am willing to inſtance ſome of the moſt primitive and approved Fathers of the Chriſtian Church; and by a ſhort view of what they believed in reference to the preſent ſubject, with their way of phraſing ſuch belief, we may the more clearly perceive how far thoſe Gentiles are by them reprehenſible, either with reſpect to their ſoundneſs in judgment, or expreſſion; that if it be poſſible, we may ſolve their objection againſt the univerſality and ſufficiency of this bleſſed Light.

Lived after Chriſt, Anno 123.

I. Juſtinus Martyr, whom I therefore chuſe to begin with, becauſe from a learned Philoſopher becoming an honeſt Chriſtian, and conſtant Martyr (from whence he was ſurnamed Martyr) he could the better tell us the difference of the change: But ſo far was he from reputing the Principle of God within men, heterodox, or inconſiſtent with the purity of the Chriſtian Religion, that with no ſmall earneſtneſs he therefore pleads againſt all coercive power upon conſcience, and the pompous worſhip of the heathens, in their temples (as his Apologies will inform us) 'Becauſe,' ſaith he, 'God hath built to himſelf a Natural Temple in the Conſciences of men, as the place wherein he would be worſhipped; and that it is there men ought to look for his appearance, and reverence and worſhip him;' or to that purpoſe (a).

Apolog.

Lived after Chriſt, 190.

II. To this doth Clemens Alexandrinus, that earneſt contender againſt the apoſtate Gentiles, plainly aſſent; who often, but more particularly in theſe few places following, recommends to us the Light, or Word Within. 'It is the voice of Truth,' ſaith he, 'that Light will ſhine out of darkneſs. Therefore doth it ſhine in the HIDDEN part of mankind, that is, in the HEART; and the rays of knowledge break forth, making manifeſt, and ſhining upon the inward man, which is hidden.---Chriſt's Intimates and Coheirs, are the diſciples of the Light.'

Admon. ad Gent.

He farther expreſſeth himſelf in another place; 'Man cannot be void of divine knowledge, who naturally, or as he cometh into the world, partaketh of Divine Inſpiration; as being of a more pure eſſence, or nature, than any other animal.'

Strom. L. 5.

And, as aſſenting to the doctrine of ſome ancient philoſophers and other Gentile authors (for againſt the Gentiles of his time, I ſuppoſe, he may make uſe of no leſs than two hundred and fifty) he doth frequently atteſt the truth of the doctrine of the 'Divine Light in Man,' as man's concomitant to all good works; as one paſſage eminently proves. 'I earneſtly,' ſays he, 'exhort thee, becauſe I would have thee ſaved, and that would Chriſt alſo, who offers thee Life in One Word. But thou mayeſt ſay, What is it? It is the WORD of TRUTH, the incorruptible Word, which regenerates mankind, and leads him again to TRUTH; the ſpur that pricketh on to ſalvation, who expelleth deſtruction, chaſeth away death, and hath built a temple in mankind, that it may place GOD in man.'

Clem. Alex. in Admon. ad Gent.

I know not any of the ancients that was more profoundly read in the doctrines of the Gentiles, than this Clemens Alexandrinus: And who, to prove the verity of the Chriſtian religion againſt them, doth frequently cite and inſert the writings of the more venerable of them; and with the very books of their admired anceſtors, accurately argue the unreaſonableneſs of their oppoſition to Chriſtianity, the very top of virtue, and perfection of goodneſs: As did Chriſt, to prove himſelf the True Meſſiah, urge the Scriptures to thoſe (pretended great) believers in them, as an aggravation of their incredulity.

Lived Anno 195.

III. Tertullian, than whom there was not any more ſharp againſt the diſſolute Gentiles of his Time (as his moſt quaint Apology for the Chriſtians, and in it his ſevere charge againſt their enemies, doth particularly ſhew) thinks it to be neither hereſy, nor heatheniſm, as it is commonly underſtood, to believe and aſſert, 'That a life according to the holy guidings of the Univerſal Light in the Conſcience, is a kind of Natural Chriſtianity, or, to be Naturally a Chriſtian.

(a) If the reader will pleaſe to inform himſelf of the reaſons that induced Juſtin to turn Chriſtian, he will find the Light Within acknowledged to be the efficient cauſe thereof; for it was the Principle of God in his conſcience that continually pleaded the Chriſtians cauſe within him, and who at laſt overcoming, Juſtin believes in Chriſt, and dies for him too. Now what diſgrace is this to the Light Within?

And though in his Apology he ſtabs with the ſharpeſt points of wit, reaſon and truth, the cauſe of Degenerate Philoſophy, or thoſe that were undeſervedly called Philoſophers; yet he lays it ſtill on the ſide of their great apoſtacy from that Noble Principle, which worthily renowned their predeceſſors; the being of whoſe ſtock, and aſſuming whoſe titles without their virtue, they vainly eſteemed warrant enough for their pretenſions to real ſcience; not unlike the Phariſees among the Jews, as hath already been obſerved.

Lived about Anno 203.

IV. Origen (who I may ſay was twice a Chriſtian; firſt, by education; and next, by choice; a ſtrong defender of Chriſtianity, as his notable books againſt Celſus and others, do abundantly witneſs) treating of that Divine Light with which God has illuminated mankind, as his univerſal endowment, calls it, 'An immutable Law; which, 'with the knowledge of good and evil, is engraven upon the heart, and grafted into 'the ſoul of man.'

Lived about Anno 315. De Cult. Ver.

Lactantius, ſcholar to Arnobius, who writ ſmartly againſt the apoſtate Gentiles, eſteemed a good and acute man, thus delivers himſelf about the matter in hand: 'The Law of 'God,' ſaith he, 'is made known unto us; whoſe Light, like the ſtars to the mariner 'in the night-ſeaſon, clearly diſcovers to us the path of wiſdom. That Law is Pure 'and Unſpotted REASON (not inconſonant with, nor unintelligible by, NATURE) diffuſed 'through all the world; in itſelf Unchangeable and Eternal: Which, that it may deter 'man from vice, doth faithfully, by its injunctions and prohibitions declare unto man 'his duty.'---Again, 'The way to aſcend up to the houſe of Truth, is to behold within us, that there is One moſt High God, who made and governs all things: That 'Chriſt is God's Ambaſſador and Builder, ſent unto men; and as they receive him into their Hearts, he buildeth a divine and immortal temple IN them.'

Lib. de Irâ; cap. 2.

Lived about Anno 325.

VI But let us deliberately read what the ſo much admired Athanaſius ſays to the Gentiles, who did frequently caſt out that (vulgar) objection to the Chriſtians, which is now made againſt us: 'How know you that yours is the right way?'

Athanaſ. cont. Gent.

'The way whereby to attain the knowledge of God, is within us. Which is 'proved from Moſes; who ſaith, The Word of God is within thy Heart; and from this 'ſaying of Chriſt, The Faith and Kingdom of God is within you. If then,' ſays Athanaſius, 'the Kingdom of God be within us, juſt ſo are we able to underſtand the Word, 'or Voice of the Father.'

Which ſolid, ancient and great truth, could not but highly aggravate the blame of ſuch as were infidels to it, becauſe it was but the doctrine of their famed philoſophers, more clearly and ſcripturally expreſſed, as it doth abundantly teſtify to us upon what ground it was the Chriſtians believed, and practiſed their religion; not Tradition, however holy; but 'ſound internal conviction and revelation;' from no words without, but the Eternal Word of God in the heart, the great diſcoverer of the will and way of God to men. He that knows this Word, or Divine Principle, to reign in his heart, knoweth the kingdom of God come there, and his will done, even the ſanctification of the ſoul.

Lived about Anno 380.

VII. Chryſoſtom alſo is not wanting to aſcribe ſome honour to this holy Light we contend for; who not only confeſſeth the Light mentioned in the firſt of John, to be CHRIST, the WORD-GOD, who lighteneth all mankind coming into the world; but alſo avers it to be of a ſaving nature, unto all who believe in it, and follow it. 'Wherefore,' ſaith he, 'Let none blame the Light they are not ſaved, but their own rebellion, 'who refuſe to be ſaved by it.' This he very ſolemnly calls, 'A Teacher or Inſtructor, 'dwelling in man's Nature;' or that no man is without a teacher to inſtruct, inſpire, help and aſſiſt him in the way that leads to eternal life.

I will conclude theſe Chriſtian teſtimonies with a paſſage of Auguſtin, not unſuitable to the buſineſs in hand.

Lived about Anno 393.

VII. Auguſtin, in his diſcourſe on John, has this very notable paſſage, viz. 'That 'God is properly King of Minds, or Souls; becauſe when he is received in, he governeth by his Divine Power and Spirit in the heart: Therefore is not his kingdom 'after the manner of this world, but within:' And much to this purpoſe.

Again he diſtinguiſheth upon the word REASON: 'There is a ſuperior and inferior 'Reaſon, ſaith he. The inferior is a mere rational Creature, or that Underſtanding 'which diſtinguiſheth a Man from a Beaſt. But the ſuperior Reaſon is a LIGHT, or, 'as it were, a Power in mankind, dictating, revealing, and enjoining divine, eternal 'and intirely good things: As for example, when it ſhall ſay, This is ſin, thou 'oughteſt not to commit, but avoid it. Why? Becauſe it offends God.'

Thus far of Primitive Chriſtian-Divinity, from about 132 years after Chriſt, to about 400 years after Chriſt, by way of confirmation of that part of the Gentile-Divinity, which might, with leaſt credit, be embraced. For to cite never ſo many primitive Chriſtian authors to prove a God, Holy Life, and the Immortality of the Soul, the other points of Gentile-Divinity, would look like labour in vain; ſince none that believes them to have been Chriſtian, ought to doubt of their holding ſuch general truths: But the wonder is, to quote them in the language of the ſo much, yet ſo undeſervedly, decried and abuſed Quakers; viz. That not only the Beſt Gentiles, but moſt Approved Chriſtians of the primitive times, confeſs to a Divine Light, Principle, Word, or Spirit in man, whoſe inſpiration gives infallible underſtanding; and as man is guided by it, he ſhall be recovered out of that dirt and mire ſin hath plunged him in; and it will free him from the ſnares of pleaſures, enlighten his eyes, inſpire his ſoul, and lead him gently by the hand in the way of eternal righteouſneſs; whoſe reward from God will be immortal and eternal life.

CHAP. X.

The Third Part of Gentile-Divinity, viz. That they were Men of Virtuous Lives, and taught the Indiſpenſibleneſs thereof to Life Eternal. Proved by Numerous Inſtances.

1673. Chap. X.

IT may now be time that I diſpatch the other two parts of the Gentile-Divinity, which I ſhall endeavour with all convenient brevity.

There are many inſtances of their pious doctrine, and ſingular examples of their virtue: I will inſtance in a few, to convince, if I can, ſuch as ſcarcely believe any good of them, (and the rather, I fear, that they may charge the bad upon the Light) that their doctrines and practice with reſpect to good living, were and are very commendable, and approved of all good Chriſtians.

I. Pittacus Mitilenæus, one of the Seven Wiſe Men of Greece, as they were called; his Apophthegms were theſe:

Lived about the year of the world 3313. Before Chriſt about 630 years; which is 2330 years ſince. Stob. 28.

'What thou takeſt ill in thy neighbour, do not thy ſelf. Reproach not the unhappy; for the Hand of God is on them. Reſtore what is committed to thy truſt. Bear with thy neighbour. Love thy neighbour. Reproach not thy friend, though he recede from thee a little. Acquire Honeſty. Seek Obſequiouſneſs. Love Diſcipline, Temperance, Prudence, Truth, Faith, Experience, Dexterity, Society, Diligence, Oeconomy, and Piety.'

II. Chilon, another of them; he was ſo juſt in all his actions, that in his old age he profeſſed, 'He never had done any thing contrary to the conſcience of an upright man; only that of one thing he was doubtful: Having given ſentence againſt his friend, according to law, he adviſed his friend to appeal from him (his judge); ſo to preſerve both his friend and the law.' Agellius relates it thus: 'When his life drew towards an end, ready to be ſeized by death, he ſpoke thus to his friends about him:' "My words and actions, in this long term of years, have been almoſt all ſuch as I need not repent of; which, perhaps, you alſo know. Truly, even at this time, I am certain I never committed any thing, the remembrance whereof begets any trouble in me, unleſs this one thing only; which whether it were done amiſs or not, I am uncertain: I ſat with two others, as judge upon the life of my friend; the law was ſuch, as the perſon muſt of neceſſity be condemned, ſo that either my friend muſt loſe his life, or ſome deceit be uſed towards the law: Revolving many things in my mind, for relief of a condition ſo deſperate, I conceived that which I put in practice to be of all other the moſt eaſy to be borne: Silently I condemned him, and perſuaded thoſe others who judged to abſolve him. Thus I preſerved in ſo great a buſineſs the duty both of a Judge and Friend: But from the act I receive this (x) trouble, that I fear it is not free from perfidiouſneſs and guilt, in the ſame buſineſs, at the ſame time, and in a publick affair, to perſuade others contrary to what was in my own judgment beſt." Doubtleſs a man of Light, Sight and Conſcience.

Lived at the ſame Time. Laert.

Of his Apophthegms, or ſayings, theſe few are delivered to us by Laertius. He ſaid, 'Providence of future things, collected by Reaſon, is the Virtue of a Man (y).' Being demanded, Wherein the Learned differ from the Unlearned? He anſwered, 'In a Good Hope.' When aſked, What is hard? He ſaid, 'To conceal Secrets, to diſpoſe of Leiſure well, and be able to hear an Injury.' Therefore ſaid Chilon to his brother, 'I can bear injuries; thou canſt not.'

III. The precepts of the Seven Sophiſts of Greece, in general; Thales, Solon, Periander, Cleobulus, Chilon, Bias, and Pittacus (called the Seven Wiſe Men) collected by Soſiades, who flouriſhed above two thouſand years ago.

'Follow

(u) 'Thou therefore, which teacheſt another, teacheſt thou not thyſelf?' Rom. ii. 21. 'Love thy neighbour as thyſelf; for I am the Lord.' Levit. xix. 18. 'Finally, Brethren, whatſoever things are true, whatſoever things are honeſt, juſt, pure, lovely, and of good report, think on theſe things.' Phil. iv. 8.

(x) 'The Gentiles who had not the law, became a law unto themſelves, doing the things contained in the law; their conſciences bearing witneſs, and their thoughts the mean while accuſing or excuſing.' Rom. ii. 14, 15.

(y) 'To depart from evil is a good underſtanding.' Job xxviii. 28. 'And the Hypocrite's hope ſhall periſh.' Job. viii. 13. 'Why do you not rather take wrong?' 1 Cor. vi. 7.

Stob. 28. ‘ Follow God: Obey the Law: Worſhip God: Reverence thy Parents: Suffer for ‘ Juſtice: Know thyſelf: Conſider mortal things: Reſpect Hoſpitality: Command thyſelf: Honour Providence: Uſe not Swearing: Speak well of that which is good: ‘ Diſparage none: Praiſe Virtue: Do what is Juſt: Abſtain from Evil: Inſtruct thy ‘ Children: Fear Deceit: Be a Lover of Wiſdom: Judge according to Equity: Curb ‘ thy Tongue: Examine without Corruption: Do that whereof thou ſhalt not repent: ‘ When thou haſt ſinned, be penitent: Confine thine Eye: Perfect quickly: Purſue ‘ what is profitable: Be in Childhood modeſt, in Youth temperate, in Manhood juſt, ‘ and in Old Age prudent, that thou mayeſt die untroubled (z).’

Thus far the Wiſe Men, who were therefore ſo called, becauſe of their extraordinary virtue; and truly deſerved the name of chriſtian and virtuous, more abundantly than they who bear it now.

Stob. 22. IV. Pythagoras very truly tells us, ‘ The diſcourſe of that philoſopher is vain, by ‘ which no paſſion of a man is healed.’ And indeed, to what ſerves their preaching, and hearing, and ſacraments, that are neither cured nor curing?

Jamblich. ‘ All which is determined to be done, ſhould aim at, and tend to, the acknowledgment of the Deity.’

‘ Endeavour not to conceal thy faults with words, but to amend them by reproof.’

‘ This is the principle,’ ſaith Pythagoras, ‘ and the whole life of men conſiſts in this, ‘ That they follow GOD; and this is the ground of right philoſophy. (a)

‘ Purity is acquired by expiations, and by refraining from murder and adultery and all ‘ pollution. (b)

‘ We ought either to be ſilent, or to ſpeak things that are better than ſilence.’

‘ Temper is the ſtrength of the ſoul: For it is the Light of the ſoul, clear from paſſion. (c)

‘ It is better to die, than to cloud the ſoul by Intemperance or Paſſion.’

Pythagoras returns not reproaches for reproaches (d). Though ſome profeſſors of Chriſtianity reproach when they are not reproached. Behold the difference betwixt a ſober Heathen, and ſuch ſcolding Chriſtians, but therefore no True Chriſtians.

Laert. V. Anaxagoras held, ‘ That Contemplation of God was the end of life; and that liberty of mind, which proceeds from ſuch heavenly meditation.’

To one who blamed him for neglecting his country; ‘ Wrong me not,’ ſaid he, ‘ my ‘ greateſt care is my country;’ pointing to Heaven.

Suidas ſaith, ‘ That he was caſt into priſon by the Athenians, for introducing a new ‘ opinion concerning God; and baniſhed the city, though Pericles undertook to plead ‘ his cauſe.’

Joſephus ſaith, ‘ That the Athenians believing the Sun to be God, which he affirmed ‘ to be without Senſe and Knowledge, he was by the votes of a few of them condemned ‘ to death.’

However, thus they writ upon his grave, as engliſhed by T. Stanley.

Here lies, who through the trueſt paths did paſs
To th' world celeſtial, ANAXAGORAS.

Which was an high teſtimony to his good life, and their belief of his attaining of immortality.

Plat. Phed. VI. Socrates tells us, ‘ Right Philoſophy is the way to true Happineſs; the offices ‘ whereof are two, To contemplate God, and To abſtract the ſoul from Corporal ‘ Senſe (e).’

Xen. Mem 3. ‘ To do Good, is the beſt courſe of life (f).’

p. 780. ‘ Virtue is the beauty, vice the deformity, of the ſoul.’

Clem. Alex. ‘ Nobility is a good Temper of ſoul and body.’

Strom. L. 5. Stob. 218. ‘ The beſt way of worſhipping God is, To do what he commands.’ An hard ſaying Xen. Mem. 4. to profeſſors of Chriſtianity, but a great truth.

p. 803. Id. Mem. 1. ‘ Our prayers ſhould be for bleſſings in general; for God knows beſt what is good for 722. 4. 804. ‘ us. God conſiders Integrity, not Munificence.’ This judgeth formal Chriſtians, with Id. Mem. 3. their exterior worſhip (g).

(z) Reader, theſe weighty ſayings are very Scripture itſelf, and that as well of the New, as Old Teſtament (ſo called), eſpecially where Chriſt ſaith, “ Swear not at all,” though ſpoke about ſeven hundred years before he came into the world.

(a) ‘ Let us hear the concluſion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man.’ Eccleſ. xii. 13.

(b) ‘ Pure religion and undefiled is, to keep himſelf unſpotted from the world.’ Jam. i. 27.

(c) In this ſenſe, I fear we may ſay, that ſome have no light in them.

(d) ‘ Who when he was reviled, reviled not again.’ 1 Pet. ii. 23.

(e) ‘ The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wiſdom.’ Pſal. cxi. 10.

(f) ‘ If any man will come after me, let him deny himſelf, and take up his croſs, and follow me.’ Luke ix. 23.

(g) Reader, Theſe ſententious expreſſions to have every one of them a ſcripture, would be tedious and ſuperfluous; for they are almoſt word for word ſcripture itſelf, as who knoweth ſcripture may plainly ſee.

'The office of a wiſe man is, to diſcern what is good and honeſt, and to ſhun that which is diſhoneſt.'

'They who know what they ought to do, and do it not, are not wiſe and temperate, but Fools and ſtupid (h).' Ibid.

Libanius ſaith, 'Of all things which man can call his, Socrates conſidered the Soul to be chief; and that, He only is truly happy, who purifieth that from vice (i).' Apolog.

He taught every-where, 'That a Juſt man, and an Happy man, were all one.' Clem. Alex, Strom. 2. 417.

He ſaid, 'He wondered at thoſe who carve images of ſtone, that they take ſuch care to make ſtones reſemble Men, whilſt they neglect and ſuffer themſelves to reſemble Stones.' He meant, they had ſtony hearts, as the prophet expreſſeth it. Laert.

Being demanded, Who live without perturbation? He anſwered, 'They who are conſcious to themſelves of no evil thing (k).'

Being demanded whom he thought richeſt? He anſwered, 'He who is contented with leaſt; for Content is the riches of nature (l).' Stob. 40. Stob. 40.

Being demanded what Continence is? He anſwered, 'Government of corporal pleaſures.' Stob. 84.

'Good men muſt let the world ſee, that their manners are more firm than an Oath.' Stob. 114. This ſaying ſhews a ſtate of integrity above ſwearing, that Socrates had a ſight of, and preferred before ſwearing, as I may again obſerve. But to proceed, let us hear the charge of his enemies, and his Defence.

Melitus, ſon of Melitus, a Pythian, accuſed Socrates, ſon of Sophroniſcus, an Alopecian; 'Socrates violateth the law, not believing the deities which this city believeth, but introducing ANOTHER God. He violates the law likewiſe in corrupting youth: The puniſhment death.'

The charge is the ſame to this day; good men are made offenders for a word, and darkneſs called light, and light darkneſs.

Soon after Anytus, who cauſed that bill to be preferred by Melitus, in that Socrates induſtriouſly aſſayed his overthrow, and the reſt of his comical aſſociates (for they were Comedians) ſent privately to him, deſiring him to forbear the mention of his trade; and aſſuring him, that he would thereupon withdraw his action. But Socrates returned him anſwer, 'That he would never forbear ſpeaking truth ſo long as he lived: That he would always uſe the ſame ſpeeches concerning him: That this accuſation was not of force enough to make him refrain from ſpeaking thoſe things, which he thought himſelf before obliged to ſay (m).' Again, obſerve his reſolution. Liban. Ap. p. 644.

'It is likely, that God, in his love to me, hath ordained that I ſhould die in the moſt convenient age, and by the gentleſt means. For if I die by ſentence, I am allowed the benefit of the moſt eaſy kind of death; I ſhall give my friends the leaſt trouble. Farther, if, when I give an account of my actions towards God and men, the judges think fit to condemn me, I will rather chuſe to die, than to beg of them a life worſe than death.'

'Yet that I die unjuſtly, it will not trouble me; it is not a reproach to me, but to thoſe who condemned me. 1 Pet. iii. 14. I am much ſatisfied with the example of Palamedes, who ſuffered death in the like manner: He is much more commended, than Ulyſſes the procurer of his death. I know both future and paſt times will witneſs, I never hurt, or injured any; but, on the contrary, have advantaged all that converſed with me to my utmoſt ability, communicating what good I could gratis, and not for gain.'

'I think it moſt unbeſeeming a philoſopher to ſell his advice, and extremely contrary to my practice; for ever ſince, by God's command, I firſt entered into Philoſophy (n), I was never known to take any thing, but keep my exerciſes in public, for every one to hear that will. I neither lock the door when I teach, nor go abroad to the multitude, and exact money of the hearers.' As ſome heretofore have done, and ſome in our times yet do.

Did not Socrates then excel the prieſts of our day? I mean as well ſome creeping non-conformiſts, as any other, who make a trade of it, and indeed it is their beſt. The righteouſneſs of this Gentile condemns their mercenary practice, who pretend to be Chriſtian miniſters; and giveth proof of an higher ſtate, than that to which they have yet attained.

VII. Antiſthenes, inſtitutor of the Cynicks, as they were called, and ſcholar to Socrates, Laert. & Suid. in vit. Antiſthen.

(h) So ſaith Chriſt, Mat. vii. 26, 27.

(i) 'The pure in heart ſhall ſee God.' Mat. v. 8.

(k) 'The fruit of the ſpirit is peace.' Gal. v. 22.

(l) 'But godlineſs, with content is great gain.' 1 Tim. vi. 6.

(m) 'Nothing they could do was able to draw him out of his endeavours to detect the looſe comedians, that ſought therefore his ruin.

(n) The word philoſophy hath been otherwiſe appropriated ſince thoſe days, as many other words have been; for it then ſignified a Love of Wiſdom, given by Pythagoras; which wiſdom was the way of holy living, not vain and untoward conteſts about impracticable things.

crates, taught, ‘ That virtue was the trueſt nobility; that piety was alone needful to laſting happineſs (o).---That true virtue ſtood not in ſaying, but doing that which was good: Not in much learning, or many words, but Upright Actions. In ſhort, that the principle of virtue is ſufficient to what wiſdom is needful, and that all other things ought to have reference thereto. That piety is the beſt armour, and virtuous perſons are always friends (p). That virtue is an armour none can either pierce, or take from good men. He prefers a Juſt man before his neighbour; and gives womens ſouls the ſame privilege to virtue with mens.’ He accounted Pleaſures one of the greateſt miſchiefs in the world; and being aſked, what Learning was beſt? he anſwered, “ That which unlearns men evil: For thoſe,” ſaith he, “ who would live for ever, muſt have a care that their lives be holy and juſt in this world (q).” Stob.

IX. From Diogenes, his conſtant ſcholar and friend, take this one very true and notable ſaying. Of Spiritual Exercitation, Laertius makes him ſpeak to this purpoſe, in his account of his doctrine: ‘ That where mens ſouls are deeply and frequently employed in that ſpiritual retirement, and waiting for divine ſtrength; and are often exerciſed in meditations upon the Eternal Mind; holy Revelations, or Illuminations, will occur, which enlighten the ſoul, and enable it the better to live and act virtuouſly (r).’

Valer. Max. 2. 10. Cic. pro. Bal. Laert.

X. Nay, ſo greatly were the piety and wiſdom of Xenocrates reverenced at Athens, about four hundred years before “ Swear not at all” was ſpoken by our Lord Jeſus, that the judges of that place would not offer to put Xenocrates upon his Oath in an high matter of evidence, in caſe he would have ſworn; becauſe they thought it an affront to his integrity, that his bare word ſhould not be preferred before all the oaths of other men; ‘ diſpenſing,’ ſays Valerius Maximus, ‘ with that to him, they would not have excuſed in one another.’ Which is no ſmall proof, that the Light, among the Heathens, impeached Oaths in evidence of man’s imperfection, as being but only ſupplemental, or in the place of remedies, againſt want of honeſty; and obviouſly eſteemed it an higher and more noble ſtate to arrive at the integrity which needs not the extraordinary and affrighting obligation of an oath, where mere fear of the curſe intailed upon perjury, and not an innate faithfulneſs, moſt commonly extorts true evidence: Which is a ſufficient anſwer to this queſtion, ‘ How, and by what light, we could have aimed at that perfection, or have known that doctrine, had not the ſcriptures been?

Cic. de Fin. 2.

XI. ‘ The chief good therefore,’ ſaid Zeno, ‘ is to ſquare our lives according to the knowledge given us from the Eternal Being (s), when the ſoul, entering into the path of virtue, walketh by the ſteps and guidance of Right Reaſon, and followeth God.’ Which brings to my remembrance theſe Stoical maxims delivered by Laertius, Cicero, Quintilian, &c. and collected by T. S. for us, charged upon Zeno, and his diſciples: Some of which I had formerly an occaſion to mention in another diſcourſe. They are theſe:

Laert. Ibid. Stob. Laert. Stob. Laert.

‘ A wiſe man is void of paſſion. A wiſe man is ſincere: A wiſe man is divine, for he hath God within himſelf. But a wicked man is an Atheiſt. The wicked are contrary to the good: God, he is good; ſo againſt God. A wiſe man is religious; he is humble; he only is a Prieſt; he only is a Prophet; he loves and honours his parents. A wiſe man only is Free. A wiſe man is void of Sin (t).’

Upon which I query, whether this amounts not to as much as what the ſcriptures teach, and theſe here inſerted tell you; “ That the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wiſdom, and to depart from iniquity a good underſtanding?”

Idem. Cic. Parad. Stob.

But farther to the ſame purpoſe: ‘ A wiſe man is innocent: A wiſe man is free. Wicked men are ſlaves.’ Again, ‘ A wiſe man is only perfect, for he wanteth no Virtue. A wicked man is imperfect, for he hath no Virtue (u).’

Whereby it is evident, that the Wiſdom they meant was virtue, in oppoſition to Vice, which they eſteemed folly, as doth the ſcripture frequently. As much as to ſay, thoſe who are thus good, are only wiſe.

(o) ‘ Ye are an holy nation, a royal prieſthood.’ 1 Pet. ii. 9.---‘ And hath made us kings, and prieſts,’ &c. Rev. i. 6.—‘ Bleſſed are they who hear the word of God, and keep it.’ Luke xi. 28.---‘ Where is the wiſe? where is the ſcribe? where is the diſputer of this world?’ 1 Cor. i. 20.

(p) ‘ Put on the breaſt-plate of righteouſneſs.’ Eph. vi. 14.

(q) ‘ The juſt ſhall live by faith.’ Heb. ii. 4.----‘ Without holineſs no man ſhall ſee the Lord.’ Heb. xii. 14.

(r) ‘ They that wait upon the Lord, ſhall renew their ſtrength.’ Iſa. xl. 31.---‘ The ſecret of the Lord is with them that fear him.’ Pſal. xxv. 14.

(ſ) Rom. ii. 14. 15.

(t) ‘ The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wiſdom.’ Pſalm cxi. 10. ‘ The rulers take counſel together againſt the Lord.’ Pſal. ii. 2. ‘ The wiſdom which is from above, is firſt pure, then peaceable.’ Jam. iii. 17.

(u) Pſal. cxi. 9, 10.

Again, ‘A wiſe man never lyeth. A wiſe man is peaceable, meek, modeſt, diligent, virtuous, conſtant, and only is incitable to virtue. Fools are not.’

Where it is obvious, that by fools they meant wicked and indocible people, who are ſtiff-necked, rebelling againſt God, not delighting to retain God in their knowledge. Chap. X. Idem.

XII. Plato thus: ‘To be like God, is to be holy, juſt, and wiſe; which is the end of man's being born, and ſhould be of his ſtudying philoſophy (w). That Virtue and Honeſty are all one;’ as ſaith Clemens Alexandrinus out of him. Theatr. cap. 3. 10.

This, reader, was the Doctrine; this the Study; and, which is beſt of all, this was the Practice, of many of the virtuous Heathens, who became “a law unto themſelves,” bounding their appetites, whether corporal or mental, within the approved limits of an Inward Holy Guide; like careful mariners, ſteering the courſe of their lives by the direction of that HEAVENLY STAR, which in the gentile night aroſe in their conſciences, to guide them unto a bleſſed immortality; which ſhall be the laſt point of their Divinity, and then we cloſe this diſcourſe with reſpect to them.

CHAP. XI.

That the laſt point of Gentile Divinity, to wit, Immortality and Eternal Rewards, is alſo very clearly and poſitively held forth by the ancient Heathens. Six teſtimonies from them, to prove it. Socrates's great Faith in particular; and the lofty ſtrain of the Pythagoreans.

THAT the Gentiles believed there was an immortality, and that all men ſhould hereafter be accountable for the deeds done in the body (a point but obſcurely laid down among the Jews themſelves) be pleaſed to take theſe few enſuing authorities, as a proof of what is aſſerted. Chap. XI.

I. Pythagoras, and the Pythagoreans; that they all held the Immortality of the Soul, conſider his and their doctrine in the point.

Firſt, he ſaid, ‘That the ſoul is Immortal.’

‘Next, ‘That the ſoul is incorruptible; it never dieth: For when it goes out of the body, it goes into the other world;’ the pure to God, the impure bound by furies in indiſſoluble chains (a).’ Plut. Plat. 4. 7. Stob. Phyſ. Plat. Phed.

Here Immortality and Rewards are aſſerted.

‘But when a man, who hath lived juſtly, dieth, his ſoul aſcendeth to the pure Æther (or Heaven) and lives in the happy ævum (or everlaſting age) with the bleſſed (b).’

II. Heraclitus. ‘If my body be over-preſſed, it muſt deſcend to the deſtined place. Ad Amph. Nevertheleſs, my ſoul ſhall not deſcend; but, being a thing immortal, ſhall fly up on high to heaven.’

III. Euripides, a grave Tragedian, whoſe work was to undo what wanton Comedians Clem. Alex. had done to undo the people, ſpeaks thus; ‘Who knoweth, whether to die be not to Strom. l. 3. live; and to live, to die (c).’

Surely he ſaid ſo not of any diſtruſt of immortality, but in belief of it, and that reward that would attend good men.

IV. Socrates: ‘The Body, being compounded, is diſſolved by death: The Soul, Plat. Phed. being ſimple, paſſeth into another life, incapable of corruption (d).’

‘The ſouls of the good after death are in an happy eſtate, united to God in a bleſſed Idem. inacceſſible place: The bad, in convenient places, ſuffer condign puniſhment (e).’

This puts the caſe of the ſufficiency of the Light to diſcover immortality to the very Heathens, out of all doubt; and not only ſo, but rewards too; ſince we have them here believing the righteous ſhall be ſaved, and the wicked damned. This made Socrates ſo chearful at his death; ſomething of which I think fit here to inſert.

‘Truly,’ ſays he, ‘did not I believe I ſhould go to the Juſt God, and to men better than any living, I were inexcuſable for contemning death: But I am ſure to go to God, a very good maſter, and hope to meet with good men; and am of good courage, hoping that ſomething of a man ſubſiſts after death; and that it is then much better with the good than with the bad (f).’

When he had made an end of ſpeaking, Crito, one of his followers, aſked him what directions he would leave concerning his ſons, and other affairs; and if they could do any thing that might be acceptable to him? ‘I deſire no more,’ ſaith he, ‘than what I have often told you: If you take care of yourſelves, whatſoever you do will be acceptable

---

(w) ‘Be ye holy, for I the Lord your God am holy.’ Levit. xi. 44, 45.
(a) Rev. xx. 12, 13, 14. Chap. xxi. 7, 8.
(b) 2 Cor. v. 8.
(c) 2 Cor. v. 8. Phillip. i. 21.
(d) Eccleſ. xii. 7.
(e) ‘The ſheep on the right hand, and the goats on the left.’ Mat. xxv. 31, 32, 33.
(f) 1 Cor. xv. 28, 29, 30, 31.

'table to me and mine, though you promiſe nothing: If you neglect yourſelves and 'VIRTUE, you can do nothing acceptable to us, though you promiſe never ſo much.' That, anſwered Crito, we ſhall obſerve: But how wilt thou be buried? 'As you think 'good,' ſaid he; 'if you can catch me, and that I give you not the ſlip.' Then, with a ſmile, applying himſelf unto us, 'I cannot perſuade Crito,' ſaith he, 'that I am any 'thing more than the carcaſe you will anon behold; and therefore he takes this care for 'my Interrment. It ſeems, that what even now I told him, that as ſoon as I have taken 'the poiſon, I ſhall go to the joys of the bleſſed, hath been to little purpoſe. He was my 'bail, bound to the judges for my appearance; you muſt now be ſureties to him, that 'I am departed. Let him not ſay, That SOCRATES is carried to the grave, or 'laid under-ground: For know, dear Crito, ſuch a miſtake were a wrong to my ſoul. 'Be not dejected; tell the world, my body only is buried; and that after what manner 'thou pleaſeſt. Yet,' ſaith Socrates, 'I may pray God, and will, that my paſſage hence 'may be happy; which I beſeech him to grant.' And in the ſame inſtant drank it off eaſily, without any diſturbance.

Obſerve Socrates his diſtinction betwixt being dead and departed.

'This,' ſaith Plato, 'was the end of the Beſt, the Wiſeſt, and moſt Juſt of men.' A ſtory, which Cicero profeſſeth he never read without tears.

This ends Socrates upon the preſent ſubject; and happy man was he to make ſo happy an end, as to die for the Only True God. He had great reaſon to believe (maugre the envious uncharitableneſs of ſome) that he would reward him, when it ſhall be ſaid to many bawling pretended Chriſtians, "Depart from me; I know you not. For as "men ſow, ſo ſhall they reap in the day of God."

I need not to tell the world, that Plato and other Heathens have written accurately upon that ſubject, when it is ſo notorious. Wherefore to cloſe up my teſtimonies upon this head, and whole diſcourſe of Gentile-divinity, I will preſent the reader with two ſhort paſſages, the one from Virgil; the other of the Pythagoreans, thus tranſlated to my hand, only a little varied, by an ingenious author.

Virg. Æneid. Lib. 6. v. 745.

V. Donec longa dies perfecto temporis orbe
Concretam exemit labem, purumque reliquit
Æthereum ſenſum, atque aurai ſimplicis ignem.

In Engliſh thus:

'Till that long day at laſt be come about
That waſted has all filth and foul deſire,
And leaves the ſoul celeſtial throughout,
Bathing her ſenſes in pure liquid fire.

To which agrees that Golden Diſtich of the Pythagoreans, as it hath been called;

Pythag. Aur. Carm.

VI. Ἢν δ' ἀπολείψας Σῶμα ἐς αἰθὲρ ἐλεύθερον ἔλθῃς,
Ἔσσεαι ἀθάνατος, Θεὸς ἄμβροτος, οὐκ ἔτι θνητός.

To this purpoſe:

Who after death once reach the heavenly plain,
Become like God, and never die again.

The Greek has it, as 'Immortal Gods.' Which Hierocles interprets thus: 'Herein ſhall good men reſemble the Deity, that they ſhall be Immortal, like God him'ſelf.'

Thus, reader, have I given thee a very true account of the Gentile-divinity, what was the Faith, what the Practice, and what the Prophecy and Hope of many Gentiles through this Light within; each of which had numerous followers.

Obſerve; They began where Jews and Chriſtians began; that is, with GOD; and they end with what they confeſs to be theirs, namely, a ſtate of IMMORTALITY, in which every one is rewarded according to their works. Only they are thus far to be commended before either of them, if we conſider many of our times, that they were more Certain, Plain and True in their acknowledgement of a divine light, law or principle in man; which, being obeyed, ſupplied them with daily wiſdom and ſtrength, and finally led them to God: And alſo were more Juſt to their Faith, by a life excelling the moſt of them in Virtue and Self-denial. And certainly, in that great and terrible day, "when God will judge the ſecrets of men by Jeſus Chriſt," according to Paul's Goſpel, ſuch pious Gentiles, who knowing God, glorified him as God, and conſcientiouſly did the things contained in his law, will be finally acquitted and rewarded.

CHAP. XII.

That the Heathens had a Sight of the Coming of Chriſt. That, and their refuſing to ſwear, prove the Sufficiency of the Light.

OVER and above what I promiſed; being rather willing to err on that hand, if yet it be erring; I ſhall briefly obſerve two things greatly importing our defence of the Light, and the ſatisfaction of our adverſaries, if it be true that they ſeek to be ſatisfied.

1. That the teſtimony of Socrates and Xenocrates about ſwearing ſufficiently prove to us, that by the Light they had they ſaw a ſtate above ſwearing, or a righteouſneſs excelling that of the legal Jews; which manifeſtly correſponds with what Chriſt ſaid; who, above four hundred years after them, taught, as what properly became the evangelical righteouſneſs, "Swear not at all."

2. That though their Light did not tell them the expreſs Names Chriſt ſhould be called by, yet they foreſaw and propheſied of his Coming, and how he ſhould come of a Virgin, and both What he was, and the Work he came to do, which the names given of the Holy Ghoſt did plainly import. Neither is it the mere knowing of ſo many Letters, Syllables, or Words that gives the true knowledge, or ſalvation, but the experiencing him to be That which he is, and wherefore he is ſo denominated. For to that end came he into the world. CHRIST ſignifies anointed, eminently with reſpect to that peculiar manifeſtation. JESUS, a Saviour, for he ſhould "ſave his people from their "ſins." EMMANUEL, which is to ſay, God with us, &c. That in this ſenſe he was prophetically held forth by the Gentiles, through that meaſure of Light they had, hear Plato and Virgil.

Marcil. Ficinus, who wrote the Life of Plato, that great Gentile, tells us among many other things, 'That being very ſeriouſly aſked by ſome that viſited him, as the laſt 'thing they had a mind to be informed about, How long men ſhould attend to his wri-'tings? (of which he ſeemed ſo chary, living and dying in the belief of what he re-'commended to the world) he ſolemnly anſwered, "TILL THAT MORE HOLY AND "DIVINE PERSON SHALL APPEAR TO VISIT THE WORLD, WHOM ALL MEN "OUGHT TO FOLLOW." At once both believing ſuch an one to appear, and then forbidding all to prefer that leſſer diſcovery he had given the world, through the improvement of his talent of Light, before that greater manifeſtation, which that DIVINE PERSON would bring with him into the world: As if he had ſaid, 'Mine may help you 'with reſpect to that knowledge which is your duty in this generation, and ſo point 'at Him that afterwards ſhall come; but I am not He, neither do I believe this the 'moſt excellent diſcovery that can be made. But as the leſſer Light may lead to the 'greater, and is at laſt ſwallowed up of it; ſo can I only point at Him; and when He 'is come, all I have done muſt yield to him: For I declare, that ALL ought to FOLLOW him; becauſe in following of him, they will obtain eternal bleſſedneſs.'

Let us now ſee what Virgil will add to this matter, as tranſlated in Euſebius. See Conſt. Orat. in Euſ. Virg. Bucol. Eclog. 4.

Sicelides Muſæ paulo majora canamus.

Ye Muſes, with a lofty wing,
Let us of higher matters ſing.

And what be they?

Ultima Cumæi venit jam Carminis ætas.

Who lives this age, will clearly ſee
Cumæa's Verſe accompliſh'd be.

This Cumæa (ſo called of her City) was a Sybil, who lived about 600 years before Chriſt, and propheſied of him.

Virgil wrote theſe verſes about forty years before Chriſt was born. I query if the Jews themſelves had ſo poſitive a ſenſe of the Meſſiah's Coming. But to proceed

Magnus ab integro ſeclorum naſcitur Ordo: Iſa. vii. 14, 15, 16, 17,
Jam redit & Virgo, redeunt Saturnia Regna. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23,
Jam nova Progenies Cœlo demittitur alto. 24, 25.

Th' Integrity of Times ſhall now renew again, Iſa. ii. 2, 3, 4, 5.
A Virgin alſo ſhall bring back old Saturn's Reign.
Now is from Heaven high
Deſcended a new Progeny.

This is a direct Prophecy of the marvellous conception, that he ſhould be born of a Virgin, and the Good that would redound to the world thereby, as he farther addeth;

Tu modo naſcenti Puero, quo ferrea primum
Deſinet, ac toto ſurget Gens Aurea Mundo,
Caſta fave Lucina-----
Hoc Duce, ſi qua manent ſceleris veſtigia noſtri,
Irrita perpetuâ ſolvent formidine terras.

Chap. ix. & x. 1 John iii. 5, 6.

The Birth of that moſt happy Child, by whom
The Iron Age ſhall end, and Golden come,
Chaſte Lucina favour-----
He ſhall the Power of Wickedneſs deſtroy,
And free the World from Fear and all Annoy.

Yet again:

Ipſæ lacte domum referent diſtenta Capellæ
Ubera: nec magnos metuent armenta Leones.

Iſai. xi. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11.

The Goats ſhall bring their Udders Milk-fill'd home,
And th' gentle Flocks great Lyons ſhall not ſhun.

Yet farther:

Ipſa tibi blandos fundent cunabula flores,
Occidet & Serpens, & fallax herba veneni
Occidet: Aſſyrium vulgo naſcetur Amomum.

Jer. ii. 3.

Thy Cradle faireſt Flow'rs ſhall ſend forth ſtill,
Which ſhall have Pow'r the pois'nous Herbs to kill.
The Serpent he ſhall to Deſtruction bring,
Aſſyrian Amomum ſhall each-where ſpring.

Hinc ubi jam firmata virum te fecerit ætas.

When thou ſhalt attain at length
To Years of Manhood and firm Strength.

Pſal. ii. Pſal. xlv. Iſa. ix. 6, 7. Chap. xi. 1, 2, 3, to 9.

Now let any tell me, if this be not a moſt pathetical account of the Virtue and Power of Chriſt, and the very End of his coming into the world; as, by a compariſon of it with the Scriptures in the margin, will plainly appear.

Et duræ quercus ſudabunt roſcida mella.

Iſa. lx. 1, 2, 3, to the end. Chap. lxi. 1, 2, 3. Matt. i. 21, to the end. Luke ii. 10, to 33. 1 John iii. 5, 8.

From the hard Oak there ſhall
Sweet Honey ſweat forth and fall.

To conclude;

Cedet & ipſe mari vector; nec nautica pinus
Mutabit merces: omnis feret omnia tellus.
Non raſtros patietur humus, non vinea falcem,
Nec varios diſcet mentiri lana colores.
Sponte ſuâ ſandyx paſcentes veſtiet agnos:
O mihi tam longè maneat pars ultima vitæ,
Spiritus & quantum ſat erit, tua dicere facta!

The Sea ſhall then be quiet, no Ship ſhall range
Abroad, her Wares with others to exchange:
Then ev'ry Land ſhall ev'ry thing produce,
And then to plow the Earth they ſhall not uſe:
Vines by the Hook ſhall not be rectify'd,
Nor Wool with divers Colours ſhall be dy'd:
Fair Fleeces, voluntary, ſhall proceed,
And clothe the Lambs, while they do gently feed.
O might my Days be lengthen'd, ſo that I Might ſing of thy great Deeds before I die.

Thus, to ſay no more, though much more might be ſaid of this kind, have Heathens, by the Light we have been hitherto defending, not only foretold Chriſt's appearance, but the very Work for which he did come, and for which he received thoſe peculiar names of Chriſt, Jeſus, Emmanuel, the Reſtorer of Breaches, Redeemer, Saviour, &c. So that I hope our adverſaries will either diſprove theſe writings, or confeſs that the Light God gave to the Gentiles, they obeying it, was ſufficient, and that by it they had ſome of them a Sight of Chriſt, with reſpect to the great Performance for which he was ſo named.

I have omitted any mention of thoſe Sybils ſo much regarded by Juſtin Martyr, Tertullian, Clemens Alexandrinus, and abundance of the ancients, for David Blondell's ſake, an accurate Frenchman, who endeavours to prove the books that go under their name to be ſpurious; written ſince Chriſt, by ſome affected to Chriſtianity, to promote it with the Gentiles, and therefore not genuine prophecies of his coming: Though he grants, 'Sybils there were of old, and excellent things they wrote, but that they were burnt in the Capitol of Rome, ſeveral hundred years before Chriſt came in the fleſh, and ſcattered remnants only extant;' yet among them enough will be afforded, as Virgil from the Cumæan already mentioned, by which to prove the great foreſight ſome of the Gentiles had of Chriſt's being conceived by the Holy Ghoſt, born of a Virgin, and finally, coming in the fleſh for the ſalvation of the world; and (which is more than any before Virgil had done) the time when, namely, within that age; which was the reign of Auguſtus Cæſar; in the beginning of which Virgil wrote, and about the end of which Chriſt was born.

CHAP. XIII.

It is granted that the Jew, and much more the Chriſtian, hath the Advantage of the Gentile. Yet that the Gentile had enough for Salvation.

Chap.XIII.

BUT that I may provide againſt both ignorance and malice, let none unworthily infer from hence, that I prefer the ſtate of Gentiliſm before the ſtate of Chriſtianity: No, nor yet that I ſo much as intend to equal it to that of the Jews, to whom pertained "the Adoption, Glory, Covenant, and the giving of the Law, whoſe were the Fathers, and of whom Chriſt himſelf came after the fleſh; who is God (the ONLY God) over all, bleſſed for ever. Amen."

For this let all know, that far greater were the privileges that both Jew and Chriſtian were bleſſed with, than thoſe of the ancient Gentiles. God gave the Jews what the Gentiles had; but he was not pleaſed to endow the Gentiles with all that he freely beſtowed upon the Jews: Yet that he gave them what was ſufficient to godlineſs, is altogether as certain: For the difference lay not in the Root of the Matter, but only in ſome extraordinary Helps, and ſeveral viſible ſervices, figurative of, and that pointed at, a farther glory.

The Word "Nigh in the heart," of which Moſes teſtified, was not the only privilege of the Jew, but of the Gentile alſo. The Spirit of God ſtrove as well with the Gentile as the Jewiſh man; and God himſelf declared their "new moons, ſolemn aſſemblies, ſabbaths, &c." to be "an abomination;" and bid them "cleanſe themſelves, and put away the evil of their doings," and that they would "make them a new heart, and a new ſpirit:" Intimating, that though he did attend their childhood with many helps, that were wanting to other nations, yet he required Fear, Purity and Righteouſneſs, and that which was the moſt Eſſential thing: Which becauſe it was required of the Gentiles as well as the Jews, and that many Gentiles believed ſo, and accordingly lived; unto which declaring they were inclined by the ſame Good Spirit which Job ſays is "in man," and that "Inſpiration of the Almighty which gives underſtanding," I cannot in juſtice but conclude, they wanted not the Ground-work any more than the Jews. So that the Sum of what I have been urging is but this, and thus much it is, 'That though God was more beneficent to the Jew, eſpecially to the Chriſtian, than the Gentile, and conſequently that as the Jew had thoſe aſſiſtances the Gentile had not; ſo the Chriſtian Diſpenſation is the PERFECTION of the Divine Light, Life and Immortality, more weakly ſeen both by Jew and Gentile. Yet alſo, That God did communicate to the Gentiles ſuch a meaſure of his Divine Light and Spirit, as, diligently adhered to, and faithfully followed, was ſufficient to their ſalvation from ſin here, and conſequently from wrath to come; and that they themſelves did ſo believe, teach, live and die, in perfect hope and full aſſurance of eternal recompence, in a ſtate of immortality.'

Iſa. i. 12, 13, 14, 15
Ezek. xviii. 31, 32.

And though I will not be ſo ſtrict in my opinion of the beſt Gentiles, as to deny there might be ſome ſelf-mixtures from Temper, Education, or otherwiſe; yet I will alſo boldly affirm, that as the Light they had was ſufficient in itſelf to their ſalvation; of which their life and doctrine are a notable demonſtration; ſo they had, ſome of them, a glimmering proſpect and bold belief of as high a ſtate of purity, glory and immortality, as man's nature is capable of attaining to. Let thus much ſuffice, whether ſome be pleaſed, or not pleaſed, in defence of the Univerſality and Sufficiency of the Light of CHRIST within; at leaſt with reſpect to the Gentiles-divinity, and a full anſwer to the clamours of our many adverſaries, againſt the 'Light's ſufficiency to diſ'cover ſin, and convert from it.'

CHAP. XIV.

A great Objection ſtated and anſwered. The Light both LAW and GOSPEL, not in the ſame Diſcovery, but in itſelf. A Way to reconcile the ſeeming Difference about it. The Light ſtill defended as aſſerted.

Chap. XIV.

BUT becauſe I am yet to expect doubters about this Bleſſed Light, who rather ſtrive to oppoſe it by their notions, than believe it and obey it to their ſalvation; I will ſuppoſe that ſome may yet object:

Objection.

'Certainly this Light within can be, at moſt, but the Law in the conſcience, anſwering 'to the firſt covenant: For here is ſcarce any mention made of Chriſt in this long 'diſcourſe. And if this Light were Chriſt, as is affirmed by you Quakers, then how 'comes it that he was not ſo called of old by the Jews and Greeks? and why typified 'to come, when he was come before, and whilſt typified? And farther, in what ſenſe 'can he be underſtood to bear our iniquities, and men and women to be ſaved by his 'Blood, if this Light be the Saviour, Meſſiah, Chriſt, &c. as you believe, and en'deavour to maintain now in the world?'

This objection, I ſuppoſe, the reader will allow to be the moſt weighty made againſt our principle; and that I have therein dealt more fairly by our oppoſers than they uſually deal with us; ſince I have here laid down the very ſtrength of their objection againſt the Light we aſſert. To all which I ſhall anſwer in the fear of God, and ſpirit of moderation.

The objection conſiſts mainly of theſe four parts: The Firſt, relating to the Light's being but the Law, not the Goſpel. The Second, to the Light's never being called Chriſt, by Jews or Greeks. The Third, to Chriſt's being typified, and yet in being at the ſame time. The Fourth, to Chriſt's Blood, the bearing our Sins, and which way this could be appropriated to the Light, and not do injury to the Holy Manhood.

Firſt then, I ſhall anſwer to that part of the objection which concerns the Light's being but, or no more than, the Law.

I do thus far agree, to wit, That the Light is the Law; but that it is not therefore in any ſenſe the Goſpel, I alſo deny; yet not in That reſpect wherein it is the Law: For as in that ſtate it cannot juſtify, ſo it would be to ſay, it is the Law, and it is not the Law, ad idem. I ſay then, That the Light may be both Law and Goſpel, in reference to a twofold Manifeſtation.

"Where there is no Law, there is no Tranſgreſſion." It might as well have been ſaid (ſince they themſelves confeſs it to be the Law) That where there is no Light, there is no tranſgreſſion; and the rather, becauſe the Apoſtle ſays expreſly, "Whatever "is reproved," or ſinful, "is made manifeſt by the Light." Eph. v. 13. Therefore, ſince all have tranſgreſſed, all have Light, and ever had.

In This ſtate, then, it is a Law, which juſtifies none; all being concluded under Guilt, and children of Wrath: For whoever is in that which is reprovable, is under condemnation from the Law, or the Reproving Act of this holy Light. But again; ſuch as, by unfeigned Repentance, come to obey the Light, they are herein juſtified in a twofold ſenſe, (and I ſo ſpeak for the ſake of the ſimple, beguiled by a wrong apprehenſion of the word) Firſt, In that God acquits for his Name's ſake; who is merciful, pardoning iniquity, tranſgreſſion and ſin, in all that repent with unfeigned repentance. Secondly, In that he accepts upon the renewal and continuance of the creature's humble and ſincere Obedience. Neither are ſuch properly come to the compleat Sonſhip. They are but on their journey; they muſt give good proof of their fidelity, diligence and loyalty to God, as Servants, before they are received into that excellent ſtate of Sonſhip, which never goes out of the Father's houſe for ever.

This is clearly diſtinguiſhed, and weightily expreſſed, by the apoſtle Paul to the Galatians, "The Heir," ſays he, "whilſt under age, differs not from a Servant, but is "under Tutors until the time appointed of the Father: Even ſo we, when we were "Children, were in bondage, under the elements of the world: Therefore the Seed "came, that by Faith in it, the adoption of Sons might be known." This is the Perfection of the Brightneſs of the Light, which is all along ſtill the ſame in Itſelf, though not the ſame to the Creature. The outward Sun is the cauſe of the early Dawnings; and is, at that very ſame time, in itſelf, the ſame glorious Body of Light as when in the Meridian: But if men, either through Natural Weakneſs, or the many fogs and miſts of Tradition, Education, Ignorance or Prejudice, ſuffer an Eclipſe, they muſt not blame the Light, but themſelves. He that follows the Light in its holy diſcoveries, and walks in it, which was ever the juſt man's path, ſhall meet with bleſſedneſs at the end of his travels. But ſuch as let the World of Wickedneſs get between it and them, are overtaken with Night.

“ Abraham ſaw,” it is ſaid, “ Chriſt's Day.” What Day? The diſpenſation of ſonſhip, as Heir of all things; the Day of perfect Reſtitution: Which he could never have done, had he not had Light, by which to have ſeen it. So ſeveral of thoſe holy ancients obtained a degree above many, and arrived at a growth, yea, the benefit and enjoyment of a diſpenſation, that was not then general, through the weakneſs of the age. Such really ſaw beyond the offerings, types, figures and ſhadows, to a ſtate more inward, ſpiritual and ſubſtantial, by taking good heed to the Heavenly Light in their conſciences. And this, indeed, was the end of all external adminiſtrations, to drive the creature inward, and point out unto it ſome more hidden myſtery, that man's wandering from God had cauſed him to neglect: Yet ſtill was Chriſt, the WORD-GOD, a Saving Light in that ſtate. And the Light of the Law was as a School-maſter, that led ſuch as diligently obeyed it, to that more excellent diſcovery of the ſame Light, which is now called the Goſpel, or Glad Tidings; as certainly it was, after ſo black and cold a ſeaſon as had long overcaſt the heavens, to have the ‘ Glorious SUN of Righteouſneſs appear in ‘ that Bleſſed Body, prepared and anointed for that purpoſe, in a manner tranſcendent ‘ to all former manifeſtations of himſelf.’

Thus it was, that ſuch as had lived up moſt faithfully to the Law of God, or Light of that diſpenſation, gladly received Chriſt, believed in him, became his followers, and the companions of his croſs and ſufferings. So that he, who was the Light of the Law, is alſo the Light of the Goſpel, though not in one and the ſame Manifeſtation, or Degree of Diſcovery: As the Light is not one in Condemning and Juſtifying, though it be One in Itſelf; nor the ſame in its Luſtre in the degree and growth of Little Children, Young Men, and Fathers; yet One Pure, Eternal, Unalterable Light of Life and Righteouſneſs in Itſelf. If therefore it doth the office of the Law in any, to be ſure ſuch an one is yet under a ſtate of Condemnation for evil, and he is not yet come to know the Fulfilling of the Law, as becometh every follower of Chriſt; yea, every one that would come to Chriſt.

Chriſt indeed fulfils the Law for us: But how? The Light in us, as we are ſubject to it, and led by it, adminiſters an Holy Power, by which we are enabled to do that which is good and acceptable in the ſight of the Lord; and ſo, obeying the Light, we fulfil the Law: “ Thus he works his works in us and for us.” And ſo far was Chriſt from diſengaging his followers from an indiſpenſible neceſſity of keeping the Law, as outwardly ingraven on ſtones, that he ſet them a far harder taſk, by how much it is more eaſy to refrain ourſelves from Acting than Thinking. “ Thou ſhalt not commit adultery,” ſaith the diſpenſation of Moſes. “ Whoſoever looks on a woman to luſt after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart,” ſaith that more excellent diſpenſation of Chriſt. Certainly, then, thoſe men who fancy themſelves upon eaſy terms of being excuſed from fulfilling of the Law, or performing good works, as a condition to juſtification, muſt baſely abuſe themſelves, and dangerouſly hazard the well-being of their own ſouls. In ſhort, He was the True Light, who ſaid, “ he that looks upon a woman to luſt after Mat. v. 27, 28. “ her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart:” But ſo was HE alſo, that ſaid of old by Moſes, “ Thou ſhalt not commit adultery.” Should we therefore conclude Two Lights, and not rather Two ſeveral Manifeſtations, or gradual Diſcoveries, of the ſelf-ſame Eternal Light?

To conclude: The Law, as I may ſay, is the Goſpel begun; and the Goſpel is the Law finiſhed. He that would be juſtified, muſt firſt be condemned; and they who would be healed, muſt firſt be wounded. The Law is as the Sword; the Goſpel as Balm: The one Duty, the other Love. And that which alone is needful to attain unto the higheſt diſcovery, is, to be humbly ſubject, and conſtantly obedient, to the loweſt appearance of it: ‘ The faithful Servant becomes a Son by adoption.’ Wouldeſt thou know the Word a reconciler, thou muſt firſt witneſs it an hammer, a ſword, a fire, &c. The way to arrive at Evangelical righteouſneſs, is firſt to perform the righteouſneſs of the Law. By Law I mean not that of politic ſhadows and ceremonies, or the external order or policy of the Jews; but that Mora land Eternal law, which is ſaid to have come by Moſes (though but repeated and renewed by him), and is accompliſhed by Chriſt. And there is great hopes, that they who conſcientiouſly keep the beginning, will compaſs the end. Such as have conquered evil doing, if they be faithful to what they have received of God's Light and Spirit, it will enable them againſt bad ſaying, till at laſt they overcome evil thinking too; and witneſs that ſcripture fulfilled, “ Judgment (the Law) is brought forth into “ Victory (the Goſpel). He that follows me, (the Light of the World, that enlightens all men coming into the world) ſhall not abide in darkneſs, but ſhall have the John viii. 12, i. 9. “ Light of Life.” I make not this diſtinction of Law and Goſpel to diſtinguiſh in Kind, but Degree; and for the ſake of the Weak, accuſtomed to it. “ And if the Son make “ you free, then are you free indeed:” For as it is a Condemner, it may be called the Light that brings Death, in that it ſlays, by the Brightneſs of its coming into the conſcience, the tranſgreſſing nature. Like unto that expreſſion, "The Day of the Lord is "a Day of Darkneſs," becauſe of the judgments and terrors of the Lord in the conſcience for ſin; but to the obedient, it is the "Light of Life," it brings peace and conſolation.

Thus is Chriſt, as the Word-God, and Light of the World, through every diſpenſation, one in himſelf, tho' to mankind he has variouſly appeared, not by different Lights, but different Manifeſtations only of One and the ſame Eternal Light of life and righteouſneſs.

CHAP. XV.

The ſecond part of the Objection, That Christ was not antiently called the LIGHT, anſwered. And the contrary proved from ſcripture and reaſon.

Chap. XV. TO the ſecond part of the Objection, 'If the Light in every man were Chriſt, how 'comes it that the Jews and Greeks never called it ſo?' I anſwer, We do not ſay that the Light, ſtrictly, in every man, is Chriſt, but of or from Chriſt. He is that Fulneſs from whence all receive a Meaſure of divine light and knowledge; but not that every individual has the whole or complete Chriſt in him, ſo as to be no-where elſe! Such an abſurdity never fell from us, nor is it conſequent of our doctrine, though the malice of our adverſaries hath charged it upon both. But as the external ſun darts its Light upon the Organ of the Eye of the Body, by which it conveys True Diſcerning to act about Viſible Things; ſo doth the internal ſun of righteouſneſs ſhine upon the Eye of the Soul, giving it the knowledge of thoſe Inviſible Things which properly relate to the Nature of the Soul. So that we are the leſs obliged to give a reaſon why others called not the Light in man Chriſt, ſince we renounce all ſhare in ſuch belief ourſelves, ſtrictly ſpeaking. Yet thus far I will ſay, that Chriſt was called Light before ever he was in the world, though not before he was Chriſt. "I will give him for a Light to lighten the Gentiles, "&c." Now if any will ſay that this Light was not Chriſt, let them tell us ſo in plain words: But if it will be allowed, they had beſt aſk, Why the prophet, by the Holy Ghoſt, ſhould call Chriſt "Light," even as ſoon as, if not before, he was called "Chriſt?" And why, in that very ſtate in which he was called "Chriſt," he ſhould alſo be called "Light?" Certain it is then, that by "him," the Light, we are to underſtand "Chriſt;" which is one and the ſame thing as if he had ſaid, 'I will give Christ for a light to en'lighten the Gentiles;' or, 'He who is the Chriſt, is the Light; or the light is 'Christ.' So that it will follow, the Gentiles were enlightened by Christ; which is the whole of what we underſtand by our aſſertion, as to the "Light in Man."

Again, John expreſly calls that Light, with which every man is enlightened, "the "Word; and the Word is ſaid to have "taken Fleſh." If then He that took fleſh was Christ, and conſequently that body Chriſt's body only, (as none, I think, will dare deny, but Muggleton, and his credulous followers) it will follow, 'That Christ, 'who took, or appeared in, that Prepared Body, is the Light with which every Man 'is lighted.'

Farther, Chriſt himſelf ſays, "I am the Light of the World:" Which is as much as if he had ſaid, 'I have lighted, or ſhined forth to, the world:' Therefore the Light which ſhines in the hearts of mankind, is Christ. Though we do not ſay that every Particular Illumination is the entire Chriſt; for ſo there would be as many Chriſts as there are men, which were abſurd and blaſphemous.

But laſtly, the apoſtle himſelf calls him Chriſt, before his coming in the fleſh; ſo that Chriſt was Chriſt before his appearance in that Holy Body at Jeruſalem, which clears that point in controverſy. For the ſtreſs of the objection, as to this particular, lies here, 'Chriſt, as Chriſt, was not before he took fleſh;' therefore though it ſhould be granted, that as the Word-God, all are enlightened by him, yet not as he is Christ, before that Viſible Appearance. But if Chriſt was not before, then the manhood, that was taken in time, muſt only be the Chriſt: But I would fain know ſuch people's reaſon for it. The dilemma in ſhort is this, That ſuch as deny Chriſt to have been Chriſt before that coming, thwart as plain a text as the ſcriptures have; and if they ſhould allow it, their oppoſition to our aſſertion muſt appear unſound and reprovable. Howbeit, ſince Chriſt, as the Word-God, hath lighted all men antecedent to his coming in the fleſh, (as moſt of our 1 Cor. x. 3, 4. objectors confeſs) and that the apoſtle ſays, that "the Word was Chriſt," or that "Chriſt "was before he came in the fleſh;" in that Chriſt was, in the wilderneſs, "a Rock to "Iſrael," (unleſs Chriſt and the Word are Two diſtinct beings, or that there be Two diſtinct Chriſts) Chriſt was "that Light which lighted mankind;" and that very Light with which mankind was lighted, was the "very Christ of God;" and conſequently the Light has been called, both expreſly and implicitly, CHRIST, before that Viſible Appearance at Jeruſalem.

Nor is the allegation of that ſcripture againſt us pertinent to the matter in hand, viz. "Which none of the princes of this world knew, &c." for that was ſpoken in reference to the "Wiſdom which had been hid," and not to the mere Manhood of Chriſt. But ſuppoſe his Holy Manhood concerned in it, we have this to ſay, 'That ſuch as rejected 'him, and much more thoſe that crucified him, in his Outward Appearance, had firſt 'deſpiſed and ſlain him Within:' They were of thoſe, as Job ſaid, who "rebelled againſt "the light, and loved not the ways thereof." And I affirm, againſt all oppoſers, that it was by the ſight this Divine Light within gave to Simeon, Peter, Nathanael, and all others who believed in him, that they truly came to confeſs him, and ſuffer for him. Yea, ſuch as had not out-ſinned their day, and finally hardened their hearts, as others by wicked works had done; but, through the Light of the Lord, had in good meaſure kept their conſciences void of offence, they received and embraced him. The Light knew its own: The Leſſer led to the Greater; and the Greater Light as naturally attracted the Leſſer, as we may ſee Fire does every day.

To conclude this particular, let me add, That they were not the Princes of this world that put him outwardly to death; for it came by the envious and wicked accuſations of the Jews (a broken conquered people) to Pilate, Governor of a Province only: Therefore, ſince I believe what the apoſtle ſaith to be true, I have rather reaſon to infer that it was meant of Chriſt myſtically, than of that Viſible Body. However it be, that part of our adverſaries objection about the Light's not being called Chriſt, antecedent to his coming in the fleſh, can be of no weight to the matter under debate, ſince we have ſo evidently made the contrary appear.

CHAP. XVI.

The third part of the Objection; 'If Chriſt was enjoyed under the law; as he was, if the Light be Chriſt; why was he typified? is proved of no force. The type and anti-type, in ſome reſpects, may be at one and the ſame time: This is proved by plenty of ſcripture. Our adverſaries oppoſition and cavil weak and unſucceſsful.

Ch. XVI.

THE third part of the Objection, and what ſeems at firſt ſight to carry ſomething of moment againſt us, is this? 'If the Light within be Chriſt, and the Jews and 'Gentiles had it from the beginning of the world, how can Chriſt be ſaid to be typified 'out, as not come, and propheſied of to come, when by your own principle he hath 'been always come?' I anſwer; This part of the objection is in ſome reſpect built upon the ſame miſtake as was the ſecond, namely, that the Illumination within is intirely Chriſt; concerning which, I have plainly and truly expreſſed myſelf before. I will therefore faithfully ſtate the queſtion for them thus: 'Well, but ſtill you ſay, Chriſt lighted 'Jews and Gentiles before that Viſible Coming: If ſo, then was he come, by your 'own principle, whilſt his coming was typified out, and propheſied of: Doth not this 'ſeem a contradiction?' But to this I ſay, that the ſuppoſed contradiction ariſeth from the miſtake of the Diſpenſations; for it takes for granted, that there was no difference in the Degree of illumination before, and at, the coming of Chriſt in that viſible manner into the world; which all muſt needs confeſs. For as I would be underſtood, when I call the Light before and after Chriſt's coming in the fleſh, LIGHT, to mean but one and the ſelf-ſame light in nature; ſo let none apprehend, as if we made no difference, by the acknowledgement of a more eminent manifeſtation of the ſame light. What follows then? Why thus much moſt clearly, That under the enjoyment of the leſſer manifeſtation of light, ſuited to the then childiſh ſtate of the Jews, God was pleaſed to allure them after an expectation of higher things, by types and prophecies of that far more excellent and exceeding glorious diſpenſation of the Light and Love of God in after-ages.

The end of God's giving the Iſraelites that Outward Prophet and Leader Moſes, was, to bring to the inward leader, CHRIST JESUS: And though they, through carnality and weakneſs, were not then ſenſible of him, ſo as to ſtay their minds upon him, yet Moſes propheſied of him: And indeed, all the external dealings of God with men, have been to bring to Chriſt, the ſeed within, which is able to "bruiſe the ſerpent's head," and did ſo, in ſome meaſure, through all ages. So that with good reaſon and truth we may aſſert, 'Chriſt, the Light, was the Rock that followed Iſrael in the wilderneſs (who is 'the Rock of ages, and Foundation of all generations, and who ever lighted all mankind, 'the ſame yeſterday, to-day, and for ever); yet a greater manifeſtation of that Divine 'Light might be typically preached forth under the enjoyment of the Leſſer.'

And that we herein are not without the ſuffrage of the ſcriptures to our defence, I would fain know, if, notwithſtanding all thoſe outward waſhings of thoſe times, God did not frequently preſs the very ſubſtance itſelf, namely, "a clean heart, and a new "ſpirit;" accounting all worſhip ſhort thereof, but as "the cutting off of a dog's neck, "and offering of ſwine's blood?" And whether Chriſt himſelf did not with his own hands give the bread and wine to his diſciples, and yet bid them "do it till he came?" Isa. lxvi. 3.

Whence it is eaſy to obſerve, that unleſs the Bread and the Wine are the Very CHRIST, (thereby deſtroying the nature of a Sacrament) and inſtead of doing it till he came, that he ſhould come whenever they do receive it; it muſt be granted to us, that Chriſt preſent gave them a Figure of Chriſt to come: Therefore to figure out Chriſt to come, deſtroys not Chriſt's being come; eſpecially taking our diſtinction of the leſſer manifeſtation from the greater; which nevertheleſs divides not the Light, but that it remains, in itſelf, One Pure, Eternal Being of Light, and Sun of Righteouſneſs, through every diſpenſation. And thus much that paſſage I have already obſerved from the apoſtle Paul, in anſwer to the ſecond part of the objection, plainly clears to us: For if Chriſt, typified out, was their Rock, or the Rock of that Age, even when the brazen ſerpent, the type, was in being, I cannot ſee but the type, and the thing typified, might be at one and the ſame time; not as to Degree, but Nature; for ſo I would be underſtood.

Before I conclude, take this notable ſaying of Chriſt to the Jews, and what may be collected from it to our purpoſe: "Before Abraham was, I am. Abraham ſaw my "day, and rejoiced."---Which affords us briefly thus much; That though he was not ſo viſibly come, yet it was the very ſame He that came above one thouſand ſix hundred years ago, who was with the fathers of old; and that Abraham, who lived one thouſand nine hundred years before that outward appearance, ſaw him, and his day. If this be not the import of the place, I know none; for the Jews, not believing him to be the Meſſiah, thought it high preſumption for him to compare with Abraham. "Art thou "greater than our father Abraham, who is dead, and the prophets, who are dead? "Whom makeſt thou thyſelf?" ſaid that unbelieving people: Unto which he anſwered, (that he might prove himſelf to be the true Meſſiah, the Chriſt of God) "Abraham "ſaw my day, and rejoiced." They, ſtill harping upon that Viſible Body, or Outward Man, not thirty-three years old, replied, "Thou art not yet Fifty, and haſt thou ſeen "Abraham?" Taking that to be the Meſſiah, the Chriſt of God, and Saviour of the world he meant, which they ſaw with their carnal eyes. To which he rejoined with a "Verily, verily I ſay unto you, before Abraham was I am: Then took they up ſtones to caſt "at him, &c." By all which it is moſt clear, that unleſs our adverſaries will deny him that ſo ſpoke to be Chriſt, who ſingled and diſtinguiſhed himſelf as the Meſſiah, the Chriſt of God, and Saviour of the world, from that viſible Body, not fifty years old indeed; both Chriſt, that then ſpoke, muſt needs have been long before Abraham's time, and that ſuch holy ancients were not without a ſight and proſpect of him, and the day of his glorious appearance, or that moſt ſignal manifeſtation of himſelf in the Body prepared for that great and holy purpoſe; witneſs the exceeding clear and heavenly prophecies in the ſcriptures of truth, that were as ſo many fore-runners or introducers of the evangelical ſtate.

John. viii. 56. 57, 58.

Helv. Chron.

And this is unqueſtionably confirmed unto us, by that known and weighty expreſſion of the apoſtle Paul to the Romans: "Whoſe are the fathers, and of whom, as con- "cerning the fleſh, Chriſt came, who is over all, God bleſſed for ever, Amen;" ſince here Chriſt is both diſtinguiſhed from the Body he took, and alſo made One with God, who is over all bleſſed for ever, Amen. As much as to ſay, "of whoſe fleſh Chriſt took;" therefore Chriſt was before he took it; or his taking it only did not conſtitute him Chriſt; which Chriſt is God: And if God (which cannot be ſaid of mere fleſh, or any corporal lineage) then muſt he have been from all everlaſting.

Rom. ix. 5.

To conclude; as Abraham outward and natural was the great father of the Jews outward and natural, whoſe ſeed God promiſed to bleſs with earthly bleſſings, as Canaan, &c. and that they were figurative of the One Seed Chriſt, and ſuch as he ſhould beget unto a lively hope, through the power of his ſpiritual reſurrection, it will conſequently follow, that this Seed muſt be inward and ſpiritual; ſince one Outward thing cannot be the proper Figure or Repreſentation of another: Nor is it the way of holy ſcripture ſo to teach us. The outward Lamb ſhews forth the inward Lamb; the Jew outward, the Jew inward. As God attended the one with many ſingular outward mercies (to ſay no more) above other nations, ſo doth he benefit the Jew in ſpirit, above all other people.

I have theſe two ſhort arguments farther to prove what I believe and aſſert, as to the ſpirituality of the True Seed, and a clearer overthrow it is to the opinion of our adverſaries concerning the True Chriſt. Firſt, Every thing begets its like: What is ſimply natural produces not a ſpiritual being: Material things bring not forth things that are immaterial. Now, becauſe the Nature, or Image, begotten in the hearts of true believers is ſpiritual, it will follow, that the ſeed, which ſo begets and brings forth that birth, muſt be the ſame in nature with that which is begotten; therefore ſpiritual: Then Chriſt's body, or what he had from the Virgin, ſtrictly conſidered as ſuch, was not the Seed.

Secondly, It is clear from hence: The Serpent is a ſpirit. Now nothing bruiſes the head of the ſerpent in man, but ſomething that is alſo internal and ſpiritual, as the ſerpent is. But if that body of Chriſt were only the Seed, then could he not bruiſe the ſerpent's head in all, becauſe the body of Chriſt is not ſo much as in any one (tho' too many have weakly concluded it upon us, from a perverſion or miſtake of our doctrine of Chriſt in man, by his Light and Spirit); and conſequently the Seed of the Promiſe is an holy and ſpiritual principle of light, life and power, which being received into the heart, bruiſeth the ſerpent's head. And becauſe the Seed (which in this ſenſe cannot be that Body) is Chriſt, as teſtify the ſcriptures, the Seed is ONE, and that Seed CHRIST, and Chriſt GOD over all, bleſſed for ever, we do conclude that Chriſt was, and is, the divine word of light and life, that was in the beginning with God, and was and is God over all, bleſſed for ever. Gal. iii. 16.

Ch. XVI.

And that this may yet more evidently appear, let it but be ſeriouſly weighed, that antecedent to that viſible appearance, the Seed bruiſed, in good meaſure, the Serpent's Head, in the holy men and women of all generations; otherwiſe they had not been holy, but ſerpentine and wicked. And if the Seed was before, and that Seed be Chriſt, (becauſe there is but One Chriſt, as well as but One Seed) it doth clearly follow that Chriſt was Chriſt before that outward appearance; and conſequently it could but be a more excellent and free manifeſtation of his truth, righteouſneſs, ſalvation, wiſdom, power, glory, and dominion; as indeed it was.

For notwithſtanding that this heavenly Seed was in ſome meaſure known, and what was wrought of inward deliverance in that day, was by and through the power and virtue of it, as the minds of people were retired to the Word of God nigh in the heart, to cleanſe and redeem; and though particular perſons might arrive at great attainments, even to a beholding the day of the Seed's complete redemption, and conqueſt over all its oppreſſors (when that which was but in the condition of a Seed, or new-born Child, ſhould become the "Only Son, the Wonderful Counſellor, the Mighty God, the Everlaſting Father, and the Prince of Peace, of the increaſe of whoſe government there "ſhall be no end," as ſpeaks the prophet); yet it is granted, through that good underſtanding the Lord hath given us in theſe weighty things, that the generality were but weak, dark, and imbondaged, as ſaith the apoſtle, under carnal and beggarly elements, not clearly ſeeing through thoſe outward ſervices, by which (if I may ſpeak) God held them in hand, condeſcending to their weakneſs, that he might both keep them from gadding after the pompous inventions and idolatrous worſhip of other nations, and point out unto them, under their great carnality, that more hidden glory and ſpiritual diſpenſation, which ſhould afterwards be revealed, to wit, 'The complete redemption of the ſoul, and reign of the holy ſeed, from the Child born, and the Son given, to the wonderful Counſellor, 'the mighty God, the everlaſting Father, the Prince of Peace, of the increaſe of whoſe 'government there ſhall be no end.' Iſa. ix. 6.

So that then we ought, and we do, by abſolute force of truth, conclude, 1ſt. That the ſeed, which is Chriſt, WAS in all ages; with Abraham, with the Iſraelites, with the prophets; therefore he was as well before he came in that prepared body, as then and ſince. 2dly. Yet it is confeſſed that he was not ſo clearly revealed, perfectly brought forth, and generally known before his ſo coming, as then and ſince, but more darkly figured out by types and ſhadowy ſervices; which, though they cleanſed not, ſaved not, redeemed not, yet did they ſhew forth a more hidden and ſpiritual ſubſtance, that was able to cleanſe, ſave and redeem, and actually did, all that received it, and were truly ſubject to it, and that both from Sin and Wrath. 3dly. That it therefore is not at all abſurd, that the more excellent manifeſtation of Truth ſhould be typified and propheſied of under the enjoyment of the leſſer, ſince the reaſon of the thing, and the teſtimonies of the ſcripture, are ſo expreſs for it; which ends our anſwer to this particular.

CHAP. XVII.

The fourth part of the Objection ſtated and conſidered. Chriſt's death and ſufferings confeſſed to, and reſpected: They were beneficial to ſalvation. The Light of Chriſt within is the efficient cauſe of ſalvation completely taken.

Ch. XVII.

HAVING conſidered the third part of this great Objection, I am now come to what chiefly ſtumbles the people, with reſpect to the Light within, at leaſt as I apprehend; and that in this fourth and laſt particular; viz. 'But if the Light in every man 'be Chriſt, how doth it bear our ſins, and how are our iniquities laid upon it? and how 'can we be ſaid to be juſtified, redeemed or ſaved by its blood, ſince all theſe things 'are ſpoken by the holy pen-men of the Man Chriſt, or Jeſus born at Bethlehem? 'Surely you wholly invalidate his life, death, reſurrection, aſcenſion, and mediation, by 'this belief of yours in the Light within.'

This I take to be the very ſtreſs of the matter, collected out of the moſt forcible writings of our adverſaries: To which I anſwer, and let him that reads underſtand.

It muſt be conſidered, in this laſt part of the objection, how thoſe queſtions can be applicable to the Light, and yet be reconcilable with thoſe ſcriptures that ſeem to attribute all to his Bodily Sufferings. I hope to make appear, that as we exalt the firſt, ſo we dare not by any means to ſlight the laſt.

The light, or rather HE that is light in man (for ſo I have always deſired to be under-1673. Ch. XVII. ſtood; light being a metaphor, or a word taken from the outward day, and chiefly ſo termed, becauſe of man's darkneſs, which is thereby diſcovered) hath been, according to ſcripture, as a "Lamb ſlain ſince the foundation of the world:" That is, the world had not been long created, before man, being envied by Lucifer the fallen angel, was betrayed of his innocency by him; and ſin, by diſobedience, prevailing, the light, or principle of life, under whoſe holy leadings man was placed, became reſiſted, grieved, and as it were ſlain: Which word ſlain is alſo metaphorical. That is to ſay, the innocent pure Life was, as it were, wounded unto death, through diſobedience; and that lamb-like image, in which Adam was created, by him through rebellion loſt. Thus that Holy Principle, which God placed in the heart of Adam, in which was true light, life and power, bore the ſin, was preſſed under it, as a cart under ſheaves, grieved exceedingly, and, as it were, quenched with iniquity.

This hath been the condition of that precious and elect Seed, Spirit, Light, Life, Truth, or whatever name equivalent any may pleaſe to give it, ever ſince that firſt rebellion, to this very day. And as, in wicked men, God's holy Light and Spirit, or that Principle which is ſo called, hath been deeply wounded, yea, as one ſlain; ſo in good men, that have had a ſenſe of the world's abominations, hath it alſo borne many burdens and weights; for the Light and Life is ONE in ALL, though not treated alike in all: And thoſe who have been reformed by it, and joined to it, have been as One Spirit, and have not been without their ſhare of the Lord's heavy ſufferings from the ungodly world; which was as well a filling-up of Chriſt's ſufferings that were before his outward coming, as what to this generation are yet behind to be completed.

And as at any time diſobedient men have hearkened to the ſtill voice of the Word, that Meſſenger of God in their hearts, to be affected and convinced by it, as it brings reproof for ſin, which is but a fatherly chaſtiſement; ſo upon true brokenneſs of ſoul, and contrition of ſpirit, that very ſame Principle and Word of Life in man, has mediated and atoned, and God has been propitious, lifting up the light of his countenance, and repleniſhing ſuch humble penitents with divine conſolations. So that ſtill the ſame Chriſt, Word-God, who has lighted all men, is by ſin grieved and burdened, and bears the iniquities of ſuch as ſo ſin, and reject his benefits. But as any hear his knocks and let him into their hearts, he firſt wounds and then heals; afterwards he atones, mediates, and re-inſtates man in the holy image he is fallen from by ſin. Behold this is the ſtate of Reſtitution! and this in ſome meaſure was witneſſed by the holy patriarchs, prophets and ſervants of God in old time, to whom Chriſt was ſubſtantially the ſame Saviour, and Seed bruiſing the ſerpent's head, that he is now to us, what difference ſoever there may be in point of manifeſtation.

But notwithſtanding it was the ſame Light and Life with that which afterwards clothed itſelf with that outward body, which did in meaſure inwardly appear for the ſalvation of the ſouls of men, yet, as I have often ſaid, never did that Divine Life ſo eminently ſhew forth itſelf, as in that ſanctified and prepared body: So that what he then ſuffered and did in that tranſcendent manifeſtation, may, by way of eminency, have the credit of the whole work unto itſelf that he ever did before, or might do afterwards, for man's ſalvation. For doubtleſs the very ſame Light, Life and Power, which dwelt in that fleſhly tabernacle, eminently was the Convincer, Condemner, Saviour and Redeemer: Yet not only as confined to that bleſſed Body, but alſo as revealed in the hearts of men; as he was in Paul; who, not conſulting with fleſh and blood, againſt the Lord of glory, did willingly receive him in, to bind the ſtrong man, ſpoil his goods, and caſt him out, that He might reign, whoſe right it was. And that the Divine Life, Light, Spirit, Nature or Principle, which reſided in that body was the efficient cauſe of ſalvation, obſerve the title that is given him, from the great work he was to do, namely, "To "ſave his people from their SINS;" there is not one word of wrath, but conſequentially. Now, ſince that ſin is in the heart and conſcience of mankind, nothing but a divine Light, Spirit or Power can reach and convey purity into thoſe inward parts, and conſequently That muſt be the Redeemer and Saviour from ſin. But indeed, thoſe who have a mind to naturalize that ſtrange figure into the language of the Holy Truth, (I mean, that to be ſaved, is only to be ſaved from wrath, and not from ſin, whoſe aſſured wages is wrath) may have ſome intereſt, though no reaſon, for their implacable enmity againſt an inherent holineſs.

But I farther confeſs, that his Righteous Life, with reſpect to its appearance in that Holy Body, was grieved by ſin, and that the weight of the iniquity of the whole world, with the concernment of its eternal well-being, lay hard upon him; nor was his Manhood inſenſible of it. Under the load of this did he travail; alone "he trode the wine-"preſs;" that is, All others were then inſenſible of that eternal wrath, which would be the portion of impenitent perſons; as well as that it was his great care, and deep travail, that the holy, yet oppreſſed Seed, might ariſe over the preſſures of iniquity in the hearts of men, to bruiſe the Serpent's head in all: And as outwardly he gave his outward life for the world, ſo he might inwardly ſhed abroad in their ſouls the Blood of God; that is, the holy purifying life and virtue which is in him as the Word-God; and as which, he is the Light and Life of the world.

This was it which gave the Manhood the underſtanding it had, and fitted it for ſo great an ambaſſy; by whoſe power alone it faſted, prayed, preached, caſt out devils, wrought miracles, lived that moſt unblemiſhed life, patiently ſuffered death, was raiſed for an holy confirmation, maugre all the military oppoſition of the Jews: And this Divine Power it was which accompanied the miniſtry of his followers, rendering it efficacious to conviction and converſion: So that the inviſible, ſpiritual and divine Life, Principle or Nature, was the Root and Fountain of all which is ſometimes aſcribed in ſcripture to the Body, by that common figure, or way of ſpeaking amongſt men, the thing containing, which was the Body, for the thing contained, which was the Eternal Power, Wiſdom, Life, &c. Not that we ſhould irreverently rob the Holy Body of whatſoever acknowledgement is juſtly due, nor yet ſeparate that which God hath joined: Though I confeſs, with holy fear, I dare not attribute that to an external prepared being, which is the natural, proper and only work of the Divine Light and Life to operate and effect. But certainly, if ſome men in ſcripture are entituled ſaviours, becauſe of the contribution of their trials, travails and labours towards the ſalvation of mankind, of much more right is that honour aſcribable to him "who had the Spirit without meaſure:" For I do freely acknowledge the Holy Manhood to have been, in ſome ſenſe, a co-worker and partner with the Divine Life in thoſe trials, weights, ſufferings and travails for mankind. Yet as it was the Divine Power that gave them weight in that great work, ſo was it the Divine Life in him which made that Holy Manhood what it was; and therefore ought we, chiefly, to appropriate the ſalvation to Chriſt as the Word-God, and to the Holy Manhood but ſecondarily and inſtrumentally; I mean, as it was a choſen inſtrument or veſſel, in and by which God declared the bleſſed Glad Tidings of Love, and his meſſage of Reconciliation to the world; in which he gave the moſt heavenly example of purity, and through whoſe whole life, doctrine and death, did ſhine forth the cleareſt evidences of truth, goodneſs, mercy, patience, deep travail for the world, ſelf-denial, holineſs and triumphant martyrdom.

No wonder then if he be called a Saviour, who not only came on an embaſſy of ſalvation, but when come did draw many after him, who were ſtruck with the authority of his ſayings, and whom he allowed for a time to have their eyes and hearts upon him, as in that ſtate preſent with them; but afterwards, he let his diſciples know, of how much benefit it would be to them, that he ſhould leave them: How? For ever, and in all capacities? No: But as with reſpect to his outward appearance, that being ſcattered, in that day, to their own meaſure of Light, Power and Life, they might know him "no more "after the fleſh," but witneſs him come into their hearts a Comforter, who would not leave his true-hearted diſciples comfortleſs. "He that is with you ſhall be in you." John xiv. 16, 17.

To be brief, that I may yet again expreſs our reverent ſenſe of Chriſt's Manifeſtation, ſo far as relates to that Holy Thing that ſhould be born of Mary, take theſe few particulars in my next chapter.

CHAP. XVIII.

A confeſſion, in particular, to redemption, remiſſion, juſtification and ſalvation by Chriſt.

Ch. XVIII.

I. THOUGH we believe the eternal power, life, and light, which inhabited that Holy Perſon who was born at Bethlehem, was and is chiefly and eminently the ſaviour (for "there is no Saviour beſides ME," ſaith God); yet we reverently confeſs the Holy Manhood was inſtrumentally a ſaviour, as prepared and choſen for the work that Chriſt, the Word-God, had then to do in it, which was actually to the ſalvation of ſome, and intentionally of the whole world, then, and in ages to come; ſuitable to that ſcripture, "Lo, in the volume of the book it is written, I come to do thy "will, O God; a body haſt thou prepared me, &c." Hoſ. xiii. 4.

II. That as there was a neceſſity that "One ſhould die for the people," ſo whoever then or ſince believed in him, had and have a ſeal, or confirmation, of the remiſſion of their ſins in his blood; and that blood, alluding to the cuſtom of the Jewiſh ſacrifices, ſhall be an utter blotting out of former iniquities, carrying them as into a land of forgetfulneſs. This great aſſurance of remiſſion, from the wrath due upon the ſcore of former offences, do all receive in the ratifying blood of Chriſt; who, repenting of their ſins, believe and obey the Holy Light with which he hath lighted them. For Paul's being turned from darkneſs to the Light in his heart, was one and the ſame with his believing in the Son of God "revealed in his heart." Heb. x. 5, 7.

III. This more glorious appearance ended that leſs glorious ſervice of the Jews; for the figures being completed, the ſhadows fell. He, in that body, preached and lived beyond thoſe beggarly elements: He drew religion more inward, even into the ſecret of the heart, and made it to conſiſt in an higher ſtate of righteouſneſs, called evangelical; and at once became both the author of a more Heavenly diſpenſation, and therein an example to all, as well Jews as Gentiles; ſealing ſuch a common and general religion to both with his blood, as would for ever end the difference and ſlay the enmity, that they might be all One in Chriſt. Thus did he end the Jews external ſervices, and overturn the Gentiles idolatries, by his one moſt pure and ſpiritual offering and worſhip.

IV. It plainly preaches thus much to us, that as He whoſe body the Jews outwardly ſlew, was, by wicked works, crucified in the ſtreets of Sodom and Egypt ſpiritually ſo called, (viz. our polluted hearts and conſciences;) ſo, unleſs we come to know the power and benefit of this Inward Life, anſwering to, and expreſſed by, that Outward Life he gave for the world, that will avail us little. For ſo it is, and very marvellous in our eyes, that the LIFE of the Crucified can only ſave thoſe who may well be reputed the Crucifiers. O myſtery! And becauſe thoſe that did not actually ſlay him outwardly, have ſlain him inwardly, (that is, by their evil Spirits reſiſting and quenching his ſpiritual appearance to their ſouls) therefore muſt ſuch really know that divine life inwardly raiſed and ſhed abroad for ſanctification and redemption from ſin. O how great was his love to man! Truly larger than man's cruelty; who whilſt he died by wicked men, died for them; and when dead, they could not hinder him from riſing to do them good, who had done their worſt for his deſtruction; thereby ſhewing mercy to thoſe, who ſhewed they had no mercy for Him nor Themſelves. “O Jeruſalem! Jeruſalem! how often would I have “gathered thee, and thou wouldeſt not! &c.”

V. That expreſſion of his is greatly worth our notice, “I lay down my life for the “world.” All he did was for the good of the world, and particularly the laying down of his life, that he might both expreſs his love and our duty. Had he not deſired man's ſalvation, and for that purpoſe prepared a body, in which to viſit him, and by his daily labours among men to further their eternal happineſs, the Jews had never been able to put him to death. But being come, and when come ſo hardly uſed, herein did he recommend his great love to us, that beſides the inward weights of ſin he bore, with his deep concernment for man's eternal well-being, he chearfully offered up his bodily life, to recommend and ratify his love for the remiſſion of ſin, and gave us an holy example to follow his ſteps. But theſe words will bear another ſenſe too, as do thoſe he ſpoke to the Jews, John vi. 51, 52, 53, 54. 62, 63. “Unleſs ye eat my fleſh, and drink my blood, you have no life in you:” Where we may plainly ſee, that as the Jews vainly and carnally fancied he meant his Outward Body only, to which they oppoſed the impoſſibility of the thing; ſo Chriſt declares their miſtake of his meaning to his diſciples, in theſe few, but deep words, “The fleſh profiteth “nothing; it is the ſpirit that quickeneth.” So that the words are true, and weighty in both ſenſes.

VI. And we farther acknowledge, that in that holy Body the divine Principle of Light and Life did diſcover the depths of Satan's darkneſs, encounter hell, death, and the grave, and every temptation it was poſſible for the Serpent, with all his power and ſubtilty, to beſet him with, (in which ſenſe “he was made like unto us in all things, “ſin excepted, that he might be ſenſible of our infirmities);” yea, the divine Life travailed under all, adminiſtering ſtrength to, and ſupporting the Outward man, that it might anſwer the end of its appointment, and in the end utterly defeat, and for ever overcome, the power of the Tempter, “bruiſing the Serpent's head in general,” as prince of darkneſs, and god of the world, and in a plain combat giving him that foil, which in good meaſure ſhook his foundation, divided his kingdom, chaſed away his lying oracles, and proved a very fatal blow to his whole empire. Which holy conqueſt, obtained by “ſweat of blood, and deepeſt agonies, with holy patience,” may not unfitly be compared to that of ſome worldly prince maintaining a righteous cauſe againſt an uſurper of his territories, whom he puts to rout in the open field (by which I underſtand the General Conqueſt) yet many towns and cities, and citadels, remaining ſtrongly garriſoned (by which I underſtand particular men and women enſlaved by Sin) they are not thereby overcome, though the approach be eaſier to them, and that they are truly more acceſſible than before.

The One Seed, who is Chriſt, “who is God over all bleſſed for ever,” tho' he gave this proof of his Everlaſting Arm, That it has brought a General Salvation, by a plain overthrow of “the god of this world,” the enemy of his glory, and thereby weakened his power, as in himſelf (which is the ſingle battle, “fought in garments rolled in “blood,” between the Two Seeds, Spirits, Natures and Powers, God and Mammon, Chriſt and Belial) yet there are alſo many Towns, Cities, and Citadels to vanquiſh, which are ſtrongly garriſoned by this god of the world, to wit, the Souls of men and women poſſeſſed and enſlaved by him: So that though their hearts are more acceſſible by that general victory over the very Spirit of darkneſs, and that Light may be more clear and broken forth, yet unleſs thoſe particular places, or perſons, are beſieged and taken, their goods ſpoiled, and houſes ſacked of all their ſtrange gods, and ſo come to be redeemed from under the yoke of that Pharaonian taſk-maſter, reclaimed, renewed, ſanctified, and divinely naturalized, and brought into an holy ſubjection to Him who is “Lord from Heaven, the Right Heir of all things,” and “receive his mark, and bear his image;” thoſe places, or perſons, muſt needs be under the power of the Prince of Darkneſs, the god of this world, who reigns and rules in the hearts of the children of diſobedience.

To conclude; we ſay, though this general victory was obtained, and holy privileges therewith, and that the Holy Body was inſtrumentally a ſharer therein; yet both the efficient or chiefeſt Cauſe was the divine light or life, that ſo clearly diſcriminated and deeply wounded this myſtery of iniquity; and that none can be thereby benefited, but as they come to experience the Holy Seed of Life, who is “God's mighty ARM of Power,” revealed to effect the ſame ſalvation from ſin in each particular conſcience; and which none can fail of, who firſt receive it as “a Light that manifeſteth and reproveth every evil way,” and continue to walk up to it in all its holy manifeſtations.

VII. But there is yet a farther benefit that accrueth by the Blood of Chriſt, viz. ‘That Chriſt is a propitiation and redemption to ſuch as have Faith in him.’ For though I ſtill place the ſtreſs of feeling of a particular benefit, upon the light, life and ſpirit revealed and witneſſed in every particular perſon, yet in that General Appearance there was a General Benefit juſtly to be attributed unto the blood of that very body of Chriſt which he offered up through the Eternal Spirit, to wit, that it did propitiate. For, however it might draw ſtupendous judgments upon the heads of thoſe who were authors of that diſmal tragedy and bloody murder of the Son of God, and died impenitent; yet doubtleſs it is thus far turned to very great account, in that it was a moſt precious Offering in the ſight of the Lord, and drew God's love the more eminently unto mankind, at leaſt ſuch as ſhould believe in his name; as his ſolemn prayer to his Father at his leaving the world, given us by his beloved diſciple, doth plainly witneſs.

For how can it otherwiſe be, but that it ſhould render God moſt propitious to all ſuch as believe in Chriſt, the Light of the world, when it was but placing of his only begotten Son's ſufferings truly on their account that ſhould ever believe and obey him? Yea, doubtleſs, greatly did that ſacrifice influence to ſome ſingular tenderneſs, and peculiar regard, unto all ſuch who ſhould believe in his name, being the laſt and greateſt of all his external acts, viz. ‘The reſiſting unto blood, or the ſpiritual good of the world, thereby offering up his life upon the croſs, through the power of the Eternal Spirit, that Remiſſion of Sin, (God's Bounty to the world) might be preached in his name, and in his very blood too, as that which was the moſt ratifying of all his bodily ſufferings.’ And indeed, therefore might it ſeem meet to the Holy Ghoſt, that Redemption, Propitiation, and Remiſſion, ſhould be declared and held forth in the Blood of Chriſt unto all that have right Faith therein, as ſaith the apoſtle to the Romans, “Whom God hath ſet forth to be a propitiation through faith in his Blood:” And to the Epheſians; “In whom we have redemption through his Blood, the forgiveneſs of ſins, &c.” becauſe it implies a firm belief that Chriſt was come in the fleſh, and that none could then have him as their propitiation or redemption, who withſtood the acknowledgment of, and belief in, his viſible appearance, which John tells us ſome denied. 2. That he came in order to the remiſſion, redemption and ſalvation of the world. 3. That his ſo dying was both an evident token of his love, and a ſtrong argument of confirmation of his meſſage and work. 4. That it might the better end the Jews ſhadowy ſervices, by an alluſion to the way of their temporary and typical ſacrifices, as the whole epiſtle to the Hebrews ſheweth. 5. And that by bringing (through the Holy Light in every particular) into the acknowledgement of, and belief in, the Blood, which was ratifying of that whole appearance, men might be brought unto the knowing Chriſt after a more inward and ſpiritual manner, ſuitable to Chriſt's own words, “It is the Spirit that quickens;” and the apoſtle avers, that “the Lord from heaven is that quickening Spirit;” by which eternal Spirit he offered up himſelf without ſpot. Nor can any reaſonably ſuppoſe, that when Chriſt ſo ſpoke to his diſciples, explanatorily of what he had obſcurely and in parables ſaid to the Jews, that he meant not ſomething more hidden and divine than what they and the Jews ſaw; yet that which hindered thoſe Jews from the knowledge or benefit thereof, was their ſtumbling at Him, without a confeſſing of whom they could never come into the beholding or experiencing of his Divine Life in them.

Rom. iii. 25.
Epheſ. i. 7.

To conclude; that Body was the Divine LIFE's; “A body haſt thou prepared ME;” therefore all that was done by that body, towards the redemption of mankind, was eminently the Divine Life's: Yet becauſe oftentimes actions are denominated from, or appropriated to, the inſtrument, as the next cauſe, though not the efficient or moſt eminent cauſe; therefore the ſcripture ſpeaks forth (as indeed is the propriety of both the Hebrew and Greek tongues) parabolically, hyperbolically, metaphorically, the inward Subſtance and hidden Life of things, by things more exterior and obvious to the ſenſe, 1673. Ch.XVIII. to the end that ſuch myſteries might be the better accommodated to vulgar capacities. Conſider what I ſay, with this qualification, That ultimately and chiefly, not wholly and excluſively, the Divine Life in that Body was the Redeemer: For the Sufferings of that Holy Body of Jeſus had an engaging and procuring Virtue in them, though the Divine Life was that fountain from whence originally it came. And as the Life declared and preached forth itſelf through that Holy Body, ſo they who did then come to the benefit procured by the Divine Life, could only do it through an hearty confeſſion to it as appearing in that Body, and that from a ſenſe firſt begotten by a meaſure of the ſame in themſelves.

Rom. iii. 25. This is the main import of thoſe places; "whom God hath ſet forth to be a propitiation," and "in whom we have redemption through faith in his blood." For who is this he, whom God hath ſet forth, and in whom is redemption? Certainly the ſame Heb. x. 5. 7. he that was before Abraham, the Rock of the fathers, that cried, "Lo, I come to do "thy will, O God; a body haſt thou prepared me;" which was long before the body was conceived and born. But may ſome ſay, 'How is it then his Blood?' Why, juſt as the Body is his Body.

Thoſe who had ſaith in that blood, believed his viſible appearance, inaſmuch as they acknowledged that great ſeal and ratification of it, to wit, the ſhedding of the blood of his body, who came to ſave the world, and who alone is the propitiation, redemption, and ſalvation of all who had and have right faith in that appearance, and meſſage ſo confirmed, and therefore ſo often expreſſed by it, as including all his whole life and ſufferings beſides. And this is my reaſon for it, That it was impoſſible for any man, in that day, to confeſs to and believe in the Divine Light and Life which appeared in that prepared Body, but from the inward diſcoveries and operations of the Divine Light, with which Chriſt the Word-God, who took fleſh, had enlightened him.

However, though the apoſtles might then ſo expreſs themſelves, thereby to aſſert and recommend unto the faith of all that eminent and bleſſed Manifeſtation, and the great love of Chriſt therein, as the viſitation of the Heavenly Life through that prepared Body, and the deep ſufferings of both for the world, being true and ſpiritual witneſſes thereof; yet it was never intended that they ſhould barely reſt there, but preſs after the knowledge of Chriſt, by faith, in ſomething farther, and beyond that body in which he appeared, not excluding our belief in That too. They who knew Chriſt after the Fleſh, were to preſs after ſome more Spiritual diſcovery of him; and it was expedient that they who almoſt doted upon his outward manifeſtation, ſhould be weaned from it, to the end his more interior, and indeed beneficial revelation of himſelf, might be witneſſed by the ſoul.

Faith in his Blood was requiſite, that they might confeſs Him, whoſe body and blood it was, to be the Christ, who is God over all, bleſſed for ever; which was the great queſtion with the Jews, 'Whether God was truly manifeſted in that Body of Fleſh, 'which they ſaw?' So that the ſtreſs lies in confeſſing to the Divinity come in the fleſh; otherwiſe they would have rejected not only the moſt ſignal ſuffering of the Whole Manifeſtation, but conſequently That Itſelf. To conclude, we confeſs, he who then appeared, was and is the Propitiation, &c. and in him was redemption obtained, by all thoſe who had ſuch true faith in his blood: But ſtill it is to be underſtood, that there muſt be a witneſſing of a meaſure of the ſame Light, Spirit and Power, to appear for the redemption of the ſoul from the pollution of ſin, in each particular.

VIII. That Juſtification came by Faith in his Blood, is clear in a ſenſe; for by the Law could no fleſh be juſtified: That is, the Law being added becauſe of tranſgreſſion, certainly the tranſgreſſor could not be juſtified, whilſt ſuch, by that Law which condemned him for being ſuch. Which puts me upon diſtinguiſhing betwixt Juſtification as it is ſometimes taken, viz. for Remiſſion, Pardon, or Forgiveneſs of ſin paſt upon Repentance; and that Juſtification which implies an acceptance with, and an acceſs to, God, as a keeper of the law of the Spirit of Life; which is 'to be made inherently 'juſt, righteous, or holy.'

In the firſt ſenſe, ſince all have ſinned, no man can be juſtified by the law he has tranſgreſſed: Therefore that great favour and mercy of remiſſion, pardon and forgiveneſs, was only then generally preached in the name of Jeſus, which ſuch as believed in his meſſage ſhould obtain. Thus, "by the work of the law ſhall no fleſh be juſti-"fied;" becauſe all the righteouſneſs man is capable of, cannot make ſatisfaction for any unrighteouſneſs he hath committed; ſince what he daily doth, is but what he daily owes. But ſtill, ſuch as keep the law are juſtified: For that a man ſhould be condemned both for tranſgreſſing and keeping the law too, would be very hard. What ſhall we ſay then, but that Juſtification in the firſt ſenſe, ſince Adam's day to this, hath been God's free love, upon Repentance; and above all, that by Chriſt's Viſible appearance and Suffering, and in his Name, was Remiſſion, Pardon, or Forgiveneſs preached, or held forth to the whole world, upon their believing therein, more eminently than ever.

But in the laſt ſenſe, no man can be juſtified, but as he is made juſt, and is found actually doing the will of God: That juſtifies; That is it which gives acceptance with, and acceſs to God. In this ſenſe it was the apoſtle ſaid, "Such as are the doers of the law, "ſhall be juſtified;" and not from the guilt of what they formerly did againſt it by their after keeping it; for that is the Free Love of God alone, upon the repentance of the creature; which hath been in all former ages, but never ſo eminently held forth to the world, as by the Coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt in the Fleſh.

So that thus far we can approach the honeſter ſort of profeſſors of religion; or rather, we were herein never at a diſtance from them, viz. 'That men may be reconciled, and 'in a ſenſe juſtified, while ſin may not be totally deſtroyed:' That is, God, upon their repenting of paſt ſins, tho' not then clearly purged from the ground of evil, may, and we believe doth, remit, pardon, or forgive former offences, and is thus far reconciled: That is, he ceaſeth to be angry, or at a diſtance from them, as when they went on in a ſtate of diſobedience to the Light. Yet for ever we muſt affirm, That no man or woman can be made a child of God, but as the New Birth, Regeneration, and the Divine and Heavenly Image, comes to be witneſſed, through the putting off the old man and his deeds, and being baptized, by the Holy Ghoſt and Fire, into the One Holy Body, of which Chriſt, the immaculate Lamb of God, is Head and Lord. So that all thoſe who apply to themſelves, or others, the promiſes due to this ſtate, unto that before mentioned, heal themſelves or others deceitfully; and God will judge for thoſe things. So let all people conſider with ſobriety and moderation, if the things we aſſert are not moſt agreeable to the Scripture, and that Light of Truth which is in their own Conſciences, unto which we moſt of all deſire to be made manifeſt.

IX. Nor is this all the good the Coming and Sufferings of that bleſſed Manhood brought unto the world: For having been enabled ſo effectually to perform the will of God, living; and having ſo patiently ſuffered the will of wicked men, dying; therein freely offering up his moſt innocent life for the world; he certainly "obtained exceeding great and precious Gifts;" which, as every man comes to believe in the Light wherewith Chriſt Jeſus hath enlightened him, and to be led by it, he ſhall aſſuredly feel a particular benefit to himſelf, accruing from that general one procured by Chriſt, who ſo laid down his life for the world.

In ſhort, as we cannot but acknowledge him a Saviour in that very Manifeſtation, or coming in that prepared Body, who appeared ſo extraordinarily to viſit the world with his marvellous Light and Truth, and to turn their minds from error and darkneſs, and who actually converted and reclaimed many, and endued his followers with his own heavenly Light, Life and Power, whereby to ſupply his exterior abſence with a moſt lively, piercing and effectual miniſtry, for the completing of the reſt from generation to generation; ſo muſt we needs attribute this, chiefly, to the Divine Light, Life and Power, that through the Manhood, of both Lord and Servants, ſhined forth and revealed itſelf to the ſalvation of the world.

Nor are we yet, as hath been often hinted (to ſpeak ſtrictly) to aſcribe the particular ſalvation of every man's ſoul to the appearance of that ſame Light in Nature, in either Lord or Servant (albeit many were reached into their very hearts and conſciences at that time, and great and mighty things were generally procured, and Chriſt in that manifeſtation became the Author of ſalvation unto many); but rather, as he is the Light of men individually, he both then did, and now doth, appear in the hearts and conſciences of men, unto the awakening of them, and turning their minds from the darkneſs of tradition, formality and ſin, which had, and doth, overcaſt and darken the ſoul, unto that bleſſed Light in men, that thereby (as to them) ſuffered, and doth yet ſuffer, ſo great and tedious an eclipſe: I ſay, this is the efficient cauſe of ſalvation; and all other exterior viſitations, and miniſtries of aſſiſtance, though from the ſame Light, are, in reſpect of the Light in every ſingle man or woman, but inſtrumental and ſecondary.

In this ſenſe then, man is only a ſaviour inſtrumentally; but Chriſt, both with reference to his Bodily Appearance, and in the Miniſtry of his Servants, is the Moſt Excellent Means, and the Only efficient Cauſe, of ſalvation, as revealed and obeyed in the conſciences of men. So that the queſtion is not, Whether Quakers deny any benefit to redound by Chriſt's bodily ſufferings? But, Whether the profeſſors allow and acknowledge the main of the work to the divine life and light?

In ſhort, he was a general Saviour in that eminent appearance at Jeruſalem, in which he did ſo many great and good things for mankind; and he is an effectual Saviour to every particular perſon, as we find him in our hearts, an holy Light, ſhewing ſin, reproving for it, and converting from it, into the holy nature of the Light, Chriſt Jeſus, to be fleſh of his fleſh, and bone of his bone.

Thus have I declared, according to my underſtanding, grounded upon my experience, and that illumination God has given me, in love and moderation, the very truth, weight and tendency of the outward coming of Chriſt and his deep ſufferings by and for the world: And alſo the nature of his inward coming into the ſouls of men, to expel the darkneſs that lodged there, and give unto them the "Light of Life." In both which reſpects I confeſs him to be the Saviour of the world in general, and the Saviour of each man in particular: But that the benefit accruing to men from him as the general Saviour, 1673. Ch. XVIII. viour, is only known and received by ſuch as witneſs him a particular Saviour; and this I will abide by: For "Chriſt in man becometh the Hope of Glory," and man's being "changed into the ſame image, from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord," 2 Cor. iii. 18. is the Salvation and Perfection of every true Chriſtian.

CHAP. XIX.

That Chriſt is the Light, or the Light is Chriſt, proved from Scripture, and ſo concluded; notwithſtanding two Objections, which are fully anſwered.

Ch. XIX. THAT which remains to compleat our ſcriptural diſcourſe of the divine Light, is to pronounce it that which our enemies deſpiſe to call it, and do not a little undervalue both us and it, becauſe we do; I mean Chriſt. Not that the Manifeſtation of Light in every conſcience is the intire Chriſt, but that Chriſt, the Word-God, is that "Light of Righteouſneſs, which lighteth all men;" for which the ſcripture is moſt expreſs in that ſo well known (but little believed) paſſage, delivered to us by the beloved diſciple, who beſt knew what his Lord was, and ſtood in no need of any of their information how to denominate or rightly characterize him; altho' they and others implicitly accuſe him of weakneſs, obſcurity, nay error, if not blaſphemy too; who make it all this (and if it were poſſible more) in a poor Quaker, for only believing, on pure conviction, this one weighty paſſage, "That was the true Light which enlightens all mankind coming into the world."

I have ſo thoroughly handled this matter, in a late book, intituled, "The Spirit of Truth Vindicated," that I need the leſs to enlarge at this time, to which I refer the reader for ſatisfaction, concerning ſome objections raiſed againſt the place. However, I will briefly conſider it here; and that our believing Chriſt to be an univerſal and ſufficient Light, and that Light to be Chriſt, may ſtand in the view of the world upon ſo good a foundation as the teſtimony of that divine and well-beloved apoſtle, I ſhall obſerve that two things are commonly urged againſt our underſtanding of the firſt nine verſes of John, as they reſpect the Light.

1. Some ſay, That the light here ſpoken of is not a ſupernatural, and conſequently no ſaving light, but the light of common Reaſon: Others call it of Nature, decayed by the fall; and what conviction ariſeth thence, is only the imperfect remains of that Natural Light, which theſe men, who thus ſpeak, grant all have, as well before, as after Chriſt's coming in the fleſh.

2. Others ſay, That this is indeed an univerſal and ſaving Light, but they reſtrain it to Chriſt's viſible appearance; and make the all to be all thoſe only that ſhall believe; and the world to be the new ſpiritual world Chriſt came to create, by ſaving knowledge, which believers come into.

I will briefly anſwer both, and therein as well all thoſe who hold the former, as thoſe who maintain the latter.

It is agreed by the firſt ſort, that in the beginning of this chapter Chriſt's Eternal Divinity is declared by the Evangeliſt; ſince ſome of them tell us out of Euſebius, that it was written on that very occaſion; one Cerinthus then denying any ſuch thing.

John i. 1, 2, 3, 5, 9. "The Word which was with God, and was and is God." This God, the ſame perſon tells us in his Firſt Epiſtle, "is Light:" That "by him all things were made;" among the reſt, mankind. He then tells us, That "this Word had Life;" and from thence deſcends to inform us what the Word was with reſpect to man: "In Him," the Word, "was Life, and the Life was the Light of Men:" And that, as ſuch, He was "that True Light (and not John, who only came to bear witneſs of that true "Light) which lighteth all mankind coming into the world."

That this Light is Divine, and no otherwiſe natural than as it is Chriſt's Nature, or Natural to the Word, I ſhall thus prove:

Man is here ſuppoſed to be before he was lighted; therefore whatever was proper and natural to man, as man, he had before he was enlightened; that is, 'He had a reaſonable Soul, endued with intelligent faculties, and that cloathed with a Body fitted with ſenſible organs: The latter differed him from inanimate, the former from irrational creatures.' But ſtill the Light, with which this Soul is lighted, in reference to God, and things appertaining to its eternal well-being, belongs not to man, as man. Surely, then, this Light muſt be ſuperadded; that is, over and above man's compoſition as a meer underſtanding creature; and conſequently, it muſt deſcend from above, and in this ſenſe be ſupernatural. 'Thus the Word created all things; and among them, made man, and lighted man with a ſupernatural Light.'

That this Light was not only over and above man's nature, but is alſo of a Divine and ſaving one in itſelf, I prove from its being the LIFE of the WORD. For if the Life of the Word be the Light of Men, here is no ſuch Thing as deſcending to an Effect to prove the Light divine (as that the Life ſhould bring forth a Light; and therefore fore this Light is divine, becauſe the Life of the Word, that produced it, is ſo); I ſay, without going to an Effect for a proof of the Light's Divinity, I thus undeniably prove it from the Life itſelf; "for that VERY Divine LIFE is the Light." Not that it createth a light, or brings forth a light, as a cauſe doth an effect; but is ITSELF that Very Light. So that unleſs they will make that Life Natural, (I mean, as they do, Created, though very improperly, for a Divine Life is Natural to Chriſt) they cannot conclude the Light, which is that very ſame Life itſelf, to be a mere Natural Light.

If, then, the very Life of the Word be the Light of Men; then, unleſs the Life of the Word be Natural, the Light of men muſt be ſupernatural, divine and infinite, as it becomes the Life of the Word (which is GOD) to be.

The Life of the Word being then the Light of Men, and that without any deſcent, and conſequently Divine, I have no need to prove it ſaving, till our oppoſers have divided Saving from Divine. However, let me briefly ſay, that it being a meaſure of the True Light, ſo called by way of excellency, far tranſcending John (for as ſuch is He preferred who is the Enlightner) and that it was through John all ſhould believe in him; and laſtly, that to thoſe who received him as the Univerſal Enlightener, or the True Light, "He gave power to become the Sons of God," it will unanſwerably follow, that the John i. 12. Light is ſaving. And indeed I have, with multiplied arguments and teſtimonies, made appear from ſcripture and ſtory, the univerſality and ſufficiency of that Divine Light. Such then that ſay it is decayed, becauſe they are ſo themſelves, methinks reſemble thoſe at Sea, who, being under ſail, fancy the Shore moves. The fault is in the Eye, blinded by the god of the world, and not in that bleſſed Light, which ſhines unprofitably upon the blind, through their own blindneſs got by diſobedience. Let them, by unfeigned repentance, be unſcaled, and the Sun will give proof of its Light. Darkneſs ought not to charge the Light, but itſelf, that it ſees not. Some confeſs All are enlightened, but deny the Sufficiency thereof; yet refuſe to be ruled by it, and live up to it. Let them firſt obey it, before they deſpiſe it; and prove themſelves above it, before they throw it ſo far below a Chriſtian: They may be then allowed to blame the Light as impotent, or imperfect, when they outlive it, or can live uncondemned of it, and that experience tells us its inſufficiency to well-living: 'Tis vain to undervalue that which chargeth both with duty omitted, and ſin committed.

However, this ſtands ſure, that the Life of the Word is the Light of Men, and conſequently Divine; and there I will leave this firſt ſort of Men, and their fruitleſs oppoſition.

To the ſecond interpretation given, deſtructive of that ſcope we ſay the text has, I return thus much:

That becauſe the Light of men was the Life of the Word, which Word was GOD, by whom all things were created; and that All Men are mentioned in that place controverted, which preſuppoſeth no farther qualification in order to have this Light, than being born (One of that All Men) into this World; I conclude, that it is not only a moſt falſe, but injurious notion, to aſſert the Commencement or Being of that Light to men only to be from the Coming of Chriſt in the Fleſh.

Beſides, ſince this relates to the Whole Man; which Word begins with Adam, and ends with the laſt of man's race; I cannot conceive how that expoſition can be valid: For then John would have been before Chriſt, inſtead of Chriſt's being before Abraham: Whereas, therefore is John denied to be that Light, becauſe that True Light, by way of excellency, was the enlightner of All Men, yea, of John himſelf; and therefore called, "That True Light," that is, the Fountain of all Light, Light itſelf, from whom All derive, but he derives from none.

And to ſay nothing at this time of the miſerable eſtate thoſe of mankind muſt labour under antecedently to Chriſt's coming in the fleſh, let it be conſidered, that theſe firſt nine verſes in John relate not in the leaſt to his Fleſhly appearance, from whence thoſe men would date both His Original, and Man's Illumination; but are a continued ſeries of the higheſt proofs of his Divinity, that we might as well know what he was before he came, as when he did come; and the one was an introduction to the other. Neither is it fair for theſe men to allegorize Chriſt out of his Divinity, and yet deny us any allegory to prove it. If they deny meanings elſewhere, let them do ſo here: It miſbecomes men that have their wits, to rack them to prop fancy.

Farther let me add, that as He who then came into the world, was the ſame that John i. 10. created that world into which he came, and therefore previous, or before ſuch coming; ſo neither can it hold that the World, into which man comes, is the new creation, ſince it is not ſaid, "who believe," which is uſually joined to things of that importance, ("be- John iii. 19. "lieve and be ſaved," &c.) Eph. v. 13. Nor can ſuch as do not believe, be totally excluded from being lighted; ſince the wicked could not rebel againſt it, if they had it not; neither mens evil actions be reproved without it: So that all ſuch notions are foreign both from Scripture and Reaſon.

We ſhall conclude then, 'That Chriſt, the Word-God, is the Light of the World, 'and that All are enlightned by Him, the Eternal Sun of righteouſneſs; therefore the 'Light of men is Chriſt, (for to Him) Chriſt, or the True Light, John teſtified who gives wicked men to ſee their unrighteouſneſs, and who leads good men on in the way of holineſs, which, perſevered in, brings unqueſtionably to eternal happineſs; and without which, all Imputation of general acts of righteouſneſs, performed by Chriſt without us, will avail nothing for ſalvation in the great and terrible day of God's inqueſt and judgment, when all ſhall be judged, not by the deeds any other hath done for them (wholly without them) but according to the deeds done in their own mortal bodies.'

This ſubject I ſhall conclude, with a few reaſons for the Univerſality and Sufficiency of the Light within; that we may not only be ſeen to have the Scriptures of Truth, and other authorities, but Reaſon alſo (which is more univerſal) on our ſide too.

CHAP. XX.

The Univerſality of the LIGHT Within, proved by Reaſon.

Chap. XX.

THAT there is an Univerſal Light, the Univerſality of all ages hath plentifully teſtified. There is nothing more conſtant now, that can plead either ſuch antiquity, or general conſent: Not a nation in the world ever knew an age, in which it was deſtitute of ſuch a diſcovery of internal Light, as gave them to diſcern evil from good; that virtue was not ever moſt commendable, and vice above all things pernicious and damnable. This is matter of fact, which I have already proved, and the moſt barbarous of nations now inhabited, are a clear demonſtration of what I ſay. I conclude, therefore, ſince both wicked and good men, in all ages, have confeſſed to well and ill doing, and that this depends upon the diſcovery of the Divine Light of Chriſt, which manifeſts every reproveable action; that none of mankind are exempted from this illumination.

But again, it is highly conſiſtent with the Goodneſs of God, and Order of his Creation; ſince it ſeems unreaſonable that men ſhould have the benefit of a Natural Sun, which ſhines on the juſt and unjuſt, by which to direct their ſteps, and ſecurely tranſact all temporal affairs; and yet that their Souls ſhould be left deſtitute of a Spiritual Luminary, or Sun of Righteouſneſs; when, in compariſon of the ſalvation of a ſingle Soul, Chriſt counts the world of no value. The Soul then hath Eyes as well as the Body; and as men may ſee, if they pleaſe, when the Sun is in the outward firmament, unleſs they wilfully cloſe their eyes, ſo may all rational ſouls ſee, if they will, by their Eye of REASON, that Spiritual Sun, which gives as true diſcerning and direction to the Mind, how to think and deſire, as the natural Sun doth to the Body, how to act and walk aright.

Were not this true, men would miſerably charge God with neglect to his creatures: For ſince it is to be ſuppoſed that God made nothing but with a deſign it ſhould acknowledge a Creator, after its reſpective nature; and that man's duty was peculiar, namely, Divine Homage and Worſhip, expreſſed generally by a life correſponding with that Being which made him, it is juſt that we believe God hath endued mankind with ſomething that is Divine, in order to it; ſince otherwiſe, man would be deſtitute of that which ſhould enable him to perform that duty, without which he could not pleaſe or rightly acknowledge God. If then all mankind ought to worſhip, fear, and reverence God, certainly all mankind have an ability from God ſo to do, or elſe perfect impoſſibilities are expected, man of himſelf being a moſt impotent creature. But certainly it can never ſtand with the rectitude and juſtice of the eternal God, to expect from man what he never gave him power to do, or the improvement of a talent he never had. In ſhort, if we ought to think that God is to be reverenced and worſhipped, we muſt agree that God endued mankind with a Divine Light and Knowledge, in order to that end, or ſay with the man in Matthew, "God is an hard Maſter, and auſtere Lord, he reaps "where he never ſowed." But I am almoſt afraid that the principles and prejudice of ſome incline them rather to think hardly of God, than favourably of the Light. How ill doth it become thoſe to object an impoſſibility of the Light's bearing their iniquities, who are daily wounding it with their rebellions?

But they object 'Some deny they have it; and others by their diſſolute lives ſhew 'they are void of it.' To which I ſay, it is not impoſſible for a life of worldly care and pleaſures, and downright debauchery, to darken and quite blind that Eye which only ſees the Light of Truth, and, being kept ſingle, preſerves the body full of Light; but this makes no alteration in the LIGHT: If, through repentance and contrition, the ſcales fall off, the Light refuſes not itſelf to the eye that can and will ſee it; the Light remains unaltered, it is Man that changes. Would the running mad of ſome men be a good argument to prove mankind irrational? Neither is it any demonſtration againſt the Univerſality of the Light within, becauſe ſome have, by the ſtupefyings of ſin, rendered themſelves inſenſible of it.

Nor doth ill living diſprove the Sufficiency of the Light, though it prove Diſobedience to it. Is it good logick, 'that becauſe a wicked man will not receive good advice, therefore he never had it?’ And what better reaſon can it be to ſay, ‘Men diſobey the Light, therefore they never had it,’ whilſt that proves they had it, at leaſt as a Condemner? A man may be ſaid to be lighted, when he knows and does not his duty; but rather, I confeſs, when he becomes a better man by ſuch illumination. In the firſt ſenſe, All are illuminated; in the laſt, only ſuch as follow to obey the Light; for they will find their underſtandings illuminated, and their hearts mended, of which the diſobedience of others deprives them. In ſhort, all have Light to reprove, unleſs they have quite put out their eyes; but ſuch only have it beneficially, as their teacher and director, who receive it in the Love of it.

Since then the Conſent of Mankind, the Goodneſs and Juſtice of God, and the Reaſon of the thing itſelf, plead ſo ſtrongly for the Univerſality of this Light, I need ſay the leſs, and ſhall deſcend to conſider its Sufficiency.

CHAP. XXI.

The Sufficiency of the LIGHT proved by Reaſon.

BEcauſe as well the Sufficiency, as Univerſality of the Light, is ſtruck at by our adverſaries, it will not, I hope, ſeem amiſs if I ſay ſomething briefly to it; though much of what I have ſaid about the other may be referred to this.

That the Univerſal Light is alſo ſufficient, is a belief ſo reaſonable and neceſſary, that the oppoſite opinion muſt needs impeach the juſtice of God. All grant, that God has made man rational, capable, in ſome meaſure, of the knowledge of his Creator; which his bare Capacity would never have given him, unleſs God had pleaſed to have made ſome diſcovery of himſelf, ſuitable to that created Capacity in the creature. Certainly then, ſince God deſires not that the creature ſhould receive a wrong impreſſion of him, while he requires univerſal fear and reverence, he muſt needs have given ſome certain and ſufficient diſcovery and meaſure to the creature, in order to it, by thoſe lively manifeſtations, and moſt ſenſible touches of the Light to and upon the ſoul, which cannot but be true, clear, and, if minded, efficacious: For that God ſhould require men to ſerve him, and not give them what is ſufficient, is worſe than not to give at all; ſince man's not obeying ſuch diſcoveries, is not ſo great an aggravation of his neglect, as the imperfection of them is, either of the inſufficiency, or unwillingneſs, of him that made them, do otherwiſe. What is this but to ſay, that God expects homage from men, as their ſovereign Lord, and that they live uprightly in the world, and yet he has not given them ability to do it? He pronounces ſuch miſerable who conform not themſelves to an holy life, but gives no power to avoid the curſe? In ſhort, though Reaſon tell us he made none purpoſely to deſtroy them, but rather that he might be glorified in their ſalvation, which he is alſo ſaid to invite men to; yet that he deſigns nothing leſs, by leaving all mankind under the faintings of an impoſſible ſucceſs. But as ſuch diſmal conſequences belong not to the Truth, ſo we are well aſſured, the Light, of which we ſpeek, has ever been ſufficient to the end for which it has been given, in every age, both to manifeſt evil, condemn for it, and redeem from the power and pollution of it, by the holy operation of its power, all thoſe who are the diligent diſciples of it. For it ſeems moſt unreaſonable that the ſpirit of darkneſs ſhould be ſufficient to draw into ſin, and yet that the Spirit and Light of Chriſt ſhould not be ſufficient to redeem and ſave from it. Since therefore we cannot admit of any inſufficiency in the Light within, but at the ſame time we muſt ſuppoſe, 1ſt, That whilſt God would be rightly worſhipped, he has too darkly diſcovered the way how to do it aright; and 2dly, That his gift is impotent; and 3dly, That man is required to do what he has no power to perform; and 4thly, That whilſt God requires man to ſerve him, he hath not ſo much as ſhewn him what way he ought to do it (which are conſequences moſt unworthy of God); we rather chuſe to ſit down contented with this belief, ‘That God, who made man, and has given him a ſoul capable of knowing and ſerving his maker, hath alſo endued him with divine knowledge, by a ſuperadded Light and Power, and enabled him thereby to live ſubſervient to that knowledge: That God's gift is perfect and ſufficient for that work; and that ſuch as are led by it, muſt needs be led to God; unto whom the Divine Light naturally tends, and attracts, as that from whom it came; which is certainly a ſtate of bleſſed immortality.’

In ſhort, accept, reader, of theſe few arguments, comprehenſive of theſe two chapters, and indeed of moſt of what goes before.

1. God requires no man to do any thing he has not given him firſt Light to know, and then Power to do. But God requires every man to fear him, and work righteouſneſs: Therefore he has given every man both a Diſcovery of his will, and Power to do it.

2. No man ought to worſhip the True God ignorantly: But every man is commanded to worſhip God: Therefore he is to do it knowingly.

3. No man can know God, but God muſt diſcover it to him, and that cannot be without Light: Therefore every man has Light.

4. This Light muſt be ſufficient, or God's gifts are imperfect, and anſwer not the end for which they were given. But God's gifts are perfect, and can perform what they are deſigned for: Therefore ſince the Light is his gift, it muſt be ſufficient.

The Sum is this:

Every man ought to fear, worſhip, and obey God. No man can do it aright, that knows him not. No man can know him but by the diſcovery he makes of himſelf. No diſcovery can be made without Light. Nor can this Light give that diſcovery, if imperfect or inſufficient in nature: Therefore all have a ſufficient Light to this great end and purpoſe, viz. To fear, worſhip, and obey God; and this Light is Chriſt.

CHAP. XXII.

The Queſtion, Who He is, or They are, that obey this Divine Light, &c. conſidered and anſwered; being the Character of a True Quaker.

Ch. XXII. I Am now come to my laſt Queſtion, viz. 'Who this he is, or they are, that obey 'this Light, and in obeying attain Salvation?' Or, what are the qualifications of thoſe that obey this Light? Not what are their Names; but what kind or manner of people are they? In ſhort, 'What is it to obey the Light?'

I think I have ſo fully expreſſed myſelf already in this matter, that, with an ingenious reader, I might be ſaved the pains of farther conſidering it; but that nothing may be thought to be ſhunned as unanſwerable, which is ſo eaſy to be anſwered, I muſt tell him and all men, and that not without ſome experimental knowledge of what I ſay, That ſuch obey the Light, who refrain from all that the Light manifeſts to be evil, and who incline to perform all that it requires to be done. For example: When the Light ſhews that it is inconſiſtent with a man fearing God, to be wanton, paſſionate, proud, covetous, backbiting, envious, wrathful, unmerciful, revengeful, prophane, drunken, voluptuous, unclean; which, with-ſuch-like, are called in ſcripture "the fruits of the fleſh, and the "works of darkneſs;" and perſons ſo qualified, "the children of wrath, ſuch as de-"light not to retain God in their knowledge, &c." I ſay, when the Light diſcovers theſe things to be inconſiſtent with a man fearing God, he who truly obeys the Light, denies and forſakes them, however croſs it be to fleſh and blood, and let it coſt him never ſo dear: Though relations do both threaten and intreat, and the world mock, and that he is ſure to become the ſong of the drunkard, and a deriſion to his ancient companions. No, he dare not conform himſelf any more to the faſhions of the world, which paſs away, and which draw out the mind into vain and unprofitable delights, by which the JUST in him had formerly been ſlain; neither to gratify "the luſt of the eye, the "luſt of the fleſh, and the pride of life," which are not of the nature of his Father, who has begotten better deſires and reſolutions in him. He rejects the converſation he once had in the world; and, in the eye of its children, ſeems a man forlorn and diſtracted. He takes up the Croſs, deſpiſes the ſhame, and willingly drinks of the cup of bitter mockings, and yields to be baptized with the baptiſm of deep trials, that Chriſt Jeſus his Lord drank of, and was baptized with.

Gal. v. Epheſ. v. Rom. i.

Jam. v. 6. 1 John ii. 15. 16.

He is as well taught to deny the religions, as cares and pleaſures of the world. Such as profeſs religion from what they have either been taught by others, or read and gathered after their carnal minds out of the Scriptures, intruding into the practices of either prophets or apoſtles, as to the external and ſhadowy things, not being led thereto by the ſame Power they had, he can have no fellowſhip with. He counts all ſuch faith and worſhip the imagination of men, or a mere lifeleſs imitation: He prefers one ſigh begotten from a ſenſe of God's work in the heart, beyond the longeſt prayers in that ſtate: 'He leaves them all, walks as a man alone, fearing to offer God a ſacrifice that is not 'of his own preparing.' He charges all other faiths and worſhips with inſufficiency, and mere creaturely power, which are not held and performed from an holy conviction and preparation by the Angel of God, the Light of his Preſence, in the heart and conſcience: Therefore it is that he goes forth in the ſtrength of his God againſt the merchants of Babylon; and woes and plagues are rightly in his mouth againſt thoſe buyers and ſellers of the ſouls of men. He is jealous for the name of the Lord, and therefore dares not ſpeak peace unto them, neither can he put into their mouths, but teſtifies againſt all ſuch ways: "Freely he received, freely he gives."

Thus is this man unraveled, unreligioned, and unbottomed as to his former ſtate, wherein he was religious upon Letter, Form, Mens Traditions, Education, and his own Imagination. He is as a man quite undone, that he may be made what the Lord would have him to be. Thus is he convinced of Sin, and of Righteouſneſs too; and the joy he once had when he girded himſelf and went whither he liſted, is now turned into ſorrow, and his rejoicing into howling. He has beheld God in the Light of his Son, and abhors himſelf in duſt and aſhes. Sin, that was pleaſant once in the mouth, he finds bitter now in the belly; and that which the world eſteems worthy of their care, he flies as a man would do a bear robbed of her whelps. Sin is become “exceeding “ſinful” to him, inſomuch that he cries out, “who ſhall deliver me?” He labours greatly, and is very heavy laden. Yet he is not willing to “fly in the Winter,” but is reſolved to ſtand the trial; for this man not only brings his former deeds to the Light, and there ſuffers judgment to paſs upon them, but patiently takes part in that judgment, who was ſo great an acceſſory to them. Nor doth his obedience conclude with the ſentence given againſt paſt ſins, and himſelf that committed them; but moſt patiently “endures the hand of the Lord till his indignation be over-paſt,” and till that which condemned ſin (the fruit) hath deſtroyed the very root of it which hath taken ſo deep hold in his heart, and that the ſame Spirit of Judgment that condemned ſin, is brought forth into perfect victory over the very nature and power of ſin. This judgment is found and felt in the Light; therefore do the “Sons of the Night” reject the knowledge of its ways, and the Children of the Day rejoice greatly in its appearance.

But neither is this all that makes up that Good Man who obeys the Light: For a complete Son of Light is one that has conquered and expelled the darkneſs? It is true, he was once darkneſs, but now “Light in the Lord,” becauſe he hath been turned from darkneſs to the Light, and from Satan's power unto God, who is Light Itſelf, and with him is his fellowſhip continually.

Eph. v.
1 John i. 5, 6.

This is the man, who, in the way of the Light of the Lamb of God, hath met with Inward Cleanſing; for having been purged by the Spirit of Judgment, and the Spirit of burning, (otherwiſe called the ſevere reproofs, ſtrokes and terrors of the Light in the conſcience) he has ever a watch ſet up in his heart. A thought muſt not paſs which has not the watch-word; but at every appearance to the mind, he cries, “Stand:” If a friend, and owned of the Light (who is the great Leader, given of God for that purpoſe) then he entertains it; otherwiſe, he brings it to the Commander of the conſcience, who is to ſit in judgment upon it. Thus is Chriſt the Light, King, Judge and Lawgiver. And by this he grows ſtrong, and increaſeth with the increaſes of God. Yet he often reads the bleſſed Scriptures, and that with much delight; greatly admiring the exceeding love of God to former ages, which he himſelf witneſſeth to be true in this; where alſo many things are opened to his refreſhment: So is the Light the “juſt man's “path,” that in every age ſtill “ſhineth brighter and brighter,” in which the cleanſing blood of Jeſus Chriſt is felt to cleanſe from all ſin. Thus doth he bridle his thoughts, ſo that his words and actions offend not. Above all, he is often retired to the Lord, loves fellowſhip with him, waits for daily bread, which he aſks, not in his own words, ſtrivings or will; but, as one empty of his thoughts, and jealous of the peace or comfort that is drawn from thence, he ſilently waits to feel the Heavenly Subſtance brought into his ſoul by the Immediate Hand of the Lord. For it is not fetching in this thought, or remembring the other paſſage in ſcripture, or deſignedly calling to mind what has been formerly known, that gives right peace; but “every Immediate Word that proceeds out of the Mouth of God,” that can ſatisfy him. In ſhort, he that obeys the Light, is thereby taught to ‘deny ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, and to be ſober, righteous, patient, humble, meek, upright, merciful, forbearing, forgiving, peaceable, ‘gentle, ſelf-denying, conſtant, faithful, and holy, becauſe the Lord his God is ‘holy.’

Jam. iii. 1, 2, 3.

Thus have I given a brief account as well what he is not, as what he is, who is obedient to the Light within, which is Chriſt's Spiritual Appearance in the heart, whoſe Holy Blood is ſenſibly felt to cleanſe, atone, and ſave, all thoſe who believe and abide therein, both from the Guilt and Pollution of ſin.

CHAP. XXIII.

The diſcourſe hitherto ſummed up, and concluded, with an Exhortation to all Profeſſors of Religion, eſpecially our Oppoſers.

Ch.XXIII.

I Will ſum up the whole of this diſcourſe in theſe few heads:

I. That ſalvation is to be ſaved from Sin firſt, and Wrath conſequently: “He ſhall “ſave his people from their ſins.” Matt. i.

II. That Chriſt, the Word-God, has lighted all mankind, not only after his coming in the fleſh, but before: And that the Light has ever been ſufficient, as well as univerſal, to lead to God all ſuch as have obeyed it, as by its properties and effects is demonſtrated.

III. That the difference betwixt the time of the Law and that of the Goſpel, as generally rally diſtinguiſhed, was rather in Manifeſtation than in Nature. God might be as much more propitious and bountiful to the laſt ages (be it that they were better able to receive ſuch extraordinary diſcoveries, or that it was the alone good pleaſure of his ſovereign will) as he was to the former ages; yet that he gave them a ſufficiency of the ſame Divine Light to conduct them through the world to eternal bleſſedneſs.

IV. That Jews and Greeks, Heathens and Chriſtians, agree in this.

V. That ſtill the pre-eminence is given to Chriſt's manifeſtation in fleſh, both generally and particularly; that being both the fulneſs of Time, and fulneſs of Diſcovery, which put an end to the types and figures, and carnal commandments, by ſhewing forth an Abrogation and Conſummation of them all, in Chriſt, the ſubſtance itſelf: In which ſtate they are not needed; but, in compariſon thereof, they are (though once they were as calendars, for weak people to read ſome myſtical glory by) but beggarly elements now.

VI. That not only in that Fleſh did the Eternal Light preach forth itſelf the End of theſe things, by revealing and becoming the author of a more plain and perfect way, though leſs eaſy to fleſh and blood (placing the ſtreſs of all upon an evangelical righteouſneſs, whereof he became the Firſt Miniſter, and our moſt Holy Example); but he alſo appeared in that Public Body, ſo peculiarly prepared, a General Saviour, by his Life, Doctrine, Miracles, Death of the Croſs, and Reſurrection; in and by all which he obtained "a name above every name."

VII. That nevertheleſs, not to the Body, but the Holy Light of Life therein, is chiefly to be aſcribed the ſalvation; and to the Body, however excellent, but inſtrumentally: For that it was the Eternal Light and Life, which gave the weight to all the actions and ſufferings of the Body.

VIII. That the benefit then procured is not witneſſed by any, but as they come to believe in Chriſt the Light, as he doth appear in the heart and conſcience, to "ſave "from ſin, deſtroy the works of the Devil, finiſh tranſgreſſion, and bring in of his "everlaſting righteouſneſs." Wherefore to imagine one's ſelf intituled to a ſtate of ſalvation, whilſt in rebellion againſt the Light within, which is Chriſt's inward knocking and appearance, muſt needs be a deluſion, moſt pernicious, and deſtructive to the ſouls of men.

IX. That, upon the whole, it is determined and concluded, that "Chriſt is that Light "which ſhineth in the conſcience."

X. That the Light is proved, by reaſon, both Univerſal and Sufficient: The firſt, from the Conſent of Mankind and the Goodneſs and Rectitude of God: The ſecond, both from experience, and that it were inconſiſtent with the Goodneſs and Wiſdom of God to give a light to his creature inſufficient for the work for which he gave it.

Thus, in ſhort, have I given the heads and reſults of moſt of the matter contained in the whole diſcourſe upon the Light: And I intreat our adverſaries they would ſeriouſly weigh the whole, before they either reject it, or pretend to reply to it. But let them be adviſed to try the Virtue of the Light, before they ſentence it to have none; and, in the love of God, be once prevailed upon to conſider, if ſomething in them doth not really condemn them for evil; and, amongſt other things, for theſe briſk attempts againſt it, and unreaſonable undervaluings of it.

O why ſhould men covet to know ſo far beyond what they do faithfully practiſe! Let them firſt out-live the juſt and holy requirings of the Light, before they put theſe barbarous affronts upon it; as a Will-in-the-whiſp, a Dark-Lanthorn-Light, natural, inſufficient, ignis fatuus, the Quakers idol, and abundance of ſuch-like frothy, prophane, and indeed blaſphemous epithets, which ſome have wickedly beſtowed upon it, as if they were its proper names: When the ſcriptures they would oppoſe to it plainly tell them, that the whole work of the apoſtolical miniſtry was, "to turn people from darkneſs to "the Light, from the power of Satan unto God, that they might have remiſſion of ſins." As much as to ſay, 'Such as are turned to the Light, are turned to God, who is Light; 'and thoſe who abide there, both have remiſſion of the puniſhment, and purgation from 'the defilement, of ſin.'

And whatever any may think of us, we both believe, aſſert, and will maintain, againſt men and devils, "That God is Light:" and that out of the Light, or void of his Divine Illumination, no man can know him, and conſequently not worſhip him, unleſs they ſhould worſhip an unknown god: That ſuch as receive this Illumination, and rebel not againſt it, but improve this Heavenly Talent, they have fellowſhip with the Pure Eternal God, and experience the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt to "cleanſe them from all unrighteouſneſs."

If any think to arrive at glory another way, and will not be admoniſhed, let them proceed: We ſpeak what we know, and can but declare what we have felt of the work of God in our hearts. The Scriptures we highly value: but we believe not the things we often quote thence to be true only becauſe there, but for that we are witneſſes of the ſame operation, and bring in our experimental teſtimonies to confirm the truth of theirs; and ſuch truly honour the ſcriptures: All others are at beſt but empty Scribes, and phariſaical babblers.

So with God I leave my labour in this particular, deſiring that this Heavenly Light may yet more abundantly ariſe upon the dark hearts of mankind, and awaken them to repentance: That ſince it hath ſo long ſhined in darkneſs uncomprehended, till even darkneſs itſelf is grown ſo impudent as to impute it to the Inſufficiency of the Light, he would be pleaſed to cauſe it to ſhine out of darkneſs, that it might plead the excellency of its own Divine Nature in the conſciences of men and women, againſt the ſcorns and detractions that even too many of the great profeſſors of Chriſtianity ſtick not to fling upon it; ſo ill are they principled, and ſo unchriſtianly employed: Which proves to me how little they are profeſſors of the "True, Pure and Undefiled Religion," whatever opinion ſome weak and ſimple people may have of them. My ſoul pitieth their oppoſition, and feareth the conſequence of ſuch reſiſtance, and deſires they may ſee the very vanity of their endeavours againſt the Light, repent of them, and be converted, that God may yet heal them. Which ſincere prayer is my return for all their hard ſpeeches and ungodly ſayings againſt us in general, and myſelf in particular,

W. PENN.

A DIS-

A DISCOURSE
OF THE
General Rule of FAITH and PRACTICE,
AND JUDGE of CONTROVERSY.

Greatly importing all thoſe who deſire to take Right Meaſures of Faith, and to determine (at leaſt to themſelves) the numerous Controverſies now on foot in the World.

By the ſame Author.

> For in Chriſt Jeſus, neither Circumciſion availeth any thing, nor Uncircumciſion, but a NEW Creature: And as many as walk according to THIS Rule, Peace be on them, and Mercy, and upon the Iſrael of God. GAL. vi. 16.
>
> But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: For the Spirit ſearcheth all Things, yea, the deep Things of God.--- The Things of God knoweth no Man, but the Spirit of God.--- He that is ſpiritual judgeth all Things. 1 COR. ii. 10, 11, 15.
>
> But ye have an Unction from the Holy One; and ye ſhall know all Things. 1 JOHN ii. 20.

A Diſcourſe of the General Rule of FAITH and PRACTICE,

SINCE there are ſo many Faiths in the world, and perplexed Controverſies about them; and that it greatly behoveth every man, if to contend for, then firſt to know, the True Faith that overcometh the world; it may not be unneceſſary to ſay ſomething of the General Rule of Faith and Life, and Judge of Controverſy, at this time. And indeed I am preſt from this weighty conſideration, that men periſh for want of it, and can no more arrive at truth without it, than the diſtreſſed mariner can gain his port, who ſails without either ſtar or compaſs.

I ſhall begin with an explanation of the terms, Rule, and Faith; of which we ſhall firſt treat; that we may as well expreſs what we intend by the one, as what we mean by the other; which will be a proper introduction to the whole diſcourſe.

By GENERAL RULE, &c. we underſtand, That Conſtant Meaſure or Standard, by which men, in all Ages, have been enabled to judge of the Truth or Error of Doctrines, and the Good or Evil of Thoughts, Words and Actions.

By FAITH, we underſtand, An Aſſent of the Mind, in ſuch manner, to the Diſcoveries made of God thereto, as to reſign up to God, and have Dependance upon Him, as the Great Creator and Saviour of his people; which is inſeparable from good Works.

That men, in all ages, have had a belief of God, and ſome knowledge of him, though not upon equal diſcovery, muſt be granted from that account that all ſtory gives of mankind in matters of religion. Several have fully performed this; of old, Juſtin Martyr, Clemens Alexandrinus, Auguſtine, and others; of latter times, Du Pleſſy, Grotius, Amiraldus, L. Herbert, and above all Dr. Cudworth: And indeed the relicks we have of the moſt ancient hiſtorians and authors, are a demonſtration in the point. Now the ſcripture tells us, that "no man knows the Father but the Son, and “ he to whom the Son reveals him:” And “ as none knows the things of man, ſave “ the ſpirit of man; ſo the things of God knows no man, but the Spirit of God.” Hence we may ſafely conclude, that the Creating Word that was with God, and was God, in whom was Life, and that Life the Light of men, and who is the Quickening Spirit, was he by whom God in all ages hath revealed himſelf; conſequently, that Light or Spirit muſt have been the general rule of mens knowledge, faith and obedience, with reſpect to God. And thus much Pythagoras, who lived about ſix hundred years before thoſe words were ſpoke or writ, laid down for a maxim, viz. ‘ That no man can know ‘ what is agreeable to God, except a man hear God himſelf,’ and that muſt be within; for that was his doctrine. To which the apoſtle and prophet thus agree: 1. In that “ whatever makes manifeſt is Light.” 2. That “ whatever might be known of God was “ made manifeſt within; for God (who is Light, 1 John i. 5.) had ſhewn it unto them.” And, “ God hath ſhewn unto thee, O man, what is good, and what God requireth of “ thee, &c.” Which could not be without the Light of his Son ſhining in man's Conſcience: Therefore the Light of Chriſt in the conſcience muſt needs have been the general rule, &c. It was by this Law that Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Melchizedeck, Abimelech, Job, Jethro, &c. walked and were accepted, as ſaith Irenæus and Tertullian; ‘ They were juſt by the Law written in their Hearts:’ Then was it their rule, to and in that juſt ſtate.

Mat. xi. 17.
1 Cor. ii. 11.
Eph. v. 13.
Rom. i. 19.
Mic. vi. 8.
Iren. l. 2. c. 30. Tertul. con. Jud. p. 184.

Obj. It ſeems then you deny the Scriptures to be the General Rule, &c.

Anſw. How can they be the General Rule, that have not been general? That which was both before and ſince they were in being, muſt needs be more general than they: But that was this Light in the conſcience, the Law and Guide of thoſe PATRIARCHS (for the Scriptures began long after, in the time of MOSES) conſequently that muſt be the General Rule, &c.

Obj. But granting that the Light within were ſo before ſcripture was extant; yet, ſince the writings of holy Scripture, the Scripture, and not the Light, hath been the General Rule.

Anſw. That cannot be, unleſs Paleſtina, or Canaan, a little province of Aſia, was the Whole World, and that the Jews, a particular people, were All Mankind. For at what time thoſe writings were among the Jews, other nations were only left to the Law and Light Within. This the apoſtle confirmeth in that paſſage, “ For the Gentiles, “ which have not the Law (that is, the outward law, or law written upon ſtone) do by “ nature the things contained in the Law, which ſheweth the work of the Law written “ in their hearts.” And the Gentiles themſelves called it, ‘ the Immutable Law; the Everlaſting Foundation of Virtue; no lifeleſs precepts, but Immortal; a ſacred Good, God the Overſeer; the Living Rule; the Root of the Soul; that which makes the Good Man. Thus Thales, Pythagoras, Socrates, Plato, Plotin, Hieron, Philo, Plutarch, as cited. And ſaith Sophocles, ‘ God grant that I may always obſerve that venerable ſanctity ‘ in my words and deeds which theſe Noble Precepts (writ in man's heart) require: God ‘ is their father, neither ſhall they ever be abrogated; for there is in them a great God ‘ that never waxeth old.’ More reverend epithets than our oppoſers can afford, as their books but too openly witneſs; yet would go for chriſtian men, tho' manifeſtly ſhort of Heathens.

Rom. ii. 14, 15.

Thus it is evident that the Scripture was not the General Rule, after it was given forth.

Obj. But hath it not been ſince, and is it not now, the general rule? &c.

Anſw. There hath been ſince, and is now, the ſame impediment; for before Chriſt's coming in the fleſh, and ſince, where the Scriptures never reached, there hath been the ſame Light. And though nations, by not glorifying God as God, when they have known him, have been given up to all manner of iniquities, inſomuch as their underſtandings have been greatly veiled; yet did not the Light Within ſo entirely loſe its ruling exerciſe among them, as that they lived without any ſenſe of ſuch a thing: Therefore ſtill the ſcriptures have not been, neither are, the General Rule; no not ſo much as of any age; ſince in no age can it be proved that the whole, or greateſt part of the world, had them. But had they been ſo for ſome one or two ages, as they never were; yet the granting it will not reach our queſtion, where the word general implieth the nature of the thing itſelf reſpecting mankind, from the beginning of the world to this day, and ſo to the end.

Obj. But is not the ſcripture the rule, &c. of our day?

Anſw. If the rule, then the general rule: For whatſoever is the rule of faith and 1673. life, excludeth all other from being general, they being but particular in reſpect of itſelf; Therefore not the rule, though a rule, of faith and life.

But beſides their not being general, I have ſeveral reaſons to offer, why they cannot be the rule of faith and life, &c.

* 1. If now the rule, then ever the rule; but they were not ever the rule; and therefore they cannot now be the rule. That they were not ever the rule is granted: But that they are not therefore now the rule, may be by ſome denied; which I ſhall prove thus. If the faith of God's people in all ages be of one nature, then the rule but of one nature: But clear it is, Heb. xi. the Faith has been but of one nature. In ſhort, if the holy ancients had Faith before they had or wrote Scripture, they had a rule before they had or wrote Scripture; for where Faith is, there is a Rule for that Faith. And if the Faith be of one nature, the Rule is of one nature alſo. And ſince the Faith is inward, ſpiritual, begotten of the Immortal Word, in which is Life, and that Life the Light of men, and that this Word of life and light was the rule; then no Book, Writing, or Ingraving on viſible and periſhable matter, can be the Rule now.

Again; ſuch as the Faith is, ſuch muſt the Rule be: But the Faith is, as before, inward and ſpiritual, which no mere book can be.

2. If the Scriptures were the general rule, they muſt have always been a perfect rule, ever ſince they were a rule: But this is impoſſible, ſince they were many hundred years in writing, and are now imperfect alſo as to number; how then are they the perfect rule?

That they were not the perfect rule before they were written, muſt be granted: And that they were many hundred years writing, muſt alſo be allowed: And that they are imperfect now, as to number, I prove;

Firſt, "Enoch's Prophecy," is mentioned by Jude, but not extant in the Bible. "The Book of the Wars of the Lord," Numb. xxi. 14. "The Book of Jaſher," Joſh. x. 13. 2 Sam. i. 18. "The Book of Nathan," 2 Chron. ix. 29. "The Book of Shemaiah," 2 Chron. xii. 15. "The Book of Jehu:" The Epiſtle of the apoſtle Paul "to the Laodiceans," Coloſ. iv. 16. and ſeveral others mentioned in the ſcriptures, not now extant. And laſtly, Luke ſays, "That many took in hand to relate from eye-witneſſes the things moſt ſurely believed, &c."

2. Now, it is taken for granted, that John wrote many years after Luke: Some think Luke wrote before Mark. However, Matthew and Mark were not many, and to this day we ſee no more than thoſe Four in our Bibles; and therefore many ſuch writings are loſt: And if loſt, then the Scriptures, as aforeſaid, not Perfect; and if imperfect, how can they be the rule of faith, ſince the Rule of Faith muſt be Perfect?

3. My third reaſon is this; The Scriptures, however uſeful to edification and comfort, ſeem not in their own nature and frame to have been compiled and delivered as the general rule, and intire body of faith, but rather written upon particular occaſions and emergencies. The Doctrines are ſcattered throughout the Scriptures; inſomuch that thoſe ſocieties who have given forth Verbal Confeſſions of their Faith, have been neceſſitated to toſs them to and fro, ſearch here and ſearch there, to lay down this or the other principle; and then as like the Original Text as their apprehenſions can render it: Whereas, were it as plain and diſtinct as the nature of a Rule requires, they needed only to have given their Subſcription for a Confeſſion. Beſides, here they are proper, there metaphorical: In one place literally, in another myſtically to be accepted: Moſt times points are to be proved by comparing and weighing places coherent; where to allude aptly, and not wrong the ſenſe, is difficult, and requires a clear and certain diſcerning, notwithſtanding the clamours upon us about Infallibillity. Now from all this, with abundance more

---

* Juſtin Martyr ſaith, ‘that all are Chriſtians who live with Chriſt, as Abraham and Elias; and amongſt the Greeks, as Socrates, Heraclitus, &c.’ See Scultetus on him; who alſo ſaith, ‘That ſome at this day are of his judgment, who have taught that Melchizedech, Abimelech, Ruth, Rachab, the queen of Sheba, Hiram of Tyre, Naaman the Syrian, and the city of Nineveh, are in the catalogue of Chriſtians.’

Euſebius Pamph. in his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, ſaith, ‘That Abraham and the ancient fathers were Chriſtians:’ And defines a Chriſtian to be, ‘one that by the knowledge and doctrine of Chriſt excels in moderation of mind, in righteouſneſs and continency of life, and ſtrength of virtue and godlineſs towards one only God.’ See Scultetus on him.

Clemens Alexandrinus ſaith, ‘The Law of Nature and of Diſcipline is one. And Moſes ſeems to call the Lord the Covenant:’ For he had ſaid before, ‘the Covenant was not to be ſought in Scripture; for that is the Covenant, which God, the cauſe of all, ſetteth, whence his nature in Greek is derived. And in the preaching of Peter, thou mayeſt find the Lord called the Word or Reaſon, and the Law.’ See his 1 book Strom. at the end. And before, page 353, he ſaith, ‘The Law and the Goſpel is the operation of One Lord, who is the Virtue and Wiſdom of God; And the Fear which the Law had bred, is merciful to Salvation: And the Fear of the Lord is the Beginning of Wiſdom. That She (that is, Wiſdom) that miniſtreth providence, is Miſtreſs and good; and the power of both procureth Salvation: The one Chaſtizing as Miſtreſs; the other being Bountiful, as a Benefactor; for one muſt paſs from Darkneſs to Life; and, applying his ear to Wiſdom, firſt be a Servant, then a faithful Miniſter, and ſo aſcend into the number of Sons, and be brought into the Elect Adoption of Sons. That the Law works to make them immortal, that chuſe to live temperately and juſtly.’ And again, ‘Evil men do not underſtand the Law; but they that ſeek the Lord, do underſtand every good thing.’ And the whole firſt book of the Stromata is eſpecially to prove the antiquity of the One true religion, or philoſophy, as he calls it.

that might be ſaid, plain is it that the Scriptures are not plain but to the ſpiritual man: Thus Peter ſaid of Paul's writings, that "in many things they were hard to be underſtood?" Therefore not ſuch a rule, which ought to be plain, proper and intelligible.

4. Again, the Scripture cannot be the Rule of Faith, becauſe it cannot give Faith; for Faith is the "gift of God which overcomes the world:" Neither of Practice, becauſe it cannot diſtinguiſh of itſelf, in all caſes, what ought to be practiſed and what not; ſince it contains as well what ought not to be practiſed, as what ought.

Eph. ii. 8.
1 John. v. 4.

This was the caſe of Chriſt's diſciples, who had no particular Rule in the Old Teſtament Writings for the aboliſhing of ſome part of the Old Teſtament Religion: On the contrary, they might have pleaded for the perpetuity of it, becauſe Chriſt ſaid unto them, "Do as they ſay that ſit in Moſes's chair," more reaſonably than many who make that a plea now-a-days for their invented worſhips. What then guided them in their declaring void and relinquiſhing thoſe things? For inſtance, God gave Circumciſion "as a ſign for ever:" And Paul tells the Galatians, "that if they be circumciſed, Chriſt ſhould profit them nothing:" Was not this the Spirit of Truth, that leads into all truth, that the apoſtles made the Judge and Rule of their doctrine and practice? So ſaid James, and the aſſembly of the apoſtles, when they told the believers, "It ſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt and to us, &c."

Gen. xvii. 7.
Gal. v. 1. 2.
Acts xv. 28.

5. Theſe very men that ſay it is the Rule of Faith and Life, deviate in their proof from their aſſertion; for the Scriptures no where ſay ſo of themſelves. Here they fly to meanings and interpretations: The queſtion ariſes not about the truth of the Text, for that is agreed on all hands; but the Expoſition of it: If then I yield to that Man, do I bow to the Letter of the Text, or to his Interpretation? If the latter, as manifeſtly I do, is the Scripture, or that man's ſenſe of it, my rule? Nay the perſon ſo interpreting makes not the Scripture his rule, but his own Apprehenſion, whatever he may ſay to gain credit to his conceptions with others; then Mine it muſt needs be, I conſenting thereto.

6. How ſhall I be aſſured that theſe Scriptures came from God? I am bound to try all things: If all things, then Them amongſt the reſt. I would fain know what I muſt try them with? With the Scriptures? Then the Scriptures muſt be the rule of my examination and faith concerning Themſelves, which is improper. If with the Spirit that gave them forth, which ſearcheth the deep things of God (a meaſure of which is given to me to profit withal) then is it moſt congruous to call the Spirit, by way of excellency, and not the Scriptures, the rule.

7. If the Scriptures are the rule, they muſt be ſo in the original, or copies: If in the original, that is not extant, and ſo there would be no rule in being; for the laſt of it that was extant, was the Evangeliſt John's hiſtory at Epheſus, not ſeen almoſt theſe thouſand years. If the copies muſt be the rule, it were to be wiſhed we knew which were the nigheſt to the Original, there being above Thirty in Number. This is undetermined, and for aught we ſee undeterminable. And that which farther confirms what I ſay is, the variety of Readings which we find among thoſe Copies, amounting to ſeveral thouſands. And if the Copies cannot, how can the tranſlations be the rule, ſo various (if not differing) from the true ſenſe of the Copies in many things, and one from another? Beſides, I would fain know of thoſe of our preſent age, who thus contend for the Scriptures being the General Rule, &c. in oppoſition to the Spirit, upon what foot they receive them into this place and authority: Is it by Tradition, or Revelation? I mean, the Internal Teſtimony of the Spirit; or the External Award and Determination of Men? If the former, they muſt unavoidably come over to us; for then the Spirit will, and muſt be both Rule and Judge: If the latter, I aſk how are they aſſured that they are not miſerably abuſed by Careleſneſs or Deſign; ſince we ſee, that uſing the utmoſt diligence, both Tranſlation, Tranſcription and Printing, are ſubject to numerous miſtakes, and thoſe ſometimes very material, againſt which the Scripture of itſelf can be no fence?

But admit there were no ground for any ſuch objection, I farther demand of our adverſaries, if they are well aſſured of thoſe Men that firſt collected, embodied and declared them authentic by a Public Canon? Which we read was in the Council of Laodicea, held three hundred and ſixty years after Chriſt, though not as they are now received: During which time they had been toſſed and tumbled through many hands, and of many judgments and opinions. Some were received, and ſome rejected, and doubtleſs many thouſands of times tranſcribed; and it is not improbable that they were alſo abuſed. If they miſs in their judgment here, they are gone till they come to us. I ſay, how do they know that theſe men rightly diſcerned true from ſpurious? Either their judgment was infallible in the matter, or it was not: If it were, then there was ſuch a thing as Infallibility ſince the Apoſtles days, which is a contradiction to yourſelves. But be it ſo that they were infallible; how came you to be aſſured they were ſo? Not by Inſpiration; for that is dangerous doctrine with you: Which way was it then? Not by Tradition; Was it by the Scripture? That were to ſay that the Scripture tells you that thoſe men, that collected it for true, were right in their judgment: But we are yet to find any ſuch place; and if it were ſo, that would but beg the queſtion. I cannot ſee any other ground, beſides your very great Indulgence to their choice; which you call Popery, and believing as the Church believes, in other folks. But if theſe men were fallible, as your opinion makes them, and their own determinations prove them, what then? Doubtleſs your condition will be very uncertain.

Now, ſure it is, that ſome of the Scriptures taken in by one council for canonical, were rejected by another as apocryphal; and that which was left out by the former for apocryphal, was taken in by the latter for canonical. Now viſible it is, that they contradicted each other, and as true that they both erred, reſpecting the preſent belief: For your Canon and Catalogue vary from theirs, and, let me ſay without offence, from any catalogue you can produce. Behold the labyrinth of uncertainties you run yourſelves into, who go from that Heavenly Gift in yourſelves, by which the Holy Scriptures are truly diſcerned, reliſhed, and diſtinguiſhed from the inventions and abuſes of men!

8. Farthermore, if the Scriptures were the Rule of Faith and Life, &c. then, becauſe they cannot be the rule in their Tranſlations, ſuppoſing the ancient Copies were Exact, it cannot be the rule to far the greateſt part of mankind; indeed to none but learned men: Which neither anſwers the promiſe relating to Goſpel-times, which is univerſal; nor the neceſſity of all mankind for a Rule of Faith and Life.

9. That the Scriptures are not the Rule of Faith and Life, is proved from thoſe voluminous diſcourſes of Caſes of Conſcience that are extant among us: For had the Scriptures been as ſufficient as the nature of the Rule of Faith and Life requireth, there had been no need of ſuch tracts: Every man might have read his own condition laid down in Scripture, without thoſe numerous ſupplements. Do not your own language and practice prove its inſufficiency to that end, at what time you both exhort to, and go in ſecret to ſeek, the Mind of the Lord in this or that important affair? Why do not you turn to Chapter and Verſe for ſatisfaction, if the Scripture be appointed of God for the General Rule? Strange! That what is ſo common in the mouths of all ſorts, viz. "God direct you," (which implieth Inſpiration and Revelation, or immediate Counſel or Guiding from God) ſhould not be known, much leſs acknowledged by you in our writings; but diſdained with ſuch ſcaring epithets, as Enthuſiaſm, Familiſm, Fanaticiſm, Quakeriſm, &c. In ſhort, there are a * thouſand caſes, and not a few occurring almoſt daily, in which the Scripture cannot be our plain and diſtinct Rule and Guide: Yet has not God left himſelf without a witneſs in any boſom; for his GRACE, "that brings ſalvation, has appeared unto all men, teaching them that believe in it, to deny ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, and to live ſoberly, righteouſly and godly in this preſent world." And Chriſt Jeſus, the Eternal Word, has for that end lighted every man coming into the world, viz. to diſcover, reprove, and inſtruct about Faith and Practice. But it may be, and is objected by ſome,

* There is not laid down in Scripture any general rule how to anſwer before magiſtrates; and to act in times of ſufferings. John i. 9. Titus ii. 11. 12.

Obj. If this Law and Light in the conſcience had been enough, what need had there been of Scripture?

Anſw. The ſame argument will hold againſt God, Chriſt, his Spirit and Grace; all which are ſufficient, notwithſtanding the uſe and benefit of Scripture. The caſe was this: Man's mind being eſtranged from the Light and Spirit, through its wanderings after viſible and periſhing things; and in as much as the Light became thereby veiled from him, the Spirit as it were quenched, and the Law defaced, God in peculiar mercy to the Jews, according to his covenant with faithful Abraham, ſuperadded, or repeated (as Urſin terms it) the Law inward, by a declaration of it outwardly; that both God might not be without an Outward witneſs, as well as an Inward (they having ſo much loſt the feeling thereof); and likewiſe more deeply to ſtrike their minds by their ſenſes (into which their minds were gone) and to meet them abroad, where they were roving and wandering from the Law and Light within.

As it is great vanity and weakneſs to infer Inſufficiency to the Light, from the Imbecillity and Darkneſs that are in men; ſo is it from God's ſuperadding Scripture, and other external aſſiſtances to men in that ſtate; ſince their blindneſs is occaſioned through their Rebellion to the Law and Light within. What! would ſuch have God, his Light and Spirit, appear to, and converſe with, peoples outward Senſes? That cannot be: The one is Spiritual, and the other too carnal for any ſuch thing. Or are they inſufficient, becauſe they converſe with men through theſe exterior things, ſuited to that weak ſtate? Or tell me if the moſt conſiderable part of Scripture be any more than the declared Knowledge and Experience of ſuch as were come to a more improved ſtate in the teachings of that Light and Spirit; which is therefore given forth, that others loitering behind might be ſtirred up, and the more prevailed with to follow them, as they had followed the Lord in the Light of his Spirit? Certainly it can never be that Scripture ſhould impeach the Light of Inſufficiency, when that very Scripture is but the Mind and Teachings of the Divine Light in others, declared or recorded. Does the declaration jarr with, or make weak, that from whence it came? Or becauſe of God's condeſcenſion for a time to External Mediums, ſhall they turn the Light and Spirit out of the office of Rule and Judge? Or is it to lay down Inſtituted Religion, as ſome ignorantly talk, to preſs after that which was before, and ends thoſe temporary things? The law outward, as a rule, was but as Moſes, till the Son came. “ The ſervant abideth not in the houſe for ever.” The written law held its place but till the inward aroſe in more glory and brightneſs; or rather, till people became more capable of being turned to it, and living with and in it? “ In thoſe John xviii. 36.

“ days,” ſaith the Lord, “ I will write my law in their Hearts, &c.” They who ſay Iſa. liv. 13.
otherwiſe of Scripture, do pervert and abuſe it; for there is nothing more clearly laid down in it, from beginning to end, than the Rule and Reign of the Spirit. “ My kingdom,” Joel ii. 28.
ſaid Chriſt, “ is not of this world.” Again, “ The kingdom of God is within. Tit. ii. 11,12.
“ I will write my law in their hearts, and place my fear in their inward parts. All “ thy children ſhall be taught of the Lord, and in righteouſneſs ſhall they be eſtabliſhed.
“ I will pour out of my Spirit on all fleſh. The Grace of God that brings ſalvation, “ hath appeared to all men, teaching, &c.”

Obj. But if the Law engraven and delivered to Moſes, was a Rule to the Jews, why ſhould not the Law delivered by Chriſt, and written by the Apoſtles, be the Rule to Chriſtians?

Anſw. Chriſt left nothing in writing for the Rule of Faith and Practice that we hear of; and it is not to be thought that he was leſs faithful in his houſe than Moſes: And doubtleſs, had he intended the rule of his followers to have been a written Rule, he would have left it upon record with all punctuality: This muſt be believed, and that done, on pain of eternal death. Nor did his followers write in the method of a rule, as the Law was written; nor did they ſo call or recommend what they writ.

But this leads me to my eighth reaſon why the Scriptures cannot be the Rule under the New covenant, &c. for admitting the Law written by Moſes were the Rule (A Rule, I grant it was) to the Jew outward, yet Chriſt, the ſpiritual leader of a ſpiritual Iſrael, writeth his ſpiritual law in the heart; as Moſes, the outward Iſrael's leader, writ the Law upon Tables of Stone. This was God's promiſe, and the privilege and bleſſing of the New Covenant, that as the outward Jew had an outward Law, for a Directory, the inward Jew ſhould have an inward law for his Directory: And as the outward Jew had an outward Prieſt, at whoſe mouth he ought to ſeek the Law; ſo the Jew inward, and circumciſion in ſpirit, has an inward and ſpiritual High Prieſt, whoſe lips preſerve Mal. ii. 7.
knowledge; at whoſe mouth he is to receive the law of life. And this is his Rule, even Heb. vii. 24, he who is the Ruler of his People Iſrael, who reigneth in righteouſneſs, and of whoſe 25, 26, 27.
heavenly government there ſhall be no end. The King, Ruler, Judge, Law-giver, Iſa. ix. 6, 7.
High Prieſt, Law, Rule, Temple, are all ſpiritual; ſo the Scriptures inform us; “ My Luke 17. 20, “ kingdom,” ſaid Chriſt, “ is not of this world.” Again, “The kingdom of God is within. 21. Heb. viii. 10.
“ I will write my law in their hearts, and place my fear in their inward parts. They Rev. xxi. 3.
“ ſhall be all taught of me; and in righteouſneſs ſhall they be eſtabliſhed. The tabernacle Joel ii. 28.
“ of God is with man; he will dwell with them. I will pour out my Spirit on Tit. ii. 11,12. Job xxxii. 8.
“ all fleſh. The grace of God hath appeared unto all men, teaching, &c. A meaſure of Rom. i. 19.
“ the Spirit is given to all men to profit withal. The Inſpiration of the Almighty giveth Gal. v. 16.
“ underſtanding. Whatſoever may be known of God is manifeſt within. Walk in 1 John i. 7. Iſa. ii. 5.
“ the Spirit. If ye walk in the Light, &c. Come let us walk in the Light of the Lord. Rev. xxi. 23.
“ And there needed neither ſun nor moon to ſhine; for the glory of God did lighten it, Gal. vi. 15, 16.
“ and the Lamb was the Light thereof. As many as walk according to this Rule, (y)
“ peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Iſrael of God, &c.” What rule? Not that of the old legal creation, which then paſſed away; but the Rule of the καινὴ κτίσις, or New creation, as it may be rendered, and as Druſius alſo doth interpret it; which is the way of Life Iſaiah ſpoke of; “ an high-way there ſhall be, and it ſhall be called the “ way of holineſs; the unclean ſhall not paſs over it, and wayfaring men, though fools, “ ſhall not err therein: There ſhall be no lion there, nor ravenous beaſt go thereon,
“ but the redeemed ſhall walk there:” Which Way, Teacher, Guide, Rule, Light, Spirit, and holy Unction, that directs and keeps in ſteady paths of truth, is CHRIST
JESUS our Lord.

Obj. But do you not turn the Scriptures off, for an uncertain and unſerviceable writing, and as good as reject and deny them altogether?

Anſw. Some indeed, to render us odious to all Proteſtants, have ſaid as much in our names, as the conſequence of our principles; but not without great injuſtice to us.

(y) Galat vi. 16. τῷ κανόνι τούτῳ, in this rule; as it is tranſlated, Phil. iii. 16. which was ſpoken of the Meaſure of Attainment: And Grotius ſaith, ‘ in the manuſcript, rule is not; ſo it muſt be underſtood, “ let us walk “ in the ſame attainment;” as alſo in 2 Cor. x. 13. 15. in which three places that word is only found: See Eraſmus, Vatablus, Zegerus, Cameron, Jac. Capellus and Grotius, on thoſe places, none whereof can be drawn to the ſcriptures. Zegerus interprets this place of Gal. vi. 16. thus, ‘ they that have followed this Form of ‘ Life, or Rule of the New Creature, having turned away from the invalid Ceremonies of the Law; peace, &c.’ Druſius explains it from chap. v. 6. ‘ the new creation. Faith which worketh by love.’ Grotius ſaith, ‘ rule ‘ here is a way made as to a Rule that is plainly right; ſuch is that way of the New creation, which was fore‘ told, Iſa. xlii. 9. And ſignifies the ſtate of the new man, of which Paul ſpeaks, Col. iii. 10. Eph. ii. 15. ‘ Rom. vi. 4.’

The ſcriptures are uncertain upon their foundation, but not upon ours. Doth our manifeſting their faith concerning the ſcriptures to be grounded upon their own Imaginations, or human Traditions, make void the ſcriptures, or render them uncertain? By no means; for we would have them received upon the Spirit's teſtimony and evidence, which gave them forth. And though we cannot allow them to be the rule of Faith and Life, under the diſpenſation of the Goſpel, which is Power and Life itſelf; yet are they to be reverently read, believed, and fulfilled, under the Goſpel. For notwithſtanding the Law written upon Stone was not Paul's Rule, after the Son of God was revealed in him; yet the Son of God taught Paul to fulfil the righteouſneſs declared by that Law. If it be to deny and reject (as ſome have enviouſly ſaid of us) yea, to vilify the ſcripture, becauſe we cannot allow it to be the rule, &c. Paul then may be ſaid to deny, reject, and vilify the written Law, at what time the law of the Spirit of life in Chriſt Jeſus became his rule. There is a great difference between aſſerting that the Spirit is the rule, and caſting away and vilifying of ſcripture. And indeed it is but an old fetch of the Devil's, to pretend honour to the Letter, that he might the more unſuſpectedly oppoſe the bringing in of the diſpenſation of the Spirit; which the Letter itſelf teſtifies of and to. They that come to be led of the Spirit, arrive at the end for which the ſcripture was given forth: The apoſtle John did as good as ſay the ſame thing, when he told them to whom he wrote, "that the Anointing which they had received, and abode in them, "would lead them into all Truth; and that they needed not that any man ſhould teach "them:" To deny this to have been the Saints Teacher, is to deny as plain a propoſition as is in the whole Scripture: And that one age of Chriſtianity ſhould have one rule, and another age another rule; that age the Spirit, and this but the Letter, is more than any man can prove. Yet did John's ſo writing to the believers invalidate the Scripture, or vilify his own Epiſtle? I would think none could talk ſo idly. How then doth our exalting the Light and Spirit of Chriſt, which fulfils the ſcriptures (by bringing ſuch as are led by it to enjoy the good things therein declared) reject and vilify the ſcriptures? Does our living up to them, by an higher Rule, make us deny and reprobate them? Eraſmus and Grotius think them then to be moſt valued, when men are witneſſes of their truth in themſelves: See them on 2 Pet. i. 19, 20. I do acknowledge they contain an account of ſeveral heavenly prophecies, godly reproofs, inſtructions and examples, that ought to be obeyed, and followed.

Obj. If ſo, then how are they not a rule of Faith and Life?

Anſw. A Rule, and The rule, are two things. By The Rule of Faith and Practice, I underſtand, the Living, Spiritual, Immediate, Omnipreſent, Diſcovering, Ordering, Spirit of God: And by A rule, I apprehend ſome Inſtrument, by and through which this Great and Univerſal Rule may convey its directions. Such a ſubordinate, ſecondary and declaratory Rule, we never ſaid ſeveral Parts of Scripture were not: Yet we confeſs the reaſon of our obedience is not merely becauſe they are there written (for that were legal) but becauſe they are the eternal precepts of the Spirit, in mens conſciences, there repeated and declared. It is the Teſtimony of the Spirit, which is the true Rule for believing and underſtanding of the Scripture; therefore not the Scripture, but the Spirit of Truth, muſt be the rule for our believing and underſtanding them. Thus held the ancients.

Bp. Rob. Sand. de Regul. Conſ. Præl. 4ta. Sect. 31.

Tertul. de Præſcrip. Herætic. p. 204.

Tertullian ſaith, 'Worldly wiſdom the Lord calls fooliſhneſs. He hath choſen the 'fooliſh things of the world, to the confounding of philoſophy; for that is the matter 'of worldly wiſdom. A Divine Interpreter of the Divine Nature and Diſpoſings.'

Dell. confut. of Simpſ. p. 89, 90.

Juſtin Martyr, in Expoſit. Fid. 'The interpretation of the ſcriptures is to be accommodated to the will of the doctrine of the Spirit; and not to human Reaſonings.'

Hieron. Tom. 4. 7.

Hieron ſaith, 'The ſcriptures muſt be opened with ſpiritual expoſition.'

Bp. Jewel, p. 532.

Epiphanius ſaith, 'Only to the children of the Holy Ghoſt all the ſcriptures are plain 'and clear.'

Polano. Hiſtor. Counc. Tr. p. 150.

Nor were the moſt approved Proteſtants of any ſort (who have been ſo reputed in oppoſition to Popery) of another mind. It is the ſubſtance of the fourth article exhibited againſt the Lutherans, in the Council of Trent, as an erroneous doctrine they held, 'That to underſtand the ſcripture, neither Gloſs nor Comment is neceſſary; but only to 'have the Spirit of a Sheep of Chriſt's paſture.'

Eraſmus on 1 Pet. i. 19. ib. on 1 Cor. ii.

Eraſmus tells us, 'What man ſets forth by Man's Device, may be received by Man's 'Wit: But the thing that is ſet forth by the Inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt, requireth 'an interpreter inſpired with the like Spirit; and without the Inſpiration of it, the ſe'crets of God cannot be known.'

Luther, tom. 3. fol. 169.

Luther giveth us his mind thus: 'The ſcriptures are not to be underſtood, but by that 'very Spirit by which they were writ.'

Peter Martyr Com. loc. p. 1. c. 6.

Peter Martyr, that famous Italian Proteſtant, teacheth us, 'The Spirit is the abettor, 'by which we muſt aſſure ourſelves for underſtanding the ſcriptures, that thereby we 'muſt diſcern between Chriſt's words, and a Stranger's;' quoting Chriſt's words, "My "ſheep know my voice," and ſeveral other places of ſcripture.

Again, ‘The Spirit of God revealeth the truth in the ſcriptures.’

H. Bullinger, decad. 4. ſerm. 8. ‘Men fetch the underſtanding of heavenly things, and knowledge of the Holy Ghoſt, from no-where elſe, but from the ſame Spirit.’

Ibid. p. 2. c. 18.

John Bradford anſwered to the archbiſhop of York thus: ‘We know the ſcriptures, as Chriſt's ſheep, by the ſame Spirit that wrote and ſpake them; being thereby aſſured, &c.’

Book of Martyrs, 3 vol. p. 298.

Calvin teacheth thus in his Inſtitutes; ‘It is neceſſary the ſame Spirit that ſpake by the mouth of the Prophets, ſhould pierce into our hearts, to perſuade us that they faithfully delivered that which was committed to them of God.’

Calvin. Inſtit. lib. 1. cap. 8.

Beza ſaith, ‘That the way of underſtanding prophecies, and referring them to the right ſcope, muſt be ſought or fetched from the ſame Spirit which dictated them to the Prophets themſelves?’ and more to that purpoſe.

Beza on 2 Pet. i. 19.

W. Tindal, called the Engliſh apoſtle by J. Fox, ſaith, ‘It is impoſſible to underſtand in the Scripture more than a Turk, for any that hath not the law of God, writ in the heart, to fulfil it.’

Tindal's works, p. 319 & 80.

Bp. Jewel ſays thus againſt Harding, ‘The Spirit of God is bound neither to ſharpneſs of wit, nor to abundance of learning: Fleſh and blood is not able to underſtand the holy will of God, without ſpecial revelation. Without this ſpecial help and prompting of God's Spirit, the Scripture is to the reader, be he never ſo wiſe and well learned, as the viſion of a Sealed Book.’

Jewel againſt Harding, p. 532, 534.

D. Ames, a great father of the Independents, ſaith upon occaſion of Bellarmin's words, ‘The Anointing of the Holy Spirit doth teach the faithful to underſtand thoſe things which they received of the Apoſtles; therefore to underſtand the Scriptures in thoſe things which are neceſſary to ſalvation;’ with more to that purpoſe.

Dr. Ames againſt Bellarm. l. 1. c. 6. Theſ. 32.

Vatablus on Job xxxii. 8. with Druſius, Clarius, and others, ſpeak to the ſame effect.

G. Cradock, a famous independent preacher, preached, ‘that the ſcripture is a ſpeechleſs thing without the Spirit.’

G. Cradock's divine drops, page 217.

Ch. Goad, an eminent Separate, in his works ſtiled B. D. of K. college in Cambridge, and an independent paſtor, thus taught, ‘There is no knowledge of Chriſt, nor of the Scripture, but by Revelation.’

C. Goad's Refr. drops. page 12.

Dr. J. Owen, a man of greateſt fame among the preſent Independents, ſaith, ‘The public, authentic and infallible Interpreter of the holy ſcriptures, is He who is the Author of them; from the Breathing of whoſe Spirit they derive all their Verity, Perſpicuity, and Authority.’

Exercit. 2. 7. 9. againſt Quak.

So that we ſee, upon the judgment of many conſiderable perſons, the ſcripture is no Rule for our believing and underſtanding of itſelf; and therefore not The Rule of Faith and Practice concerning the things therein declared.

I will give a ſhort inſtance in Chriſt's words about Regeneration. He taught (and ſtrange it was, no doubt, to wiſe Nicodemus) “that unleſs a man be born again, he cannot ſee the kingdom of God.” This is as plain a propoſition as can be laid down, and may be credited hiſtorically: But what is that to the knowledge and experience of the new birth? That they are never like to be informed of there. Nor can that ſcripture be my rule in that heavenly travel, reſpecting the many and wonderful trials and exerciſes that are to be met with in the way to it; neither can any other writing whatever. This only is the office of that Spirit and Word immortal by which we are begotten again. What, then, is my Rule, to inform, order, ſtrengthen, and lead through the whole operation, but the ſame Spirit? All doctrinal Scripture was experienced before written, or they had not been true witneſſes who wrote it.

Now that which was their rule, can guide us into the ſame experiences; nor are they to be rightly known before experienced: “If any man will do his will, he ſhall know of the doctrine,” ſaith Chriſt. I read the Hiſtory of ſuch things: This ſaves not: Neither can the Hiſtory be the Rule leading into the Myſtery. That belongs only to the Spirit, that ſearcheth out the deep things of God. Conſequently the Spirit, and not the Scripture, is the rule for ſo believing and living.

Obj. But is not this to make void the Proteſtants plea againſt the Papiſts, viz. That the Scriptures are the Rule of Faith and Practice?

Anſw. No ſuch matter: For the queſtion was not, Whether the Spirit of Chriſt, or the ſcripture, was the rule; but, Whether the ſcripture, which is God's Tradition, or Popiſh Traditions, were the Rule to meaſure the truth of doctrines and practices by? We grant that particular ſcriptures, rightly underſtood, may meaſure what is agreeable or diſagreeable to them: That is, ſuch doctrines and practices as are contrary to that part of ſcripture, more particularly relating to our days, are queſtionable by the ſcripture; eſpecially ſince all parties pretend that what they ſay and do is according to ſcripture. Yet this concludes not the ſcripture to be the General and Evangelical Rule.

Obj. But if God had not revealed thoſe things that are in ſcripture, by it to us, how could they have been known by us?

1 Pet. i. 11.

Anſw. They were known by the Light and Spirit of Chriſt before they were written; for from being written they are called Scripture. Therefore it is ſaid, “that the prophets ſearched diligently what, and what manner of time, the Spirit of Chriſt, that was in them, did ſignify, when it teſtified before-hand of the ſufferings of Chriſt.” Nor are they ever the more revealed to the blind and dark mind, becauſe they are written. The myſteries of regeneration are as puzzling to natural wit and earthly wiſdom, as before. Therefore well ſaid Epiphanius, ‘Only to the children of the Holy Ghoſt all the holy ſcriptures are plain and eaſy.’ Mens going to hammer out principles, without this infallible Guide and Rule, hath been the cauſe of that great confuſion that is over mankind about religion to this very day.

Obj. But how elſe could you have known thoſe prophecies to be true; for that is not matter of witneſſing, but foretelling?

Anſw. That is an Extraordinary revelation, not falling within the ordinary diſcoveries that are abſolutely neceſſary to man's ſalvation; by which God ſhews his power and faithfulneſs, that he is God, and can foretel, and will bring to paſs: But therefore muſt there be an extraordinary Light or Spirit, and not rather an extraordinary ſight and ſenſe from one and the ſame Light and Spirit in them? Beſides, that which gives me to believe and ſavour it to be from the Spirit, and not by impoſture, is my Rule for believing it. Now that the Spirit ſo doth, both Calvin and Beza, as before cited, aſſert for me, viz. ‘The ſame Spirit, that ſpake by the mouth of the Prophets, muſt pierce into our hearts, to perſuade us that they faithfully declared that which was committed to them of God.’

Obj. But this Light you ſpeak of, could not tell you which way ſin came into the world: That there was an Adam and Eve, that they fell after that manner, and that ſin ſo entered the world: That Chriſt was born of a Virgin, ſuffered death, and roſe again: That you ought not to ſwear in any caſe, &c. if the Scriptures had not told you ſo.

1 Cor. ii. 10, 11.
Eph. v. 13.

Anſw. That is boldly ſaid. But conſider well: ‘Moſes,’ ſays the vulgar opinion, ‘had that account of the creation, above two thouſand years after it, by Revelation, which we find in Geneſis.’ Now that there could be no revelation without this Divine Light or Spirit, which is the Life of the eternal, creating Word, muſt needs be granted; “for,” ſaith the apoſtle Paul, “the Spirit of God only knoweth the things of God: And whatever makes manifeſt is Light.” And that the Spirit and Light are One, though two Names, has been ſufficiently evidenced already. If then it was this Light of the Eternal Word, that delivered thoſe paſt things to Moſes, and gave that proſpect of future things to the Prophets; as no doubt it was, if the ſcriptures be credible; then to ſay, ‘The Light or Spirit could not do it,’ is blaſphemous, as well as abſurd. Again, To argue, becauſe the Light does not reveal every circumſtance of Hiſtory to each individual that hath already an account thereof, therefore it could not, is unreaſonable. Were the Hiſtory of the tranſactions of Chriſt and his followers wanting, (as before Moſes was that of Adam and his poſterity,) and that the Lord ſaw it needful to acquaint mankind therewith, no doubt but the Light and Spirit which revealed the account of the Creation, above two thouſand years after, to Moſes, and foretold ſeveral hundred years many of thoſe tranſactions of Chriſt by the Prophets, would alſo have ſupplied that want: But inaſmuch as an account is extant, and therefore not needed, that objection is vain.

Again, it does not follow, becauſe every man has a Meaſure of Light to inform and rule him, that therefore he muſt needs know all which that Light knows, or is able to reveal to him. I return that argument thus upon our adverſaries: They ſay, ‘they have the Spirit of God:’ Then they know all that the Spirit of God knows, or can reveal to them. If the latter be abſurd, then the former. Again ſay they, “The Light Within did not reveal Chriſt to the Gentiles, and that Chriſt ſhould be born of a Virgin, &c. therefore inſufficient.” I return upon them thus; The Spirit of God, given to the children of Iſrael, Neh. ix. 20. did not acquaint them that Chriſt ſhould be born of a Virgin, nor much more of his life and bodily tranſactions; therefore the Spirit of God was inſufficient. The like may be concluded againſt the Spirit in the Prophets: For it is manifeſt from 1 Pet. i. 10, 11. that the Spirit had not revealed to all the prophets the Time of Chriſt's appearance and ſufferings. Was the Spirit therefore an inſufficient Rule to them? But that which falls heavieſt upon our oppoſers, is this, That the ſcriptures, by their own argument, are a moſt imperfect account themſelves of what was done, not relating the hundredth part of things; therefore as inſufficient in not relating what is behind, as they would weakly render the Light or Spirit, in not revealing to every individual thoſe things which are already paſt. Nay, they may as well infer inſufficiency to the Spirit, or the Light Within, in that it does not ſhew all that ſhall be to the end of the world, which in their proper ſeaſons there will be a neceſſity to know, as to reflect Inſufficiency upon it, &c. becauſe it did not foretel things that are now paſt unto former ages, or needleſly reveal them over again to us in this age. Neither is hiſtory, or can it be, the Rule of that Faith and Life we ſpeak of, which are ſo abſolutely neceſſary to ſalvation; which is the Faith that God, and not Hiſtory, gives; and that works not by Hiſtory, but by Love, and overcomes the world; by which millions of hiſtorical believers are overcome, and wallow in the ſpirit and practice of. And the Rule muſt be anſwerable to the nature and workings of the Faith: The ſame in point of Practice, which is duty done. Now Hiſtory, though it inform me of others actions, yet it does not follow that it is the Rule of duty to me, ſince it may relate to actions not imitable, as in the caſe of Adam and Eve in ſeveral reſpects, and Chriſt's being born of a virgin, dying for the ſins of the world, &c. wherefore this cannot be the rule of duty. The like may be ſaid of the Jewiſh ſtory, that was the particular concern and tranſaction of that people.

Obj. But theſe things ought to be believed.

Anſw. I ſay ſo too, where the hiſtory has reached, and the Spirit of God hath made a conviction upon the conſcience; which, ſays doctor J. Owen, as before cited, "gives "them authority, verity, and perſpicuity," But where this hiſtory has not reached any people, or they die ignorant of it, they are not reſponſible for not believing any ſuch paſſages, as ſaith biſhop Sanderſon. It is one thing to ſay, The ſcriptures ought to be read, believed, and fulfilled; and another thing to ſay, They are the Evangelical Rule of Faith and Life: For when I read, and believe, and witneſs them fulfilling, I muſt needs have a Rule by which to read, underſtand, believe, and witneſs them: Which being the Divine Light and Spirit of Chriſt, it muſt be that, and not themſelves, that muſt be my Rule for ſo reading, underſtanding, and believing them.

Prelect. 4. § 21, 22.

And farther, to prove that the Light and Spirit within the Heathens was ſufficient to diſcover theſe things, it is granted on all hands, that the Sybils had divine ſights. I mean not thoſe made in their name by ſome profeſſors of Chriſtianity, as is charged upon them, to gain authority upon the Gentiles, againſt which Blundel writes; but thoſe that are acknowledged, who propheſied of 'a Virgin's bringing forth a Son, and that he 'ſhould deſtroy the Serpent, and repleniſh the earth with Righteouſneſs,' as is before cited out of Virgil, who took it out of the remains of Cumæa's verſes, then among the Romans.

And for the practical part of the objection, viz. How ſhould we have known it had been unlawful to ſwear at all in any caſe, if Matt. v. 34. had not been (which is of moſt weight in this caſe, becauſe it is matter of duty, and called particularly by ſome an Evangelical Precept, being a ſtep above the righteouſneſs of the Outward Law among the Jews) I have this to ſay for proof of the Light's ſufficiency:

There were among the Jews themſelves, long before Chriſt came, an entire people, that would not ſwear, to wit, the Eſſeni: 'They keep their promiſes,' ſaith Joſephus, 'and account every word they ſpeak of more force than if they had bound it with an 'oath: And they ſhun Oaths worſe than perjury; for they eſteem him condemned for 'a lyar, who without it is not believed.'

Joſephus's Wars of the Jews, l. 2. c. 7.

Philo writes to the ſame purpoſe, and taught himſelf, 'That it was beſt to abſtain from 'ſwearing; that one's word might be taken inſtead of an Oath.'

Philo, de ſpec. leg. & decalog.

And Pythagoras, in his oration to the Crotonian ſenators, exhorted them thus, 'Let 'no man atteſt God by Oath, though in courts of judicature; but uſe to ſpeak ſuch 'things that he may be credited without an Oath.'

Laert. Herm. & Orig. contr. Celſ.

The Scythians are ſaid to have told Alexander of themſelves, 'Think not that Scythians confirm their friendſhip by Oath: They ſwear by keeping their word.'

Quint. Curt. in vit. Alex.

And Clinias, a Greek, and follower of Pythagoras, rather choſe to ſuffer the fine of Three Talents, (which made three hundred pounds Engliſh) than to leſſen his veracity by taking of an Oath. Which act was greatly commended of Baſilius, who upbraided the Chriſtians of his time with it; thereby (after our adverſaries way of drawing conſequences) preferring the Light of the Gentiles before the Light of the Chriſtians: Though indeed the Light was, and is, always one in itſelf. But the Chriſtian did not live up ſo cloſely to it as the Heathen did, and therefore took a greater liberty, and walked in a broader way.

H. Grotius on Mat. v. 34.

I would now know of our oppoſers, if they can yet think the Light that preached this doctrine in the Mount, was the ſame with that Light that ſhined in the conſciences of thoſe Gentiles, ſo many hundred years before that ſermon was writ or preached, who ſo plainly believed, practiſed and taught it, yea or nay? Perhaps ſome will yet ſtick out; while the more moderate will ſubmit, and conclude ignorance and folly have made all this oppoſition againſt us; and that of a truth, the Voice which cried, Prov. viii. 4, 6. "Unto you, O men, I call; and my Voice is to the ſons of men; hear, for I will ſpeak

" excellent things," was alſo heard by the Gentiles; and that what concerned the doctrine of holy living was not hid from them; I mean, evangelically ſo; provided Chriſt's heavenly ſermon upon the Mount, related by Matthew the Evangeliſt, may be eſteemed ſuch: For their writings flow with Amens thereunto.

But allowing our adverſaries that the Voice was then ſo low, and the manifeſtation of the Light ſo ſmall, as it diſcovered not many of thoſe things before-mentioned; could that give reaſonable men ground to conclude, therefore the divine Wiſdom or Light was inſufficient; or that the divine Wiſdom or Light was not then, and ſhould not in other ages become, the Rule and Guide of the children of men? Yet ſuch falſe conſequences have been the corner ſtone and foundation of our oppoſers building againſt us; and no reaſonable man, I think, will attempt to clear it from being a ſandy one.

Of the JUDGE of CONTROVERSY.

I ſhall explain what I mean by theſe terms.

A JUDGE, is one that has not only Power to determine, but Diſcerning to do it rightly.

CONTROVERSY, is a Debate between Two Parties about the Truth or Falſhood of any Propoſition to be determined by that Judge.

From whence I am led to aſſert, that the Judge of Controverſy muſt be certain and unerring.

And though this may ſeem ſtrange to ſome, it is nevertheleſs true in itſelf: For if the judge be fallible, he may indeed ſilence the contending Parties by his authority, but not the Controverſy by a certain judgment, ſince he may as well determine falſly as truly. So that controverſy can never be rightly determined by a fallible judge, therefore he is no true judge of controverſy. Indeed it is abſurd, and a contradiction in itſelf to think otherwiſe; ſince he that is uncertain, can never be certain of his deciſion: And if not a certain one, then none to the purpoſe. Nor ought any perſon, no otherwiſe judged, that is perſuaded of the truth of his cauſe, to let fall his belief upon ſo doubtful a determination; ſince he moves not only without conviction, but againſt conviction: And, which is worſe, he is not aſcertained of the truth of what he is required to ſubmit to. Therefore of all people they are moſt condemnable, who, notwithſtanding they keep ſo great a ſtir about religion, and ſometimes uſe coercive means to compaſs their deſigned uniformity, acknowledge to us, they are not certain of their own faith.'

Since then the judge muſt be unerring, it will be worth our while to conſider where this infallible judge is to be found. " There is none good but God," ſaid God himſelf, when manifeſted in the Fleſh; that is, originally, or as of himſelf: So, truly, there is none infallible but God, as of himſelf. Yet as the Supreme Good is communicated unto man according to Meaſure; ſo (as well ſays biſhop Latimer) is there Infallibility, Certainty, or Aſſurance of the truth of things given to man, according to Capacity: Otherwiſe men would be obliged to believe and obey, and that upon damnation, thoſe things concerning which there can be no certainty, whether they be true or falſe.

Book of Martyrs, vol. 3. p. 475.

Emmanuel, God with men, as he is their Rule, ſo their Judge: He is the Law-Giver, and therefore the beſt interpreter of any point that may concern his own Law: And men are ſo far certain, as they are ſubject to his Voice, Light, or Spirit in them, and no farther; for, humanum eſt errare, man is errable. Nor can any thing reſcue him out of error, or preſerve him from the infections of it, but the ſound and certain judgment that God, by the Light of his Spirit, gives unto him.

Obj. But is not the Scripture the Judge of Controverſy?

Anſw. How can that be, ſince the queſtion moſt times ariſes about the Meaning of Scripture? Is there any place tells us, without interpretation, whether the Socinian or Trinitarian be in the right, in their differing apprehenſions of the " Three that bear " record, &c." Alſo the Homouſian and Arrian, about Chriſt's Divinity; or the Papiſts or Proteſtants about Tranſubſtantiation? If then things are left undefined and undetermined, I mean Literally and Expreſly, in the Scripture, and that the queſtion ariſes about the ſenſe of words, doth the Scripture determine which of thoſe interpreters hit the mark? As this is not reaſonable to think, ſo muſt it be acknowledged, that if Interpretation decide the matter in controverſy, then not the Scripture, but the interpreter muſt be the judge.

Now this interpreter muſt either interpret by his own mere wiſdom or ſpirit, called by the apoſtle, 1 Cor. ii. 11. " the ſpirit of a man," who, by weighing the text, conſulting the intent of the writer, comparing places together, gives the judgment which the ſcripture does not give of itſelf; or, from the Spirit of God, " which gives under-

"ſtanding," as Job xxxii. 8. and as the ſame apoſtle ſaith, in the ſame place, "ſearcheth the deep things of God." If the firſt, then a fallible; if the laſt, then an infallible judge.

I would fain know, whether it was the Scripture, or the Holy Ghoſt, that preſided among the apoſtles when they were come together, Acts xv. when they ſaid, "It ſeemeth good to the Holy Ghoſt and to us, &c." If the Holy Ghoſt, then pray give us a plain ſcripture to prove we are to have another judge now: If that cannot be done, then we muſt have the ſame, and conſequently an infallible judge, viz. the Spirit of Truth, which leads Chriſtians into all truth, and is given of God, by Chriſt, for that very end.

Obj. It is granted that the Spirit is infallible: But how ſhall I know that any man determines a thing by this Spirit, and does not rather obtrude his own Senſe upon us, under that ſpecious pretence?

Anſw. By the ſame Spirit; as well ſaid Gualt. Cradock, 'The way to know whether 'the Spirit be in us, is its own evidence; and that is the way to know it in others too: 'And the man that hath the Spirit, may know the Spirit in another.' There it is,' ſaith he, 'a kind of ſagacity in the ſaints, to this purpoſe.' Which is alſo true in the judgment of abundance of Proteſtant Writers: For as they held that no man could know the Scriptures, but by the ſame Spirit which indicted them; ſo, conſequently, that the ſame Spirit only could aſſure him of the truth of the ſaid interpretation. And Peter Martyr, as before quoted, tells us, 'The Holy Ghoſt is the Author or Judge.' Alſo Doctor J. Owen ſaith, 'That the Holy Ghoſt is the only Authentic Interpreter of the 'Scripture:' And if the only authentic, then the only and infallible Judge; then the Judge of the mind or meaning of ſcripture, is both an only and an infallible Judge. But to wave this: Does not the very ſame objection lie againſt the ſenſe of ſcripture, ſince one ſays, this is the ſenſe, and another that? To know God's mind, men muſt come to Gods Spirit, elſe difficulties of that ſort are inſuperable.

G. Crad. Divine drops, p. 210.

In ſhort, it were greatly to be wiſhed that all men would hold themſelves unconcerned in diſputing about what they have not received an Aſſurance of from the Holy Spirit; ſince they beat but the air, and obtain no ſolid ſatisfaction, neither can they upon any other bottom. God never proſtrates his ſecrets to minds diſobedient to what they do already know. Let all practiſe what they aſſuredly know to be their duty, and be ſparing in their ſearch after nice and unknown matters. Weighty and ſeaſonable was, and is the apoſtle's ſaying, "Nevertheleſs, whereunto we have already attained, let us walk "by the ſame rule:" Where he both limits us to the preſent knowledge communicated to us, and exhorts us to live up to that; and if any thing be farther neceſſary for us, "God in due time will reveal it by his Spirit," that only gives to know, diſcern and judge of the things that are of God.

Phil. iii. 10.

Obj. But how will this determine the controverſy, and allay the fury of debates that are on foot in the world.

Anſw. Nothing like it, if a man adhere to it! And if he does not, there is no way left but the wrath that is to be revealed. But moſt perſuaſions are agreed about the abſolute neceſſaries in religion, from that Light and Witneſs God has placed in man's conſcience, viz. 'That God is: That he is a Rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him. 'That the way of God is a way of Purity, Patience, Meekneſs, &c. without which 'no man can ſee the Lord.' Nay, they accord in ſome conſiderable matters ſuperadded, as ſome of them ſpeak, to wit, 'That God was manifeſted extraordinarily in the fleſh; 'That he gave his Life for the World: That ſuch as believe and obey his Grace in their 'hearts, receive Remiſſion of Sins, and Life everlaſting.' Now I ſay, ſince theſe things men generally conſent to, let them live up to them, and forbear wanton ſcrutinies after things or notions that gender to ſtrife and contention, and leave not mankind better, but rather worſe than they found them, and the world would be ſoon rid of controverſy. Holy Living, and not Diſputing, would be the buſineſs of mankind. What more excellent judgment can be given, than that men quit their contentions about notions and opinions, and betake themſelves to the practice of that good which God hath already ſhewn unto them; as ſpeak both the prophet Micah vi. 8. and the apoſtle Paul, Rom. i. 19. And if any thing be revealed to one more than another, let the reſt judge in the Spirit, or be ſilent till God manifeſt more to them, in order to right judgment.

It is good to "try all things;" but we muſt have ſomething to try them by; and what ought that to be, but the "Spirit that ſearcheth," and "the Anointing that teaches "all things," which is Truth itſelf. Here mankind will live in Love, having at leaſt natural affections (now loſt by the barbarity of ſome of their cruel religions, or heats for their opinions) and a judgment of things will be made, not from the raſh, partial, ſhort-ſighted, and froward mind of man, but that Eternal Light and Spirit that never

1 Cor. ii. 10.
1 John ii. 20. 27.

erred: Which, however diſguſtful to ſome Proteſtants in this age, was no falſe doctrine in the account of John Philpot and biſhop Latimer, two great founders of the Reformation in England.

B. Martyrs, vol. 3. p. 577. The firſt, in his anſwer to the Biſhop of Chicheſter, reproving his confidence about True Faith in Chriſt, ‘Theſe Heretics,’ ſaith he, ‘take upon them to be ſure of all things they ſtand in.’---‘Let him doubt,’ ſaith John Philpot ‘of his faith that liſteth; God give me always to believe that I am ſure of True Faith and Favour in Chriſt.’

B. Martyrs, vol. 3. page 457. The ſecond, in his anſwer to Sir Ed. Baynton, objecting the uncertainty of man in what he calls Truth, thus recorded by J. Fox, ‘Your friends deny not, but that certain truths are communicated to us according to Capacity: But as to my preſumption and arrogancy, either I am certain, or uncertain, that it is Truth that I preach. If it be Truth, why may not I ſay ſo? If I be uncertain, why dare I be ſo bold as to preach it? And if your friends be preachers themſelves, after their ſermon, I pray you aſk them, whether they be certain and ſure they preach the Truth or not; and ſend me word what they ſay, that I may learn to ſpeak after them. If they ſay they be ſure, you know what follows: If they ſay they be unſure, when ſhall you be ſure, that have ſo doubtful and unſure teachers?’

Let not Proteſtants, for ſhame, judge us for owning a doctrine that is confeſſed to, and confirmed by ſome of the worthieſt of their own anceſtors, viz. ‘That an unerring, certain or infallible judgment, in things neceſſary to ſalvation, is both poſſible and requiſite, and that God communicates it, by his Spirit, to the ſouls of men.’

THE CONCLUSION.

Rev. xxi. 3. 7. Iſa. liv. 13. TO conclude: Emmanuel, a word ſuited not only to that appearance, but the whole diſpenſation of the Goſpel, imports, God nigh to, or with men: “The tabernacle of God is with men; he will dwell in them, and walk in them: They ſhall be all taught of me, and in righteouſneſs ſhall they be eſtabliſhed:” That is, by the Spirit of his Son. And this admits not of any Book, or Literal rule or judge, to come between that indwelling Spirit of Light, Life and Wiſdom from God, and the Soul, as its Rule of Faith and Practice.

And becauſe it is the unutterable goodneſs of God to people in theſe latter days, as the ſum of ſcripture prophecy, thus to make known himſelf; we are inceſſant in our cries unto them, that they will turn their minds inward (now abroad, and taking up their reſt in the externals of religion) that they may hear his heavenly voice and knocks, and let him in, and be taught of him to know and do his will, that they may come to be experienced and expert in the ſchool of Chriſt; for never man ſpake and taught, as he livingly ſpeaks and teaches in the conſciences of thoſe who diligently hear him, and are willing to be taught of him the knowledge of his ways. The Prieſt was outward, but he is now inward; the Law outward, but it is now inward. And now “he is no more a Jew that is one outward, nor that circumciſion which is outward in the fleſh; but he is a Jew who is one inwardly, and circumciſion is that of the heart, in the Spirit, and not in the Letter, whoſe praiſe is not of men, but of God.” Rom. ii. 28, 29. Which is ſo far from leſſening the authority of the Scriptures of Truth, that unleſs this be man’s rule and judge in the reading and believing of them, he can never underſtand them rightly, or keep their ſayings faithfully. And indeed, as before I have expreſſed, I cannot but ſay, that man (whilſt unregenerated) ſetting his wit and wiſdom to fathom and comprehend the intention of the Holy Ghoſt in many of thoſe writings, hath occaſioned that Confuſion, Darkneſs and perplexed Controverſy, that now ſo lamentably peſters the world: In which ſtate, for all the external imitations of the ancients in ſome temporary and figurative parts of worſhip, I am to tell ſuch, and from the Spirit of the Lord God of all truth, they will never be accepted.

The utmoſt of that Literal Knowledge, Hiſtorical Faith, and Outward Religion, is but as the old heavens, that are to be wrapped up as a ſcroll, and the old wine and bottles, that belong not to the kingdom of God. Such believers may flatter on themſelves, and and at laſt cry, Lord, Lord; but alas! they ſhall never enter into the reſt that God hath reſerved for his regenerated and redeemed children. For under ſuch a Faith and Religion, Envy, Wrath, Malice, Perſecution, Pride, Paſſion, Covetouſneſs, Worldly-mindedneſs, &c. may and do prevail; yea, and are cloaked, as with a ſecure cover, from the ſtroke of God’s Spirit; inſomuch, as when any are moved of the Lord to decry ſuch fair and hypocritical ſhews of Religion, they are reputed raſh and cenſorious, and preſently a plea muſt be made on this wiſe; ‘Do not we follow the commands of the Scripture? Did not ſuch and ſuch do ſo and ſo?’ Which at beſt are but the duties of Sacrifice, and not of Obedience: Never regarding from what ground the performance ſprings, whether it be according to the rule of the new or of the old creature; but abuſe and vilify us for making ſuch diſtinctions: As if the Prayers, Preaching, Singings, outward Baptizings and Suppings, &c. of men in their own unſanctified ſpirits, ſtrength and will, were required and accepted of God for evangelical worſhip. Thick darkneſs, and a dangerous preſumption! Thus are men out of the way concerning both Faith and Practice, while they imagine the firſt to lie in an Aſſent of the Underſtanding to ſuch Propoſitions, and in an Imitation of former Obſervations, that were at beſt but Signs of good things to come, and the duties of Sacrifice (which is far from the Emmanuel ſtate); and the latter, viz. the Rule and Judge, to be the ſcriptures; which are but an Account of thoſe things that others were ruled to, and directed in, by the Holy Spirit, before they were ever recorded or made ſcripture; and no other rule or judge can ſo regulate: For as the faith and experience, ſo the rule and judge of that faith and that experience, muſt be One. God by his Spirit begets faith; God by his Spirit rules faith, and governs the life of his children; "for as many as are children of God, are led by the Spirit of God." The Scripture, much of it, is but a Declaration of faith and experience; therefore not the Rule, or Judge: For as Faith and Experience were before Scripture, (becauſe, as I ſaid before, there muſt be a rule and judge where there is faith) therefore the Scripture is not that rule or judge: And before that declaration be anſwered or fulfilled by any, they muſt come to the Faith, Rule and Judge, of which that is a declaration. So that Faith is 'yielding 'up to the requirings of God's Spirit in us, in full aſſurance of the remiſſion of ſins that 'are paſt, through the Son of his Love, and life everlaſting;' from whence daily flow works of holineſs, well-pleaſing to God: Which is more than a mere Aſſent of the Underſtanding to a verbal, though a true Propoſition: Again, The life of a true Chriſtian ſtands not in bodily exerciſe, which, ſays the apoſtle, profits little: Nor in an imitation of the ancients in temporary and ſhadowy things, which the hypocrite, as well as the ſaint, can do; but in ſelf-denial, and walking in the Spirit, to bring forth the fruits thereof unto all godlineſs, which is the pure and ſpiritual obedience, reſulting from the living ſpiritual faith of God's elect; and the Rule and Judge thereof is their Author and Begetter, even the Spirit of truth, which alone gives ſaving underſtanding, faith and obedience, and ſearcheth the deep things of God.

Rom. viii. 14, 15.

1 Tim. iv. 8.
Col. ii. 20, 21, 22, 23.
Gal. v. 16, 22, 23.

O ye profeſſors of religion, that you would but ſeriouſly weigh theſe things, and examine yourſelves in God's ſight (for he reſpects none for their fair outſide), if this ſaving faith be your faith, and this heavenly life be your life, and if the Holy Spirit be your Ruler and Leader? If not, you are but legal, formal, and in the oldneſs of the letter, and will-worſhippers, which obtains not with God: In which ſtate, not the wiſdom from above, but that which is from below, of the old creature, is your rule: In it you read ſcripture, expound it, pray, preach, ſing and perform all your duties; and this is not to walk "according to the rule of the New Creature," but in a Legal ſpirit to make a Goſpel profeſſion; the end of which, from the Lord, I am to tell you, "will be a bed "of ſorrow." Therefore reſiſt not the Light and Spirit within, but turn at the reproof thereof, that you may come to walk in the way of life, daily life to your ſouls; that ſo you may be quickned and made alive to God in all your duties, and live to him, while you live in that Life which is hid with Chriſt in God; that being thus born again, and become renewed in your inward man, you may perform that Pure and Spiritual Worſhip, which is of a ſweet ſavour with the Lord; ſo ſhall he bleſs you with his heavenly bleſſings, and daily repleniſh your ſouls with the unſpeakable joys of his love and ſalvation. This I heartily deſire, and through all difficulties inceſſantly travel for, in body, ſoul and ſpirit, that the All-wiſe, Good, Omnipotent God may be known, ſerved and obeyed by you, to your comfort, and his eternal honour, who alone is worthy to receive it, now and for ever. Amen.

Gal. vi. 16.
Prov. vi. 23.

WILLIAM PENN.

A LETTER
TO THE COUNCIL and SENATE OF THE CITY OF EMDEN.

The King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, who is God of all the Families of the Earth, incline your hearts to Juſtice, Mercy, and Truth.

1674. THE noiſe of your ſevere treatment of ſeveral perſons that are inhabitants of your ſtate, reproachfully termed QUAKERS, hath reached theſe parts, and filled ſeveral with compaſſion and ſurprize: Compaſſion, to hear of the * miſeries of men innocent and upright, againſt whom you have nothing to object, but the pure Exerciſe of their Conſcience to God: Surprize, that you, a Proteſtant State, ſhould employ your civil power to deter, puniſh and grievouſly afflict men for anſwering the convictions of their conſciences, and acting according to the beſt of their underſtandings. Methinks you ſhould not be oblivious of your own condition in the loins of your anceſtors, who, you think, with great reaſon and juſtice ſtrenuouſly advocated the cauſe of Liberty of Conſcience againſt the Pope's Bulls and the Spaniſh Inquiſition: How did they antichriſtian all force on conſcience or puniſhment for Non-conformity? Their own many and large apologies, and particularly their demands at the diets of Norimberg and Spire, are pregnant proofs in the caſe; and your practice doth not leſſen the weight of their reaſons; on the contrary, it aggravates your unkindneſs, let me ſay, injuſtice.

PROTESTANTS (and ſuch you glory to be thought) got their name by proteſting againſt Impoſitions; and will you turn Impoſers? They condemned it; and will you practiſe it? They thought it a mark peculiar to the BEAST; and can you repute it the care of a CHRISTIAN magiſtracy? I mean, that perſons muſt not live under your government, unleſs they receive your mark in their forehead or right hand? Which in plainer terms is, to ſubmit their conſciences to your edicts, and to aſk your leave, what religion they ſhould be of. Remember, that "Faith is the gift of God;" and, that "what is not of faith is ſin." Nothing can be more unreaſonable, than to compel men to believe againſt their belief, or to trouble them for practiſing what they believe, when it thwarts not the moral law of God.

You doubtleſs take yourſelves to be Chriſtians, and would eſteem it no little injury to be otherwiſe repreſented; yet what more unchriſtian, than to uſe external force to ſway the conſciences of men about the exerciſe of religious worſhip.

Chriſt Jeſus, the Lord and Author of the Chriſtian Religion, cenſured his own diſciples, that would have had fire from heaven to deſtroy thoſe that conformed not to what their bleſſed maſter taught: Are you ſure of your religion? Are you better Chriſtians? Or, have you more Chriſtian authority than they, that were the choſen witneſſes of Jeſus? However, remember they called but for fire from Heaven; and can you kindle fire on Earth to devour them? Them, I ſay, that are of your own people, merely for their religious diſſent from you? Doubtleſs, if that was then thought no fit argument to induce men to conformity by him that was wiſer than Solomon, it reflects greatly upon your modeſty and prudence, that you ſhould find out new ways, or rather old exploded ones, to effect ſo ill a deſign. Beſides, you do not ſay you know all you ought to know, or that there is nothing farther to be revealed: Have a care, therefore, that you perſecute not angels, by being harſh to that which you call ſtrange: Think not ill, much leſs ſpeak, and leaſt of all act that which is ſo, againſt what you do not perfectly underſtand. I am well perſuaded, that thoſe you inflict ſuch ſevere penalties upon, mean well in what they believe (to be ſure much better than you think they do, or elſe you are extremely to blame); and that the reaſon of their preſent diſtance from you, is not to introduce or inſinuate dangerous or exotick opinions; but to live a life of more holineſs, purity, and ſelf-denial, than before: They do not think that you walk up to your own principles; and have reaſon to believe that the power of godlineſs is much loſt among you; and having long lain under a decay and languiſhing of ſoul for want of true ſpiritual nouriſhment, they have now betaken themſelves to that Heavenly Gift and Grace of God in themſelves for divine ſatisfaction, even that Holy Anointing that is able to teach them all things neceſſary for them to know, as the bleſſed apoſtle ſpeaks; and they find the joys of the Holy Ghoſt in ſo doing. And I am perſuaded they are not leſs peaceable, ſober, juſt, and neighbourly than formerly, and altogether as conſiſtent with the proſperity of civil ſociety; and I am ſure, it is both found and confeſſed among us here, by ſome men of Quality, Learning and Virtue. Farther, be pleaſed to conſider with yourſelves, that you juſtify the ancient perſecutions of the Chriſtians and firſt Reformers, whoſe ſuperiors thought as ill of them, as you do of theſe men; nay, you ſhow the Papiſts what to do in their dominions to your own brethren. Do as you would be done by. If you would have liberty, give it; you know that God's Witneſs in your hearts dictates this to you, as an immutable law.

---

* Our account ſays, ſome were cruelly beaten by order; others baniſhed; ſome put in a dungeon, and fed with bread and water only; ſeveral fined greater ſums of money, it is thought, than they had to pay.

Could you give Faith, it were more excuſable for you to puniſh ſuch as ſhould reſiſt. But ſince that is impoſſible, the other is unreaſonable; for it is to afflict men for not being what they cannot be, unleſs they turn hypocrites: That is the higheſt pitch your coercive power can arrive at; for never did it convert or preſerve one ſoul to God: Inſtead thereof, it offers violence unto conſcience, and puts a man either upon the denial of his faith and reaſon, or being deſtroyed for acting according to them: But what greater diſproportion can there be, than what lieth between the intellect of man, and priſons, fines, and baniſhments? They inform no man's judgment, reſolve no doubts, convince no underſtandings: The power of perſuaſion is not to be found in any ſuch barbarous actions, no more than the doctrine of Chriſtianity. This courſe deſtroys the bodies and * eſtates of men, inſtead of ſaving their ſouls: Were they in the wrong, it would become you to uſe God's weapons, his ſword of the Spirit, that ſaveth the Creature, and ſlayeth the Evil in him. This courſe tends to heart-burnings and deſtruction; I am ſure it is no Goſpel argument.

I beſeech you, for the ſake of that Lord Jeſus Chriſt that ſuffered ſo patiently for his own religion, and ſo ſharply prohibited making other men to ſuffer for theirs, that you would have a care how you exerciſe power over mens conſciences. My friends, conſcience is God's throne in man, and the power of it his prerogative: It is to uſurp his authority, and boldly aſcend his throne, to ſet lords over it. Were their converſation ſcandalous, and deſtructive to the good of your ſtate, you were to be held excuſable: But verily, no man of mercy and conſcience can defend your practice upon poor men ſo peaceable and inoffenſive. Gamaliel will riſe up in judgment againſt you, if you perſevere in this courſe. Do not you help to fill the catalogue of perſecutors, in much love I intreat you; but, as becomes Chriſtian men and true Proteſtants, leave men to their particular perſuaſions of affairs relative of the other world, which have no ill aſpect on the affairs of this; but Vice hath an evil conſequence as to both: Therefore puniſh Vice, and affect Truth and Righteouſneſs, and bend not your civil power to torment religious diſſenters; but to retrieve good life, lamentably loſt amidſt the great pretences that are made to religion. Doubleſs magiſtracy was both ordained of God, and elected by men, to be "a "terror to evil-doers," and not to them that do well, though of different judgments. You oppugn the Roman Church for aſſuming Infallibility to herſelf, and yet your own practice maketh you guilty of the ſame preſumption, or worſe: For either you do exerciſe that ſeverity upon an infallible knowledge, or you do not; if you do, you take that to yourſelves your principles deny to any church whatever, which is a contradiction; if you do not, you puniſh people for not conforming to what you yourſelves deny any certainty about: And how do you know but you compel them to that which is falſe, as well as that which is true? Verily, this dilemma is not eaſily avoided, as well as that this inhuman practice will ſtain your profeſſion, infame your government, and bring a blot upon your poſterity.

Remember that they are Men, as well as yourſelves, born free, and have equal plea to natural and civil common privileges with yourſelves: The different perſuaſion of their conſciences about things relating to another life, can no ways render them unfit for this; it neither unmans nor uncivilizes them. They have the ſame right to their liberty and property

---

* And Property, which they repute themſelves guardians of, is hereby loſt.

1674. property as ever, having by no practice of theirs in the leaſt forfeited any of thoſe human advantages, the great Charters of Nature and Scripture have conferred upon them: And the opulency of your neighbours, and proſperity of their affairs, prove to you that Indulgence is not inconſiſtent with policy; howbeit, you have now tried the ſincerity of their procedure, by what you have already inflicted, and they ſuſtained: Let the time paſt ſuffice, and make them not ſacrifices for their conſcientious conſtancy. If they are in the wrong, it is more than they know: Will you perſecute men for being what they muſt be, if they will be true to themſelves? This were great violence; rather commiſerate, than thus violently compel them. I beſeech you, ſeek ſome cheaper way to accommodate yourſelves, than by their deſtruction, who are ſo very remote from ſeeking yours. ‘O! the day will come, wherein one act of tenderneſs about matters of conſcience, ſhall find a better reward, than all the ſeverity by which men uſe to propagate their perſuaſions in the world:’ And there is great reaſon for it, ſince the one flows from the Saviour, the other from the Deſtroyer, of men. In fine, “let your moderation be known unto all men; for the Lord is at hand, whoſe reward is with him; and he will recompenſe every Man, Family, State, Kingdom, and Empire, according to the nature of their works committed in this mortal body!” At whoſe bar it ſhall never be laid to your charge, that out of fear of taking God's office out of his hands, and of being unmerciful to tender conſciences, you admitted men of differing judgments to dwell quietly among you. Truly, you cannot be too tender in this point.

Imitate the God of Nature and Grace, by being propitious to all; “his ſun ſhineth on all, his rain falls on all, he gives life and being to all; his Grace viſits all, and in times of ignorance he winketh:” And tho' ſuch you may repute ours, I hope you cannot think you wink at it, who make ſuch broad tokens of your diſpleaſure. O! how forbearing and merciful is he towards you? Have you ſo lately eſcaped the wrath of enemies, and can you already thus ſharply treat your friends? Had he entered into judgment with you, what had become of you? Let his goodneſs to you prevail with you to expreſs clemency to others, that ſo the great God of the whole earth, even the ‘God of the ſpirits of all fleſh, who reſpects not the perſons of the rich, poor, or powerful in judgment,’ may ſhow you mercy in the day of his righteous judgments. Amen.

Your Friend, with the greateſt integrity, in the Univerſal Principle of Love and Truth.

W. PENN.

London, December the 14th 1674.

A TREATISE
OF OATHS:

CONTAINING

SEVERAL WEIGHTY REASONS

Why the People called QUAKERS
REFUSE to SWEAR.

And thoſe confirmed by Numerous Teſtimonies
OF GENTILES, JEWS, and CHRISTIANS, BOTH
Fathers, Doctors, and Martyrs.

Preſented to the KING and Great Council of England in Parliament.

But I ſay unto you, Swear not at all. MAT. v. 34.
Above all things, my Brethren, Swear not. JAM. v. 22.
Becauſe of Oaths, the Land mourneth. JER. xxxii. 10.

He ought to Swear neither this Thing nor any Thing. Theognis.
It is a great Good for a Man not to Swear at all. Maimonides.
It is not lawful to Swear, neither in a juſt nor unjuſt Cauſe. Chryſoſtom.

TO THE KING,

AND

GREAT COUNCIL of ENGLAND,

Aſſembled in PARLIAMENT.

The CASE of the People called QUAKERS, relating to OATHS, farther repreſented, and recommended to their Conſideration, in order to a ſpeedy and effectual Redreſs.

1675. THE common benefit of the Free People of England being undoubtedly both the firſt and greateſt reaſon for the ancient, juſt, and neceſſary conſtitution of Parliaments; and being alſo informed that it is your reſolution to employ this ſeſſion to the redreſs of public grievances; and ſince we cannot but repute ourſelves a Member of this Great Body you repreſent, by Birth and Engliſh Deſcent, and are not only involved in the common calamities of the kingdom, but in particular very cruelly treated in our perſons and eſtates, becauſe we cannot, for Pure Conſcience, take any Oath at all (though we have again and again tendered our Solemn Yea or Nay, and are moſt willing to ſuſtain the ſame penalty in caſe of Lying, that is uſually inflicted for Perjury); to the end we may not be interpreted to decline the cuſtom out of mere humour or evaſion (though our frequent and heavy ſufferings, by fines and tedious impriſonments, ſometimes to death itſelf, ſhould ſufficiently vindicate us againſt ſuch uncharitable cenſure) we do, with all due reſpect, preſent you with our reaſons for that tenderneſs, and many teſtimonies and precedents in their defence; and we intreat you to expreſs that care of a Member of your own Civil Body, which Nature and Chriſtianity excite to: We mean, that it would pleaſe you to conſider how deeply we have already ſuffered, in perſon and eſtate, the inconveniencies we have daily to encounter, and thoſe injurious not only to ourſelves, but others we commerce with, in that both they and we, becauſe of our tenderneſs in this matter, are conſtantly at the mercy of ſuch as will ſwear any thing to advantage themſelves, where they are ſure that a contrary evidence ſhall be by law eſteemed (however true) invalid; under which difficulty ſeveral of us at this hour fruitleſly labour: That being ſenſible of our calamity, you may pleaſe to endeavour, as for others, ſo for this grievance, both a ſpeedy and effectual redreſs; otherwiſe, beſides ordinary caſes, wherein many of us extraordinarily ſuffer, we may perhaps prove, in this of Oaths, the greateſt, if not the only ſufferers of the kingdom; a cruelty, we hope, you do not deſign againſt us.

God Almighty, we beſeech him with all ſincerity of heart, incline you to juſtice, mercy and truth. Amen.

London, the 25th of the Third Month, 1675.

Subſcribed on the behalf of the reſt of our Friends, by Alexander Parker,	Samuel Newton,

George Whitehead,	Thomas Heart,
Stephen Criſp,	John Oſgood,
William Mead,	James Claypool,
Gerrard Roberts,	Thomas Rudyard,
William Welſh,	Richard Richardſon,

And William Penn.

Some Inducements offered to anſwer this Requeſt, from a conſideration of the Cauſe and End of an Oath, and thoſe Reaſons and Teſtimonies given by us againſt the Uſe and Impoſition of it.

The Ground or Reaſon of Swearing.

THIS, we think, all will agree to have been the degeneration of man from Primitive Integrity, at what time Yea and Nay were enough; for when men grew corrupt, they diſtruſted each other, and had recourſe to extraordinary ways to awe one another into truth-ſpeaking, as a remedy againſt falſhood; elſe, what need had there been of an Oath, or any extraordinary way of evidence, when every ſyllable was freighted with truth and integrity? It had been a mere taking of God's holy name in vain: Truth then flowed naturally, and wanted no ſuch expedient to extort its evidence.

Thus Polybius, though an Heathen, in his ſtory of the Romans, ſaith, 'Among the 'ancients, Oaths were ſeldom uſed in judicatures themſelves; but when Perfidiouſneſs 'increaſed, Oaths increaſed,' or then the uſe of them firſt came in. (a)

Baſilius Magnus ſaith, 'Oaths are an effect of Sin.' (b)

Gregorius Nazianzenus, in his Dialogue againſt Swearing, ſaith, 'An oath is nothing 'elſe but a certain conſummation of miſchiefs.' (c)

Ambroſius ſaith, 'Swearing is only in condeſcenſion to a defect.'

Chryſoſtom ſaith, 'An oath came in when evils increaſed, when men appeared unfaithful, when all things became topſy-turvy.' Again, Commen. on Hebr. c. 6.

'To ſwear is of the devil; ſeeing Chriſt ſaith, "What is more (than yea, &c.) is "of evil." Again, Hom. 9. on Acts iii.

'Swearing took its beginning for want of truth or punctuality.' Hom. Pſal. v. Ad Pop. Antioc.

Auguſtin ſaith, 'An oath is not among good but evil things, and uſed for the infirmity of others, which is evil, from which we pray that we may be daily delivered.' On Mat. v.

Chromatius ſaith, 'What need we ſwear, ſeeing it is unlawful to lye.' Which ſhows that lying was the occaſion of oaths, and by leaving off lying, oaths vaniſh as unprofitable. Ibid.

Titelmannus ſaith, that 'An oath belongs not to virtue.' On Pſal. xiv.

Albertus Magnus ſaith, 'Swearing is by indulgence.' On Mat. v.

Ludulphus ſaith, 'An oath was permitted of infirmity.' Vit. Chr. p. 2. c. 12.

Burgenſis cites Jerom, ſaying, 'Our Saviour teacheth, that an oath ſprung from the 'vices of men.' On Mat. v.

Biſhop Gauden alſo tells us, 'That the evils of mens hearts and manners, the jealouſies and diſtruſts, the diſſimulations and frauds of many Chriſtians, their uncharitableneſs and inſecurities are ſuch, as by their diſeaſes do make ſolemn oaths and judicial 'ſwearing neceſſary; not abſolutely, morally, or preceptively, but as a remedy or expedient.' Of Oaths, p. 17, 23. On Mat. v. 36, 37.

Jerom, with many of the fathers, Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, and others here omitted, becauſe largely cited hereafter, make this the reaſon why God indulged the Jews in the uſe of ſwearing, 'That they were but in the ſtate of infancy, and that they might be 'kept from ſwearing by falſe Gods;' which the ſcripture is plain in: "For thou ſhalt "fear the Lord thy God, and ſwear by his name: Ye ſhall not go after other gods, for "God is a jealous God, &c." Which ſhews, that he diſpenſed with ſwearing by his name, that he might take them off from ſwearing by falſe gods, becauſe they would thereby acknowledge them, and not the true God; ſo that ſwearing is only better than idolatry. Deut. vi. 13, 14, 15.

IT will remain, that we give our REASONS why we cannot take this liberty, and ſwear, as well as other men have done, and yet do.

I. The firſt is drawn from the Cauſe and Ground of Oaths, viz. Perfidiouſneſs, Diſtruſt and Falſhood: God's inſtructions to avoid thoſe hateful crimes: The ability he hath given man to anſwer his commands; and man's duty to make that uſe of God's gift. For if ſwearing came in by perfidiouſneſs, diſtruſt, diſſimulation and falſhood, it is a moſt juſt conſequence that it ought to go out with them; or that as the riſe and increaſing of thoſe evils were the riſe and increaſing of oaths, ſo the decreaſing and extirpation of thoſe evils, ſhould be the decreaſing and aboliſhing of oaths; otherwiſe there would be no truth in the rule of contraries, nor reaſon in that maxim, ceſſante ratione legis, ceſſat lex; 'that the ceaſing of the Reaſon of the law, is the ceſſation of the Law.' Expedients are no longer uſeful than to obtain what they are deſigned to: Means are ſwallowed up of their ends; Diſeaſed men only want remedies, and lame men crutches: Honeſty needs neither whip

---

(a) He lived before Chriſt 200 years, H. Grotius on Mat. v. Biſhop Gauden of Oaths. p. 36. (b) in Pſalm xiv. (c) Jamb. 20.

1675.

whip nor ſpur; ſhe is ſecurity for herſelf; and men of virtue will ſpeak truth without extortings; for oaths are a ſort of racks to the mind, altogether uſeleſs where integrity ſways.

Mic. vi. 8.

This, we preſume, no man of reaſon will deny, viz. ‘That Swearing came in, and ‘ought to go out, with perfidiouſneſs;’ and hope it will be as eaſy to grant, at leaſt it will be very eaſy to prove, that God hath frequently, both by prophets and apoſtles, reproved men for ſuch impieties, and ſtrictly required truth and righteouſneſs; as, Iſa. lix. 3, 4. Jer. ix. 3, 5. Rom. xii. 19. Gal. v. 19, 20, 21. Col. iii. 8, 9, 10. Joſh. xxiv. 14. 1 Sam. xii. 24. 1 Kings ii. 4. Eph. iv. 25. and by abundance of other places in holy ſcripture. And that God ſhould enjoin man any thing that he hath not impowered him to perform, is unworthy of any man acknowledging a God ſo much as to conceive. It is true, that the unprofitable ſervant in the parable, is repreſented to entertain ſo blaſphemous a thought of his Maker, that he was ſo “hard a maſter, as to “reap where he did not ſow;” but the ſame parable alſo acquaints us of the dreadful conſequence of that preſumption. The prophet Micah preached another doctrine, “The Lord hath ſhewed thee, O man, what is good: And what doth the Lord require “of thee, but to do juſtly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?” For this end hath “the Grace of God appeared unto all men,” as ſpeaks the apoſtle Paul to Titus, that they ſhould be taught “to deny ungodlineſs and worldly luſts;” which entering, and over-running the world, made way, among other expedients, for that of oaths; ſo that to live that life which needs no oath, man is both required and impowered: And as it is only his fault and condemnation, if he doth not; ſo certainly there can be no obligation upon him, who liveth that life of truth and integrity, to perpetuate that which roſe, and therefore ought to fall, with falſhood and perfidiouſneſs: the reaſon of the thing itſelf excuſes him; for he that fears untruth, needs not ſwear, becauſe he will not lye; to prevent which, men exact ſwearing: And he that doth not fear telling untruth, what is his oath worth? He that makes no conſcience of that law that forbids lying, will he make any conſcience of forſwearing? Veracity is the beſt ſecurity; and Truth-ſpeaking the nobleſt tye and firmeſt teſtimony that can be given. This we declare to you to be both our judgment and attainment: We ſpeak not boaſtingly, but with humility, before the great Lord of heaven and earth, to whoſe alone Power we do unanimouſly aſcribe the honour: He hath taught us to ſpeak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, as plainly and readily without an oath as with an oath, and to abhor lying as much as perjury; ſo that for us to ſwear, were to take his holy name in vain. Nor are we therein ſingular; for that not only Chriſtian Fathers, Martyrs and Doctors, but alſo Jews and Heathens, have had this ſenſe of the riſe of oaths, as will hereafter fully appear.

II. Our ſecond reaſon, why we refuſe to comply with this cuſtom, and our ſuperiors ought not to impoſe it, is this; It would gratify diſtruſts, humour jealouſies, and ſubject truth, and thoſe that love it, to the ſame checks, curbs, and preventions that have been invented againſt fraud; whereby the honour of a noble profeſſion, the power of a veracious example, and the juſt difference that ought to be made betwixt truſtineſs and diffidence, integrity and perfidiouſneſs, are utterly loſt.

How is it poſſible for men to recover that ancient confidence, that good men repoſed in one another, if ſome do not lead the way, and hold forth to the world a principle and converſation beyond the neceſſity of ſuch extraordinary expedients? At preſent, people lie all on a heap; and the greateſt truth finds no more favour than the greateſt fraud: Fidelity muſt wear the ſhackles worldly prudence hath made againſt the evil conſequences of cozenage, and ſubject herſelf to the cuſtoms brought up through fraud, or go to gaol. Be pleaſed to conſider, that truſtineſs did not all at once quit the world, nor will it return univerſally in the twinkling of an eye; things muſt be allowed their time for riſe, progreſs and perfection: And if ever you would ſee the world planted with primitive ſimplicity and faithfulneſs, rather cheriſh than make men ſufferers for refuſing to ſwear, eſpecially if they offer the ſame caution to the law with him that will ſwear. We dare not ſwear becauſe we dare not lye, and that it may appear to the world that we can ſpeak the truth upon eaſier terms than an oath: For us then to be forced to ſwear, is to make us do a needleſs thing, or to ſuſpect our own honeſty. The firſt we dare not, becauſe, as we have ſaid, it is to take God's name in vain; and we have no reaſon to diſtruſt ourſelves, being no ways conſcious of fraudulent purpoſes. Why then ſhould we ſwear? But much rather, why ſhould we be impoſed upon? It is a ſaying aſcribed to Solon, ‘That a good man ſhould have that repute, as not to need an oath; that it is a diminution ‘to his credit to be put to ſwear.’ It becomes not an evangelical man to ſwear, was a primitive axiom; but more of that anon. In the mean while pleaſe to remember, you have a practice among you to exempt your lords in ſeveral caſes, placing the value of an oath in their bare avouchment upon their Honour, ſuppoſing that men of thoſe titles ſhould have ſo much worth, as that their Word might be of equal force with a common man's Oath: And if you will pleaſe to underſtand Honour in the ſenſe of the moſt ancient and beſt philoſophers, to wit, Virtue, your own cuſtom gives authority to our reaſon, and makes you to ſay with us, 'That virtue need not ſwear, much leſs have 'oaths impoſed upon her, to tell the truth,' the only uſe of oaths. It was evangelically ſpoken of Clemens Alexandrinus, that 'a good life was a firm oath;' which was memorably verified by the judges of Athens, who, though Heathens, forbad the tendering of Xenocrates an oath, becauſe of their great opinion of his integrity; which was three hundred years before Chriſt came in the fleſh,

Biſh. Gauden of oaths p. 41.

III. Our third reaſon for non-conformity to your cuſtom is, the fear we have, leſt by complying we ſhould be guilty of rebellion againſt the diſcoveries God hath made to our ſouls, of his ancient holy way of truth; and conſequently of concealing his goodneſs to us, and depriving him of that glory, and the world of that advantage, this honeſt teſtimony may bring to him and them. He has redeemed us from fraud; it is he only that hath begotten this conſcientiouſneſs in us, and we dare not put this light under a buſhel; neither can we deny his work, or him to have the honour of it. We intreat you, take this tenderneſs of ours into Chriſtian conſideration.

IV. Oaths have in great meaſure loſt of the reaſon of their primitive inſtitution, ſince they have not that awful influence, which was, and only can be, a pretence for uſing them; on the contrary, they are become the familiar parts of diſcourſe, and help to make up a great ſhare of the a-la-mode converſation; and thoſe who decline their company, or reprove their practice, are to go for a ſort of nice and ſqueamiſh-conſcienced men. Theſe ſwear without fear or wit, yet would be thought witty in ſwearing; fearleſs, they cannot. Some are curious in their impiety; old oaths are too dull for men of their invention, who almoſt ſhift oaths with their faſhions: Nay, the moſt judicial oaths are commonly adminiſtred and taken with ſo little reverence and devotion, (to ſay nothing of the perjuries, that through ignorance or deſign are ſo frequently committed) that we cannot but cry out, O the great depravity that is in the world! How low is man fallen from the primitive rule of life? Well may the prophet's complaint be ours; for if ever land mourned becauſe of oaths, with great ſadneſs we ſay it, this doth. And what more effectual remedy can any people propoſe againſt the notorious abuſe and evil conſequence of Swearing, than Truth-ſpeaking? For thoſe that dare not Lye, need not Swear; and they that make no conſcience of lying, do not much fear an oath, at leaſt their conſciences are very crazy in taking it. This only reaſon, were we deſtitute of all other allegations, would be a ſtrong diſſuaſive from ſwearing; for we hold God's honour, and our profeſſion, greatly concerned to prove to ſo falſe an age, that there is a people who are ſo far from vain and falſe ſwearing, that they dare not ſwear the truth, but whoſe Yea and Nay ſhall weigh againſt other mens Oaths, and that with a free offer of ſuſtaining double puniſhment in caſe of a miſcarriage. Expedients may laſt a while, but Truth only ſhall have the honour of conquering Falſhood, and Virtue will, and muſt, be greater than an Oath.

V. The Omnipreſence of God, rightly underſtood, ſhows the uſeleſneſs of an oath, and is with us a good argument againſt Swearing: For what need is there of that man's being awed into a true evidence by ſuch ſort of atteſtations and imprecations as make up the common form of oaths, who knows God to be always preſent to reſide and preſide in his ſoul, according to that new and everlaſting covenant which he hath made, "that his people "ſhould be his Temple, that he would dwell in them, and walk in them." Did the Acts xvii. 28.
children of men know the power, glory and majeſty of God, whom the apoſtle preached nigh to the Athenians, and declared to the Epheſians to be "Father of all, and above all, Eph. iv. 6.
"through all, and in them all," there would be no Oaths, and but few Words, and thoſe uttered with reverence and truth.

VI. We do not find that oaths anſwer this part of the end, for which they are impoſed, viz. To convince thoſe for whoſe ſake they are taken, of the weight and truth of a man's teſtimony, by force of God's witneſs joined therewith: For they do not behold God's concurring witneſs by ſuch an aſſiſtance or avenge of the party, as the truth or falſehood of his teſtimony deſerveth; for the judgments of God are ſecret, and rarely ſo publicly ſeen to men, perhaps once in an age, that he ſhould give any memorable diſcovery of his good will or diſpleaſure in ſuch a caſe; but whenever he doth it, it is not at man's appointment: And it is an evident ſign that God approveth not of that ſort of invocation, becauſe he doth not anſwer them that invoke him, according to their wiſh; as neither did he, in the old law and cuſtom of Combating, appear on his ſide that had the better title or cauſe, as he promiſed in the law of Jealouſies, that their thigh ſhould rot, and their belly ſwell, &c. Numb. v. 21, 22.

VII. We look upon it to be no leſs than a preſumptuous tempting of God, to ſummon him as a witneſs, not only to our terrene, but trivial buſineſſes; ſuch as we ſhould doubtleſs account it an high indignity, always to ſolicit an earthly prince to give his attendance about. What! make God, the great God of heaven and earth, our Caution in worldly controverſies, as if we would bind him to obtain our own ends? It is to make too bold with him, and to carry an undue diſtance in our minds towards him that made us: An irreverence we can by no means away with, and upon which Chryſoſtom is moſt ſharp, as will be ſeen anon. Beſides it is vain and inſolent, to think that a man, when he pleaſeth, ſeth, can make the great God of heaven a witneſs or judge in any matter, to appear by ſome ſignal approbation or judgment, to help or forſake him, as the truth or falſeneſs of his oath requires, when he ſaith, So help me God.

VIII. Beſides what we have hitherto urged in defence of ourſelves againſt the Subſtance of the oath, we juſtly except againſt the Form of it (which farther adds to its unlawfulneſs, and conſequently to our vindication) as by the Contents and Kiſſing of the Book; ſwearing by a Sign, being Heatheniſh or Jewiſh. For the Romans held a ſtone, and ſaid, 'If I deceive wittingly, then let Dieſpiter caſt me out of my goods, as I this 'ſtone:' The Heroes ſwore by lifting up of the Sceptre: Cæſar ſwore by his Head, his Houſe, that is, devoted them to the wrath of God, if he wittingly deceived, &c. The manner of the Jews is from Gen. xiv. 22. "that Abraham lift up his hand to God, אם "If, &c. putting the hand under the thigh; on the head; paſſing betwixt beaſts divided," as God did to Abraham, &c. See more in Lapid. Sophoc. in antiq. v. 270. Scoliaſt. Baptiſt. Hanſen, of paſſing through fire, ſwearing by the right hand, &c.

Feſt. ad. Lap. Polyb. l. 3. c. 25. Alex. ab. Alex. l. 5. gen. dier. 10. Cic. l. 5. Ep. 1. Ariſt. 3. Pol. 10. Plin. in pan. ad. Trajan. c. 64.

The uſe of So help me God, we find from the law of the Almains, of king Clotharius: The laying on of the three fingers above the book, is to ſignify the Trinity; the thumb and the little finger under the book, are to ſignify the Damnation to Body and Soul, if they forſwear, So help me God.

Lindenbro. cap. 3. §. 7.

Farther, be pleaſed to conſider that the Engliſh Cuſtom has very much overgone Engliſh Law in this buſineſs of Oaths; they were anciently but ſolemn Atteſtations, "As the Lord liveth, &c." which are now improved to Imprecations, So help me God, and the Contents of this Book; though it was ſo of old at Combat; but that concerns not our caſe. For the kiſſing of the book, that is alſo novel; indeed after they roſe from ſolemn Atteſtations to Imprecations, the law required a Sight and Touch of the book; the Saxon jurors were Sacra tenentes; in the firſt Norman times it was Sacris tactis; and in later writs, Evangeliis tactis; nay, the prieſt's hand was on his Breaſt (in Matthew Paris) not upon the Book. However Jew and Gentile, Superſtition and Ceremony, have made up the preſent Form of Oaths, which the True Chriſtian Man neither wants, nor, we conceive, ought to perform; much leſs impoſe, where tenderneſs by ſober conſciences is pleaded, and equal caution offered to the law, for the integrity of Yea and Nay.

IX. But were we alſo deſtitute of this plea, and the uſual oaths of our country the moſt inoffenſively formed, and beſt penned that ever any were, we have both the Example and Precept of our Lord and Saviour, Jeſus Chriſt, to oppoſe to any ſuch practice; for in all that hiſtory delivered to us by the Four Evangeliſts, we never read him to have uſed any farther aſſeveration, than what in Engliſh amounts to "Verily, Verily, or "Truly, I ſay unto you." Thus by his example, exciting us the more readily to obey his expreſs prohibition of ſwearing, Mat. v. 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, which runs thus, "Again, ye have heard that it has been ſaid by them of old time, Thou ſhalt not forſwear thyſelf, but ſhalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths; but I ſay unto you, ſwear not at all; neither by Heaven, for it is God's throne; nor by the Earth, for it is his footſtool; neither by Jeruſalem, for it is the city of the Great King; neither ſhalt thou ſwear by thy Head, becauſe thou canſt not make one hair white or black; but let your "* Word be Yea, Yea; Nay, Nay; for whatſoever is more than theſe cometh of "Evil."

He here prohibits even the Leſſer Oaths, as they thought them that reverenced ſwearing by the Name of the Lord, which in old time he ſuffered, by reaſon of the falſeneſs of their hearts, and great proneneſs to idols; even as Moſes permitted them to put away their Wives, which in the precedent verſe alſo is diſallowed by Chriſt, though with the exception of Fornication; but Swearing without any Exception: He doth not ſay, "Swear not, except before a magiſtrate (though he ſays, Put not away thy Wife, except for the cauſe of Fornication) but, "Swear not at all:" Why, "becauſe it is of "Evil;" which reaſon reaches the oaths taken before magiſtrates, as well as other oaths; for diſtruſt and unfaithfulneſs are the cauſe of one as well as the other: And there is equal reaſon in that reſpect, that a maſter ſhould ſwear in private to his ſervant at his entrance, that he will pay him his wages, as that the ſervant ſhould ſwear in public to a magiſtrate, that at his departure his maſter would not pay him his wages; both which oaths the certainty of their words, their Yea being Yea, and their Nay being Nay, makes vain and ſuperfluous.

Obj. We are not inſenſible of the common objection that is made againſt this allegation of our Maſter's command, 'That he only prohibited Vain oaths in communication:' But if the words of the text and context be conſidered, every oath will be proved vain and unlawful; for Chriſt's prohibition was not a mere repetition of what was forbidden under the Law, but what the Law allowed, as * Biſhop Sanderſon well obſerveth; 'It 'was not needful that Chriſt ſhould forbid what was forbidden in itſelf, or was always 'unlawful; which Vain ſwearing was, and is, by the Third Commandment, "Thou "ſhalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain;" therefore Chriſt exceeded the 'prohibition of the Law.' And the whole chapter is a demonſtration of a more excellent righteouſneſs than that which either needed or uſed oaths; for Chriſt brings Adultery from the Act to the Thought; in lieu of Revenge, he commands Suffering, and extends Charity not only to Friends, but Enemies; ſo, in the place controverted, in the room of ſuch oaths and vows as ought to be performed unto the Lord, he introduces Yea and Nay, with a moſt abſolute "Swear not at all." This was the advance he made in his excellent ſermon upon the Mount; he wound up things to an higher pitch of ſanctity than under the Law, or the childiſh ſtate of the Jews could receive. "Again," ſaith he, "Ye have heard of old time, thou ſhalt not forſwear thyſelf, but ſhalt perform "unto the Lord thine oaths; but I ſay unto you, Swear not at all;" as plain, general, and emphatical a prohibition as can be found in holy ſcripture. However, perſons that uſually advocate for the continuance of oaths under the Goſpel, tell us, it is not a 'General prohibition, but is limited to ſwearing by Creatures, either by Heaven, Earth, Jeruſalem, or Head, &c.' Which is wholly inconſiſtent with the ſcope of the place, as we ſhall make appear from theſe four conſiderations:

---

* Λόγος,

* Biſhop R. Sanderſ. de Jur. Oblig. p. 141.

Firſt, The prohibition reaches as well to ſerious as vain oaths, ſuch as men made, if they ſwore at all, and ought to make to God only; for to him alone ſhould they perform them, and are accountable for them: Theſe very allowed oaths of old time, are the firſt prohibited by Jeſus Chriſt; "It was ſaid of old, thou ſhalt not forſwear thyſelf; but I "ſay, Swear not at all." It is true, it is not particularized what oaths they were to keep of old; but in general terms, that they were not to "forſwear themſelves;" and it is clear that God enjoined them that would ſwear, that they ſhould only "ſwear by his "name." Now what can be hence inferred more evidently, than that men ought not to ſwear thoſe oaths under the Goſpel, which they might ſwear, and ought not to forſwear, but to perform unto the Lord, in the Law.

Secondly, Chriſt himſelf gives the explanation of his own words, chap. xxiii. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. where he teacheth us, that "he that ſwears by the Temple, "ſwears by it, and by him that dwells therein; and he that ſhall ſwear by Heaven, "ſwears by the throne of God, and by him that ſits thereon:" So that he that ſwears by the Head, ſwears by him that made it; and he that ſwears by the Earth, ſwears by him that created it; which leaves no room for the objection: For it is as if Chriſt ſhould have ſaid, "I not only command you not to forſwear, but to perform; as it was ſaid to "them of old time; but I charge you, Not to ſwear at all. I mean, not only that "you ſhould not ſwear by God, and thoſe oaths that the Phariſees account binding; "but alſo that you ſhould not ſo much as ſwear by thoſe leſſer oaths, as they eſteem them, "and which they are wont to ſwear by; for they are not leſs, nor more allowable, in "that they that ſwear by them, ſwear by him that is the Author and Maker of them: "Wherefore, being of the ſame nature with the other, I forbid you to ſwear by them, "as well as by thoſe oaths that were of old time made, and ought not to be broken, "but performed unto the Lord; for this is one of my great commandments, which "they muſt keep that will be my diſciples, that is to ſay, Swear not at all."

Our third inducement to believe this to have been the intention of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, is the concurrent teſtimony of the apoſtle James, which is not only a repetition of his Maſter's doctrine, but an addition and illuſtration, we hope ſufficient to determine the preſent queſtion with every unprejudiced reader; "But above all things, my brethren," ſaith he, "ſwear not;" which runs paralled with "Swear not at all." The negative is as general and forcible. He proceeds, "Neither by Heaven, neither by the Earth:" Words of equal import with the latter part of Chriſt's prohibition: And, as if he had foreſeen the cavils of our ſwearing adverſaries, he adds, "Neither by any other oath;" which though as clear as the ſun, if yet, for their laſt ſhift, they ſhould tell us, that he only meant any other oath of that kind, not that he prohibited ſwearing by the Name of the Lord, it will not do their buſineſs; for that Chriſt hath already aſſured us, "Whoſoever ſwears by Heaven, ſwears by Him that ſits thereon;" and the very next words ſhow, that it was not his deſign only to prohibit vain, but plainly to exclude all ſwearing, "But let your Yea be Yea; and your Nay, Nay, leſt ye fall into condemnation;" elſe why had he not ſaid, 'But you may ſwear by the Name of God before magiſtrates?' Why muſt "Neither by any other oath," be added after ſuch plain prohibition, as, "My "brethren, above all things ſwear not?" And why muſt Yea and Nay be ſubſtituted in the room of an Oath, if it was yet intended by the apoſtle that Chriſtians might riſe higher in their evidence than a bare Affirming or Denying? That is, though their Yea be never ſo truly Yea, and their Nay never ſo ſincerely Nay, or the very Truth of the Matter be ſpoken, which is the import of the words; yet that they ought to ſwear. What is this but to contradict the natural tendency of the command of Chriſt and his apoſtles? Which is plainly this; 'If your Yea be Yea, it is enough; if your Nay be 'Nay, it is ſufficient; for Chriſtians ought not to ſwear; if they do, they fall into 'condemnation,' in that they break their maſter's command, who hath told them, that "Whatſoever is more than Yea and Nay, cometh of Evil," which is the ground of all oaths; for they ought to mean ſo ſimply and honeſtly in what they ſay, as that they ſhould never need to ſwear in order to tell the truth.

1675. Our Fourth and laſt conſideration, and that which to us ſeemeth of great moment to clear up our Lord and Saviour's ſenſe, and reſcue the paſſage from the violence of objectors, is this clauſe, "For whatſoever is more than Yea, Yea, and Nay, Nay, cometh of Evil." This cannot be intended of more words than Yea, Yea, and Nay, Nay, provided they are not of an higher ſtrain, but of the ſame degree of ſpeech, importing a plain aſſertion or denial of a thing; for it is not the Number, but Nature of the words ſpoken, that is here prohibited: Nor can it be only underſtood of perjury; for every body knows that to be Evil in itſelf, which is more than that which cometh of, or becauſe of, Evil: Therefore it muſt be underſtood as well of Swearing, as of Forſwearing, which is not Evil itſelf, yet cometh of, or by reaſon of, Evil in the world. Nor is there any thing more than Yea and Nay beſides Perjury, which can be intended, but an Oath; and therefore that was intended. Chriſt doth not only prohibit Evil itſelf, but that which is evil by ſuperfluity to evangelical ſincerity, and that Swearing is (be it of what ſort it will) where-ever Yea is Yea, and Nay is Nay. In ſhort, if what is more than Yea and Nay cometh of Evil, then, becauſe any Swearing, as well as Forſwearing, is more than Yea and Nay, it follows, that any Swearing cometh of Evil, and therefore ought to be rejected of Chriſtians.

Nor will our Engliſh tranſlation of λόγος ſhelter our objectors; for Communication doth not exclude thoſe many caſes that require evidences among men, no, nor any the leaſt action of man's life; on the contrary, they have a great place in human Communication, which is comprehenſive of the various diſcourſes and tranſactions of a man's life, as 2 Kings ix. 11. 2 Sam. iii. 17. Eph. iv. 29. Col. iii. 8. 1 Cor. xv. 33. It is a word of the ſame extent with Converſation, which takes in all that can happen between man and man in this world. Thus the Pſalmiſt, "To him that ordereth his Converſation aright," Pſalm l. 23. So the apoſtle, "Let your Converſation be as becomes the Goſpel." Phil. i. 27. Beſides, λόγος may be rendered Word, as in John i. 1. and the Italian and French tranſlations have it, "Let your Word be Yea, Yea; Nay, Nay;" as much as if Chriſt had ſaid, 'As I do not only condemn the Act of Adultery, which the Law did, but alſo the Conception of the Mind, and not only Murder, but Revenge likewiſe; ſo I do not only condemn Forſwearing, which is done to my hand in the Law of God, but prohibit Swearing at all; for I make that to be Unlawful, which the Law doth not call Unlawful: Therefore when your evidence is called for, Swear not at all, but let your word be Yea, Yea, and Nay, Nay; that is, Do not ſpeak Untruth; for that is Evil: Do not Swear; for that comes of Evil.' To conclude; people ſwear, to the end they may ſpeak Truth; Chriſt would have men ſpeak Truth, to the end they might not ſwear; he would not have his followers upon ſuch baſe reſerves, but their Word to carry the weight of an Oath in it; that as others ought not to be guilty of Perjury, Chriſtians ought not to be guilty of Lying: For ſuch is the advance from Moſes to Chriſt, Jew to Chriſtian, that as the Chriſtian needs not the Jew's curb, ſo his Lye is greater than the Jew's Perjury, becauſe his Yea or Nay ought to be of more value than the other's Oath.

X. And laſtly; beſides theſe prohibitions, ſwearing is forbidden by the very nature of Chriſtianity, and unworthy of him that is the author of it; who came not to implant ſo imperfect a religion, as that which needed oaths, or ſhould leave fraud, the ground of ſwearing, unextirpated; but to promulgate that Goſpel which retrieves ancient ſincerity, builds up waſte places, reſtores thoſe breaches oaths entered at, and leads into the ancient holy paths of integrity they never trod in. He is that powerful Lord, who cureth the diſeaſes of them that come unto him, and the Myſtical Serpent exalted, that relieves all that believingly look up to him: His office is to make an end of Sin, that made way for Swearing, and introduce that everlaſting righteouſneſs which never needs it; the religion he taught, is no leſs than Regeneration and Perfection, ſuch veracity as hath not the leaſt wavering; ſincerity throughout, that it might not only exceed the righteouſneſs of the Swearing Jews, but that Law which permitted it till the times of Reſtitution, which he brought to the degenerated world, who ſaid, "Swear not at all:" For the 'Law, that permitted Oaths, was given by Moſes; but Grace and Truth, that ends them, came by Jeſus Chriſt, who therefore prohibits them.' And not only is this Goſpel of Chriſt, or the Holy Religion he taught, of ſo pure and excellent a nature, but thoſe who will be his diſciples, are obliged to obey it; inſomuch that he himſelf hath John xiv. 15. ſaid, "If ye love me, keep my Commandments; and if ye keep my Commandments,
" ye ſhall abide in my Love." Again, "Ye are my Friends, if ye do whatſoever I com-and xv. 10, 14. " mand you: If any man will come after me, let him deny himſelf, and take up his Mat. xvi. 24. " Croſs, and follow me: For I ſay unto you, that except your righteouſneſs ſhall ex-
Mat. v. 20. 48. " ceed the righteouſneſs of the Scribes and Phariſees, ye ſhall in no caſe enter the king" dom of heaven: Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in Heaven is ver. 19. " perfect." Theſe are the weighty ſayings of our bleſſed Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; and certainly, he who breaks not the leaſt commandment, who can ſuffer rather than revenge, love enemies, and be perfect as his heavenly Father is perfect, is above the obligation of an Oath unto truth-ſpeaking. His diſciples preached not another Goſpel than their Maſter's, who prayed, "that thoſe who believed, might be ſanctified throughout, in body, ſoul, and ſpirit," which is a perfect removal of the ground of ſwearing: And they were exhorted to "preſs after the mark of the prize of this high and holy calling, until they ſhould all come unto a Perfect Man, unto the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt Jeſus: For even hereunto," ſaith Peter, "were we called; becauſe Chriſt alſo ſuffered for us, leaving us an example," that ye ſhould follow his ſteps, "who did no ſin, neither was guile found in his mouth." And ſaith John, "As he is, ſo are we in this world." If no Guile be found in our mouths, then no Oaths; for they came becauſe of guile: And if we ought to reſemble him in this world, then muſt our communication be Yea, Yea, and Nay, Nay; that is, we muſt live the Life of Truth, and ſpeak the Words of Truth, which ought to be of greater force than Oaths, that come of Evil. If the righteouſneſs of the Law ought to be fulfilled in us, we ought not to ſwear, becauſe we ought to be ſo righteous as not to lye. This is evangelical; for as he that conceives not a foul or revengeful Thought, needs not to purge himſelf of Adultery and Murder; neither is there any reaſon that man ſhould purge himſelf of Lying by Swearing, that doth not ſo much as countenance an untrue Thought.

1 Theſ. v. 23.
Phil. iii. 14.
Eph. iv. 13.
1 Pet. ii. 21, 22.
1 John iv. 17.

The language of the ſame apoſtle to the Epheſians farther explains this Evangelical evidence; "But ye have not ſo learned Chriſt, if ſo be that ye have heard him, and have been taught by him, as the Truth is in Jeſus; that ye put off, concerning the former converſation, the Old Man, which is corrupt, according to the deceitful luſts; and be renewed in the ſpirit of your mind; and that you put on the New Man, which, after God, is created in righteouſneſs and true holineſs: Wherefore, putting away lying, ſpeak every man truth with his neighbour:" beyond which, there can be no aſſurance given or deſired. And if Chriſtians ought never to Lye, it is moſt certain they need never to Swear; for Swearing is built upon Lying: Take away Lying, and there remains no more ground for Swearing; truth-ſpeaking comes in the room thereof. And this not only the Chriſtian doctrine teaches and requires; but Chriſt, the bleſſed author of it, is ready to work in the hearts of the children of men, would they but come and learn of him, who is meek, lowly, filled with Grace and Truth. And we muſt needs ſay, it is a ſhameful thing, and very diſhonourable to the Chriſtian religion, that thoſe who pretend themſelves to be the followers of Chriſt, (for ſo true Chriſtians ought to be) ſhould ſo degenerate from his example and doctrine, as to want and uſe ſcaring aſſeverations, diſpenſed with in ſome of the weakeſt times of knowledge, and ſuch horrible Imprecations (never known to ancient Jews and Chriſtians) to aſcertain one another of their Faith and Truth: Religion muſt needs have ſuffered a great ebb, and Chriſtianity a fearful eclipſe, ſince thoſe brighter ages of its profeſſion: For biſhop Gauden himſelf, in his Diſcourſe of Oaths, confeſſes, 'That the ancient Chriſtians were ſo ſtrict and exact, that there was no need of an Oath among them; yea, they ſo kept up the ſanctity and credit of their profeſſion among unbelievers, that it was ſecurity enough, in all caſes, to ſay, Chriſtianus ſum, I am a Chriſtian.'

Ephef. iv. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 23.

But to fortify what we have hitherto urged, in defence of our judgment and practice; and to the end it may more fully appear, that our tenderneſs in this great caſe of Oaths, comes not from any ſour, ſullen, or ſuperſtitious humour, or that we would trouble the world with any new-fangled opinion; we ſhall produce the concurrent teſtimonies of ſeveral famous and good men, for above theſe two thouſand years, among Gentiles, Jews and Chriſtians, enough to make an Oecumenical Council: We ſhall cite them out of the beſt editions we have been able to procure, and as truly and punctually as we can render them digeſted in order of time.

MEMORABLE

TESTIMONIES

AGAINST

SWEARING.

Collected out of the Writings of GENTILES, JEWS, and CHRISTIANS: Some of which were delivered to the World ſeveral Ages before Swear not at all was written by MATTHEW, or ſpoken by CHRIST. Which makes Swearing, among Chriſtians, ſo much the more diſallowable.

The whole publiſhed not only in Favour of our Cauſe, but for the Inſtruction of the World, and to their juſt Honour that ſaid and writ them, as durable Monuments of their Virtue.

I.

The Sayings of the Gentiles or Heathens, in diſlike of Oaths.

OUR two firſt teſtimonies ſhall be the practice of Two Great People, the Perſians and Scythians*.

*These nations were many hundred years before Chriſt.

Diodorus Siculus, Lib. 16.

I. 'Among the Perſians,' ſaith Diodorus Siculus, 'giving the right hand was the 'token of truth-ſpeaking: He that did it deceitfully, was counted more deteſtable than 'if he had ſworn.' Which plainly implies, that ſwearing was deteſted among them, as well as that they needed not to ſwear, who ſo much uſed truth-ſpeaking.

Quint. Curt. in vit. Alex.

II. The Scythians, as it is reported by Q. Curtius, in their conference with Alexander, upon occaſion of an unexpected ſecurity, told him, 'Think not that the Scythians 'confirm their friendſhip by Oath: They ſwear by keeping their word.' Which is not only a proof of their diſuſe of common oaths, but ſwearing at all, even in matters of greateſt importance.

Plutarch, Rom. Queſt. 28.

Lived before Chriſt about 1280 years, being in the days of Gideon, Judg. viii.

III. 'So religious was Hercules,' ſaith Plutarch, 'that he never ſwore but once.' If it was religiouſly done to ſwear but once in a man's life, it had been more religiouſly done not to ſwear at all. How juſt and ſevere a cenſure is this out of an Heathen's mouth, upon the practice of diſſolute Chriſtians?

Heſiod, Theogon. p. 88.

Before Chriſt, 800 years, in the days of Hoſea, Joel and Amos.

IV. Heſiod, in his Theogonia, places an oath amongſt the brood of contention. 'An 'oath,' ſaith he, 'greatly hurts men.' Again preſently, 'An oath goes with corrupt 'judgment;' or an oath flies away together with corrupt judgments; that is, when juſtice appears among men, oaths vaniſh; as his ſcope in that place ſhews.

Sociad. in Stob. 28.

Before Chriſt 620 years, in the days of Joſiah.

V. It was one part of the doctrine of the Seven Sages, ſo famous in Greece, 'That 'men ought not to ſwear.'

Stobæus, Serm. 3.

VI. Solon, the famous law-giver of Athens, and one of thoſe Seven Sages, exhorteth the people 'to obſerve Honeſty more ſtrictly than an Oath.' As if he had ſaid, 'Ho'neſty is to be preferred before ſwearing;' as another ſaying of his imports, 'A good 'man ſhould have that repute, as not to need an oath; it is a diminution to his credit to 'be put to ſwear.' Biſhop Gaud. of Oaths, p. 41.

Theognis, ver. 660.

Before Chriſt 593 years.

VII. Theognis, the Greek poet, writing of a perſon ſwearing, ſaith, 'Neither ought 'he 1675.

‘ he to ſwear this or any thing: This thing, (or ſwearing itſelf) ſhall not be.’ What is this leſs than ſwear not at all?

Valer. Max. lib. 8. cap. 18. Laert. Hermip. & Orig. contr. Celſ.

VIII. Pythagoras, a grave and virtuous perſon, being earneſtly intreated of the Crotonian ſenators for his advice in things relating to the government, did in his Oration, among other excellent ſentences, with more than ordinary emphaſis, lay this down in the nature of a maxim, ‘ Let no man atteſt God by an Oath, though in courts of Judi- ‘ cature; but uſe to ſpeak ſuch things, as that he may be credited without an oath.’

Before Chriſt 590 years. Theſe three perſons lived in the time of Jeremiah and Ezekiel.

H. Grot. on Mat. v. 34.

IX. Clineas, a juſt Greek, and follower of Pythagoras, out of love to truth, and the reſpect he bore to his maſter's doctrine, that enjoined him to fear and ſhun an Oath, ‘ choſe to pay three talents,’ which amount to about three hundred pounds, ‘ rather than ‘ take any Oath:’ Whoſe example Baſilius Magnus upbraided the Chriſtians of his time with, that were learning to ſwear.

Before Chriſt 560 years.

Hierocles Comment. in Carm. Pythag. p. 28.

X. Hierocles teſtifies, ‘ That Pythagoras, in enjoining them to revere an Oath, not ‘ only prohibits Forſwearing, but requires them alſo to abſtain from Swearing.’

And Æſhilus makes a ſincere Beckon to a matter, a firm Oath.

Before Chriſt 422 years, in the time of Ahaſuerus, Ezra iv.

Stobæus, Serm. 114.

XI. Socrates, that worthy Gentile, and great promoter of virtue among the Athenians, among many excellent ſentences delivered this, ‘ That good men muſt let the world ‘ ſee that their Manners or Dealings are more than an Oath.’ Which both proves, that he ſaw a more excellent righteouſneſs than ſwearing, Truth itſelf, and believed it attainable; for he manifeſtly exhorts good men to that integrity, which is a greater caution than an oath. He was put to death for teſtifying againſt the Heathen idols, acknowledging One only God.

Before Chriſt 422 years, in the days of Haggai and Zachariah.

Plut. in Lacon. Apoph.

XII. Lyſander, the great Spartan captain, thought an oath of ſo little value, in compariſon of truth, that he beſtowed this contemptuous ſaying upon ſwearing, ‘ Children ‘ are to be deceived with Toys, and Men with Oaths.’ Implying, that ſincerity is a greater ſecurity than an oath.

Before Chriſt 400 years.

Iſocr. ad Demon.

XIII. Iſocrates, a Greek orator, in his Oration to Demonicus, adviſes, ‘ Not to take ‘ an Oath for money matters.’ Alſo he teaches, ‘ That good men ſhow themſelves more ‘ credible than an Oath.’

Before Chriſt 394 years. Theſe two lived in the days of Malachi.

Plat. de Leg. 12.

XIV. Plato (called divine) forbids ſwearing in ſolemn caſes, ‘ That none ſwear him- ‘ ſelf; that none require an Oath of another.’ He ſpeaks there how Rhadamanthus brought in ſwearing by the gods; but that his art therein was not agreeable to that time (it ſeems he accounted it an art of policy); but that in all actions or cauſes, laws which are made with underſtanding, ſhould take away Swearing from both adverſaries. ‘ For,’ ſaith he, ‘ it is an horrible thing, that when many judgments are done in a city, well ‘ near half the people are forſworn in them.---Therefore let the preſidents of judgments ‘ not permit any to ſwear in actions, not even for perſuaſion's ſake; but that he perſevere ‘ in that which is juſt, with a fitting ſpeech,’ &c.

Before Chriſt 166 years.

Valer. Max. 10. Cic. pro Corn. Balb. Diog. Laert. in vit. Xenocr.

XV. Xenocrates was ſo renowned at Athens for his virtuous life and great integrity, that being called to give his evidence by Oath, ‘ all the judges ſtood up and forbad the ‘ tender;’ becauſe they would not have it thought that truth depended more upon an Oath, than the Word of an honeſt man.

Before Chriſt 337 years.

Menander.

XVI. Menander, the Greek poet, ſaith, ‘ Flee an Oath, though thou ſhouldeſt ſwear ‘ juſtly.’

Before Chriſt 336 years.

Cherillus in Perſeid.

XVII. Cherillus ſaith, ‘ Oaths bring not credit to the Man, but the Man muſt bring ‘ credit to the Oaths.’ What ſerve they for then? To deceive? It ſeems by this, that Credit is better than an Oath; for it is the Credit that is the ſecurity, not the Oath.

Stobæus in jur. c. 27.

XVIII. Alexides in Olynth ſaith, ‘ A wiſe man ought always to give credit, not to ‘ ſwearers, but to the things themſelves.’ Then oaths are vain; for it is not the mere oath, but the likelihood of the truth of the evidence from the conſideration and comparing of the circumſtances, that turns the ſcale.

Simocat. Epiſt. 33. F.

XIX. Simocatus ſays, ‘ Perfidiouſneſs appears ſecurer than Faithfulneſs; and an Oath ‘ impoſed is a fit engine for Deceit.’ Strange! that faithful Yea and Nay is ſtopt, when 1675. ‘ Perfidiouſneſs with an Oath can paſs all Guards, Courts and Offices.’ He manifeſtly links Oaths and Perfidiouſneſs, and gives the praiſe to Faithfulneſs.

H. Grot. on Mat. v.

XX. Epictetus, a famous and grave Stoick, counſelled, ‘ to refuſe an Oath altogether.’

Quint. l. 8.

XXI. Quintilian ſaith, ‘ That in time paſt it was a kind of infamy for grave and approved men to ſwear; as if their Authority ſhould ſuffice for Credit. Therefore the Prieſts, or Flamens, were not compelled to it; for then to compel a nobleman to ſwear, were like putting him upon the rack.’ Which ſhows an oath to be an unnatural and extorting way of evidence, and that they preferred virtue and truth before an oath.

Plutarch, Rom. Queſt. 44.

XXII. Plutarch, in his 44th Rom. Qu. upon the Cuſtom of the Romans, holding it unlawful for the Flamen dialis, or Chief Prieſt, to ſwear, puts the queſtion, ‘ Why is it not lawful for Jupiter's prieſt to ſwear? Is it becauſe an Oath miniſtred unto freemen, is as it were a rack and torture tendered unto them? For certain it is, that the ſoul, as well as the body of the Prieſt, ought to continue free, and not to be forced by any torture whatſoever; or for that it is not meet to diſtruſt or diſcredit him in ſmall matters, who is believed in great and divine things? Or rather, becauſe every oath endeth with deteſtation and malediction of perjury? And conſidering that all maledictions be odious and abominable, therefore it is not thought good, that any other Prieſts whatſoever ſhould curſe, or pronounce any malediction: And in this reſpect was the Prieſteſs of Minerva, in Athens, highly commended, for that ſhe would never curſe Alcibiades, notwithſtanding the people commanded her ſo to do: For I am, quoth ſhe, ordained a prieſteſs to pray for men, and not to curſe them. Or laſt of all, was it becauſe the peril of perjury would reach in common to the whole common-wealth, if a wicked goddeſs, and forſworn perſon, ſhould have the charge and ſuperintendence of the prayers, vows and ſacrifices, made in the behalf of the city?’ Thus far Plutarch, whoſe Morals have the praiſe among all the writings of philoſophers; who is alſo commended himſelf, very highly, for his virtue and wiſdom. See his life.

M. Aur. Ant. in Deſcript. bon. vir.

XXIII. M. Aurelius Antoninus, that philoſophical Roman emperor, in his deſcription of a good man, ſays, ‘ That the integrity of a truly good man is ſuch, that there is no need of an Oath for him.’ Certainly then, he was far from impoſing oaths upon his people, who both by his example and precept, preferred integrity before an oath.

Libanius.

XXIV. Libanius, a Greek Orator, though otherwiſe no admirer of Chriſtians, reckons this amongſt the praiſes of a Chriſtian emperor. ‘ He is,’ ſays he, ‘ ſo far from being blacked with Perjury, that he is even afraid to ſwear the Truth.’ It ſeems, then, they ſwore not in his time; and that Libanius, an enemy to Chriſtians, preferred and admired this precept, “ Swear not at all.”

Auſon. Epiſt. 2.

XXV. We ſhall conclude with Auſonius, whoſe ſayings ſeem to be all contracted, or thoſe other teſtimonies digeſted into one axiom, that is, ‘ To ſwear, or ſpeak falſely, is one and the ſame thing.’

Theſe are the reflections upon oaths we receive from Heathens, who, by the Light they had, both diſcerned the ſcope of the evangelical doctrine, “ Swear not at all,” preceptively laid down by Chriſt our Lord, Mat. v. 34. and preſſed it earneſtly: And, which is more to their honour, but to the Chriſtian's ſhame, ſeveral of them lived it ſincerely.

II.

Teſtimonies from the Jews, in diſlike of All Swearing.

H. Grot. Com. on Mat. v. 34.

XXVI. Maimonides, out of the moſt ancient of the Jewiſh rabbies, extracts this memorable axiom, ‘ It is beſt for a man not to ſwear at all.’

Raimund. p. 135.

XXVII. Raimundus quotes him thus, Maimonides in tract. de juramentis; ‘ It is a great good for a man not to ſwear at all: The ancient and lawful doctrine of the ſynagogue.*’

Joſeph. de bello Judaico, l. 2. c. 7.

XXVIII. ‘ The Eſſeni, or Eſſeans,’ ſaith Joſephus, ‘ keep their promiſe, and account every word they ſpeak, of more force than if they had bound it with an Oath; and they ſhun Oaths worſe than Perjury; for they eſteem him condemned for a lyar, who is not believed without calling God to witneſs.’

* If it be a great good, not to ſwear at all; what is it to impoſe an oath ?

Theſe Eſſeans were the moſt religious of the Jewiſh people, though the Phariſees made the greateſt noiſe amongſt the rabble.

Philo de decalogo, p. 583.

XXIX. Philo, that excellent Jew, relates thus much concerning the ſame Eſſeans, ‘ That whatſoever they ſaid, was firmer than an Oath; and that to ſwear, was counted ‘ amongſt them a thing ſuperfluous.

Philo Judæus on Com. 3.

XXX. The ſame Philo himſelf thus taught, in his Treatiſe on the Ten Commandments: Commandment 3. Thou ſhalt not take the Name of God in vain. ‘ Many ‘ ways,’ ſaith he, ‘ do men ſin againſt this commandment; ſo that it is better not to ‘ ſwear at all; but ſo well accuſtom thyſelf to ſpeak truth always, that thy bare Word Page 583.
‘ ſhall have the force and virtue of an Oath. It is become a proverb, That to ſwear ‘ well and holily, is a ſecond virtue; for he that ſweareth, is ſuſpected of lying and perjury. It is,’ ſaith he, ‘ moſt profitable and agreeable to the reaſonable nature, to Page 515.
‘ abſtain altogether from ſwearing. Whatſoever a godly man ſpeaks, let it go for an ‘ Oath.’

The wiſdom and moderation of this worthy perſon, reflect juſt blame upon thoſe that pillage their neighbours, becauſe they conſcientiouſly refuſe an oath: But that men, who pretend to be the diſciples of Jeſus Chriſt, ſhould commit theſe cruelties, aggravates their evils, and doubtleſs their guilt. How can they ever hope to look their Lord with comfort in the face, who ſo ſeverely treat their fellow-ſervants? Certainly Jews and Heathens will one day riſe up in judgment againſt ſuch Chriſtians, for their unnatural carriage towards their brethren; this is not to love Enemies, but injure Friends. Jews and Heathens are become names of reproach; yet, to the rebuke of Chriſtians, as they call themſelves, they not only diſcerned the Riſe and Ground of Oaths, but the Evil of uſing them, even while they were tolerated; and both avoided them, and exhorted others to that integrity which had no need of them.

Theſe teſtimonies, though they are of weight with us, and we hope they will have a due impreſs upon the minds of many of our readers; yet becauſe nothing produced out of Jews and Gentiles may advance our cauſe with ſome, or render it ever the more acceptable, we ſhall next betake ourſelves to the more Chriſtian ages of the world, for approbation of our judgment, who, we are ſure, will kindly entertain us, their liberality being extraordinary to our cauſe; and from whom we ſhall never want votes for “ Swear “ not at all,” while their works are in the world: May our ſuperiors join theirs with them, and we have reaſon to believe, that our deliverance from the yoke of Oaths, will be the happy iſſue of this neceſſary addreſs.

III.

Teſtimonies from CHRISTIANS, both Fathers, Doctors, Confeſſors and Martyrs, in diſlike of All Swearing.

Polycarpus.

XXXI. The firſt teſtimony recorded againſt ſwearing, after the apoſtles times, was that of Polycarpus, who had lived with the apoſtles, and was ſaid to have been diſciple to John, not the leaſt of the apoſtles; for at his death, when the governor bid him ‘ Swear, defy Chriſt,’ &c. he ſaid, ‘ Fourſcore and ſix years have I ſerved him, yet hath ‘ he never offended me in any thing.’ The Proconſul ſtill urged and ſaid, ‘ Swear by ‘ the Fortune of Cæſar;’ to whom Polycarpus anſwered, ‘ If thou requireſt this vain-glory, ‘ That I proteſt the Fortune of Cæſar, as thou ſayeſt, feigning thou knoweſt not who I ‘ am, hear freely, I AM A CHRISTIAN:’ This good man began his fourſcore and ſixth Euſeb. Eccl. hiſt. lib. 4 cap. 15. year, about twenty years after James wrote “ Above all things, my brethren, ſwear not:” and ſeveral years before John the apoſtle deceaſed, for he is called his diſciple. See his hiſtory and commendation in Euſebius.

We know it is objected by ſome, that he refuſed to ſwear only becauſe he could not ſwear by that oath; which is a gueſs, and no confutation of what we alledge: But if that had been Polycarpus's reaſon, why did he not rather ſay, ‘ The Law of God forbids ‘ ſwearing by Idols?’ It is certain, the firſt Chriſtians would not ſwear, but thought Polycarpus's anſwer ſecurity enough to them that demanded their Oath: He refuſed all oaths as a Chriſtian; therefore ſaying, he was a Chriſtian, was reaſon ſufficient why he would not take that oath.

Juſtin Martyr, Apol. 2. pro Chriſtianis, ad Anton. Pium, oper. p. 63.

XXXII. It was ſome time before his ſuffering, that Juſtin Martyr, who is the firſt we find writing of it, publiſhed an Apology for the Chriſtians in the year 150, as himſelf ſaith; and a ſecond after that, wherein he tells us, after the doctrine of his maſter, ‘ That we ſhould not ſwear at all, but always ſpeak the truth. He, that is Chriſt, hath ‘ thus commanded, “ Swear not at all; but let your Yea be Yea, and your Nay, Nay;

"and what is more than theſe is of evil." See his praiſe and martyrdom in Euſebius, ſoon after Polycarpus.

Euſeb. lib. 5. cap. 16.

Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. lib. 5. c. 1.

XXXIII. 'Under the ſame emperor,' ſays Euſebius, 'ſuffered alſo Ponticus, of fifteen years of age, and Blandina, a virgin, with all kind of bitter torments; the tormentors now and then urging them to ſwear, which they conſtantly refuſed.'

Euſeb. ibid. lib. 6. cap. 4.

XXXIV. And in the next emperor's reign, Baſilides, a ſoldier of authority amongſt the hoſt, being appointed to lead Potamiena to execution, and by her convinced of the Truth in Chriſt, was after a while required to ſwear; but he affirmed, plainly, 'It was not lawful for him to ſwear; for,' ſaid he, 'I am a CHRISTIAN.' He did not lay the unlawfulneſs upon that oath, but upon ſwearing at all. The hiſtory only ſays, His companions would have him ſwear, upon ſome occaſion or other, not mentioning by what: His anſwer was, 'It is unlawful for me to ſwear;' and why? 'becauſe,' ſaith he, 'I am a Chriſtian.' The conſequence is plain, Chriſtians took no oaths; therefore not their oaths.

Tert. Apol. pro Chriſtianis adverſ. Gent. cap. 32.

Tertullian was a lawyer, ſon to a Centurion of proconſular dignity. See his life.

XXXV. In the ſame emperor's reign lived Tertullian, a ſtrict and learned man, who wrote a very notable Apology for the Chriſtians, wherein he anſwers the objections of the Heathens, who accuſed them of not being well-wiſhers to the emperor, not Cæſar's friends, in that they refuſed to ſacrifice and ſwear by the Genius, Fortune and Health of the Emperor (we begin with this, becauſe it is urged by ſome againſt us:) Saith he, 'We do ſwear as not by the Genius of the Cæſars, ſo by or for their Safety, which is more auguſt then all Genius's or Petty Gods: For we reverently look up unto the Judgment of God in the Emperors, who hath ſet them over the nations; and we know that to be in them which God wills; and what God wills, that we will to be ſafe (that God ſave it) hoc ſalvum eſſe volumus, et pro magno id juramento habemus; i. e. And that we account for a great Oath, or that we have inſtead of a great Oath; namely, our Well-wiſhing to Cæſar:' The thing that was deſired, the ſubſtance of the oath; that oath which the Pythagoreans ſaid was in all reaſonable creatures, viz. 'a full reſolution of mind not to tranſgreſs the law of God,' which Tertullian ſaith here they had reſpect to; 'That oath which a juſt man ſweareth by his deeds,' as Clemens Alexandrinus ſpeaketh. In like manner Tertullian ſays to Scapula, 'We do ſacrifice for the health of the emperor; but that way that God pleaſes, by pure Prayer: 'So,' ſays he, 'here we do ſwear by the health of the emperor, by willing his health; and I do work for the health of the emperor; for I commend him to God.*' Otherwiſe, if we take the words of this doctor ſtrictly and properly, who in the writing is difficult, as Scultetus notes; and obſcure, as Lactantius ſays; we ſhall both croſs the ſcope of the place, and accuſe him, and the primitive Chriſtians and Martyrs of his time, not only of Swearing, but Sacrificing for the Health of the Emperor; neither of which do we ever read they did, nor ſo much as offered to do; had they, doubtleſs we ſhould have heard of ſome releaſe or favour ſhown them on that condeſcenſion: Beſides, we ſhall alſo make him to contradict himſelf (which Scultetus accuſes him not of, in this) for in his book de idololatriâ, he ſpeaks without any obſcurity; ſaying, 'I ſpeak not of Perjury, ſeeing it is not lawful to ſwear.' And in chap. 23. he proves, 'That he which ſigns a Bill of Security containing and confirmed by an Oath, is guilty of Swearing, as if he had ſpoken it, and tranſgreſſes Chriſt's command, who hath preſcribed not to ſwear.' He is before ſpeaking of the idolatry Chriſtians are obnoxious to in regard of employments as ſchool-maſters, by reaſon of Heatheniſh Books and Cuſtoms; and Merchants or Traffickers, of Covetouſneſs and Lying; 'Not to ſpeak of Forſwearing,' ſaith he, 'ſeeing it is NOT LAWFUL ſo much as TO SWEAR; which if any ſhould do, he ſhould ſurely be the ſervant of Covetouſneſs, in undertaking an unlawful practice for gain,' as he ſays Lying was: 'But if he ſhould alſo forſwear, ſo adding Swearing to Lying, that then he ſhould be a Servant of Servants to Covetouſneſs, which is Idolatry.' Which if Chriſtians had committed indeed, it is unlikely that Tertullian would have made ſuch a ſlight and ſhort preterition with a ſentence of eight words. And farther obſerve, that both Tertullian and the Martyrs make uſe of the moſt univerſal proof, to make their teſtimony for God full and complete. And though their enemies trial of them were ſhort of proving them Chriſtians, and diſtinguiſhing them from Jews; yet, in the wiſdom of God, their anſwer and argument being general and Chriſtian, including the ſpecial and Jewiſh, proves them not only true Jews, who were forbidden by God to forſwear, or to ſwear by idols; but true Chriſtians, 'not to ſwear, becauſe it was unlawful; for Chriſt had forbidden it.' And as his argument, in the Apology aforeſaid, was, 'It is unlawful to ſwear, much more to forſwear;' ſo here, 'Chriſt,' ſaith he, 'hath preſcribed not to ſwear;' then ſure not to ſwear and ſubſcribe Gentile oaths. So Baſilides, 'Becauſe I am a Chriſtian, it is not lawful for me to ſwear;' then not your oath: This is the juſt ſenſe and conſequence of it. And ſaid Polycarp, 'I would have thee to know, that I am a Chriſtian; and the doctrine thereof, if thou wilt appoint a time, I ſhall teach thee, (that is, not to ſwear); 'therefore Rigaltius adds, I will ſpeak plainly, that the emperor is Lord, but after the common manner.

Tertul. ad Scap. c. 1, 2. Apol. c. 33.

* I do offer ſacrifice by prayer, c. 30.

Tertul. de Idololatria. cap. 11.

therefore it is in vain for thee to bid me ſwear, and defy Chriſt.’ So Blandina and Ponticus were urged to ſwear (by what, it is not ſaid, and it matters not) but in vain; for they were Chriſtians. We do not read that any uſed the Jewiſh argument, the Old Commandment, “ Thou ſhalt not ſwear by Idols;” but the Chriſtian argument, the New Commandment, “ It is not lawful to ſwear; Chriſt forbad it; I am a Chriſtian,” &c.

And to this purpoſe ſpeaks Le Prieur on this place of Tertullian, in his Annotations (which the Publiſhers deſired becauſe of his obſcurity; ſee their Preface) ‘ Although,’ ſays he, ‘ the Chriſtians did believe that * All Swearing was forbidden them, they before all oaths were wary of ſwearing by the Genius or Fortune of the Prince.’ Here he confeſſes they were wary of All Swearing, much more that which was never lawful, to wit, ſwearing by Idols. And thereupon he brings the example of Polycarpus: But if All oaths, then of ſwearing by the Health of the emperor; for that was an Oath. And this African writer's intricate ſenſe (as the publiſher's terms are) muſt needs be in this, as in the other, all along myſtical: And as he ſays a little before, ‘ I offer a Sacrifice (oratione) by Prayer;’ ſo going along he ſays, ‘ We Swear, juramus, (i. e. jure oramus; for ſo Bruno and Caſſiodorus derive the word, jurare dictum eſt, quaſi juſtè orare; hoc eſt, juſtè loqui.

* It is confeſt by Le Prieur, that the Chriſtians did deny all ſwearing.

Bruno and Caſſiodorus on Pſalm xiv. and Pſalm lxi. This Caſſiodorus was a Roman ſenator and counſellor of Theodoricus, about the year 490.

Again, Pſal. lxi. ‘ They ſwear in God, or to God, who promiſe an inviolable obedience of mind to him. ‘ Jurare to ſwear (ſaith he) ‘ is jure orare, to ſpeak equity, that he will not decline to another party, from what he hath promiſed.’ Again, ‘ Here ſwearing is firmly in mind to reſolve to fulfil the good purpoſe.’ And that this muſt be Tertullian's ſenſe, not only the ſcope (for which ſee Scultetus on the place) but his explanation of it, by ‘ willing what God wills, and that to be to them for a great oath;’ plainly declares to ſagacious readers; and ſuch Tertullian's African ſpeech requires, as Rigaltius ſays of his writings, which have been * altered by them that could not comprehend them. But is it likely that a man ſo ſevere, who condemned the very ſubſcribing of a Writing wherein an Oath was contained, and for this reaſon, ‘ becauſe Chriſt forbad to ſwear at all;’ and thought it needleſs to ſpeak of Perjury, ‘ becauſe it was not lawful to ſwear;’ ſhould yet allow it in himſelf and others to ſwear even by that which was not God? Beſides, Suarez reckons him amongſt thoſe fathers who were more eſpecially againſt ſwearing.

* There are about 2000 corrections in Tertullian's works.

Suarez, de Juram. c. 2.

Thus are the conſpirators againſt this part of the doctrine of Chriſt, and his apoſtles, primitive Fathers and Martyrs, forced out of that ſanctuary they betook themſelves to, in the ſentence of this intricate doctor.

Clem. Alex. Strom. l. 7.

XXXVI. Clemens Alexandrinus, his cotemporary, famous for learning and ſtrict living, to help him in his myſtical meaning of an Oath, ſays, ‘ He who is once a Believer, why ſhall he make himſelf an * Unbeliever, as that he hath alſo need to Swear, and doth not ſo lead his Life, that the ſame (to wit, his Life) be a firm and definite Oath, and ſhew the Faithfulneſs of Confeſſion in a conſtant and ſtable Speech.---Far be it, that he who is approved and diſcerned in ſuch piety, ſhould be propenſe to Lye or to Swear.----He who liveth juſtly, tranſgreſſing in nothing of theſe things that ſhould be done, the ſame ſweareth truly and holily by his Deeds and Works (mark how this agrees with Tertullian's Improper Swearing) the teſtimony of the tongue is ſuperfluous to him.----It ſufficeth to add unto his affirming or denying, this, viz. I SPEAK TRULY, that he beget faith in them who perceive not the ſtability of his anſwer: For it behoveth him, as I judge (ſaith he) to have a life worthy of credit (or faith) among thoſe that are without, that an Oath be not ſought from him.---Neither doth he Swear, as being one who hath determined to put for his Affirming YEA, for his Denying NAY.

* Infidelity keeps company with ſwearing: And for a Chriſtian to ſwear, is with Clem. Alex. to turn Infidel again.

‘ Where is there any need of an Oath to him that ſo lives, as one that is attained to the Height of Truth? He therefore that doth not Swear, is far from Forſwearing: He that tranſgreſſeth in nothing that is covenanted and agreed, HE MAY NEVER SWEAR.

‘ Seeing he is fully perſuaded that God is every-where, and is aſhamed not to ſpeak truth, and profeſſeth that it is a thing unbeſeeming, and unworthy for him to ſpeak falſe; he is content with this, that God and his own conſcience know it, and therefore he doth not lye, nor do any thing beſides or againſt what is covenanted and agreed: By that means he neither ſweareth, if he be aſked; nor denies, ſo as to ſpeak falſe, tho' he die upon the rack for it.’

Likewiſe in his 5th, 7th and 8th books of Strom. alſo in his 3d book of his Pædagogue with Gentianus Hervetus's notes on it, ‘ Where he forbids to ſet two prices, and commands but one ſingle one, and to ſpeak truth without an Oath,’ &c.

Origen. in Matth. Tract. 25.

XXXVII. Origen, his ſucceſſor, a man of equal fame for learning and piety, ſucceeds him alſo in this teſtimony concerning ſwearing: ‘ Becauſe,’ ſaith he, ‘ the Jews have a cuſtom to ſwear by Heaven; to the foregoing (prohibition) Chriſt added this alſo to reprove them, becauſe they more eaſily ſwore by Heaven than by God; becauſe he deals

* He makes two prohibitions, as we do: 1. Swear not by God; 2. by no creatures. Ibid. Tract. 3.

‘ alike unreaſonably, who ſweareth by HEAVEN, as he that ſwears by the TEMPLE, or ‘ by the ALTAR, in that he who ſweareth by Heaven, ſeemeth to ſwear by Him that ‘ ſitteth in that Throne; and doth not eſcape danger, as he thinks, becauſe he ſweareth not by God himſelf, but by the Throne of God. And theſe things he ſpeaks to ‘ the Jews, forbidding them to give heed to the traditions of the Phariſees; * otherwiſe, before, he manifeſtly forbad to ſwear AT ALL.’

Mat. xxvi. Numb. v. 19. 1 Kings xxii. 16.

‘ The chief prieſt ſaid unto him, “ I adjure thee by the Living God, that thou tell “ us if thou be the Chriſt the Son of God.”

‘ In the Law we find the uſe of Adjuring; “ The prieſt ſhall adjure the woman with “ the adjurations of this curſe.”

‘ Alſo Ahab ſaid unto Micaiah, “ I adjure thee that thou tell me the truth in the Name “ of the Lord.” The king adjured the prophet, not by command of the Law, but by ‘ his own Will. And now the prieſt adjures Jeſus by the Living God. But I account, ‘ that a man that will live according to the Goſpel, muſt not adjure another: For it is ‘ even like that which the Lord himſelf forbids in the goſpel, “ But I ſay unto you, Swear “ not at all.” For if it be not lawful to ſwear, as to the goſpel command of Chriſt, it ‘ is alſo true, that it is not lawful to adjure another, or compel him to ſwear.’

Orig. againſt all ſwearing with us; and compelling.

Huetius, upon him, addeth, that Athanaſius, Chryſoſtom, Epiphanius, Hilary, and many more, were of the ſame mind with him: And if ſo, we may without offence add, upon that reſpect our ſuperiors ſeem to carry to their names, that it muſt needs be very remote from the doctrine of the ancient church, to fine, impriſon, and bitterly treat thoſe who for conſcience of that goſpel-command, do ſcruple an Oath in this age.

Orig. on Jer. iv. 1, 2.

“ If thou wilt return, O Iſrael, ſaith the Lord, and put away thy abominations, then “ ſhalt thou not remove. And thou ſhalt ſwear the Lord liveth in truth, and judgment, and righteouſneſs.” Origen here tells us, ‘ That this is a reproof of them ‘ that did not ſwear in judgment, but without judgment: Howbeit, we know,’ ſaith he, ‘ that the Lord ſaid unto his diſciples, “ But I ſay unto you, Swear not at all.” Perhaps ‘ formerly it behoved them to ſwear in truth, judgment and righteouſneſs; that after any ‘ had given proof of his integrity, he might be thought worthy of being believed without any Oath at all. But once having YEA, he needs no witneſs that it is YEA; and ‘ having NAY, he needs no other evidence to prove that it is NAY.’

Thus doth Origen prefer and extol evangelical verity, wrapt up in ſolemn Yea or Nay, above the ſwearing that was in truth, judgment and righteouſneſs under the diſpenſation of the Law.

Socrates Scholaſt. lib. 4. cap. 22. of his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory.

XXXVIII. Gregory Thaumaturgus, ſo called from his working of miracles, on Eccleſ. lib. 46. cap. 8. ſaith, ‘ It is meet to give a diligent heed to the words of the king, and ‘ to flee an Oath by all means, eſpecially that which is taken in the name of God.’ See his great praiſe, his works and miracles.

Cyprian lib. 3. Teſtim. ad Quirin.

XXXIX. Cyprian, a famous father, and faithful martyr (who lived about the middle of the age, in the beginning of which Origen flouriſhed) in his third book of Teſtimonies to Quirinus ſaith, ‘ Who hath deſired me to draw out of the holy ſcriptures certain ‘ heads, belonging to the religious diſcipline of our ſect (for ſo he called his own, the ‘ Chriſtian religion).’ His 12th head amongſt them is, Not to Swear.

Cypr. Epiſt. ad Corn. n. 5.

Again, writing of paſtors and teachers, he biddeth them ‘ remember what the Lord ‘ taught, and ſaid, “ Let your ſayings be Yea, Yea, and Nay, Nay.”

Cyprian de Mortal.

In another place he ſaith, ‘ It is unlawful for any man to compel another to take an ‘ Oath.’

Hitherto the Chriſtians, being under moſt cruel ſufferings, generally kept faithfully to the command of Chriſt in this point; and we find very little in their writings about it, beſides a ſimple and bare aſſerting of it, as the doctrine of Chriſt, “ not to ſwear at all,” as well as it was of Moſes, “ not to ſwear falſly or vainly,” for more was no way needful, in that it was not conteſted, but univerſally ſo received. But after that Chriſtian emperors had engaged themſelves in parties, then, it ſeems, many out of flattery, and to engage them to their ſect, took liberty to ſwear, even by the Health of the Emperor, as is objected againſt us by ſome, out of Euſebius: But ſuch he did not account religious; neither that a religious part ſo to do, much leſs an Auguſt Act; and leaſt of all, a Moſt Auguſt Act of Divine Worſhip, as ſome would have it; ſeeing Stobæus obſerves from him, ‘ that whereas many exhorted that they be honeſt and faithful in an Oath, he, for ‘ his part, eſteemed it not the part of a religious man, not to avoid even Swearing itſelf.’

Euſeb. apud. Stob. de Jurejur. c. 27.

And we believe it will be an hard matter to find any in the Greek Church, eſpecially for the firſt three hundred years, that would allow ſwearing ſo large a place in ſacred things; yea, or in latter ages either, even in the Latin Church; nay, of thoſe who have allowed it in ſome caſes, many, or moſt of them, have denied it any place at all in the worſhip of God, as of itſelf; accounting it an Abatement, rather than an Advancement to Chriſtianity; which no part of the true worſhip of God can be. But ſome, perhaps, taking Tertullian's Word auguſtior, or more auguſt, (which, he ſays, the Safety of the Emperor is, in compariſon of all the Genius's) to be the higheſt act of God's worſhip, they would have us ſwear by that, after the example of thoſe mentioned in ſome Chriſtian Emperors times. Tertullian's ſenſe we ſhall eaſily grant; for it is ſo, and we do ſo, in that we commend our prince and governors to God, to God only, with earneſt and ſincere deſires for his and their ſafety; above all ſuch genius's as Tertullian calls Dæmonia. But we juſtly deny, upon the ſcore of what we have made appear to the contrary, even from Tertullian himſelf and others, that he, or the Chriſtians in his time, or for two hundred years before, or an hundred years after, did ſwear, as ſome would have it; ‘leaſt of all, as a moſt auguſt act of the worſhip of God, without which all others are unacceptable;” or that thoſe who did ſwear afterwards, were the moſt religious; ſeeing Euſebius eſteems otherwiſe, and not he only, but alſo thoſe very devout men that we have already produced, beſides many which might and may be mentioned: For all that we have yet met with, in thoſe times, that ſpeak of it, ſpeak againſt it; and of the following times, men of greateſt renown and authority laboured with all earneſtneſs to expel oaths the ſociety of Chriſtians, and cure them of that diſtemper, by inculcating the doctrine of Integrity, that needs no oath; proving by holy ſcripture, that it was the plain and abſolute law of Chriſt, that “Chriſtians ought not to ſwear at all;” and, by other arguments, that the original of oaths was neither from God, nor good men; but they crept into uſe through the corruption of times, and mere careleſsneſs of governments; for when they could not truſt one another, they called their gods to witneſs; but God, ſeparating Abraham and his poſterity from among them, to himſelf, the better to draw them from Idols, commanded them to ſwear by Him only: As much as if he would have ſaid; ‘If you will ſwear, let it be by my Name, rather than the Idols, that ſo you may, though it be after a mean manner, acknowledge a real Deity, the only Lord of all.’ But how long was this condeſcenſion to laſt? Only till the Fulneſs of Time came; which, with other permiſſions, removed all Swearing; Chriſt bringing men to the Truth in the inward parts, as in the Beginning, before Swearing was in being; “for from the beginning it was not ſo.”

But to ſhew what other Fathers reaſons and teſtimonies againſt this Heatheniſh and Jewiſh Uſage, indeed Bondage, were at the coming in of the apoſtacy, we ſhall begin with Athanaſius, a man that was in great renown in the days of Conſtantine the Great, and whoſe Creed is the Faith and Teſt of Chriſtendom at this day.

Athanaſius on the Paſſion of Chriſt.

XL. ‘The evangelical ſentence of the Lord is, “Let your Yea be Yea, and your Nay, Nay.” Thus far we, who are in Chriſt, may confirm our words with Aſſeverations; and with no farther progreſs let us flee to or approach Oaths, that we alledge not God for witneſs, for corruptible money's ſake; eſpecially ſince Moſes ſets down the Law, “Thou ſhalt not take the Name of the Lord thy God in a vain thing.” For if any is plainly worthy to name God, he is alſo worthy of belief: For, whoſoever is meet for greater things, he will be much more fit for leſs: On the contrary, if he be not worthy Belief, that he may be credited without an Oath, ſurely he is not one that is worthy to name God. If he be not faithful in Word, how will God by any means be the witneſs of an Oath for him, who is deſtitute of Faith, to which God hath reſpect?” Again, “The Lord is nigh to all, that call upon him in truth,” in which alone the Lord can be called upon. Wherefore, why do they ſwear by God, who are not truſted even in ſmall matters? Otherwiſe an oath is a teſtimony of truth, and not a judge of buſineſſes; ſuch men do ſwear, not that they may ſignify buſineſſes, but that they may confirm the truth, and that theſe may ſhew, that thoſe things which they produce, are without lying. If, therefore, he that ſwears hath both Faith and Truth, what uſe is there of an Oath? But if he hath no faith nor truth, why do we undertake ſuch an impiety, that for poor ſilly men, and thoſe mortal too, we call to witneſs God, that is above men? For if it be a baſe part, to call to witneſs an earthly king to the loweſt judicatures, as one that is greater than both actors and judges, why do we cite Him, that is uncreated, to created things, and make God to be deſpiſed of men? Fie! that exceeds all iniquity and audaciouſneſs. What then is to be done? No more but that our Yea be Yea, and our Nay be Nay, and in ſhort that we do not lye. But if we ſhall ſeem to ſpeak truth, and imitate the true God, ſome, perchance may thus contradict;

Athanaſ. his abhorrence and deriſion of oaths.

Athanaſius his reaſon and diſlike of oaths.

Object. ‘If an Oath be forbidden to men, and a man imitates God in not ſwearing, how is it that God is related in the Holy Scripture to ſwear? For he ſwore to Abraham, as Moſes witneſſeth: And it is written in the Pſalms, “The Lord ſwore, and will not repent,” &c. For theſe things ſeem to be repugnant to the former, and that thereby there is permitted to men a liberty of ſwearing.’

Anſwer. ‘But this is not ſo, nor can any think ſo: For God ſweareth by none; for how can he, ſeeing he is Lord and Maker of all things? But, if any thing, this muſt be ſaid, that his WORD is an Oath, inducing the hearers, by a ſure Faithfulneſs, that what he promiſeth and ſpeaketh, ſhall certainly be effected; ſith God ſweareth not as Man;

1675.

Athanaſius will not have it that God ever ſwore, properly and ſtrictly taken; only in a way of ſpeaking, having the truth, and immutability of the trueſt and greateſt oath.

but his Word to us is as an Oath for Verity. And ſpeaking to men, he is ſaid to ſwear: And this alſo the ſaints do utter after the manner of men; that as they themſelves ſpeaking would have credit to be given them, ſo likewiſe they themſelves ſhould give credit to God: For, as a man's word confirmeth an oath, ſo alſo thoſe things that God ſpeaketh, becauſe of the firmneſs and immutability of his will, are to be reputed Oaths. The ſame alſo, that is there written, confirmeth my ſaying, "for the Lord hath ſworn, and will not repent;" as a thing not to be retracted by repenting, but certainly to be effected, according to the Engagement of an Oath. This alſo God doth declare in Geneſis, ſaying; "I have ſworn by myſelf:" But that is not an Oath; for he ſwore not by another, which is proper for an Oath, but by Himſelf, which contains not the eſtimation of an oath: But this is done that the Sureneſs of his promiſe may appear, and how confidently that ought to be believed, which is ſpoken, that ſweet Pſalmiſt will witneſs for me in his Pſalm, calling God to mind, when he ſaith, "Where are thy ancient mercies, O Lord, which thou ſwareſt to David thy ſervant, in (or by) thy Truth?" For God ſweareth not by his Truth: But becauſe He, who is true ſpeaketh in his Word, that, to Men, is for an Oath unto Belief. So God doth not ſwear after the Mannner of Men; neither muſt we be induced thereby to take Oaths: But let us ſo ſay, and ſo do, and ſo approve ourſelves in ſaying and doing, that we need not an Oath for the hearer, and that our Words, of themſelves, may have the teſtimony of truth: For by that way we ſhall plainly imitate God.'

Hilary, on Mat. v. 34.

XLI. Hilary, a Father, very famous in the days of Conſtantius, ſon to Conſtantine (but an Arrian; and, which was worſe, a Perſecutor, ſo that this Hilary was baniſhed) in his commentary on thoſe words in Matthew, "Ye have heard that it was ſaid to them of old, Thou ſhalt not forſwear thyſelf," &c. thus expreſſeth himſelf, 'The Law ſet a penalty for perjury, that the conſcience of religion, or fear of an oath, might reſtrain the deceitfulneſs of minds; for the rude and inſolent people made frequent mention of their God by a familiar courſe of ſwearing: But faith doth remove the cuſtom of an oath, making the buſineſſes of our life to be determined in truth, and laying aſide the affecting to deceive; preſcribing the ſimplicity of ſpeaking and hearing, that what was, was; what was not, was not; that the buſineſs of deceiving might be apparent between it is, and it is not; and what is more, is all of evil: For what is, it is its property always that ſo it is; and what is not, it is its nature that it is not: Therefore to them that live in the ſimplicity of the faith, there is no need of the religion (or ſuperſtition) of an oath; with whom always what is, is; what is not, is not: And by theſe both all their words and deeds are in truth.' "Neither by heaven." God not only ſuffers us not to make Oaths to God, becauſe all the truth of God is to be held in the ſimplicity of word and deed; but alſo condemneth the ſuperſtition of old diſobedience,' &c.

Suarez, de Juram. l. 1. c. 1. 2.

This, if that Clemens, ſhould have been firſt, becauſe he lived in Paul's time, but we were not willing to begin our teſtimonies with a ſuſpicion; howbeit it is an ancient writing. l. 6. c. 23.

XLII. The next teſtimony we ſhall pitch upon in confirmation of our reaſons, and the ſenſe we take our Maſter's precept in, "ſwear not at all," is afforded us out of the Apoſtolical Inſtitutions aſcribed to Clemens Romanus, reported by Suarez, in his book de juramentis. "Our Maſter,' ſaith Clemens 'hath commanded, that we ſhould not ſwear; no, not by the True God; but that our Word ſhould be more credible than an Oath itſelf.' Which is a plain indication of the apoſtolical doctrine to have been the abſolute prohibition of oaths, in that ſenſe wherein they were only reputed lawful; for if men ought not to ſwear, no, not by the True God, then, conſequently, by no other oath, as his following words not only imply, but expreſs, viz. 'That the Word of a Chriſtian ſhould be more credible than an Oath itſelf.' Again, 'He that in the Law eſtabliſhed to ſwear well, and forbad falſe ſwearing, commanded alſo, not to ſwear at all.'

Orthodoxographia, p. 11.

XLIII. There is a tract called, "The Goſpel of Nicodemus:" We know it is reputed ſpurious, but that makes nothing againſt us; that diſputes the Author, and not the Matter; for though Nicodemus never wrote ſuch a book, certain it is that ſuch a book was written, which is in favour of Chriſtianity, as then received. In the place cited, Pilate is made to ſay, "I adjure you by the Health of Cæſar, that theſe things that you ſay," &c. They anſwered, "We have a law, not to ſwear, becauſe it is a Sin." Whoever wrote it, this benefit cometh to our argument, that the Chriſtians at that time thought an Oath a Sin: For it is not to be doubted, but he that gave that anſwer, knew it to be the doctrine and practice of Chriſtians; for he was therein to repreſent them.

Baſilius Magnus, on Pſalm 14.

Socrat. Eccl. Hiſt. lib. 4. cap. 21.

XLV. Baſil, called the Great, another champion of the like fame, and in the ſame time of Valens, the Perſecuting Arrian Emperor, by whom he ſuffered impriſonment and cruel threatnings (ſee their praiſes in Socrates Scholaſticus) on the 14th Pſalm, with us the 15th, "He that ſweareth, and deceiveth not his neighbour:" So Baſil hath it, and upon it theſe words:

1675.

‘Here he ſeemeth to allow an oath to a perfect man, which in the Goſpel is altogether forbidden; “But I ſay unto you, Swear not at all.”

‘What ſhall we ſay then?’

‘That every-where the Lord, as well in the Old as in the New Law, hath the ſame conſideration of commanding: For, deſiring to anticipate the effects of ſins, and prevent them by diligence, and to extinguiſh iniquity at the firſt beginnings, as the old Law ſaith, “Thou ſhalt not commit Adultery,” the Lord ſaith, “Thou ſhalt not Luſt.” The old Law ſaith, “Thou ſhalt not Kill;” the Lord, ordaining perfection, ſaith, “Thou ſhalt not be Angry.” So alſo in this place, the prophet indeed ſeemeth to aſſent to an Oath; but the Lord, to take away all occaſion of Perjury, and willing to prevent the dangers of ſwearers, takes away ſwearing altogether: For he names an Oath, in many places, the immutable and firm Conſtancy of any Thing or Purpoſe. “I have ſworn, and have ſtedfaſtly purpoſed, to keep the judgments of thy righteouſneſs:” Alſo, “The Lord hath ſworn, and will not repent.” Not that David brought the Lord for a witneſs of his ſayings, and to get belief to his doubting; but that he confirmed the grace of his profeſſion by an immutable and firm decree: So alſo he could have ſaid here, that is, “He that ſweareth, and deceiveth not his neighbour,” that it may agree with the ſaying of our Saviour, “Let your Word be Yea, Yea; Nay, Nay.” To things that are, thou mayeſt affirm and aſſent; but of things that are not, altho' all men urge thee, yet thou mayeſt never be drawn by any means to affirm againſt the nature of the Truth. Is the thing not done? let there be a Denial: Is it done? let it be affirmed by Word. And he that ſhall not aſſent to him ſo affirming, * Let him look to it, and feel the harm of his unbelief. It is a baſe and a very fooliſh thing to accuſe one's ſelf, as one unworthy of being believed, and to betake and refer one's ſelf to the ſecurity of an Oath. Now, there are ſome ſpeeches which have the Forms of Oaths, and yet are no Oaths at all, but rather Remedies to perſuade; as Joſeph, to make the Ægyptian familiar with him, ſwore by the Health of Pharaoh (חי מרעה live Pharaoh). And the apoſtle, willing to ſhow his love to the Corinthians, ſaid, “By the glorying of you, which I have in Chriſt Jeſus, our Lord.” For he did not depart from the doctrine of the Goſpel, who, by a thing before all moſt dear unto him, ſimply ſought belief to the truth.’

* Pray mark where Baſil layeth the blame, if a word go not for an oath.

Joſeph ſwore not.

Paul ſwore not.

Baſil refuſed to ſwear at the Council of Chalcedon. Speaking of Clineas, a Pythagorean, who might have avoided a mulct of * three talents, if he would have ſworn, which he rather ſuffered, ſaith, ‘In keeping theſe things, he ſeems to have heard that command concerning an Oath, that is forbidden Us.’ And he upbraided the Chriſtians of his time with it that would ſwear.

Ad Nepotes.

* above 300 l.

This Baſil the Great, in his 29th Canon to Amphilochius, writes thus: ‘Becauſe an Oath is altogether forbidden, ſuch an one as is taken to an evil purpoſe is much more to be condemned.----Again, ‘If an Oath, ſimply as ſuch, be prohibited, of greater reaſon when it is to effect ſome miſchievous end.----The cure conſiſteth in a twofold admonition; 1. Not to ſwear. 2. To ſuppreſs the Form of Oaths.’

Baſil. Mag. can. 29.

Baſil's expedient to remove oaths.

Blaſtaris Syntagma, Tit. E. c. 32.

XLV. There was an ancient law made to this effect, ‘It is forbidden to all, from the biſhop and clergy-men to the readers, to take any oath at all.’

Blaſtaris alſo brings in this objection, ‘But ſince thoſe are puniſhed who ſwear falſely, and thoſe are paſſed by who ſwear well, ſome may ſay, Therefore it is permitted to ſwear.’ To which he anſwers, ‘But where ſhall we diſpoſe, or how ſhall we diſpenſe with, the evangelical precept in the Goſpel, that forbids taking any oath at all?’ Adding, ‘But I believe that the Goſpel endeavoured to root out that Wicked Stem (as I may ſay) which is in ſinful men, and for that cauſe prohibited an oath, which is as the door or inlet to Perjury.’

The reaſon of prohibiting Oaths.

Gregor. Nyſſenus, on Cant. Orat. 13.

XLVI. Gregory Nyſſenus, brother to Baſil, ſpoken of by Socrates Scholaſticus in the ſame place, and in lib. v. cap. 9. his works are famous. In his Explanation on the Canticles, he beſtows this teſtimony upon us: ‘He, who by Moſes eſtabliſhed the beginnings of the Law, by himſelf fulfilled all the law and the prophets, as he ſaith in the evangeliſts: “I came not to deſtroy the Law, but fulfil it;” who taking away Anger, aboliſheth Killing alſo; and together with Luſt, took away Adultery. He alſo caſts out of mens lives accurſed Perjuries, whilſt, by the prohibition of an Oath, he has put in his Sith as it were to Security. For it cannot be, that any ſhould break an oath, when there is no oath: Therefore, ſaith he, “You have heard that it was ſaid to them of old time, Thou ſhalt not forſwear, but ſhalt render to the Lord thy oaths; but I ſay unto you, Swear not at all, neither by heaven, &c, but let your Yea be Yea, and your Nay, Nay; for whatſoever is more is of the devil.” Thus do they moſtly end; which ſhows how they underſtood Chriſt's words.

——Greg. Nazianz. in his Dialogue againſt Swearing, Jamb. 20.

XLVII. Gregory Nazianzen, a great man in the church, alſo ſpeaketh to the ſame purpoſe, in his Dialogue againſt Swearing, ſaying,

B. What Oath doſt thou leave to us?

A. I wiſh I might leave none, and that there were never any more. But thou ſayeſt, We have heard that God himſelf ſometimes ſwore: The holy ſcriptures record that: But is there any thing better than God? Surely nothing is found better than he: If therefore nothing be better than he, it ſhould follow that he never ſwears.

God ſwears not.

B. Why therefore do they record that he ſwore?

A. When God ſaith any thing, that is the Oath of God.

B. And how doth he ſwear by himſelf?

A. How! he ſhould not at all be God, if he ſhould lye.

B. Thou ſpeakeſt ſtrangely.

A. No wonder; that is the nature of God peculiarly, that he cannot lye: There is none that can deny this.

B. But what wilt thou ſay to me of the Old Covenant? Surely, it doth not prohibit an oath, but requires a true one?

A. No wonder: At that time only it was preſcribed in the Law concerning Murder; but now it is not lawful for any cauſe, ſo much as to ſmite or beat: Then the End of an evil deed only came into judgment; but now that alſo which moveth to the end. This is my judgment: For now we have made a long progreſs; wherefore a wiſe man will abſtain from oaths.

B. What then? Doſt thou give to ſome, as infants, a kind of firſt food, that they may at length receive a ſucceeding kind of meat?

A. Thou judgeſt right and wiſely.

B. But Paul alſo ſwore, as they ſay?

Paul did not ſwear.

A. Who ſaid ſo? O what a vain jangler was he that ſaid it! Quoth he, "God is my "witneſs," and "God knoweth:" Thoſe words are not an Oath, but a certain Aſſeveration in ſuch great things, conſtant and inviolable.

B. Wilt thou allow the ſame alſo to me?

A. I wiſh that to thy power thou wouldeſt plainly become a Paul, and ſo thou wouldeſt have a right rule of thine actions.

B. What if I uſe an Oath unwillingly, but to free me from danger?

See Tertullian before, to whom this agrees.

A. Let another allow thee that.

B. What if an oath be written, and not pronounced with the voice?

A. And what is the meaning of a writing? Surely, amongſt all other obligations, a writing doth more bind and oblige us.

B. What if we be drawn by neceſſity to give an oath?

A. Why didſt thou not rather die? For ſurely, thou ſhouldeſt rather die than do that.

* B. What if the books of the holy ſcripture be not uſed?

A. What! is religion placed in a * Leaf? Is God abſent by this means? It is evident, that thou feareſt (Paper or) Parchment, and I fear God more: This is a frequent diſeaſe to many, and uſual; neither is it otherwiſe than as if a man beat the Maſter, and diſgrace him, and make his Servant a Free Man, and do him honour, (what a notable reproach that ſhould be?) or as if a man ſhould preſerve the king's Image, and in the mean time deſtroy the King.

B. It is even as thou ſayeſt: But I would have thee ſay, what is more to be ſhewn.

A. Many uſe to ſay, 'I ſwore with my Tongue, but my Mind is free from ſwearing.' Any thing may be more cunningly excuſed than an Oath: Let him not ſuffer any Colour to be made for himſelf; for this is an Oath: And much miſchief comes from deceit itſelf? Let us ſee what an Oath is: Nothing elſe but the very meaning (or mind) of thoſe things which we ſet down.----Thou wouldeſt have me add what remains: Surely an Oath is nothing elſe but a certain conſummation, as it were, of miſchiefs: O dangerous flame!

Greg. Naz. his account of an oath.

B. But Plato doth ſome ſuch thing: He is religiouſly aware that he ſwore not by any God.

A. Truly I know what thou art about to ſay: There was a certain plane-tree, by which alone he made oath: But he did not ſwear rightly neither by that; for he had an underſtanding in ſomething; but what a juſt and religious oath ſhould be, that he could not underſtand. And what was this, tell me now? A certain ſhadow of an Oath, a declaration without a name; an Oath, no Oath, as the philoſophers ſwore by a ſtrange and unknown God. Laſtly, it is nothing elſe, but to make oath by any thing. Here let our ſpeech be at an end. Thou threateneſt that thou wilt leave me athirſt ſooner than I would.

A. If an oath ſeem a ſmall thing to thee, truly I cannot condemn thee: But if it is in the number of horrible things, I will alſo dare to produce a mighty thing: I do adjure, by a very Oath itſelf, that thou abſtain from, and beware of, Oaths, and thou haſt the victory.

B. I

---

* Mark how Gregory Naz. ſpeaks of the Scripture, in compariſon of God's omnipreſence with the mind and ſenſe, and regard men ought to have of it.

B. I wiſh I had. What fruit gets he that often ſweareth? Laughter. What more? That when he ſpeaks truth, he ſhall not be believed.

In another place he ſaith, that to ſwear by Creatures, is to ſwear with regard to God himſelf: So Chriſt himſelf ſaith, Mat. v. 25. and chap. xxiii. 16. 23.

Greg. Naz. on Cant. Hom. 18.

Cæſarius, Num. 43.

XLVIII. Cæſarius, brother to Gregory Nazianzen, in his Spiritual Sentences, hath this ſentence, ‘ Flee all ſwearing, or every Oath:’ How then ſhall we get belief? As well by ſpeech, as by virtuous actions and carriages, that gain belief to our ſpeech. Perjury is a denying of God: What need of God in this matter? Interpoſe and put in ure thy Actions.

Epiphan. adv. Hereſ. lib. 1. Ord. 19. §. 6.

XLIX. Epiphanius, whom Socrates Scholaſticus, lib. 6. cap. 9. calls a man of great fame and renown, and a virtuous and godly perſon, in his firſt book againſt Hereſies (not accounting denying to ſwear an hereſy, but rather the contrary, as may appear by his words, which are theſe) ‘ In the Law, as well as the Goſpel, it is commanded not to ‘ uſe another name in ſwearing: But in the Goſpel he commandeth not to ſwear, neither ‘ by Heaven nor Earth, nor other Oaths; but let Yea Yea, and Nay Nay, be as an ‘ oath, (as Petavius tranſlates it) for what is more than theſe is of Evil. Therefore I ‘ ſuppoſe that the Lord ordained concerning this, becauſe of ſome mens allegations, ‘ that would ſwear by other names; and firſt, that we muſt not ſwear, no, not by the ‘ Lord himſelf, nor by any other Oath; for it is an evil thing to ſwear at all. Therefore ‘ he is evil that compels not only to ſwear by God, but by other things,’ &c.

Ambroſ. de Virgin. lib. 3.

L. Ambroſe, ſoon after, being a lay-man, or citizen of Milan, was by the people, againſt his will, choſen Biſhop of that city, for his great worth and godlineſs, whoſe writings are of great account; and ſpeaking of the inconveniency occaſioned by an Oath, ſaith, ‘ Wherefore not without cauſe doth the Lord in the goſpel command not to ſwear, ‘ that there may be no cauſe of forſwearing, that there may be no neceſſity of offend‘ ing.’

‘ He that ſweareth not, certainly he never forſweareth; but he that ſweareth, ſome‘ times he muſt needs fall into perjury, becauſe all men are ſubject to lye. Do not ‘ therefore Swear, leſt thou beginneſt to Forſwear.’

Exhortat. ad Virgin.

‘ Therefore the Lord, who came to teach the little ones, to * Inſpire novices, to con‘ firm the * Perfect, ſaith in the goſpel, “ Ye muſt not ſwear at all;” becauſe he ‘ ſpoke to the Weak.’

Ambroſe on Mat. v.

He was for * Inſpiration and perfection.

‘ Laſtly, he ſpoke not only to the Apoſtles, but to the Multitude; for he would not ‘ have thee to Swear, leſt thou ſhouldeſt Forſwear.’

‘ And he added, “ not to ſwear, neither by Heaven, nor by the Earth,” &c. namely, by thoſe things that are not ſubject to thy Power.

“ The Lord ſware and ſhall not repent.” He may ſwear, who cannot repent of his ‘ Oath. And what did the Lord ſwear? “ That Chriſt is a prieſt for ever:” Is that un‘ certain? Is that impoſſible? “ The Lord hath ſworn.” Can it any way be changed?’

Pſalm cix.

‘ Do not therefore uſe the example of an Oath, becauſe thou haſt not power to fulfil ‘ an Oath.’

Alſo, in his Commentary on the Hebrews, he ſaith, ‘ Becauſe mankind is incredu‘ lous, God ſo condeſcendeth to us, that he even ſweareth for us.’

So that he ſhews that not to be an argument for ſwearing to be deſired, ſeeing it is only in condeſcenſion to a Defect; not to be encouraged from it to ſwear, or to require it.

Ambr. Com. on Heb. c. 6.

Oaths founded on defect, not to be encouraged; then not to be impoſed.

Chryſoſt. on Gen. Hom. 15.

LI. Chryſoſtom, in thoſe days very famous in the church, and therefore ſtiled the Golden Doctor, in his 15th Homily on Geneſis, ſaith; ‘ A CHRISTIAN muſt flee Oaths ‘ by all means, hearing the ſentence of Chriſt, which ſaith, “ It was ſaid to them of “ old, You ſhall not forſwear; but I ſay unto you, ſwear not at all.” Let none ſay ‘ therefore, I ſwear in a juſt buſineſs. It is not lawful to ſwear; neither in a juſt, nor ‘ unjuſt thing.’

‘ To ſwear is of the devil; ſeeing Chriſt ſaith, “ for what is more, is Evil,” or of ‘ the evil one.’

Id. Hom. Pſal. v.

‘ Swearing took not its beginning from the Will, but from Negligence only. Thou ‘ haſt heard (ſaith he) the wiſdom of Chriſt, ſaying, That not only to forſwear, but ‘ alſo, in any manner to ſwear, is deviliſh, and all a device of the evil one.’

Ad Pop. Antioch. Hom. 19.

The reaſon of oaths.

‘ If to Swear is found to be deviliſh, how are they to be puniſhed who Forſwear.’

‘ If to ſwear truly be a crime, and a tranſgreſſing of the commandment, where ſhall ‘ we place perjury.’

Againſt the diſpraiſe of ſolitary life, l. 1.

Speaking of a Chriſtian, (ſo called; for he that dare do ſuch things, we cannot call a ſincere Chriſtian) whom he ſaw compelling a certain honeſt, ingenuous, modeſt, and faithful matron, to go into the Jews Synagogue, there to be ſworn about ſome buſineſs in controverſy betwixt them, ſhe deſiring help, and imploring to be freed from this wicked

Of compunction of heart, l. 1.

Againſt the Jews, Hom. 34.

Agreeing with Euſebius before. The Godly zeal of Chryſoſtom commendable. Much leſs to force others. Chryſ. calls ſwearing and compelling to ſwear at all, an error; then we are orthodox. See his great praiſe in Soc. Schol. l. 6. c. 3.

wicked force, &c. ‘ I (ſaith he) kindled with zeal, aroſe; and not ſuffering her to be farther drawn into this prevarication, reſcued her; and enquired of him that had drawn her to it, whether he were a Chriſtian or not? Who confeſſing he was, I ſeverely urged and upbraided him with his folly and extreme madneſs, to go about to draw any body, he profeſſing himſelf to be a worſhipper of Chriſt, to the Jews Dens, who had crucified him. And going on in ſpeaking, I taught him, out of the Holy Goſpel, that it is not lawful to ſwear at all, nor to incite any to ſwear, after that; not one that is a Believer, or initiated; no, nor one that is not initiated; to be drawn to that extremity. After I had ſpoken much, and a long time of it, I delivered his mind from the Error of opinion,’ &c.

Be pleaſed to obſerve how Chryſoſtom, a zealous and famous man, both for his books, and the perſecution that he ſuffered, being Patriarch, or prime overſeer of the church at Conſtantinople, one of the four of the chiefeſt in the world, uſes no diſtinction of private and public oaths, the common talk of our impoſers; for here he labours againſt drawing any to ſwear at all, even in Judicature, becauſe it was not lawful to ſwear ſo at all, no not as the Jews ſwore, much leſs as the Gentiles.

He was of the race of ſenators. Remember Tertullian's caſe by this. Homil. 28. Eclog. de Juram. Hom. 5. ad pop. Antioch.

Again, ‘ Let none ſay to me, What if any lay on me a Neceſſity of ſwearing? And what if he do not believe?’

‘ Certainly where the Law is violated, one muſt not make any mention of neceſſity; for there is one unavoidable neceſſity, not to offend God. Moreover, this I ſay, that in the mean time we may cut off ſuperfluous oaths, thoſe I mean, which are made raſhly, and without any neceſſity, amongſt friends and ſervants: And if thou take away theſe, in the other thou ſhalt need me no more: For that mouth which hath learned to fear and flee an Oath, if any would compel it ten thouſand times, it will never admit of falling into that cuſtom,’ &c.

Chryſoſt. againſt giving an oath. * Chryſoſt. exhorts to be right Quakers, by trembling, and not ſwearing.

‘ But if thou fear nothing elſe, at leaſt fear that Book, which thou takeſt in thy hands, bidding another to Swear; and when thou turneſt it, and markeſt what Chriſt hath there commanded concerning Oaths, * Quake, and Forbear.’

‘ What doth it ſay, then, of Oaths?

‘ Anſwer, “ But I ſay unto you Swear not at all.” Doſt thou make that Law an OATH, which forbids to ſwear? O injurious, O unjuſt thing! for thou doſt as if a man ſhould take for his companion, a Law-giver that forbids to KILL, and command him to be made a Murderer. As therefore, when a fight is begun, although we are often reviled, yet we endure it well, and we ſay to him that doth it, That patron of thine hath hurt me, he holds my hands; and this ſerves us for ſolace. After the ſame manner, if thou wilt exact an Oath of any, reſtrain thyſelf, and withhold; and ſay to him that is about to ſwear, What ſhall I do to thee, ſith God hath commanded neither to ſwear, nor to compel to ſwear; he now withholdeth me? This is enough for the lawgiver's honour, for thy ſecurity, and his fear who ſhould ſwear.’

Againſt compelling to ſwear, and ſhows how to avoid it. He differs much from thoſe that puniſh us for not ſwearing. On Mat. Homil. 17.

‘ Do thus much for me therefore, that they that come hither may ſay, That is not to be ſeen in any city, which is at Antioch; for they that inhabit that city, had rather their tongues ſhould be cut out, than an Oath ſhould proceed out of their mouth,’ &c.

‘ What is it? “ Thou ſhalt render unto the Lord thy oaths:” That is, in ſwearing thou ſhalt ſpeak true: “ But I ſay unto you, Not to ſwear at all:” And then, to put off the hearers, that they ſhould not ſwear by God, he ſaith, “ Neither by Heaven, for it is the Throne of God; nor by the Earth, for it is his Foot-ſtool,” &c. for he ſaid not, Becauſe the Heaven is Fair and Great, nor becauſe the Earth is Vile; but becauſe That is the Throne of God, and This his Foot-ſtool; by all which he drives them to the Fear of God.’

Object.

‘ Obj. What then, if any require an oath, and impoſe a neceſſity of ſwearing?

‘ Anſ. Let the fear of the Lord be more forcible to thee than all Neceſſity or Compulſion: For if thou wilt always object ſuch-like occaſions, thou wilt keep none of thoſe things which are commanded: For thou mighteſt alſo ſay it concerning thy Wife; What if ſhe be a Scold? What if ſhe be Nice and Curious? And of thy Right Eye; What if I have a Delight in it, and be inflamed with the Love of it, &c? and ſo thou wilt trample upon all things that are commanded. But in the laws which men command, thou dareſt alledge no ſuch thing; as, What if this or that, &c.? And if thou wilt keep the law of Chriſt, thou wilt not ſuffer any compulſion to hinder thee from the obſervation thereof; for he that heard the bleſſedneſs that is before, in the ſame ſermon, and ſhews himſelf ſuch an one as Chriſt commandeth, he ſhall ſuffer no ſuch compulſion from any, ſeeing he is venerable and admirable with all men.’

Conſtancy in not ſwearing geteth veneration.

Object.

‘ Obj. What then ſhall we ſay is beyond Yea and Nay?

‘ Anſw. Without doubt an Oath, not Perjury; ſith this is altogether manifeſt, and none needs be taught that it is of Evil; and not ſo much ſuperfluous, as altogether contrary. Now, that is ſuperfluous which is added needleſly, and too much; which ſurely is an Oath.’

Great reaſon

Object.

‘ Obj. Why then ſhall this be ſaid to be of Evil? And if it was of Evil, how was it commanded in the Law?’

‘ Anſw. Thou wilt ſay that alſo concerning thy Wife; how is it now adultery, which was ſometime ſuffered? What then ſhall we ſay to theſe things; but that many of thoſe things which were then ſpoken, the Weakneſs of them that received the Law required: For it is a thing very unmeet for God to be worſhipped with the Smell of Sacrifices, even as it is not congruent for a Philoſopher to ſtutter and babble: Therefore ſuch a Divorce is now called Adultery; and an Oath now comes of Evil, when the Increaſings of Virtues are come to their Perfection. But if theſe things had been the laws of the devil from the beginning, they had never come to ſuch proficiency; for unleſs thoſe things had gone before, thoſe other had never been ſo eaſily received. Do not therefore deſire the virtue of thoſe things, whoſe uſe is now paſt. They were available indeed then, when the time required, yea, if thou pleaſeſt, now alſo; For now their virtue is ſhewn in that ſame thing alſo, wherein we moſt accuſe: for that they now appear ſuch, is their great praiſe: For, unleſs they had nurſed us up well and profitably, and had made us fit for the receiving of greater things, they would not now ſeem to us to be ſuch. For as the nurſes teat, when it hath done all its office, and brought the child to the meaſure of the ſtronger age, ſeems to be unprofitable; and the parents, who formerly judged the teat to be neceſſary for their child, do afterwards purſue it with very many ſcorns, and uſually do not only make it uncomely in words, but alſo beſmear it with certain bitter juices of herbs, that when they cannot bridle the eager unſeaſonable deſire of the child about it, they may quench it at leaſt with thoſe things: So alſo Chriſt ſaid, “ It was of Evil,” not that he might ſhew the old Law to be of the devil, but that he might recall them more vehemently from the old Vileneſs: And theſe things he ſaid unto his Diſciples; but unto the ſtupid Jews, and them that perſiſt in the ſame impiety, as with a certain bitterneſs, he ſo compaſſed their city, they being captivated with fear, as that he made it inacceſſible: And becauſe he could not hereby reſtrain them, but that they again deſired to ſee it, as children running back to the teat, he took it quite away; deſtroying it, and ſcattering them, moſt of them, far away from it; as men uſually ſhut up calves from their dams, that they may gain them to be weaned from their accuſtomed food of milk.’

This is true Chriſtian doctrine.

With Chriſtians it ought to be ſo.

What evil is it then to hale men back again upon penalties?

‘ But if the old Teſtament were of the devil, he would not have forbidden * Images to be worſhipped; but on the contrary, have brought in and commanded ſuch a worſhip as this; for the devil would have ſuch a thing to be done. But now we ſee that the Law did the contrary: And for that cauſe alſo the way of Swearing was in times paſt permitted, † leſt men ſhould worſhip images, and ſwear by them; “ Swear,” ſaith he, “ by the true God.” So the Law brought not a mean good to men, but a very great one, if it ſought to bring them to ſolid meat.’

* A great enemy to images.

‘ Obj. What evil therefore hath Swearing?’

Object.

‘ Anſw. Much evil, without queſtion: But now, at this time, after ſo great Manifeſtations of Power; not then, by any means.’

His reaſon, our reaſon.

‘ Obj. Thou wilt ſay; How can it be, that the ſame is ſometimes good, ſometimes not?’

Object.

‘ Anſw. I will alſo produce againſt thee, How is it that the ſame thing is ſometimes good, ſometimes not good? Doth not all that is in the world proclaim the ſame; as, Educations, Arts, Fruits, and all other things?’

‘ Therefore firſt weigh that in our own nature: For to be carried in one's arms, is a good part in the firſt age; afterwards a very pitiful thing. To uſe chewed meats in the beginning of one's life is good; afterwards very full of indecency and loathſomeneſs: To be fed with milk, and to flee to the nouriſhment of the teats, at the firſt is profitable and wholſome; but afterwards hurtful and noiſome. Thou ſeeſt how the ſame things are ſometimes good, according to the times, and ſometimes appear to be of another nature: For it is a comely thing for a Child to wear a Child's Veſture, but ſhameful for a Man. Wouldeſt thou alſo learn on the contrary, how thoſe things are not fit for a Child, which are for a Man? Give a Man's veſture to a Child, and great laughter will follow thereupon, and greater danger in going, making him to reel this way and that way: Commit unto him the care of civil buſineſſes and affairs, either to traffick, or ſow or reap, and again it will be very ridiculous. But what do I ſpeak of theſe? Even Man-ſlaughter itſelf, which Chriſt calls evidently a work of the devil, ſometimes in due ſeaſon done, hath been praiſed; as Phineas killed a man, and it was reputed to him for righteouſneſs; Abraham alſo was not only an Homicide, but a Parricide, and Peter ſlew two, but it was a ſpiritual work: So we muſt not only conſider the Actions, but the Time, Cauſe, Will and Difference of Perſons, and all other Circumſtances.’

Again, in his Imperfect * Work, cap. 5.

‘ It hath been ſaid, “ Thou ſhalt not forſwear, but ſhalt perform to the Lord thy “ Oaths:

---

† The reaſon why God admitted oaths. No ordinance of God or man originally, but corruption inſenſibly brought it; and God only ſuffered it by a true Deity till the times of reformation.

* Much regarded and obſerved by venerable antiquity, ſaid James on the Fathers, part 2. page 36. Act. Mon. v. 1. p. 701

A great truth; forſwearing ends in no ſwearing.

“Oaths: But I ſay unto you, Swear not all,” &c.] Behold the Fourth Command, which covetous men account the leaſt, becauſe they do not account it a ſin to ſwear; without which, the command of the Law cannot ſtand? For unleſs Swearing itſelf be forbidden, Falſe Oaths cannot be taken away, becauſe out of Swearing ſprings up Forſwearing; for whoſoever ſwears often, at one time or other ſwears falſely: For this reaſon Solomon gives that admonition, “Accuſtom not thy mouth to ſwearing; for there is much danger therein.” For as he that accuſtoms himſelf to talk much, muſt needs at one time or other utter unſeaſonable words; and he that uſeth frequently to ſtrike with his hand, cannot but ſometimes ſtrike unjuſtly; ſo he that accuſtoms himſelf to ſwear in things convenient, oftentimes forſwears himſelf, even againſt his will (cuſtom prevailing in him) in things ſuperfluous: For we can accuſtom ourſelves to any thing when we will; but we cannot turn off that cuſtom when we will. And what the judgment of God is againſt them that ſwear, Solomon teacheth; “A man,” ſaith he, “that ſwears much, a wound ſhall not depart from his houſe.” If then a wound depart not from them that ſwear, how ſhall it at length depart from them that forſwear? Tell me, my friend, what doſt thou get by ſwearing? For if thy adverſary did believe that thou wouldſt ſwear well, he would never force thee to ſwear at all; but becauſe he thinks thou wilt ſwear falſely, therefore it is that he compels thee to ſwear; and when thou haſt ſworn, he doth not ſit down as ſatisfied in the truth of thine oath, but goes away full of revenge, as it were in condemnation of thy perjury.’

Excellently diſtinguiſhed, and the ſordidneſs of oaths fully repreſented. According to Euſebius. The unhappineſs of ſwearing, eſpecially againſt conſcience. His advice about the matter, when drove to a pinch.

‘An Oath never has a good end; for ſome will judge thou haſt ſworn for Covetouſneſs; and ſome too, that thou haſt Forſworn: But they that are willing to ſuppoſe well of thee, although they do not believe thou haſt ſworn Falſely, yet they are not able to affirm thou haſt ſworn in Truth: But no man can maintain thou haſt done Religiouſly. By ſwearing therefore thou comeſt into reproach with thy enemies, and into ſuſpicion with thy friends. But thou wilt ſay perhaps, ‘Obj. What ſhall I do? he neither doth nor will believe me, unleſs I ſwear.

His caution to thoſe that impoſe oaths, and reflection upon the practice.

‘Anſw. Be content rather to loſe thy Money than thy Salvation; ſet more by thy Soul, than by thy Eſtate: If thou ſhouldſt loſe any part of thy eſtate, thou mayſt live notwithſtanding; but if thou loſeſt God, whereon wilt thou live? Doſt thou not know, that what thou parteſt ſelf-denyingly with for the fear of God, thou receiveſt a greater reward for it, than if thou hadſt given alms; becauſe, the more we bear the croſs, the more worthily are we crowned for it? Behold, my friend, I adviſe thee not to force any man to ſwear: If thou thinkeſt he will ſwear well, avoid it; or if thou thinkeſt he will ſwear amiſs, avoid it ſo much the rather: For although he ſwear well, yet thou, as far as relates to thy conſcience, art become the cauſe of his perjury, becauſe thou compelleſt him to take an oath with this intention, not barely that he ſhould ſwear, but that he ſhould forſwear; for if thou hadſt thought he would have ſworn honeſtly, thou wouldeſt not have forced him to ſwear at all. Oh fooliſh man, that compelleſt another to ſwear! thou knoweſt not what thou doſt: He, although he forſwear himſelf, yet does it with advantage; but thou, without any advantage, art found a partaker of his perjury. He that does not ſtick at lying, does not fear ſwearing; for he that tells a lye, goes beyond the Truth in his heart; and he that ſwears falſely, paſſes over God in his Words: What then is the difference between paſſing over God, and going beyond the truth, ſeeing God is Truth itſelf?’

Lying as bad as ſwearing, in his eſteem.

Admirably well urged.

His rebuke to the clergy for tendring the goſpel (or Bible) to ſwear on.

‘This is the only difference, That when we lye, we paſs over the Truth in our Heart; but when we Forſwear, we paſs over God in Words; for, to men we give ſatisfaction by Words; to God, by Conſcience. God himſelf, who forbad Forſwearing, even he afterwards commanded Not to Swear: He therefore that is not afraid to ſet light by the commands of God in Swearing, will not be afraid to do the like in Forſwearing. But what wouldſt thou have? Doth he fear God, or doth he not fear him? If he be one that fears God, he will not lye, though he be not ſworn; but if he be one that does not fear God, he cannot ſpeak truth, though he be ſworn. Hear, ye Clergymen, who bring the Holy Goſpels for men to ſwear upon; How can ye be ſecure from that Oath, who ſow the ſeed of perjury? He that brings the fire by which an houſe is burnt, is he a ſtranger to the burning? Or who reaches a ſword, whereby a man is ſlain, is not he an acceſſory to the ſlaughter? So he that gives the opportunity of forſwearing, is a partaker of the perjury: If it were well done to ſwear, ye ſaid rightly, that we gave them the Goſpel to Swear, not to Forſwear; but now ye know, that it is a ſin even to ſwear well, how can ye be acquitted that give the occaſion of ſinning againſt God? Let the fire ceaſe, and there is no burning; take away the ſword, and the man is not ſlain; ſo take away Swearing, and there is no Forſwearing. Be theſe things ſpoken of them that ſwear by God. But as for them that ſwear by the Elements, their iniquity is more deteſtable; for Heaven and Earth, and the reſt of the Elements God made for his own ſervice; not for men to ſwear by: for, behold, in the Law it is commanded, that they ſhould ſwear by none but God: He therefore that ſwears by Heaven, or by the Earth, or whatſoever it is he ſwears by, makes a God of it; Therefore every one commits Idolatry, who ſwears by any thing beſides God, if it were at all lawful to ſwear, becauſe he does not perform his oaths to the Lord his God, but to the Elements: And ſo he commits a double ſin; firſt, in that he Swears; and ſecondly, in making a God of that by which he ſwears,' &c.

Again, in chap. 23. Homil. 43. on theſe words "Wo unto you, blind guides, who ſay, Whoſoever ſhall ſwear by the Temple, it is nothing; but whoſoever, ſhall ſwear by the Gold of the temple, he is a debtor." Many Chriſtians,' ſaith he, 'now-adays do ſo unwiſely underſtand many things; for lo, if there ſhall be any cauſe, he ſeems to do a ſmall matter who ſwears by God; but he that ſwears by the Goſpel, ſeems to have done ſome greater thing. To whom it may be ſaid, Fools! The Holy Scriptures are for God, not God for the Scriptures; for God is greater, which ſanctifieth the Goſpel, than the Goſpel, which is ſanctified of God.'

Again, Hom. 9. on Acts of the Apoſtles, chap. 3.

'To this conduces not a little, not to ſwear, and not to be angry; for in not being Angry, we ſhall not have an Enemy; and caſt off a man's Oath, and withal thou ſhalt caſt off thoſe things that concern wrath, and ſhalt extinguiſh all anger. For Wrath and an Oath are like the Wind. We ſet forth ſail; but there is no benefit of the ſail, if there be no wind: So if we do not cry out, nor ſwear, we cut the ſinews of wrath. Come, tell me for what cauſe an Oath was introduced, and why it was allowed? Let us tell its Original, and whence it ſprung up again, and how, and by whom; and by our declaration we ſhall gratify your attention: For he that doth juſtly, muſt neceſſarily be alſo ſtudious of Wiſdom; and he that is not yet ſuch, is not worthy to hear a diſcourſe: For Abraham made covenants, and ſacrificed ſacrifices, and offered offerings; and as yet there was not an Oath. Whence then came in an Oath? When evils increaſed, when all things became topſy-turvy, when they inclined to Idolatry; then verily, when they appeared unfaithful, they called God to witneſs, as giving a Surety for Security of their words; for an Oath is a Suretiſhip, where their behaviours have no truſt or credit. Whereupon, firſt, he that ſwears is taxed, if he have no credit without an Oath, and the greateſt ſecurity: And becauſe men ſo little truſt one another, they ſeek GOD for a ſurety, not MAN. Secondly, He is in the ſame crime who receives an oath, if he draw God to be a ſurety for contracts, and ſay, "That he will not truſt except he have him." O monſtrous thing! O ſhameful diſgrace! thou! a worm, duſt and aſhes, and a vapour; dareſt thou ſnatch thy Lord, who art ſuch an one, for a Surety, and compelleſt to accept him? Tell me if a fellow-ſervant ſhould ſay to your children, ſtriving among themſelves, and not truſting one another, "Unleſs the common Maſter become a Surety, there is no truſting;" would not many ſtripes be inflicted, that he might learn that he ſhould make uſe of him as a Lord in other things, not in theſe? What do I ſpeak of a Fellow-ſervant? For if one would have a more venerable Man, would not the caſe have diſgrace in it? "But I ſhall," ſaith he, "therefore neither compel him, becauſe this is alſo amongſt Men." He may ſay thus, "Sometimes thou mayeſt not receive a ſurety to thine." What then? "And I ſhall loſe," ſaith he, "what is given." I would not ſay this; but do not thou endure that God be reproached. Therefore he who compels, hath a more unavoidable puniſhment than he who ſwears. Likewiſe he alſo who ſwears when none requires; this alſo is harder, that one ſwears for an half-penny, for a little commodity, for unrighteouſneſs. And theſe things are ſo dangerous, when there are no perjuries; but if perjuries are committed, then all things are confounded, and both he that ſwears, and he that receives an oath, are the cauſe.'

In the Original of an Oath; he concurs with us.

The definition of an oath.

A ſevere declamation againſt compelling people to ſwear.

Of the danger of compelling people to ſwear.

'Obj. But there are ſome things that are not known, ſay they.'

'Anſw. But foreſeeing theſe things, thou muſt do nothing raſhly; but if thou ſhalt do any thing negligently, take the penalty of the inconvenience in thy own hand: Better to ſuffer Loſs than otherwiſe. For, tell me, thou haleſt a man to an oath; what doſt thou ſeek? Wouldſt thou have him to forſwear? But this is extreme folly; for the loſs will turn upon thy own head: It were better to loſe thy Means, than that He ſhould be loſt: Wherefore thou doſt this to thy own damage, and to God's diſhonour: Such is the ſoul of a beaſt and of a wicked man!'

'Obj. But I expect that he may not Forſwear.'

'Anſw. Therefore believe him without an Oath alſo.'

'Obj. But there are many,' ſay they, 'who without an oath dare defraud, who with an oath do not do it.'

'Anſw. Thou deceiveſt thyſelf, O man! A man who hath learned to ſteal and to wrong a man, will alſo trample upon an Oath often: But if he hath a reverence in ſwearing, much more in doing unjuſtly.'

'Obj. But thou wilt ſay, "He ſuffers this unwillingly."'

'Anſw. Therefore he is worthy of excuſe. But what ſhall I ſay of Oaths of the Courts that are left? For there thou canſt ſay no ſuch thing; for there for Six Pence both 1675.

* An oath is a binding of God for our ſecurity.

A pathetical cenſure of oaths, and them that uſe them in courts.

With what tenderneſs God's name ſhould be uſed.

Chryſoſtom's boldneſs. He teſtifies our mind.

* Men never could plead Conſcience for not being believed without an oath; many have, to be credited without one. This was Chryſoſtom's exhortation. Now it is ſaid, How can we trade without an oath?

‘ Oaths and Perjuries are made: For becauſe a thunder-bolt doth not come down from above, and all things are not overturned, thou ſtandeſt, and wilt * bind God: Why? That thou mayeſt get Herbs and Shoes for a ſmall price, thou calleſt Him to witneſs. Do we therefore think we do not ſin, becauſe they are not puniſhed? This is the Lord's mercy, not our deſert. Swear by thy own Child; ſwear by thyſelf; ſay, “ So let the officer keep from my ſides:” But thou art afraid of thy Sides: Is God more vile, more contemptible, than thy Head? Say, “ So may I not be blind?” But Chriſt ſo ſpareth us, that he forbids us to ſwear even by our own Head. But we do ſo deſpiſe the glory of God, that He is drawn every where. Ye know not what God is, and with what a mouth he ought to be invocated. Moreover, when we ſpeak of any virtuous man, we ſay, “ Waſh thy mouth, that ſo thou mayeſt be heedful.” But now we vainly diſtract that honourable name, which is a Name above every name, which is wonderful in all the earth, which the Devils hearing do tremble at! O moſt contemptible cuſtom which hath done that! Laſtly, If thou ſhalt impoſe upon any a neceſſity of ſwearing in the holy houſe, how horrible an oath doſt thou enjoin, if thou doſt ſo? Ought not one even to dread when God is named? But even among the Jews this Name was ſo reverend, that it was written on the Plate of the Mitre; and none might bear thoſe Letters of the Name of God, but only the High Prieſt: And now alſo we ſo bear his name tenderly. If it was not lawful for all ſimply to name God, how great audaciouſneſs is it to call him to witneſs? Tell me now, how great madneſs is it? Behold, I ſay and teſtify to you, amend thoſe Court Oaths, and ſhew me all thoſe that do not obey. Behold, even in your preſence, I will command them that are ſet apart for the miniſtry, the houſe of prayer, and admoniſh and ſhew, that it is not lawful for any to ſwear. Let him therefore be brought to me, whoſoever he be, becauſe theſe things alſo ought to be done before us, becauſe ye are children. O ſhame! for it is confuſion that ye have need to be inſtructed in ſome things. Dareſt not thou, that art initiated, touch the Holy Table? But, what is yet worſe, thou which art initiated, dareſt thou touch the Holy Table, and that which it is not lawful for all the prieſts to touch, and ſo ſwear? But, being gone out, thou wouldeſt not touch the head of thy Child; but toucheſt thou the Table, and doſt not dread nor fear? Bring ſuch to me, I will inflict a juſt puniſhment; and with joy will ſend both away with this commandment, “ Do as you liſt; * I impoſe this law, Not to ſwear at all. What hope is there of ſalvation, when you ſo contemn and deſpiſe all things?” Haſt thou therefore received letters and badges that thou ſhouldeſt loſe thy Soul? What ſo great thing haſt thou gained, as that which thou haſt loſt? Hath he forſworn? Thou haſt loſt both thyſelf and him. But hath he not forſworn? even thou haſt loſt, who haſt driven him to tranſgreſs the commandment. Let us expel this diſeaſe from the ſoul: Let us drive it now from the Court, and from all Merchants and Tradeſmens ſhops. It was a greater labour to us, do not you think, that worldly things are corrected by the tranſgreſſings of divine laws. But he doth not believe,” ſaith he; for I have alſo heard this of ſome, “ Unleſs I ſwear many oaths they will not believe me:” Thou art the cauſe of theſe things, who ſweareſt ſo promptly and eaſily. But if this were not, but it were manifeſt to all that thou wouldeſt not ſwear, believe me, more credit would be given to thy very Beck, than thoſe who ſwear abundance of Oaths. Whom therefore do you more believe, me that do not ſwear, or them that do ſwear?’

‘ Obj. But,’ ſays he, ‘ Thou art a Prince and a Biſhop.’

Encouragement to ſuſtain the penalty.

Our doctrine made an Axiom by Chryſoſtom.

‘ Anſw. What then, if I ſhall ſhew thee that it is not this only? Anſwer me in truth now: If I had ſworn always, and at every ſeaſon, what privilege would my Principality have? No; thou ſeeſt that it is not for this. What gaineſt thou then? tell me now. Paul hungered; and do thou chuſe rather to hunger than to tranſgreſs any of God's Commandments. Why art thou ſo unbelieving? Shalt thou chuſe to do and to ſuffer all things, that thou mayeſt not Swear, and ſhall not he reward thee? But he feeds daily Forſwearers and great Swearers, and will he give Thee up to famiſh, becauſe thou hearkeneſt to him? Let all men know, That none may ſwear that are of this congregation; and hereby we may be aſſured, and by this ſign be diſtinguiſhed from the Greeks, and from all men, and not only by the Faith (or Chriſtian Profeſſion.) Let us have this mark from heavenly things, that we may ſhine with it every where, as the King's Flock. We are now known by the Mouth and the Tongue, as the Barbarians, and they that know to ſpeak Greek; for we are diſcerned from the Barbarians by the Tongue. Tell me now, how are Parrots known? Is it not that they ſpeak like Men? And we alſo may be known, if we ſpeak like the Apoſtles, and ſpeak as the Angels. For if any one ſay, “ Swear,” let him hear, that Chriſt hath commanded, “ even not to ſwear.” This ſufficeth to bring in all Virtue. It is a certain gate of godlineſs, a way bringing on unto the Love of Wiſdom (or Philoſophy.) It is a certain exerciſe (or maſtery.) Let us keep theſe things, that we may attain both preſent and future good things, by the Grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; with whom, to the Father, with the Holy Spirit, be glory, dominion, and honour, now, and for ever and ever. Amen.’

'These precepts were becauſe of the Jewiſh Depravation: But thoſe Perfect ones, to depiſe and relinquiſh riches, ſtand manfully, lay down thy life for preaching; deſpiſe all earthly things, have nothing to do with this preſent life; do good to them that unjuſtly afflict thee; if thou be defrauded, bleſs thou; if any ſlander thee, honour thou him; be over all things: It was fit to hear theſe, and ſuch like things; but now we diſcourſe concerning an Oath. And it is even as if when a man ſhould come to Philoſophy, he ſhould draw him away from thoſe his teachers, and make him ſpell with Letters and Syllables.

'Conſider now, what a confuſion it would be for a Man, that hath a weighty ſcrip, and a ſtaff, and a gown, to go to the Grammar School with Boys, and to learn the ſame things that they do! Would it not be a matter of much laughter? But more from You: For there is not ſo great a difference betwixt Philoſophy and the Elements of Speech, as between the Jewiſh matters, and Ours; even as much as is between Angels and Men. Tell me now, if any ſhould call down an Angel from heaven, and tell him, that he muſt ſtand and hear our ſermons, as if he muſt be thereby inſtructed, would it not be a ridiculous and confuſed thing? And if it were a ridiculous thing to be yet inſtructed by theſe, tell me now how great condemnation, and how great confuſion were it, not to give attention to thoſe former? And how then is it not confuſion, that a Chriſtian muſt be inſtructed that he muſt not ſwear? But let us repreſs our affections, that we be not more laughed at. Let us now diſcourſe concerning the Jewiſh Law to-day: What is that? will he ſay. "Do not uſe thy mouth to ſwear, nor be familiar with the Holy Name." Why? "For as a ſervant, if he be continually ſcourged, ſhall not be clear from marks, ſo neither he that ſweareth." Conſider the Wiſdom of that Wiſe Man: He ſaid not, Do not uſe thy Mind, but thy Mouth; becauſe he knew it to be all of the Mouth, and which is eaſily amended, &c. The puniſhment here that is oppoſed to it, tells us, that it is not Perjury, but Swearing, that is here to be removed; "Therefore to ſwear is a ſin." Verily the ſoul is full of ſuch wounds and ſcars. But if thou ſwear becauſe he doth not believe; ſay thou, Believe; or if thou wilt not, ſwear by thyſelf; and I do not ſay, that thou art contrary to the law-giver: Far be it; for, ſaith he, "Let your Word be Yea, Yea, and Nay, Nay," that herein I may condeſcend to you, and bring you to this, that I may free you from this tyrannical cuſtom. Will you learn why they allowed them of old to Swear, not to Forſwear? It was becauſe they ſwore by Idols. You muſt not be confounded in theſe laws, in which they that were weak were converſant. For if I now take a Greek, I do not forthwith enjoin him this; but now I admoniſh him, that Chriſt muſt be known: But a Believer, and one who hath learned him, and heard, if he ſhould uſe the ſame indulgence and liberty as the Greek, what profit and advantage would there be?'

'Chriſt hath made a law, that None Swear. Tell me now what is done about this law; leſt perchance, coming again, as the apoſtle ſaith, "I do not ſpear."

Hom. 10. p. 101.

We hope none will diſpute whether Chryſoſtom was againſt All Swearing, or that he underſtood Chriſt's doctrine as we do: Yet nobody can promiſe for them that endeavour to ſqueeze ſwearing out of Chriſt's Swear not at all. We have been the larger in this authority, partly becauſe he excellently diſputes it, and partly becauſe our caſe needs it; and laſtly, to ſhow Chriſtians their apoſtacy, that they may reform.

Jerom. Libr. Epiſtol. Part 3. Tract. 2. Of Obedience, Knowledge, and Revenge.

LII. 'Thou ſaidſt, if I miſtake not, That on this account thou mayeſt juſtly render evil for evil, and oughteſt to ſwear with them that ſwear, becauſe the Lord ſometimes ſwore, and rendered evil for evil.'

'Firſt, I know that all things are not fit for us, that are Servants, which are agreeable to the Maſter, &c. I know the Lord oftentimes ſwore, who hath forbidden us to ſwear. Nor muſt we raſhly ſpeak evil of, or blaſpheme in this, that he forbad another what he did himſelf; becauſe it may be ſaid, The Lord ſwore as Lord, whom none forbad to ſwear. It is not lawful for us as Servants to ſwear; becauſe we are forbidden by the law of our Lord to ſwear. But, leſt we ſhould ſuffer an offence by his example, ſince the time he forbad us to ſwear, neither did he himſelf ever ſwear,' &c.

God never ſwore properly.

Upon Zachary, Book 2. Chap. 8.

"And love ye not a falſe oath."]---As to the Lord's commanding in the Goſpel, "But I ſay unto you, ſwear not at all; but let your word be Yea, Yea; Nay, Nay;" he that ſhall never ſwear, can never forſwear: But he that ſweareth, let him hear that which is written, "Thou ſhall not take the name of the Lord thy God in a vain thing; for all theſe things I hate, ſaith the Lord," according to the words of Malachi, ſaying, "And ye did all that I hate." In precepts which belong to life, and are clear, we ought not to ſeek an allegory, leſt we ſeek a knot in a ruſh, as ſays the Comick.

On Jeremy 4. Book 1. Chap. 3.

"And thou ſhalt ſwear the Lord liveth in truth and righteouſneſs, and judgment," &c.

'And how doth the Goſpel forbid us to ſwear? But here it is ſaid, for a Confeſſion, ‘ thou ſhalt Swear, and for the condemnation of Idols, by which Iſrael ſwore. Laſtly, ‘ Offences are taken away, and he ſweareth by the Lord; and what is ſaid in the old ‘ teſtament, “ The Lord liveth,” is an oath to the condemning of all the Dead, by whom ‘ all Idolatry ſweareth. And it is alſo to be minded, that an Oath hath theſe compa- ‘ nions, truth, judgment and righteouſneſs: If theſe be wanting, it is not Swearing, ‘ but Forſwearing.’

An excellent reaſon why oaths were permitted.

Alſo on Matth. book 1. chap. 5.

“ But I ſay unto you, Swear not at all, neither by Heaven,” &c.

‘ The Jews had always this cuſtom of ſwearing by the Elements, as the prophet’s ‘ ſpeech often reproves them. He that ſweareth, either reverenceth or loveth him by ‘ whom he ſweareth. In the law it is commanded, that we muſt not ſwear but by the ‘ Lord our God.’

‘ The Jews, ſwearing by the Angels, and the City Jeruſalem, and the Temple, and ‘ the Elements, did worſhip the carnal Creatures with the honour and obſervance of ‘ God. * Laſtly, conſider, that here the Saviour forbad not to ſwear by God, but by ‘ Heaven, &c. * And this was allowed by the Law, as to little ones, that as they offer- ‘ ed Sacrifices to God, leſt they ſhould ſacrifice to Idols, ſo alſo they were ſuffered to ‘ Swear by God: Not that they did this rightly, but that it was better to yield that to ‘ God than to devils. But the Truth of the Goſpel doth not receive an Oath, ſince ‘ every Faithful Word is for an Oath.’

This between the two ſtars ſeems a ſelf-contradiction; but doubtleſs he intends it of the ſecond prohibition, as a farther reaſon why oaths were permitted.

Thoſe of after-times, that in ſome reſpect allow of an Oath, ground moſt upon the authority of Auguſtin; as he from the larger acceptation of the words ſwear, and oath, which he extends to that which Nazianzen (as before) calls but a firm Faithfulneſs joined to his Words; which yet he will not admit of, but to a ‘ Paul, a ‘ Planter of Churches, ſpeaking, by the Spirit of God, to them he had begotten in the ‘ Goſpel, in danger to be ſeduced by falſe apoſtles, and to ſlight him, and ſeek a proof ‘ of Chriſt ſpeaking in him; compelled by them to ſeem a Fool in glorying, and ſo ‘ driven, and no otherwiſe, to ſeem a Swearer too,’ yea, even to an Auguſtin, and ſo to compel him (even Auguſtin) to ſay, ‘ It is a hard queſtion; I have always avoided it.’ But though he durſt not condemn it altogether, out of reverence to the apoſtle, who he thought uſed it, becauſe of the Form of Speech; yet to ſhew that he did little encourage men to practiſe it, as any Act at all of the Worſhip of God, much leſs an auguſt act, he ſaith ‘ That Falſe Swearing is Deadly; True Swearing, Dangerous; No Swearing, ‘ Safe: God only ſwears ſafely, who cannot be deceived.’

Auguſtin de Sermone Domini, Serm. 28.

LIII. And Auguſtin himſelf confeſſeth, ‘ that it was uſual to alledge Chriſtianity for ‘ not ſwearing;’ bringing in one ſaying, ‘ It is not lawful for a Chriſtian to ſwear when ‘ an Oath is required of him: I am a Chriſtian; it is not lawful to ſwear.’ And on Pſalm lxxxviii, as allowing the unlawfulneſs, he ſaith, ‘ It is well that God hath for- ‘ bidden men to ſwear, leſt by cuſtom of it (inaſmuch as we are apt to miſtake) we com- ‘ mit Perjury. There is none but God can * ſafely ſwear,’ &c.

* If men cannot ſwear ſafely, then it is more dangerous to ſwear than not to ſwear; and it is better for people, nay, they are bound, to refuſe it.

And in that very book, which is alledged for it, he ſaith, ‘ I ſay unto you, Swear not ‘ at all, leſt by Swearing ye come to a Facility of ſwearing; from a facility to a Cuſtom; ‘ and from a cuſtom ye fall into Perjury.’ But if any think that book makes moſt for them, let them conſider the author hath retracted it; for what cauſe, let himſelf ſpeak in the end of his book of “ Retractions:” For ſurely, that which we have here cited out of it, agreeth with his other works, which contain much more to this purpoſe.

De mendac. It is obſcure and intricate.

‘ Where,’ ſays he, ‘ wouldeſt thou chuſe to walk? Upon the brink of a precipice, or ‘ far from it? I think far from it. So he which ſwears, walks in the border, and walk- ‘ eth with unſure feet, becauſe human: If thou ſtumbleſt, down thou goeſt; if thou ‘ falleſt, down thou goeſt.’

De Verb. Jacobi, Ante omnia nolite jurare, ſerm. 21.

We would fain know, if a moſt Auguſt Act of God’s Worſhip be nigheſt the pit’s brink, or fartheſt from it? For there all ought to chuſe to walk; in whoſe way they that walk, walk ſafely; their place is ſure, and their foot-ſteps ſhall not ſlide; but the wicked’s feet are “ in ſlippery places,” where, Auguſtin ſays, ‘ Swearers walk.’

Conſider what he ſaith on thoſe words of Chriſt in Matt. v. ‘ It is the righteouſneſs ‘ of the Phariſees, not to Forſwear: This he confirmeth, who forbiddeth to ſwear, * ‘ which belongeth to the righteouſneſs of the kingdom of heaven: For, as he who doth ‘ not ſpeak, cannot ſpeak a lye, ſo he cannot forſwear, who doth not ſwear.’ He goes on to excuſe Paul, and ſays, ‘ That an oath is not among good things, but among ‘ † evil things, and uſed for the Infirmity of others, which is Evil, from which we pray, ‘ that we may be daily delivered.’

But

---

* If it belongs to the righteouſneſs of the kingdom of heaven, Not to ſwear, then what will become of thoſe that not only break that commandment of, Swear not at all, but teach men ſo to do; nay puniſh men for not obeying ſuch anti-evangelical doctrine?

† Then certainly they are to be rejected of true Chriſtians.

1675.

But there is this to be ſaid for Auguſtin, and ſome others after him, that he and they write not clearer in a point ſo conſtantly maintained: His horizon then was overcaſting apace. Apoſtacy, as a mighty torrent, did not only ſwell and beat againſt the ſimplicity of the Chriſtian doctrine and diſcipline; but, like an unruly and impetuous ſea, broke down the banks of primitive ſociety, and made way for all ſorts of ſuperſtition, worldly intereſt and fraud; that, to ſay no more than he did, was to incur, perhaps, the cenſure of the Grandees of his age, who had joined earthly Policy to Chriſtian religion, and caſt off the bleſſed yoke of their ſelf-denying Lord, to ſwim in the delicious liberty of the world: A time full of ſuch circumſtances as ſeemed to conſpire the return of Oaths, that were not dead, but retired only: For as men grew falſe and diſtruſtful, Truth became burdenſome, and Yea and Nay no ſecurity with them; and therefore they diſclaimed, or rather exiled them their government; old Judaiſm or Gentiliſm pleaſed them better. It was harder living that watchful life that was ſufficient to credit a Yea or a Nay, than to take an Oath, that dependeth upon the ſaying of ſo many words only: This was conſiderable, and made ſwearing then, and continues it grateful to our very times. But ſad it is, that Oaths rode thus in ſtate, while Integrity went barefoot, and evangelical Yea and Nay were turned off for non-ſufficient, and that too not without fines, priſons, and a great deal of reproach. However, we muſt acknowledge, that the gravity and Chriſtian care of this perſon, and other his contemporaries, appeared in not only diſſuading, but deterring thoſe ages from the Brink (for ſo he calls "Swearing at all"), and turning their faces after the Woman, now on her flight into the Wilderneſs: During all which time, the Witneſſes, tho' feweſt in number, and myſtically clothed in ſack-cloth, forbore not to propheſy, even in this particular.

And we hope, having no certain knowledge to the contrary, that moſt of them were at leaſt men fearing God, and ſerving him according to what they knew, and in that manner they were perſuaded was moſt acceptable to him. And, as Irenæus ſaid of the Poets and Philoſophers, 'Theſe men, every one ſeeing that which was connatural, from 'part of the Divine-ſown Reaſon, ſpoke excellently, and were right and conſiſtent with 'themſelves; they are ours.' Iren. lib. 5. cap. 18. So we ſincerely declare of men differing from us, that as we deſire the good of all, ſo we can own the good in all, and the truth in all, and receive it from them, tho' in other reſpects our adverſaries; and would have all to do the like with us and each other: And howbeit our adverſaries may have hard thoughts of ſome of the perſons our matter leads us to inſtance, as men intereſted in the doctrine and practices of thoſe darker times they lived in, and of us for making uſe of ſuch for authorities; yet we hope they would alſo judge it an hard and very cruel thing to repute them utter caſtaways. And tho' we know that men differ within themſelves, and all of them more or leſs from the Truth, yet ſince there may be ſome Truth and Sincerity, we cannot but acknowledge and embrace it: And we hope, the reaſons and authorities of others they bring, and the conceſſions and confeſſions of others they make, may, and indeed ought to be, of weight in that point, at leaſt to ſhew that it is no new, ſtrange or unreaſonable thing for us to refuſe Oaths. And tho' ſome might, with a mixture of Superſtition and Will-worſhip, undertake and maintain that ſtrictneſs and preciſeneſs, which ſome of the holy ancients by the Spirit of Truth were led to practiſe (the ancient hiſtories of whom, from eye-witneſſes, as the word ſignifies, of ſome of them, we in a great part believe); and ſome later more enlightened and zealous men, taking offence thereat, but eſpecially at the hypocriſy and abomination palliated by ſuch fair pretences, have ſtrained much in oppoſition to that evangelical doctrine; yet is the doctrine nevertheleſs a truth in itſelf. Nor can we believe that all that were accounted Hereticks, were out of the Catholick or Univerſal Church; for the word CATHOLICK ſignifies UNIVERSAL, containing all that are in the Church (that is, in God, the Father of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt) in all times; and thoſe were not all of the ſame mind in all things, as may be read in the Holy Scriptures, and alſo in Euſebius and other eccleſiaſtical Hiſtories, where men are commended for holineſs and virtue, yet at much difference in ſome things. Syneſius, tho' he believed not the Reſurrection, was choſen to miniſter, and afterward was made a Biſhop; the Charity of Chriſtians was ſo great in that age. And ſome accounted Hereticks, ſuffered martyrdom, that are commended or excuſed by Euſebius; one in particular that died with Polycarpus, and another called Aſclepius, both Marcionites. See alſo the beginning of his eighth book concerning the diviſions among them that afterward ſuffered for the teſtimony of the Univerſal or Catholick Truth: Nor can we receive their judgment, that branded thoſe with the name of Hereticks, Pelagians, &c. who denied Swearing in thoſe declining ages, and ſuppreſſed their works under that name and aſperſion only; not allowing them to ſpeak for themſelves to us of latter times.

Euſeb. Pam. Socr. Schol. Evagr. &c.

1 Theſ. i. 1. Phil. iii. 15. Soc. l. 6. c. 13. Evagr. l. 1. c. 11. Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 8. c. 28. l. 4. c. 15.

Pelagius, a Britain, Anno 400, wrote notable books, ſaith Gonnadius, who lived ſoon after him.

We ſee how unjuſtly we ourſelves are aſperſed in almoſt every doctrine we hold, and that under pretence of ſerving God; particularly, with ſeeking to work our ſalvation by our own Power; and when they have made us this belief, they beſtow Pelagianiſm upon it, (for fathers have right to name their own children); whereas, of all other people, we eſpecially diſclaim our own Ability, and wait to be renewed and guided by the Spirit of Chriſt, and to be found in his righteouſneſs; and therefore, on the other hand, reputed Phanaticks, Enthuſiaſts, &c. and mocked for being moved by the ſpirit, following the light, &c. But let their example or authority be as it will, or however they were in other reſpects, the doctrine of the ancient Primitive Fathers, and Practice of that Church, as alſo the doctrine of famous men among themſelves, neither of which ſort dare they condemn for Hereticks, do ſufficiently defend them from the aſperſion of Hereſy in that particular: And ſo we ſhall come to our remaining teſtimonies, it being not our buſineſs to maintain every one of their principles we cite, but to prove this doctrine of "ſwear not at all," to have had the voice of ſeveral ages to confirm it.

The ancient Waldenſes, reputed to have continued uncorrupted with the groſſneſs of the apoſtacy, ever ſince the Apoſtles times, (ſee their hiſtory in P. Perin, S. Moreland and Bp. Uſher de Succeſ.) we have good cauſe to ſay, denied the taking of any oath in what ſenſe the Primitive Chriſtians and Fathers refuſed, and that was altogether. Sure it is, their enemies charged them with it for above three hundred years, and we cannot find they then denied the Charge: We ſuppoſe none will attempt to prove they did: Though one of our adverſaries joins with theirs, traducing them for Perjurers, and with them abuſes that worthy and learned man Bp. Uſher, who defends them from that improbable and contradictory aſperſion, of Lying and Forſwearing, and yet of Denying to ſwear; who ſays, 'that they were as far from Lying and Forſwearing, as their enemies were 'from modeſty and truth, which did appear, in that they were charged by them, not to 'ſwear at all:' Peruſe that part of his book de Succeſſione, where he treats of them; and where alſo you may read of their ſucceſſion, how that the Syrians and Armenians came out of the eaſt into Thracia, thence in proceſs of time into Bulgaria and Sclavonia, thence into Italy and Lombardy, and were called by ſeveral names, of ſeveral people, or at ſeveral times, as Manichees, Waldenſes, Albigenſes, Cathari or Puritans, Patrins, Publicans, Humiliati, &c. who were charged with denying ſwearing; and how that ſeveral of the better ſort of the Clergy, and of the nobler Laity (who refuſed the preſent uſe of Baptiſm and the Lord's Supper) were burnt, under the name of Manichees. Suarez alſo reckons up the Cathariſts, Alba, Bagnald, and others which Prateolus and Caſtro relate, the Waldenſes, the Anabaptiſts, &c. And which Janſenius alſo, out of Auguſtin, Epiſt. 89, the Pelagians out of Hilary Syracuſanus, Epiſt. 88. Bernard, Homil. 69, on Cant. 'The Fathers,' ſays he, 'ſeem to favour this opinion, eſpecially Baſil, Hom. 'in Pſal. 14. Chryſoſtom, Hom. 19. 78. ad popul. and 17 on Mat. And Theophy'lact on Mat. v. Origen Tract 35. Mat. Tertullian de Idololat. Clem. Rom. l. 6. Con'ſtitut. Apoſt.' Maldonat, on Mat. v. 34 ſaith, 'The Anabaptiſts, the Wickliffites, 'ſome Syracuſans, a kind of Pelagians, denied Swearing; and that Origen was not far 'off that opinion.' Here the Hereticks, as accounted, and the Fathers, are reckoned up together, as holding the ſame opinions: Sure in this they were not Hereticks; for then the Fathers ſhould be condemned with them, and called Hereticks too, as well as they; or elſe theſe men are partial and contradictory.

See Baronius, Ann. 1310.

Joh. Walden againſt John Wickliff and Waldenſes. Reiner, Rub. Capitan. W. Widford, Gui. Carmel. Voſſ. hiſtor. Pelag. l. 5. p. 2. Bp. Uſher, de Succeſſ. De Juramentis, l. 1. c. 1. 2.

Auguſtin, on Jam. v. of the words of the apoſtle, thus, Serm. 30. 'Perhaps it is 'meet for the Lord alone to ſwear, who cannot forſwear.' And ſo he goes on to ſhew how hard it is for men to avoid Perjury.

In ſerm. 3. ad competentes: 'Let them not only abſtain from Perjury, but from 'Swearing; becauſe he doth not lye who ſaith, "A man ſwearing much, ſhall not de"part from iniquity, and the plague ſhall not depart from his houſe." Eccleſ. xxiii.

But if it were an Auguſt Act of the Worſhip of God, he would, on the contrary, have exhorted at leaſt, if not commanded them, to ſwear; which we never read any Command for, but in oppoſition to Idols, even in the time of the Old Teſtament Writings, as the teſtimonies before alledged declare; and in the time of the New, no Command at all; but, on the contrary, a Prohibition by the Lord himſelf, and another by his apoſtle; nor any Example; for that of Paul's was but an Aſſeveration, as by the teſtimonies already produced, and to be alledged, appears: For beſides thoſe of the Fathers and other Doctors, of late Bp. Ro. Sanderſon, in his "Oxford Lectures," ſhows, this is ſometimes uſed in the Form of an Oath which is no Oath; and ſo he defendeth Joſeph from breaking God's command, that is, not to have ſworn ſo; and therefore not to have ſinned, but to have uſed an Aſſeveration; as if he had ſaid, "As ſure as Pharaoh liveth, ye are ſpies:" So may Paul be defended againſt the breaking Chriſt's command; as if he had ſaid, "As "ſure as ye," or, as ſome Greek Copies have it, "We, rejoice in Chriſt Jeſus:" For νὴ, which they tranſlate, I proteſt by, hath ſometimes the ſame ſignification that ναὶ, yea, hath, as may be ſeen in Scapula; for he ſays, νὴ (tranſlated, I proteſt by) is a particle, ſometimes of granting and affirming; ſometimes it is put for verily, indeed; and he interprets ναὶ by the ſame word, which is tranſlated yea, which Scapula ſaith is alſo ſometimes uſed in ſwearing, and cites Ariſtophanes and Xenophon for it: And that νὴ is uſed alſo in compoſition for affirming, as in νήχυτος, profuſus, laviſhing; which cannot ſignify ſwearing.

And how eaſily might the tranſcriber, thro' that common uſe, alter a Letter, being of the ſame ſignification; ſeeing in that very verſe, in ſome Copies, there is not only in another another word an alteration of a Letter, ἡμετέραν & ὑμετέραν, our and your, but in another word five Letters, ἀποθνήσκω & ἀποθνήσκοντες, referring to the verſe before; yea, a whole Word of ſeven letters added, ἀδελφοί. And of about Thirty Greek Copies there are not two of them that agree, but they interfere, ſome in one place, ſome in another; inſomuch that there are thouſands of various readings, which many of the ancient Fathers diverſly follow, ſome one, ſome another. See the (various lections) variæ lectiones græc. nov. teſt. in Bp. Walton's Polyglot, vol 6. alſo the Preface, and Beza's Epiſtle therein: And conſider how hard a thing it is to conſtrue, limit, and lay the interpretation of the ſayings of Chriſt and his apoſtles, and the weight of a doctrine, and that as men would avoid penalties too, upon a Letter (which yet alters not the ſignification) upon the credit of the Tranſcribers, eſpecially in Paul's Epiſtles, wherein Peter ſays, "many things are hard to be "underſtood, and wreſted by the unlearned," which he muſt needs intend in ſuch Learning as he himſelf had; and that was not of worldly Academies, but from the Holy Spirit. And theſe words, which are joined with that particle, are not ſuch words as men uſe in Swearing, but for a ground of his Fidelity, and a remedy againſt their Incredulity, and queſtioning of the weight of his aſſertions, amongſt whom other teachers were preferred, and who compelled him to ſpeak "as a fool," he ſays, "even to commend him"ſelf." So that it is not ſtrange, if to them, and not to other churches, he uſed ſuch forcible Aſſeverations, from the teſtimony that they had of him, of the truth and work of Chriſt in him, and the record thereof upon his ſoul, and his joy therein, that he ſpoke the truth to them, and did not lye: So that he brings his perſecutions againſt their imperfections, to gain belief; which cannot amount to more than a voluntary condeſcenſion for the time being, and cannot prove or countenance a compulſory, promiſſory, formal, ceremonial Oath to be exacted or taken up for the future.

1675.

But mark, that the word Oath, or Swear, uſed both by Chriſt and the apoſtle James in their Prohibition, is never uſed by Paul in his Aſſeverations, neither doth he ever apply it to the brethren; but ſpeaking to them of the Oath that was in old time, and of Men (indefinitely) that uſe to ſwear, he ſaith, "Men ſwear; and to them an Oath is for con"firmation;" that is, as among the Jews and Heathen; he doth not ſay to Us, or to You; or We, or Ye ſwear, who are not in ſtrife; which, if it had been true, it might have ſtood the preſent Oath-Advocates in ſtead. So that ſuch as will have it that Paul ſwore, muſt bring the word ſwear, or oath, to prove it: But if they could, his example then were not enough to invalidate to us now the Commandment of Chriſt for the aboliſhing of ſwearing; no more than his ſhaving his head at Cenchrea, becauſe he had a vow; or his purifying himſelf in the temple, and offering with the Four Jews that had a vow; or his circumciſing of Timothy, becauſe of the Jews; can warrant us to the obſervation of thoſe legal rites and ceremonies, which ſo long ſince are not only dead, but deadly, as the Fathers and Bp. Saunderſon diſtinguiſh about them. And thoſe that would therefore bring in Swearing and Vows, might, under the ſame colour, bring in Sacrificing and Circumciſing too.

LIV. Iſidorus Peluſiota, who, as Evagrius Schol. writes, lived at the ſame time with Cyril, and that the fame of his ſayings and doings was ſpread far and near, and riſe in every man's mouth, that he led on earth the life of an Angel, and wrote many notable works, amongſt which are his Epiſtles, in one whereof he writeth againſt Swearing thus; 'If thou art of our flock, and art ordered under a good Shepherd, deny the nature of 'wild beaſts, and obey his voice, that forbiddeth to ſwear at all. Moreover, not to 'ſwear, is not to require an Oath of another. Now, if thou wilt not ſwear, neither 'require thou an oath of another, for two cauſes; either becauſe he who is aſked loves 'truth, or, on the contrary, to lye: If the man ſpeaks truth uſually, he will always 'ſpeak truth without an Oath; but if he is a lyar, he will lye, though he ſwear: 'Therefore, for both theſe cauſes, one ought not to require an Oath.'

L. 1. c. 15.
Ep. lib. 1.
Epiſt. 155.

Not to require an oath by any means of another man.
On Mat. v.

LV. Chromatius, biſhop of Aquileia, about or not long after that time, upon theſe words, "But I ſay unto you, ſwear not at all," paraphraſeth thus; 'The Law (ſaith 'he) given by Moſes, received a growth, proficiency, or perfection, by the grace of 'the doctrine of the Goſpel. In the Law it was commanded, not to forſwear; but in 'the Goſpel not to ſwear: Which very thing heretofore the Holy Ghoſt did premeditate that Solomon ſhould command or teach, ſaying, "Let not thy mouth uſe to "ſwear." And again, "As a ſervant beaten continually, is not leſſened from the pale"neſs of his ſtripes, ſo every one that ſweareth, ſhall not be purged from ſin." Wherefore it is not to meet for us to ſwear at all: For what need is there for any of us to 'ſwear, ſeeing that it is not at all lawful for us to lye; whoſe words ought always to be 'ſo true, ſo very faithful, that they may be accounted for Oaths. And therefore the 'Lord not only forbids us to forſwear, but even to ſwear; that we may not ſeem to ſpeak 'truth only when we ſwear; that we may not think that thoſe whom he hath appointed 'to be true in all their ſpeech, may have liberty to lye without an Oath: For this is the 'cauſe of an oath, becauſe that every one who ſweareth, doth not ſwear to this end, that 'he will ſpeak that which is true, and therefore the Lord would have no difference to 'be between their Oath and their Word: Becauſe as in an Oath there ought to be no

Suſpicion the cauſe of an oath.

'Perfidi-

1675.

‘ Perfidiouſneſs, ſo in our Words there ought to be no Lye, in that both perjury and lying are condemned by the puniſhment of the judgment of God, ſeeing the ſcripture ſaith, “ The mouth which lyeth, killeth the ſoul :” Therefore whoſoever ſpeaketh Truth, ſweareth ; becauſe it is written, “ A faithful witneſs doth not lye.” And therefore holy ſcripture (not without cauſe) often relates, that God hath ſworn,” becauſe whatſoever is ſpoken of God, who is true, and cannot lye, is counted for an Oath, becauſe all which he ſpeaks is true. Now we find God ſometimes ſwearing ; but it is for the perfidiouſneſs of the Jewiſh infidelity, who think that all truth conſiſts in the credit of an Oath ; therefore alſo God would ſwear, that they who would not truſt God ſpeaking, might truſt him when he ſwore : Therefore our Lord ſaith, “ Ye have heard it ſaid of old, Thou ſhalt not forſwear : But I ſay unto you, Swear not at all,” &c.

On Deut. vi. A ſmart and true anſwer.

LVI. Theodoret, on Deut. vi. pag. 57, ‘ Why doth the Law command, that they ſhould ſwear by God ?’ Leſt they ſhould ſwear by falſe Gods : For he ſaid the ſame by the prophets, “ If thou takeſt the names of Baalim out of thy mouth, and ſhalt ſwear, The Lord liveth with Truth :” And here when he had ſaid, “ Thou ſhalt fear the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve, and ſhalt cleave to him, and ſhalt ſwear by his Name,” he ſubjoined, “ Ye ſhall not walk after other, or ſtrange Gods, which are of the Gods of the nations, which are round about you.” Lyra ſaith the ſame.

Rubanus.

LVII. Ordinary Gloſs on Mat. v. 37. hath this ſentence, ‘ A faithful Speech ought to be accounted for an Oath.’

LVIII. Johannes Damaſcenus, Parallel. lib. 3. cap. 16. bringeth a teſtimony of one Nilus againſt ſwearing. There was one named Nilus in Egypt, a martyr, mentioned by Euſebius. Another, biſhop of Conſtantinople, ſpoken of by Socrates, both very famous ; the words are theſe : ‘ It is not profitable to ſwear, but very pernicious, and execrable and abominable : Wherefore hereafter make an end of ſwearing ; nor commit ſuch a thing, as that thy tongue uſe Oaths.’ In the ſame place he alledgeth teſtimonies out of J. Chryſoſtom, Hom. 13. ad populum Antiochenum.

Nilus forbids oaths.

On Jer. iv.

LIX. Cyril, whom Evagrius Scholaſt. ſtiles Renowned, in his Commentary on Jeremy the ivth, “ And ſhall ſwear, the Lord liveth, in truth, and in judgment, and in righteouſneſs,” ſaith, ‘ let us look, who ſwear, how we do not ſwear in judgment, but without judgment ; ſo that our oaths are by cuſtom, rather than judgment : We are laſhed therefore ; and the Word, reproving that ſame thing, ſaith, “ And if he ſhall ſwear, the Lord liveth, in truth, in righteouſneſs and judgment :” For we know it is ſaid in the Goſpel by the Lord unto his diſciples, “ But I ſay unto you, that you ſwear not at all.’ But let us conſider alſo this ſaying ; and, if God grant, both ſhall be rewarded. For perhaps, it firſt behoveth to ſwear in Truth, in Judgment, and in Righteouſneſs ; and after one hath made proficiency, he may be made worthy not to ſwear at all, but may have Yea, not needing witneſſes that it is ſo ; and may have Nay, not needing witneſſes that it is verily not ſo.’

Cyril. See Catena 65. Græc. Patr. on Luke i. p. 23.

And ſays Cyril farther, ‘ Let none, becauſe he hears that God ſwore to Abraham, uſe to ſwear : For as that which is called Wrath in God, is not wrath, nor doth it ſignify a Paſſion, but a Puniſhing Power, or ſome ſuch-like motion ; ſo neither is Swearing, ſwearing : For God doth not ſwear ; but ſhews the Certainty, that what he ſaith ſhall come to paſs, certainly : For the Oath of God is his own Word, filling the hearers, and making every one believe, that what he hath promiſed and ſaid, ſhall ſurely come to paſs.’

On Pſal. xciv. agreeth with Auguſtin.

LX. Caſſiodorus on Pſalm xciv. ſaith, ‘ Hence it is, that men are forbidden to ſwear, becauſe by their own power they cannot perform their promiſes.’ This Caſſiodorus was famous about the year five hundred.

On Eccleſ. viii.

LXI. Olympiodorus was alſo famous about the ſame time, who on Eccleſ. viii. ſaith thus, “ Keep the mouth of the King, and do not ſtudy concerning the Word of the Oath of God, but go far from the face of it,” viz. ‘ of an Oath ; that is, Refrain and depart from it, and do not at all endure to take an Oath into thy mouth.’

LXII. Iſidorus Hiſpalenſis was famous about that time, and lived with him they called St. Gregory, who diſliked the bringing in the title of Univerſal Biſhop, and alſo the uſe of Swearing : His words are theſe, ‘ Many are ſlow to believe, which are moved at the belief of the Word : But they do grievouſly offend, who compel them to ſwear that ſpeak to them.’

Chap. 31.

LXIII. Antiochus, ſaid to be a man famous for holineſs and learning, living in Paleſtine about the time of Heraclius the emperor, which was about the year ſix hundred and fourteen, in his Pandects of Scripture, Hom. 62, concerning Swearing, ſaith thus in the Greek (which ſee, for the Latin Tranſlation is in ſome things imperfect) ‘ The old Law, as giving laws to Children, which for their age were not capable of more holy doctrine, not unſeaſonably commands, to ſwear nothing to their neighbour in deceit : But us our Lord and Saviour commandeth, not to ſwear at all, neither out of ſeaſon, 'nor in ſeaſon; for he ſaith unto us, "Let your Yea be Yea, and your Nay, Nay; for whatſoever is more, is of Evil."

'And ſaith he to the firſt people of a ſtiff neck, "I commanded, thou ſhalt not forſwear, but ſhalt perform thy vows unto the Lord, as to them that were hard-hearted and diſobedient to me: But to you that believe in me, to whom I have given power to become the ſons of God, that are born again of the Holy Spirit, I command, not to ſwear at all, neither little, nor great oaths; that a difference may plainly appear, who are baſtards, and who true ſons." Let us therefore, dear friends, fear him, who hath vouchſafed us ſo much honour, even the Lord and Father, with all fear; as ſincere ingenuous ſervants let us keep his commandments, not to ſwear at all, leſt he ſay, as in Iſa. i. "I have nouriſhed and brought up children, and they have rebelled againſt me:" Let us not be ſlighters and deſpiſers of this commandment of the Lord; for thoſe things that are ſaid and done without an Oath, are more credited by men, and more pleaſing to God.'

Beda in Ep. Jam. c. 5.

LXIV. In the next century, Beda, an Engliſhman, the moſt famous of thoſe days, and ſtiled Venerable, in his expoſition upon theſe words, "Before all things, my brethren ſwear not," &c. ſaith, 'Becauſe he deſires entirely to draw out the deadly poiſon of the tongue in his hearers, he, who forbad to grieve in adverſities, forbad to detract or ſlander any man, or to judge his neighbour, which are open ſins; he adds this alſo (ſeeming light to ſome) that he may take away the Cuſtom of Swearing. For that this alſo is not to be eſteemed a light matter, plainly appears to them that carefully conſider that ſentence of the Lord, where he ſaith, "Of every idle word that men ſhall ſpeak, they ſhall give account in the day of judgment."

["That ye fall not into condemnation."] 'Therefore,' ſaith he, 'I reſtrain you from the fault of ſwearing, leſt by ſwearing frequently true things, ye fall ſometimes alſo into forſwearing; but ſtand ſo far from the vice of forſwearing, that you will not ſwear neither, but by the greateſt neceſſity. But he alſo falls under the judgment of guilt, who, although he never forſwear, yet ſweareth true oftner than there is need; namely, he offends in the very idleneſs of ſuperfluous ſpeech; and he offendeth the Judge, which forbad both every unprofitable word and oath.'

Spelm. Brit. Council, p. 260.

From this chief man among the Engliſh of that time, it is manifeſt that this was the doctrine they then held, as farther appears from H. Spelman, that learned Engliſh knight, in his book of Britiſh Councils, Canons, &c. in the Exceptions, or Select Collections of Egbert, archbiſhop of York, article 19. 'That no prieſt whatſoever may ſwear an Oath; but let him ſpeak all things ſimply, in purity and truth.' And in the ſame Author and Council, article 18, the chief of monaſteries, prieſts and deacons, ſhould ſay (without Swearing) when they were to purge and clear themſelves, only thus, "I ſpeak the truth in Chriſt, I lye not."

And in page 259, in England, at the Council of Berghamſted, about the year Seven hundred and fifty, Article 17, 'that a Biſhop's or a King's Word or Affirmation, without an Oath, is irrefragable.'

This agrees with Blaſtaris's Canons afore-mentioned: And at this day, in ſome countries, as in Germany, the Electoral Archbiſhops of Cologn, Mentz, and Triers, and many noblemen in their ſtation, ſpeak without an Oath, upon their Honour, &c.

Certainly, then, it is much below the nobility of true Chriſtians, in their ſpiritual ſtation, to ſwear; as Chryſoſtom and the ancients have well obſerved.

LXV. Haimo lived about Eight hundred and forty, who on the Revelations ſaith, 'That it is lawful only for God and Angels to ſwear; but to men it is forbidden.'

LXVI. Ambroſius Anſbertus, Gallus Preſbyter: 'Seeing the Lord prohibits the faithful from every Oath, ſaying, "Swear not at all, neither by Heaven, &c. but let your Yea be Yea, and your Nay, Nay;" what abounds more than them is from the Evil one. Men are often deceived by an oath; but He, who is the Truth, never is deceived; for he would not have prohibited men from an oath, if he had not known ſin to be in it.'

LXVII. Theophylact, Archbiſhop of the Bulgarians, whom ſome place in the ninth century, others after; to be ſure very famous, being as it were their Apoſtle; in his Comment on Matth. v. ſaith, 'To ſwear, or adjure more to Yea or Nay, is of the Devil. Moreover,' ſays he 'if thou ſhouldſt ſay, That the Law alſo given to Moſes was evil, becauſe it commandeth to Swear; Learn, that then it was not evil to ſwear; but after Chriſt, it is evil; as alſo to be circumciſed; and, in brief, whatſoever is * Jewiſh: For it is convenient for a Child to ſuck, but not at all for a Man.'

* He makes oaths Jewiſh, at leaſt in oppoſition to evangelical; becauſe imperfect, and permitted to the Jews, in condeſcenſion.

LXVIII. Bernard: 'The truth needs not an Oath.' De modo bene vivendi, Ser. 32. De perjurio: 'A faithful Word holds the place of an Oath: As he cannot lye who doth not ſpeak, ſo he cannot forſwear who doth not undertake to ſwear:' Grounded on Matthew the vth.

LXIX. Paſchatius Ratbertus, on Mat. v. "Ye have heard," &c. 'In this place, as alſo every-where in thoſe things, the perfection in righteouſneſs is renewed; for what every one ſwears by, he either worſhips, loveth, or fears it: Therefore, by the Law,

1675. it was lawful for that carnal people to ſwear by God; and this was allowed as to little Ones, that as they offered Sacrifices to God, leſt they ſhould offer them to Idols, ſo alſo it was permitted to them to Swear by God: Not that they did this well, but becauſe it was better to give it to God than to Devils.'

LXX. Otho Brunfelſius on Mat. v. " But let your word be Yea," &c. 'That it is the Duty of a Chriſtian man to be ſure in his Words; that, being unſworn, he ſurpaſs any Jew or Heathen ſwearing by all his holy things; namely in theſe bare words only Yea, Yea; Nay, Nay. Such faithfulneſs and conſtancy is commended in good men by prophane authors. Read Seneca, Cicero, Valerius Maximus.

'But thou wilt ſay, "I ſhall not be truſted, unleſs I ſwear:" Even ſo it is permitted by the Popes, to ſwear good words in a good cauſe. But ſuch diſtruſt ought not to reign in the faithful: But if we truſt not Words, what ſhould an Oath do? It is a proverb, "None is leſs truſted than he which ſhall often Swear." Moreover, who gave power to Popes to break the command of God?'

LXXI. Druthmarus on Math. v. 'Leſt the Jews ſhould ſwear by Idols names, the Lord ſuffered them to ſwear by his own name.'

'The Lord taught us Perfection, that ſuch truſt is to be among Chriſtians, that there ſhould be no need to interpoſe the Name of God for witneſs.'

LXXII. Janſeniu[illegible] on Math. v. 'If all Chriſtians were ſuch as they ought to be, it would certainly be needleſs both to require and take an Oath.'-----I think this more Chriſtian; and not to ſwear at all, nor compel to ſwear, more Spiritual.-----Yea and Amen are the ſame, 2 Cor. 1. not Swearing, but Affirming: So Chriſt ſwore not.' See Bernard, Hom. 69. in Cant. de more bene vivendi, Serm. 32.

LXXIII. Albertus Magnus on Mat. v. 'Swearing is by Indulgence.' Thomas Aquinas cites Rabanus on Mat. v.

LXXIV. Alex. de Ales citeth Hug. Cardinal, ſaying, 'The Lord forbad ſwearing, leſt any ſhould deſire to ſwear as a good thing; alſo that none might fall into Perjury.'

P. 3. q. 59. LXXV. Remigius on Rom. i. 'Who never Swears, never Forſwears.'

LXXVI. Ruffinus on Pſal. xiv. 'Not to ſwear at all, is of perfect men." See alſo Smaragdus on Mat. v. Titelmannus on Pſal. xiv. Brugenſis on Mat. v. Ludolphus Carthuſianus, Vita Chriſti, part 2. cap. 12. Rupertus, de Operibus Spiritus Sancti, Fol. 453. Baptiſta Folengius, on Pſal. xv. Nic. Lyra, and Ordinary Gloſs on Mat. v.

See Bibliotheca veter. patrum. LXXVII. Euthymius Zigabenus, on Mat. v. p. 43. ſaith thus, "Again, ye have heard, that it hath been ſaid to them of old time, Thou ſhalt not forſwear, &c. But I ſay unto you, Swear not at all, &c."] Now the old law ſaith, "Thou ſhalt not forſwear, but ſhalt offer to the Lord thine oaths;" which he added, that he might put fear into the ſwearer, that he ſhall not forſwear, knowing that God, which knows all things, undertakes the oath. ["But I ſay unto you, ſwear not at all."] For he that eaſily ſweareth, ſometimes perchance may forſwear, by the cuſtom of ſwearing; but he that ſwears by no means, will never forſwear. Beſides, thou that ſweareſt, ſo be thou do not forſwear, thou obſerveſt the worſhip of God; but ſwearing, by no means, thou doſt promote it: And the other is the part of mean and imperfect philoſophy; but this of that which is the higheſt and perfect. The other, "Thou ſhalt not forſwear," is written in the book of Exodus; but this, "Thou ſhalt reſtore to the Lord thine oaths," in the book of Deuteronomy; but in other words. Now he commanded this, leſt they ſhould ſwear by gods of a falſe name.' Again,

'Not to ſwear, and not to require an oath, come to the ſame thing. For, how canſt thou induce thy brother unto that which thou avoideſt thyſelf, if ſo be that thou art a lover of thy brother, and not rather of money?'

"Nor by Heaven, for it is the Throne of God," &c.

'Leſt they ſhould think, that he forbad to ſwear by God only, in ſaying, by God, he adds alſo other kind of oaths, by which the Jews did then ſwear; for he that ſweareth by theſe things, ſweareth again by God, who fills theſe things, and rules them; for they have theſe things in honour for Him, and not for themſelves: For he ſaith by the prophet, "Heaven is my Throne, and Earth is my Foot-ſtool;" the prophet manifeſting by this, that God filleth all things: "Do not I fill Heaven and Earth?" David alſo ſaith, "The City of the Great King."

"Neither by thy Head."

'Therefore thou ſhouldſt not ſwear the meaneſt oath; I ſay even by thy own Head, leſt thou proceed to greater, or by any other manner; for the Creature is alſo the poſſeſſion of God.' And again, 'The Oath is made by God, who hath it (the Creature) in his Power: For although it (the Head) be made thine, yet it is not thy Work; which is manifeſt from this, that thou canſt not make one hair white or black.'

"But let your words be Yea Yea, and Nay Nay," &c.

'Let your ſpeech be, when ye affirm, Yea, and when you deny, Nay; and uſe only theſe for, or inſtead of, Oaths to confirmation, and no other than Yea and Nay. What are adjoined beſides theſe, he calleth an Oath.'

Queſt. ‘ But if an oath be of the Devil, how did the old Law permit it?’

Anſw. ‘ Becauſe the ſacrifices of living creatures were alſo of evil, and by the deceit ‘ of Idols, yet the Law permitted them, becauſe of the infirmity of the Hebrews. For ‘ whereas they were gluttons, and ſmell-feaſts, they loved the ſacrifices of Idols; and ‘ whereas alſo they were unbelieving, they alſo loved an Oath: And that they ſhould not ‘ afterwards either ſacrifice to Idols, or ſwear by Idols, the Law permitted them to ‘ ſacrifice and to ſwear, and if there were any thing elſe of that kind, they transferred ‘ all unto God. Now it was come to paſs, that in proceſs of time he would cut off ‘ theſe things alſo, by a more ſublime law, to be brought in; becauſe it is good for Infants to be ſuckled; but for Men it is very unfit: There we allow this to them that ‘ live after the manner of Infants; but we withdraw or prohibit them that are Manly ‘ from it.’

* They all agree in the reaſon of ſuffering Oaths under the Law, viz. the Jews Weakneſs.

Queſt. ‘ What then is to be done, if any require an Oath; yea, compel to ſwear?’

Anſw. ‘ Let the Fear of God be more forcible than this compulſion or neceſſity; and ‘ chuſe rather to ſuffer all things, than to tranſgreſs the Command, ſith in every precept, ‘ force and violent danger will often meet with thee: And unleſs thou eſteemeſt the ‘ command of God every-where more forcible, all things will depart from thee void ‘ and unperformed. In the following paſſages, the Lord ſaith, “ The kingdom of hea-“ ven ſuffereth violence, and the violent take it by force.”

LXXVIII. Oecumenius, a famous Greek writer, about Ann. one thouſand and ſeven-‘ ty, writes on Jam. v. 12. thus, ‘ But ſome will ſay, “ If any be forced to ſwear, what “ is to be done?” We ſay, that the fear of God ſhall be ſtronger than the force of him ‘ that compels. But ſome may doubt, how it comes to paſs, that Grace doth not com-‘ mand this, as did the old Law, affording praiſe to him that did ſwear by the Name of ‘ the Lord? We ſay, The old Law, leading the Jews not to ſwear by Devils, appoint-‘ ed to ſwear by God, as it commanded them to ſacrifice, drawing them from the ſacri-‘ fice of Idols, or Devils. But when it had ſufficiently taught them to have a religious ‘ reſpect to God, then it rejected Sacrifices, as unprofitable; ſeeking not a ſacrifice by ‘ Beaſts, but a broken Spirit; that is, a ſweet whole Burnt-ſacrifice, inflamed by the ‘ Fire of Love.’

“ That ye fall not into Hypocriſy,” (ſo ſome Copies have it; for the words in Greek are ſometimes alike). ‘ Hypocriſy,’ he ſaith, ‘ or Condemnation, which follows them ‘ that ſwear without ſparing; and, through the cuſtoms of oaths, are carried out to ‘ forſwear. The word Hypocriſy ſignifies thus much,” That which being one thing, “ appears another.” How then falleth he into hypocriſy that ſweareth? Anſwer. When ‘ he that is believed for the Oath's ſake to be true, and yet tranſgreſſion following, is ‘ declared to be a Lyar, inſtead of a true man, not producing Yea in certainty. He ‘ forbids to ſwear by God, becauſe of Perjury; but by Heaven, and other oaths, that ‘ men ſhould not bring theſe things into the Honour of God; for all that ſwear, do ‘ ſwear by the Greater.’

LXXIX. Anſelmus, biſhop of Canterbury, about Ann. one thouſand and ninety, on that place of Mat. v. thus, page 38. “ Thou ſhalt not forſwear,” &c.] ‘ Moſes, ſeeing ‘ that he could not take away Swearing, takes away Perjury.’ And again, ‘ Becauſe ‘ men have in great reverence thoſe things by which they ſwear, leſt they ſhould make ‘ the Creatures gods themſelves, he commands them to render their oaths to God, and ‘ not to ſwear by Creatures. But the Lord removes them more perfectly from Perjury, ‘ when he forbids them to ſwear at all.’

LXXX. The ancient Waldenſes, we have good cauſe to ſay, denied the taking of any oath, in what ſenſe the primitive Chriſtians and Fathers refuſed, and that was altogether: To be ſure their enemies charged them with it, for above three hundred years; and we cannot find that they then denied the charge: We ſuppoſe none will attempt to prove they did; for they were well known in the world as to this particular.

LXXXI. And Bp. Uſher pleads for them, againſt the Papiſts, who were Swearers.

LXXXII. Likewiſe a people of Albi in France, Ann. one thouſand one hundred and ſeventy-ſix. held it was unlawful to ſwear.

Vide Baron. Anno 1310. John Walden adv. Wickliff and Waldenſ. Reiner. Rub. Capitan. W. Woodford, De Succeſſ. l. 6. Bar. Anno 1310, n. 3.

LXXXIII. The “ Plowman's Complaint,” containing, as abundance of mournful applications to God, ſo many notable and ſerious reprehenſions of the lapſed, erroneous and cruel nature of men: Among others it hath this notable paſſage to our purpoſe, ‘ Lord, thou ‘ giveſt us a command of truth, in bidding us, Yea Yea, and ſwear for nothing; but, ‘ Lord, he (Pope) that calls himſelf thy Vicar on Earth, hath broken the Command-‘ ment, ſo makes a law to compel men to ſwear.’ Who was the author of this, is not certainly known; but to be ſure it was embraced of the Wickliffians, as worthy of their patronage; and remembred and recorded by John Fox, as not unworthy to keep company with Proteſtant Martyrs.

J. Fox Mart. v. 1. p. 527.

Men honoured by Proteſtants.

LXXXIV. John Wickliff, our countryman, and, in his time, Divinity Profeſſor of Oxford, (famous for his learning and godly courage, in oppugning the doctrines and practices of Rome, in the time of Edward the Third, and Richard the Second, about the

J. Fox Mart. v. 1. p. 554, to 558. Geff. Chanc. works fol. 86.

the year one thouſand three hundred and ſeventy) was accuſed, among other things, 'for maintaining, that all Oaths, which be made for any Contract or civil Bargain, betwixt man and man, are unlawful.'

LXXXV. We will bring in here a paſſage out of the "Plowman's Tale," as it lies in Geoffry Chaucer's Works, not impertinent to our purpoſe, whoſe learning, honour and wit, were great in the time he lived, which was about one thouſand three hundred and ſixty, John Wickliff's contemporary.

> These wollen make men to ſwear, >   againſt Chriſt's commandment;
> And Chriſt's members all to tear,
>   on rood as he was new yrent;
> Such laws they make by common aſſent,
>   each one it throweth as a ball;
> Thus the poor be full ſhent;
>   but ever falſhood foul it befal.

He hath expreſſions not leſs diſliking Oaths, in his "Parſon's Tale," where he makes the parſon to ſay, 'After thoſe then cometh Swearing, expreſly againſt the Commandment of God, and our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who ſaith, by St. Matthew's words, "Ne ſhall ye not ſwear in all manner," or on no account.

J. Fox, Mart. v. 1. p. 614, 618.

LXXXVI. William Swinderby, Prieſt, and a zealous follower of John Wickliff, alſo lived in the time of Richard the Second, as appears by his Appeal to that king from the unjuſt ſentence of the biſhop of Hereford, in which, to this part of the charge exhibited, "That no man ought to ſwear for any thing; but ſimply, without an Oath, to affirm or deny," he anſwers thus, 'Whereas Chriſt's law forbids ſwearing, the Pope's law juſtifieth ſwearing, and compels men thereunto. Methinks, ſaith he, 'there is no need to comfort or encourage the people in ſwearing.'

J. Fox, Mart. v. 1. p. 623, 359.

LXXXVII. Walter Brute, alſo an early Diſſenter from the Roman Church, and intimate of William Swinderby, being charged, among other things, with ſaying, 'that it is not lawful for Chriſtians, for any cauſe, to ſwear by the Creator, neither by the Creature;' thus anſwered for himſelf, and indeed it comprehends much of our belief in this matter: 'As concerning Oaths, I believe and obey the doctrine of Almighty God, and my maſter Jeſus Chriſt; which teacheth, that Chriſtian-men, in affirmation of a truth, ſhould paſs the righteouſneſs of the Scribes and Phariſees, the Old Teſtament, or elſe he excludes them from the kingdom of God: For Chriſt ſays, "Unleſs your righteouſneſs exceed the righteouſneſs of the Scribes and Phariſees, ye cannot enter into the kingdom of Heaven;" and as concerning Oaths, Chriſt ſaith, "It hath been ſaid by them of old time, thou ſhalt not forſwear thyſelf, but ſhalt perform unto the Lord thoſe things that thou knoweſt: But I ſay unto you, thou ſhalt not ſwear at all, neither by heaven, nor yet by the earth, &c. but let your communication be Yea, Yea; and Nay, Nay; for whatſoever ſhall be more than this, proceedeth of evil:" Therefore as the perfection of the ancient men of the Old Teſtament was, not to forſwear themſelves, ſo the perfection of Chriſtian-men is, not to ſwear at all, becauſe we are ſo commanded of Chriſt, whoſe commandment muſt in no caſe be broken.' Thus much of W. Brute.

J. Fox, Mart. v. 1. p. 587.

LXXXVIII. John Purrey, John Edward, John Becket, John Clements, Richard Herbert, and Emmot Willie, with many more in the time of Henry the Fourth, through fears and hopes deſerted their profeſſion, and revolted, as John Fox tells us, from their faith, which was the religion then profeſſed of thoſe called Wickliffians or Lollards, the true, poor, perſecuted Chriſtians of that time: And of the fifteen articles by them abjured, this was one; 'Item, That neither the * Pope, nor the Prelate, neither any Ordinary, can compel any man to ſwear by any Creature of God, or by the Bible Book.'

* If they could not, it was then held none could; ſo that then it was denying all tenders.

Ibid. p. 701, 702.

LXXXIX. William Thorp, whom John Fox calls, 'the conſtant and bleſſed ſervant of God, and good man and ſervant of Chriſt,' &c. refuſed to ſwear upon a Bible, when the Archbiſhop tendered the Oath to him; for he thought it not lawful to take or give an oath thereon. 'A book is nothing elſe,' ſays he 'but divers Creatures, of which it is made; and ſuch ſwearing is ever unlawful, as witneſſeth Chryſoſtom plainly, blaming them greatly, that bring out a Book to ſwear upon; charging clerks, that in no wiſe they conſtrain any body to ſwear well, when that thing is ſooth (or true) that they ſwear for. And alſo full many men and women now ſay, That it is well done to ſwear by God, and by our Lady, and by other Saints, to have them in mind: Others ſay, That they may not ſwear, when they may otherwiſe be believed: But ſince all theſe ſayings are excuſes, and ſin, methinks, Sir,' ſaith he 'that this ſenſe of Chryſoſtom may be alledged well againſt all ſuch Swearers.'

XC. Elizabeth Young, who was brought to examination in the Marian days, before the ‘ Catholick Inquiſitors of Heretical Pravity,’ as they then called themſelves, and commanded to ſwear, this language was uſed to her.

Dr. Martin, ‘ Thou ſhalt be racked inch-meal, thou traitorly whore and heretick, ‘ but thou ſhalt ſwear before a judge, before thou go.’ J. Fox Marr. v. 3. p. 190. 911.

Eliz. Young. ‘ Sir, I underſtand not what an Oath is, and therefore I will take no ſuch ‘ thing upon me.’

Dr. Martin. ‘ She refuſeth to ſwear upon the Four Evangeliſts, before a judge: For I myſelf, and Mr. Huſſey, have had her before us four times, but we can not bring her to ſwear.’

Then ſaid the Biſhop, ‘ Wilt thou not ſwear before a judge?’ &c.

Eliz. Young. ‘ My lord, I will not ſwear that this hand is mine.’

‘ No,’ ſaid the Biſhop! ‘ And why?’

Eliz. Young. ‘ Chriſt ſaith, That whatſoever is more than Yea, Yea; or Nay, Nay; ‘ cometh of Evil.’

Then Dr. Cook brought her to a Book, commanding her to lay her hand thereon.

Eliz. Young. ‘ No, my lord, I will not ſwear.’ And ſo ſhe perſiſted, till God delivered her out of their hands.

John Huſs, Jerom of Prague, Walter Brute, William Swinderby, William Sawtry, William White, William Thorpe, &c. are recorded by thoſe of other nations, both High and Low Dutch, ‘ to have refuſed all ſwearing, as well by God, as by Creatures, ‘ in any caſe, private or public.’ Though ſuch as admit of oaths in ſome caſes, labour, as John Fox in England, and the Calviniſts abroad, to eclipſe and mutilate their teſtimony; as if they were one while only againſt Book-Swearing, as being a Creature; another while only againſt ſwearing in Private Caſes; another while, as J. Fox relates in John Burrell, ‘ That it is not lawful to ſwear, but in caſe of Life and Death,’ &c. But moſt evident it is, that they were againſt all ſwearing, or ſwearing at all; elſe why ſhould they ſo frequently alledge Chryſoſtom? Who though he accounted ſwearing by Creatures a more execrable ſin than to ſwear by God, yet conſtantly counted ſwearing at all a ſin in Chriſtians, as cleaving to that which Chriſt had abrogated, being only permitted to the Jews for the hardneſs and blindneſs of their hearts, their unbelief, and propenſity to follow the courſe of the Heathens, and ſwear by their gods. Let it not be forgotten, that Chryſoſtom not only inveighs againſt them that bring forth the Book to ſwear by, becauſe it is a Creature, but that he alſo upbraided them with impudence and audacioușneſs, that dare make uſe of that Law to adminiſter an Oath by, that ſo ſtrictly forbids an Oath.

Ridiculous it is, to make them deny Swearing only in private caſes, and to be ready to ſwear in caſe of life and death: For where is there any ſhadow of ſuch a Law? And how ſhould thoſe honeſt men invent one? Chriſt's law we read, Mat. v. The doctors Chryſoſtom and Jerom's judgment, whom they had moſtly in their mouths, we have repeated here at large, in which is not the leaſt reſtriction. Theſe good men then muſt needs be underſtood to take the law of Chriſt either to have forbidden ſwearing in any caſe, and then not to ſwear in caſe of life; or not to forbid ſwearing at all, and then they not only might ſwear to ſave their Lives, but Liberties and Eſtates, and ought ſo to do. But we hope there can be no room left for this objection.

XCI. The Lollards of Kille in Scotland were againſt all ſwearing, as both Spotſwood in his Chronicle doth relate, and the book called, ‘ The Hiſtory of the Reformation of ‘ the Kirk of Scotland.’ Spotſ. Hiſt. pag. 61.

XCII. Michael Sadler (an eminent man, called a lord) was cruelly tortured and put to death by ſome Papiſts, under the Emperor of Germany: His brethren were alſo executed with the ſword, and his wife and ſiſters drowned, An. 1527. One article alledged againſt him was, that he had ſaid, ‘ That men ſhould not ſwear to, or before, a ‘ Magiſtrate.’ W. C. Albrid. p. 193, 194, 195.

XCIII. The Chriſtian Proteſtants in the valley of Piedmont, who were cruelly tortured to death by the Papiſts, about An. 1655. One article alledged againſt them was, ‘ That they believed it was not lawful to ſwear any thing, be it true or falſe.’ Marl. Hiſt. p. 217, 218.

XCIV. Gerard Sagareld of Parma, and his followers, ‘ denied all oaths and vows.’ So did ſeveral in Germany, mentioned by biſhop Uſher, in his book de Succeſſione: In Germany, ſwearing is well nigh excluded, and need not much to be required. J. Fox Mart. v. 2. p. 420.

XCV. Eraſmus. ‘ Now ye ſhall hear another thing: Commandment was given unto ‘ your elders, none otherwiſe, but if they had made an oath, they ſhould perform it, ‘ and not be forſworn; for now they are bound to God, and not to Man only: Wherefore among the Jews, only Perjury is puniſhable; but he that deceives his neighbour ‘ without any Oath made, he goes unpuniſhed; but yet the Law of the Goſpel condemneth him; the which, that ye may be the more remote from perjury, doth utterly condemn all manner of Oaths; that it is not lawful to ſwear, neither by God, ‘ nor by thoſe things which ſeem to the common ſort to be things of leſs religion, that ‘ is, “ neither by Heaven, becauſe it is the Seat of God; nor by the Earth, becauſe it “ is his Footſtool; nor by Jeruſalem, becauſe it is the City of the Great King;” that ‘ is to ſay, “ of him that hath made all things.” Neither as the Heathen ſwear, by the ‘ Head of another man, whereof thou haſt no authority; but it is conſecrated to God, Comm. on Mat. v.

that hath made all things as he would; for thou canſt not make one white hair black, nor the contrary: And becauſe all things are conſecrated to God, the Maker, thou oughteſt to be fearful to ſwear by any thing. And what needeth any oath among Them, where no man, becauſe of their Simplicity, can diſtruſt; nor no man can deſire to deceive, though they might do it? Such is their ſincerity and perfectneſs, ſpecially in thoſe things of the which they declare themſelves to be deſpiſers. Therefore among you, Plain and Simple Speech ought to be more Holy and more Sure, than the Devout and Solemn Oath among the Jews: For among you, whoſe hearts and mouths ought to agree, there is no other uſe of ſpeech, but to expreſs your minds each to other. In your bargains, ye need no Oath, ye need no Execration, or Curſing, or ſuch like, to bind the promiſer, or to aſſure him to whom the promiſe is made: Two Words be ſufficient, Nay and Yea, whereby thou denieſt that which thou doſt not promiſe, and whereby thou doſt perform that which thou didſt promiſe, by plain Word, that thou wouldſt do: For there is no man leſs bound by his ſimple and bare Word, than the Jew Swearing by all Holy Things; and he whom thou makeſt thy promiſe unto, doth truſt thee as much as if thou hadſt made a ſolemn Oath. If there be any more beſides theſe, it muſt needs come of Evil and Sin: For he that ſweareth, either he thinketh evil of him to whom he ſweareth; or elſe, he that requireth the oath, doth diſtruſt: But none of theſe ought to be in you, whom I would have perfect in all points. Therefore when I utterly forbid Swearing, I do not aboliſh the Law which doth utterly prohibit Perjury; but I make the Law more full, and I withdraw men farther from that, which the Law doth puniſh.’

Eraſmus here plainly forbiddeth all ſwearing on any account.

Comm. on Jam. v.

‘Let your mind be pure and plain, and let your heart and your mouth go both together. “Let no man with feigned words deceive his neighbour: But eſpecially, my brethren, Swear Not, leſt by little and little you accuſtom yourſelves to Forſwear. Among Jews and Heathens, for fidelity's ſake, there is an Oath put; but among Chriſtians, which ought neither to diſtruſt any man, nor to deceive, it is a vain thing to ſwear. Whoſoever is accuſtomed to ſwear, is couſin-german to the peril of forſwearing. Be you afraid not only to ſwear by God in human affairs, and light matters, but alſo abſtain from All Kind of ſwearing, that you ſwear neither by Heaven, neither by Earth, or any other thing, that the common people eſteem for * Holy and Religious. Whoſoever dare be bold to lye without ſwearing, he dare do the ſame alſo when he ſweareth, if he liſt. To be brief: He that is a Good man, will believe a man without Swearing; and he that is Naught, will not truſt a man though he Swear: But among you that are furniſhed with evangelical plainneſs, there is neither place to diſtruſt, nor to imagine deceit: But let your plain communication be regarded for no leſs true and ſtedfaſt, than any manner of Oath of the Jews or Pagans, how holy ſoever it be. As often as you confirm any thing, confirm it with all your heart; and perform indeed the thing that you ſpeak: As often as you deny any thing, deny it with your whole heart; neither let any thing elſe be in your heart than your mouth ſpeaketh, that there be no counterfeiting in you, ſeeing you are diſciples of the Truth.’

* Then not by God; for the common people eſteemed Him Sacred.

Thus far, we hope, is put altogether out of queſtion, Whether many Learned and Chriſtian men have not flatly denied the uſe of Oaths to True Chriſtians: And though we need not the contribution that is afforded us by ſeveral School and other Roman Doctors, yet to evidence a kind of ſucceſſion, and univerſality of teſtimony to this doctrine, we think it not improper to mention ſome of them.

The judgment of ſchool-men and others, in this point.

Gloſs on Mat. v. p. 22.

XCVI. T. Aquinas, Non jurare omnino, &c. “Not to ſwear at all,” &c. The Lord had taught before, Wrong is not to be done to our neighbour, as in forbidding anger, with murder, luſt, adultery, putting away of one's wife; and now he teacheth conſequently, that we muſt abſtain from the wronging of God, when he doth not forbid only Forſwearing as evil, but alſo an Oath, as the Occaſion of evil; from whence he ſaith, “Hear thou again, for it was ſaid of old time, Thou ſhalt not Forſwear thyſelf:” And leſt that they might make to themſelves the Creatures gods, he commandeth, to render the oaths to God, and not to ſwear by the Creatures: From whence it follows, “Render to God,” &c. that is, “If one ſhall happen to ſwear by the Creator, not by the Creature;” whence he ſaith in Deuteronomy, “Thou ſhalt fear the Lord thy God, and by his name ſhalt ſwear;” and this was allowed by the Law, as to children, that as they did offer ſacrifice to Idols, they ſhould not offer them to Idols; ſo they were permitted to ſwear by God, not that they might do this rightly, but that it might be better to give this to God, than to Devils. Chryſoſtom upon Matthew: For no man ſweareth frequently, that ſometimes may not forſwear; as he that makes it a cuſtom to ſpeak many things, ſometimes he ſpeaks unfit things.’ Auguſtine againſt Fauſtus: ‘The Lord was more willing that we not ſwearing might come ſhort of the Truth, than ſwearing the Truth, to come nearer to Perjury: Whence it follows, “I “ ſay unto you, Swear not at all.” Auguſtin on the words of the Lord in the mountain, in which he confirms the righteouſneſs of the Phariſees, which is, “ not to Forſwear;” for he cannot Forſwear, that doth not Swear.’

On Mat. v. fol. 18.

XCVII. Cajetan: “ Again ye have heard.”] ‘ He perfects another precept of the old law concerning Perjury (becauſe it was ſaid to them of old time, “ Thou ſhalt not forſwear”) Exod. xx. “ Thou ſhalt not take the name of thy God in vain:” And Levit. xix. “ Thou ſhalt not forſwear in the name of the Lord; but ſhalt render to the Lord thy oaths.” The firſt part of this precept (namely, “ Thou ſhalt not forſwear) is negative, forbidding evil in its kind; for Perjury is evil of itſelf, therefore by no reaſon can it be excuſed. But the ſecond part (namely, “ Thou ſhalt render to the Lord thy oaths) is affirmative, and doth not ſignify to fulfil the oaths which thou haſt promiſed, as it appears, and thereupon nothing follows of fulfilling of promiſes), but it ſignifies that the oaths to God are to be rendered; that is, that ſwearing muſt be by the LORD, not by the Creatures: For theſe Words are not in the law, but the Senſe of them is, Deut. vi. “ Thou ſhalt ſwear by the name of the Lord thy God:” Where ſwearing is not commanded, but is but regulated, that it ſhould be by the name of God, and not by the name of the Creatures: For the Law commandeth, That this act of religion, which is to ſwear, ſhould be exhibited to God, and to no Creatures or Idols whatſoever. “ But I ſay unto you]. He perfecteth both the precepts, adjoining two precepts; the one negative, the other affirmative (“ not to ſwear at all) lo a negative precept, wherein two things are contained, that is, not to ſwear, and not at all; he forbids us to ſwear at all, by all means, as well in expreſſing God, as not in expreſſing God; ſuppoſe by Heaven and Earth, and by the reſt of the Creatures: And in this he perfects the precept concerning not forſwearing, not only by taking away an Oath, but the Occaſion of forſwearing; for it is impoſſible to incur forſwearing without an Oath: And alſo the precept of performing the oath to God, by taking away the care of performing; for where nothing is ſworn, there is no need of any care of performing the oath to God.’

Comm. on Mat. v.

XCVIII. Alphonſus de Avendano. ‘ It is to be noted out of Cajetan, that in this the Lord perfected the command of not forſwearing, by taking away not only Forſwearing but the Occaſion of forſwearing; becauſe, without an Oath, it is impoſſible to incur Perjury. An Oath was not neceſſary by the firſt intention of nature; for if men had continued in the Truth, they had not lyed; and becauſe Chriſt came, that he might bring back men to this firſt innocency, an Oath was not neceſſary, ſuppoſing that men ought to return unto it: Then to men that live according to the ſimplicity of the Goſpel, an Oath is not neceſſary, and therefore not good.’

Reaſons for avoiding Oaths, from the ſame Author.

Firſt, ‘ Leſt by ſwearing they fall into Perjury; for which cauſe ſwearing is of an ill report amongſt the ſaints, as in Ambroſe, Pſalm xviii.’

Secondly, ‘ For reverence of the name of God.’

Thirdly, ‘ For the mutual confidence which one Chriſtian ſhould have of another; which ought to be ſo great, that every one ſhould be ſure, and not poſſible to be deceived in the leaſt thing, although he ſhould ſpeak in a ſingle aſſertion; and for the authority of the ſaints, which do ſeem to forbid all oaths to Chriſtians, and that the truth of the Goſpel receives no Oath, as good and deſirable of itſelf, ſeeing every one is of Evil.’

Laſtly, out of Cajetan. ‘ The Lord perfecteth this precept of not Forſwearing, by taking away not only Perjury, but the Occaſion of it, and taking away the care: For where there is no Swearing, there is no need of care of Rendering.’

‘ O! how ſincere and true would the Lord make his Chriſtians, that all Affirmations ſhould be included in Three Letters only; all Denials in other Three, that the Truth ſhould be ſo familiar to us, as to be included in the compendium of Three Letters.’

XCIX. Franciſcus de Mendoca, Olyſiponenſis, Dr. Theol. in Eburenſ. Academia, Sacr. lit. interpres, in 4 lib. Reg. Tom. 3. ‘ Speak,’ ſaith he, ‘ of me,’ &c. in the Hebrew it is ענן i. e. teſtify, from the verb ענה which not only ſignifieth to ſpeak, but alſo to bear teſtimony, as it is to be ſeen Exod. xx. n. 14. Deut. xix. n. 15. Job xvi. n. 9. et paſſim alibi, and many other places; as if there were no difference with the Hebrews of ſpeaking and teſtifying: Nor without cauſe; for there ought to be ſo much veracity of good men, that their ſimple ſpeech may be accounted ſworn, and their private conference be accounted a public teſtimony, which was to be accounted the fidelity of Cato, who was believed in a court caſe even Unſworn; which alſo S. Jerom, in his Epiſtle to Celantia, inculcates; “ Let there be,” ſaith he, “ ſo much love of truth in thee, that whatſoever thou ſayeſt, thou mayeſt think to be ſworn.” The ſame Jerom to that of Mat. v. ſwear not, &c, “ The Goſpel Truth,” ſaith he, “ doth not receive an Oath, ſith every Faithful Speech is for an Oath.” To which opinion is agreeable the doctrine of Philo Alex. in his book of the Decalogue, “ It will be moſt profitable,” ſaith he, “ and moſt agreeable to the rational nature, to abſtain Altogether from Swearing; and be ſo accuſtomed to Truth, that one's ſingle Word may have the force of an Oath.” The like relateth Joſephus, in the ſecond book of the Jewiſh War, chap. 7. de his Eſſenis, moſt ſincere worſhippers of truth (vericultoribus): The Hebrew Elders alſo, when they would make their innocency appear about the man killed by an unknown perſon, teſtified with an Oath, as the Rabbins, Solomon and Moſes in Lyran, affirm, Deut. xxi. Nevertheleſs, they are brought in by the ſcriptures, aſſeverating it only with ſimple Speech; “ And they ſhall ſay,” ſaith he, “ Our hands have not ſhed this blood, nor our eyes ſeen it.” Becauſe the ſimple and naked Speech of a wiſe man, is equivalent to an oath; which St. Bernard vehemently commended in Comite Theobaldo, in Epiſt. 38. to the ſame, “ And indeed,” ſaith he, “ in other princes, if at any time we take a word of lightneſs or falſeneſs, we account it neither new nor wonderful: But with Count Theobald, we do not impatiently hear Yea and Nay, to whom, as it is ſaid, ſimply to ſpeak is to ſwear; and a light Lye is accounted an heavy Perjury; for among very many enſigns of virtue, which do very much ennoble your dignity, and make your name renowned and famous throughout the world, the conſtancy of truth is eſpecially praiſed in you.” 3. Certainly God himſelf hath (tantundem) ſo much, to ſpeak nakedly, and to ſwear by himſelf holily: For that he promiſed with an Oath an off-ſpring to David, which ſhould ſit on his throne, is read no where in the ſcripture: And yet Abner, 2 Kings iii. n. 9. acknowledges an off-ſpring ſworn to David, “ The Lord do ſo to Abner,” ſaith he, “ and add theſe things to him, unleſs as the Lord hath ſworn to David, ſo I do with him.” And in Pſalm lxxxviii. God himſelf ſaith, “ Once have I ſworn in my holineſs, if I lye to David,” &c. Alſo the land of Canaan is no-where found in the holy ſcriptures promiſed to the ancient fathers with an Oath; but God promiſed it ſimply to Abraham, Gen. xii. 13, & 17. to Iſaac, Gen. xxvi. to Jacob, Gen. xxviii. Yet Moſes, in Deut. i. “ Poſſeſs,” ſaith he, “ the Land, for which the Lord ſwaer to your fathers.” Philo Alex. in the book of Abraham, at the end looſes the knot notably; “ That therefore the ſimple Promiſe of God in thoſe places is called an Oath, becauſe it hath the Force of an Oath.”

